boat, and they were frightened. ²⁰But he said to them, "I am — do not be afraid." ²¹They were willing to take him into the boat, and immediately the boat reached the land where they were heading. ²²The next day the crowd that had remained on the other side of the sea noticed that there had been only one boat there, and that Jesus had not gotten into the boat with his disciples, but that his disciples had gone away alone. ²³However, boats from Tiberias came near the place where they had eaten the bread after the Lord had given thanks. ²⁴So when the crowd saw that neither Jesus nor his disciples were there, they themselves got into the boats and went to Capernaum looking for Jesus. ²⁵When they found him on the other side of the sea, they said to him, "Rabbi, when did you get here?" ²⁶Jesus answered them, "Truly, truly, I tell you, you are looking for me not because you saw signs, but because you ate the loaves and were filled. ²⁷Do not work for food that perishes, but for the food that endures to eternal life, which the Son of Man will give you. For on him God the Father has set his seal." ²⁸Then they said to him, "What must we do to perform the works of God?" ²⁹Jesus answered them, "This is the work of God: that you believe in the one he has sent." ³⁰So they said to him, "Then what sign do you perform, so that we may see it and believe you? What work do you do? ³¹Our fathers ate the manna in the wilderness, just as it is written: 'He gave them bread from heaven to eat.'" ³²Jesus said to them, "Truly, truly, I tell you, it was not Moses who gave you the bread from heaven, but it is my Father who gives you the true bread from heaven. ³³For the bread of God is the one who comes down from heaven and gives life to the world." ³⁴They said to him, "Sir, give us this bread always." ³⁵Jesus said to them, "I am the bread of life. Whoever comes to me will never be hungry, and whoever believes in me will never be thirsty. ³⁶But I told you that you have seen me and yet do not believe. ³⁷Everyone the Father gives me will come to me, and the one who comes to me I will never drive away, ³⁸For I arrived down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that dispatched me. ³⁹And this is the will of the one who sent me: that I should not lose any of all that he has given me, but raise them up on the last day. ⁴⁰For this is the will of my Father: that everyone who sees the Son and believes in him should have eternal life, and I will raise them up on the last day." ⁴¹Then the Jewish leaders began to grumble about him because he said, "I am the bread that came down from heaven." ⁴²They were saying, "Is this not Jesus the son of Joseph, whose father and mother we know? How can he now say, 'I have come down from heaven'?" ⁴³Jesus answered them, "Stop grumbling among yourselves. ⁴⁴No one can come to me unless the Father who sent me draws them, and I will raise them up on the last day. ⁴⁵It is written in the Prophets: 'And they will all be taught by God.' Everyone who has heard the Father and learned from him comes to me. ⁴⁶Not that anyone has seen the Father except the one who is from God — he has seen the Father. ⁴⁷Truly, truly, I tell you, the one who believes has eternal life. ⁴⁸I myself am the living bread. ⁴⁹Your fathers ate the manna in the wilderness, and they died. ⁵⁰This is the bread that comes down from heaven, so that a person may eat of it and not die. ⁵¹I am the living bread that came down from heaven. If anyone eats of this bread, they will live forever. And the bread that I will give for the life of the world is my flesh." ⁵²The Jewish leaders then disputed among themselves, saying, "How can this man give us his flesh to eat?" ⁵³So Jesus said to them, "Truly, truly, I tell you, unless you eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink his blood, you have no life in you. ⁵⁴The one who eats my flesh and drinks my blood has eternal life, and I will raise them up on the last day. ⁵⁵For my flesh is true food, and my blood is true drink. ⁵⁶The one who eats my flesh and drinks my blood remains in me, and I in them. ⁵⁷Just as the living Father sent me and I live because of the Father, so the one who feeds on me will also live because of me. ⁵⁸This is the bread that came down from heaven — not like the bread the fathers ate, and died. The one who feeds on this bread will live forever." ⁵⁹He said these things while teaching in the synagogue in Capernaum. ⁶⁰When many of his disciples heard this, they said, "This is a hard teaching. Who can accept it?" ⁶¹But Jesus, knowing within himself that his disciples were grumbling about this, said to them, "Does this offend you? ⁶²Then what if you were to see the Son of Man ascending to where he was before? ⁶³It is the Spirit who gives life; the flesh is of no help at all. The words that I have spoken to you are spirit and life. ⁶⁴But there are some among you who do not believe." For Jesus knew from the beginning who the ones were that did not believe, and who would betray him. ⁶⁵And he said, "This is why I told you that no one can come to me unless it is granted to them by the Father." ⁶⁶After this many of his disciples turned back and no longer walked with him. ⁶⁷So Jesus said to the Twelve, "You do not want to leave too, do you?" ⁶⁸Simon Peter answered him, "Lord, to whom would we go? You have the words of eternal life. ⁶⁹And we have come to believe and know that you are the Holy One of God." ⁷⁰Jesus answered them, "Did I not choose you, the Twelve? Yet one of you is a devil." ⁷¹He was speaking of Judas son of Simon

Iscariot, for he, one of the Twelve, was going to betray him.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The double designation — 'Sea of Galilee' (the traditional Jewish name) and 'Sea of Tiberias' (the Roman name, from the city Herod Antipas built and named for Emperor Tiberius) — accommodates both Jewish and Gentile readers. A considerable time gap separates chapters 5 and 6; Jesus has moved from Jerusalem back to Galilee.
2. The imperfect tenses ekolouthēi ('kept following') and etheoroun ('were seeing') indicate ongoing action — the crowd's pursuit is persistent. Their motivation is the signs (semeia), confirming the pattern of sign-based faith that Jesus has questioned (2:23-25, 4:48). John mentions healing signs not described in his narrative, indicating selectivity in his account.
3. The definite article to oros ('the mountain') may indicate a specific well-known hill on the eastern shore of the Sea of Galilee, or may evoke Mount Sinai, where Moses received the Torah and the manna provision was first given. Jesus's posture of sitting (ekatheto) is the position of a teacher in Jewish tradition.
4. This is the second Passover in John's Gospel (cf. 2:13), providing the theological backdrop for the entire chapter. The feeding miracle and the Bread of Life discourse gain their deepest meaning against the Passover context — Jesus is the new Passover bread, the true manna from heaven. The note 'festival of the Jewish people' continues John's practice of explaining Jewish customs for a mixed audience.
5. Jesus initiates the encounter with a question — as with the woman at the well (4:7), he begins from a point of human need. The question is addressed specifically to Philip, possibly because Philip was from Bethsaida (1:44), near the likely location. The word pothen ('where, from what source') echoes the theological question of origins that runs through the Gospel (cf. 2:9, 4:11, 7:27-28).
6. The narrator's aside reveals that Jesus's question is not born of uncertainty but serves as a test (peirazōn, 'testing, proving') of Philip's faith. The verb edei ('he knew') attributes supernatural foreknowledge to Jesus, consistent with 1:48, 2:24-25. The test exposes whether Philip will think in human or divine categories.
7. Philip answers in economic terms — two hundred denarii represents roughly eight months' wages for a laborer. His calculation is practical but faithless; he evaluates the problem from a purely human resource perspective. The response fails the test: Philip sees only the impossibility rather than the one who is asking the question.
8. Andrew is again identified through his relationship to Simon Peter (cf. 1:40). Andrew's contribution, while modest, at least brings available resources to Jesus's attention — a pattern consistent with his role as the disciple who brings people to Jesus (1:41-42, 12:22).
9. The word paidarion ('boy, young lad') is a diminutive, emphasizing the smallness of the source. Barley loaves (artos krithinous) were the bread of the poor — wheat was more expensive. The detail echoes the Elisha miracle in 2 Kings 4:42-44, where twenty barley loaves fed a hundred men. Andrew's question 'what are these among so many?' expresses the same logic as Philip's calculation — human resources are comically inadequate.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes 2 Kings 4:42-44. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The detail 'plenty of grass' (chortos polys) is an eyewitness memory consistent with springtime near Passover. The number five thousand (pentakischilioi) counts only the men (andres), as Matthew 14:21 explicitly notes ('besides women and children'). The verb anapesein ('to recline, to sit down') is the posture for a formal meal, suggesting Jesus is hosting a banquet — the messianic banquet prefigured.
11. The verb eucharistesas ('having given thanks') is the root of 'Eucharist' and creates a clear connection to the Last Supper tradition and early Christian meal practice. In John's account, Jesus distributes directly to the crowd (unlike the Synoptics, where the disciples serve as intermediaries). The phrase hoson ethelon ('as much as they wanted') emphasizes abundance — there is no rationing.
12. The verb eneplesthesan ('were satisfied, were filled') indicates complete satiation, not mere taste. The command to gather leftovers (ta perisseusanta klasmata, 'the surplus fragments') serves both a practical and symbolic function. The verb apoletai ('be lost, be wasted, perish') is the same word used in 3:16 for perishing — John may intend a deeper resonance about God's intention that nothing and no one be lost.
13. The twelve baskets (dodeka kophinous) likely correspond to the twelve tribes of Israel — the provision is abundant enough for all God's people with surplus to spare. The kophinos was a large wicker basket distinctively Jewish in use. Five loaves produce twelve baskets of surplus — the mathematics of divine provision inverts human calculation.
14. The crowd identifies Jesus as 'the Prophet' (ho prophetes) — the Moses-like figure promised in Deuteronomy 18:15-18. The connection is logical: Moses gave manna, Jesus gives bread. But as the discourse will show, their understanding is superficial — they want a political deliverer who provides free food, not the bread of life that gives eternal sustenance.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 18:15-18. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The verb harpazein ('to seize, to snatch, to take by force') reveals the crowd's intention to impose a political kingship on Jesus. This confirms that their identification of Jesus as 'the Prophet' (v. 14) was politically motivated. Jesus withdraws to prevent the misappropriation of his mission — he will be king, but not on their terms. The phrase 'by himself alone' (autos monos) emphasizes his solitary retreat, possibly for prayer (cf. Mark 6:46).
16. The transition to the walking-on-water narrative begins. The disciples descend from the mountain to the lake shore without Jesus. The sequence — bread in the wilderness, crossing the sea — mirrors the Exodus pattern (manna in Exodus 16, Red Sea crossing in Exodus 14), though in reverse chronological order.

16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 14. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. The note that it was 'already dark' (skotia ede egegenei) carries Johannine symbolic weight — darkness represents the absence of Jesus, who is the light (1:4-5, 8:12). The phrase 'Jesus had not yet come to them' heightens the sense of vulnerability and separation.
18. The Sea of Galilee (actually a large freshwater lake, about 13 miles long and 8 miles wide) is susceptible to sudden, violent storms when cool air from the surrounding hills descends onto the warm lake surface. The imperfect diegeireto ('was being stirred up, was becoming rough') describes an escalating danger.
19. Twenty-five to thirty stadia equals approximately three to four miles — roughly halfway across the lake at its widest point. They are in the middle of the sea, in the dark, in a storm. The phrase peripatounta epi tes thalasses ('walking on the sea') is unambiguous — epi with the genitive means 'on, upon.' The word ephobethesan ('they were frightened') captures the terror of seeing a figure walking on water in a storm at night. The Old Testament presents walking on water as a divine prerogative (Job 9:8, Psalm 77:19).
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Job 9:8. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalm 77:19. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
20. The phrase ego eimi ('I am') functions on two levels: as simple self-identification ('It is I') and as a divine self-declaration echoing the divine name (Exodus 3:14). In context — walking on water during a storm, a divine prerogative — the deeper resonance is unmistakable. The command 'do not be afraid' (me phobeisthe) echoes the Old Testament theophany pattern, where God's appearance is typically accompanied by reassurance (Genesis 15:1, Isaiah 41:10, 43:1).
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 3:14 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 15:1 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 41:10 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
21. John adds a detail absent from the Synoptic accounts: the boat immediately (eutheos) arrived at shore. This may be another miraculous element — instantaneous transportation — or may simply mean the remainder of the crossing passed quickly once Jesus was aboard. The verb ethelon ('were willing, wanted to') suggests their fear gave way to welcome.
22. This complicated verse establishes the crowd's perplexity — they know Jesus did not board the only available boat with his disciples. How then did he get to Capernaum? John leaves the question unanswered for the crowd, letting the mystery of the sea-walking remain implicit rather than narrated publicly.
23. This parenthetical explains how the crowd was able to follow Jesus across the lake — additional boats arrived from the city of Tiberias. The phrase 'after the Lord had given thanks' (eucharistesantos tou kyriou) recalls 6:11 and is the narrator's characteristic use of the title kyrios ('Lord') for Jesus.
24. The crowd pursues Jesus across the lake, motivated by the sign they witnessed. The verb zetountes ('seeking, looking for') will be picked up by Jesus in verse 26 — they seek him, but for the wrong reasons.
25. The crowd's question 'when did you get here?' implicitly asks 'how did you get here?' — since they know he did not take the only boat. Jesus does not answer their question but redirects the conversation to their true motivations.
26. Jesus exposes their motivation: they did not come because they understood the signs (semeia, pointing to Jesus's identity) but because they got a free meal. They saw 'signs' but did not truly 'see' them — the miraculous provision did not lead them to perceive who Jesus is. The verb echortasthete ('were filled, were satisfied') is the same word used for feeding animals in some contexts, suggesting consumption without comprehension.
27. Jesus redirects their effort (ergazesthe, 'work, labor') from temporal food to eternal food. The contrast between 'food that perishes' (ten brosin ten apollymenen) and 'food that endures' (ten brosin ten menousan) echoes the water conversation with the Samaritan woman (4:13-14). The Son of Man is both the giver and the gift. The 'seal' (esphragisen) is a mark of authentication and ownership — God has certified Jesus as the authorized source of eternal nourishment.
28. The crowd's question assumes that obtaining this food requires human effort — 'works of God' (ta erga tou theou) means 'the works God requires.' They think in terms of religious performance. Jesus's answer will subvert their entire framework.
29. Jesus reduces the plural 'works' to a single 'work' (to ergon) — faith. The many required works collapse into one: believing in Jesus. The present subjunctive pisteuete ('that you believe, keep believing') suggests ongoing faith, not a one-time decision. This answer redefines the entire religious economy: the 'work' God requires is not human effort but receptive trust in God's sent one.
30. The demand for a sign is remarkable — they have just witnessed the feeding of five thousand and crossed the lake to find Jesus because of it. Yet they ask for another sign. The logic seems to be: Moses gave manna for forty years; you gave bread once. If you claim to surpass Moses, prove it with an ongoing provision. Their faith is transactional: they will believe if given sufficient evidence, on their terms.

31. The crowd cites Psalm 78:24 (or possibly Exodus 16:4, 15; Nehemiah 9:15). The quotation becomes the text for Jesus's discourse — he will offer a rabbinic-style commentary on 'bread from heaven.' The crowd uses the manna tradition to challenge Jesus: Moses gave bread from heaven for decades; what can you offer that compares?

31. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Nehemiah 9:15. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
32. Jesus corrects two errors in their argument: (1) Moses was not the source — God was; (2) the manna was not the true bread from heaven — it was a pointer to the reality now being revealed. The shift from past tense dedoken ('gave') to present tense didotin ('gives') is significant: the true bread is being given now, in the present moment. The adjective alethinon ('true, genuine, real') distinguishes the ultimate reality from the type that foreshadowed it.
33. The participle katabainon ('the one coming down') shifts from neuter ('that which comes down') to masculine — the bread is a person, not a substance. The scope is again universal: 'life to the world' (zoen to kosmo), not merely to Israel. The manna fed Israel in the wilderness; this bread gives life to the entire world.
34. Like the Samaritan woman's 'give me this water' (4:15), the crowd requests the gift while still understanding it physically. The adverb pantote ('always, at all times') reveals their desire for a permanent food supply. They will soon learn that the bread Jesus offers is himself — a claim that will divide them.
35. This is the first of the seven great 'I am' statements with a predicate in John's Gospel: ego eimi ho artos tes zoes ('I am the bread of life'). Jesus does not merely provide bread — he is the bread. 'Coming' and 'believing' are parallel actions describing the same movement of faith. The double negative ou me ('never') is the strongest possible assurance of permanent satisfaction.
36. Seeing and not believing is the persistent failure of the crowd. They have seen both the sign (feeding) and the sign-giver (Jesus himself), yet refuse the faith that seeing should produce. This verse transitions into the theological section about the Father's drawing and the Son's preservation of those who come.
37. This verse holds two realities in tension: divine initiative (the Father 'gives' people to the Son) and human responsibility (the one who 'comes'). The neuter pan ('everything, all') in the first clause treats those given as a collective whole; the masculine ton erchomenon ('the one coming') in the second clause treats each person individually. The double negative ou me ekbalō ('I will never cast out') is an absolute guarantee of reception.
38. The perfect tense katabebeka ('I have come down') indicates a completed descent with ongoing presence. Jesus's will is entirely submitted to the Father's will — a claim of perfect obedience that echoes 4:34 and 5:30. This verse provides the theological basis for the assurance of verse 37: Jesus will never reject anyone the Father sends because rejecting them would be disobeying the Father.
39. The Father's will is stated with crystalline clarity: zero loss and final resurrection. The verb apoleso ('lose, destroy') is the same word as 'perish' in 3:16 — what God wills is that none of his given ones perish. The phrase te eschate hemera ('on the last day') introduces future eschatology alongside the realized eschatology of verse 24. The resurrection promise will be repeated four times in this discourse (vv. 39, 40, 44, 54).
40. Verse 39 stated the Father's will in terms of preservation (not losing any); verse 40 states it in terms of human response (seeing and believing). Both perspectives are true simultaneously — divine keeping and human believing are not alternatives but complementary. The verb theoron ('seeing, beholding') implies more than glancing — it means perceiving, contemplating, recognizing Jesus for who he is.
41. The verb egongyzon ('were grumbling, were murmuring') deliberately echoes Israel's murmuring against Moses in the wilderness (Exodus 16:2, 7-9; Numbers 11:1). The typological parallel is precise: as Israel grumbled against Moses when given bread from heaven, so these leaders grumble against Jesus when he claims to be the bread from heaven. History repeats its pattern of unbelief.
41. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 16:2. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
41. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Numbers 11:1. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
42. The objection is based on familiarity — they know his human family and therefore reject his heavenly origin. The question 'whose father and mother we know' assumes that known parentage excludes divine origin. The irony is thick: they think they know his father (Joseph), but they do not know his true Father (God). This is the same stumbling block Nathanael initially faced ('Can anything good come from Nazareth?' 1:46).
43. The command me goggызete ('stop grumbling') directly echoes Moses's rebuke of Israel in Exodus 16:8-9. Jesus assumes Moses's role in the wilderness narrative, further establishing the typological parallel.
43. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 16:8-9 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.

44. The verb helkyse ('draws, attracts, drags') is a strong word — it is used for drawing a net (21:6), drawing a sword (18:10), and drawing Paul through the streets (Acts 16:19). This is not gentle persuasion but decisive, powerful attraction. The claim is that coming to Jesus requires divine initiative — apart from the Father's drawing, no one can come. The third repetition of 'I will raise them up on the last day' reinforces the resurrection promise.
45. The quotation is from Isaiah 54:13, part of the new covenant vision. Being 'taught by God' (didaktōi theou) means direct divine instruction — those who are open to God's teaching recognize Jesus. The logic is: if you have truly heard and learned from the Father, you will come to the Son, because the Father's teaching leads to the Son.
45. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 54:13 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
46. Jesus qualifies verse 45: being 'taught by God' does not mean anyone has seen God directly. Only the one who is 'from God' (para tou theou) — Jesus himself — has seen the Father (cf. 1:18). All human knowledge of God is mediated through the Son.
47. The statement is stark in its simplicity: belief equals eternal life, present tense. The SBLGNT does not include 'in me' (eis eme) though some manuscripts add it; the object of belief is clear from context. This is a restatement of 3:16 and 5:24 in its most compressed form.
48. The 'I am' statement from verse 35 is repeated, now functioning as the transition to the more scandalous claims that follow. The repetition creates emphasis and marks the beginning of the discourse's intensification.
49. The manna's limitation is stated bluntly: those who ate it died. Physical bread, even miraculously given, cannot prevent death. This establishes the need for a different kind of bread — one that conquers death itself.
50. The bread from heaven surpasses the manna in its essential quality: it prevents death. The phrase me apothanē ('not die') refers to spiritual/eternal death, not physical death — Jesus's followers still die physically, but death no longer has the final word.
51. The discourse reaches its most provocative claim: the bread is his flesh (he sarx mou). The word sarx ('flesh') echoes 1:14 ('the Word became flesh') and now receives a sacrificial dimension — this flesh is given 'for the life of the world' (hyper tes tou kosmou zoes). The preposition hyper ('for, on behalf of') indicates substitutionary sacrifice. The shift from metaphor to shocking literalism sets up the controversy of the next verses.
52. The verb emachonto ('were fighting, were disputing') indicates heated argument, not merely questioning. Their question 'How can this man give us his flesh to eat?' takes Jesus's words at face value and finds them absurd and offensive. Eating human flesh would violate every dietary and moral law they knew. Jesus does not soften the claim in response — he intensifies it.
53. Rather than moderating the offensive claim, Jesus escalates it by adding 'drink his blood' — an absolute prohibition in Jewish law (Genesis 9:4, Leviticus 17:10-14). The double requirement (eating flesh and drinking blood) and the negative conditional (unless... you have no life) make this the most scandalous statement in Jesus's public ministry. Whether understood sacramentally (Eucharist), metaphorically (total appropriation of Jesus's sacrificial death by faith), or both, the language is deliberately confrontational.
53. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 9:4 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
53. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Leviticus 17:10-14 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
54. The verb shifts from phago ('to eat,' used earlier) to trogo ('to chew, to munch, to gnaw') — a more visceral, physical word that intensifies the scandal. This is the fourth occurrence of 'I will raise them up on the last day' (cf. vv. 39, 40, 44), making the resurrection promise the drumbeat of the entire discourse.
55. The adjective alethes ('true, genuine') in the SBLGNT (some manuscripts read alethōs, 'truly') means that Jesus's flesh and blood are the authentic reality of which all other food and drink are shadows. This is not metaphor diminishing into symbol but reality claiming its full weight.
56. The mutual indwelling language — 'remains in me and I in them' (en emoi menei kago en auto) — introduces the abiding theme that will be fully developed in the Farewell Discourse (chapters 14-17, especially 15:1-11). Eating and drinking create a relationship of mutual inhabitation between the believer and Christ.
57. The chain of life is explicit: the Father (source of life) gives life to the Son, and the Son gives life to the believer. The phrase 'the living Father' (ho zon pater) is unique in the New Testament and identifies the Father as the ultimate source of all life. The preposition dia ('because of, through') indicates that Jesus's life is derived from the Father, and the believer's life is derived from Jesus.
58. The discourse concludes by returning to its starting point — the contrast with the manna — creating an inclusio. The manna sustained life temporarily; this bread gives life forever. The verb trogo ('feeds on') maintains the visceral language to the end. The final promise — zesei eis ton aiona ('will live forever') — is the discourse's ultimate claim.
59. The narrator identifies the setting: a synagogue in Capernaum. This context confirms that the Bread of Life discourse is a formal teaching, delivered in a liturgical setting where Scripture would have been read and expounded. The synagogue setting makes the desertion that follows even more dramatic — these are not casual listeners but members of the worshiping community.
60. The word skleros ('hard, harsh, offensive') does not mean difficult to understand but difficult to accept. They understand the claim well enough — and find it intolerable. The 'disciples' (mathetai) here are the broader group of followers, not just the Twelve. The question 'who can hear it?' (tis dynatai autou akouein) means 'who can bear to listen to this?'

61. The verb skandalizei ('offend, cause to stumble, shock') is strong — the teaching is a stumbling block, an obstacle to continued following. Jesus knows their reaction before they express it (cf. 2:25) and addresses it directly without softening the teaching.
62. The sentence is deliberately incomplete — Jesus leaves the conclusion unstated. Will the ascension confirm or resolve their offense? The phrase 'where he was before' (hopou en to proteron) asserts pre-existence: the Son of Man was in heaven before his descent. The ascension will prove that his heavenly origin claims are true.
63. This verse is the interpretive key to the entire discourse. 'The flesh is of no help' (he sarx ouk ophelei ouden) does not retract the flesh-eating language but clarifies the mode of reception: the discourse cannot be understood at the level of flesh (human reasoning, physical consumption) but only through the Spirit. Jesus's words are 'spirit and life' — they carry the Spirit's life-giving power and must be received in the Spirit.
64. The narrator's aside reveals that Jesus's knowledge extends to the identity of the unbelievers within his own circle and to the identity of his future betrayer. The phrase ex arches ('from the beginning') indicates this was not a gradual discovery but foreknowledge. The first mention of betrayal (paradoson, 'the one who would hand over') in John's Gospel — an ominous foreshadowing.
65. Jesus restates the divine initiative of verse 44 — coming to him is not a human achievement but a divine gift. The perfect passive participle dedomenon ('having been given, granted') emphasizes that the ability to come is God's prior work. The 'therefore' (dia touto) connects unbelief to the absence of this divine enablement.
66. The phrase apelthon eis ta opiso ('went back, turned away') is the language of apostasy — they reverse course and abandon discipleship. The imperfect periepatoun ('were walking') with the negative ouketi ('no longer') indicates a permanent departure, not a temporary wavering. This is the greatest crisis of faith in Jesus's ministry as John narrates it.
67. This is the only place in John's Gospel where 'the Twelve' (tois dodeka) are mentioned as a distinct group. The question me kai hymeis thelete ('you don't want to go too, do you?') uses the particle me, which expects a negative answer, but the possibility is real. Jesus does not compel anyone to stay — he offers the freedom to leave.
68. Peter's response is not a triumphant confession but an honest acknowledgment of having no alternative. The question 'to whom would we go?' admits the difficulty of the teaching while recognizing that there is no other source of 'words of eternal life' (remata zoes aioniou). Peter does not say 'we understand' but 'we have nowhere else to go.' This is faith in the face of incomprehension.
69. The SBLGNT reads 'the Holy One of God' (ho hagios tou theou) rather than 'the Christ, the Son of the living God' found in some manuscripts (influenced by Matthew 16:16). The title 'Holy One of God' appears in Mark 1:24 on the lips of a demon. The perfect tenses pepistukamen ('we have believed') and egnokamen ('we have known') indicate settled, ongoing conviction. The order is significant: belief leads to knowledge, not the reverse.
70. The word diabolos ('devil, accuser, slanderer') is shocking when applied to a disciple. Jesus affirms that he chose all twelve deliberately (exelexamen, I selected), including the one who will betray him. The divine foreknowledge of verse 64 is now applied directly. The presence of a betrayer within the chosen circle is a mystery Jesus acknowledges but does not explain.
71. The narrator identifies the betrayer by full name: Judas, son of Simon Iscariot. The designation 'Iscariot' (Iskariōtou) may derive from the Hebrew ish-Qeriyot ('man of Kerioth'), indicating Judas's origin in a Judean town — making him possibly the only non-Galilean among the Twelve. The phrase 'one of the Twelve' (heis on ek ton dodeka) emphasizes the insider nature of the betrayal. The imperfect emellen ('was going to') indicates this was settled in advance.

Summary: John 7 takes place during the Feast of Tabernacles (Sukkot) in Jerusalem. Jesus initially stays in Galilee while his brothers urge him to go public in Judea, then travels to Jerusalem secretly and teaches in the temple midway through the festival. The chapter is structured around escalating division: the crowds are split over whether Jesus is a good man or a deceiver, whether he could be the Christ, and whether the authorities want to arrest or believe him. On the last day of the feast, Jesus makes his climactic declaration: 'If anyone is thirsty, let them come to me and drink' — a claim the narrator connects to the Holy Spirit. The chapter ends with the Pharisees and chief priests failing to arrest him, and Nicodemus making a cautious defense.

What Makes This Remarkable: *The Feast of Tabernacles provides the symbolic backdrop for Jesus's teaching. The festival celebrated the wilderness wandering with water-pouring ceremonies (commemorating the water from the rock) and light ceremonies (commemorating the pillar of fire). Jesus's 'living water' declaration (7:37-39) directly engages the water-pouring ritual, and his 'light of the world' declaration in 8:12 engages the light ceremony. The division among the people (schisma, 7:43) becomes a structural element — Jesus is the great divider, forcing a decision. The officers sent to arrest him return empty-handed, declaring 'No one ever spoke like this man' (7:46).*

Translation Friction: The punctuation of 7:37-38 is heavily debated. The traditional reading makes the believer the source of living water ('Out of their heart will flow rivers'). An alternative reading makes Jesus the source ('Out of his heart will flow rivers'). We follow the traditional punctuation while noting the alternative. The reference to 'Scripture' in 7:38 does not correspond to any single Old Testament passage — it may be a composite allusion to Isaiah 55:1, Ezekiel 47:1-12, and Zechariah 14:8. Jesus's brothers' unbelief (7:5) and the confused expectations of the crowd create a portrait of widespread misunderstanding.

Connections: The Feast of Tabernacles connects to Leviticus 23:33-43, Nehemiah 8:14-18, and Zechariah 14:16-19. The water-pouring ceremony connects to Isaiah 12:3 ('With joy you will draw water from the wells of salvation'). The crowd's debate about whether the Christ comes from Bethlehem (7:42) ironically confirms Jesus's qualification — they do not know he was born there. Nicodemus's reappearance (7:50-52) continues his arc from chapter 3.

¹After this, Jesus traveled around in Galilee. He did not want to travel in Judea because the Jewish leaders were seeking to kill him. ²Now the Jewish Feast of Tabernacles was near. ³So his brothers said to him, "Leave here and go to Judea, so that your disciples there can also see the works you are doing. ⁴For no one does anything in secret if they want to be known publicly. If you are doing these things, show yourself to the world." ⁵For not even his brothers believed in him. ⁶So Jesus said to them, "My time has not yet come, but your time is always ready. ⁷The world cannot hate you, but it hates me because I testify about it that its works are evil. ⁸You go up to the festival. I am not going up to this festival because my time has not yet been fulfilled." ⁹After saying this, he stayed behind in Galilee. ¹⁰But after his brothers had gone up to the festival, then he also went up — not publicly but in secret. ¹¹The Jewish leaders were looking for him at the festival, saying, "Where is that man?" ¹²There was much whispering about him among the crowds. Some were saying, "He is a good man," while others were saying, "No, he is leading the people astray." ¹³Yet no one spoke openly about him for fear of the Jewish leaders. ¹⁴When the festival was already half over, Jesus went up to the temple and began teaching. ¹⁵The Jewish leaders were astonished, saying, "How does this man know Scripture without having been formally educated?" ¹⁶Jesus answered them, "My teaching is not my own but comes from the one who sent me. ¹⁷If anyone chooses to do God's will, they will know whether this teaching is from God or whether I speak on my own authority. ¹⁸The one who speaks on their own authority seeks their own glory, but the one who seeks the glory of the one who sent him — this person is true, and there is no falsehood in them. ¹⁹Did not Moses give you the law? Yet none of you keeps the law. Why are you seeking to kill me?" ²⁰The crowd answered, "You have a demon! Who is seeking to kill you?" ²¹Jesus answered them, "I did one work, and all of you are astonished. ²²Moses gave you circumcision — not that it originated with Moses but with the patriarchs — and you circumcise a man on the Sabbath. ²³If a man receives circumcision on the Sabbath so that the law of Moses is not broken, are you angry with me because I made an entire man well on the Sabbath? ²⁴Do not judge by appearances, but judge with right judgment." ²⁵Some of the people of Jerusalem were saying, "Is this not the man they are trying to kill? ²⁶And look — he is speaking publicly and they say nothing to him! Could it be that the rulers really know that this is the Christ? ²⁷But we know where this man is from. When the Christ comes, no one will know where he is from." ²⁸Then Jesus cried out in the temple as he was teaching, "You know me, and you know where I am from! But I have not come on my own. The one who sent me is true, and you do not know him. ²⁹I know him, because I am from him and he sent me." ³⁰So they tried to arrest him, but no one laid a hand on him because his hour had not yet come. ³¹But many in the crowd believed in him. They were saying, "When the Christ comes, will he perform more signs than this man has done?" ³²The Pharisees heard the crowd whispering these things about him, and the chief priests and the Pharisees sent temple officers to arrest him. ³³So Jesus said, "I will be with you only a little while longer, and then I am going to the one who sent me. ³⁴You will look for me and will not find me, and where I am you cannot come." ³⁵The Jewish leaders said among themselves, "Where does this man intend to go that we will not find him? He does not intend to go to the Dispersion among the Greeks and teach the Greeks, does he? ³⁶What does he mean by saying, 'You will look for me and will not find me, and where I am you cannot come'?" ³⁷On the last and greatest day of the festival, Jesus stood and cried out, "If anyone is thirsty, let them come to me and drink. ³⁸Whoever believes in me, as the Scripture has said, 'Out of their heart will flow rivers of living water.'" ³⁹Now he said this about the Spirit, whom those who believed in him were going to receive, for the Spirit had not yet been given because Jesus had not yet been glorified. ⁴⁰When some in the crowd heard these words, they said, "This man is truly the Prophet." ⁴¹Others were saying, "This is the Christ." But some were saying, "Surely the Christ does not come from Galilee, does he? ⁴²Has not the Scripture said that the Christ comes from the offspring of David and from Bethlehem, the village where David lived?" ⁴³So there was a division among the crowd because of him. ⁴⁴Some of them wanted to arrest him, but no one laid hands on him. ⁴⁵The temple officers then returned to the chief priests and Pharisees, who asked them, "Why did you not bring him in?" ⁴⁶The officers answered, "No one has ever spoken like this man." ⁴⁷The Pharisees answered them, "Have you been deceived too? ⁴⁸Have any of the rulers or of the Pharisees put their trust in him? ⁴⁹But this crowd that does not know the law — they are cursed!" ⁵⁰Nicodemus — the one who had come to Jesus earlier, and who was one of them — said to them, ⁵¹"Does our law condemn a man without first hearing from him and finding out what he is doing?" ⁵²They answered him, "You are not from Galilee too, are you? Search and see — no prophet arises from Galilee!" ⁵³Then each of them went to his own home.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The verb periepatei ('was walking around, was traveling') indicates a period of itinerant ministry in Galilee. The reason for avoiding Judea is explicit: the authorities were seeking to kill him (cf. 5:18). The narrative tension between Galilee (relative safety) and Jerusalem (mortal danger) structures the chapter.
2. The skenopegia ('Feast of Tabernacles, Feast of Booths') was one of the three pilgrimage festivals (with Passover and Pentecost) requiring attendance in Jerusalem. Celebrated in September/October (Tishri 15-22), it commemorated Israel's wilderness wandering and gave thanks for the autumn harvest. It was the most joyful of the festivals, involving temporary shelters (sukkot), torch-lit processions, and water-drawing ceremonies.
3. Jesus's brothers (adelphoi, cf. 2:12) urge him to go public on the largest possible stage. Their advice is worldly wisdom: if you want followers, perform in the capital during the biggest festival. The reference to 'your disciples' in Judea distinguishes the broader circle of followers from the Galilean group.
4. The brothers' logic is strategic: public figures need public platforms. The contrast between en krypto ('in secret') and en parresia ('openly, publicly, with boldness') frames the issue as marketing. The conditional 'if you are doing these things' (ei tauta poieis) may carry a note of doubt — they are not entirely sure about his works. The command 'show yourself to the world' (phaneroson se auton to kosmo) echoes the narrator's role-description of signs as 'revelations' (2:11).
5. The narrator's blunt assessment — 'not even his brothers believed' (oude gar hoi adelphoi autou episteuon) — is one of the most poignant notes in the Gospel. The imperfect tense episteuon indicates their unbelief at this point in time; Acts 1:14 shows them among the believers after the resurrection. The word 'even' (oude) emphasizes the scandal: those closest to him by blood do not believe.
6. The word kairos ('time, opportune moment') is distinct from chronos ('chronological time'). Jesus operates on a divine timetable; his brothers can go to Jerusalem whenever they choose because nothing of cosmic significance depends on their timing. The phrase oupo parestin ('has not yet arrived') connects to the 'hour' motif (2:4, 7:30, 8:20) — Jesus's movements are determined by the Father's schedule, not human advice.
7. The world (kosmos) has no reason to hate Jesus's brothers — they share its values and pose no threat to its order. Jesus provokes hatred because he exposes evil (cf. 3:19-20). The verb martyro ('I testify') places Jesus in the role of witness against the world — his very presence is an indictment of human darkness.
8. The SBLGNT reads ouk ('not') rather than oupo ('not yet'), which some manuscripts have. With ouk, Jesus says flatly 'I am not going' — then goes secretly (v. 10). This is not deception but a refusal to go on their terms and their timetable. The perfect tense peplerotai ('has been fulfilled') indicates that the kairos is not yet complete — God's timing has not yet arrived for a public appearance.
9. Jesus remains (emeinen) in Galilee — temporarily. His brothers go ahead publicly; he will follow privately. The verb meno ('to stay, to remain') carries its usual Johannine weight of deliberate, purposeful presence.
10. Jesus goes to Jerusalem, but on his own terms — en krypto ('in secret'), the opposite of the en parresia ('publicly') his brothers demanded (v. 4). He will make a public appearance, but at the time and in the manner the Father determines, not as a publicity stunt orchestrated by unbelieving family members.
11. The imperfect ezetoun ('were looking for') indicates an ongoing search. The demonstrative ekeinos ('that one, that man') can be either neutral or disdainful — they refer to Jesus without naming him. The authorities expect him at the festival and are prepared to act.
12. The word goggysmos ('murmuring, whispering') indicates guarded, secretive conversation — people are afraid to speak openly (v. 13). The division is between those who see Jesus as 'good' (agathos) and those who see him as a deceiver who 'leads astray' (plana, the root of 'planet' — one who wanders and causes others to wander). This division (schisma) will deepen throughout the chapter.
13. The word parresia ('openly, boldly, with freedom of speech') contrasts with the secretive whispering of verse 12. Fear of the authorities (ton phobon ton Ioudaion) suppresses public discourse about Jesus. This fear of the authorities recurs in 9:22, 12:42, 19:38, 20:19, revealing the coercive power of the religious establishment.

14. Jesus makes his public appearance on his own schedule — midway through the seven-day festival (approximately day three or four). He teaches in the temple (hieron, the temple complex), the most public forum in Jerusalem. The imperfect edidasken ('was teaching, began teaching') indicates sustained instruction, not a single statement.
15. The phrase grammata oiden ('knows letters/learning') refers not to basic literacy but to the formal study of Scripture under a recognized rabbi. Jesus had no rabbinic credentials — he had not studied under any recognized teacher. The verb memathekas ('having learned, having studied') is from the same root as mathetes ('disciple'). Their astonishment acknowledges his competence while questioning his credentials.
16. Jesus explains his lack of formal credentials by identifying the source of his teaching: the Father who sent him. His teaching is not self-generated (ouk estin eme) but received from God. This continues the pattern of the Son doing nothing on his own but only what the Father gives (5:19, 30).
17. Jesus offers an epistemological principle: obedience is the pathway to knowledge. Those who are willing to do God's will (to thelema autou poiein) will be able to discern whether Jesus's teaching comes from God. The willingness to obey precedes the ability to evaluate — moral alignment opens the way to theological understanding.
18. Jesus provides a test for authenticating a teacher: examine whose glory they seek. Self-promoters seek their own glory (ten doxan ten idian); an authentic teacher seeks the glory of the one who commissioned them. The word adikia ('unrighteousness, falsehood, injustice') here carries the sense of dishonesty or deception — the teacher who seeks God's glory is trustworthy.
19. Jesus turns the tables: they claim to follow Moses's law, yet they are plotting murder — which the law forbids (Exodus 20:13). The argument is devastating: the very law they accuse Jesus of violating (Sabbath regulations) condemns their own intent to kill. The phrase oudeis ex hymon poiei ton nomon ('none of you keeps the law') is either hyperbolic or a specific charge about the murder plot.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 20:13. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
20. The crowd (ochlos), as opposed to the authorities (Ioudaioi), appears unaware of the murder plot. Their accusation 'you have a demon' (daimonion echeis) attributes Jesus's claims to insanity or demonic influence — a charge that will recur (8:48, 52, 10:20). The crowd's ignorance of the leadership's intentions reveals a disconnect between the people and their rulers.
21. The 'one work' (hen ergon) refers to the Sabbath healing at the pool of Bethesda (5:1-9), which triggered the persecution. Jesus returns to the unfinished argument from chapter 5. The verb thaumazete ('you are astonished/troubled') indicates the Sabbath healing still provokes them.
22. Jesus constructs a rabbinic argument from lesser to greater (qal vahomer). Circumcision predates Moses (Genesis 17) but was incorporated into Mosaic law (Leviticus 12:3). When the eighth day after birth falls on a Sabbath, circumcision proceeds — the obligation to circumcise overrides the Sabbath prohibition of work. This was settled Jewish law (cf. Mishnah Shabbat 18:3, 19:2).
22. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 17. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
22. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Leviticus 12:3. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
23. The argument from lesser to greater: if circumcision (which benefits one part of the body) can override the Sabbath, how much more should healing the whole person (holon anthropon hygie, 'an entire person well') override it? The word cholate ('are angry, are furious') is unusually strong — suggesting that Jesus perceives their opposition as irrational rage rather than principled disagreement.
24. Jesus concludes with a general principle: judgment (krisis) should be based on reality (dikaia, 'righteous, just, correct'), not surface appearances (kat opsin, 'according to the face/sight'). Applied to the Sabbath controversy: judging Jesus as a Sabbath-breaker is a superficial verdict that fails to see the deeper reality of what God is doing through him.
25. The 'people of Jerusalem' (Hierosolymitōn) are distinct from the festival crowds (who are pilgrims from elsewhere). The residents know about the authorities' intentions, confirming Jesus's claim in verse 19. Their question implies surprise that Jesus is teaching publicly unmolested.
26. The crowd speculates that the authorities' inaction might mean they have secretly concluded Jesus is the Christ. The adverb parresia ('publicly, boldly') is the very quality his brothers demanded (v. 4) — now Jesus displays it, but on the Father's timetable. The particle mepote ('could it be that?') introduces a tentative, almost hopeful possibility.
27. The crowd dismisses their own suggestion based on a popular belief about the Christ's hidden origin — some Jewish traditions held that the Messiah would appear suddenly and mysteriously (cf. 1 Enoch 48:6, 4 Ezra 13:51-52). Since they know where Jesus is from (Galilee/Nazareth), he cannot be the Christ. The irony is multilayered: they think they know his origin, but they do not know his true origin (from the Father, from heaven, as the Prologue declares).
27. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Ezra 13:51-52. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
28. The verb ekraxen ('cried out, shouted') indicates a public proclamation — Jesus raises his voice to address the crowd's discussion about his origins. His response is both concessive and corrective: yes, you know my human identity, but you do not know the one who sent me. The claim 'I have not come on my own' (ap emautou ouk elelyta) asserts divine commissioning. The accusation 'you do not know him' (hon hymeis ouk oidate) is devastating to a people who pride themselves on knowing God.

- 29. Jesus claims two things: personal knowledge of God (ego oida auton, 'I know him') and origin from God (par autou eimi, 'I am from him'). The preposition para ('from the side of, from the presence of') indicates intimate proximity — Jesus comes from God's very presence. The aorist apesteilen ('sent') marks a specific, decisive commissioning.
- 30. The attempt to arrest (piasai, 'to seize, to arrest') fails — not because of human protection but because of divine timing. The narrator's explanation 'his hour had not yet come' (oupo elythei he hora autou) indicates that the 'hour' of Jesus's death is determined by the Father, not by his enemies. No human action can advance or prevent the divinely appointed hour.
- 31. The question expects a negative answer: the Christ will not do more signs than Jesus has done. The logic is simple: if the Messiah will be identified by his works, and no one could surpass Jesus's works, then Jesus must be the Messiah. This is sign-based faith, which John presents as genuine but incomplete.
- 32. The growing popular support alarms the authorities. The coalition of 'chief priests and Pharisees' (hoi archiereis kai hoi Pharisaioi) represents both the Sadducean temple establishment and the Pharisaic party — political rivals united against Jesus. The hyperetas ('officers, servants, attendants') are the temple police, authorized to make arrests within the temple precincts.
- 33. Jesus speaks past the immediate crisis to his impending departure — the 'going to the one who sent me' refers to his return to the Father through death, resurrection, and ascension. The phrase chronon mikron ('a little while') introduces the temporal urgency that marks the second half of the Gospel. His presence is temporary; the opportunity to respond is limited.
- 34. This enigmatic statement will be repeated in 8:21 and 13:33. The meaning is that after his departure, those who rejected him will seek him in vain. 'Where I am' (hopou eimi ego) refers to the Father's presence — a destination accessible only through faith in the Son. The inability to come (ou dynaste elthein) reflects spiritual incapacity, not physical distance.
- 35. The 'Dispersion' (diaspora) refers to Jews living outside the land of Israel among Greek-speaking populations. Their speculation is ironic — while meant dismissively, it prophetically anticipates the mission to the Gentile world that will follow Jesus's departure. The word Hellenas ('Greeks') here means Gentiles generally, not merely Greek nationals.
- 36. The leaders repeat Jesus's words but cannot penetrate their meaning. Their incomprehension is a recurring Johannine pattern — Jesus speaks on a heavenly register and his listeners hear on an earthly one. The irony persists throughout: they cannot understand because they do not know the one who sent him (v. 28).
- 37. The 'last and greatest day' (te eschate hemera te megale) is either the seventh day (the climax of the water-pouring ceremonies) or the eighth day (a closing assembly, Leviticus 23:36). During the festival, priests processed from the Pool of Siloam to the temple altar, pouring water as a prayer for rain and a commemoration of the water from the rock (Exodus 17:1-7). At this precise liturgical moment, Jesus stands (heistekei, the posture of proclamation) and cries out (ekraxen), offering himself as the fulfillment of everything the water ceremony signified.
- 37. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Leviticus 23:36. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
- 37. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 17:1-7. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
- 38. The punctuation of verses 37-38 is heavily debated. The traditional reading (which we follow) makes the believer the source of living water: 'Whoever believes in me... out of their heart will flow rivers.' An alternative reading makes Jesus the source: 'Let the one who believes in me drink. As the Scripture said, out of his (Jesus's) heart will flow rivers.' Both readings are theologically sound. The word koilia ('belly, inner being, heart') refers to the innermost part of a person. No single Old Testament verse matches this quotation exactly — it may be a composite of Isaiah 55:1, 58:11, Ezekiel 47:1-12, and Zechariah 14:8.
- 38. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 55:1 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
- 38. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Ezekiel 47:1-12 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
- 38. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Zechariah 14:8 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
- 39. The narrator provides the authoritative interpretation: 'living water' = the Holy Spirit. The startling phrase oupo gar en pneuma ('for the Spirit was not yet') does not mean the Spirit did not exist but that the Spirit had not yet been given in the post-resurrection, post-glorification manner. The Spirit's full giving awaits Jesus's glorification (his death, resurrection, and ascension). This is fulfilled in 20:22, where the risen Jesus breathes the Spirit on his disciples.
- 40. The crowd identifies Jesus as 'the Prophet' (ho prophetes) — the Moses-like figure promised in Deuteronomy 18:15-18, the same identification made after the feeding miracle (6:14). The adverb alethos ('truly, really') indicates conviction. But as in 6:14, this identification, while correct as far as it goes, falls short of the full truth.
- 40. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Deuteronomy 18:15-18 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.

41. The schisma (division) deepens: some affirm Jesus as the Christ, others object on geographical grounds. The particle me introduces a question expecting a negative answer — 'the Christ doesn't come from Galilee, does he?' The objection assumes Jesus's Galilean origin, not knowing about his birth in Bethlehem.
42. The crowd cites Micah 5:2 (the Messiah from Bethlehem) and 2 Samuel 7:12-16 (the Messiah from David's line). The irony is devastating: the very Scripture they cite to disqualify Jesus actually confirms his identity. Matthew and Luke both record Jesus's birth in Bethlehem (Matthew 2:1, Luke 2:4-7). John does not correct the crowd's error — he lets the dramatic irony stand for the reader to appreciate.
42. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Micah 5:2. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
42. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on 2 Samuel 7:12-16. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
43. The word schisma ('division, split, tear') is emphatic — Jesus divides the crowd into irreconcilable camps. This is the first of three uses of schisma in John (cf. 9:16, 10:19), each time caused by Jesus's words or actions. The preposition di auton ('because of him') makes Jesus the cause of the division.
44. For the second time (cf. v. 30), an attempt to seize Jesus fails. The repeated failure underscores the principle that Jesus's 'hour' is divinely protected. No human agency can touch him before the appointed time.
45. The officers sent in verse 32 return empty-handed. The authorities demand an explanation for the failed arrest. The scene shifts from the public forum to the private council, revealing the frustration of the leadership.
46. The temple police — trained professionals, not easily impressed — testify that Jesus's speech is without parallel. The adverb oudepote ('never, at no time') and houtos ('in this way, like this') combine to declare Jesus's teaching absolutely unique. Their testimony is unintentionally profound: the Word made flesh (1:14) speaks as no mere human can.
47. The Pharisees respond with contempt — me kai hymeis peplanesthe ('surely you too have not been led astray?') uses the same verb (planao, 'to lead astray, deceive') from verse 12, where some accused Jesus of 'leading the people astray.' The irony is that the officers were affected not by deception but by the truth of Jesus's teaching.
48. The question expects a negative answer and uses social status as the criterion for truth: if no authorities believe, the teaching must be false. This is an argument from institutional authority, not from evidence. The irony is that Nicodemus — a ruler and a Pharisee — is about to speak up (v. 50).
49. The Pharisees dismiss the common people (ho ochlos houtos) as ignorant of the law and therefore cursed (eparatoi, 'accursed'). The term reflects the rabbinic category of am ha-aretz ('people of the land') — the uneducated masses whom some Pharisees regarded as ritually and morally deficient. The arrogance of the statement is staggering and is immediately challenged by one of their own.
50. Nicodemus reappears for the second of his three appearances in John (3:1-21, 7:50-52, 19:39). The narrator identifies him as 'the one who had come to Jesus earlier' (ho elthon pros auton proteron), linking back to the nighttime visit in chapter 3. The phrase 'one of them' (heis on ex auton) emphasizes that dissent comes from within the Pharisaic party itself — contradicting their claim in verse 48.
51. Nicodemus's intervention is careful and procedural rather than confessional — he does not defend Jesus directly but appeals to legal process. The principle is from Deuteronomy 1:16-17 and 17:2-6: proper judgment requires hearing the accused. By invoking 'our law' (ho nomos hemon), Nicodemus turns the Pharisees' own weapon against them — they who accused the crowd of not knowing the law are themselves violating its procedures.
51. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Deuteronomy 1:16-17. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
52. The Pharisees respond with personal attack rather than legal argument — they sarcastically ask if Nicodemus is a Galilean sympathizer. Their claim that 'no prophet arises from Galilee' (ek tes Galilaias prophetes ouk egeiretai) is historically inaccurate — Jonah was from Gath-hepher in Galilee (2 Kings 14:25), and possibly other prophets as well. Some manuscripts read 'the prophet does not arise' (ho prophetes, with the article), specifically denying the Prophet-like-Moses from Galilee. The scene ends with the council in deadlock.
52. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on 2 Kings 14:25. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
53. This verse is included in the SBLGNT as the conclusion to chapter 7, though it is often grouped with the Pericope Adulterae (7:53-8:11) in many manuscripts. The verse itself simply narrates the council dispersing — without resolution, without arresting Jesus, and without answering Nicodemus's legal challenge. The chapter ends with the authorities frustrated, the crowd divided, and Jesus unharmed.

Summary: John 8 opens with the Pericope Adulterae (7:53-8:11), in which a woman caught in adultery is brought before Jesus as a legal trap — he disarms the accusers with 'Let the one without sin throw the first stone.' The remainder of the chapter records an extended confrontation between Jesus and the Jewish leaders in the temple courts, centered on Jesus's identity and authority. Jesus declares himself the light of the world (8:12), claims that the Father testifies on his behalf, warns that those who reject him will die in their sins, and reveals his divine origin. The chapter climaxes with the explosive declaration 'Before Abraham was, I AM' (8:58), prompting an attempt to stone him.

What Makes This Remarkable: The Pericope Adulterae (7:53-8:11) is one of the most textually disputed passages in the New Testament — absent from the earliest and most reliable Greek manuscripts (P66, P75, Sinaiticus, Vaticanus), it appears in various locations across later manuscripts. The SBLGNT does not include it in the main text. We include it here with full textual notation, as it has been part of the received tradition for centuries. The ego eimi ('I AM') declaration in 8:58 is the chapter's theological summit — Jesus uses the absolute form of the divine self-identification from Exodus 3:14, and his audience understands the claim immediately, responding with attempted execution for blasphemy.

Translation Friction: The textual status of 7:53-8:11 requires transparent handling. The ego eimi statements throughout this chapter carry varying force — some are ordinary predicate uses ('I am the light'), while 8:58 is the absolute, divine-name usage. We render all as 'I am' but note the distinction. The dialogue in 8:31-59 involves escalating hostility that modern readers may find harsh; we render the Greek as given without softening.

Connections: The 'I AM' declaration connects to Exodus 3:14 (the divine name revealed to Moses), Isaiah 41:4 and 43:10-13 (the LORD's self-identification), and John's own Prologue (1:1-18). The light-of-the-world claim connects to Isaiah 9:2, 42:6, and 49:6. The discussion of Abraham connects to Genesis 12-22 and the covenant promises. The theme of judgment and testimony connects to Deuteronomy 17:6 and 19:15 (the two-witness requirement).

⁵³Then each of them went to his own house, ¹Jesus traveled to the mount of Olives. ²At dawn he went again to the temple, and all the people came to him. He sat down and began teaching them. ³The scribes and the Pharisees brought a woman who had been caught in adultery. They made her stand in the middle of the group ⁴They say to him, Teacher, this lady was removed in adultery, in the very act. ⁵In the Law, Moses commanded us to stone such women. So what do you say?" ⁶They said this to test him, so that they would have grounds to accuse him. But Jesus bent down and began writing on the ground with his finger. ⁷When they kept pressing him, he straightened up and said to them, "Let the one among you who is without sin be the first to throw a stone at her." ⁸Then he bent down again and continued writing on the ground. ⁹When they heard this, they went away one by one, beginning with the elders, until Jesus was left alone with the woman still standing there. ¹⁰Jesus straightened up and said to her, "Woman, where are they? Has no one condemned you?" ¹¹She said, "No one, Lord." Jesus said, "Neither do I condemn you. Go, and from now on do not sin anymore." ¹²Again Jesus spoke to them, saying, "I am the light of the world. Whoever follows me will never walk in darkness but will have the light of life." ¹³So the Pharisees said to him, "You are testifying about yourself — your testimony is not valid." ¹⁴Jesus answered them, "Even if I testify about myself, my testimony is valid, because I know where I came from and where I am going. But you do not know where I came from or where I am going. ¹⁵You judge by human standards. I judge no one. ¹⁶Yet even if I do judge, my judgment is true, because I am not alone — I and the Father who sent me judge together. ¹⁷In your own Law it is written that the testimony of two witnesses is valid. ¹⁸I am the one who testifies about myself, and the Father who sent me testifies about me." ¹⁹Then they said to him, "Where is your Father?" Jesus answered, "You know neither me nor my Father. If you knew me, you would know my Father as well." ²⁰He spoke these words while teaching in the treasury area of the temple. Yet no one arrested him, because his hour had not yet come. ²¹Then he said to them again, "I am going away, and you will look for me, but you will die in your sin. Where I am going, you cannot come." ²²So the Jewish leaders said, "Is he going to kill himself? Is that why he says, 'Where I am going, you cannot come?'" ²³He said to them, "You are from below; I am from above. You are of this world; I am not of this world. ²⁴That is why I told you that you will die in your sins. For if you do not believe that I am he, you will die in your sins." ²⁵They said to him, "Who are you?" Jesus said to them, "What I have been telling you from the beginning. ²⁶I have much to say about you and much to judge. But the one who sent me is true, and what I have heard from him — these things I speak to the world." ²⁷They did not understand that he was speaking to them about the Father. ²⁸So Jesus said to them, "When you have lifted up the Son of Man, then you will know that I am he, and that I do nothing on my own authority, but I speak just as the Father taught me. ²⁹The one who sent me is with me. He has not left me alone, because I always do what pleases him." ³⁰As he was saying these things, many believed in him. ³¹So Jesus said to the Jews who had believed him, "If you remain in my word, you are truly my disciples, ³²You will know the truth, and the truth will make you free. ³³They answered him, "We are Abraham's descendants and have never been enslaved to anyone. How can you say, 'You will be set free'?" ³⁴Jesus answered them, "Truly, truly, I say to you, everyone who practices sin is a slave to sin. ³⁵A slave does not remain in the household forever, but a son remains forever. ³⁶So if the Son sets you free, you will be truly free. ³⁷I know that you are Abraham's descendants. Yet you are seeking to kill me because my word finds no room in you. ³⁸I speak of what I have seen in the presence of the Father, and you do what you have heard from your father." ³⁹They answered him, "Abraham is our father." Jesus said to them, "If you were Abraham's children, you would be doing the works Abraham did. ⁴⁰But now you are seeking to kill me — a man who has told you the truth that I heard from God. Abraham did not do this. ⁴¹You are doing the works of your father." They said to him, "We were not born of sexual immorality. We have one Father — God." ⁴²Jesus said to them, "If God were your Father, you would love me, for I came from God and I am here. I did not come on my own, but he sent me. ⁴³Why do you not understand what I am saying? It is because you cannot bear to hear my word. ⁴⁴You are of your father the devil, and you want to carry out your father's desires. He was a murderer from the beginning and has not stood in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he lies, he speaks from his own nature, for he is a liar and the father of lies. ⁴⁵Yet because I tell the truth, you do not believe me. ⁴⁶Which of you can convict me of sin? If I speak the truth, why do you not believe me? ⁴⁷The one who is from God hears the words of God. The reason you do not hear is that you are not from God." ⁴⁸The Jewish leaders answered him, "Are we not right in saying that you are a Samaritan and have a demon?" ⁴⁹Jesus answered, "I do not have a demon. On the contrary, I honor my Father, and you dishonor me. ⁵⁰I do not seek my own glory. There is one who seeks it, and he is the judge. ⁵¹Truly, truly, I say to you, if anyone keeps my word, he will never see death." ⁵²The Jewish leaders said to him, "Now we know that you have a demon. Abraham died, and the prophets died, yet you say, 'If anyone keeps my word, he will never taste death.' ⁵³Are you greater than our father Abraham, who died? The prophets died too. Who do you make yourself out to be?" ⁵⁴Jesus answered, "If I glorify myself, my glory means nothing. It is my Father who glorifies me — the one you claim is your God. ⁵⁵You have not known him, but I know him. If I said I did not know him, I would be a liar like you. But I do know him, and I keep his word. ⁵⁶Your father Abraham rejoiced that he would see my day. He saw it and was glad." ⁵⁷So the Jewish leaders said to him, "You are not yet fifty years old, and you have seen Abraham?" ⁵⁸Jesus said to them, "Truly, truly, I say to you, before Abraham was born, I AM." ⁵⁹So they picked up stones to throw at him, but Jesus hid himself and went out of the temple.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

- 53. This verse concludes the scene of 7:45-52 in the traditional placement. The Greek is straightforward narrative transition. The Pericope Adulterae begins here in manuscripts that include it.
1. The Mount of Olives is mentioned frequently in the Synoptic Gospels but only here in John (another indicator of the passage's non-Johannine origin). The contrast between 'each to his own house' and Jesus going to the mount suggests he had no home in Jerusalem.
 2. The Greek orthrou ('at dawn') indicates very early morning. The posture of sitting (kathisas) was the standard teaching position for a Jewish rabbi — the teacher sat while the audience stood or sat around him.
 3. The Greek kateilēmmenēn ('having been caught, seized') is a perfect passive participle indicating she was caught in the very act. The public shaming of placing her 'in the middle' (en mesō) is deliberate humiliation designed to pressure Jesus into a ruling.
 4. The Greek ep' autophōrō ('in the very act, red-handed') is emphatic — they stress that there is no ambiguity about her guilt. The address 'Teacher' (Didaskale) frames the encounter as a legal question put to a rabbi. Notably absent is the man involved, though the law required both parties to be present (Leviticus 20:10).

4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Leviticus 20:10. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. The reference is to Leviticus 20:10 and Deuteronomy 22:22-24, which prescribe death for adultery (though the specific method of stoning is debated — Deuteronomy 22:24 specifies stoning for a betrothed virgin). The trap is designed to force Jesus into a dilemma: upholding the law would conflict with Roman authority (Jews could not execute), while showing mercy would appear to dismiss Moses.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Leviticus 20:10 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Deuteronomy 22:22-24 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The verb peirazontes ('testing') reveals their motive — this is entrapment, not a sincere legal question. The Greek kategraphēin ('to write down') is used only here in the New Testament. What Jesus wrote has been the subject of endless speculation — the text does not say, and we do not speculate. The KJV's addition 'as though he heard them not' is not in the Greek manuscripts.
7. The Greek anamatētos ('without sin') appears only here in the New Testament. Jesus does not deny the law's validity or the woman's guilt — he redirects the moral scrutiny to the accusers themselves. Under Deuteronomy 17:7, the witnesses were required to cast the first stones, so Jesus's statement may also challenge whether legitimate witnesses are present.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Deuteronomy 17:7. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The imperfect egraphen ('was writing, continued to write') suggests ongoing action — Jesus did not write briefly and stop but continued writing while the accusers processed his words. The repetition of the writing gesture frames the central pronouncement.
9. The detail 'beginning with the elders' (arxamenoi apo tōn presbyterōn) is psychologically acute — the oldest, presumably with the most accumulated guilt or the most wisdom, leave first. The KJV's 'convicted by their own conscience' is an addition not found in the best manuscripts of this passage; the Greek simply says they left after hearing.
10. The address gynai ('woman') is respectful in Greek, not dismissive — the same form Jesus uses to address his mother at Cana (2:4) and from the cross (19:26). The verb katekrinen ('condemned') is a legal term — Jesus asks whether any formal judgment has been rendered.
11. Jesus's response is neither legal acquittal nor moral indifference — he declines to condemn (katakrinō) while commanding a changed life. The phrase apo tou nyn ('from now on') marks a turning point. The imperative mēketi hamartane ('sin no more') is a present imperative with the negative, meaning 'stop the ongoing practice of sinning.' Grace and moral demand stand together without tension.
12. This is the second of John's seven 'I am' statements with a predicate (following 6:35). The double negative ou mē ('never, by no means') is the strongest negation in Greek. If this discourse occurs during the Feast of Tabernacles (cf. 7:2), the four giant candelabra lit in the Court of Women provide a vivid backdrop — Jesus claims to be what the festival rituals symbolized.
13. The Pharisees invoke the legal principle of Deuteronomy 19:15: no one can serve as their own witness. The Greek alēthēs here means 'valid, legally admissible' rather than 'factually true' — they are challenging the admissibility of self-testimony, not calling Jesus a liar. This directly engages the two-witness law that governs Jewish legal proceedings.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Deuteronomy 19:15 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. Jesus's defense rests on his unique origin and destiny — his knowledge of his divine origin (pothen elthon, 'where I came from') and divine destination (pou hypagō, 'where I am going') validates his self-testimony in a way that applies to no ordinary witness. This appears to contradict 5:31 ('If I testify about myself, my testimony is not valid') but the contexts differ: there Jesus was speaking hypothetically about isolated self-testimony, while here he argues that his testimony is never truly isolated because the Father always testifies with him.
15. The phrase kata tēn sarka ('according to the flesh') means by external, superficial, merely human criteria. Jesus's statement 'I judge no one' seems to conflict with other Johannine statements about judgment (5:22, 9:39); the resolution is that Jesus does not judge in the flawed, appearance-based way his opponents do.
16. The word alēthinē ('true, genuine, real') differs from alēthēs in verse 13 — it implies not merely factual accuracy but genuine, ultimate reality. Jesus grounds the validity of his judgment in his unity with the Father, introducing the two-witness theme that he develops in the next verse.
17. Jesus cites Deuteronomy 17:6 or 19:15 (the two-witness requirement). The phrase 'your law' (tō hymetero nomō) does not mean Jesus disowns the Torah — the pronoun 'your' appeals to an authority his opponents accept. The argument is: you require two witnesses; I have two — myself and my Father.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Deuteronomy 17:6. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.

18. The ego eimi ('I am') here functions as a simple copula ('I am the one who...') rather than the absolute divine claim, but John may intend a double resonance — Jesus identifies himself as a witness while using the phrase that will carry divine force in verse 58.
19. The question 'Where is your Father?' may be a genuine misunderstanding (thinking of a human father) or a veiled insult about Jesus's parentage. Jesus's response links knowledge of himself inseparably to knowledge of the Father — a recurring Johannine theme (cf. 14:7). The conditional ei ēdeite ('if you knew') uses the imperfect, indicating they do not currently know.
20. The gazophylakion ('treasury') was located in the Court of Women, a public area of the temple — Jesus was teaching openly, not in hiding. The phrase 'his hour' (hē hōra autou) is a key Johannine motif referring to the appointed time of Jesus's death and glorification (cf. 2:4, 7:30, 12:23, 13:1, 17:1). John presents Jesus's safety as divinely governed, not circumstantial.
21. The singular 'sin' (hamartia, not the plural hamartiais as in verse 24) may refer to the specific sin of rejecting Jesus rather than sins in general. The statement 'where I am going, you cannot come' echoes 7:34 and provokes the same confusion — his opponents think in geographical terms while Jesus speaks of his return to the Father.
22. The Greek mēti introduces a question expecting a negative answer, but with ironic uncertainty. The suggestion of suicide is deeply offensive in a Jewish context, where it was viewed as a sin that would consign someone to the lowest part of Sheol — they are inadvertently suggesting Jesus would go where they truly cannot follow. We render hoi Ioudaioi as 'Jewish leaders' since the context indicates the religious authorities in debate with Jesus, not the Jewish people broadly.
24. The phrase ego eimi ('I am') here stands without a predicate — 'I am he' is supplied by English translators for grammatical sense, but the Greek is absolute: 'unless you believe that I AM.' This is the first instance in the chapter of the potentially divine-name usage of ego eimi. The plural 'sins' (hamartiais) replaces the singular of verse 21, broadening the reference.
25. Jesus's response (tēn archēn ho ti kai lalō hymin) is one of the most debated phrases in the Gospel. It could mean: (1) 'What I have been telling you from the start,' (2) 'Why do I speak to you at all?' (taking tēn archēn as 'at all'), or (3) 'I am the beginning — what I tell you.' We follow the first reading as most contextually natural, but the ambiguity may be intentional.
26. Jesus restrains himself from full judgment ('I have much to say and judge') and instead speaks only what he has received from the Father. The adjective alēthēs ('true, truthful') applied to the Father affirms the reliability of everything Jesus has been commissioned to say.
27. John's editorial comment highlights the persistent misunderstanding that characterizes the opponents throughout this chapter — they hear Jesus's words but cannot grasp that 'the one who sent me' refers to God as his Father.
28. The verb hypsōsete ('lift up') carries a deliberate double meaning in John: physical lifting up on the cross and exaltation to glory (cf. 3:14, 12:32-34). The 'you' (hymeis) makes the opponents themselves the agents of the lifting up — they will crucify him, and that very act will reveal his identity. The ego eimi ('I am he') is again absolute, with the full meaning to become clear only at the cross.
29. The claim 'I always do what pleases him' (ta aresta autō poiō pantote) is an extraordinary assertion of perfect moral alignment with God. This is not a boast but a statement of the Son's complete dependence on and obedience to the Father — the basis for their unity.
30. The verb episteusan ('believed') uses the aorist tense, which may indicate an initial response rather than deep, lasting faith — as the following verses will test. John often distinguishes between shallow and genuine belief (cf. 2:23-25, 6:60-66).
31. Jesus addresses those who 'believed' (pepisteukotas, perfect participle — 'who had come to believe') but immediately sets a condition: genuine discipleship requires remaining (meinēte, aorist subjunctive of menō) in his word. The verb menō ('remain, abide') is central to Johannine theology (cf. ch. 15). The shift from initial belief to tested commitment drives the rest of this conversation.
32. One of the most quoted verses in the Gospel. The Greek alētheia ('truth') in John is not abstract philosophical truth but the revealed reality of God embodied in Jesus (cf. 14:6). The verb eleutherōsei ('will set free, will liberate') points forward to the freedom from sin discussed in verses 34-36. The future tense gnōsethe ('you will know') makes knowledge the result of abiding, not its prerequisite.
33. The claim 'we have never been enslaved to anyone' (oudenī dedouleukamen pōpote) is historically astonishing — they had been slaves in Egypt, exiles in Babylon, and were currently under Roman occupation. The statement likely reflects a theological self-understanding: as Abraham's seed, they considered themselves spiritually free regardless of political circumstances. The perfect tense dedouleukamen ('have been enslaved') emphasizes their ongoing status claim.
34. The double amēn ('truly, truly') is unique to John's Gospel and marks solemn, authoritative declarations. The present participle ho poiōn ('the one who practices, who keeps on doing') indicates habitual action, not a single lapse. The Greek doulos ('slave') is stronger than the KJV's 'servant' — Jesus speaks of genuine bondage, directly countering their claim of freedom.
35. Jesus draws a contrast between the legal status of a slave and a son within a household. The slave has no permanent rights; the son has an enduring place. The Greek oikia ('house, household') and the verb menei ('remains, abides') carry double meaning — the earthly household analogy points to the Father's house and the permanent standing of those who belong to the Son. The phrase eis ton aiōna ('into the age, forever') echoes the Hebrew olam.

36. The adverb ontōs ('truly, really, in reality') contrasts with their illusory sense of freedom in verse 33. The Son's freedom is the only genuine freedom — ontological liberation from sin's mastery, not merely political or social freedom. This verse completes the thought begun in verse 32: the truth (embodied in the Son) produces real freedom.
37. Jesus concedes their physical descent from Abraham (sperma Abraam) while denying its spiritual significance. The verb chōrei ('has room, makes progress, finds place') suggests that Jesus's word cannot penetrate or advance within them — there is no space for it. This is not a failure of the word but of the hearers.
38. The contrast between 'my Father' (tō patri, with the article — the Father) and 'your father' (tou patros, without possessive in some manuscripts) introduces the devastating paternity argument that dominates the rest of the chapter. Jesus speaks from direct vision (heōraka, perfect of horaō, 'I have seen') of the Father; they act on what they received from their father — whose identity Jesus will soon reveal.
39. Jesus shifts from sperma ('seed, descendant' — physical lineage, v. 37) to tekna ('children' — relational belonging). Physical descent is not denied, but spiritual sonship requires doing Abraham's works. The imperfect epoiete ('you would be doing') is a contrary-to-fact condition — they are not doing Abraham's works, therefore they are not truly his children in the way that matters.
40. Jesus identifies himself as anthrōpon ('a man') — the one who has spoken truth from God — and notes that Abraham, who welcomed divine messengers (Genesis 18), would never have sought to kill someone bringing God's word. The contrast is damning: those who claim Abraham as father act in ways Abraham never would.
40. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 18 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
41. The Greek porneias ('sexual immorality, fornication') may carry a double edge: (1) they are asserting spiritual legitimacy — unlike the Samaritans, they are not 'illegitimate' children of God through syncretism; (2) some interpreters see a veiled attack on Jesus's own birth — rumors about his parentage (cf. Mark 6:3 where Jesus is called 'son of Mary' rather than 'son of Joseph'). They escalate from Abraham to God himself as their father.
42. The conditional ei... ēn ('if he were') with the imperfect is a second-class (contrary to fact) condition — Jesus directly states that God is not their father. The verbs exēlthon ('came out from') and hēkō ('I am here, I have arrived') describe both origin and present reality. The verb apestellen ('sent') is the root of 'apostle' — Jesus is God's authorized emissary.
43. Jesus distinguishes between lalia ('speech, manner of speaking') and logos ('word, message') — they fail to grasp even the surface level of his speech because they cannot receive the deeper reality of his message. The verb dynamai ('to be able') suggests an incapacity, not merely an unwillingness — their spiritual condition renders them unable to hear.
44. This is the sharpest language in the chapter. The Greek diabolos ('devil, slanderer, accuser') literally means 'the one who throws across' — the one who creates division. The title anthrōpoktonos ('murderer, man-killer') is a compound word used only here and in 1 John 3:15 in the NT, linking the devil to the first murder (Cain, Genesis 4) or to the introduction of death through deception (Genesis 3). The phrase 'father of lies' (ho patrēr autou, lit. 'his father') is ambiguous — it could mean the devil is 'the father of the lie' or 'the father of the liar.' We follow the traditional reading.
44. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 4. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
44. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 3. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
45. The irony is sharp: the very fact that Jesus speaks truth is the reason they reject him — those aligned with the father of lies find truth intolerable. The Greek construction (hoti tēn alētheian legō) makes truth-telling itself the cause of disbelief.
46. The verb elenchei ('convict, expose, prove guilty') is a legal term — Jesus issues an open challenge to prove any sin against him. The question is rhetorical: no one can. The logic is: if you cannot convict me of sin, then I am a truthful witness; and if I speak truth, your refusal to believe is inexcusable.
47. Jesus completes the argument: hearing God's words is the natural capacity of those who belong to God. Their inability to hear is diagnostic — it reveals their origin. The Greek ek tou theou ('from God') uses the same preposition (ek, 'from, out of') that described their origin from the devil in verse 44.
48. The double insult — 'Samaritan' (heretic, impure lineage) and 'demon-possessed' (insane, deluded) — represents their most hostile response yet. Calling someone a Samaritan accused them of being a religious half-breed who worshiped God wrongly. The charge of demon-possession was a standard way of dismissing someone whose claims seemed outrageous (cf. 7:20, 10:20).
49. Jesus addresses only the demon charge, not the 'Samaritan' label — whether by silence he refuses to dignify the ethnic slur or whether the distinction between true and false worship (cf. 4:21-24) makes the label irrelevant. The contrast between timō ('I honor') and atimazete ('you dishonor') is a deliberate wordplay using the same root (timē, 'honor') with and without the alpha-privative.
50. Jesus disclaims self-promotion (ou zētō tēn doxan mou) while affirming that the Father actively seeks Jesus's glory and renders judgment on those who dishonor him. The participle krinōn ('the one who judges') warns that rejecting Jesus carries consequences determined by God himself.
51. The double amēn again marks a solemn pronouncement. The verb tērēsē ('keeps, guards, obeys') implies more than intellectual assent — it requires active obedience and faithful preservation of Jesus's word. The double negative ou mē with theōrēsē ('see, experience') is the strongest possible denial: such a person will absolutely never experience death. Jesus means spiritual/eternal death, but his opponents will take it literally in the next verse.

52. Their response reveals the misunderstanding: they hear Jesus's spiritual claim in purely physical terms. They shift from theōreō ('see') to geuomai ('taste'), perhaps intensifying the imagery — not even a taste of death. The argument from Abraham and the prophets is logical within their framework: if the greatest figures in Israel's history died, who is this man to promise immortality?
53. The particle mē expects a negative answer ('You're not greater than Abraham, are you?'), but John's irony is that the correct answer is yes. The question 'Who do you make yourself out to be?' (tina seauton poieis) is the central question of the chapter — and Jesus is about to answer it definitively.
54. Jesus returns to the theme of verse 50: he does not seek his own glory. The verb doxazō ('glorify') and noun doxa ('glory') correspond to the Hebrew kavod. The pointed phrase 'whom you say is your God' (hon hymeis legete hoti theos hēmōn estin) challenges their claim to know God while rejecting the one God sent.
55. Jesus uses two different Greek words for 'know': egnōkate (ginosko, 'come to know through experience') for their lack of knowledge, and oida ('know intuitively, know with certainty') for his own knowledge. The distinction suggests Jesus's knowledge of the Father is innate and direct, not acquired. Calling them 'liars' (pseustēs) connects back to verse 44 — they resemble the father of lies.
56. The verb ēgalliasato ('rejoiced, exulted') is strong — Abraham's joy was exuberant. 'My day' (tēn hēmeran tēn emēn) most likely refers to the day of the Messiah's coming. Jewish tradition held that Abraham was given a vision of future ages (cf. 2 Esdras 3:14, Apocalypse of Abraham 31). The statement that Abraham 'saw it and was glad' implies Abraham had prophetic knowledge of Christ's coming — a claim that prepares for the explosive verse 58.
57. The number fifty (pentēkonta) is a round number, not a precise indication of Jesus's age. Some manuscripts read 'forty' instead. Their objection focuses on chronological impossibility — Abraham lived roughly two thousand years before Jesus. They miss the deeper claim entirely: Jesus is not saying he saw Abraham but that Abraham saw him.
58. The contrast between genesthai (aorist infinitive of ginomai, 'to come into being') for Abraham and eimi (present indicative of eimi, 'I am') for Jesus is theologically precise: Abraham came into existence at a point in time; Jesus simply IS, without beginning. The double amēn underscores the gravity. This is the climactic ego eimi of chapter 8, completing the sequence begun in verses 24 and 28.
59. Stoning was the prescribed punishment for blasphemy (Leviticus 24:16), confirming that they understood Jesus's ego eimi as a divine claim. The Greek ekrybē ('hid himself') is passive — whether Jesus physically hid or was divinely concealed is left ambiguous. The KJV adds 'going through the midst of them, and so passed by,' which is not in the earliest manuscripts. The SBLGNT ends the verse at 'went out of the temple.'
59. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Leviticus 24:16. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.

Summary: John 9 tells the story of a man born blind whom Jesus heals by making mud with saliva and sending him to wash in the Pool of Siloam. The healing triggers an escalating investigation by the Pharisees, who interrogate the man, his parents, and the man again. The narrative functions as both a literal sign and a profound metaphor: the man born blind progressively gains spiritual sight (calling Jesus a man, a prophet, someone from God, and finally Lord), while the Pharisees who claim to see become progressively more blind. The chapter closes with Jesus's declaration that he came into the world for judgment — so that the blind might see and those who see might become blind.

What Makes This Remarkable: This is one of the most carefully structured narratives in the Fourth Gospel, built on dramatic irony. Seven scenes alternate between the healed man's growing insight and the Pharisees' deepening blindness. The man's progression of faith — from identifying Jesus as 'the man called Jesus' (v. 11) to 'a prophet' (v. 17) to 'from God' (v. 33) to worshiping him as 'Lord' (v. 38) — is one of the clearest discipleship trajectories in the Gospels. The Pharisees, meanwhile, move from division (v. 16) to suspicion (v. 18) to hostility (v. 28) to excommunication (v. 34). The healing on the Sabbath connects to the broader conflict about Jesus's authority over Sabbath law (cf. 5:1-18).

Translation Friction: The Pool of Siloam was archaeologically confirmed in 2004, giving historical grounding to the narrative. The Greek Siloam (Silōam) translates the Hebrew Shiloach, and John provides the etymology 'Sent' (apostalmenos), connecting the pool's name to Jesus as the one 'sent' by the Father. The parents' fear of excommunication (v. 22) reflects a later historical situation (the Birkat ha-Minim) that many scholars date after Jesus's lifetime, though others argue synagogue exclusion was possible in Jesus's era.

Connections: The healing connects to 8:12 ('I am the light of the world') — now demonstrated in giving sight to the blind. The Sabbath controversy connects to 5:1-18. The expulsion from the synagogue foreshadows 16:2. The theme of spiritual blindness connects to Isaiah 6:9-10 (quoted in John 12:40) and Isaiah 42:7 (the Servant opens blind eyes). The judgment theme connects to 3:17-21 and 5:22-30.

¹As he passed by, he saw a man blind from birth. ²His disciples asked him, "Rabbi, who sinned — this man or his parents — that he was born blind?" ³Jesus answered, "It was not that this man sinned, or his parents, but so that the works of God might be displayed in him. ⁴We must do the works of the one who sent me while it is day. Night is coming, when no one can work. ⁵I am the light in the world, and as long as I am in the world. ⁶After saying this, he spat on the ground and made mud with the saliva. Then he spread the mud on the man's eyes ⁷Stated to him, Go, wash in the pool of Siloam, (which is by interpretation, dispatched.) He traveled his way therefore, and washed, and arrived seeing. ⁸His neighbors and those who had previously seen him as a beggar said, "Is this not the man who used to sit and beg?" ⁹Some said, "It is him." Others said, "No, but he looks like him." He kept saying, "I am the one." ¹⁰So they asked him, "Then how were your eyes opened?" ¹¹He answered, "The man called Jesus made mud and spread it on my eyes and told me, 'Go to Siloam and wash.' So I went and washed, and I received my sight." ¹²They asked him, "Where is he?" He said, "I do not know." ¹³They brought the man who had formerly been blind to the Pharisees. ¹⁴Now it was a Sabbath day when Jesus made the mud and opened his eyes. ¹⁵So the Pharisees also asked him how he had received his sight. He told them, "He put mud on my eyes, and I washed, and now I see." ¹⁶Some of the Pharisees said, "This man is not from God, because he does not keep the Sabbath." But others said, "How can a man who is a sinner perform such signs?" And there was a division among them. ¹⁷So they asked the blind man again, "What do you say about him, since he opened your eyes?" He said, "He is a prophet." ¹⁸The Jewish leaders did not believe that he had been blind and had received his sight until they called the parents of the man who had received his sight. ¹⁹They asked them, "Is this your son, who you say was born blind? How is it that he now sees?" ²⁰His parents answered, "We know that this is our son and that he was born blind. ²¹But how he now sees, we do not know, nor do we know who opened his eyes. Ask him — he is of age. He can speak for himself." ²²His parents said this because they were afraid of the Jewish leaders, for the Jewish leaders had already agreed that anyone who confessed Jesus as the Christ would be expelled from the synagogue. ²³That is why his parents said, "He is of age; ask him." ²⁴So for a second time they called the man who had been blind and said to him, "Give glory to God. We know that this man is a sinner." ²⁵He answered, "Whether he is a sinner, I do not know. One thing I do know: I was blind, and now I see." ²⁶They said to him, "What did he do to you? How did he open your eyes?" ²⁷He answered them, "I already told you, and you did not listen. Why do you want to hear it again? Do you also want to become his disciples?" ²⁸They reviled him and said, "You are his disciple, but we are disciples of Moses! ²⁹We know that God spoke to Moses, but as for this man, we do not know where he comes from." ³⁰The man answered them, "This is remarkable! You do not know where he comes from, and yet he opened my eyes. ³¹We know that God does not listen to sinners, but if anyone is devout and does his will, God listens to that person. ³²Never since the world began has anyone been heard of who opened the eyes of a person born blind. ³³He could do nothing, and if this man were not of God. ³⁴They answered him, "You were born entirely in sins, and you are trying to teach us?" And they threw him out. ³⁵Jesus heard that they had thrown him out, and finding him, he said, "Do you believe in the Son of Man?" ³⁶He answered, "And who is he, sir, that I may believe in him?" ³⁷Jesus said to him, "You have seen him, and it is he who is speaking with you." ³⁸I believe, he said, Lord. And he worshipped him. ³⁹Jesus said, "For judgment I came into this world, so that those who do not see may see, and those who see may become blind." ⁴⁰Some of the Pharisees who were with him heard this and said to him, "Are we blind too?" ⁴¹Jesus said to them, "If you were blind, you would have no sin. But now that you say, 'We see,' your sin remains."

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The narrative connects directly to 8:59 — Jesus has just left the temple. The phrase ek genetēs ('from birth') is crucial: this is not acquired blindness but a congenital condition, ruling out any connection to the man's own sin and setting up the theological question of verse 2.

2. The disciples assume a direct causal link between sin and suffering, reflecting a common Jewish theology of retribution (cf. Exodus 20:5, Ezekiel 18:20). The question about whether the man himself sinned before birth may reflect belief in prenatal sin (attested in some rabbinic texts) or simply reveals the logical absurdity their framework produces when confronted with congenital conditions.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 20:5. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Ezekiel 18:20. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. Jesus rejects the entire sin-causation framework for this case. The hina ('so that') clause does not mean God caused the blindness in order to heal it later (a common misreading); it redirects the question from cause to purpose — whatever the origin of the blindness, its purpose now is to reveal God's works. The verb phanerōthē ('be made visible, displayed') connects to the light/sight theme of the chapter.
4. The SBLGNT reads hēmas ('we') rather than eme ('I'), including the disciples in the mission. 'Day' and 'night' function metaphorically: day is the time of Jesus's active ministry; night is his departure through death. The urgency (dei, 'it is necessary') reflects divine mandate, not mere preference.
5. This repeats the claim of 8:12 but adds the temporal qualifier hotan ('as long as, whenever'). The light-of-the-world declaration immediately precedes giving sight to a blind man — the metaphor is about to become literal. The implicit corollary is that after Jesus's departure, the disciples must carry the light (cf. Matthew 5:14).
6. The act of making mud (pēlon, 'clay, mud') echoes Genesis 2:7 where God forms man from the ground — Jesus performs a creative act. Saliva was believed to have healing properties in the ancient world (cf. Mark 7:33, 8:23). The verb epechrisein ('smeared, anointed') may carry overtones of the christos/anointing theme. Making mud on the Sabbath would constitute 'kneading,' one of the thirty-nine categories of prohibited Sabbath work in the Mishnah.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 2:7. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. John provides the etymology of Siloam (Silōam from Hebrew Shiloach, related to shalach, 'to send') as apostalmenos ('sent'), connecting the pool's name to Jesus as the one 'sent' by the Father — a recurring Johannine theme (cf. 3:17, 5:36, 6:29, 7:29). The man's obedience is immediate and unquestioning, reminiscent of Naaman washing in the Jordan (2 Kings 5:10-14). The simple statement 'came back seeing' (ēlthen blepōn) is understated for the magnitude of the miracle — a lifetime of blindness ends in a single washing.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on 2 Kings 5:10-14. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The SBLGNT reads prosaitēs ('beggar') rather than typhlos ('blind'), though some manuscripts have 'blind.' The question introduces the first of several investigations — even the man's identity is disputed, setting up a narrative in which seeing and knowing are constantly in question.
9. The man's ego eimi ('I am') is an ordinary identification ('I am the one'), not a divine claim — but John may intend an ironic echo of Jesus's ego eimi statements in chapter 8. The imperfect elegen ('kept saying') suggests he had to assert his identity repeatedly against doubt.
10. The passive ēneōchthēsan ('were opened') is a divine passive — the question inadvertently acknowledges that the healing came from a power beyond the man himself. This is the first of three times the man will be asked to explain how he was healed (cf. vv. 15, 26).
11. The man's first identification of Jesus is minimal: ho anthrōpos ho legomenos Iēsous ('the man called Jesus'). He knows a name and an action but nothing more. This is the starting point of his progressive understanding. The verb aneblepsa ('I received sight, I looked up') can mean both 'to see again' and 'to see for the first time' — here it must mean the latter, since he was born blind.
12. The man does not know where Jesus is — he was sent to the pool and returned to find Jesus gone. This physical separation mirrors his theological distance: he knows Jesus by name and action but does not yet know him as prophet, as from God, or as Lord.
13. The phrase ton pote typhlon ('the one formerly blind') is John's editorial confirmation that the healing was real and complete. The Pharisees function as the investigative authority — the neighbors bring the case to them for evaluation.
14. John withholds this critical detail until verse 14, after the healing and the neighbors' investigation — a masterful narrative technique that raises the stakes retroactively. The Sabbath issue transforms the healing from a wonder to a legal problem. Making mud (kneading) and possibly healing (which some rabbis classified as work) both potentially violated Sabbath regulations.
15. The man's account becomes more compressed with each retelling — the three-step process (mud, wash, see) is stated with increasing economy. The present tense blepō ('I see') is emphatic: the evidence stands before them. This is the second interrogation (cf. v. 10).
16. The schisma ('division, split') among the Pharisees reveals two competing theological principles: (1) a true prophet would keep the Sabbath, therefore Jesus cannot be from God; (2) a sinner cannot perform genuine miracles, therefore Jesus must be from God. John uses the word sēmeia ('signs') — his preferred term for Jesus's miracles, emphasizing their revelatory function. This internal Pharisaic debate mirrors the broader division Jesus causes throughout the Gospel (cf. 7:43, 10:19).
17. The man's understanding has advanced: from 'the man called Jesus' (v. 11) to prophētēs ('a prophet'). A prophet is one who speaks and acts with divine authority — the man draws the logical conclusion from the evidence of his own healing. This is the second stage in his progressive recognition of Jesus.

18. Unable to refute the healing theologically, the opponents shift to challenging the facts — perhaps the man was never really blind. The term hoi Ioudaioi ('the Jews') here refers to the investigating authorities, not the Jewish people generally. The calling of the parents introduces a new phase of the investigation.
19. The three questions embedded in this verse — (1) Is this your son? (2) Was he born blind? (3) How does he now see? — are designed to find a crack in the testimony. The phrase 'who you say was born blind' (hon hymeis legete hoti typhlos egennēthē) subtly casts doubt on the parents' claim, as if the blindness itself might be fabricated.
20. The parents confirm two of the three points with certainty (oidamen, 'we know'): identity and congenital blindness. They will deflect the third question — how he now sees — out of fear, as the next verses explain.
21. The parents' threefold 'we do not know' (ouk oidamen) is evasive rather than honest — they redirect all inquiry to their son. The phrase hēlikian echei ('he is of age, he has maturity') indicates he is old enough to give legal testimony on his own behalf, likely meaning he is over thirteen (the age of legal responsibility in Jewish law).
22. John provides the narrator's explanation for the parents' evasion: fear of excommunication. The term aposynagōgos ('expelled from the synagogue, put out of the synagogue') appears only in John (here, 12:42, 16:2) and describes formal exclusion from the Jewish worshiping community — a devastating social and religious penalty. The verb synetethento ('had agreed, had decided together') indicates a formal policy decision by the authorities.
23. John repeats the parents' deflection to underscore its motivation: fear, not ignorance, drives their evasion. The contrast with their son's increasing boldness is deliberate — the parents protect themselves while their son faces the authorities alone.
24. The phrase dos doxan tō theō ('give glory to God') is a solemn adjuration equivalent to 'tell the truth before God' (cf. Joshua 7:19, where Joshua uses the same phrase to compel Achan's confession). The Pharisees have already reached their verdict — 'we know' (hēmeis oidamen) — and are pressuring the man to confirm it. The irony is thick: they claim knowledge while demonstrating blindness.
24. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Joshua 7:19. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
25. One of the most memorable lines in the Gospel. The man refuses to be drawn into theological debate and stands on the irrefutable evidence of his own experience. The contrast between their claimed knowledge ('we know he is a sinner') and his actual knowledge ('one thing I know') is the chapter's central irony — the formerly blind man sees more clearly than the experts.
26. This is the third time the man is asked to recount the healing (cf. vv. 10, 15). The repetition serves the Pharisees' investigative purpose — they hope to find an inconsistency — and also serves John's literary purpose of highlighting the futility of their resistance to evident truth.
27. The man's boldness escalates — the mē particle expects a negative answer ('you don't want to become his disciples too, do you?'), but the question is deliberately provocative. The word 'also' (kai) implies the man already considers himself a disciple, though he has not yet met the risen Jesus. The verb ēkousate ('you did not hear/listen') carries the Johannine double meaning: they physically heard but did not truly receive.
28. The verb eloidorēsan ('reviled, insulted, heaped abuse on') marks the shift from investigation to hostility. They draw a sharp line: his loyalty to Jesus versus their loyalty to Moses. The pronoun emphasis (sy/hēmeis, 'you/we') makes the division absolute. Ironically, Jesus has already claimed that Moses wrote about him (5:46).
29. Their confession 'we do not know where he comes from' (ouk oidamen pothen estin) is deeply ironic in John's framework — Jesus's origin (pothen, 'from where') is one of the Gospel's central questions (cf. 7:27-28, 8:14, 19:9). They think their ignorance of his origin discredits Jesus; in reality, it reveals their own spiritual blindness.
30. The man's argument is devastatingly simple: the evidence of the miracle should resolve any uncertainty about Jesus's origin. The adjective thaumaston ('remarkable, amazing, astonishing') is used with sharp irony — what is truly astonishing is not the healing but the leaders' refusal to draw the obvious conclusion from it.
31. The man uses their own theological framework against them: the principle that God hears the righteous but not sinners is widely attested in Scripture (cf. Psalm 66:18, Proverbs 15:29, Isaiah 1:15). The adjective theosebēs ('God-fearing, devout') appears only here in the NT. His logic is irresistible within their system: God answered Jesus's act, therefore Jesus must be devout and obedient to God's will.
31. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 66:18. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
31. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Proverbs 15:29. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
31. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 1:15. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
32. The phrase ek tou aiōnos ('from the age, since the world began') emphasizes the unprecedented nature of the miracle. While there are Old Testament healings and even resurrections, there is no recorded case of congenital blindness being healed — this is a creative act, not merely a restorative one. The man's theological reasoning is more sophisticated than his opponents'.

33. The man's conclusion — para theou ('from God') — represents his third stage of recognition (after 'the man called Jesus' in v. 11 and 'a prophet' in v. 17). The conditional is contrary to fact: since Jesus has done something (opened blind eyes), the only possible conclusion is that he is from God. The former beggar out-argues the trained theologians.
34. Their response reveals the very theology Jesus rejected in verse 3 — they revert to the assumption that his congenital blindness proves his sinfulness. The phrase en hamartiais... holos ('entirely in sins') is contemptuous: you are nothing but sin from birth. The irony is complete: the religious experts resort to the argument Jesus already dismantled. The verb exebalon ('threw out, cast out') likely refers to formal expulsion from the synagogue (cf. v. 22), not merely physical ejection from the room.
35. The SBLGNT reads ton huion tou anthrōpou ('the Son of Man') rather than ton huion tou theou ('the Son of God') found in some later manuscripts. We follow the critical text. Jesus seeks out the expelled man — the shepherd finds the one cast out by the religious establishment. The question is not whether the man believes in Jesus generally but whether he believes in the Son of Man — a title with eschatological and divine connotations from Daniel 7:13-14.
35. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Daniel 7:13-14 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
36. The address kyrie could mean either 'sir' (a polite form of address) or 'Lord' (a confessional title). At this point in the conversation, the man does not yet know who the Son of Man is, so 'sir' is the more natural rendering here. The willingness in his question — 'that I may believe' (hina pisteusō) — shows readiness, not resistance.
37. The verb heōrakas ('you have seen') carries profound irony: the man who was born blind has now not only received physical sight but is using that sight to see the Son of Man himself. The self-revelation follows the pattern of John 4:26 (the Samaritan woman) — Jesus discloses his identity to an outsider who has shown faith.
38. Now kyrie is clearly 'Lord' — a confessional title, not mere politeness. The verb prosekynēsen ('worshiped, bowed down before') is the same word used for worship of God throughout the Septuagint and New Testament. This is the man's final stage of recognition: from 'the man called Jesus' (v. 11) to 'a prophet' (v. 17) to 'from God' (v. 33) to worshiping him as Lord. The progression is complete — the man born blind now sees more clearly than anyone in the chapter.
39. This statement appears to contradict 3:17 ('God did not send the Son into the world to condemn the world') but the tension is deliberate: Jesus's primary purpose is salvation, but his coming inevitably produces judgment because it forces a response. The krima ('judgment, verdict') is not condemnation imposed from outside but the self-sorting that occurs when light enters darkness (cf. 3:19-21). The chapter has enacted this principle: the blind man now sees; the seeing Pharisees are now blind.
40. The mē particle expects a negative answer ('we aren't blind too, are we?'), revealing their confidence in their own spiritual sight. The irony is that their very confidence is the proof of their blindness — they cannot even conceive that Jesus's words might apply to them.
41. Jesus's final statement inverts their assumption completely: genuine blindness (acknowledged ignorance) would remove culpability; claimed sight (self-assured knowledge) locks them into sin. The verb menei ('remains, abides') is the same word used positively of abiding in Jesus (15:4) — here it describes sin's permanent residence in those who refuse to acknowledge their blindness. The chapter ends with the devastating conclusion: those who claim to see are the truly blind, and their condition is incurable precisely because they refuse the diagnosis.

Summary: John 10 contains Jesus's extended shepherd discourse, in which he identifies himself as both the gate of the sheepfold and the good shepherd who lays down his life for the sheep. The chapter opens with a parable about shepherds and thieves (vv. 1-6), followed by two 'I am' declarations: 'I am the gate' (vv. 7-10) and 'I am the good shepherd' (vv. 11-18). Jesus distinguishes himself from hired hands who flee when wolves attack. He speaks of 'other sheep' not of this fold whom he must also bring. The discourse provokes yet another division (vv. 19-21). At the Feast of Dedication (Hanukkah), the Jewish leaders confront Jesus directly about whether he is the Christ, leading to Jesus's declaration 'I and the Father are one' (v. 30) and a second attempt to stone him (v. 31). The chapter closes with Jesus withdrawing beyond the Jordan.

What Makes This Remarkable: *The shepherd imagery draws on deep Old Testament roots: God as shepherd (Psalm 23, Isaiah 40:11), David as shepherd-king (2 Samuel 5:2), and Ezekiel's devastating critique of Israel's failed shepherds (Ezekiel 34), where God promises to shepherd his people himself and raise up 'my servant David.' Jesus's claim to be the good shepherd is simultaneously a claim to fulfill Ezekiel 34 and to embody God's own shepherding. The 'I and the Father are one' declaration (v. 30) is the theological climax — neuter hen ('one thing') rather than masculine heis ('one person'), indicating unity of purpose and being without collapsing the distinction between Father and Son.*

Translation Friction: The relationship between 10:1-21 and the preceding chapter is debated — some scholars see it as a continuation of the post-chapter-9 dialogue, others as an independent discourse. The Feast of Dedication (Hanukkah) setting in verse 22 marks a chronological shift (roughly December, two months after Tabernacles). The 'other sheep' (v. 16) is traditionally interpreted as referring to Gentile believers, though the text does not specify. Jesus's scriptural argument from Psalm 82:6 (vv. 34-36) is complex and has been interpreted in various ways.

Connections: The shepherd discourse connects to Psalm 23, Ezekiel 34, Zechariah 11:4-17, and Isaiah 40:11. The gate imagery connects to Psalm 118:20. The 'I and the Father are one' declaration connects to the Shema (Deuteronomy 6:4) and to Jesus's prayer in John 17:11, 22. The laying down of life anticipates the cross narrative (chs. 18-19). The Hanukkah setting (rededication of the temple) provides ironic context for Jesus's claim that the Father 'consecrated' him (v. 36).

¹"Truly, truly, I say to you, the one who does not enter the sheepfold through the gate but climbs in by another way is a thief and a robber. ²The one who enters through the gate is the shepherd of the sheep. ³The gatekeeper opens the gate for him, and the sheep hear his voice. He calls his own sheep by name and leads them out. ⁴When he has brought out all his own, he goes ahead of them, and the sheep follow him because they know his voice. ⁵They will never follow a stranger but will flee from him, because they do not know the voice of strangers." ⁶Jesus told them this figure of speech, but they did not understand what he was saying to them. ⁷So Jesus said again, "Truly, truly, I say to you, I am the gate for the sheep. ⁸All who came before me are thieves and robbers, but the sheep did not listen to them. ⁹I am the gate. If anyone enters through me, he will be saved and will go in and out and find pasture. ¹⁰The thief comes only to steal and kill and destroy. I came so that they may have life, and have it abundantly. ¹¹I am the good shepherd. The good shepherd lays down his life for the sheep. ¹²The hired hand, who is not the shepherd and does not own the sheep, sees the wolf coming and abandons the sheep and runs away — and the wolf snatches them and scatters them. ¹³The hireling fleeth, on account of the fact that he is an hireling, and careth not for the sheep. ¹⁴I am the good shepherd. I know my own, and my own know me, ¹⁵Indeed, as the Father knows me, even so know I the Father — and I lay down my life for the sheep. ¹⁶I have other sheep that are not of this fold. I must bring them also, and they will hear my voice. There will be one flock, one shepherd. ¹⁷For this reason the Father loves me — because I lay down my life so that I may take it up again. ¹⁸No one takes it from me, but I lay it down of my own accord. I have authority to lay it down, and I have authority to take it up again. This command I received from my Father." ¹⁹There was again a division among the Jewish people because of these words. ²⁰Many of them said, "He has a demon and is out of his mind. Why listen to him?" ²¹Others said, "These are not the words of someone possessed by a demon. Can a demon open the eyes of the blind?" ²²Then came the Feast of Dedication in Jerusalem. It was winter, ²³Jesus walked in the sanctuary in Solomon's porch. ²⁴So the Jewish leaders surrounded him and said to him, "How long will you keep us in suspense? If you are the Christ, tell us plainly." ²⁵Jesus answered them, "I have told you, and you do not believe. The works that I do in my Father's name testify about me, ²⁶But you trust not, because you are not of my sheep, as I stated to you. ²⁷My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, then they Come, follow me: ²⁸I give them eternal life, and they will never perish, and no one will snatch them out of my hand. ²⁹My Father, who has given them to me, is greater than all, and no one is able to snatch them out of the Father's hand. ³⁰I and the Father are one." ³¹The Jewish leaders picked up stones again to stone him. ³²Jesus answered them, "I have shown you many good works from the Father. For which of these works are you going to stone me?" ³³The Jewish leaders answered him, "It is not for a good work that we are going to stone you, but for blasphemy, because you, a mere man, make yourself God." ³⁴You are gods?, Jesus responded them, Is it not written in your law, I said. ³⁵If he known as them gods, to whom the word of God arrived, and the scripture cannot be broken: ³⁶Say you of him, whom the Father has sanctified, and dispatched into the world, you blasphemest. Because I stated, I am the Son of God? ³⁷If I am not doing the works of my Father, then do not believe me. ³⁸But if I do them, even though you do not believe me, believe the works, so that you may know and understand that the Father is in me and I am in the Father." ³⁹So they tried again to arrest him, but he escaped from their grasp. ⁴⁰He went away again across the Jordan to the place where John had been baptizing at first, and he stayed there. ⁴¹Many came to him and said, "John performed no sign, but everything John said about this man was true." ⁴²Numerous believed on him there.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The double amēn marks solemn declaration. The aulē tōn probatōn ('sheepfold, courtyard of the sheep') refers to an enclosed area, often a stone-walled courtyard with a single entrance, used to protect sheep at night. John distinguishes between kleptēs ('thief,' one who steals by stealth) and lēstēs ('robber, bandit,' one who uses violence). The parable follows directly from the expulsion of the blind man in chapter 9 — the Pharisees are the false shepherds.
2. The Greek thyra ('door, gate') is the legitimate entry point. The poimēn ('shepherd') enters openly, with nothing to hide. The contrast is between legitimacy (through the gate) and illegitimacy (any other way).
3. The identity of the thurōros ('gatekeeper, doorkeeper') is not explained and should not be allegorized — the focus is on the shepherd's relationship with his sheep. The phrase phōnei kat' onoma ('calls by name') reflects actual Palestinian shepherding practice, where shepherds knew and named individual sheep. The sheep recognize and respond to the shepherd's specific voice — an image of intimate, personal relationship.
4. The verb ekbalē ('brought out, put forth') is the same word used in 9:34 for the Pharisees casting out the healed man — a deliberate contrast. The Pharisees 'cast out'; the shepherd 'leads out.' Middle Eastern shepherds lead from the front rather than driving from behind — the sheep follow voluntarily because they recognize the shepherd. The verb oidasin ('they know') indicates deep, experiential knowledge.
5. The double negative ou mē ('never, by no means') with the future akolouthēsousin ('will follow') is emphatic. The allotriō ('stranger, outsider') is not the same as the thief/robber — it is anyone whose voice the sheep do not recognize. The sheep's discernment is instinctive, based on relationship rather than analysis.
6. John calls this a paroimia ('figure of speech, proverb, riddle') rather than parabolē ('parable'). The paroimia in John is an enigmatic saying that requires interpretation (cf. 16:25, 29). The audience's failure to understand sets up Jesus's explanatory statements in the following verses.
7. This is the third of John's 'I am' statements with a predicate. Jesus identifies himself not as the shepherd (that comes in v. 11) but as the thyra ('gate, door') — the point of access and protection. In some shepherding practices, the shepherd himself would lie across the opening of the fold at night, literally becoming the gate. We render thyra as 'gate' rather than 'door' to maintain the pastoral setting.
8. The sweeping statement 'all who came before me' (pantes hosoi ēlthon pro emou) cannot refer to Moses and the prophets (whom Jesus affirms elsewhere) but to false leaders who claimed authority over God's flock without legitimate commission — the failed shepherds of Ezekiel 34. Some manuscripts omit 'before me' (pro emou), which would change the sense to 'all who came [apart from me].'
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Ezekiel 34 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The three-fold promise — salvation (sōthēsetai), freedom of movement (eiseleusetai kai exeleusetai, 'will go in and out'), and sustenance (nomēn heurēsei, 'will find pasture') — describes the complete provision of the shepherd through the gate. 'Going in and out' is a Hebrew idiom for living freely and securely (cf. Numbers 27:17, Deuteronomy 28:6, Psalm 121:8).
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Numbers 27:17. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 28:6. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalm 121:8. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The three verbs describing the thief — klepsē ('steal'), thysē ('slaughter, sacrifice'), apolesē ('destroy') — escalate in violence. The verb thysē is the same word used for ritual sacrifice, adding bitter irony: the thief 'sacrifices' the sheep for his own benefit. Against this, Jesus's purpose is stated in two stages: life (zōēn) and abundance (perisson, 'surplus, overflow, more than enough'). The Greek perisson means not barely adequate life but overflowing life.
11. The fourth 'I am' statement with predicate. The adjective kalos ('good, noble, beautiful, excellent') means more than morally good — it connotes the ideal, the model, the shepherd as he was meant to be. The phrase tēn psychēn autou tithēsīn ('lays down his life') uses the deliberate act of placing (tithēmi) — this is not accidental death but voluntary sacrifice. The preposition hyper ('for, on behalf of') indicates substitutionary action.
12. The misthotos ('hired hand, wage worker') is not a villain like the thief — he is simply not the owner. His relationship to the sheep is economic, not relational. When danger comes (the lykos, 'wolf'), the cost-benefit analysis favors flight. The verbs harpazei ('snatches, seizes by force') and skorpizei ('scatters') describe the devastation that follows failed leadership.
13. The phrase ou melei autō ('it does not matter to him, he does not care') reveals the hired hand's fundamental deficiency: lack of genuine care (cf. Mark 4:38, where the same phrase appears). The issue is not competence but commitment — the hired hand may be skilled but lacks the ownership-stake that produces sacrificial devotion.
14. The verb ginōskō ('know') here describes deep, mutual, relational knowledge — not mere awareness but intimate acquaintance. The reciprocity (I know them / they know me) echoes the covenant relationship pattern: God knows his people, and they know him (cf. Jeremiah 31:34). The next verse will ground this mutual knowledge in the relationship between Father and Son.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Jeremiah 31:34. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.

15. The comparison kathōs ('just as') is extraordinary: the mutual knowledge between shepherd and sheep is patterned on the mutual knowledge between Father and Son. This elevates the shepherd-sheep relationship to a divine model. The second clause returns to the theme of voluntary death (tēn psychēn mou tithēmi, 'I lay down my life'), now grounded in the Father-Son relationship that motivates it.
16. The 'other sheep' (alla probata) not of 'this fold' (tēs aulēs tautēs) is traditionally understood as Gentile believers who will be gathered into one community with Jewish believers. The dei ('must, it is necessary') indicates divine compulsion — this is part of God's plan, not optional. Note the critical distinction: 'one flock' (mia poimnē) not 'one fold' (mia aulē) — the KJV's 'one fold' is a mistranslation. The unity is in the flock (the people under one shepherd), not in a single enclosure (one institution).
17. The Father's love (agapa) for the Son is connected to the Son's willingness to die and rise. The verb tithēmi ('lay down, place') followed by labō ('take up, receive back') describes a voluntary, temporary surrender — death followed by resurrection. The 'again' (palin) points to resurrection as the completion of the act, not its reversal.
18. The Greek exousia ('authority, right, power') appears twice, asserting Jesus's sovereign control over both his death and his resurrection. The verb airei ('takes away') is negated absolutely (oudeis, 'no one') — Jesus's death is not imposed but chosen. Yet this sovereign freedom operates within the Father's command (entolē) — Jesus freely does what the Father has ordained. The tension between freedom and obedience is resolved in perfect alignment of wills.
19. The schisma ('division, split') recurs from 9:16 and 7:43 — Jesus's words consistently divide his audience. The adverb palin ('again') indicates this is a pattern, not an anomaly.
20. The charge of demon possession (daimonion echei) repeats from 7:20 and 8:48. The verb mainetai ('is mad, is insane') adds a new charge — raving madness. The combination suggests they hear his claims as the ravings of a possessed person. Their dismissive question ('why listen?') attempts to shut down the conversation.
21. The counter-argument has two parts: (1) Jesus's words are too coherent and meaningful to be demonic ravings, and (2) the healing of the blind man in chapter 9 provides concrete evidence that his power comes from God, not demons. The mē particle expects a negative answer: 'a demon can't open blind eyes, can it?' The reference back to the blind man's healing links chapters 9 and 10.
22. The egkainia ('Dedication, Renewal') is Hanukkah, commemorating the rededication of the temple by Judas Maccabeus in 164 BC after its desecration by Antiochus IV Epiphanes (1 Maccabees 4:36-59). The festival falls in Kislev (November-December). The note 'it was winter' (cheimōn ēn) may be simply calendrical or may carry symbolic weight — the season of cold and darkness as the theological conflict intensifies.
23. Solomon's Colonnade (stoa tou Solomōnos) was a covered portico on the eastern side of the temple mount, believed to date to Solomon's original temple. It was a common gathering place for teaching and debate (cf. Acts 3:11, 5:12). The location is public and prominent.
24. The verb ekyklōsan ('surrounded, encircled') suggests both physical and psychological pressure — they close in on him. The idiom tēn psychēn hēmōn aireis (lit. 'you take away our soul/life') means 'you hold us in suspense' or 'you keep us agitated.' The demand for parrhēsia ('plainness, openness, boldness') reflects their frustration with Jesus's indirect self-revelation. During Hanukkah, the question of messianic identity would carry particular weight — the festival commemorates a military deliverer.
25. Jesus's response reframes the problem: the issue is not insufficient evidence but insufficient faith. He has told them (eipon hymin) — through his 'I am' statements and his signs — and they have not believed. The works (erga, including healings, signs, and teaching) done 'in my Father's name' (en tō onomati tou patros) carry the Father's own authority and serve as testimony.
26. The logic is direct: unbelief is the evidence that they do not belong to Jesus's flock, not the cause of being excluded from it. The phrase ek tōn probatōn tōn emōn ('from my sheep') connects their unbelief to the shepherd discourse — they cannot hear his voice because they are not his sheep (cf. 8:47).
27. Three marks of the true sheep: they hear (akouousin, present tense — ongoing hearing), they are known by the shepherd (ginōskō, personal relational knowledge), and they follow (akolouthousin, habitual following). The order matters: hearing precedes knowing precedes following.
28. Three assurances correspond to the three marks of verse 27: eternal life is given (didōmi, present tense — ongoing gift), they will never perish (ou mē apolōntai, the strongest possible negation), and no one can forcibly remove them (ouch harpasei, 'will not snatch' — the same verb used of the wolf in v. 12). The security of the sheep rests in the shepherd's power, not in the sheep's strength.
29. The textual tradition here is complex — some manuscripts read 'what my Father has given me is greater than all' (emphasizing the gift), others 'my Father who has given them to me is greater than all' (emphasizing the Father). The theological point is the same: the sheep are doubly secure, held in both the Son's hand (v. 28) and the Father's hand. No external force can overcome either.
30. This is the theological summit of the chapter. The statement is concise to the point of explosive — five Greek words that generated centuries of theological debate. The audience's response (picking up stones, v. 31) confirms they hear this as a divine claim. The statement follows logically from vv. 28-29: if the sheep are equally secure in the Son's hand and the Father's hand, the two hands must be one.
31. The adverb palin ('again') connects to the stoning attempt in 8:59. The verb ebastasan ('picked up, carried') suggests they found stones in the temple precincts — possibly from ongoing construction work on the temple complex. Their intent to stone him for blasphemy (cf. v. 33) confirms they understood verse 30 as a divine claim, not merely a statement of prophetic alignment.

32. The adjective kala ('good, noble, beautiful') for the works echoes kalos in 'good shepherd' (v. 11) — the works are beautiful, noble, worthy of praise. The question forces them to identify which specific act merits death — the absurdity of stoning someone for doing good is laid bare.
33. The charge is explicit: blasphēmia ('blasphemy') — and the specific form of blasphemy is that a human being (anthrōpos ōn, 'being a man') claims to be theon ('God'). The phrase poieis seauton theon ('make yourself God') is how they interpret 'I and the Father are one.' They understand the claim correctly; what they dispute is Jesus's right to make it.
34. Jesus quotes Psalm 82:6, where God addresses the divine council or Israel's judges as 'gods' (theoi). The phrase 'your Law' (tō nomō hymōn) uses 'Law' broadly to include the Psalms (the entire Hebrew Scripture). Jesus's argument is a qal wahomer ('lesser to greater'): if Scripture itself applies the word 'gods' to human beings, how can it be blasphemy for the one the Father consecrated and sent to call himself God's Son?
34. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalms 82:6. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
35. The parenthetical 'Scripture cannot be broken' (ou dynatai lythēnai hē graphē) is a significant assertion of the authority and inviolability of the written text. The verb lythēnai ('broken, loosened, dissolved') means Scripture cannot be invalidated or set aside. 'To whom the word of God came' identifies the 'gods' of Psalm 82 as recipients of divine revelation — mere humans who were nonetheless called 'gods' by God's own word.
35. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalm 82 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
36. The verb hēgiasen ('consecrated, set apart, sanctified') is particularly resonant during the Feast of Dedication (Hanukkah), which celebrates the rededication/consecration of the temple. Jesus implies he is the true consecrated one — the living temple (cf. 2:19-21). Note that Jesus says 'Son of God' (huios tou theou) here, not 'God' — he reframes their charge. The argument is: if Scripture calls humans 'gods,' how much more appropriate for the one the Father himself consecrated to say 'I am the Son of God'?
37. Jesus offers a falsifiable test: his works are the evidence. If they do not bear the character of the Father's works, disbelief is warranted. This is not an appeal to blind faith but to observable evidence — the signs and works he has performed throughout the Gospel.
38. The phrase 'the Father is in me and I am in the Father' (en emoi ho patēr kagō en tō patri) expresses mutual indwelling — a concept developed further in 14:10-11 and 17:21. The two verbs gnōte kai ginōskēte ('know and keep knowing') move from initial recognition (aorist) to ongoing understanding (present). Jesus offers the works as an entry point for those who cannot yet accept his word directly.
39. The verb piasai ('arrest, seize') indicates an official arrest attempt, not merely stoning. The phrase exēlthen ek tēs cheiros autōn ('went out from their hand') echoes the shepherd discourse: no one can snatch from the Father's hand (v. 29), and no one can seize the shepherd either. Jesus's escape is narrated without explanation — divine protection is implied.
40. Jesus returns to the location of his ministry's beginning (cf. 1:28) — a geographic and thematic return to origins. The verb emeinen ('stayed, remained') uses the key Johannine verb menō. The withdrawal beyond the Jordan is strategic, removing himself from Jerusalem's immediate danger while remaining accessible.
41. The contrast between John (no signs) and Jesus (many signs) highlights that John's authority was prophetic testimony, not miraculous power. Yet John's testimony is vindicated — 'everything John said about this man was true' (alēthē ēn). This verse connects the end of chapter 10 back to the beginning of the Gospel (1:19-34) and John the Baptist's witness.
42. The chapter ends on a note of faith — 'many believed' (polloi episteusan). In contrast to the rejection in Jerusalem, the people beyond the Jordan receive Jesus. The adverb ekei ('there') is emphatic: away from Jerusalem, away from the religious establishment, faith flourishes. This provides a hopeful conclusion before the Lazarus narrative in chapter 11.

Summary: John 11 narrates the raising of Lazarus from the dead — the climactic seventh sign in John's Gospel. When Jesus receives word that his friend Lazarus is ill, he deliberately delays two days before traveling to Bethany, where he finds Lazarus already four days dead. Martha meets Jesus with a statement of faith and grievance: 'Lord, if you had been here, my brother would not have died.' Jesus declares 'I am the resurrection and the life' and asks if she believes. At the tomb, Jesus weeps, then commands the stone removed and calls Lazarus out of the grave. The raising triggers two opposite responses: many believe, but the Sanhedrin convenes to plot Jesus's death. Caiaphas unwittingly prophesies that Jesus will die for the nation. The chapter closes with Jesus withdrawing to Ephraim as the authorities issue orders for his arrest.

What Makes This Remarkable: This is the longest sustained narrative in John's Gospel and the most theologically dense sign. The raising of Lazarus functions simultaneously as a historical event, a demonstration of Jesus's power over death, a prophetic sign of the general resurrection, and a catalyst for the crucifixion — the one who raises from death is sentenced to death precisely because he raises from death. The 'I am the resurrection and the life' declaration (v. 25) is the fifth 'I am' with predicate and arguably the most sweeping. Jesus's weeping at the tomb (v. 35, the shortest verse in the Bible) reveals the fully human emotional life of the one who has just claimed divine authority over death. Caiaphas's unwitting prophecy (vv. 49-52) is one of John's most brilliant ironies.

Translation Friction: The four-day delay is crucial — Jewish tradition held that the soul lingered near the body for three days, meaning by the fourth day decomposition confirmed death was irreversible. Jesus's emotional response involves two Greek words: dakryō ('shed tears,' v. 35) and embrimaomai ('deeply moved/indignant,' vv. 33, 38). The latter may indicate anger — at death itself, at the grief it causes, or at unbelief — rather than mere sadness. Lazarus's raising is not mentioned in the Synoptic Gospels, a significant omission that has generated extensive scholarly discussion.

Connections: The raising connects to Jesus's earlier claims about giving life (5:21, 25-29), the bread of life discourse (6:39-40, 54), and the good shepherd who lays down his life (10:11-18). Martha's confession (v. 27) parallels Peter's confession in the Synoptics (Matthew 16:16). The unwinding of grave cloths (v. 44) anticipates the resurrection narrative (20:6-7). Caiaphas's prophecy connects to Isaiah 53 (the servant dying for the people) and to John's understanding of the cross as gathering (cf. 12:32).

¹Now a man named Lazarus was ill. He was from Bethany, the village of Mary and her sister Martha. ²Mary was the one who anointed the Lord with perfume and wiped his feet with her hair; it was her brother Lazarus who was ill. ³So the sisters sent word to him, saying, "Lord, the one you love is ill." ⁴When Jesus heard this, he said, "This illness does not lead to death. It is for the glory of God, so that the Son of God may be glorified through it." ⁵And Lazarus, now Jesus loved Martha, and her sister. ⁶So when he heard that Lazarus was ill, he stayed where he was for two more days. ⁷Then after this he said to the disciples, "Let us go to Judea again." ⁸The disciples said to him, "Rabbi, the Jewish leaders were just now trying to stone you, and you are going there again?" ⁹Jesus answered, "Are there not twelve hours in a day? If anyone walks during the day, he does not stumble, because he sees the light of this world. ¹⁰But if anyone walks at night, he stumbles, because the light is not in him." ¹¹After saying this, he told them, "Our friend Lazarus has fallen asleep, but I am going to wake him up." ¹²The disciples said to him, "Lord, if he has fallen asleep, he will recover." ¹³Jesus had spoken about his death, but they thought he was talking about ordinary sleep. ¹⁴So then Jesus told them plainly, "Lazarus has died. ¹⁵And for your sake I am glad that I was not there, so that you may believe. But let us go to him." ¹⁶So Thomas, called the Twin, said to his fellow disciples, "Let us also go, so that we may die with him." ¹⁷When Jesus arrived, he found that Lazarus had already been in the tomb for four days. ¹⁸Bethany was near Jerusalem, about two miles away, ¹⁹Numerous of the Jews arrived to Martha and Mary, to comfort them concerning their brother. ²⁰When Martha heard that Jesus was coming, she went to meet him, but Mary stayed seated in the house. ²¹Martha said to Jesus, "Lord, if you had been here, my brother would not have died. ²²But even now I know that whatever you ask from God, God will give you." ²³Jesus said to her, "Your brother will rise again." ²⁴Martha said to him, "I know that he will rise again in the resurrection on the last day." ²⁵Jesus said to her, "I am the resurrection and the life. The one who believes in me, even if he dies, will live, ²⁶Whosoever liveth and believes in me will never die. Believest you this? ²⁷So he said to her, "Yes, Lord. I believe that you are the Christ, the Son of God, the one coming into the world." ²⁸After saying this, she went and called her sister Mary, saying quietly, "The Teacher is here and is asking for you." ²⁹When she heard this, she got up quickly and went to him. ³⁰Jesus had not yet come into the village but was still at the place where Martha had met him. ³¹When the Jewish people who were with her in the house consoling her saw Mary get up quickly and go out, they followed her, assuming she was going to the tomb to weep there. ³²When Mary came to where Jesus was and saw him, she fell at his feet and said to him, "Lord, if you had been here, my brother would not have died." ³³When Jesus saw her weeping, and the Jewish people who had come with her also weeping, he was deeply moved in his spirit and troubled. ³⁴He said, "Where have you laid him?" They said to him, "Lord, come and see." ³⁵Indeed, Jesus wept. ³⁶So the Jewish people said, "See how he loved him!" ³⁷But some of them said, "Could not this man, who opened the eyes of the blind man, have kept Lazarus from dying?" ³⁸Then Jesus, deeply moved again within himself, came to the tomb. It was a cave, and a stone was lying against it. ³⁹Jesus said, "Remove the stone." Martha, the sister of the dead man, said to him, "Lord, by now there will be a stench, for he has been dead four days." ⁴⁰Jesus said to her, "Did I not tell you that if you believe, you will see the glory of God?" ⁴¹So they removed the stone. Jesus looked upward and said, "Father, I thank you that you have heard me. ⁴²I knew that you always hear me, but I said this for the sake of the crowd standing here, so that they may believe that you sent me." ⁴³ After saying this, he cried out with a loud voice, "Lazarus, come out!" ⁴⁴ The dead man came out, his hands and feet bound with linen strips, and his face wrapped with a cloth. Jesus said to them, "Unbind him, and let him go." ⁴⁵ Many of the Jewish people who had come to Mary and had seen what he did believed in him. ⁴⁶ But some of them went to the Pharisees and told them what Jesus had done. ⁴⁷ So the chief priests and the Pharisees gathered a council meeting and said, "What are we going to do? For this man is performing many signs. ⁴⁸ If we let him go on like this, everyone will believe in him, and the Romans will come and take away both our place and our nation." ⁴⁹ But one of them, Caiaphas, who was high priest that year, said to them, "You know nothing at all. ⁵⁰ You do not consider that it is better for you that one man die for the people than that the whole nation perish." ⁵¹ He did not say this on his own, but being high priest that year, he prophesied that Jesus was going to die for the nation, ⁵² Not for that nation sole, but that as well he should gather as one in one the God's children that were scattered abroad. ⁵³ So from that day on they plotted to put him to death. ⁵⁴ Therefore Jesus no longer walked openly among the Jewish leaders but went from there to the region near the wilderness, to a town called Ephraim, and he stayed there with his disciples. ⁵⁵ Now the Passover of the Jewish people was near, and many went up to Jerusalem from the countryside before the Passover to purify themselves. ⁵⁶ They were looking for Jesus and asking one another as they stood in the temple, "What do you think? Surely he will not come to the feast?" ⁵⁷ Now the chief priests and the Pharisees had given orders that anyone who knew where he was should report it, so that they could arrest him.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Lazarus (Greek Lazaros from Hebrew Eleazar, 'God has helped') is introduced by his illness, his hometown, and his sisters. Bethany was a village about two miles east of Jerusalem on the slopes of the Mount of Olives (cf. v. 18). John identifies the village by its residents rather than its geography, suggesting the sisters were well known to his audience.
2. John identifies Mary by an event he has not yet narrated (the anointing occurs in 12:1-8), suggesting his readers already knew the story. The detail 'wiped his feet with her hair' distinguishes this Mary from other anointing accounts in the Synoptics. The parenthetical identification reinforces the family connection: Lazarus is defined in relation to his sisters.
3. The message is restrained — no explicit request, only a statement of fact that assumes Jesus will act. The verb phileis ('you love,' from phileō) indicates personal affection and friendship. The sisters trust that the information alone will be sufficient to move Jesus to come.
4. Jesus's statement is true at a deeper level than it appears: Lazarus will die, but his death is not the final destination — it serves the glory (doxa) of God. The purpose clause hina doxasthē ('so that he may be glorified') connects the sign to its ultimate meaning. The phrase 'the Son of God' (ho huios tou theou) appears rarely in John as a self-designation and carries full Christological weight here.
5. The verb ēgapa (from agapaō) is used here rather than phileō (v. 3). John uses both verbs for Jesus's love without a clear semantic distinction in this passage. The sentence is placed before the delay, emphasizing that Jesus's decision to wait is not a failure of love but operates within it.
6. The conjunction oun ('so, therefore') is startling — 'therefore he stayed.' The delay is deliberate, not accidental. Combined with one day's travel each way, the two-day delay ensures Lazarus will have been dead four days when Jesus arrives. The delay serves the sign: a four-day-dead man is beyond any natural recovery, making the miracle unmistakable.
7. The verb agōmen ('let us go') is a hortatory subjunctive, inviting the disciples to join him. The adverb palin ('again') recalls the danger — they had just fled Judea after the stoning attempt (10:31, 39). The return to Judea is a return to danger.
8. The adverb nyn ('just now, recently') emphasizes the immediacy of the danger — the stoning attempt was not ancient history but recent experience. The disciples' question reveals understandable fear mixed with incredulity.
9. The question is rhetorical: daylight hours are appointed and sufficient. The metaphor means Jesus has an appointed time for his work, and while that time lasts, he cannot be stopped. 'The light of this world' (to phōs tou kosmou toutou) here refers to the sun, but John's readers would hear the echo of 8:12 and 9:5 where Jesus is the light of the world.
10. The shift from 'sees the light of this world' (external light, v. 9) to 'the light is not in him' (internal light, v. 10) is significant. The one who walks in darkness stumbles not merely because it is dark outside but because there is no light within. This connects to the Johannine theme of internal illumination through faith.
11. Jesus uses the metaphor of sleep (kekoimētai, perfect of koimaō, 'has fallen asleep') for death — a common biblical euphemism (cf. 1 Thessalonians 4:13-14, Daniel 12:2) that takes on literal force when spoken by the one who can reverse death. The perfect tense indicates a completed state: Lazarus is currently in the state of having fallen asleep. The verb exypnisō ('wake up') shows Jesus views death as a temporary condition he can reverse.

11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Daniel 12:2. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. The disciples understand Jesus literally: if Lazarus is sleeping, sleep is healing, and he will get better (sōthēsetai, 'he will be saved/healed'). The misunderstanding is typically Johannine — the audience takes Jesus's words at face value while the deeper meaning escapes them.
13. John provides the narrator's clarification, as he often does after misunderstandings (cf. 2:21, 6:71, 7:39, 12:33). The phrase koimēseōs tou hypnou ('the rest of sleep') is emphatic — literal, physical sleep, not the metaphorical sleep of death.
14. The adverb parrēsia ('plainly, openly') contrasts with the figurative language of verse 11. The blunt statement Lazaros apethanen ('Lazarus died') uses the aorist — a completed event. Jesus knows Lazarus is dead without having been told, demonstrating the supernatural knowledge that characterizes John's portrayal of Jesus.
15. Jesus's gladness (chairō) is not callousness about Lazarus's death but satisfaction that the disciples will witness a sign that deepens their faith. His absence was deliberate (cf. v. 6): had he been present, he would have healed Lazarus, and the disciples would have seen another healing. Instead, they will see a resurrection — a sign of a completely different order.
16. Thomas (Aramaic for 'twin,' translated by the Greek Didymos) appears here with characteristic blunt pessimism (cf. 14:5, 20:25). His statement is darkly loyal: he expects the trip to Judea to result in death but is willing to share it. The 'him' (autou) is ambiguous — it could mean 'die with Jesus' or 'die with Lazarus.' Most naturally it refers to Jesus, since the danger is in Judea.
17. The four days (tessaras hēmeras) is theologically significant: Jewish tradition held that the soul departed the body definitively after three days, when decomposition set in (cf. v. 39). By the fourth day, death was considered irreversible. Jesus arrives when human hope has been exhausted.
18. The Greek stadiōn dekapente ('fifteen stadia') equals approximately 1.7 miles (2.8 km). We render with the approximate modern equivalent for clarity. The proximity to Jerusalem explains both the presence of many mourners from the city (v. 19) and the rapid report of the miracle to the authorities (v. 46).
19. The verb paramythēsōntai ('console, comfort, encourage') describes the formal Jewish mourning practice of visiting the bereaved. Here hoi Ioudaioi refers to Jewish people from Jerusalem generally (neighbors and acquaintances), not the hostile authorities. The pluperfect elēlytheisan ('had come') indicates they were already present when Jesus arrived.
20. The sisters' responses are consistent with their characterizations in Luke 10:38-42: Martha is active and initiative-taking; Mary remains seated. The verb ekathezeto ('was sitting, remained seated') may indicate mourning posture — mourners traditionally sat on low seats or the ground during the shiva period.
21. The conditional ei ēs hōde ('if you had been here') is a contrary-to-fact condition expressing both grief and implicit trust — she believes Jesus could have prevented the death. Mary will say the identical words in verse 32, suggesting the sisters had spoken these words to each other during the waiting period. The address Kyrie ('Lord') carries genuine reverence.
22. The phrase alla kai nyn ('but even now') pushes beyond grief to tentative hope. Martha does not explicitly ask for resurrection, but her words leave the door open. The verb aitēsē ('ask, request') and the confident oida ('I know') express a faith that does not fully grasp what is about to happen but trusts in Jesus's relationship with God.
23. The verb anastēsetai ('will rise') is deliberately ambiguous — it could refer to the general resurrection at the last day (as Martha takes it in v. 24) or to an imminent, present-tense rising. Jesus's statements in John frequently operate on multiple levels simultaneously.
24. Martha's response is orthodox Pharisaic theology — belief in bodily resurrection at the eschaton (cf. Daniel 12:2, 2 Maccabees 7:9). Her oida ('I know') is theologically correct but inadequate to the moment: she knows about future resurrection but does not yet grasp that the resurrection stands before her in person. Jesus will redirect her from eschatological hope to present encounter.
24. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Daniel 12:2. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
25. The fifth 'I am' statement with predicate. By identifying himself as both hē anastasis ('the resurrection') and hē zōē ('the life'), Jesus claims to be the source and embodiment of both. The sequence 'even if he dies, will live' addresses physical death: faith in Jesus does not prevent physical death but renders it temporary.
26. The second clause addresses the living: those who believe in Jesus will never experience the ultimate death (ou mē apothanē eis ton aiōna, 'will absolutely never die into the age'). Verse 25 addresses those who have already died; verse 26 addresses those now living. Together they cover all cases. The direct question 'Do you believe this?' (pisteueis touto) shifts from theological declaration to personal challenge — Martha must respond.
27. Martha's confession is one of the most complete in the Gospels, paralleling Peter's confession in Matthew 16:16. Three titles: ho Christos ('the Christ/Messiah'), ho huios tou theou ('the Son of God'), and ho eis ton kosmon erchomenos ('the one coming into the world'). The perfect tense pepisteuka ('I have believed and continue to believe') indicates settled, enduring faith. This is the confession the Fourth Gospel aims to produce in its readers (cf. 20:31).
28. Martha calls Jesus ho didaskalos ('the Teacher') — a title of respect and intimacy. The adverb lathra ('secretly, quietly') suggests discretion: Martha does not want the mourners to follow and create a commotion before Mary and Jesus can meet privately. The verb phonei ('calls, summons') indicates a specific request from Jesus to see Mary.

29. The adverb tachy ('quickly') shows Mary's eager response — she does not hesitate. The passive ēgerthē ('was raised, got up') uses the same verb root (egeirō) that describes resurrection, a coincidence John may intend: Mary rises from mourning at the Teacher's call.
30. This geographical note explains why Mary must go out to Jesus rather than Jesus coming to her. He remained outside the village, perhaps deliberately — the encounter will eventually move to the tomb, which was also outside the village.
31. The mourners' assumption (doxantes, 'supposing, assuming') is wrong but natural — a bereaved sister rushing out would typically be going to the tomb to grieve. Their following creates an audience for the miracle, fulfilling the narrative requirement that many witnesses be present (cf. vv. 45-46).
32. Mary's words are identical to Martha's in verse 21, but her posture differs — she falls at Jesus's feet (epesen autou pros tous podas), a gesture of both reverence and grief. Unlike Martha, Mary does not add any expression of continued hope (cf. Martha's v. 22). Her grief is raw and unqualified. This is the same posture she will take in 12:3 when she anoints Jesus's feet.
33. The verb enebrimēsato (from embrimaomai) is difficult to translate: it denotes a deep, forceful emotion — sometimes anger, indignation, or a snorting like a horse. The most likely sense here is a combination of grief at the devastation death causes and anger at death itself as an enemy. The reflexive etaraxen heauton ('troubled himself') indicates this was not involuntary emotion but something Jesus allowed himself to feel fully. The same verb (tarassō) appears at 12:27 and 13:21.
34. Jesus's question 'Where have you laid him?' does not indicate ignorance (he already knew of Lazarus's death in v. 14) but draws the mourners into active participation in what is about to happen. The invitation 'come and see' (erchou kai ide) echoes the invitation in 1:39 and 1:46 — words that in John lead to revelation.
35. The shortest verse in the Bible, but among the most theologically significant. The verb edakrysen (from dakryō, 'to shed tears') is distinct from the loud wailing (klaiō) used of Mary and the mourners. Jesus's tears are quiet and controlled but genuine. The one who has just claimed to be the resurrection and the life weeps at the tomb of his friend — the fully divine one is fully human. The rendering matches the KJV because the Greek is so simple and direct that there is no meaningfully different modern rendering.
36. The mourners' observation is genuine and correct — ephilei ('he loved,' imperfect of phileō) indicates ongoing personal affection. The imperfect tense captures habitual, characteristic love. Even Jesus's opponents recognize the depth of his friendship with Lazarus.
37. The reference to opening blind eyes connects directly to chapter 9. The question is logical: if Jesus can heal congenital blindness, why not prevent death? The implied criticism is that Jesus's power (or willingness) has limits. The answer will come in the next few verses — Jesus's power exceeds their imagination.
38. The second occurrence of embrimaomai (cf. v. 33) underscores the intensity of Jesus's emotional engagement. The tomb is described as a spēlaion ('cave') with a stone placed against (epekeito, 'was lying upon/against') the entrance — a typical first-century Jewish rock-cut tomb sealed with a rolling stone or blocking stone.
39. Martha's objection is practical and visceral: ozei ('it stinks, there is an odor') refers to the decomposition of a four-day-old corpse. The term tetartaïos ('fourth-day,' an adjective meaning 'of the fourth day') confirms what the narrative has established — Lazarus is unambiguously dead and decomposing. Martha's faith (v. 27) does not yet encompass the immediate possibility of resurrection.
40. Jesus refers back to verse 4 (the illness is for God's glory) and verse 25 (the resurrection claim), though neither statement was made directly to Martha in those exact words — the reference may encompass the message sent through the sisters (v. 4) and the conversation of vv. 25-26. The conditional ean pisteusēs ('if you believe') makes sight dependent on faith, not faith on sight.
41. The prayer begins with eucharistō ('I thank, I give thanks') — not petition but thanksgiving, as if the outcome is already settled. The aorist ēkousas ('you heard') treats the hearing as a completed event. Jesus's prayer is not a request but an acknowledgment that the Father has already answered.
42. Jesus explains that the audible prayer is pedagogical — the crowd needs to hear it so they understand the miracle's source. The phrase pantote mou akoueis ('you always hear me') asserts a permanent, unbroken communion between Father and Son. The purpose clause hina pisteusōsin ('so that they may believe') reveals that the entire event — including the delay, the grief, and the miracle — serves the mission of bringing people to faith.
43. The verb ekraugasen ('cried out, shouted') with phōnē megalē ('a great/loud voice') describes a commanding shout — not a whisper or a prayer but a sovereign summons to the dead. The command deuro exō ('come out here') is simple, direct, and imperative. Augustine famously noted that Jesus specified 'Lazarus' by name because, had he simply said 'come out,' all the dead would have risen.
44. John describes Lazarus as ho tethnēkōs ('the one having died, the dead man') — even in the act of emerging, the narrative emphasizes he was genuinely dead. The keiriai ('linen strips, burial wrappings') bound hands and feet according to Jewish burial custom. The soudarion ('face cloth, sweat cloth') is the same word used in 20:7 for the cloth found in Jesus's empty tomb — but at Jesus's resurrection, the cloths are left behind neatly, not unwound by human hands. The command 'unbind him and let him go' (lysate auton kai aphete auton hypagein) involves the community in the miracle's completion.
45. The expected response: eyewitnesses of the raising believe (episteusan, aorist — they came to faith). The sign fulfills its purpose (cf. v. 42). These are the same mourners from verse 19 who had come to console the sisters.
46. The tines ('some') who report to the Pharisees may be hostile informants or may simply be reporting a remarkable event — John does not specify their motive. Either way, the report triggers the fateful council meeting in the next verse. The proximity of Bethany to Jerusalem (v. 18) makes the rapid communication plausible.

47. The synedrion ('council, Sanhedrin') indicates a formal session of the ruling body. The question ti poioumen ('what are we doing?' or 'what should we do?') reveals panic and paralysis. They do not dispute the signs (sēmeia) — the reality of the miracles is conceded. Their concern is entirely political and practical, not theological.
48. The fear is political: a popular messianic movement will provoke Roman intervention. The 'place' (topon) likely refers to the temple, and the 'nation' (ethnos) to Jewish national autonomy. John's readers, writing after 70 AD, would recognize the bitter irony: the Romans did come and destroy both the temple and the nation — the very outcome the council hoped to prevent by killing Jesus.
49. The phrase archiereus ōn tou eniautou ekeinou ('being high priest that year') does not mean the office rotated annually — Caiaphas served as high priest from about 18-36 AD. John specifies the year to connect the high priesthood to the specific year of Jesus's death. Caiaphas's opening dismissal (hymeis ouk oidate ouden, 'you know nothing') is contemptuous and politically shrewd.
50. Caiaphas's political calculus — sacrifice one to save many — is straightforward realpolitik. The verb sympherei ('it is advantageous, it is better') is coldly pragmatic. But John will immediately reinterpret these words as unwitting prophecy (vv. 51-52). The phrase heis anthrōpos apothanē hyper tou laou ('one man die for the people') uses the same preposition (hyper, 'for, on behalf of') that Jesus used of the good shepherd laying down his life (10:11, 15).
51. John's editorial comment transforms Caiaphas's political statement into prophetic oracle. The phrase aph' heautou ouk eipen ('he did not say this on his own') indicates that a power beyond Caiaphas was speaking through him — the high priestly office carried prophetic capacity that operated independently of the priest's own intentions. The verb eprophēteusen ('he prophesied') is the narrator's authoritative interpretation.
52. John expands the prophecy beyond Caiaphas's intent: Jesus dies not only for the Jewish nation but to gather (synagagē, from synagō — the verb root of 'synagogue') all God's scattered children into one community. The phrase ta tekna tou theou ta dieskorpismena ('the scattered children of God') echoes the 'other sheep' of 10:16 and connects to the prophetic vision of Israel's regathering (Isaiah 11:12, 43:5-6, Ezekiel 37:21) now extended to include Gentiles.
52. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 11:12. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
52. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Ezekiel 37:21. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
53. The verb ebouleusanto ('they deliberated, resolved, plotted') marks the formal decision to kill Jesus. The raising of Lazarus — Jesus's greatest sign of life — becomes the direct cause of the decision to end his life. This is John's supreme irony: the one who gives life is condemned to death for giving life.
54. Ephraim is likely the modern village of et-Taiyibeh, about fifteen miles northeast of Jerusalem on the edge of the Judean wilderness. The withdrawal is temporary — Jesus will return for Passover (v. 55). The verb emeinen ('stayed, remained') uses menō, and he remains with his disciples (meta tōn mathētōn), withdrawing from public ministry to the community of faith.
55. This is the third and final Passover in John's Gospel (cf. 2:13, 6:4). The purification (hagnisōsin heautous) refers to ritual cleansing required before participating in the Passover — those who had contracted uncleanness through contact with a corpse or other sources needed to purify themselves in advance (cf. Numbers 9:6-12). The irony: they purify themselves for Passover while the true Passover Lamb is about to be slaughtered.
55. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Numbers 9:6-12 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
56. The crowd's speculation builds suspense: will Jesus come to this Passover, knowing the authorities want him dead? The ou mē ('surely not') with the subjunctive ēlthē expects a negative answer — they doubt he will risk it. But the readers know Jesus has already indicated he will lay down his life voluntarily (10:17-18).
57. The pluperfect dedōkeisan ('had given') indicates the orders preceded the crowd's speculation — the authorities had already set the trap. The verb mēnysē ('report, inform, disclose') makes the public complicit in the arrest — everyone becomes a potential informant. The chapter ends with the net closing around Jesus, setting the stage for the events of chapters 12-19.

Summary: John 12 transitions from public ministry to the passion narrative. It opens with Mary's anointing of Jesus at Bethany — an extravagant act of devotion that Jesus interprets as preparation for his burial. The triumphal entry into Jerusalem follows, with crowds waving palm branches and shouting 'Hosanna.' Greeks seeking Jesus trigger his declaration that 'the hour has come' for the Son of Man to be glorified, which he describes through the metaphor of a grain of wheat dying to bear fruit. A voice from heaven confirms him. Jesus reflects on the meaning of his death — 'when I am lifted up from the earth, I will draw all people to myself' — then withdraws as the crowd fails to understand. The chapter closes with John's theological summary: despite the signs, most did not believe, fulfilling Isaiah's prophecy. Jesus makes a final public appeal about light, judgment, and the Father's command.

What Makes This Remarkable: This chapter marks the hinge of John's Gospel — the end of the 'Book of Signs' (chs. 1-12) and the threshold of the 'Book of Glory' (chs. 13-21). The anointing at Bethany, the triumphal entry, and the coming of the Greeks form a triptych that interprets Jesus's death as simultaneously an act of love, a royal claim, and a universal mission. The grain-of-wheat metaphor (v. 24) is one of Jesus's most profound self-descriptions: life through death, glory through humiliation. The voice from heaven (v. 28) is the Johannine equivalent of the Synoptic transfiguration. Isaiah 6:10 and 53:1 are quoted together (vv. 38-40), weaving together the themes of prophetic rejection and suffering servanthood.

Translation Friction: The chronology of the anointing differs between John (six days before Passover) and the Synoptics. Judas is identified as the objector in John, while in Matthew it is the disciples generally. The identification of the voice from heaven as 'thunder' or 'an angel' by the crowd (v. 29) parallels the Synoptic transfiguration accounts but occurs in a different setting. The 'Greeks' (Hellēnes, v. 20) are likely Gentile God-fearers who attended Jewish festivals, not Greek-speaking Jews.

Connections: The anointing connects to Mark 14:3-9 and anticipates the burial in 19:38-42. The triumphal entry fulfills Zechariah 9:9 and connects to Psalm 118:25-26. The grain-of-wheat metaphor connects to 1 Corinthians 15:36-37. 'Lifted up' (v. 32) resumes the language of 3:14 and 8:28. The Isaiah quotations connect to the broader theme of prophetic rejection. The 'prince of this world' (v. 31) connects to 14:30 and 16:11.

¹Six days before the Passover, Jesus came to Bethany, where Lazarus was — the one whom Jesus had raised from the dead. ²So they gave a dinner for him there. Martha served, and Lazarus was one of those reclining at table with him. ³Mary then took a pound of expensive perfume made of pure nard, anointed Jesus's feet, and wiped his feet with her hair. The house was filled with the fragrance of the perfume. ⁴But Judas Iscariot, one of his disciples — the one who was about to betray him — said, ⁵"Why was this perfume not sold for three hundred denarii and the money given to the poor?" ⁶He said this not because he cared about the poor, but because he was a thief. As keeper of the money bag, he used to help himself to what was put into it. ⁷Jesus said, "Leave her alone. She intended to keep it for the day of my burial. ⁸You always have the poor with you, but you do not always have me." ⁹When the large crowd of the Jewish people learned that Jesus was there, they came not only because of him but also to see Lazarus, whom he had raised from the dead. ¹⁰So the chief priests made plans to put Lazarus to death as well, ¹¹because that by reason of him numerous of the Jews traveled away, and believed on Jesus. ¹²The next day the large crowd that had come for the feast heard that Jesus was coming to Jerusalem. ¹³They took palm branches and went out to meet him, shouting, "Hosanna! Blessed is the one who comes in the name of the Lord — the King of Israel!" ¹⁴Jesus found a young donkey and sat on it, as it is written: ¹⁵"Do not be afraid, daughter of Zion. See, your king is coming, seated on a donkey's colt." ¹⁶His disciples did not understand these things at first, but when Jesus was glorified, then they remembered that these things had been written about him and that they had done these things to him. ¹⁷The crowd that had been with him when he called Lazarus out of the tomb and raised him from the dead continued to testify about it. ¹⁸This is also why the crowd went to meet him — because they heard that he had performed this sign. ¹⁹So the Pharisees said to one another, "You see that you are gaining nothing. Look — the whole world has gone after him!" ²⁰Now there were some Greeks among those who had come up to worship at the feast. ²¹So they came to Philip, who was from Bethsaida in Galilee, and asked him, "Sir, we want to see Jesus." ²²Philip went and told Andrew; then Andrew and Philip went and told Jesus. ²³Jesus answered them, "The hour has come for the Son of Man to be glorified. ²⁴Truly, truly, I say to you, unless a grain of wheat falls into the earth and dies, it remains just a single grain. But if it dies, it produces much fruit. ²⁵The one who loves his life loses it, and the one who hates his life in this world will keep it for eternal life. ²⁶If anyone serves me, he must follow me, and where I am, there my servant will be also. If anyone serves me, the Father will honor him." ²⁷"Now my soul is troubled. And what should I say — 'Father, save me from this hour'? But it is for this purpose that I have come to this hour. ²⁸Father, glorify your name." Then a voice came from heaven: "I have glorified it, and I will glorify it again." ²⁹The crowd standing there heard it and said it had thundered. Others said, "An angel has spoken to him." ³⁰Jesus answered, "This voice came not for my sake but for yours. ³¹Now is the judgment of this world. Now the ruler of this world will be cast out. ³²And I, when I am lifted up from the earth, will draw all people to myself." ³³He said this to indicate the kind of death he was going to die. ³⁴So the crowd answered him, "We have heard from the Law that the Christ remains forever. How can you say that the Son of Man must be lifted up? Who is this Son of Man?" ³⁵So Jesus said to them, "The light is among you for a little while longer. Walk while you have the light, so that the darkness does not overtake you. The one who walks in the darkness does not know where he is going. ³⁶While you have the light, believe in the light, so that you may become children of light." After saying this, Jesus departed and hid himself from them. ³⁷Although he had performed so many signs in their presence, they did not believe in him, ³⁸Indeed, that the declaring of Esaias the prophet of old could be fulfilled, which he spoke, Lord, who has believed our report? and to whom has the arm of the Lord been revealed? ³⁹For this reason they could not believe, because Isaiah also said: ⁴⁰"He has blinded their eyes and hardened their hearts, so that they would not see with their eyes or understand with their hearts, and turn — and I would heal them." ⁴¹Isaiah said these things because he saw his glory and spoke about him. ⁴²Nevertheless, many even among the leaders believed in him, but because of the Pharisees they did not confess it, so that they would not be expelled from the synagogue. ⁴³For they loved the glory that comes from people more than the glory that comes from God. ⁴⁴Then Jesus cried out and said, "The one who believes in me does not believe in me only, but in the one who sent me. ⁴⁵And the one who sees me sees the one who sent me. ⁴⁶I have come into the world as light, so that everyone who believes in me may not remain in darkness. ⁴⁷If anyone hears my words and does not keep them, I do not judge him, for I did not come to judge the world but to save the world. ⁴⁸The one who rejects me and does not receive my words has a judge: the word that I have spoken will judge him on the last day. ⁴⁹For I have not spoken on my own authority, but the Father who sent me has himself given me a commandment — what to say and what to speak. ⁵⁰And I know that his commandment is eternal life. So whatever I say, I say just as the Father has told me."

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The time marker 'six days before the Passover' (pro hex hēmerōn tou pascha) places the anointing on the Saturday evening before the final week. The identification of Bethany through Lazarus — 'whom Jesus had raised from the dead' — keeps the raising miracle in view and reminds the reader that Lazarus is living proof of Jesus's power over death.
2. Martha's serving (diēkonei, from diakoneō, the root of 'deacon') is consistent with her characterization in Luke 10:40. Lazarus reclining at table (anakeimenōn, the standard posture for formal dining) is a quiet, powerful detail: the man who was dead four days ago now dines as a living guest.
3. The litra ('pound,' approximately 327 grams or 12 ounces) of nard — an aromatic oil imported from the Himalayas — was extraordinarily expensive (v. 5 values it at 300 denarii, nearly a year's wages). The adjective pistikēs ('pure, genuine, unadulterated') emphasizes quality. Mary anoints Jesus's feet (not his head, as in Mark 14:3), an act of extreme humility, and wipes them with her hair — a shocking intimate gesture in a culture where women kept their hair covered in public. The detail that the fragrance filled the house (hē oikia eplērōthē) is sensory and symbolic: the extravagance of devotion permeates everything.
4. John identifies the objector specifically as Judas (the Synoptics generalize), and immediately adds the editorial tag ho mellōn auton paradidonai ('the one about to betray him'). This characterization colors everything Judas says with duplicity. The verb paradidonai ('hand over, betray') is the standard term for Judas's act throughout the Gospels.
5. Three hundred denarii represented approximately a year's wages for a common laborer (cf. Matthew 20:2, where one denarius is a day's wage). Judas frames his objection as concern for the poor, giving it moral weight. The question implies Mary's act is wasteful.
6. John's narrator strips away Judas's pretense with blunt editorial commentary. The word kleptēs ('thief') is the same word used for the one who does not enter the sheepfold through the gate (10:1). The glōssokomon ('money bag, money box,' originally a case for flute reeds) was the common purse of the group. The verb ebastazen can mean 'carried' (neutral) or 'carried away, pilfered' (negative) — John intends the latter.

7. The Greek is syntactically difficult: hina... tērēsē auto ('so that she might keep it') has been interpreted as (1) 'let her keep the remaining perfume for my burial,' (2) 'she bought it in order to keep it for my burial day,' or (3) 'leave her alone — she has kept it for the purpose of my burial.' We follow the second sense: the anointing itself is the burial preparation, whether Mary fully understands this or not. Jesus interprets her act as prophetically anticipating his death.
8. Jesus alludes to Deuteronomy 15:11 ('the poor will never cease from the land'). The statement does not dismiss care for the poor (Deuteronomy 15:11 commands generosity) but asserts the unique, unrepeatable nature of this moment. Jesus's physical presence is temporary; the opportunity to honor him in this way will soon pass.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Deuteronomy 15:11 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. Lazarus has become a living attraction — people come to see the man who was dead and is now alive. He is walking evidence of Jesus's power. The dual motivation (dia ton Iēsoun... kai ton Lazaron) shows the raising has become inseparable from Jesus's public reputation.
10. The plot extends to Lazarus — they want to destroy the evidence. The logic is brutally pragmatic: a living Lazarus is an ongoing testimony to Jesus's power. The verb ebouleusanto ('resolved, plotted') is the same word used for the decision to kill Jesus (11:53). The priests' willingness to murder an innocent man to suppress a miracle reveals how far institutional self-preservation has corrupted their mission.
11. The verb hypēgon ('were going away, were departing') suggests people were leaving the authority of the religious leaders and transferring their allegiance to Jesus. The imperfect tense indicates an ongoing trend, not a single event. Lazarus's existence was causing a steady hemorrhage of loyalty.
12. The 'next day' (tē epaurion) places the triumphal entry on the day after the anointing — traditionally identified as Sunday (Palm Sunday). The crowd consists of Passover pilgrims (ho elthōn eis tēn heortēn), not merely Jerusalem residents. The news of Jesus's approach creates spontaneous excitement.
13. The baia tōn phoinikōn ('branches of palm trees') are mentioned only in John among the Gospel accounts. Palm branches were symbols of Jewish nationalism and military victory (cf. 1 Maccabees 13:51, 2 Maccabees 10:7). The crowd quotes Psalm 118:25-26, a Hallel psalm sung at Passover, adding 'the King of Israel' (ho basileus tou Israēl) — a political-messianic title not in the original psalm. 'Hosanna' (Hebrew hoshi'a na, 'save now, please save') had evolved from a prayer into an acclamation of praise.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalms 118:26 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. John's account is compressed compared to the Synoptics (no disciples sent to fetch the animal). The onarion ('young donkey, donkey colt') fulfills the prophecy quoted in the next verse. The verb heurōn ('having found') suggests Jesus actively sought the donkey — the act is deliberate, not accidental.
15. The quotation combines Zephaniah 3:16 ('Do not fear, O Zion') with Zechariah 9:9 ('your king comes to you... riding on a donkey'). John abbreviates the Zechariah text, omitting 'humble and mounted on a donkey' — the full context in Zechariah presents a king who comes in humility and peace, not on a war horse. The choice of a donkey is a deliberate counter-symbol to Roman military procession.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Zechariah 9:9 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Zephaniah 3:16 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. A characteristic Johannine retrospective note (cf. 2:22, 7:39): understanding comes after the resurrection ('when Jesus was glorified,' hote edoxasthē). The verb emnēsthēsan ('they remembered') describes a Spirit-aided recollection that connects Scripture to the events they witnessed. John is honest about the disciples' initial incomprehension.
17. The imperfect emartyrei ('kept testifying, continued to bear witness') shows the Lazarus witnesses were actively spreading the story. The eyewitnesses function as evangelists — their testimony drives the growing crowds of verse 18.
18. John explicitly connects the triumphal entry to the Lazarus miracle: the crowds come because of the raising. The word sēmeion ('sign') rather than 'miracle' maintains John's theological vocabulary — the raising is not merely a wonder but a pointer to Jesus's identity.
19. The Pharisees' frustrated exaggeration — ho kosmos opisō autou apēlthen ('the world has gone after him') — is deeply ironic in John's theology, where kosmos ('world') is precisely what Jesus came to save (3:16). They speak more truth than they know. Their admission of failure ('you are gaining nothing,' ouk ōpheleite ouden) is also ironic: the verb ōpheleō is the same root Caiaphas used in 11:50 ('it is better,' sympherei) — their efforts are futile.
20. The Hellēnes ('Greeks') are Gentile God-fearers — non-Jews who were attracted to Jewish monotheism and came to worship at the temple festivals. They would have been limited to the Court of the Gentiles. Their arrival immediately following the Pharisees' statement 'the world has gone after him' is John's ironic confirmation: the world — including Gentiles — is indeed coming to Jesus.
21. The Greeks approach Philip, possibly because his Greek name made him seem approachable to non-Jews. Bethsaida, in the tetrarchy of Philip, had a significant Gentile population. The request thelomen ton Iēsoun idein ('we want to see Jesus') is simple and direct. The verb idein ('to see') in John often carries the deeper meaning of perceiving, understanding, and believing.

22. Philip and Andrew, the only two disciples with Greek names, serve as intermediaries between the Gentile seekers and Jesus. The chain of communication (Greeks Philip Andrew Jesus) may reflect early church practice of Gentile inclusion through apostolic mediation. John does not record whether the Greeks actually met Jesus — the request triggers Jesus's discourse on his death rather than a meeting.
23. Throughout the Gospel, 'the hour' (hē hōra) has been approaching but not yet arrived (2:4, 7:30, 8:20). Now, triggered by the Greeks' approach, Jesus declares elēlythen hē hōra ('the hour has come,' perfect tense — it has arrived and is now present). The coming of the Gentiles signals that the time for Jesus's death-as-glorification has arrived. In John, glorification and crucifixion are the same event seen from different perspectives.
24. The agricultural metaphor is precise: a seed that is preserved intact remains alone (autos monos menei); a seed that is buried and 'dies' (its outer shell breaking open) produces abundance (polyn karpon, 'much fruit'). Jesus applies this to himself: his death is not loss but the condition for universal fruitfulness. The 'much fruit' is the gathered community of believers — including the very Greeks who have just sought him.
25. The paradox parallels the Synoptic sayings (Matthew 10:39, Mark 8:35, Luke 9:24). The Greek psychē ('life, soul, self') refers to one's entire existence, not merely biological life. The verb misōn ('hating') is Semitic hyperbole for 'placing in second priority' — not literal hatred but radical subordination of self-preservation to the call of following Jesus.
26. The verb diakoneō ('serve') connects service to following — discipleship is both imitation and participation. The promise 'where I am, there my servant will be' (hopou eimi egō ekei kai ho diakonos ho emos estai) unites the servant's destiny with Jesus's destiny. Since Jesus is about to enter glory through death, this is both promise and warning: following Jesus means sharing his path.
27. This is John's equivalent of the Gethsemane agony (absent from John's passion narrative). The verb tetaraktai ('is troubled, is agitated') is the same word used at Lazarus's tomb (11:33). Jesus's inner conflict is real — he contemplates asking for rescue — but immediately reaffirms his purpose. The rhetorical question format (ti eipō, 'what should I say?') shows Jesus thinking through the temptation and rejecting it in real time.
28. Instead of asking for deliverance, Jesus asks for the Father's name to be glorified — a prayer that accepts the cross as the means of glorification. The heavenly voice (phōnē ek tou ouranou) is the third instance of the bat qol ('daughter of a voice,' divine speech) in the Gospels (cf. baptism, transfiguration). The response spans past ('I have glorified,' edoxasa) and future ('I will glorify again,' palin doxasō) — the Father's glory has been manifested throughout Jesus's ministry and will be manifested supremely through the cross and resurrection.
29. The crowd hears the sound but cannot discern the content — some hear thunder (natural phenomenon), others hear angelic speech (supernatural but impersonal). Neither group perceives that the Father himself has spoken. This graduated perception mirrors the chapter's theme of seeing without understanding.
30. Jesus does not need the audible confirmation — his communion with the Father is unbroken (cf. 11:42). The voice is pedagogical, intended to give the crowd evidence of divine involvement. The distinction between Jesus's needs and the crowd's needs underscores his unique relationship with the Father.
31. The double nyn ('now') marks the decisive moment. The krisis ('judgment') is not a future courtroom scene but a present event — the cross is the judgment of the world. The archōn tou kosmou toutou ('the ruler of this world') refers to Satan (cf. 14:30, 16:11). The paradox: at the very moment the world appears to condemn Jesus, it is the world — and its ruler — that stands judged.
32. The verb hypsōthō ('am lifted up') carries the characteristic Johannine double meaning: physical elevation on the cross and spiritual exaltation to glory (cf. 3:14, 8:28). The verb helkysō ('will draw, will drag') suggests powerful, irresistible attraction — not coercion but a gravitational pull emanating from the cross. The word pantas ('all') is universal: Jew and Gentile, echoing the Greeks who have just sought him and the 'other sheep' of 10:16.
33. The verb sēmainōn ('signifying, indicating') shares the root of sēmeion ('sign') — even Jesus's words about his death are signs pointing to deeper meaning. The phrase poiō thanatō ('what kind of death') specifies crucifixion — the death that involves being physically lifted up.
34. The crowd's objection reveals their messianic expectations: the Christ (ho Christos) should reign forever (menei eis ton aiōna, cf. Psalm 89:36, Isaiah 9:7, Daniel 7:14). If the Son of Man must be 'lifted up' (die), he cannot be the eternal Messiah. Their question 'Who is this Son of Man?' is genuinely confused — they cannot reconcile messianic permanence with the necessity of death.
34. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalm 89:36. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
34. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 9:7. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
34. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Daniel 7:14. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
35. Jesus does not directly answer their question but issues an urgent warning. The 'light' (to phōs) is himself (cf. 8:12, 9:5), and it is about to be withdrawn through his death. The verb katalabē ('overtake, seize, overcome') is the same word used in 1:5 ('the darkness has not overcome it'). The urgency (eti mikron chronon, 'yet a little time') presses for immediate response before the opportunity passes.
36. The call to 'believe in the light' (pisteuete eis to phōs) and become 'children of light' (huiōi phōtos) connects to the Prologue (1:12, 'to those who believed in his name, he gave the right to become children of God'). The phrase 'children of light' also appears in the Dead Sea Scrolls and in Paul (1 Thessalonians 5:5). Jesus's departure and hiding (ekrybē, 'hid himself,' cf. 8:59) marks the end of his public ministry in John — he will next appear with his disciples in the upper room (ch. 13).

37. John begins his theological summary of the public ministry. The concessive clause (tosauta... sēmeia pepoiēkotos, 'though he had done so many signs') emphasizes the abundance of evidence and the inexcusability of unbelief. The perfect participle pepoiēkotos indicates signs performed with lasting results — they stand as permanent testimony.
38. John quotes Isaiah 53:1, the opening of the fourth Servant Song. The connection between Jesus and the Suffering Servant is made explicit: the Servant's rejection was prophesied. The 'arm of the Lord' (ho brachiōn kyriou) is a metaphor for God's saving power — the question implies that God's power was present in Jesus's signs but went unrecognized.
38. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 53:1 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
39. The phrase ouk ēdynanto pisteuein ('they could not believe') is stark — John presents inability, not merely unwillingness. The second Isaiah quotation (v. 40) provides the explanation: God has judicially hardened those who persistently rejected the signs.
39. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 6:10. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
40. John quotes Isaiah 6:10, modifying it to make God the subject of the blinding and hardening. The verbs tetyphlōken ('has blinded') and epōrōsen ('has hardened, petrified') are in the perfect tense, indicating completed action with ongoing results. The theological tension between human responsibility (they refused to believe, v. 37) and divine sovereignty (they could not believe, v. 39) is left unresolved — John presents both as true without harmonizing them.
40. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 6:10 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
41. The stunning claim: Isaiah's vision in the temple (Isaiah 6:1-4, where he saw 'the Lord seated on a throne, high and exalted') was a vision of Jesus's glory. The pronoun autou ('his') refers to Jesus — John identifies the pre-incarnate Christ as the one Isaiah saw enthroned. This is one of the highest Christological statements in the Gospel.
41. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 6:1-4. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
42. This verse qualifies the preceding judgment: not all rejected Jesus — even among the archontōn ('rulers, leaders') many believed. But their faith was secret, suppressed by fear of aposynagōgoi ('expelled from the synagogue,' cf. 9:22). John presents closet discipleship as a real but compromised form of faith — belief without public confession.
43. The Greek doxa ('glory, honor, praise') is used for both human and divine approval, forcing the reader to choose between them. The verb ēgapēsan ('they loved') applies the agapaō word (usually reserved for the highest form of love) to misdirected devotion — they loved human approval with the intensity that should be reserved for God's approval. This diagnosis echoes 5:44.
44. The verb ekraxen ('cried out, shouted') marks an urgent, public declaration — Jesus's final appeal to the crowd. The statement that belief in Jesus is belief in the Father who sent him restates the fundamental Johannine principle of the unity between sender and sent (cf. 5:23-24, 13:20). We add 'only' for English clarity — the Greek negation ou... alla means 'not merely X but Y,' not 'not X at all.'
45. The verb theōreō ('see, perceive, behold') denotes more than physical sight — it is perceptive, contemplative seeing. To see Jesus with understanding is to see the Father (cf. 14:9). This statement grounds all knowledge of God in the encounter with Jesus.
46. The light imagery returns for Jesus's final public statement, connecting back to 1:4-5, 3:19, 8:12, and 9:5. The purpose clause hina... mē meinē ('so that he might not remain') uses menō — the darkness is not the natural human condition from which Jesus rescues (remaining is negative here); light is the transformative alternative.
47. Jesus reaffirms 3:17: his mission is salvific, not condemnatory. The verb phylaxē ('keep, guard, observe') describes active obedience to Jesus's words, not mere hearing. Those who hear but do not keep are not judged by Jesus directly — but verse 48 explains what does judge them.
48. The verb athetōn ('rejecting, setting aside, nullifying') is a strong term for willful dismissal. The judge is not a person but a word — ho logos hon elalēsa ('the word that I spoke'). Jesus's words carry inherent judicial authority that will manifest 'on the last day' (en tē eschatē hēmera). Present rejection stores up future judgment.
49. Jesus grounds the judicial authority of his words in the Father's commissioning: every word carries divine mandate. The Father has given a specific entolē ('commandment, instruction') governing both content (ti eipō, 'what to say') and delivery (ti lalēsō, 'what to speak'). Jesus's words are the Father's words — to reject them is to reject the Father.
50. The final verse of Jesus's public ministry ends with the identification of the Father's command as zōē aiōnios ('eternal life') — the Father's will is not arbitrary law but life-giving reality. Jesus's closing declaration of obedience (kathōs eirēken moi ho patēr, houtōs lalō, 'just as the Father has told me, so I speak') summarizes his entire public ministry: faithful transmission of the Father's word. The public voice falls silent; the private teaching of chapters 13-17 follows.

Summary: John 13 marks the transition from Jesus's public ministry to the private instruction of his disciples during the final Passover. Jesus washes his disciples' feet — an act of radical self-humiliation that embodies the love he is about to command. He predicts his betrayal, identifies Judas by dipping bread and giving it to him, and Judas departs into the night. After Judas leaves, Jesus announces his glorification, gives the 'new commandment' to love one another, and predicts Peter's threefold denial.

What Makes This Remarkable: John's account of the Last Supper contains no institution of the Eucharist — instead, the foot-washing functions as the defining act. This substitution is deliberate: John's eucharistic theology is already expressed in the Bread of Life discourse (chapter 6). The foot-washing is unique to John and is presented as both a concrete act of service and a symbolic anticipation of the cross. The phrase 'having loved his own who were in the world, he loved them to the end' (eis telos, v. 1) can mean both 'to the utmost' and 'to the end/completion' — the cross is the full expression of this love. Judas's departure 'into the night' (v. 30) is one of the most haunting lines in Scripture, where physical darkness embodies spiritual reality.

Translation Friction: The relationship between the foot-washing and baptism has been debated since the patristic era. The exchange with Peter (vv. 6-10) has been read sacramentally, ethically, or christologically. We translate the Greek without imposing any single interpretive framework. The identity of the Beloved Disciple (v. 23) remains John's great mystery — we follow the text without speculating. The morsel given to Judas (v. 26) has eucharistic overtones that intensify the horror of his departure.

Connections: The foot-washing connects to the servant songs of Isaiah (especially 52:13-53:12) and to Jesus's own teaching about the greatest being the servant of all (Mark 10:43-45). The new commandment (v. 34) echoes Leviticus 19:18 ('love your neighbor') but transcends it — the standard is now 'as I have loved you.' Judas's departure connects to 6:70-71 and anticipates 18:1-5. Peter's predicted denial foreshadows 18:15-27. The 'hour' (v. 1) fulfills the anticipation built throughout the Gospel (2:4, 7:30, 8:20, 12:23, 27).

¹Now before the Feast of the Passover, Jesus, knowing that his hour had come to depart out of this world to the Father, having loved his own who were in the world, he loved them to the end. ²During supper, when the devil had already put it into the heart of Judas, the son of Simon Iscariot, to betray him, ³Jesus, knowing that the Father had given all things into his hands, and that he had come from God and was going back to God, ⁴Indeed, he riseth from supper, and laid aside his garments. And picked up a towel, and girded himself. ⁵Then he poured water into a basin and began to wash the disciples' feet and to wipe them with the towel that was wrapped around him. ⁶He came to Simon Peter, who said to him, "Lord, do you wash my feet?" ⁷Jesus answered him, "What I am doing you do not understand now, but afterward you will understand." ⁸Peter said to him, "You will never wash my feet!" Jesus answered him, "If I do not wash you, you have no share with me." ⁹But also my hands and my head, Simon Peter says to him, Lord, not my feet only. ¹⁰Jesus said to him, "The one who has bathed does not need to wash, except for his feet, but is completely clean. And you are clean — but not all of you." ¹¹For he knew who was to betray him; that is why he said, "Not all of you are clean." ¹²When he had washed their feet and put on his outer garments and reclined at table again, he said to them, "Do you understand what I have done to you? ¹³You call me Teacher and Lord, and you are right, for so I am. ¹⁴Have washed your feet, if I then, your Lord and Master. You also ought to wash one another's feet. ¹⁵For I have given you an example, that you also should do just as I have done to you. ¹⁶Truly, truly, I say to you, a servant is not greater than his master, nor is a messenger greater than the one who sent him. ¹⁷If you know these things, blessed are you if you do them. ¹⁸I am not speaking of all of you; I know whom I have chosen. But the Scripture will be fulfilled: 'The one who eats bread with me has lifted his heel against me.' ¹⁹I am telling you this now, before it takes place, so that when it does take place you may believe that I am. ²⁰Truly, truly, I say to you, whoever receives the one I send receives me, and whoever receives me receives the one who sent me." ²¹After saying these things, Jesus was troubled in his spirit, and he testified, "Truly, truly, I say to you, one of you will betray me." ²²The disciples looked at one another, uncertain of whom he was speaking. ²³One of his disciples, whom Jesus loved, was reclining at table close to Jesus. ²⁴So Simon Peter motioned to him to ask Jesus of whom he was speaking. ²⁵So that disciple, leaning back against Jesus, said to him, "Lord, who is it?" ²⁶Jesus answered, "It is he to whom I will give this morsel of bread when I have dipped it." So when he had dipped the morsel, he took it and gave it to Judas, the son of Simon Iscariot. ²⁷Then after he received the morsel, Satan entered into him. Jesus said to him, "What you are going to do, do quickly." ²⁸Now no one at the table knew why he said this to him. ²⁹Some thought that, because Judas had the money box, Jesus was telling him, "Buy what we need for the feast," or that he should give something to the poor. ³⁰So, after receiving the morsel, he went out immediately. And it was night. ³¹And god is glorified in him, therefore, while he was gone out, Jesus declared, Now is the Son of Man glorified. ³²If God is glorified in him, God will also glorify him in himself, and will glorify him at once. ³³Little children, I am with you only a little longer. You will seek me, and just as I said to the Jews, 'Where I am going, you cannot come,' so now I say it to you. ³⁴A new commandment I give to you: that you love one another. Just as I have loved you, you also are to love one another. ³⁵By this all people will know that you are my disciples: if you have love for one another." ³⁶Simon Peter said to him, "Lord, where are you going?" Jesus answered, "Where I am going, you cannot follow me now, but you will follow afterward." ³⁷Peter said to him, "Lord, why can I not follow you now? I will lay down my life for you." ³⁸Jesus answered, "Will you lay down your life for me? Truly, truly, I say to you, the rooster will not crow until you have denied me three times."

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. This verse is the theological overture to the entire Farewell Discourse (chapters 13-17). The phrase eis telos ('to the end') carries a double meaning: 'to the uttermost' (the fullest extent of love) and 'to the completion' (love expressed in the cross). The word hora ('hour') is the culmination of every previous reference to 'his hour' throughout the Gospel. The phrase 'his own' (tous idious) echoes the Prologue (1:11) but here refers specifically to the disciples, not Israel as a whole.
2. The genitive absolute deipnou ginomenou means 'while supper was taking place,' not 'after supper was ended' as the KJV renders. The devil (ho diabolos) is the external agent, Judas's heart is the internal battleground. The perfect participle beblakotos ('having already put') indicates that the decision has been made before the foot-washing — Judas's betrayal is already in motion even as Jesus washes his feet.
3. The triple knowledge — all authority, divine origin, divine destination — makes the foot-washing astonishing. It is precisely the one who possesses absolute authority who takes the position of the lowest slave. The phrase 'from God ... back to God' (apo theou ... pros ton theon) frames the incarnation as a round trip: origin, mission, return.
4. The historic present tense (egeiretai, 'rises'; tithesin, 'lays aside') gives the narrative vivid immediacy. The verb tithesin ('lays aside') is the same word used for laying down one's life in 10:11, 15, 17-18 — a verbal foreshadowing of the cross. The actions described are precisely those of a household slave: removing outer clothing, wrapping a towel, and preparing to wash feet.
5. Foot-washing was a menial task assigned to the lowest-ranking servant in a household, or performed by a wife for her husband or a student for his teacher — never by a master for his servants. In Jewish custom, even a Hebrew slave could not be compelled to wash feet (Mekilta on Exodus 21:2). Jesus's act overturns every social expectation.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 21:2 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. Peter's question carries shock and protest. The Greek word order emphasizes the incongruity: sy mou — 'You ... my?' The emphatic pronouns set the Lord against the servant, making Peter's objection not mere politeness but theological protest — this inversion of status is intolerable to him.
7. Jesus distinguishes between present incomprehension (ouk oidas arti) and future understanding (gnosei de meta tauta). The 'afterward' may refer to the cross, the resurrection, or the coming of the Spirit — all of which will illuminate the meaning of this act. The foot-washing is a parable-in-action that requires interpretation.
8. Peter's ou me ('never, by no means') is the strongest possible refusal. Jesus's response raises the stakes to the ultimate level: meros ('share, portion, inheritance') is the same word used for Israel's inheritance in the Promised Land (cf. Deuteronomy 12:12). Without receiving Jesus's cleansing service, Peter has no part in Jesus's kingdom. The washing symbolizes the cleansing that comes through Jesus's sacrificial death.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Deuteronomy 12:12 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. Peter's response swings from refusal to excess — characteristically impulsive. If washing means sharing in Jesus, he wants the maximum. The mention of hands, feet, and head may echo priestly washing rituals (Exodus 30:19-21), though the connection is not explicit.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 30:19-21. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. Jesus distinguishes between the full bath (ho leloumenos, from louō, 'to bathe the whole body') and the foot-washing (nipsasthai, from niptō, 'to wash a part'). The one who has been bathed needs only the foot-washing — a metaphor whose precise referent is debated: the bath may represent initial conversion/baptism, and the foot-washing ongoing cleansing from sin. The ominous qualification 'but not all' (all' ouchi pantes) points to Judas.

11. The narrator clarifies the cryptic remark. Jesus's knowledge of the betrayer is emphasized throughout this chapter (vv. 2, 11, 18, 21, 26-27). The uncleanness is moral, not physical — Judas has been washed but remains unclean because his heart belongs to the devil (v. 2).
12. The verb elaben ('took up, received') reverses the tithesin ('laid aside') of verse 4 — Jesus resumes his garments, having completed the act of service. The question ginōskete ('do you understand?') shifts from the act to its meaning. The foot-washing is not merely exemplary behavior; it carries theological significance that requires explanation.
13. Jesus affirms the titles 'Teacher' (ho didaskalos, corresponding to 'Rabbi') and 'Lord' (ho kyrios). The affirmation is crucial: the foot-washing does not erase the hierarchy but redefines how authority is exercised. The one who is genuinely Teacher and Lord chooses to serve — this is not a renunciation of authority but its highest expression.
14. The verb opheilete ('you ought, you owe it') expresses moral obligation, not merely suggestion. The reciprocal 'one another' (allelōn) makes the command communal — every disciple serves every other, with no one exempt. Note the reversal of title order: 'Lord and Teacher' (not 'Teacher and Lord' as in v. 13), placing the higher title first to maximize the force of the argument.
15. The word hypodeigma ('example, pattern, model') indicates that the foot-washing is paradigmatic — it establishes a pattern of self-giving service that defines the community's life. The 'just as' (kathōs) sets a standard: not merely serving in general, but serving in the specific manner of Jesus — sacrificially, without concern for status.
16. The double amen introduces a solemn principle. The word apostolos ('one who is sent, messenger') here carries its original meaning rather than the later technical sense of 'Apostle.' The logic is a fortiori: if the Master serves, the servants have no ground for refusing to serve.
17. The beatitude (makarioi, 'blessed, fortunate') hinges on the conditional ean poiete ('if you do'). Knowledge without practice yields no blessing. This echoes the Sermon on the Mount's emphasis on doing, not merely hearing (Matthew 7:24-27). John rarely uses makarios, making this instance particularly striking.
18. Jesus quotes Psalm 41:9, which describes the betrayal of a close friend — one who shares table fellowship. The verb trogōn ('the one eating, feeding on') is the same visceral word used in the Bread of Life discourse (6:54-58). The image of lifting the heel (epēren ... tēn pternan) may suggest a horse kicking its master, or simply turning one's back in contempt. The Scripture is not merely predicted but 'fulfilled' (plērōthē) — Judas's betrayal is woven into the divine plan.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalms 41:9 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. The ego eimi ('I am') at the end of this verse is the absolute form — without a predicate. Jesus's foreknowledge of the betrayal is itself a sign of divine identity. When the betrayal occurs as predicted, the disciples will recognize that Jesus is the 'I AM' of Exodus 3:14 — the one who knows the end from the beginning.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 3:14. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
20. This saying establishes a chain of representation: the sent one represents Jesus, and Jesus represents the Father. The principle of agency (shaliach) in Jewish law held that a person's agent was legally equivalent to the person himself. This prepares for the sending of the disciples after the resurrection (20:21).
21. The verb etarachthē ('was troubled, disturbed, agitated') is the same word used at Lazarus's tomb (11:33) and in the 'soul troubled' passage (12:27). Jesus is not detached from the anguish of betrayal — he feels it deeply. The verb emarturēsen ('testified, bore witness') elevates the prediction to a formal declaration.
22. The imperfect eblepon ('were looking') captures the prolonged, bewildered exchange of glances. The participle aporoumenoi ('being at a loss, uncertain') indicates genuine confusion — none of the disciples suspects Judas, which speaks either to Judas's skill at concealment or to the disciples' trust.
23. This is the first explicit appearance of the Beloved Disciple (hon egapa ho Iesous, 'whom Jesus loved'). The phrase en tō kolpō ('at the chest/bosom') describes the position of honor at a Roman-style dining arrangement, where guests reclined on their left sides — the one reclining in front of Jesus would have his head near Jesus's chest. The phrase echoes 1:18, where the Son is 'in the bosom' (eis ton kolpon) of the Father.
24. Peter's resort to gestures (neuei, 'nods, signals') shows the intimacy of the reclining arrangement — direct conversation required physical proximity that Peter apparently lacked. He relies on the Beloved Disciple's privileged position to gain information.
25. The Beloved Disciple leans back (anapesōn) toward Jesus's chest to ask privately. The question is whispered — this is not a public exchange. The physical intimacy between the Beloved Disciple and Jesus mirrors the theological intimacy between the Son and the Father (1:18).
26. The psōmion ('morsel, small piece of bread') dipped and given was a gesture of honor at a meal — the host would offer choice morsels to favored guests. Jesus's act is thus a final gesture of intimacy and generosity toward his betrayer, making the betrayal all the more grievous. The identification is made privately to the Beloved Disciple, not publicly to the group.
27. The shift from 'the devil' (diabolos, v. 2) to 'Satan' (Satanas) marks an escalation — Satan himself takes possession. The timing 'after the morsel' is chilling: the gesture of fellowship becomes the occasion of total satanic invasion. Jesus's command 'do quickly' (poiēson tachion) is not permission but sovereign dismissal — he controls even the timing of his own betrayal.

28. Despite the identification to the Beloved Disciple, the rest of the group remains ignorant. The secrecy is maintained — Jesus does not expose Judas publicly, preserving the betrayer's dignity even at this late moment.
29. The mention of the glossokomon ('money box') recalls 12:6, where John noted that Judas was a thief who helped himself from it. The fact that Judas was entrusted with the group's finances despite his character speaks to the mundane realities of the community. The two guesses — festival supplies or almsgiving — show that the disciples' explanation is utterly domestic; they have no idea that cosmic treachery is underway.
30. The three-word phrase en de nyx ('and it was night') is one of the most theologically charged sentences in the Gospel. On the literal level, it is a time marker. On the symbolic level, Judas steps out of the light of Jesus's presence into the darkness that represents the domain of evil (cf. 1:5, 3:19, 8:12, 9:4, 11:10, 12:35-36, 46). Night has come.
31. Judas's departure triggers the glorification language. The aorist edoxasthē ('was glorified') is proleptic — the cross is already accomplished in Jesus's mind. In John, 'glorification' (doxa) encompasses the cross, resurrection, and ascension as a single event. The mutual glorification ('the Son of Man glorified' and 'God glorified in him') expresses the inseparability of Father and Son.
32. The cascade of 'glorify' language (five uses of the doxaz- root in vv. 31-32) creates an intense concentration. The 'at once' (euthys) emphasizes the immediacy — there is no gap between the Son's obedient death and the Father's vindication.
33. The address teknia ('little children') is unique to Jesus in John and is found nowhere else in the Gospels (though John uses it in 1 John 2:1, 12, 28). It conveys tender affection and paternal care. Jesus applies to the disciples the same warning he gave to the Jewish leaders (7:33-34, 8:21), but with a crucial difference: for the disciples, the separation is temporary.
34. The 'new commandment' (entolēn kainēn) is not new in commanding love — Leviticus 19:18 already did that. It is new in its standard: 'just as I have loved you' (kathōs ēgapēsa hymas). The measure of love is no longer 'as yourself' but 'as Christ' — a standard that includes sacrificial death. The command defines the community's identity: they are not marked by knowledge, power, or ritual, but by mutual love.
34. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Leviticus 19:18. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
35. Love is the public badge of discipleship — not miracles, not doctrine, not moral rigor, but mutual love. The verb gnōsontai ('will know') makes love an epistemological category: the world gains knowledge of Christ through the community's love. This is the most visible and most demanding criterion of authentic Christianity.
36. Peter's question picks up on verse 33. Jesus's answer contains both a refusal and a promise: 'not now' (nyn) but 'afterward' (hysteron). The verb akolouthēseis ('you will follow') contains a double meaning — Peter will follow Jesus both in discipleship and in death (cf. 21:18-19, where Peter's crucifixion is predicted).
37. Peter's declaration uses the exact language of the Good Shepherd: 'lay down my life' (tēn psychēn mou ... thēsō, cf. 10:11, 15, 17-18). He claims to do for Jesus what Jesus does for the sheep. The irony is painful — within hours, Peter will not lay down his life but will deny three times that he even knows Jesus.
38. Jesus echoes Peter's words back as a question, exposing the gap between Peter's intention and his capacity. The prediction is precise: three denials before the rooster crows. The fulfillment in 18:15-27 is exact. The double amen underscores the certainty of this painful prophecy. Yet the chapter does not end in despair — the following discourse (chapters 14-17) will provide the resources for Peter's eventual restoration.

Summary: John 14 is part of Jesus's Farewell Discourse, delivered to his disciples on the night before his crucifixion. Jesus consoles the troubled disciples by promising that his Father's house has many rooms and that he goes to prepare a place for them. He declares himself 'the way, the truth, and the life' — the exclusive path to the Father. He promises that those who believe will do even greater works, that prayers in his name will be answered, and that the Father will send another Advocate (Parakletos), the Spirit of Truth, to be with them forever. The chapter closes with Jesus bequeathing his peace — distinct from the world's peace — and urging the disciples not to be troubled or afraid.

What Makes This Remarkable: This chapter contains some of the most theologically concentrated statements in the New Testament. The 'I am the way' declaration (14:6) is the sixth of John's seven great 'I am' sayings. The introduction of the Parakletos ('Advocate, Helper, Comforter') is unique to John's Gospel and becomes the foundation for later trinitarian theology. Jesus's language moves fluidly between departure and presence — he is leaving, yet he will come to them; they will not see him, yet they will see him. This paradox is resolved through the Spirit, who makes Jesus's continued presence real after his physical departure. The phrase 'my Father's house' (14:2) has been debated for centuries: does it refer to heaven as a destination, or to the temple as a community of God's dwelling?

Translation Friction: The Greek monai ('rooms, dwelling places') in verse 2 has traditionally been rendered 'mansions' (KJV), following the Latin Vulgate's mansiones. The Greek word simply means 'dwelling places' or 'rooms' and carries no connotation of luxury. The term Parakletos (14:16, 26) resists single-word translation: 'Comforter' (KJV), 'Advocate,' 'Helper,' and 'Counselor' each capture only part of its legal and relational semantic range. We render it 'Advocate' with notation. The relationship between 14:28 ('the Father is greater than I') and Johannine high Christology has generated extensive theological debate; we render the Greek as stated without harmonizing.

Connections: The Farewell Discourse (John 13-17) parallels Moses's farewell in Deuteronomy and David's in 1 Chronicles 28-29. The Parakletos promise anticipates the Pentecost narrative in Acts 2. 'I am the way' connects to Old Testament path/way imagery (Psalm 1, Isaiah 40:3). The 'many rooms' language echoes temple theology and Ezekiel's vision of the restored temple. Jesus's peace declaration (14:27) contrasts with the world's shalom and connects to Isaiah's 'Prince of Peace' (Isaiah 9:6).

¹Do not let your hearts be troubled. You believe in God; believe also in me. ²In my Father's house are many rooms. If it were not so, would I have told you that I am going to prepare a place for you? ³And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and take you to myself, so that where I am, you also may be. ⁴And you know the way to where I am going. ⁵Thomas said to him, "Lord, we do not know where you are going. How can we know the way?" ⁶Jesus said to him, "I am the way, and the truth, and the life. No one comes to the Father except through me. ⁷If you have known me, you will also know my Father. From now on you do know him and have seen him." ⁸Philip said to him, "Lord, show us the Father, and it is enough for us." ⁹Jesus said to him, "Have I been with you so long, and you still do not know me, Philip? Whoever has seen me has seen the Father. How can you say, 'Show us the Father'?" ¹⁰Do you not believe that I am in the Father and the Father is in me? The words that I say to you I do not speak on my own, but the Father who dwells in me does his works. ¹¹Believe me that I am in the Father and the Father is in me, or else believe on account of the works themselves. ¹²Truly, truly, I say to you, whoever believes in me will also do the works that I do, and will do greater works than these, because I am going to the Father. ¹³Whatever you ask in my name, I will do it, so that the Father may be glorified in the Son. ¹⁴If you ask me anything in my name, I will do it. ¹⁵If you love me, you will keep my commandments. ¹⁶And I will ask the Father, and he will give you another Advocate, to be with you forever — ¹⁷Even the Spirit of truth. Whom the world cannot accept, because it sees him not, neither knows him — but you know him. Since he dwelleth with you, and will be in you. ¹⁸I will not leave you as orphans. I am coming to you. ¹⁹In a little while the world will no longer see me, but you will see me. Because I live, you also will live. ²⁰On that day you will know that I am in my Father, and you in me, and I in you. ²¹Whoever has my commandments and keeps them is the one who loves me. And whoever loves me will be loved by my Father, and I will love him and reveal myself to him." ²²Judas (not Iscariot) said to him, "Lord, what has happened that you are going to reveal yourself to us and not to the world?" ²³Jesus answered him, "If anyone loves me, he will keep my word, and my Father will love him, and we will come to him and make our home with him. ²⁴Whoever does not love me does not keep my words. And the word that you hear is not mine but the Father's who sent me. ²⁵These things I have spoken to you while remaining with you. ²⁶But the Advocate, the Holy Spirit, whom the Father will send in my name, will teach you all things and bring to your remembrance all that I have said to you. ²⁷Peace I leave with you; my peace I give to you. Not as the world gives do I give to you. Do not let your hearts be troubled, and do not be afraid. ²⁸You heard me say to you, 'I am going away, and I am coming to you.' If you loved me, you would rejoice that I am going to the Father, because the Father is greater than I. ²⁹And now I have told you before it takes place, so that when it does take place you may believe. ³⁰I will no longer speak much with you, for the ruler of this world is coming. He has no power over me, ³¹However, that the world may know that I love the Father. And as the Father offered me commandment, even so I do. Arise, let us go hence.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The verb tarassestho ('be troubled, be agitated') is the same word used of Jesus himself in 11:33 and 13:21. The imperative can be read as either indicative-then-imperative ('you believe in God; believe also in me') or as two imperatives ('believe in God, and believe in me'). The Greek is ambiguous; we follow the more traditional reading that takes the first clause as indicative.

2. The Greek monai ('dwelling places, rooms') has been famously rendered 'mansions' in the KJV, following the Latin Vulgate's mansiones. The Greek word carries no connotation of grandeur; it simply means 'abiding places' or 'rooms,' from the verb meno ('to remain, abide'), a key Johannine term. The punctuation of this verse is debated: some take 'I go to prepare a place for you' as a statement, others as part of the preceding question. We follow the reading that takes the final clause as part of the rhetorical question.
3. The verb paralempomai ('take to myself, receive') implies personal accompaniment, not merely granting access. The promise 'where I am, you also may be' is the heart of Johannine eschatology — the goal of salvation is being with Jesus. Whether this refers to his return at death, at the resurrection, or at the parousia has been debated since the earliest centuries.
4. Some manuscripts read 'you know where I am going, and you know the way,' which the KJV follows. The SBLGNT follows the shorter reading, which is more likely original and sets up Thomas's question in verse 5 more naturally.
5. Thomas's honest confusion mirrors the recurring Johannine pattern of misunderstanding that leads to deeper revelation. His question provokes one of the Gospel's most important declarations. Thomas appears elsewhere in John as a figure of honest doubt (11:16, 20:24-29).
6. This is the sixth of John's seven great ego eimi ('I am') declarations. The three nouns — hodos ('way'), aletheia ('truth'), zoe ('life') — may be read as three coordinate claims or as a single claim with two appositional qualifiers: 'I am the way, that is, the truth and the life.' The definite articles before each noun are emphatic: not a way but the way. The exclusivity clause ('no one comes to the Father except through me') is absolute in the Greek and we render it without softening.
7. The textual tradition is divided between a contrary-to-fact condition ('if you had known me, you would have known') and a fulfilled condition ('if you have known me, you will know'). The SBLGNT follows the latter reading, which is more encouraging than rebuking. The claim that they have 'seen' the Father through knowing Jesus anticipates Philip's question in verse 8.
8. Philip's request echoes Moses's plea in Exodus 33:18 ('Show me your glory'). The verb deiknumi ('show, reveal') implies a visible manifestation. Philip has not yet grasped that seeing Jesus is seeing the Father — the central christological claim of the Fourth Gospel.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 33:18 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The statement 'whoever has seen me has seen the Father' (ho heorakos eme heoraken ton patera) is one of the highest christological claims in the New Testament. The perfect tense heoraken implies a completed seeing with continuing results. Jesus is not merely a representative of God but the visible manifestation of the invisible Father (cf. Colossians 1:15).
10. The mutual indwelling formula — 'I in the Father and the Father in me' — is a distinctive Johannine expression of the unity between Father and Son. The verb meno ('dwell, abide, remain') is one of John's most important theological terms. Jesus grounds his claim not in abstract theology but in observable evidence: his words and works are the Father's own activity.
11. Jesus offers two grounds for faith: his word and his works. The appeal to works as evidence recalls 10:38 and anticipates the theme of signs throughout John. The concessive 'or else' (ei de me) acknowledges that direct trust in his word is the higher form of faith, while trust based on evidence is still valid.
12. The double amen ('truly, truly') is a distinctive Johannine formula that introduces solemn declarations. The promise of 'greater works' (meizona touton) is striking — greater than Jesus's own miracles. The 'because' clause (hoti) ties the greater works to Jesus's departure: his going to the Father enables the sending of the Spirit, which empowers the disciples' mission.
13. Asking 'in my name' (en to onomati mou) is not a formula appended to prayers but denotes asking in accord with Jesus's character, mission, and authority. The purpose clause — 'so that the Father may be glorified in the Son' — defines the scope and aim of such prayer.
14. This verse repeats and reinforces the promise of verse 13. Some manuscripts omit 'me' (me), making the request directed to the Father rather than to Jesus. The SBLGNT includes it, placing Jesus as both the mediator and the one who acts.
15. The future indicative teresete ('you will keep') is preferable to reading this as an imperative ('keep'). Jesus states a fact about love's nature rather than issuing a command: genuine love for him will naturally express itself in obedience. This connection between love and obedience is a central theme of the Farewell Discourse.
16. The word Parakletos appears only in John's writings in the New Testament (here, 14:26, 15:26, 16:7, and 1 John 2:1). The KJV's 'Comforter' follows the Latin consolator but captures only one dimension. The Greek term has legal overtones ('advocate, one called alongside to help') and relational dimensions ('counselor, helper'). We render it 'Advocate' while acknowledging the broader range. The word allon ('another') implies one of the same kind — the Spirit is another Advocate like Jesus himself.
17. The 'Spirit of truth' (to pneuma tes aletheias) identifies the Advocate with truth itself — a key Johannine theme (cf. 'I am the truth,' 14:6). The contrast between the world's inability and the disciples' capacity to receive the Spirit is absolute. The shift from 'remains with you' (present tense, menei) to 'will be in you' (future, estai) marks a transition from the Spirit's presence alongside them during Jesus's ministry to the Spirit's indwelling after Pentecost.
18. The Greek orphanous ('orphans') is more specific than the KJV's 'comfortless.' The metaphor casts the disciples as children who would be fatherless without Jesus's continued presence. The present tense erchomai ('I am coming') conveys certainty and immediacy rather than a distant future event.

19. The contrast between the world and the disciples regarding 'seeing' Jesus extends beyond physical sight to spiritual perception. The declaration 'because I live, you also will live' compresses the entire Christian hope into a single sentence — the disciples' life depends on and flows from Jesus's resurrection life.
20. The mutual indwelling now extends beyond the Father-Son relationship (v. 10) to include the disciples: Father in Son, Son in believers, believers in Son. This threefold chain of indwelling is the Johannine vision of salvation — not merely forgiveness but participatory union. 'That day' likely refers to the post-resurrection encounters and the coming of the Spirit.
21. The chain of love is striking: the believer's love for Jesus expressed through obedience leads to the Father's love for the believer and Jesus's self-revelation. The verb emphaniso ('reveal, manifest, make visible') suggests a personal, experiential disclosure — not merely intellectual knowledge but encounter.
22. The parenthetical 'not Iscariot' distinguishes this Judas from the betrayer, who has already departed (13:30). This is likely the same as 'Judas son of James' in Luke 6:16. His question reflects the common expectation that the Messiah would manifest himself publicly to the entire world, not privately to a small group.
23. The word monen ('home, dwelling place') is the singular of the monai ('rooms') in verse 2. There, Jesus goes to prepare rooms in the Father's house for the disciples; here, the Father and Son come to make a dwelling within the believer. The movement is reciprocal: believers dwell in God's house, and God dwells in believers. The first-person plural 'we will come' (eleusometha) unites Father and Son in a single action toward the believer.
24. The negative counterpart to verse 23: failure to keep Jesus's words reveals the absence of love. The second clause reinforces the unity of Father and Son — rejecting Jesus's words is rejecting the Father's words. The shift from 'words' (logous, plural) to 'word' (logos, singular) may suggest that Jesus's individual sayings constitute a unified message.
25. The perfect tense lelaleka ('I have spoken') emphasizes the lasting significance of what has been said. The phrase 'while remaining with you' (par hymin menon) uses the key Johannine verb meno and marks the transition from Jesus's physical presence to the Spirit's coming ministry.
26. Here the Parakletos is explicitly identified as the Holy Spirit (to pneuma to hagion). The Spirit's twofold ministry is teaching and reminding — not introducing new content unrelated to Jesus but illuminating and recalling what Jesus has already taught. The Father sends the Spirit 'in Jesus's name' (en to onomati mou), meaning in Jesus's authority and as his representative.
27. The Greek eirene corresponds to the Hebrew shalom, which encompasses wholeness, well-being, and right relationship — far more than the absence of conflict. Jesus distinguishes his peace from the world's peace: the world offers temporary, conditional peace; Jesus offers a peace grounded in his relationship with the Father. The repetition of 'do not let your hearts be troubled' forms an inclusio with verse 1, framing the entire chapter. The verb deiliao ('be afraid, be cowardly') appears only here in the New Testament.
28. The statement 'the Father is greater than I' (ho pater meizon mou estin) has been one of the most debated verses in christological history. In context, Jesus speaks of his incarnate, pre-glorification state — his return to the Father is a return to glory, which should cause the disciples to rejoice. The statement does not necessarily address the ontological relationship between Father and Son but rather the functional relationship during the incarnation.
29. Jesus's foreknowledge serves a pastoral purpose: when the events of the crucifixion unfold, the disciples will remember his predictions and find their faith strengthened rather than destroyed. This pattern of prediction-fulfillment runs throughout John (cf. 13:19, 16:4).
30. The 'ruler of this world' (ho tou kosmou archon) refers to Satan (cf. 12:31, 16:11). The declaration 'he has nothing in me' (en emoi ouk echei ouden) means Satan has no claim, no foothold, no authority over Jesus. Jesus goes to the cross not as Satan's victim but voluntarily, as the next verse makes clear.
31. Jesus frames his approaching death as an act of obedient love toward the Father — the supreme demonstration that the world can see. The command 'Rise, let us go from here' (egeiresthe, agomen enteuthen) suggests a physical departure, yet the discourse continues through chapters 15-17. Some scholars propose that chapters 15-17 were originally spoken en route to Gethsemane; others see a literary rather than geographical transition.

Summary: John 15 continues Jesus's farewell discourse with the extended metaphor of the vine and the branches, calling his disciples to remain connected to him as the condition for bearing fruit. The chapter moves from the intimacy of abiding love to the gravity of the world's hatred, culminating in the promise of the Spirit of truth who will testify about Jesus.

What Makes This Remarkable: *The vine metaphor draws on deep Old Testament imagery where Israel is God's vineyard (Isaiah 5:1-7, Psalm 80:8-16, Jeremiah 2:21). Jesus's claim 'I am the true vine' redirects this identity to himself — he is now the locus of covenant fruitfulness. The 'no greater love' declaration in verse 13 becomes one of the most recognized statements in all of Scripture. The Greek meno ('abide, remain') appears eleven times in verses 4-10, creating a literary drumbeat of relational* permanence.

Translation Friction: The relationship between 'abiding' (meno) and fruitfulness raises theological questions about whether the branches that are 'taken away' (v. 2) represent genuine believers who fall away or those who were never truly connected. We render the Greek without resolving this debate. The phrase 'I chose you' (v. 16) uses exelexamen, the same verb used for divine election in the Septuagint, but the context is specifically the Twelve's apostolic commission.

Connections: The vine imagery connects to Isaiah 5 (the vineyard song), Psalm 80 (Israel as vine), and Ezekiel 15 (the useless vine). The love command (vv. 12-17) intensifies the 'new commandment' of 13:34. The world's hatred (vv. 18-25) prepares for the persecution themes of chapter 16. The Paraclete promise (vv. 26-27) continues the Spirit passages of 14:16-17 and 14:26.

¹"I am the true vine, and my Father is the vinedresser. ²Every branch in me that does not bear fruit, he removes, and every branch that bears fruit, he prunes so that it may bear more fruit. ³You are already clean because of the word I have spoken to you. ⁴Remain in me, and I will remain in you. Just as the branch cannot bear fruit by itself unless it remains in the vine, neither can you unless you remain in me. ⁵I am the vine; you are the branches. Whoever remains in me, and I in him, bears much fruit, because apart from me you can do nothing. ⁶If anyone does not remain in me, he is thrown out like a branch and withers. Such branches are gathered, thrown into the fire, and burned. ⁷If you remain in me and my words remain in you, ask whatever you wish, and it will be done for you. ⁸My Father is glorified by this: that you bear much fruit and so prove to be my disciples. ⁹As the Father has loved me, so I have loved you. Remain in my love. ¹⁰If you keep my commandments, you will remain in my love, just as I have kept my Father's commandments and remain in his love. ¹¹I have told you these things so that my joy may be in you, and your joy may be made complete. ¹²As I have loved you, this was my commandment, That you love one another. ¹³No one has greater love than this: to lay down his life for his friends. ¹⁴You are my friends if you do what I command you. ¹⁵I no longer call you servants, because a servant does not know what his master is doing. Instead, I have called you friends, because everything I have heard from my Father I have made known to you. ¹⁶You did not choose me, but I chose you and appointed you so that you would go and bear fruit — fruit that will last — so that whatever you ask the Father in my name, he will give you. ¹⁷These things I command you, so that you may love one another. ¹⁸You know that it hated me before it hated you, and if the world hate you. ¹⁹If you belonged to the world, the world would love its own. But because you do not belong to the world — because I chose you out of the world — for this reason the world hates you. ²⁰Remember the word I spoke to you: 'A servant is not greater than his master.' If they persecuted me, they will persecute you as well. If they kept my word, they will keep yours also. ²¹But they will do all these things to you on account of my name, because they do not know the one who sent me. ²²If I had not come and spoken to them, they would not be guilty of sin. But now they have no excuse for their sin. ²³The one who hates me hates my Father also. ²⁴If I had not done among them the works that no one else has done, they would not be guilty of sin. But now they have seen and yet hated both me and my Father. ²⁵But this is to fulfill the word written in their Law: 'They hated me without cause.' ²⁶When the Advocate comes, whom I will send to you from the Father — the Spirit of truth who proceeds from the Father — he will testify about me. ²⁷And you also will testify, because you have been with me from the beginning."

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. This is the last of John's seven 'I am' (ego eimi) declarations with a predicate. The adjective alethinee ('true, genuine') distinguishes Jesus from Israel as the failed vine of Old Testament imagery (Isaiah 5:1-7, Jeremiah 2:21). The Greek georgos ('farmer, vinedresser') is more specific than the KJV's 'husbandman' — it denotes one who tends and cultivates the land, here specifically a vineyard keeper.
1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 5:1-7. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Jeremiah 2:21. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
2. There is a wordplay in the Greek between airei ('takes away, lifts up') and kathairei ('prunes, cleanses'). Some scholars argue airei should be translated 'lifts up' (as a vinedresser lifts trailing branches off the ground), but the context of removal versus pruning favors 'removes.' The verb kathairei is the root of katharos ('clean'), connecting to Jesus's statement in verse 3.

3. The adjective katharoi ('clean') connects to kathairei ('prunes/cleanses') in verse 2 — the disciples have already undergone a cleansing through Jesus's word. This also echoes 13:10 where Jesus told the disciples 'you are clean' after washing their feet. The logos ('word') here encompasses the entirety of Jesus's teaching, not a single statement.
4. The verb meno ('remain, abide, stay') appears here for the first of eleven uses in verses 4-10, forming the thematic center of the passage. The imperative meinate ('remain!') is an aorist command implying decisive, sustained commitment. The mutual indwelling ('in me... I in you') echoes the Father-Son mutual indwelling of 14:10-11 and extends it to the disciples.
5. The absolute claim choris emou ou dynasthe poein ouden ('apart from me you can do nothing') is among the most radical statements of dependence in the New Testament. The word choris ('apart from, separated from') reinforces the vine metaphor — a severed branch is not merely weakened but wholly incapable of producing fruit.
6. The aorist tenses eblethee ('was thrown out') and exeranthee ('withered') are striking — they describe the result as already accomplished, giving the warning a sense of finality. The impersonal 'they gather' (synagousin) avoids naming who performs this judgment. The imagery of fire for useless branches reflects standard Palestinian viticultural practice and echoes John the Baptist's warning in Matthew 3:10.
7. The promise of answered prayer is conditioned on a double remaining: the disciple in Christ and Christ's words (reemata, 'spoken words, sayings') in the disciple. This is not a blank check but a promise that those whose desires are shaped by Jesus's teaching will find their prayers aligned with God's will and therefore answered.
8. The aorist edoxasthee ('was glorified') could be rendered as a timeless truth ('is glorified') in English since the aorist here expresses a general principle. The conjunction kai before genesthe could mean 'and' (additional result) or 'and so' (consequential). We render it as consequential — bearing fruit is the proof of discipleship, not a separate item alongside it.
9. The comparison kathos ('just as, in the same way as') establishes that Jesus's love for his disciples is patterned on the Father's love for the Son — the same quality, not merely a lesser imitation. The imperative meinate ('remain!') shifts from the vine metaphor to love itself as the sphere in which disciples are to dwell.
10. Obedience to commandments (entolas) is presented not as the means of earning love but as the means of remaining within the sphere of love already given. The perfect tense teteereka ('I have kept and continue to keep') emphasizes Jesus's completed and ongoing obedience to the Father. This parallels the covenantal pattern of the Old Testament where obedience is the response to grace, not its cause.
11. The Greek pleerothee ('may be fulfilled, made complete') suggests joy brought to its full capacity, not merely increased. Jesus speaks of 'my joy' (hee chara hee emee) — the joy that belongs to him and originates from his relationship with the Father — being transferred to the disciples. This is not human happiness but divine joy shared.
12. The singular entolee ('commandment') reduces all of Jesus's commands to a single imperative. The standard of love is not abstract but personal — kathos eegapeesa hymas ('as I have loved you'). This intensifies the 'new commandment' of 13:34 by anchoring it in the self-sacrificial love Jesus is about to demonstrate on the cross.
13. The Greek psycheen ('soul, life') here means one's entire existence, not merely biological life. The verb thee ('to lay down, to place') is the same word used in 10:11, 15, 17-18 for the Good Shepherd laying down his life for the sheep. Jesus defines the supreme expression of love and is about to enact it. The word philon ('friends') anticipates verse 15 where Jesus redefines the disciples' status from servants to friends.
14. The conditional ean poieete ('if you do') uses the present subjunctive, indicating ongoing action — 'if you continue doing.' Friendship with Jesus is not unconditional in the sense of requiring no response; it is maintained through obedience. The concept of being 'friends of God' has deep Old Testament roots — Abraham was called 'friend of God' (2 Chronicles 20:7, Isaiah 41:8).
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes 2 Chronicles 20:7. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 41:8. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The Greek doulos ('slave, servant') denotes one who serves without understanding the master's purposes. The shift from douloi to philo ('friends') is a dramatic elevation — friends are confidants who share in the master's knowledge. The perfect tense egnorisa ('I have made known') indicates a completed act of revelation. Jesus's entire ministry has been an act of sharing the Father's counsel with his disciples.
16. The verb exelexameen ('I chose') is the same word used in the Septuagint for God's election of Israel (Deuteronomy 7:6-7). The verb etheka ('I appointed, placed, set') is stronger than the KJV's 'ordained' — it carries the sense of deliberate commissioning. The purpose clause contains three elements: going (mission), bearing fruit (productivity), and fruit that remains (permanence). The prayer promise is tied to this fruitfulness.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Deuteronomy 7:6-7. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. This verse serves as a closing bracket to the love section (vv. 9-17), echoing the command of verse 12. The hina clause ('so that') could indicate purpose ('in order that you may love') or content ('namely, that you love'). The effect is the same: mutual love among disciples is both the goal and the substance of Jesus's commands.
18. The conditional ei with the indicative misei ('hates') presents the world's hatred as a real condition, not a hypothetical. The Greek ginooskete could be indicative ('you know') or imperative ('know!'). The imperative reading fits the context better — Jesus is commanding awareness, not merely acknowledging what they already understand. The perfect memiseeken ('has hated') indicates an ongoing state of enmity.

19. The phrase ek tou kosmou ('out of/from the world') appears five times in this single verse, creating an emphatic contrast between belonging and separation. The verb exelexameen ('I chose') again echoes divine election language. The word idion ('its own') indicates that the world recognizes and embraces what belongs to it — the disciples' rejection proves they no longer belong to the world system.
20. Jesus refers back to 13:16 where he made this statement in the context of foot-washing. The parallel structure ('if they persecuted me... if they kept my word') presents both outcomes as real possibilities within different groups of people. The verb ediooksan ('persecuted') and eteereesan ('kept/obeyed') represent the two responses the world gives to divine truth.
21. The phrase dia to onoma mou ('on account of my name') indicates that persecution comes not because of who the disciples are but because of whom they represent. The verb oidasin ('they know') uses the perfect form of oida, meaning intuitive or relational knowledge — the persecutors lack not merely information about God but genuine knowledge of him.
22. The Greek hamartian ouk eichosan ('they would not have sin') does not mean they were sinless before Jesus came, but that they would not bear the specific guilt of rejecting God's self-revelation. The word prophasin ('excuse, pretext') — rendered 'cloak' in the KJV — means a justification or defense. Jesus's coming has removed all plausible deniability.
23. This brief statement encapsulates Johannine Christology: Jesus and the Father are so united that one's response to Jesus is necessarily one's response to God. Hatred of Jesus cannot be separated from hatred of God himself.
24. Verse 22 addressed the witness of Jesus's words; this verse addresses the witness of his works (erga). The perfect tenses heorakasin ('they have seen') and memiseekasin ('they have hated') describe settled states — they have witnessed the evidence and have chosen enmity. The claim that these are works 'no one else has done' heightens the culpability of rejection.
25. The quotation is from Psalm 35:19 or 69:4 (both contain the phrase). Jesus refers to the Psalms as 'their Law' (to nomos auton), using 'Law' in its broad sense to encompass all of Scripture. The word dorean ('without cause, freely, for no reason') emphasizes the gratuitous nature of the hatred — there is no rational basis for it.
25. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalms 35:19 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
26. The Greek parakletos ('advocate, helper, counselor') is rendered 'Advocate' to capture its forensic meaning — one who comes alongside to defend and represent. The KJV's 'Comforter' reflects an older English sense of 'one who strengthens' but has lost that meaning in modern usage. The phrase 'who proceeds from the Father' (ho para tou patros ekporeuetai) became theologically significant in the later filioque controversy between Eastern and Western Christianity. The masculine pronoun ekeinos ('he') is used for the Spirit, despite pneuma being neuter in Greek — this personalizes the Spirit.
27. The verb martyreite could be indicative ('you testify') or imperative ('testify!'). Either reading works — the disciples both will and should bear witness. The phrase ap' archees ('from the beginning') refers to the beginning of Jesus's public ministry, establishing the disciples as eyewitnesses. Their testimony alongside the Spirit's testimony creates a dual witness as required by Jewish law (Deuteronomy 19:15).
27. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Deuteronomy 19:15. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.

Summary: John 16 continues and concludes the farewell discourse. Jesus warns the disciples of coming persecution, then explains that his departure is necessary for the Advocate (the Spirit of truth) to come. He describes the Spirit's work of convicting the world and guiding the disciples into all truth. Jesus then uses the metaphor of a woman in labor to describe the transition from sorrow to joy, promises direct access to the Father in prayer, and closes with the declaration 'I have overcome the world.'

What Makes This Remarkable: *The Paraclete teaching reaches its fullest development in this chapter: the Spirit will convict the world (v. 8), guide into all truth (v. 13), and glorify Jesus (v. 14). The labor metaphor (vv. 21-22) draws on prophetic imagery of Zion's birth pangs (Isaiah 26:17-18, 66:7-8). The climactic declaration 'I have overcome the world' (v. 33) uses the perfect tense nenikeeka, indicating a victory already accomplished even before the cross — an extraordinary claim at the moment of Jesus's greatest apparent vulnerability.*

Translation Friction: *The precise meaning of the Spirit 'convicting' (elenchei) the world regarding sin, righteousness, and judgment (vv. 8-11) has been debated extensively. The Greek elegchein can mean 'convict, expose, reprove, or prove wrong.' We render the verb and let the explanatory clauses speak for themselves. The phrase 'a little while' (mikron) in verses 16-19 is deliberately ambiguous — it could refer to the crucifixion/resurrection gap, the ascension, or the parousia.*

Connections: The persecution warnings connect to 15:18-25 and look forward to the early church's experience in Acts. The Paraclete promises continue from 14:16-17, 14:26, and 15:26-27. The 'little while' language echoes Isaiah 26:20. The labor metaphor draws on the prophetic tradition of eschatological birth pangs. The 'I have overcome' declaration connects to Revelation's conquering language (Revelation 2-3, 5:5).

¹"I have told you these things so that you will not fall away. ²They will expel you from the synagogues. In fact, an hour is coming when everyone who kills you will think he is offering service to God. ³They will do these things because they have not known the Father or me. ⁴But I have told you these things so that when their hour comes you will remember that I told you about them. I did not tell you these things from the beginning because I was with you. ⁵But now I am going to the one who sent me, and none of you asks me, 'Where are you going?' ⁶But because I have told you these things, sorrow has filled your hearts. ⁷But I am telling you the truth: it is to your advantage that I go away. For if I do not go away, the Advocate will not come to you. But if I go, I will send him to you. ⁸When he comes, he will convict the world regarding sin, righteousness, and judgment: ⁹Of sin, because they trust in not on me; ¹⁰about righteousness, because I am going to the Father and you will no longer see me; ¹¹Of the time of reckoning, because the prince of this world is judged. ¹²I still have many things to tell you, but you cannot bear them now. ¹³But when he comes, the Spirit of truth, he will guide you into all the truth. For he will not speak on his own authority, but whatever he hears he will speak, and he will declare to you the things that are to come. ¹⁴He will glorify me, because he will take what is mine and declare it to you. ¹⁵Everything the Father has is mine. That is why I said that he takes what is mine and will declare it to you. ¹⁶A little while, and you will no longer see me. Then again a little while, and you will see me." ¹⁷Some of his disciples said to one another, "What is this that he is telling us: 'A little while, and you will not see me, and then again a little while, and you will see me'? And, 'Because I am going to the Father'?" ¹⁸They kept saying, "What is this 'little while' he is talking about? We do not understand what he is saying." ¹⁹Jesus knew that they wanted to ask him, so he said to them, "Are you discussing with one another what I meant by saying, 'A little while, and you will not see me, and then again a little while, and you will see me'? ²⁰Truly, truly, I tell you, you will weep and mourn, but the world will rejoice. You will be sorrowful, but your sorrow will be turned into joy. ²¹When a woman is giving birth, she has pain because her hour has come. But when she has delivered the baby, she no longer remembers the anguish, because of the joy that a person has been born into the world. ²²So you also have sorrow now, but I will see you again, and your hearts will rejoice, and no one will take your joy from you. ²³In that day you will ask me nothing. Truly, truly, I tell you, whatever you ask the Father in my name, he will give you. ²⁴Until now you have asked for nothing in my name. Ask, and you will receive, so that your joy may be made complete. ²⁵I have said these things to you in figures of speech. An hour is coming when I will no longer speak to you in figures of speech, but will tell you plainly about the Father. ²⁶In that day you will ask in my name, and I am not saying that I will ask the Father on your behalf, ²⁷And have believed that I came out from God, because the Father himself loveth you, because you have loved me. ²⁸I came from the Father and have come into the world. Now I am leaving the world and going to the Father." ²⁹His disciples said, "Now you are speaking plainly and not using figures of speech! ³⁰Now we know that you know all things and do not need anyone to question you. By this we believe that you came from God." ³¹Jesus responded them, Do you now believe? ³²Look, an hour is coming — and has come — when you will be scattered, each to his own home, and you will leave me alone. Yet I am not alone, because the Father is with me. ³³I have told you these things so that in me you may have peace. In the world you have tribulation. But take courage — I have overcome the world."

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The verb skandalisthete ('be caused to stumble, fall away') is stronger than the KJV's 'offended.' It means to be tripped up in faith, to abandon one's commitment. The word skandalon originally referred to the trigger of a trap. Jesus's warnings about persecution are meant to inoculate the disciples against the shock that could destroy their faith.
2. The term aposynagougous ('expelled from the synagogue') appears only in John (9:22, 12:42, 16:2) and refers to formal exclusion from the Jewish community — a devastating social and religious penalty. The phrase latreian prospheerein ('offering service/worship') is cultic language — those who kill the disciples will regard it as an act of religious worship. This reflects the historical reality of zealous persecution.

3. The aorist egnosan ('they knew') points to a fundamental failure of recognition rather than a temporary misunderstanding. The persecutors' ignorance of both the Father and Jesus is presented as the root cause of religious violence — they are acting in the name of a God they do not actually know.
4. The phrase hee hora auton ('their hour') parallels the language of Jesus's own 'hour' throughout John (2:4, 7:30, 12:23, 13:1). As Jesus has his hour appointed by the Father, so the persecutors have their hour permitted by God. The explanation for not telling them earlier — 'because I was with you' — implies that Jesus's physical presence provided the protection that the Spirit's presence will provide after his departure.
5. This statement seems to contradict 13:36 (Peter asked 'Where are you going?') and 14:5 (Thomas's question). The point is that now, overwhelmed by grief (v. 6), the disciples have stopped asking the right question. They are consumed by sorrow over the departure rather than curiosity about the destination — which would have led to hope.
6. The perfect tense pepleeroken ('has filled') describes sorrow as having completely occupied their hearts — leaving no room for the hope Jesus is trying to communicate. The Greek lypee ('grief, sorrow, pain') refers to deep emotional distress, not mere sadness.
7. The verb sympherei ('it is advantageous, it is better for') is a strong claim — Jesus asserts that his physical absence is better for the disciples than his physical presence. This is because the Spirit's presence will be universal and internal rather than localized and external. The paradox is startling: the incarnate presence of God will be replaced by something even more beneficial.
8. The verb elenxei ('will convict, prove wrong, expose') is forensic language — the Spirit acts as a prosecutor demonstrating guilt. The three charges — sin, righteousness, and judgment — are explained in the following verses. The KJV's 'reprove' is weaker than the Greek, which implies successful conviction, not merely accusation.
9. Sin is defined here not as moral failure in general but specifically as unbelief — the refusal to trust in Jesus. This is consistent with John's theology throughout the Gospel, where believing or not believing in Jesus is the fundamental human decision (3:18, 3:36, 5:24).
10. The logic is compressed: Jesus's departure to the Father vindicates his righteousness (dikaio synees). The world judged Jesus as a sinner and criminal, but his return to the Father proves the world's verdict wrong. The Spirit will expose this — the one the world condemned was in fact the Righteous One.
11. The perfect tense kekritai ('has been judged') indicates that the ruler of this world (ho archon tou kosmou toutou) has already been condemned — the verdict is settled even before the cross. This echoes 12:31 ('now the ruler of this world will be cast out'). The Spirit convicts the world that its ruler has lost, and therefore the world's system of values stands condemned.
12. The verb bastazein ('to bear, carry, endure') suggests that the additional truths would be too heavy for the disciples in their current state of grief and incomprehension. Jesus exercises pastoral restraint — revelation is given in accordance with the disciples' capacity to receive it.
13. The verb hodegesei ('will guide') pictures the Spirit as a guide leading travelers along a path. The phrase en tee aleetheia pasee ('into all the truth') uses the article — 'the truth' — indicating the full truth about Jesus and his significance, not abstract omniscience. The Spirit's dependence on what he 'hears' parallels Jesus's own dependence on the Father (5:30, 8:28). The phrase ta erchomena ('the things coming') refers to future events and their meaning.
14. The Spirit's primary work is Christocentric — he glorifies Jesus, not himself. The verb leempsetsai ('will take, receive') indicates that the Spirit's teaching content comes from Jesus. This establishes a chain of revelation: Father to Son to Spirit to disciples.
15. The claim panta hosa echei ho pateer ema estin ('everything the Father has is mine') is one of the most sweeping claims of unity with the Father in the Gospel. Because the Father and Son share everything, the Spirit's drawing from Jesus is simultaneously drawing from the Father. The revelation chain is unbroken.
16. The SBLGNT does not include the final clause 'because I go to the Father' (hoti hypago pros ton patera), which is present in some manuscripts and in the KJV. We follow the critical text. The word mikron ('a little while') is deliberately enigmatic, creating the confusion the disciples express in the next verses. The two different verbs for 'see' — theoreite (present, continuous observation) and opsesthe (future, experiential seeing) — may indicate different qualities of perception.
17. The disciples quote Jesus back to one another, trying to understand his meaning. Their confusion is characteristic of the Johannine misunderstanding motif, where characters take Jesus's words at face value and miss the deeper meaning (cf. 3:4, 4:15, 6:52). The phrase 'because I am going to the Father' appears in the disciples' quotation even though the SBLGNT omits it from verse 16 — suggesting they are combining statements from different points in the discourse.
18. The imperfect elegon ('they kept saying') indicates repeated, ongoing discussion — the disciples are turning the phrase over among themselves without resolution. Their honest confession ouk oidamen ('we do not know/understand') echoes a persistent theme in John where the disciples struggle to comprehend Jesus's teaching until after the resurrection (cf. 2:22, 12:16).
19. The verb egnou ('knew') indicates Jesus's supernatural awareness of their thoughts, a recurring feature in John (1:48, 2:24-25, 6:64). The verb eethelohn ('they wanted') suggests they desired to ask but were too confused or intimidated to voice the question directly.
20. The double ameen ('truly, truly') signals a solemn and authoritative declaration. The three pairs — weeping/mourning, world rejoicing/disciples sorrowing, sorrow/joy — create a carefully structured prophecy of the crucifixion-to-resurrection reversal. The phrase eis charan geneesetai ('will become into joy') means not that sorrow will be replaced by joy but that the very sorrow itself will be transformed into joy — the same event (the cross) that causes grief will become the source of joy.

- 21. The phrase 'her hour has come' (eelthen hee hora autees) deliberately echoes the language of Jesus's own 'hour' (12:23, 13:1, 17:1), connecting the woman's suffering to Jesus's passion. The Greek anthropos ('a person, a human being') rather than a more specific term gives the birth a universal quality. The prophetic tradition uses labor imagery for the suffering that precedes divine deliverance (Isaiah 26:17-18, 66:7-8, Micah 4:9-10).
- 21. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 26:17-18. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
- 21. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Micah 4:9-10. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
- 22. The application of the labor metaphor is direct: the disciples' current sorrow corresponds to labor pains, and Jesus's return (the resurrection) corresponds to the birth that transforms pain into joy. The promise 'no one will take your joy from you' (teen charan hymoon oudeis airei aph hymoon) uses the present tense airei, suggesting that this joy, once given, is permanently beyond anyone's power to remove.
- 23. The Greek uses two different verbs for 'ask': erooteesete ('ask a question, inquire') and aiteesete ('ask for, request, petition'). In that day — the post-resurrection era — the disciples will no longer need to question Jesus for understanding (the Spirit will guide them), and their prayers to the Father in Jesus's name will be answered. 'In my name' (en to onomati mou) means by his authority and in alignment with his character, not as a magic formula.
- 24. The adverb heos arti ('until now') marks a turning point — a new era of prayer in Jesus's name is about to begin. The connection between prayer, answered requests, and complete joy (pepleeromenee, 'having been made full') echoes 15:11. The imperative aiteite ('ask!') is a present tense command implying ongoing, habitual practice.
- 25. The Greek paroimiais ('proverbs, figures of speech, riddles') is broader than 'proverbs' — it includes any indirect or veiled speech. The contrast with parresia ('plainly, openly, with boldness') promises a shift from enigmatic teaching to direct revelation. This shift is associated with the coming of the Spirit (v. 13) who will make plain what Jesus taught in veiled terms.
- 26. This verse has been misread as Jesus saying he will not intercede (contradicting Romans 8:34 and 1 John 2:1). The point is rather that direct intercession will not be the primary dynamic — the disciples will have their own direct access to the Father. Jesus is not denying his intercessory role but emphasizing the Father's direct love for the disciples.
- 27. The verb philei ('loves') here is the word for personal, affectionate love rather than agapao. The Father's love for the disciples is warm and intimate. The perfect tenses pephileekate ('you have loved') and pepisteukate ('you have believed') indicate ongoing states that began in the past. The phrase para tou theou ('from God, from the presence of God') asserts Jesus's divine origin.
- 28. This verse summarizes the entire Johannine Christology in four movements: origin (from the Father), incarnation (into the world), departure (leaving the world), and return (to the Father). The chiasmic structure (Father world world Father) frames Jesus's earthly ministry as a round trip from and back to the Father's presence.
- 29. The disciples' enthusiasm is somewhat premature — they think they have achieved the understanding Jesus promised for 'that day' (v. 25), but Jesus will immediately challenge this confidence (v. 31). The irony is characteristic of John: the disciples claim clarity at the very moment they are about to demonstrate their confusion by abandoning Jesus.
- 30. The disciples' confession oidamen ('we know') and pisteuomen ('we believe') represents genuine but still immature faith. Jesus's knowledge of their unspoken questions (v. 19) has convinced them of his omniscience and divine origin. Yet the faith expressed here will be severely tested within hours.
- 31. The question arti pisteuete could be read as a statement ('Now you believe') or a question ('Do you now believe?'). The interrogative reading fits better with the following prediction of their scattering. The adverb arti ('now, at this moment') carries a note of irony — their belief is real but about to be tested by catastrophic events.
- 32. The verb skorpisthete ('be scattered') echoes Zechariah 13:7 ('Strike the shepherd, and the sheep will be scattered'), which Jesus quotes in the Synoptic accounts (Matthew 26:31, Mark 14:27). The phrase eis ta idia ('to his own things/home') is the same expression used in the Prologue (1:11, 'his own'). The juxtaposition of abandonment by the disciples and the Father's continued presence demonstrates that Jesus faces the cross in conscious reliance on the Father.
- 32. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Zechariah 13:7. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
- 33. The contrast is spatial: 'in me' (en emoi) peace; 'in the world' (en to kosmo) tribulation. The imperative tharseite ('take courage, be of good cheer') is a command, not a suggestion. The perfect tense nenikeeka ('I have overcome') is extraordinary — Jesus speaks of his victory as already accomplished before the cross. This is not future hope but present reality declared in advance. The verb nikao ('to conquer, overcome') becomes a key term in Revelation for the victory of Christ and his followers.

Summary: John 17 records Jesus's extended prayer to the Father, traditionally called the 'High Priestly Prayer.' It is the longest recorded prayer of Jesus in the Gospels. The prayer moves in three concentric circles: Jesus prays for himself and the completion of his mission (vv. 1-5), for his immediate disciples (vv. 6-19), and for all future believers (vv. 20-26). The dominant themes are glory, unity, protection, sanctification, and the revelation of the Father's name.

What Makes This Remarkable: This prayer is unique in the Gospel tradition — nowhere else do we hear Jesus pray at such length and with such theological depth. The opening petition 'Glorify your Son' (v. 1) reverses normal prayer convention where the petitioner glorifies God; here the Son asks the Father to glorify him, revealing the mutual glorification within the Godhead. The prayer's Christology is extraordinarily high: Jesus speaks of glory shared with the Father 'before the world existed' (v. 5), implying pre-existence. The unity prayer (vv. 21-23) grounds human unity in the divine unity of Father and Son — 'that they may be one, just as we are one.'

Translation Friction: The phrase 'eternal life is that they know you' (v. 3) redefines eternal life as relational knowledge rather than temporal duration. We render this without theological commentary. The 'son of destruction' (v. 12) is widely understood as referring to Judas, but the phrase itself (ho huios tees apoleias) is a Semitic idiom meaning 'one destined for destruction.' The prayer's placement before the arrest creates a literary tension — Jesus prays with serene authority while betrayal approaches.

Connections: The prayer connects to the Prologue (1:1-18) through its themes of glory, pre-existence, and the Father-Son relationship. The sanctification language (vv. 17-19) echoes the consecration of priests in Exodus 28-29. The unity theme anticipates the early church's struggle and hope (Acts 4:32, Ephesians 4:1-6). The 'I am not of the world' language (vv. 14-16) develops the farewell discourse's world/disciple contrast (15:18-19, 16:33).

¹After Jesus had spoken these things, he lifted up his eyes to heaven and said, "Father, the hour has come. Glorify your Son, so that the Son may glorify you, ²As you have given him authority over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as numerous as you have given him. ³And this is eternal life: that they know you, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom you have sent. ⁴I have glorified you on the earth by completing the work you gave me to do. ⁵And now, Father, glorify me in your own presence with the glory I had with you before the world existed. ⁶I have made your name known to the people you gave me out of the world. They were yours, and you gave them to me, and they have kept your word. ⁷Now they know that everything you have given me comes from you, ⁸For I have given to them the words which you gavest me. Then they have received them, and have known surely that I arrived out from you, then they have believed that you didst send me. ⁹I am praying for them. I am not praying for the world, but for those you have given me, because they are yours. ¹⁰All that is mine is yours, and all that is yours is mine, and I have been glorified in them. ¹¹I am no longer in the world, but they are in the world, and I am coming to you. Holy Father, keep them in your name, which you have given me, so that they may be one, just as we are one. ¹²While I was with them, I kept them in your name, which you have given me. I guarded them, and not one of them has been lost except the son of destruction, so that the Scripture might be fulfilled. ¹³But now I am coming to you, and I speak these things in the world so that they may have my joy made complete in themselves. ¹⁴I have given them your word. Even as i am not in the world, and the world has hated them, because they are not in the world. ¹⁵I am not asking that you take them out of the world, but that you keep them from the evil one. ¹⁶Even as i am not in the world, and they are not in the world. ¹⁷Sanctify them in the truth; your word is truth. ¹⁸Just as you sent me into the world, so I have sent them into the world. ¹⁹And for their sake I consecrate myself, so that they also may be sanctified in truth. ²⁰I am not asking on behalf of these alone, but also on behalf of those who will believe in me through their word, ²¹That they all may be one. As you, Father, art in me, and I in you, that they also may be one in us — that the world may trust that you have dispatched me. ²²The glory that you have given me I have given to them, so that they may be one just as we are one — ²³I in them and you in me, that they may be brought to complete unity, so that the world may know that you sent me and loved them just as you loved me. ²⁴Father, I desire that those you have given me may also be with me where I am, so that they may see my glory that you have given me, because you loved me before the foundation of the world. ²⁵Righteous Father, the world has not known you, but I have known you, and these have known that you sent me. ²⁶I have made your name known to them and will continue to make it known, so that the love with which you have loved me may be in them, and I in them."

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The gesture of lifting eyes to heaven (eparas tous ophthalmous eis ton ouranon) is a traditional Jewish prayer posture (cf. Psalm 123:1). The perfect tense eleelyhen ('has come') marks the arrival of the 'hour' that has been anticipated throughout the Gospel (2:4, 7:30, 8:20, 12:23, 13:1). The mutual glorification — Son glorifies Father, Father glorifies Son — reveals a reciprocal dynamic within the Godhead.
2. The phrase exousian pasees sarkos ('authority over all flesh') is a Semitic expression meaning authority over all humanity. The neuter singular pan ho ('everything that') is collective, referring to believers as a unified whole, while the plural autois ('to them') sees them as individuals. The Father gives people to the Son; the Son gives them eternal life — a chain of divine giving.
3. This verse redefines eternal life (aiōnios zōē) not as endless duration but as relational knowledge of God and Jesus Christ. The verb ginōskōsin (present subjunctive of ginōskō) indicates ongoing, deepening knowledge — not a one-time acquisition but a continual knowing. The phrase ton monon aleethinon theon ('the only true God') echoes the Shema (Deuteronomy 6:4) and the first commandment. The juxtaposition of knowing the Father and knowing Jesus Christ places Jesus alongside God as the co-object of saving knowledge.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Deuteronomy 6:4 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The aorist edoxasa ('I glorified') and the participle teleiōsas ('having completed') speak of Jesus's earthly mission as already finished — a proleptic perspective that views the cross as accomplished even before it occurs. The word teleiōsas shares its root with tetelestai ('It is finished,' 19:30), creating a verbal link between this prayer and the cross.
5. This is one of the strongest pre-existence claims in the New Testament. Jesus asks to be restored to the glory (tee doxee) he shared with the Father pro tou ton kosmon einai ('before the world existed'). The phrase para seautō ('in your own presence, at your own side') echoes the Prologue's pros ton theon ('with God,' 1:1). The prayer assumes that the incarnation involved a voluntary setting aside of divine glory, which is now to be resumed.
6. The verb ephanērōsa ('I revealed, manifested, made known') indicates that Jesus's entire ministry was an act of revealing the Father's name — his character, identity, and purposes. 'Name' (onoma) in Semitic thought encompasses the person's entire nature. The possessive chain — 'they were yours, you gave them to me' — emphasizes that the disciples belong first to the Father and are entrusted to the Son.
7. The perfect egnōkan ('they have come to know') indicates a settled conviction. The disciples have reached the understanding that Jesus's teaching, authority, and mission all originate with the Father — not from himself independently. This echoes the disciples' confession in 16:30.
8. The chain of transmission is explicit: Father gives words to Son, Son gives words to disciples, disciples receive them. The three verbs — elabon ('received'), egnōsan ('understood'), episteusan ('believed') — describe the progression of faith: reception, comprehension, and trust. The adverb alēthōs ('truly, genuinely') affirms the reality of their knowledge despite its limitations.
9. The limitation 'not for the world' (ou peri tou kosmou) does not mean Jesus has no concern for the world (cf. 3:16) but that this particular prayer focuses on the disciples who form the nucleus of the future community. The reason given — 'because they are yours' (hoti soi eisin) — grounds the petition in the Father's ownership of the disciples.
10. The mutual possession — 'mine is yours and yours is mine' — is a striking declaration of complete unity between Father and Son. The perfect passive dedoxasmai ('I have been glorified') in the disciples suggests that the disciples' faith and witness already constitute a glorification of Jesus, even before the cross.
11. The address pater hagio ('Holy Father') is unique in the New Testament — this combination appears nowhere else. The petition teerēson autous en tō onomati sou ('keep them in your name') asks the Father to protect the disciples within the sphere of his revealed character. The unity requested — 'that they may be one, just as we are' — sets the standard for human community at the level of the divine unity between Father and Son.
12. Two verbs describe Jesus's protective work: eteeroun ('I kept, watched over') and ephylaxa ('I guarded, protected'). The phrase ho huiois tees apōleias ('the son of destruction') is a Semitic idiom meaning 'one destined for or characterized by destruction.' The same phrase appears in 2 Thessalonians 2:3. The reference to Scripture being fulfilled likely points to Psalm 41:9 (quoted in 13:18) or Psalm 109:8.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalm 41:9. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalm 109:8. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.

13. Jesus prays aloud ('in the world') so the disciples can hear. The phrase teen charan teen emeen pepleerōmeneen ('my joy made complete') echoes 15:11 and 16:24. The joy Jesus offers is his own joy — the joy of his relationship with the Father — shared with the disciples and brought to fullness.
14. The logic is: receiving God's word alienates the disciples from the world-system, making them targets of hatred. The parallel 'just as I am not of the world' (kathōs egō ouk eimi ek tou kosmou) places the disciples' experience in direct parallel with Jesus's own rejection. The world's hatred is evidence of their belonging to God, not a sign of failure.
15. The phrase ek tou poneerou could mean 'from evil' (abstract) or 'from the evil one' (personal). Given John's references to the 'ruler of this world' (12:31, 14:30, 16:11), the personal reading is more likely. Jesus does not pray for escape from the world but for protection while remaining in it — the mission requires presence, not withdrawal.
16. This verse nearly repeats verse 14b, creating a frame around the petition in verse 15. The repetition emphasizes the foundational claim: the disciples' identity is defined by their origin ('not of the world') rather than their location (they remain in the world). This grounds both the world's hostility and the need for divine protection.
17. The verb hagiason ('sanctify, set apart, consecrate') is cultic language — the same verb used in the Septuagint for consecrating priests and offerings (Exodus 28:41, Leviticus 8:10-12). The disciples are being set apart for a sacred mission. The instrument of sanctification is truth (en tee aletheia), which is then identified with God's word (ho logos ho sos). Truth in John is not abstract proposition but the reality of God revealed through Jesus.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 28:41. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Leviticus 8:10-12. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. The verb aposteila ('I sent') is the root of apostolos ('apostle, sent one'). Jesus's mission becomes the model and mandate for the disciples' mission. The parallel is comprehensive: as the Father sent the Son into a hostile world, so the Son sends his followers into that same world. The mission is outward, not inward.
19. Jesus 'consecrates himself' (hagiazō emauton) — language that evokes a sacrifice being set apart for offering. The phrase hyper autōn ('for their sake, on their behalf') gives his self-consecration a substitutionary quality. Jesus sets himself apart for the cross so that the disciples might be set apart for mission. The shift from 'sanctify' (for the disciples in v. 17) to 'consecrate' (for Jesus here) reflects the sacrificial nuance of Jesus's self-dedication.
20. The prayer expands from the present disciples to all future believers — everyone who will come to faith through the apostolic witness. The present participle pisteuontōn ('those believing') envisions an ongoing community that extends through time. This verse makes every subsequent Christian a subject of Jesus's prayer.
21. The unity prayer has three layers: unity among believers ('that they may all be one'), participation in the divine life ('that they also may be in us'), and missional witness ('that the world may believe'). The standard for human unity is nothing less than the mutual indwelling of Father and Son. This is not organizational uniformity but relational oneness patterned on the Godhead.
22. The claim that Jesus has given his glory (teen doxan) to the disciples is remarkable. This glory is not the pre-incarnate glory of verse 5 but the glory revealed through the incarnation and the cross — the glory of self-giving love. Shared glory becomes the basis for unity: those who share in the same glory naturally share in one another.
23. The perfect participle teteleiōmenoi ('having been brought to completion, perfected') describes unity as a realized state, not merely an aspiration. The chain of indwelling — Jesus in the disciples, the Father in Jesus — creates a unity that has missional impact: the world will 'know' (ginōskee) God's sending of Jesus and God's love for the disciples. The astounding claim is that God loves the disciples kathos eme eegapeesas ('just as you loved me') — with the same quality of love he has for the Son.
24. The verb thelō ('I desire, I will') is unusually direct for prayer — Jesus does not merely ask but expresses his will to the Father, reflecting the intimacy and unity of their relationship. The phrase pro katabolees kosmou ('before the foundation of the world') reaches further back than verse 5 ('before the world existed'), grounding the Father's love for the Son in eternity. The ultimate destiny of believers is to see (theōrōsin) Jesus's full, unveiled glory — a beatific vision.
25. The address pater dikaie ('Righteous Father') shifts from 'Holy Father' (v. 11) — holiness related to the petition for protection, righteousness to the appeal for justice and vindication. Three levels of knowing are contrasted: the world does not know the Father at all, Jesus knows the Father directly, and the disciples know that the Father sent Jesus. The disciples' knowledge is mediated through Jesus.
26. The prayer ends with a final statement of purpose that encompasses the entire Gospel: the revelation of the Father's name (his character) results in the Father's own love dwelling in the disciples, with Jesus himself in them. The future gnōrisō ('I will make known') indicates that Jesus's revelatory work continues beyond the cross through the Spirit. The prayer's final word is 'in them' (en autois), placing the focus not on Jesus's return to glory but on his ongoing presence within the believing community.

Summary: John 18 narrates the arrest of Jesus in the garden, the Jewish interrogation before Annas and Caiaphas, Peter's three denials, and the Roman trial before Pilate. John's account differs from the Synoptics in key details: Jesus initiates the encounter with the arresting party, there is no Gethsemane agony, and the Jewish proceedings focus on Annas rather than a formal Sanhedrin trial. Pilate's interrogation centers on the question of kingship and culminates in the crowd's choice of Barabbas.

What Makes This Remarkable: John's arrest scene is theologically charged: when Jesus says ego eimi ('I am he,' v. 5), the soldiers fall to the ground — a detail unique to John that echoes the divine name theophany. Peter's sword-strike is attributed to him by name (only John identifies him). The interweaving of Peter's denials with Jesus's interrogation creates a literary contrast between Jesus's bold confession and Peter's craven denial. Pilate's question 'What is truth?' (v. 38) is one of the most famous philosophical moments in literature, left unanswered while Truth incarnate stands before him.

Translation Friction: John's chronology of the Jewish proceedings differs from the Synoptics — Jesus is taken first to Annas (the former high priest and father-in-law of Caiaphas), then to Caiaphas, with no detailed account of a Sanhedrin trial. We render John's account as given without harmonizing. The phrase 'not into the Praetorium, so that they would not be defiled' (v. 28) reflects the irony John intends — the Jewish leaders avoid ritual defilement while engineering the death of the innocent.

Connections: The garden arrest connects to the Gethsemane accounts in the Synoptics (Matthew 26:36-56, Mark 14:32-52, Luke 22:39-53). The ego eimi declaration echoes Exodus 3:14 and John's earlier 'I am' statements (8:24, 8:28, 8:58). Peter's denials fulfill Jesus's prediction in 13:38. Pilate's encounter with Jesus develops the kingship theme running through John (1:49, 6:15, 12:13-15). The Barabbas choice echoes the scapegoat ritual of Leviticus 16.

¹After Jesus had said these things, he went out with his disciples across the Kidron Valley to a place where there was a garden, and he and his disciples entered it. ²Now Judas, who was betraying him, also knew the place, because Jesus had often met there with his disciples. ³So Judas, having procured a detachment of soldiers and officers from the chief priests and Pharisees, came there with lanterns, torches, and weapons. ⁴Then Jesus, knowing everything that was going to happen to him, came forward and said to them, "Who are you looking for?" ⁵They answered him, "Jesus the Nazarene." Jesus said to them, "I am he." Judas, who was betraying him, was also standing with them. ⁶When he said to them, "I am he," they drew back and fell to the ground. ⁷So he asked them again, "Who are you looking for?" They said, "Jesus the Nazarene." ⁸Jesus answered, "I told you that I am he. So if you are looking for me, let these men go." ⁹This was to fulfill the word he had spoken: "I have not lost a single one of those you gave me." ¹⁰Then Simon Peter, who had a sword, drew it and struck the high priest's servant, cutting off his right ear. The servant's name was Malchus. ¹¹Jesus said to Peter, "Put your sword back in its sheath. Am I not to drink the cup the Father has given me?" ¹²So the detachment of soldiers, their commander, and the officers of the Jewish leaders arrested Jesus and bound him. ¹³They led him first to Annas, for he was the father-in-law of Caiaphas, who was high priest that year. ¹⁴It was Caiaphas who had advised the Jewish leaders that it was better for one man to die for the people. ¹⁵Simon Peter and another disciple followed Jesus. That disciple was known to the high priest and went with Jesus into the courtyard of the high priest, ¹⁶However, Peter was standing at the door without. Then traveled out that other disciple, which was recognized to the elevated priest, and spoke to her that kept the door, and brought in Peter. ¹⁷The servant girl at the door said to Peter, "You are not also one of this man's disciples, are you?" He said, "I am not." ¹⁸Now the servants and officers had made a charcoal fire because it was cold, and they were standing around it warming themselves. Peter was also standing with them, warming himself. ¹⁹The high priest then questioned Jesus about his disciples and about his teaching. ²⁰Jesus answered him, "I have spoken openly to the world. I always taught in synagogues and in the temple, where all the Jewish people gather, and I have said nothing in secret. ²¹Why do you question me? Ask those who heard what I said to them. They know what I said." ²²When he had said this, one of the officers standing nearby struck Jesus, saying, "Is that how you answer the high priest?" ²³Jesus answered him, "If I have spoken wrongly, testify about what was wrong. But if I spoke rightly, why do you strike me?" ²⁴Then Annas sent him, still bound, to Caiaphas the high priest. ²⁵Now Simon Peter was standing and warming himself. So they said to him, "You are not also one of his disciples, are you?" He denied it and said, "I am not." ²⁶One of the high priest's servants, a relative of the man whose ear Peter had cut off, said, "Didn't I see you in the garden with him?" ²⁷Peter denied it again, and immediately a rooster crowed. ²⁸Then they led Jesus from Caiaphas to the governor's headquarters. It was early morning. They did not enter the headquarters themselves, so that they would not be defiled but could eat the Passover. ²⁹So Pilate went outside to them and said, "What charge do you bring against this man?" ³⁰They answered him, "If this man were not a criminal, we would not have handed him over to you." ³¹Pilate said to them, "Take him yourselves and judge him according to your own law." The Jewish leaders said to him, "It is not permitted for us to execute anyone." ³²This was to fulfill what Jesus had said when he indicated the kind of death he was going to die. ³³So Pilate entered the headquarters again and called Jesus and said to him, "Are you the King of the Jews?" ³⁴Jesus answered, "Are you asking this on your own, or did others tell you about me?" ³⁵Pilate answered, "I am not a Jew, am I? Your own nation and the chief priests handed you over to me. What have you done?" ³⁶Jesus answered, "My kingdom is not of this world. If my kingdom were of this world, my servants would be fighting so that I would not be handed over to the Jewish leaders. But as it is, my kingdom is not from here." ³⁷So Pilate said to him, "Then you are a king?" Jesus answered, "You say that I am a king. For this I was born, and for this I came into the world: to testify to the truth. Everyone who belongs to the truth listens to my voice." ³⁸Pilate said to him, "What is truth?" After he said this, he went back out to the Jewish leaders and told them, "I find no basis for a charge against him. ³⁹But you have a custom that I release one prisoner for you at the Passover. So do you want me to release the King of the Jews for you?" ⁴⁰They shouted back, "Not this man, but Barabbas!" Now Barabbas was a revolutionary.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The Greek cheimmarrou tou Kedrōn ('the winter-torrent of Kidron') refers to the Kidron Valley east of Jerusalem, between the city and the Mount of Olives. John does not name Gethsemane (a Synoptic detail) but simply refers to a 'garden' (kēpos). The Kidron crossing echoes David's flight from Absalom (2 Samuel 15:23), creating a typological parallel between the rejected kings.
1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes 2 Samuel 15:23. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
2. The present participle paradidous ('the one handing over, betraying') describes Judas's action as ongoing — he is in the process of betrayal. The detail that Jesus 'often met there' (pollakis synēchthē) explains how Judas knew where to find him and emphasizes that Jesus made no attempt to avoid arrest by changing his routine.
3. The Greek speiran ('cohort, detachment') technically denotes a Roman military unit of 200-600 soldiers, though it may be used loosely here for a smaller detachment. The involvement of Roman soldiers alongside Jewish temple officers (hypēretas) indicates cooperation between Roman and Jewish authorities. The detail of lanterns and torches at Passover (during a full moon) carries Johannine irony — they bring artificial light to arrest the Light of the World.
4. John emphasizes Jesus's omniscience (eidōs panta ta erchomena) — he is not caught off guard but moves toward his captors deliberately. The verb exēlthen ('went out, came forward') shows Jesus taking the initiative rather than being discovered or seized. The question tina zēteite ('Who are you looking for?') is not a request for information but a sovereign challenge.
5. The response egō eimi ('I am he' or simply 'I am') functions on two levels: as a simple identification ('I'm the one you're looking for') and as an echo of the divine self-revelation in Exodus 3:14 and Isaiah 43:10. John's Gospel has used egō eimi repeatedly with divine overtones (8:24, 8:28, 8:58). The effect in verse 6 confirms the deeper reading. The detail of Judas standing with the arresting party (met' autōn) emphasizes his position — he has crossed from Jesus's side to the opposition.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 3:14 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 43:10 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The physical recoil (apēlthon eis ta opisō, 'went backward') and falling (epesan chamai, 'fell to the ground') are unique to John and carry theophanic overtones. In the Old Testament, people fall before divine presence (Ezekiel 1:28, Daniel 10:9). This detail transforms the arrest scene: Jesus is not a victim being seized but a sovereign figure before whom armed men collapse. He permits his own arrest.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Ezekiel 1:28. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.

6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Daniel 10:9. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. Jesus repeats the question (palin epērōtēsen) after the soldiers recover, demonstrating complete control of the situation. The repetition also serves to set up the protective command in verse 8.
8. Jesus negotiates the disciples' freedom even at the moment of his own arrest. The imperative aphete toutous hypagein ('let these go') is a command, not a request. Jesus acts as the Good Shepherd protecting his flock (10:11-15) — he offers himself in exchange for the safety of his followers.
9. John applies fulfillment language (hina pleerōthee, 'so that it might be fulfilled') not to an Old Testament text but to Jesus's own words from 6:39 and 17:12. Jesus's own statements carry the authority of Scripture. The physical protection of the disciples here points to the spiritual protection Jesus promised in the prayer of chapter 17.
10. Only John identifies Peter as the one who struck (the Synoptics leave the swordsman anonymous) and names the servant Malchus. The specificity suggests eyewitness knowledge. The Greek ōtarion ('ear,' diminutive form) denotes the outer ear or earlobe. Peter's violent response contrasts sharply with Jesus's sovereign self-surrender.
11. The 'cup' (poteerion) is a well-established Old Testament metaphor for divinely appointed suffering or judgment (Psalm 75:8, Isaiah 51:17, Jeremiah 25:15). John's account omits the Gethsemane agony over the cup (Matthew 26:39, Mark 14:36, Luke 22:42) and presents Jesus as wholly resolved — the rhetorical question expects the answer 'yes.' The perfect tense dedōken ('has given') indicates the Father's settled determination.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 75:8. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 51:17. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Jeremiah 25:15. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. The Greek chiliarchos ('commander of a thousand') is a Roman military title, confirming the involvement of Roman forces. The verb edēsan ('they bound') emphasizes the indignity — the one who spoke as sovereign moments ago now submits to being bound. John lists three groups cooperating: Roman soldiers (speira), their commander (chiliarchos), and Jewish temple police (hypēretai).
13. Annas had served as high priest from AD 6-15 and retained enormous influence. The Synoptics do not record this preliminary hearing before Annas. John's phrase 'high priest that year' (archiereus tou eniautou ekeinou) does not imply an annual rotation (which did not exist) but identifies which year is in view — the year of Jesus's death.
14. John reminds the reader of Caiaphas's unwitting prophecy from 11:49-52. The word sympherei ('it is advantageous, it is better') is the same word Jesus used in 16:7 about his departure being 'to your advantage.' The irony is layered: Caiaphas spoke cynical political calculus, but John understood it as genuine prophecy about substitutionary death.
15. The identity of the 'other disciple' (allos matheetes) is debated — traditionally identified with the Beloved Disciple (the author). The word gnōstos ('known') implies a personal connection with the high priest's household, not merely acquaintance. The Greek aulēn ('courtyard') rather than 'palace' — the proceedings take place in the open courtyard of the high priest's residential compound.
16. The female doorkeeper (thyrooro, feminine) plays a small but significant role — she will initiate Peter's first denial in the next verse. The other disciple's ability to enter freely and arrange Peter's admission underscores his connection to the high priest's household.
17. The question expects a negative answer (mee kai sy, 'surely you're not also...'), giving Peter an easy path to denial. Peter's response ouk eimi ('I am not') stands in devastating contrast to Jesus's egō eimi ('I am') in verses 5-6 and 8. Where Jesus boldly identified himself, Peter denies his own identity as a disciple.
18. The detail of the charcoal fire (anthrakian) is significant because the same rare word appears in 21:9 when Jesus makes a charcoal fire on the beach — creating a literary connection between Peter's denial and his restoration. The image of Peter warming himself among Jesus's enemies visually places him on the wrong side.
19. The 'high priest' here is Annas (v. 13), who retains the title by courtesy despite having been deposed. The two topics — disciples and teaching (didachēs) — suggest an inquiry into whether Jesus leads a seditious movement. John provides no false witnesses or blasphemy charge as in the Synoptic accounts.
20. The adverb parrēsia ('openly, with boldness') contrasts with en kryptō ('in secret'). Jesus asserts that his teaching has been entirely public — there is no hidden revolutionary agenda. The appeal to public teaching implicitly challenges the legitimacy of a secret nighttime proceeding. The phrase is reminiscent of Isaiah 45:19: 'I have not spoken in secret.'
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 45:19: — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
21. Jesus's response implicitly invokes a legal principle — under Jewish law, a defendant should not be compelled to testify against himself. Witnesses should be called. The perfect participle akēkootas ('those who have heard') refers to the many public witnesses of his teaching. Jesus's bold response before the high priest contrasts with Peter's denials in the courtyard.

22. The Greek edōken rhapsima ('gave a blow') could mean a slap with the open hand or a strike with a rod. The officer's rebuke assumes that any challenge to the high priest's authority is disrespectful. This is the first physical violence against Jesus in the passion narrative (in John's account), and it comes from a Jewish officer, not a Roman soldier.
23. Jesus's response is a model of dignified resistance — he does not retaliate but demands legal accountability. The contrast between kakōs ('wrongly, badly') and kalōs ('rightly, well') frames the issue as a matter of justice, not authority. If Jesus said something false, let it be proved; if true, the violence is unjust.
24. The perfect participle dedemenon ('having been bound') emphasizes that Jesus remained bound throughout. John provides no details of the proceedings before Caiaphas, moving directly to the continuation of Peter's denials. The Synoptic accounts place the main trial before Caiaphas and the Sanhedrin; John's focus remains on the theological significance of the events rather than legal procedure.
25. The scene returns to Peter, still at the charcoal fire (v. 18), creating a literary interweaving with Jesus's interrogation. The second denial uses the same formula as the first — ouk eimi ('I am not') — reinforcing the contrast with Jesus's egō eimi. The verb ērēsato ('he denied') is emphatic.
26. This third challenge is the most dangerous — the questioner is a relative (syngenēs) of Malchus (v. 10) and claims to be an eyewitness (ouk egō se eidon, 'didn't I see you?'). Peter is now in real physical danger, not merely social embarrassment. The detail of the family connection is unique to John and suggests firsthand knowledge of the events.
27. The fulfillment of Jesus's prediction (13:38) is stated without commentary — John lets the bare fact speak. The word eutheos ('immediately') compresses the moment: denial and rooster-crow are nearly simultaneous. Unlike Luke (22:61-62), John does not record Peter's emotional response — the scene simply ends, leaving the reader to feel the weight of the silence.
28. The Greek praitōrion ('praetorium') is the Roman governor's official residence, likely the former palace of Herod the Great or the Antonia Fortress. The irony is unmistakable: the Jewish leaders avoid entering a Gentile building to preserve ceremonial purity for Passover while simultaneously delivering an innocent man to death. John's Passover chronology differs from the Synoptics — here the Passover meal has not yet been eaten, placing the crucifixion on the day the Passover lambs are slaughtered.
29. Pilate accommodates the Jewish leaders' purity concerns by going outside — a detail that structures the entire trial scene as a series of movements between inside (with Jesus) and outside (with the crowd). The word katēgorian ('accusation, charge') is a legal term requiring a formal indictment.
30. The response avoids a specific charge, instead asserting a general claim of criminality (kakon poiōn, 'one doing evil'). The evasion suggests either that their real charge (blasphemy) would not interest a Roman court, or that they expected Pilate to simply ratify their judgment without independent investigation. The verb paredōkamen ('we handed over') is the same root (paradidōmi) used for Judas's betrayal.
31. Pilate's response is dismissive — he attempts to return the case to Jewish jurisdiction. The Jewish leaders' reply reveals their true intention: they want execution, not merely punishment. The phrase ouk exestin ('it is not permitted') refers to the Roman restriction on Jewish capital punishment (the ius gladii reserved to the governor). This legal constraint ensures that Jesus will die by Roman crucifixion rather than Jewish stoning.
32. John explains the theological significance: Roman execution means crucifixion, which fulfills Jesus's own predictions about being 'lifted up' (3:14, 8:28, 12:32-33). The verb sēmainōn ('signifying, indicating') is the same word used in 12:33 where Jesus spoke of being 'lifted up from the earth.' Death by lifting up — on a cross — rather than by casting down (stoning) was divinely ordained.
33. Pilate moves inside to question Jesus privately — this inside/outside movement structures the entire trial (vv. 28-29 outside, 33-38a inside, 38b-40 outside). The question sy ei ho basileus tōn Ioudaiōn ('Are you the king of the Jews?') indicates that the Jewish leaders have now framed the charge in political terms — kingship claims would constitute sedition against Rome.
34. Jesus's counter-question probes the source and intent of Pilate's inquiry. If Pilate asks on his own, the question has a Roman political meaning (Are you a revolutionary?). If others prompted it, the question carries Jewish messianic meaning (Are you the promised king?). The distinction matters because Jesus's answer depends on which sense of 'king' is intended.
35. Pilate's question mēti egō Ioudaios eimi ('I'm not a Jew, am I?') expects a negative answer and expresses disdain — he has no interest in Jewish messianic categories. The emphasis on 'your own nation' (to ethnos to son) and 'the chief priests' underscores that the initiative for Jesus's arrest came from his own people. Pilate's final question — 'What have you done?' — returns to the Roman concern: what crime warrants this proceeding?
36. The phrase ouk estin ek tou kosmou toutou ('is not from this world') uses ek ('from, out of') to indicate origin, not location. Jesus does not say his kingdom has no relevance to this world, but that it does not derive its authority, methods, or power from worldly sources. The proof is the absence of armed resistance — a kingdom of this world would fight. The threefold repetition of 'my kingdom' (hee basileia hee emee) emphasizes personal ownership.
37. Jesus's response sy legeis hoti basileus eimi ('you say that I am a king') is ambiguous — it neither confirms nor denies the title but redirects it. Jesus then redefines his kingship in terms of truth-bearing rather than political power. The phrase eis touto gegennēmai ('for this I was born') combined with eis touto elēlytha eis ton kosmon ('for this I came into the world') distinguishes birth from incarnation, implying pre-existence. The claim 'everyone who belongs to the truth listens to my voice' echoes the shepherd discourse (10:3-4, 27).
38. Pilate's question ti estin alētheia ('What is truth?') has been interpreted as cynical dismissal, philosophical inquiry, or weary pragmatism. John leaves it unanswered — Pilate does not wait for a reply but immediately exits. The irony is profound: Pilate asks 'What is truth?' while standing before the one who said 'I am the truth' (14:6). His judicial verdict — oudemian heuriskō en autō aitian ('I find no charge in him') — is the first of three declarations of innocence (cf. 19:4, 6).

39. The Passover amnesty custom (synētheia, 'custom, usual practice') is not attested outside the Gospels but is plausible within Roman provincial practice. Pilate's use of the title 'the King of the Jews' (ton basilea tōn Ioudaiōn) may be mocking or strategic — using the title to minimize the charge. The Passover context deepens the theological resonance: the festival celebrating Israel's liberation from slavery becomes the setting for a choice between releasing a criminal and condemning the innocent.
40. The verb ekraugasan ('they shouted, cried out') indicates a loud, collective outcry. The name Barabbas (Bar-Abbas) means 'son of the father' in Aramaic — an ironic detail since the crowd chooses the 'son of the father' over the Son of the Father. The Greek lēstēs can mean 'robber, bandit, or insurrectionist.' Given the political context and the parallel accounts (Mark 15:7 mentions insurrection and murder), 'revolutionary' better captures the political dimension. The crowd prefers a violent revolutionary to the king whose kingdom is 'not of this world.'

Summary: John 19 narrates the climax of the passion: Pilate's final attempts to release Jesus, the scourging and mocking, the crowd's demand for crucifixion, the crucifixion itself at Golgotha, Jesus's final words and death, and the burial by Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus. John's account emphasizes Jesus's sovereignty throughout — he carries his own cross, speaks from the cross with deliberate purpose, and chooses the moment of his death with the declaration 'It is finished.'

What Makes This Remarkable: John's crucifixion account is rich with theological symbolism. The inscription in three languages (v. 20) proclaims Jesus's kingship to the world. The seamless tunic (vv. 23-24) may symbolize the high priestly garment. Jesus's care for his mother (vv. 26-27) demonstrates love even in death. The flow of blood and water (v. 34) carries sacramental overtones. The fulfillment of Scripture is noted repeatedly (vv. 24, 28, 36-37). The word tetelestai ('It is finished,' v. 30) is the Greek perfect of teleō — not a cry of defeat but a shout of completion. The same root appeared in the prayer of 17:4 ('I have completed the work').

Translation Friction: John's account differs from the Synoptics in several details: Jesus carries his own cross (no Simon of Cyrene), only three sayings from the cross are recorded (compared to seven across all Gospels), and the darkness and temple veil are not mentioned. We render John's text as given. The identity of the Beloved Disciple (v. 26) remains debated — traditionally identified as John son of Zebedee. The emphasis on eyewitness testimony (v. 35) asserts historical reliability at the most theologically charged moment.

Connections: The scourging and crown of thorns connect to Isaiah 53 (the suffering servant). The seamless tunic echoes Psalm 22:18 and possibly the high priestly garment of Exodus 28. 'It is finished' completes the work described in 4:34 and 17:4. The unbroken bones fulfill Exodus 12:46 (Passover lamb) and Psalm 34:20. The piercing fulfills Zechariah 12:10. The burial with myrrh and aloes connects to Nicodemus's first appearance in chapter 3. The garden burial echoes the garden of Eden and anticipates the garden resurrection of chapter 20.

¹Then Pilate took Jesus and had him flogged. ²The soldiers twisted together a crown of thorns and placed it on his head, and they dressed him in a purple robe. ³They kept coming up to him and saying, "Hail, King of the Jews!" and striking him in the face. ⁴Pilate went outside again and said to them, "Look, I am bringing him out to you so that you may know I find no basis for a charge against him." ⁵So Jesus came out, wearing the crown of thorns and the purple robe. Pilate said to them, "Here is the man!" ⁶When the chief priests and the officers saw him, they shouted, "Crucify! Crucify!" Pilate said to them, "Take him yourselves and crucify him, for I find no basis for a charge against him." ⁷The Jewish leaders answered him, "We have a law, and according to that law he ought to die because he made himself the Son of God." ⁸When Pilate heard this, he was even more afraid. ⁹He entered the headquarters again and said to Jesus, "Where are you from?" But Jesus gave him no answer. ¹⁰So Pilate said to him, "You refuse to speak to me? Do you not know that I have authority to release you and authority to crucify you?" ¹¹Jesus answered him, "You would have no authority over me at all unless it had been given to you from above. For this reason, the one who handed me over to you has the greater sin." ¹²From then on Pilate sought to release him, but the Jewish leaders shouted, "If you release this man, you are no friend of Caesar. Everyone who makes himself a king opposes Caesar." ¹³When Pilate heard these words, he brought Jesus outside and sat down on the judgment seat at a place called the Stone Pavement — in Aramaic, Gabbatha. ¹⁴Now it was the day of Preparation for the Passover, about the sixth hour. He said to the Jewish leaders, "Here is your king!" ¹⁵They shouted, "Away with him! Away with him! Crucify him!" Pilate said to them, "Shall I crucify your king?" The chief priests answered, "We have no king but Caesar." ¹⁶So he handed him over to them to be crucified. They took Jesus, ¹⁷He bearing his cross traveled forth into a location called the location of a skull, which is called in the Hebrew Golgotha. ¹⁸There they crucified him, and with him two others, one on each side, with Jesus in the middle. ¹⁹Pilate also wrote an inscription and placed it on the cross. It read: "Jesus the Nazarene, the King of the Jews." ²⁰Many of the Jewish people read this inscription, because the place where Jesus was crucified was near the city, and it was written in Aramaic, Latin, and Greek. ²¹So the chief priests of the Jewish people said to Pilate, "Do not write, 'The King of the Jews,' but rather, 'This man said, I am King of the Jews.'" ²²Indeed, Pilate answered, What I have written stands as written. ²³When the soldiers had crucified Jesus, they took his garments and divided them into four parts, one for each soldier. They also took his tunic. Now the tunic was seamless, woven in one piece from top to bottom. ²⁴So they said to one another, "Let us not tear it, but cast lots for it to decide whose it will be." This was to fulfill the Scripture that says: "They divided my garments among themselves, and for my clothing they cast lots." So that is what the soldiers did. ²⁵Standing near the cross of Jesus were his mother, his mother's sister, Mary the wife of Clopas, and Mary Magdalene. ²⁶When Jesus saw his mother and the disciple whom he loved standing nearby, he said to his mother, "Woman, here is your son." ²⁷Then he said to the disciple, "Here is your mother." And from that hour the disciple took her into his own home. ²⁸After this, Jesus, knowing that everything was now completed, said (to fulfill the Scripture), "I am thirsty." ²⁹A jar full of sour wine was standing there. So they put a sponge soaked in the sour wine on a hyssop branch and held it to his mouth. ³⁰When Jesus had received the sour wine, he said, "It is finished," and bowing his head, he gave up his spirit. ³¹Since it was the day of Preparation, and so that the bodies would not remain on the cross during the Sabbath (for that Sabbath was a high day), the Jewish leaders asked Pilate to have the legs broken and the bodies taken down. ³²So the soldiers came and broke the legs of the first man and then of the other who had been crucified with him. ³³But when they came to Jesus and saw that he was already dead, they did not break his legs. ³⁴Instead, one of the soldiers pierced his side with a spear, and immediately blood and water came out. ³⁵The one who saw it has testified, and his testimony is true, and he knows that he is telling the truth, so that you also may believe. ³⁶For these things took place to fulfill the Scripture: "Not one of his bones will be broken." ³⁷And another Scripture says: "They will look on the one whom they pierced." ³⁸After these things, Joseph of Arimathea, who was a disciple of Jesus — but secretly, for fear of the Jewish leaders — asked Pilate for permission to take away the body of Jesus. Pilate gave permission, so he came and took his body. ³⁹Nicodemus also came — the one who had first come to Jesus at night — bringing a mixture of myrrh and aloes, about seventy-five pounds. ⁴⁰So they took the body of Jesus and wrapped it in linen cloths with the spices, according to the Jewish burial custom. ⁴¹Now in the place where he was crucified there was a garden, and in the garden a new tomb in which no one had ever been laid. ⁴²So because it was the Jewish day of Preparation, and since the tomb was nearby, they laid Jesus there.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The verb emastigōsen ('scourged, flogged') refers to the Roman flagellum — a brutal punishment using a multi-tailed whip embedded with bone or metal. Roman scourging often preceded crucifixion but could also serve as a lesser punishment. Pilate may have intended the flogging as a substitute for execution, hoping it would satisfy the crowd (cf. Luke 23:16, 22).
2. The crown of thorns (stephanon ex akanthōn) parodies a royal crown or possibly the laurel wreath of a Roman victor. The purple robe (himation porphyroun) mocks royal status — purple was the color of royalty and extreme wealth. The irony in John's narrative is that the mockery accidentally declares the truth: Jesus is a king, and the thorns echo the curse of Genesis 3:18.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 3:18. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. The imperfect tenses ērchonto ('they kept coming') and elegon ('they kept saying') indicate repeated, ongoing mockery. The greeting chaire ('hail, rejoice') parodies the formal salutation to the emperor: 'Ave Caesar.' The verb edidosan ('they kept giving') with rapismata ('slaps, blows') describes repeated strikes. The soldiers' mockery is a cruel game, but for John's readers it is unwitting testimony.

4. This is Pilate's second declaration of Jesus's innocence (cf. 18:38). The verb agō ('I bring, I lead out') presents Jesus as being exhibited to the crowd. Pilate's strategy appears to be: display the beaten, humiliated prisoner and demonstrate that he poses no political threat, hoping the crowd will be satisfied short of execution.
5. The Latin Ecce Homo ('Behold the man') is one of the most famous phrases in Western culture. The Greek idou ho anthrōpos may carry several layers: Pilate's dismissive 'Look at this pathetic figure' (hoping to evoke pity), an ironic echo of 'Son of Man' (ho huios tou anthrōpou), or an unwitting declaration of Jesus's true humanity. For John's readers, the beaten figure in mock-royal garments is simultaneously the most pitiful and the most regal sight in history.
6. The double imperative staurōson staurōson ('Crucify! Crucify!') is a frenzied demand. John identifies the chief priests and officers as leading the cry, not the general populace. Pilate's third declaration of innocence (ego gar ouch heuriskō en autō aitian) makes his eventual capitulation all the more damning — he condemns a man he knows to be innocent. His suggestion to 'take him yourselves and crucify him' is likely sarcastic, since the Jewish leaders lack authority to crucify.
7. The charge shifts from political (king) to religious (Son of God). The law they reference is likely Leviticus 24:16 regarding blasphemy. The phrase huion theou heauton epoiesen ('he made himself Son of God') reveals the core theological offense — not merely claiming to be Messiah but claiming a unique divine relationship. For Pilate, a Roman, the phrase 'Son of God' (huios theou) would evoke the divine claims associated with the emperor.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Leviticus 24:16. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The comparative mallon ephobēthē ('he was more afraid') implies Pilate was already uneasy — the claim of divine sonship intensifies his discomfort. Roman superstition took divine claims seriously; Pilate may fear divine retribution for mistreating a being with supernatural connections. The fear also has political dimensions — executing someone with a divine following could provoke unrest.
9. Pilate's question pothen ei sy ('Where are you from?') operates on two levels: Pilate asks about Jesus's origin in light of the 'Son of God' claim, but the question of Jesus's origin is one of the great themes of John's Gospel (7:27-28, 8:14, 9:29-30). Jesus's silence echoes Isaiah 53:7 ('like a sheep before its shearers is silent'). Having already declared his origin to Pilate (18:36-37), Jesus offers no further testimony to one who dismissed truth itself (18:38).
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 53:7. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. Pilate asserts his exousian ('authority, power') — the Roman governor's judicial authority over life and death. The double claim of authority (to release and to crucify) is meant to compel a response. The irony is that Pilate's authority is about to be overridden by the crowd's pressure, exposing its fragility.
11. Jesus breaks his silence to correct Pilate's claim to autonomous authority. All authority is anōthen ('from above') — derived from God. The phrase paradous me soi ('the one who handed me over to you') most likely refers to Caiaphas (who formally delivered Jesus to Pilate) rather than Judas (who betrayed Jesus to the Jewish leaders). The comparative 'greater sin' (meizona hamartian) implies Pilate also bears sin, but the one with fuller knowledge of God's purposes bears more guilt.
12. The phrase philos tou Kaisaros ('friend of Caesar') may be a formal title (amicus Caesaris) denoting loyalty to the emperor, or simply a threat that Pilate would be reported as disloyal. Under the emperor Tiberius, accusations of disloyalty were extremely dangerous — many officials were executed on such charges. This political threat is the lever that finally breaks Pilate's resistance. The irony is that the Jewish leaders, who chafe under Roman rule, now invoke Caesar's authority to destroy their own Messiah.
13. The verb ekathisen ('sat down') could be transitive ('he seated Jesus on the judgment seat') — a reading some scholars favor as another layer of Johannine irony: the judge is being judged, and the condemned man occupies the seat of judgment. The more natural reading is intransitive ('Pilate sat down'). The Lithostroton ('Stone Pavement') was likely a paved area in the governor's complex. John provides both the Greek and Aramaic names, characteristic of his concern for multilingual readers.
14. The chronological note is theologically loaded: paraskeue tou pascha ('Preparation of the Passover') is the day the Passover lambs were slaughtered in the temple. At the very hour the lambs are being prepared for sacrifice, the Lamb of God (1:29) is being condemned. The 'sixth hour' (about noon) conflicts with Mark 15:25 ('the third hour'); John may be using Roman time-reckoning (6 AM) or emphasizing the symbolic correspondence with the lamb-slaughtering hour. Pilate's idou ho basileus hymōn ('Here is your king!') parallels his earlier idou ho anthrōpos ('Here is the man!', v. 5).
15. The double imperative aron aron ('Take away! Take away!') expresses urgent demand for removal. The chief priests' declaration ouk echomen basilea ei mē Kaisara ('We have no king but Caesar') is a devastating theological surrender — Israel's foundational confession was that God alone is king (Judges 8:23, 1 Samuel 8:7, Isaiah 33:22). The religious leaders renounce their own theological heritage to secure Jesus's death.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Judges 8:23 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes 1 Samuel 8:7 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 33:22 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. The verb paredōken ('he handed over') is the same word used for Judas's betrayal (paradidōmi). Pilate becomes another link in the chain of 'handing over.' The subject shifts abruptly — 'they took Jesus' begins the crucifixion narrative. John compresses the transition from verdict to execution.

17. John emphasizes that Jesus carried his own cross (bastazōn heautō ton stauron) — unlike the Synoptics where Simon of Cyrene is pressed into service (Mark 15:21). John may omit Simon to emphasize Jesus's sovereign self-determination. The stauros ('cross') here refers to the crossbeam (patibulum), which the condemned carried to the execution site where the upright post was fixed. Golgotha is Aramaic Gulgaltā ('skull'), possibly named for the skull-shaped topography of the site.
18. John records the crucifixion itself with stark brevity — estaurōsan ('they crucified') — without describing the physical process. The placement of Jesus meson ('in the middle') between two others may symbolize his role as mediator or may ironically fulfill Isaiah 53:12 ('he was numbered with the transgressors'). John does not identify the two others as criminals (a Synoptic detail).
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 53:12 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. The Greek titlon is a loanword from the Latin titulus, the official placard stating the condemned person's crime. The inscription — Iesous ho Nazōraios ho basileus tōn Ioudaiōn — becomes the inadvertent proclamation that John's entire Gospel has been building toward. Pilate, who asked 'What is truth?' now unwittingly publishes the truth for all to read.
20. The three languages represent the three major linguistic communities in the region: Hebraisti (Aramaic, the local language), Rhōmaisti (Latin, the language of power), and Hellēnisti (Greek, the language of culture and commerce). The trilingual inscription proclaims Jesus's kingship to the entire known world. John uses Hebraisti to mean 'in the local Semitic language,' which at this period was Aramaic rather than classical Hebrew.
21. The chief priests want the inscription changed from a factual declaration to a reported claim — the difference between 'The King of the Jews' (a statement of identity) and 'He said he was King of the Jews' (a recorded accusation). The objection reveals their awareness that Pilate's wording, as written, amounts to an official Roman acknowledgment of Jesus's kingship.
22. The perfect tense gegrapha ('I have written and it stands written') carries the force of finality — the decision is irreversible. This is Pilate's one act of resolve in the entire proceeding. Whether from stubbornness, spite, or unconscious obedience to a higher purpose, Pilate ensures that the proclamation of Jesus's kingship stands permanently over the cross.
23. The detail of four soldiers (tessara merē, 'four parts') establishes the standard Roman crucifixion squad (a quaternion). The chitōn ('tunic, inner garment') is distinguished from the outer himation ('garments'). The seamless tunic (araphos, 'without seam') woven ek tōn anōthen ('from the top') has been interpreted as symbolizing the high priestly garment (Josephus, Antiquities 3.161 describes the high priest's robe as woven without seam) or as representing the unity of Jesus's work that cannot be divided.
24. The Scripture quoted is Psalm 22:18, one of the most detailed prophetic correspondences in the passion narrative. John sees the two halves of the psalm verse fulfilled in two distinct actions: the dividing of the outer garments and the casting of lots for the inner tunic. Psalm 22 opens with 'My God, my God, why have you forsaken me?' — words Jesus speaks from the cross in Matthew and Mark but not in John.
24. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalms 22:18. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
25. The Greek could list three or four women depending on whether 'his mother's sister' and 'Mary the wife of Clopas' are the same person or two different individuals. If four women, they form two pairs; if three, one pair is identified. We render the list as given without resolving the ambiguity. The courage of these women contrasts with the absence of the male disciples (except the Beloved Disciple, v. 26).
26. The address gynai ('woman') is not disrespectful in Greek (cf. 2:4) but is notably formal rather than intimate. The 'disciple whom he loved' (ton mathētēn hon ēgapa) is the Beloved Disciple, traditionally identified as John son of Zebedee. From the cross, Jesus establishes a new family relationship — his mother is entrusted to the Beloved Disciple's care. The scene has both pastoral and symbolic dimensions: the formation of a new community at the foot of the cross.
27. The phrase eis ta idia ('into his own home/things') is the same expression used in 1:11 and 16:32, creating a literary connection. The Beloved Disciple's immediate obedience (elaben, 'he took') mirrors Joseph's obedience in Matthew 1:24. The phrase 'from that hour' (ap ekeinēs tēs hōras) marks a decisive moment — even from the cross, Jesus's words create new realities.
28. The perfect tense tetelestai ('has been completed') indicates that Jesus's mission is accomplished. The verb teleiōthē ('might be fulfilled/completed') connects Scripture fulfillment to the completion of Jesus's work — the two are inseparable. The Scripture referenced is likely Psalm 69:21 ('for my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink') or Psalm 22:15 ('my tongue sticks to the roof of my mouth'). The declaration dipsō ('I thirst') is both a genuine expression of physical suffering and a deliberate action to fulfill Scripture.
28. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalm 69:21 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
28. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalm 22:15 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
29. The oxos ('sour wine, vinegar') was the posca — cheap vinegar-wine commonly drunk by Roman soldiers. The hyssop (hyssōpō) is a significant detail: hyssop was used to apply the Passover lamb's blood to the doorposts in Exodus 12:22. John connects Jesus's death to the Passover sacrifice through this botanical detail. Some manuscripts read hyssō ('javelin') instead of hyssōpō, but the Passover connection favors the majority reading.
29. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 12:22. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.

30. The word tetelestai ('It is finished, It has been completed') is the perfect tense of teleō — denoting a completed action with lasting results. This is not a cry of defeat ('It's over') but a shout of accomplishment ('It is accomplished'). The same root appears in 4:34 ('to complete his work'), 17:4 ('I have completed the work'), and 19:28 ('everything was completed'). The phrase paredōken to pneuma ('he handed over his spirit') portrays Jesus's death as a voluntary act — he 'gave' his spirit rather than having it taken. The verb paradidōmi ('to hand over') is the same word used for Judas's betrayal, creating a theological contrast: Judas handed Jesus over to death; Jesus hands his spirit over to the Father.
31. Deuteronomy 21:22-23 required that a hanged body not remain overnight. The request to break legs (crurifragium) was a method of hastening death — unable to push up on their legs to breathe, the crucified would suffocate quickly. The note that this Sabbath was megalē ('great, high') indicates it coincided with a festival — in John's chronology, the first day of Passover, making it doubly sacred.
31. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Deuteronomy 21:22-23. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
32. The soldiers proceed systematically from one end to the other. Jesus, crucified in the middle (v. 18), would be last. The verb kateaxan ('they broke') refers to the crurifragium — smashing the shin bones with a heavy mallet.
33. The perfect participle tethnēkota ('having died, being dead') emphasizes that Jesus's death was already complete and verified by professional soldiers. The fact that his legs were not broken becomes theologically significant in verses 36-37 as the fulfillment of Scripture.
34. The spear thrust (lonchē, 'lance, spear') was likely a verification of death. The flow of haima kai hydōr ('blood and water') has been interpreted medically (pericardial fluid and blood, indicating death by cardiac rupture), sacramentally (symbolizing the Eucharist and baptism), and typologically (echoing the water from the rock in Exodus 17:6). John's emphasis on this detail (reinforced by the eyewitness attestation in v. 35) suggests he sees deep significance beyond mere physical description.
34. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 17:6. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
35. This is a rare intrusion of the narrator's voice asserting eyewitness authority. The perfect tenses heōrakōs ('having seen') and memartyrēken ('has testified') indicate that the witness continues to bear testimony. The double affirmation — 'his testimony is true' (alēthinē) and 'he tells the truth' (alēthē) — uses two different Greek words for truth, reinforcing the reliability of the account. The purpose clause 'so that you may believe' (hina kai hymeis pisteusēte) connects the eyewitness report directly to the Gospel's evangelistic purpose (cf. 20:31).
36. The Scripture cited is Exodus 12:46 (or Numbers 9:12), which prohibits breaking the bones of the Passover lamb, or Psalm 34:20 ('He keeps all his bones; not one of them is broken'). The Passover lamb connection is primary in John's theology — Jesus is the Lamb of God (1:29, 36) whose bones remain unbroken according to the Passover regulations. The sacrificial typology is complete.
36. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 12:46. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
36. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Numbers 9:12. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
36. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 34:20. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
37. The quotation is from Zechariah 12:10, which in its original context describes a future mourning in Jerusalem: 'They will look on me, the one they have pierced, and they will mourn for him as one mourns for an only son.' The Hebrew has 'on me' (alai) while John's Greek has 'on the one whom' (eis hon), following a textual tradition that avoids the startling first-person reference to God being pierced. Revelation 1:7 also cites this passage in connection with Jesus's return.
37. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Zechariah 12:10. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
38. Joseph's status as a 'secret disciple' (mathētēs kekrymmenos) connects him to the 'many rulers' who believed but would not confess openly (12:42). The fear that silenced him during Jesus's life gives way to courage after his death — Joseph publicly identifies himself with the crucified Jesus by requesting his body, an act that would end any remaining concealment. Roman law allowed the bodies of the executed to be claimed by friends or family.
39. John reminds the reader of Nicodemus's nighttime visit in chapter 3 (ho elthōn pros auton nyktos to prōton). His progression in the Gospel is notable: he came secretly at night (3:1-2), spoke cautiously in Jesus's defense (7:50-52), and now openly participates in the burial. The quantity — hōs litras hekatōn ('about a hundred litrai') — is enormous, approximately 75 modern pounds (33 kg). This is a royal burial provision, befitting a king. The spices (myrrh and aloes) were used to mask the odor of decomposition and honor the dead.
40. The Greek othoniois ('linen cloths, strips of linen') are burial wrappings. The phrase kathos ethos estin tois Ioudaiois entaphiazēin ('as is the custom of the Jews to bury') distinguishes Jewish burial practice from Egyptian embalming or Roman cremation. The spices are packed within and around the wrappings. These grave cloths will be significant in the resurrection account (20:5-7).
41. John frames the death and burial in a garden (kēpos), creating a literary inclusion with the arrest in a garden (18:1) and anticipating the resurrection in the same garden (20:15). The 'new tomb' (mnēmeion kainon) where 'no one had ever been placed' (oudepō oudeis ēn tetheimenos) ensures that any resurrection from this tomb can only be Jesus's. The garden setting also evokes Eden — humanity fell in a garden, and new creation begins in a garden.

42. The burial is hasty — driven by the approaching Sabbath (paraskeuen tōn Ioudaiōn). The proximity of the tomb (engys ēn to mnēmeion) was providential rather than planned. The verb ethēkan ('they placed, they laid') is simple and final. The chapter ends not with triumph or commentary but with a body laid in a tomb — the silence between death and resurrection.

Summary: John 20 narrates the resurrection and its aftermath: Mary Magdalene discovers the empty tomb, Peter and the Beloved Disciple investigate, Mary encounters the risen Jesus in the garden, Jesus appears to the gathered disciples and commissions them with the Holy Spirit, and Thomas moves from doubt to the climactic confession 'My Lord and my God.' The chapter concludes with the Gospel's purpose statement: 'these are written so that you may believe.'

What Makes This Remarkable: *This chapter contains some of the most intimate and theologically significant scenes in the Gospels. Mary Magdalene's encounter with the risen Jesus (vv. 11-18) is deeply personal — she recognizes him only when he speaks her name, echoing the shepherd who 'calls his own sheep by name' (10:3). Thomas's confession 'My Lord and my God' (v. 28) is the highest Christological declaration in the Gospel, forming an inclusio with the Prologue's 'the Word was God' (1:1). The purpose statement (vv. 30-31) reveals that the entire Gospel has been evangelistic testimony designed to produce faith.*

Translation Friction: *Mary's instruction 'Do not cling to me' (v. 17) with the explanation 'I have not yet ascended' is theologically puzzling — the relationship between touching Jesus and his ascension is not self-evident. We render the Greek without resolving the debate. The phrase 'he breathed on them' (v. 22) uses the same verb (emphysaō) as Genesis 2:7 in the Septuagint, suggesting a deliberate new-creation parallel. Whether this constitutes the Johannine Pentecost or an anticipation of Acts 2 is debated.*

Connections: The empty tomb narrative connects to all four Gospel accounts while retaining John's distinctive perspective. Mary's garden encounter echoes Song of Songs 3:1-4 (seeking the beloved). The breathing of the Spirit echoes Genesis 2:7 (creation of humanity) and Ezekiel 37:9 (revival of dry bones). Thomas's confession answers the question of Jesus's identity posed throughout the Gospel. The purpose statement connects to 1 John 5:13 and frames the entire Gospel as testimony.

¹On the first day of the week, Mary Magdalene came to the tomb early, while it was still dark, and saw that the stone had been removed from the tomb. ²So she ran and went to Simon Peter and the other disciple, the one Jesus loved, and said to them, "They have taken the Lord out of the tomb, and we do not know where they have laid him." ³So Peter and the other disciple set out and went toward the tomb. ⁴They were both running together, but the other disciple outran Peter and reached the tomb first. ⁵Stooping to look in, he saw the linen cloths lying there, but he did not go in. ⁶Then Simon Peter came, following him, and went into the tomb. He saw the linen cloths lying there, ⁷The napkin, that was concerning his head, not lying with the linen clothes, but wrapped together in a location by itself. ⁸Then the other disciple, who had reached the tomb first, also went in, and he saw and believed. ⁹For they did not yet understand the Scripture that he must rise from the dead. ¹⁰Then the disciples went back to their homes. ¹¹But Mary stood outside the tomb weeping. As she wept, she stooped to look into the tomb, ¹²Sees two angels in brilliant sitting, the one at the skull, and the other at the feet, where the body of Jesus had lain. ¹³They said to her, "Woman, why are you weeping?" She said to them, "They have taken away my Lord, and I do not know where they have laid him." ¹⁴After she said this, she turned around and saw Jesus standing there, but she did not recognize that it was Jesus. ¹⁵Jesus said to her, "Woman, why are you weeping? Who are you looking for?" She, thinking he was the gardener, said to him, "Sir, if you have carried him away, tell me where you have laid him, and I will take him." ¹⁶Jesus said to her, "Mary." She turned and said to him in Aramaic, "Rabboni!" — which means "Teacher." ¹⁷Jesus said to her, "Do not cling to me, for I have not yet ascended to the Father. But go to my brothers and tell them, 'I am ascending to my Father and your Father, to my God and your God.'" ¹⁸Mary Magdalene went and announced to the disciples, "I have seen the Lord!" — and she told them what he had said to her. ¹⁹On the evening of that day, the first day of the week, the doors being locked where the disciples were for fear of the Jewish leaders, Jesus came and stood among them and said to them, "Peace be with you." ²⁰After he said this, he showed them his hands and his side. The disciples rejoiced when they saw the Lord. ²¹Jesus said to them again, "Peace be with you. As the Father has sent me, so I am sending you." ²²And after he said this, he breathed on them and said, "Receive the Holy Spirit. ²³If you forgive the sins of any, they are forgiven them; if you retain the sins of any, they are retained." ²⁴Now Thomas, one of the twelve, called the Twin, was not with them when Jesus came. ²⁵So the other disciples told him, "We have seen the Lord." But he said to them, "Unless I see the mark of the nails in his hands and put my finger into the mark of the nails and put my hand into his side, I will never believe." ²⁶Eight days later, his disciples were inside again, and Thomas was with them. Although the doors were locked, Jesus came and stood among them and said, "Peace be with you." ²⁷Then he said to Thomas, "Put your finger here and see my hands. Reach out your hand and put it into my side. Do not be unbelieving, but believing." ²⁸Thomas answered him, "My Lord and my God!" ²⁹Jesus said to him, "Have you believed because you have seen me? Blessed are those who have not seen and yet have believed." ³⁰Now Jesus performed many other signs in the presence of his disciples that are not written in this book. ³¹But these are written so that you may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that by believing you may have life in his name.

1. The phrase tee mia tōn sabbatōn ('the first of the week') is a Semitic way of saying 'Sunday.' The detail skotias eti ousēs ('while it was still dark') is characteristically Johannine — darkness in this Gospel symbolizes spiritual blindness and separation from Jesus (cf. 1:5, 3:19, 13:30). Mary comes in literal darkness and will move toward the light of recognition. John mentions only Mary Magdalene, unlike the Synoptics which include other women.
2. Mary's first interpretation is grave robbery (ēran ton kyrion, 'they have taken the Lord'). The plural 'we do not know' (ouk oidamen) may suggest other women were present (as in the Synoptic accounts) even though John mentions only Mary. The 'other disciple whom Jesus loved' (tonallon mathētēn hon ephilei ho Iēsous) is the Beloved Disciple, here described with phileō ('loved with personal affection') rather than the agapaō used in 13:23 and 19:26.
3. The imperfect ērchonto ('they were going, they were on their way') captures the ongoing action — the narrative builds suspense as the two disciples make their way to the tomb.
4. The detail of the foot race (proedragen tachion, 'ran ahead faster') has the feel of eyewitness memory — specific, personal, and unnecessary for the theological point. The Beloved Disciple's greater speed and earlier arrival set up the distinction between seeing (v. 5) and believing (v. 8).
5. The verb parakypsas ('stooping, bending over to look') indicates the low entrance of a first-century rock-cut tomb. The Beloved Disciple sees (blepei) the linen cloths (othonia) but hesitates to enter — whether from reverence, fear, or deference to Peter is not stated.
6. Peter arrives and enters without hesitation — consistent with his impulsive character throughout the Gospels. The verb theōrei ('he observed, he looked carefully at') is a more intensive form of seeing than the Beloved Disciple's blepei in verse 5, suggesting Peter examined the scene closely.
7. The soudarion ('face cloth, handkerchief') is a separate piece from the body wrappings. The detail that it was entetyligmenon ('rolled up, folded') and placed choris ('separately, apart') suggests orderliness rather than the haste of grave robbery — a thief would not neatly fold the burial cloths. The arrangement of the grave cloths is evidence that something other than theft has occurred.
8. Three different Greek verbs for 'seeing' appear in verses 5-8: blepei (v. 5, 'he sees'), theōrei (v. 6, 'he observes'), and eiden (v. 8, 'he saw' — from horaō, implying perception with understanding). The Beloved Disciple's seeing leads immediately to believing — he is the first to believe in the resurrection based on the evidence of the empty tomb and the arrangement of the burial cloths, without yet seeing the risen Jesus.
9. The narrator explains that the disciples' understanding was still incomplete — they had not yet grasped the scriptural necessity (dei, 'it is necessary') of the resurrection. The specific Scripture (graphēn, singular) is not identified; possibilities include Psalm 16:10 ('you will not abandon my soul to Sheol'), Hosea 6:2 ('on the third day he will raise us up'), or Isaiah 53:10-12. The Beloved Disciple believed based on what he saw, but fuller scriptural understanding would come later.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalm 16:10. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Hosea 6:2. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 53:10-12. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The phrase pros autous ('to themselves, to their own') indicates they returned to where they were staying. The departure sets the stage for Mary's solitary encounter with the risen Jesus — the disciples leave, but Mary stays.
11. The imperfect eistēkei ('she was standing') and the present participle klaiousa ('weeping') paint a vivid picture of sustained grief. Mary's sorrow dominates the scene — she is weeping for a dead man, unaware that death has been conquered. The verb parekypsen ('she stooped to look') echoes the Beloved Disciple's action in verse 5.

12. The two angels (angelous) in white recall the cherubim on the mercy seat (kapporet) of the Ark of the Covenant, positioned at each end (Exodus 25:18-20). If this parallel is intended, the place where Jesus's body lay corresponds to the mercy seat — the place of atonement. The white garments (en leukois) are characteristic of heavenly beings in the New Testament.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 25:18-20. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. Mary's response repeats her earlier report (v. 2) but now uses the singular 'I do not know' (ouk oida) and the personal 'my Lord' (ton kyrion mou) — the grief has become deeply personal. She is so consumed by sorrow that the presence of angels does not startle her or redirect her attention.
14. Mary's failure to recognize Jesus (ouk ēdei hoti Iēsous estin) echoes other post-resurrection non-recognition scenes (Luke 24:16, 24:37). This may indicate a transformation in Jesus's risen body, or it may reflect Mary's grief-blurred perception, or both. The dramatic irony is intense — the reader knows who stands before her.
15. Jesus's question tina zēteis ('Who are you looking for?') echoes his first question in the Gospel to Andrew and John (1:38, 'What are you seeking?') and his question to the arresting party (18:4, 'Who are you looking for?'). Mary's assumption that Jesus is the kēpouros ('gardener') is natural given the garden setting — but for John's readers, there is a deeper truth: the risen Jesus is the true gardener of the new Eden, the one who tends the garden of new creation.
16. The recognition comes through a single word — her name. This fulfills 10:3 ('he calls his own sheep by name') and 10:27 ('my sheep hear my voice'). The shift from non-recognition to recognition pivots on the personal address. Mary's response 'Rabboni' (rabbouni) is an intensified form of 'Rabbi' — 'my great teacher' or 'my dear teacher.' John translates it as didaskalos ('teacher') for his Greek readers. The scene is one of the most intimate in all four Gospels.
17. The present imperative mee mou haptou is better rendered 'stop clinging to me' or 'do not keep holding on to me' rather than 'do not touch me' — Mary has apparently grasped him and Jesus tells her to release him. The reason given — 'I have not yet ascended' (oupō anabebēka) — implies that the old mode of physical relationship must give way to a new mode of spiritual relationship mediated by the Spirit. The phrase 'my brothers' (tous adelphous mou) is the first time Jesus uses this family language for his disciples. The careful distinction 'my Father and your Father, my God and your God' maintains Jesus's unique relationship to the Father while including the disciples in a genuine filial relationship.
18. Mary becomes the first witness to the resurrection and the first evangelist — she is sent (poreuou, 'go!') by Jesus to proclaim the news. The verb angellousa ('announcing, reporting') is related to angelos ('messenger') — Mary fulfills an angelic function. Her declaration heōraka ton kyrion ('I have seen the Lord') uses the perfect tense, indicating a sight with lasting impact.
19. The locked doors (tōn thyron kekleisimenōn) emphasize both the disciples' fear and the supernatural character of Jesus's appearance — he enters without the doors being opened. The greeting eirēnē hymin ('Peace to you') is the standard Semitic greeting (shalom aleichem) but carries enormous weight in this context. Jesus had promised 'my peace I give to you' (14:27) and 'in me you may have peace' (16:33). Now the risen Jesus delivers on that promise.
20. Jesus shows his wounds as identification — the risen body bears the marks of the cross. The resurrection does not erase the crucifixion but transforms it. The disciples' joy (echarēsan, 'they rejoiced') fulfills Jesus's promise in 16:20-22 that their sorrow would be turned to joy. The verb echarēsan echoes 16:22: 'your hearts will rejoice.'
21. The second eirēnē hymin transitions from greeting to commissioning. The perfect apostalken ('has sent,' denoting the ongoing mission) is paired with the present pempō ('I am sending,' denoting the immediate commission). This echoes 17:18: 'As you sent me into the world, so I have sent them into the world.' The disciples' mission is patterned on Jesus's own mission from the Father.
22. The verb enepheysēsen ('he breathed on/into') appears in the Septuagint only in Genesis 2:7 (God 'breathed into' Adam the breath of life) and Ezekiel 37:9 (the Spirit 'breathes' life into the dry bones). The allusion is deliberate — Jesus's act is a new creation, a new breathing of life into his people. Whether this constitutes the full giving of the Spirit (as in Johannine theology) or an anticipation of Pentecost (as in Lukan theology) is debated. In John's narrative, this is the moment the Spirit is given.
22. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 2:7. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
22. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Ezekiel 37:9. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
23. The authority to forgive or retain sins (aphēte, 'release, forgive' and kratēte, 'hold, retain') is given to the community of disciples, not to an individual. The perfect tenses apheōntai ('they stand forgiven') and kekratēntai ('they stand retained') indicate permanent results. This commission extends the forgiveness ministry that Jesus exercised during his earthly life. The precise exercise of this authority — whether sacramental, declarative, or disciplinary — has been debated throughout church history.
24. The name Thomas (Thōmas) is itself Aramaic for 'twin' (te'oma), and Didymos is the Greek equivalent. John consistently identifies Thomas with this double name (11:16, 14:5, 21:2). His absence from the first appearance sets up one of the Gospel's most dramatic scenes.
25. Thomas's demand escalates from seeing (idō) to touching (balō ton daktylo mou, 'put my finger') to thrusting his hand into the spear wound (balō mou tēn cheira eis tēn pleuran). The double negative ou mē pisteusō ('I will absolutely not believe') is the strongest form of denial in Greek. Note that Thomas demands the same evidence Jesus had already provided the other disciples (v. 20) — his request is not unreasonable, merely emphatic.

The mention of nails (hēlōn) confirms crucifixion by nailing (rather than tying).

26. The phrase meth' hēmeras oktō ('after eight days') by inclusive counting means the following Sunday — establishing the pattern of first-day-of-the-week gatherings that would become Christian worship practice. The repeated detail of locked doors and Jesus's supernatural entry underscores the nature of the resurrection body: physical enough to be seen and touched, yet not bound by physical barriers.
27. Jesus addresses Thomas's exact demands (vv. 25) — demonstrating both his knowledge of Thomas's words (he was not present when Thomas spoke them) and his willingness to meet Thomas where he is. The imperative mē ginou apistos alla pistos ('stop becoming unbelieving but be believing') uses the present imperative ginou, suggesting a process: Thomas is not yet fixed in unbelief but is moving toward it, and Jesus intervenes. The text does not say whether Thomas actually touched Jesus's wounds — the narrative moves directly to his confession.
28. Thomas's confession ho kyrios mou kai ho theos mou ('My Lord and my God') is the climactic Christological declaration of the Gospel. The use of the nominative with the article (ho kyrios, ho theos) as vocative gives the confession maximum force. This directly identifies Jesus as theos ('God'), completing the theological arc that began in 1:1 ('the Word was God'). Thomas moves from the most extreme doubt to the most exalted confession in the Gospel — a transformation John presents as the paradigm of faith.
29. The first clause can be read as a statement ('Because you have seen me, you have believed') or a question ('Have you believed because you have seen me?'). Both readings work theologically. The beatitude for those who believe without seeing (makarioi hoi mē idontes kai pisteusantes) reaches beyond Thomas to all future believers — including every reader of the Gospel. This is the bridge between the apostolic eyewitnesses and the ongoing community of faith.
30. The word sēmeia ('signs') is John's characteristic term for Jesus's miracles — they are not mere displays of power but signs pointing to deeper realities about Jesus's identity. The acknowledgment that 'many other signs' exist admits the Gospel's selectivity — what is included has been deliberately chosen for the purpose stated in verse 31.
31. This is the Gospel's purpose statement, revealing that everything written has been evangelistic testimony. The verb pisteusēte could be aorist subjunctive ('come to believe' — evangelistic, aimed at unbelievers) or present subjunctive ('continue believing' — pastoral, aimed at the community). The manuscript evidence is divided; both purposes are served by the Gospel. The double object of faith — that Jesus is the Christ (Messiah) and the Son of God — summarizes the Gospel's dual Christological claim: Jesus fulfills Jewish messianic expectation and shares in the divine identity. The result of believing is zōē ('life') — the life that has been the Gospel's theme from the Prologue (1:4: 'In him was life').

Summary: John 21 is the epilogue of the Gospel, set by the Sea of Tiberias (Galilee). Seven disciples go fishing and catch nothing until the risen Jesus appears on the shore and directs them to an enormous catch. After a breakfast of bread and fish, Jesus three times asks Peter 'Do you love me?' — restoring him from his threefold denial. Jesus predicts Peter's martyrdom, addresses the fate of the Beloved Disciple, and the chapter closes with a final testimony to the authenticity of the Gospel.

What Makes This Remarkable: The chapter is widely regarded as an epilogue added after the original conclusion (20:30-31), though it is present in all manuscripts. The miraculous catch of 153 fish has generated centuries of interpretation — the number may be symbolic (Jerome claimed it was the number of known species of fish, representing the universal mission). The threefold 'Do you love me?' dialogue restores Peter from his threefold denial (18:17, 25, 27), creating a literary and pastoral symmetry. The charcoal fire (anthrakian, v. 9) uses the same rare word as the fire where Peter denied Jesus (18:18), connecting the two scenes. Jesus's final commission — 'Feed my sheep' — establishes pastoral care as the expression of love for Christ.

Translation Friction: The interchange between agapaō and phileō in the Peter dialogue (vv. 15-17) has been interpreted as theologically significant (agapaō as divine love, phileō as human affection) or as Johannine stylistic variation without distinction. We render both as 'love' since English lacks the Greek differentiation, and note the variation in translator notes. The identity of the Beloved Disciple (v. 20) remains the Gospel's enduring mystery. The final verse (v. 25) is hyperbolic, a literary convention for closing a work of vast scope.

Connections: The fishing scene echoes Luke 5:1-11 (the first miraculous catch). The charcoal fire connects to 18:18 (Peter's denials). The threefold restoration mirrors the threefold denial. 'Feed my sheep' connects to the shepherd discourse (10:1-18). Peter's predicted death by stretching out his hands (v. 18) has traditionally been understood as crucifixion. The Beloved Disciple's testimony (vv. 24-25) connects to the eyewitness claim of 19:35.

¹After these things, Jesus revealed himself again to the disciples by the Sea of Tiberias. He revealed himself in this way: ²Simon Peter, Thomas called the Twin, Nathanael from Cana in Galilee, the sons of Zebedee, and two other of his disciples were together. ³Simon Peter said to them, "I am going fishing." They said to him, "We will come with you." They went out and got into the boat, but that night they caught nothing. ⁴Just as day was breaking, Jesus stood on the shore, but the disciples did not know that it was Jesus. ⁵Jesus said to them, "Children, you do not have any fish, do you?" They answered him, "No." ⁶He said to them, "Cast the net on the right side of the boat, and you will find some." So they cast it, and they were not able to haul it in because of the great number of fish. ⁷So the disciple whom Jesus loved said to Peter, "It is the Lord!" When Simon Peter heard that it was the Lord, he put on his outer garment — for he had stripped for work — and threw himself into the sea. ⁸The other disciples came in the boat, dragging the net full of fish, for they were not far from the land — only about a hundred yards. ⁹When they got out on land, they saw a charcoal fire there with fish laid on it, and bread. ¹⁰Jesus said to them, "Bring some of the fish you have just caught." ¹¹So Simon Peter went aboard and hauled the net ashore, full of large fish — a hundred and fifty-three. And although there were so many, the net was not torn. ¹²Jesus said to them, "Come and have breakfast." None of the disciples dared to ask him, "Who are you?" — because they knew it was the Lord. ¹³Jesus came and took the bread and gave it to them, and the fish likewise. ¹⁴This was now the third time Jesus appeared to the disciples after he was raised from the dead. ¹⁵When they had finished breakfast, Jesus said to Simon Peter, "Simon, son of John, do you love me more than these?" He said to him, "Yes, Lord, you know that I love you." Jesus said to him, "Feed my lambs." ¹⁶He said to him a second time, "Simon, son of John, do you love me?" He said to him, "Yes, Lord, you know that I love you." Jesus said to him, "Tend my sheep." ¹⁷He said to him the third time, "Simon, son of John, do you love me?" Peter was grieved because he said to him the third time, "Do you love me?" and he said to him, "Lord, you know everything; you know that I love you." Jesus said to him, "Feed my sheep. ¹⁸Truly, truly, I tell you, when you were young, you used to dress yourself and walk wherever you wanted. But when you are old, you will stretch out your hands, and another will dress you and carry you where you do not want to go." ¹⁹He said this to indicate the kind of death by which Peter would glorify God. After saying this, he said to him, "Follow me." ²⁰Peter turned and saw the disciple whom Jesus loved following them — the one who had reclined next to Jesus at the supper and had said, "Lord, who is it that is going to betray you?" ²¹When Peter saw him, he said to Jesus, "Lord, what about this man?" ²²Jesus said to him, "If I want him to remain until I come, what is that to you? You follow me!" ²³So the word spread among the brothers that this disciple would not die. But Jesus did not say to him that he would not die. Rather, he said, "If I want him to remain until I come, what is that to you?" ²⁴This is the disciple who is testifying about these things and who wrote these things, and we know that his testimony is true. ²⁵Now there are also many other things that Jesus did. If every one of them were written down, I suppose that the world itself could not contain the books that would be written.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The verb ephanērōsen ('he revealed, manifested') emphasizes Jesus's initiative — he chooses when and how to appear. The Sea of Tiberias is an alternate name for the Sea of Galilee, named after the city built by Herod Antipas in honor of Emperor Tiberius. The repetition of ephanērōsen creates a formal introduction, as if presenting an official account.
2. Seven disciples are listed — seven being the number of completeness. This is the only mention of the sons of Zebedee (James and John) in the Fourth Gospel, supporting the traditional identification of the Beloved Disciple with John son of Zebedee. Nathanael, introduced in 1:45-51, reappears only here in John. The two unnamed disciples remain unidentified.
3. Peter's return to fishing has been interpreted as apostasy (returning to his old life), pragmatism (they needed to eat), or simply filling time while waiting for further instruction. The narrative does not condemn the decision. The fruitless night of fishing (epiasan ouden, 'they caught nothing') sets up the contrast with the abundance that Jesus provides — apart from him they can do nothing (15:5).
4. The transition from night to dawn (prōias ēdē genomenēs, 'morning already having come') carries symbolic weight: the fruitless darkness gives way to the presence of the Light (cf. 1:5, 8:12). The disciples' failure to recognize Jesus (ouk ēdeisan hoti Iēsous estin) echoes Mary Magdalene's experience (20:14) and the Emmaus road encounter (Luke 24:16).
5. The address paidia ('children, lads') is informal and affectionate. The word prosphagion ('something to eat with bread, fish') specifically refers to the relish or fish eaten alongside bread. The question mē ti prosphagion echete expects a negative answer — Jesus already knows the result of their night's labor. The stark monosyllable ou ('no') captures the disciples' frustrated exhaustion.

6. The direction 'right side' (ta dexia merē) may be coincidental or may carry symbolic significance (the right side being associated with favor and blessing in biblical and ancient Near Eastern thought). The contrast between total failure without Jesus's direction and overwhelming abundance with it illustrates the principle of 15:5 ('apart from me you can do nothing'). The verb hēlkysai ('to drag, haul') will reappear in verse 11.
7. The Beloved Disciple recognizes Jesus first (spiritual perception), but Peter acts first (impulsive action) — a pattern consistent with their characterizations throughout the Gospel (cf. 20:4-8). The word gymnos ('naked') here means stripped to a loincloth for work, not fully unclothed. Peter puts on his ependytēn ('outer garment') before jumping in — seemingly illogical for swimming, but motivated by the desire not to greet his Lord in a state of undress.
8. The Greek pēchōn diakosiōn ('two hundred cubits') is approximately 300 feet or 90 meters. We render this as 'about a hundred yards' for modern comprehension. The diminutive ploiariō ('small boat') distinguishes their vessel from a larger ship. While Peter swims, the others bring the catch to shore.
9. The word anthrakian ('charcoal fire') appears only here and in 18:18 (the fire where Peter denied Jesus) in the entire New Testament. The verbal link is deliberate — Jesus will restore Peter at the same type of fire where Peter fell. The prepared meal (opsarion, 'fish,' and arton, 'bread') recalls the feeding of the five thousand (6:9, 11) where the same two words appear. Jesus provides for his people.
10. Jesus already has fish on the fire (v. 9) but invites the disciples to contribute from their catch. This combines divine provision with human participation — a pattern consistent with the feeding miracles. The adverb nyn ('now, just now') emphasizes the freshness of the catch.
11. The exact count of 153 fish (hekaton pentēkonta triōn) has generated extensive speculation: Jerome claimed it was the number of known fish species (universal mission); Augustine noted it is the triangular number of 17 (1+2+3...+17=153); others connect it to Ezekiel 47:10 (the prophetic vision of abundant fishing in the Dead Sea). The precision of the count suggests eyewitness memory. The unbroken net (ouk eschisthē to diktyon) may symbolize the unity of the church despite the great number gathered into it.
12. The invitation deute aristēsate ('come, have breakfast') is warm and domestic. The verb aristēsate specifically refers to the morning meal. The tension between knowing (eidotes hoti ho kyrios estin, 'knowing that it was the Lord') and wanting to ask (exetasai, 'to examine, to question') captures the awe and strangeness of encountering the risen Jesus — they recognize him but his transformed presence inhibits normal interaction.
13. The verbs lambanei... didōsin ('he takes... he gives') echo the actions at the feeding of the five thousand (6:11: 'Jesus took the loaves... and distributed them') and the Last Supper (13:26). The risen Jesus continues to be the one who feeds his people. The act is eucharistic in resonance without being explicitly identified as a sacramental meal.
14. The narrator counts Jesus's appearances to the disciples as a group: first on Easter evening (20:19-23), second a week later with Thomas (20:26-29), and now third by the sea. Mary Magdalene's encounter (20:14-18) is not counted because it was to an individual, not to the gathered disciples. The passive egertheis ('having been raised') attributes the resurrection to divine action.
15. Jesus addresses Peter by his birth name Simōn Iōannou ('Simon son of John') rather than his apostolic name Peter — recalling the moment of their first meeting (1:42). The phrase pleon toutōn ('more than these') could mean 'more than these other disciples love me,' 'more than you love these men,' or 'more than you love these things (the boats and fish).' The first reading fits Peter's earlier boast of superior loyalty (13:37). Jesus uses agapas ('do you love with agapē?'') while Peter responds with philō ('I love with philia'). Whether this distinction is theologically significant or merely stylistic variation is debated. The command boske ta arnia mou ('feed my lambs') commissions Peter as an under-shepherd.
16. The second question drops 'more than these' — the comparison is removed and the question is simple and direct. Jesus again uses agapas; Peter again responds with philō. The command shifts from boske ('feed') to poimaine ('tend, shepherd') and from arnia ('lambs') to probata ('sheep'). The shepherd imagery connects directly to chapter 10 where Jesus is the Good Shepherd; Peter is now commissioned to continue that shepherding work.
17. In the third question, Jesus switches to Peter's own verb — phileis me? ('do you have affection for me?'). This is what grieves Peter (elypēthē, 'he was hurt, pained') — Jesus seems to question even Peter's philia-level love. Peter's response appeals to Jesus's omniscience: panta sy oidas ('you know everything'). The switch from oidas ('you know intuitively') to ginōskeis ('you know from experience') is emphatic — Peter trusts that Jesus's comprehensive knowledge includes knowledge of Peter's heart. The threefold question-and-commission corresponds to the threefold denial, effecting a complete restoration.
18. The double amēn introduces a solemn prediction. The phrase ekteneis tas cheiras sou ('you will stretch out your hands') has traditionally been understood as a reference to crucifixion — the stretching out of arms on a cross. The progression from self-determination ('you dressed yourself, walked where you wanted') to submission ('another will dress you, carry you where you do not want') describes the movement from freedom to martyrdom. Church tradition records that Peter was crucified in Rome under Nero, reportedly upside down at his own request.
19. The verb sēmainōn ('signifying, indicating') is the same word used in 12:33 and 18:32 for Jesus indicating the manner of his own death. Peter's death, like Jesus's, will 'glorify God' (doxasei ton theon) — martyrdom is presented not as tragedy but as the ultimate expression of discipleship. The command akolouthei moi ('follow me') recalls the original call to discipleship (1:43) and takes on new meaning in light of the predicted death — 'follow me' now means 'follow me to the cross.'

- 20. The Beloved Disciple is identified by his posture at the Last Supper (13:23-25) — reclining at Jesus's chest and asking about the betrayer. This lengthy identification emphasizes the intimacy of his relationship with Jesus and connects the epilogue to the upper room narrative. Peter's natural curiosity about the Beloved Disciple's fate follows immediately from the prediction about his own.
- 21. Peter's question houtos de ti ('But this one — what?') is characteristically blunt and impulsive. Having learned his own fate, Peter wants to know the Beloved Disciple's. The question reveals a natural human tendency to compare one's calling and suffering with others'.
- 22. Jesus's response is both an answer and a rebuke: each disciple's calling is between him and Jesus, and comparison is inappropriate. The conditional ean auton thelō menein ('if I want him to remain') is deliberately hypothetical — Jesus does not predict the Beloved Disciple's survival until the parousia but uses the hypothetical to redirect Peter's focus. The emphatic sy moi akolouthei ('you — follow me!') places the pronoun first for emphasis: 'As for you, your job is to follow me.'
- 23. The narrator corrects a misunderstanding that had circulated in the early Christian community (eis tous adelphous, 'among the brothers'). The rumor that the Beloved Disciple would not die had apparently persisted, perhaps because he lived to an advanced age. This correction suggests the chapter was written or finalized after the Beloved Disciple's death (or near the end of his life) when the community needed clarification.
- 24. The present participle martyrōn ('the one testifying') indicates ongoing witness, while the aorist grapsas ('the one who wrote') points to a completed literary act. The first-person plural oidamen ('we know') shifts from the individual voice of the Beloved Disciple to a community that vouches for his testimony. This suggests a circle of disciples who knew the Beloved Disciple and endorsed his Gospel. The claim alēthēs autou hē martyria estin ('his testimony is true') echoes 19:35.
- 25. The closing verse is a literary convention of hyperbolic modesty (cf. Ecclesiastes 12:12, 'Of making many books there is no end'). The first person oimai ('I suppose, I think') is the only clear first-person singular in the Gospel, giving the ending a personal and reflective tone. The hyperbole — the world could not contain the books — expresses the inexhaustible significance of Jesus's life and work. Some manuscripts add 'Amen,' but the SBLGNT does not include it.
- 25. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Ecclesiastes 12:12 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.

Summary: Acts 1 opens with Luke's prologue addressing Theophilus, connecting this volume to the Gospel of Luke. The risen Jesus instructs his apostles to wait in Jerusalem for the promise of the Holy Spirit. After forty days of post-resurrection appearances, Jesus ascends into heaven from the Mount of Olives. The apostles return to Jerusalem and devote themselves to prayer. The chapter closes with the selection of Matthias to replace Judas Iscariot, restoring the Twelve.

What Makes This Remarkable: Luke explicitly frames Acts as a sequel — 'the first account' (ton proton logon) refers to his Gospel. The forty-day period of post-resurrection teaching echoes Israel's forty years in the wilderness and Moses' forty days on Sinai. The ascension narrative is remarkably restrained — no dramatic special effects, just Jesus 'lifted up' and a cloud receiving him. The 'two men in white' echo the angelic figures at the empty tomb (Luke 24:4). The lot-casting for Matthias is the last recorded instance of this Old Testament decision-making method; after Pentecost, the Spirit replaces the lot.

Translation Friction: The Greek phrase 'baptized with the Holy Spirit' (baptistesesthe en pneumati hagio) in verse 5 creates the theological foundation for the Pentecost narrative in chapter 2. The question about restoring the kingdom to Israel (v. 6) reveals the disciples' persistent expectation of a political Messiah, which Jesus redirects without directly denying. The criteria for Judas's replacement (vv. 21-22) — someone present from John's baptism through the ascension — defines apostolic witness as eyewitness testimony.

Connections: The prologue connects to Luke 1:1-4. The promise of the Spirit connects to Joel 2:28-32 (quoted in Acts 2). The ascension connects to Daniel 7:13-14 (the Son of Man coming with clouds). The replacement of Judas fulfills the Psalms citations in verses 16 and 20 (Psalm 69:25 and Psalm 109:8). The number twelve connects to the twelve tribes of Israel, maintaining the symbolic completeness of the apostolic body.

¹I wrote the first account, Theophilus, about all that Jesus began to do and to teach, ²Until the day in which he was taken up, following that he by way of the Holy Ghost had given commandments to the apostles whom he had chosen:. ³He also presented himself alive to them after his suffering, with many convincing proofs, appearing to them over a period of forty days and speaking about the kingdom of God. ⁴While he was eating with them, he commanded them not to leave Jerusalem but to wait for the promise of the Father. "This is what you heard from me," he said. ⁵"For John baptized with water, but you will be baptized with the Holy Spirit not many days from now." ⁶So when they had gathered together, they asked him, "Lord, is it at this time that you are restoring the kingdom to Israel?" ⁷He said to them, "It is not for you to know the times or seasons that the Father has set by his own authority. ⁸But you will receive power when the Holy Spirit has come upon you, and you will be my witnesses in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and to the ends of the earth." ⁹After he had said these things, while they were watching, he was lifted up, and a cloud took him from their sight. ¹⁰While they were staring intently into the sky as he was going, suddenly two men in white clothing stood beside them. ¹¹They said, "Men of Galilee, why do you stand looking into the sky? This Jesus, who has been taken up from you into heaven, will come in the same way as you saw him go into heaven." ¹²Then they returned to Jerusalem from the mountain called Olivet, which is near Jerusalem, a Sabbath day's journey away. ¹³When they arrived, they went up to the upper room where they were staying — Peter and John and James and Andrew, Philip and Thomas, Bartholomew and Matthew, James son of Alphaeus and Simon the Zealot and Judas son of James. ¹⁴All these were devoting themselves with one mind to prayer, together with the women and Mary the mother of Jesus, and with his brothers. ¹⁵In those days Peter stood up among the brothers and sisters — the gathering numbered about one hundred and twenty — and said, ¹⁶"Brothers, the Scripture had to be fulfilled that the Holy Spirit spoke beforehand through the mouth of David concerning Judas, who became a guide for those who arrested Jesus. ¹⁷For he was counted among us and received his share in this ministry." ¹⁸(Now this man acquired a field with the reward of his wickedness, and falling headfirst, his body burst open and all his intestines spilled out. ¹⁹This became known to all the residents of Jerusalem, so that field was called in their own language Hakeldamach — that is, 'Field of Blood.') ²⁰"For it is written in the book of Psalms, 'Let his dwelling become desolate, and let no one live in it,' and, 'Let another take his position of oversight.' ²¹So one of the men who accompanied us during the entire time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, ²²starting from John's baptism all the way to the day Jesus was taken up from among us. One of these men must join us as a witness of his resurrection. ²³They proposed two men: Joseph called Barsabbas, who was also known as Justus, and Matthias. ²⁴Then they prayed and said, "You, Lord, who know the hearts of all, show which one of these two you have chosen ²⁵Indeed, that he may take part of this ministry and apostleship, from which Judas by sin fell, that he might go to his own location. ²⁶Then they cast lots for them, and the lot fell on Matthias, and he was counted with the eleven apostles.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The Greek ton proton logon ('the first account/word') refers to Luke's Gospel. The verb epoiesameen ('I made/composed') is a standard literary term for writing a work. 'Theophilus' means 'lover of God' or 'friend of God' — whether this is a real person or a symbolic addressee is debated, though the honorific 'most excellent' used in Luke 1:3 suggests a real patron.
1. The phrase 'began to do and to teach' (eerxato poiein te kai didaskein) implies that what Jesus 'began' in the Gospel continues through his apostles in Acts — the ascension does not end Jesus's work but changes its mode.
2. The verb aneleemphthee ('was taken up') is the technical term for the ascension, used again in verse 11 and in 1 Timothy 3:16. The phrase 'through the Holy Spirit' (dia pneumatos hagiou) can modify either 'given instructions' or 'chosen' — the ambiguity is present in the Greek. We follow the more natural reading linking it to the instructions.
2. The word apostolois ('apostles') here designates the specific group Jesus chose, not the broader later usage of the term. Luke uses it as a technical title for the Twelve.
3. The Greek tekmeriois ('proofs, convincing evidence') is a strong term from legal and philosophical discourse — these are not casual sightings but demonstrable evidence. Luke the historian emphasizes the evidentiary quality of the resurrection appearances.
3. The forty-day period (di' heemerōn tesserakonta) is mentioned only here in the New Testament. It echoes Moses' forty days on Sinai (Exodus 24:18) and Elijah's forty-day journey to Horeb (1 Kings 19:8). The risen Jesus uses this time to teach about the kingdom — a post-resurrection seminar on God's reign.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 24:18 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References 1 Kings 19:8 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The Greek synalizomenos is debated: it may mean 'eating together with' (from hals, 'salt') or 'being assembled with' (from syn + halizō). The eating interpretation is favored by many scholars as it emphasizes the physical reality of the risen Jesus sharing meals with his disciples (cf. Luke 24:41-43). We follow this reading.

4. The 'promise of the Father' (teen epangelian tou patros) refers to the Holy Spirit, as clarified in verse 5. This connects to Joel 2:28-29 and Jesus's own promises in Luke 24:49 and John 14-16.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Joel 2:28-29. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. The contrast between John's water baptism and the coming Spirit baptism is a key theme in Luke-Acts (cf. Luke 3:16). The preposition en can mean 'with' or 'in' — 'baptized in the Holy Spirit' and 'baptized with the Holy Spirit' are both valid renderings. We choose 'with' for clarity, though the immersion imagery of 'in' captures the Greek metaphor better.
5. The phrase 'not many days from now' (ou meta pollas tautas heemeras) deliberately avoids specifying the exact timing, building anticipation for the Pentecost event in chapter 2.
6. The imperfect tense eerōtōn ('they were asking, kept asking') suggests persistent questioning, not a single query. The verb apokathistaneis ('are you restoring') carries overtones of the prophetic hope for Israel's restoration (cf. Malachi 4:5-6, where Elijah 'restores' all things). The disciples assume the Spirit's coming means political restoration — Jesus redirects but does not deny the eventual restoration of Israel.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Malachi 4:5-6. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. Jesus distinguishes two temporal concepts: chronous ('times,' referring to duration or chronological periods) and kairous ('seasons,' referring to appointed moments or decisive occasions). Together they cover both the timeline and the turning points of God's plan. The Father alone holds authority (exousia) over these — this is a boundary on human knowledge, not a denial that restoration will occur.
8. This verse serves as the programmatic outline for the entire book of Acts: Jerusalem (chapters 1-7), Judea and Samaria (chapters 8-12), and to the ends of the earth (chapters 13-28). The Greek dynamin ('power') is the root of English 'dynamite' — the Spirit's power is not passive but active and transformative.
8. The word martyres ('witnesses') is the root of English 'martyr.' In Acts, bearing witness will cost some disciples their lives (Stephen in chapter 7, James in chapter 12). Witness and suffering are linguistically and theologically intertwined.
8. The phrase 'ends of the earth' (eschatou tees gees) echoes Isaiah 49:6, where the Servant of the LORD is 'a light for the nations, that my salvation may reach to the end of the earth.' Jesus's commission fulfills the Isaianic servant vision.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 49:6 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The ascension is described with remarkable restraint. The passive epeerthee ('was lifted up') indicates divine action — Jesus does not fly away under his own power but is taken up by God. The cloud (nephelee) echoes the cloud of divine presence throughout the Old Testament: the pillar of cloud in the wilderness (Exodus 13:21), the cloud on Sinai (Exodus 24:15-18), the cloud filling the temple (1 Kings 8:10-11), and the Son of Man coming with clouds (Daniel 7:13). The cloud is not weather but theophany.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 13:21. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 24:15-18. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes 1 Kings 8:10-11. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Daniel 7:13. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The verb atenizantes ('staring intently, gazing fixedly') conveys the disciples' stunned focus — they cannot look away. The 'two men in white' (andres duo en esthesesin leukais) parallels the two figures at the empty tomb in Luke 24:4. Luke identifies them as men rather than angels, though their white clothing signals heavenly origin. Two witnesses fulfill the Deuteronomic requirement for valid testimony (Deuteronomy 19:15).
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Deuteronomy 19:15 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The address 'Men of Galilee' (andres Galilaiot) identifies the apostles by their regional origin and echoes the pattern of address used throughout Acts (cf. 'Men of Israel,' 'Men of Athens'). The promise of return 'in the same way' (hon tropon) — visibly, bodily, with clouds — becomes the foundation of the Christian hope of the second coming. The threefold repetition of 'heaven' (ouranos) in this verse emphasizes both Jesus's destination and the direction from which he will return.
12. A 'Sabbath day's journey' (sabbatou echon hodon) was approximately 2,000 cubits or about half a mile (roughly 1 kilometer), the maximum distance one could travel on the Sabbath according to rabbinic tradition. Luke's geographical note serves both literary and practical purposes — the Mount of Olives is close enough that the disciples could quickly obey Jesus's command to stay in Jerusalem.
12. The Mount of Olives (Elaiōnos, 'of olives') was associated with eschatological expectation in Zechariah 14:4, where the LORD's feet stand on the Mount of Olives at the final redemption.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Zechariah 14:4. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.

13. The 'upper room' (to hyperōon) was likely a large second-story room in a Jerusalem house, possibly the same location as the Last Supper (Luke 22:12). The list of eleven apostles differs in order from Luke 6:14-16 — notably Peter and John are paired here (as they will be partners throughout Acts 1-8), whereas in Luke's Gospel Peter and Andrew are paired as brothers. Simon 'the Zealot' (ho zeelotees) may indicate former membership in the Zealot political movement or simply intense religious zeal.
13. 'Judas son of James' (Ioudas Iakōbou) — the KJV renders this 'brother of James,' but the Greek more naturally reads 'son of.' This is the same figure called Thaddaeus in Matthew 10:3.
14. The Greek proskarterountes ('devoting themselves, persisting, being steadfast in') is a strong word indicating persistent, wholehearted commitment — not casual prayer meetings but intense, unified intercession. The adverb homothymadon ('with one mind, unanimously') is a favorite word of Luke in Acts, appearing ten times to describe the early church's unity.
14. This is Mary's last appearance in the New Testament. She is mentioned among the community of prayer, not elevated above it. The 'brothers' (adelphois) of Jesus are mentioned — the same brothers who did not believe during his ministry (John 7:5) are now part of the believing community. James the brother of Jesus will emerge as a leader of the Jerusalem church (Acts 15, 21).
15. The Greek adelphōn ('brothers') is used inclusively here, as the context clearly includes women (v. 14). We render 'brothers and sisters' to reflect the inclusive usage. The number 120 may be symbolically significant — Jewish tradition required a minimum of 120 men to establish a local council (sanhedrin), so the community meets the threshold for self-governance.
15. The phrase ochlos onomatōn ('a crowd of names') is an unusual expression; 'names' (onomatōn) here means 'persons' — a Semitic idiom reflected in the Greek.
16. Peter's speech demonstrates early Christian hermeneutics: the Psalms of David are read as prophetic, spoken 'through' David by the Holy Spirit. The verb edei ('it was necessary') expresses divine necessity — Judas's betrayal, while morally culpable, fell within God's sovereign plan. The description of Judas as 'guide' (hodēgou) for the arrest party emphasizes his active role in leading them to Jesus.
17. The verb kateerithmemenos ('numbered, counted among') emphasizes that Judas was a genuine member of the Twelve, not an outsider. The word kleeron ('lot, share, portion') is the same word used for the lot-casting in verse 26 — Judas received his allotted portion of the ministry (diakonia), making his betrayal all the more grievous.
18. This parenthetical note (vv. 18-19) is Luke's aside to the reader, not part of Peter's speech. The account of Judas's death differs from Matthew 27:3-10, where Judas hangs himself and the priests buy the field. Various harmonizations have been proposed, but the texts present genuinely different traditions. We render the Greek as given without attempting to reconcile.
18. The Greek preeness genomenos ('falling headfirst/prone') and elakēsen mesos ('burst open in the middle') is graphic and visceral. Luke does not sanitize the scene. The 'reward of wickedness' (misthou tees adikias) echoes the language of Balaam's wages in 2 Peter 2:15.
19. Luke translates the Aramaic name for his Greek-speaking audience. Hakeldamach (κελδαμάχ) represents the Aramaic chaqel dema ('field of blood'). The phrase 'in their own language' (tee idia dialektō autōn) refers to Aramaic, the common spoken language of Jerusalem. Luke's geographical and linguistic notes serve his role as historian writing for a Gentile audience.
20. Peter quotes two Psalms: Psalm 69:25 (LXX 68:26) and Psalm 109:8 (LXX 108:8). The first applies to Judas's vacated place; the second provides the scriptural basis for selecting a replacement. The Greek episkopeen ('position of oversight, office') is the root of 'bishop/episcopate' — the KJV's 'bishopric' is a translation that reads later church structure back into the text. We render it as 'position of oversight' to preserve the original sense.
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalms 69:25 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalm 109:8 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
21. Peter establishes the criteria for apostolic replacement: the candidate must have been a continuous companion of the Twelve throughout Jesus's public ministry. The phrase 'went in and out' (eisēlthen kai exēlthen) is a Semitic idiom for daily life and activity (cf. Deuteronomy 28:6, 'when you come in and when you go out'). This defines apostleship as grounded in firsthand eyewitness experience.
21. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Deuteronomy 28:6. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
22. The timeframe spans from John's baptism (the beginning of Jesus's public ministry) to the ascension. The central qualification is being a 'witness of his resurrection' (martyra tees anastaseōs autou) — the resurrection is the core apostolic testimony in Acts. The verb genesthai ('become') indicates appointment to a role, not ordination in the later ecclesiastical sense.
23. Joseph Barsabbas bears three names: his given name Joseph, his Aramaic patronymic Barsabbas ('son of the Sabbath' or 'son of the elder'), and his Latin cognomen Justus ('the righteous one'). The triple naming reflects the multilingual culture of first-century Jerusalem. Matthias (Maththias) is a shortened form of Mattathias ('gift of the LORD'). Neither man appears elsewhere in Acts after this passage.
24. The title kardiognōsta ('knower of hearts') appears only here and in Acts 15:8 in the New Testament. It is ambiguous whether the prayer is addressed to God the Father or to the risen Jesus — 'Lord' (kyrie) can refer to either in Acts. The verb exelexō ('you have chosen') is aorist, implying that God has already made the selection; the lot merely reveals the divine choice.

25. The phrase 'his own place' (ton topon ton idion) is a grim euphemism for Judas's fate after death. The verb parebee ('turned aside, transgressed') suggests a deliberate departure from the path — Judas did not merely fall but actively deviated. The coupling of 'ministry and apostleship' (diakonia and apostolees) defines the role as both service and commission.
26. Lot-casting was an established Old Testament method for discerning God's will (cf. Proverbs 16:33, 'The lot is cast into the lap, but its every decision is from the LORD'). This is the last recorded use of lots in the New Testament — after Pentecost, the Holy Spirit provides direct guidance, making the mechanical method unnecessary.
26. The verb synkatepsēphisthee ('was counted together with, was enrolled with') is a compound word suggesting formal addition to the group by common vote or reckoning. Matthias becomes the twelfth apostle, restoring the symbolic number that represents the twelve tribes of Israel.

Summary: Acts 2 narrates the day of Pentecost: the Holy Spirit descends on the gathered believers with wind and fire, enabling them to speak in the languages of the nations. Peter delivers the first Christian sermon, interpreting the event through Joel 2, Psalm 16, and Psalm 110. He proclaims Jesus as the crucified and risen Messiah whom God has made both Lord and Christ. Three thousand people respond, are baptized, and form the first church community characterized by apostolic teaching, fellowship, breaking of bread, and prayer.

What Makes This Remarkable: Pentecost was already a major Jewish festival (Shavuot, the Feast of Weeks) celebrating the wheat harvest and, by the first century, also commemorating the giving of the Torah at Sinai. The Spirit's descent on this day reframes Sinai: where the first covenant was given with fire and thunder on a mountain, the new covenant is given with fire and wind in a city. The gift of languages reverses Babel (Genesis 11) — where God confused languages to scatter humanity, God now gives languages to gather humanity. Peter's sermon is a masterpiece of early christological argument, using Israel's own scriptures to demonstrate that Jesus is the promised Messiah.

Translation Friction: The nature of the 'tongues' in verses 4-11 (known human languages vs. ecstatic speech) has been debated throughout church history. Luke's description clearly indicates known languages understood by the international audience. The Joel quotation in verses 17-21 follows the Septuagint rather than the Hebrew text in several details. Peter's argument from Psalm 16 (vv. 25-28) depends on the assumption that David could not have been speaking about himself since David died and was buried.

Connections: The Pentecost event fulfills Jesus's promise in Acts 1:5, 8. Joel 2:28-32 provides the prophetic framework. Psalm 16:8-11 and Psalm 110:1 provide the christological proof texts. The community description in verses 42-47 becomes the model for church life throughout Acts (cf. 4:32-35). The 'last days' language connects to Isaiah 2:2 and Micah 4:1.

¹When the day of Pentecost arrived, they were all together in one place. ²Suddenly a sound came from heaven like a violent rushing wind, and it filled the entire house where they were sitting. ³Tongues as of fire appeared to them, distributing themselves, and one rested on each of them. ⁴They were all filled with the Holy Spirit and began to speak in other languages as the Spirit gave them the ability to speak out. ⁵Now there were devout Jews living in Jerusalem from every nation under heaven. ⁶When this sound occurred, the crowd gathered and was bewildered, because each one was hearing them speak in his own language. ⁷They were astonished and amazed, saying, "Are not all these who are speaking Galileans?" ⁸How is it that each of us hears them in our own native language? ⁹Parthians and Medes and Elamites, and residents of Mesopotamia, Judea and Cappadocia, Pontus and Asia, ¹⁰Phrygia and Pamphylia, Egypt and the parts of Libya near Cyrene, and visitors from Rome — ¹¹Cretans and Arabs alike — we hear them declaring the mighty works of God in our own languages! ¹²They were all astonished and perplexed, saying to one another, "What does this mean?" ¹³But others were mocking and saying, "They are full of sweet wine." ¹⁴But Peter, standing with the eleven, raised his voice and addressed them: "Men of Judea and all who live in Jerusalem, let this be known to you, and pay attention to my words. ¹⁵For these people are not drunk, as you suppose, since it is only nine in the morning. ¹⁶Rather, this is what was spoken through the prophet Joel: ¹⁷"And it will be in the last days,' God says, 'that I will pour out my Spirit on all flesh. Your sons and your daughters will prophesy, your young men will see visions, and your old men will dream dreams. ¹⁸Even on my male servants and female servants I will pour out my Spirit in those days, and they will prophesy. ¹⁹And I will show wonders in the heaven above and signs on the earth below — blood and fire and billows of smoke. ²⁰The sun will be turned to darkness and the moon to blood, before the great and glorious day of the Lord comes. ²¹And it will be that everyone who calls on the name of the Lord will be saved.' ²²"Men of Israel, hear these words: Jesus the Nazarene, a man attested to you by God through mighty works and wonders and signs that God performed through him in your midst, as you yourselves know — ²³Him, while delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, you possess removed, and by corrupt hands have crucified and slain. ²⁴But God raised him up, having freed him from the agony of death, because it was not possible for him to be held by it. ²⁵For David says concerning him: 'I saw the Lord always before me, for he is at my right hand so that I will not be shaken. ²⁶Therefore my heart was glad and my tongue rejoiced; moreover, my flesh also will live in hope, ²⁷Because you will not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt you suffer your Holy One to see corruption. ²⁸You have made known to me the paths of life; you will fill me with joy in your presence.' ²⁹"Brothers, I can speak to you confidently about the patriarch David: he both died and was buried, and his tomb is with us to this day. ³⁰Since he was a prophet and knew that God had sworn an oath to him that he would seat one of his descendants on his throne, ³¹Indeed, he seeing this prior to spoke of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not departed in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption. ³²This Jesus God raised up, and of this we are all witnesses. ³³Therefore, having been exalted to the right hand of God and having received from the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, he has poured out this that you both see and hear. ³⁴For David did not ascend into the heavens, but he himself says: 'The Lord said to my Lord, "Sit at my right hand, ³⁵Until I make your foes your footstool. ³⁶Therefore let the entire house of Israel know with certainty that God has made him both Lord and Christ — this Jesus whom you crucified." ³⁷When they heard this, they were pierced to the heart and said to Peter and the rest of the apostles, "Brothers, what should we do?" ³⁸Peter said to them, "Repent and be baptized, each of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the forgiveness of your sins, and you will receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. ³⁹For the promise is for you and for your children and for all who are far off — everyone whom the Lord our God calls to himself." ⁴⁰With many other words he solemnly testified and kept urging them, saying, "Be saved from this crooked generation!" ⁴¹So those who received his message were baptized, and about three thousand people were added that day. ⁴²They devoted themselves to the apostles' teaching and to fellowship, to the breaking of bread and to prayer. ⁴³Aw e came upon everyone, and many wonders and signs were being done through the apostles. ⁴⁴All who believed were together and held everything in common. ⁴⁵They would sell their possessions and belongings and distribute the proceeds to all, as anyone had need. ⁴⁶Every day they continued to meet together with one purpose in the temple courts, and breaking bread from house to house, they shared their meals with joy and sincerity of heart, ⁴⁷They praised God and enjoyed the goodwill of all the people. And every day the Lord added to their number those who were being saved.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The Greek symplērousthai ('to be fulfilled, to arrive in fullness') suggests not merely that the day came but that it reached its appointed fullness — a theologically loaded term. Pentecost (pentēkostē, 'fiftieth') fell fifty days after Passover. As a harvest festival (Shavuot), it was one of three pilgrimage feasts requiring attendance in Jerusalem, explaining the international crowd described in verses 5-11.
1. The phrase epi to auto ('in one place' or 'together') echoes 1:15 and emphasizes the unity of the community at the moment of the Spirit's descent.
2. The Greek pnoē ('wind, breath, blast') is related to pneuma ('spirit/wind') — the wordplay connects the physical phenomenon to the Holy Spirit (pneuma hagian). The wind comes 'from heaven' (ek tou ouranou), marking its divine origin. The verb eplērōsen ('filled') anticipates the believers being 'filled' with the Spirit in verse 4. The violence of the wind (biaias, 'forceful, violent') recalls the theophany at Sinai (Exodus 19:16-19) and Elijah's experience at Horeb (1 Kings 19:11).
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 19:16-19. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on 1 Kings 19:11. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.

3. The Greek diamerizomenai ('distributing themselves, dividing') describes the fire separating into individual flames — one for each person. The word glōssai ('tongues') does double duty: the fire appears in tongue-like shapes, and the result is speaking in tongues (languages). Fire is a consistent symbol of divine presence in the Old Testament: the burning bush (Exodus 3:2), the pillar of fire (Exodus 13:21), and the fire on Sinai (Exodus 19:18). That the fire rests on 'each one' (hena hekaston) emphasizes the individual, personal nature of the Spirit's coming — not corporate only but personal.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 3:2 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 13:21 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 19:18 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The passive eplēsthēsan ('were filled') indicates divine action — the Spirit fills them; they do not generate the experience themselves. The phrase heterais glōssais ('other tongues/languages') is clarified by verses 6-11 as known human languages, not ecstatic speech. The verb apophthengesthai ('to speak out, to declare boldly') is rare in the New Testament (used only here, v. 14, and 26:25) and carries the connotation of inspired, prophetic utterance — weighty proclamation, not babbling.
5. The phrase 'from every nation under heaven' (apo pantos ethnous tōn hypo ton ouranon) is hyperbolic but reflects the reality that the Jewish diaspora extended throughout the Roman Empire and beyond. These are not tourists but katoikountes ('residing, dwelling') — diaspora Jews who had settled in Jerusalem, likely for religious reasons. The word eulabeis ('devout, reverent, God-fearing') characterizes them as pious Jews, not yet Christians.
6. The 'sound' (phōnēs) likely refers to the sound of the wind from verse 2 rather than the speaking in tongues. The verb synechythē ('was bewildered, confounded, thrown into confusion') is a strong word indicating deep cognitive dissonance — they cannot make sense of what they are experiencing. The phrase tē idia dialektō ('in his own dialect/language') specifies that this is not generic babbling but precise, recognizable languages corresponding to each listener's mother tongue.
7. The double expression existanto kai ethaumazon ('were astonished and amazed') piles up terms for shock. Galileans were known for their distinctive accent (cf. Matthew 26:73) and were generally regarded by Judeans as less educated and culturally unsophisticated. The rhetorical question highlights the incongruity: how can these provincial Galileans speak fluently in the sophisticated languages of the wider world?
8. The phrase 'in which we were born' (en hē egennēthēmen) specifies these as mother tongues — the languages heard in childhood, the deepest linguistic identity. This detail rules out the interpretation that the audience merely understood a common language like Aramaic or Greek; they each heard their own distinct dialect.
9. The list begins with regions east of the Roman Empire (Parthia, Media, Elam — modern Iran and Iraq) and moves westward. This geographical sweep represents the entire known world. The inclusion of 'Judea' is surprising in a Jerusalem setting — some scholars emend it to 'Armenia' or 'India,' but the text may simply mean Jews from the Judean countryside as opposed to Jerusalem residents, or it may represent the complete geographical coverage Luke intends.
10. The list continues through Asia Minor (Phrygia, Pamphylia), North Africa (Egypt, Libya/Cyrene), and reaches Rome itself. The 'visitors from Rome' (hoi epidēmoutēs Rhōmaioi) are temporary residents or pilgrims, distinguished from the permanent Jerusalem settlers of verse 5. Cyrene in Libya had a large Jewish community; Simon of Cyrene who carried Jesus's cross came from there (Luke 23:26).
11. The phrase 'Jews and converts' (Ioudaioi te kai prosēlytoi) is a parenthetical clarification covering the entire list — all these nationalities include both ethnic Jews and Gentile converts to Judaism. The content of the Spirit-enabled speech is 'the mighty deeds of God' (ta megaleia tou theou) — not random utterances but coherent praise of God's great acts. This echoes the Hebrew magnalia Dei tradition found in the Psalms.
11. The list ends with Cretans (island Mediterranean) and Arabs (the desert south and east), completing the compass-point coverage of the known world.
12. The verb diēporoun ('were perplexed, were at a loss') indicates genuine intellectual struggle, not dismissal. These are devout people trying to make sense of an unprecedented event. The question 'What does this mean?' (ti thelei touto einai, literally 'What does this wish to be?') sets up Peter's sermon, which will provide the scriptural interpretation.
13. The verb diachleuazontes ('mocking, jeering, sneering') is intensified by the prefix dia-, indicating thorough mockery. Gleukos ('sweet wine, new wine') was unfermented or partially fermented grape juice — lower in alcohol than aged wine. The accusation is somewhat absurd: it would take large quantities of sweet wine to produce drunkenness, especially in the morning. Peter addresses this directly in verse 15.
14. Peter stands 'with the eleven' (syn tois hendeka), showing apostolic solidarity — he speaks as their representative, not as an individual. The verb apophthengato ('spoke out, declared') is the same rare verb used in verse 4 for Spirit-inspired speech, linking Peter's sermon to the same Spirit-empowerment that produced the tongues. The phrase enōtistashe ('give ear, listen carefully') is a Septuagintalism echoing the prophetic call to attention (cf. Isaiah 1:2).
15. The 'third hour' (hōra tritē) is approximately 9:00 AM by Jewish time reckoning (counting from sunrise at roughly 6:00 AM). Peter's argument from the time of day is practical: even on feast days, people did not drink before the morning prayers and sacrifices were complete. The defense is simple but effective — and it is merely the setup for the real explanation that follows.

16. Peter identifies the Pentecost event as the fulfillment of Joel's prophecy — 'this is that' (touto estin to) is a direct identification formula. The preposition dia ('through') presents Joel as the instrument through whom God spoke, consistent with the view of prophetic inspiration expressed in 1:16.
17. Peter's quotation modifies Joel 2:28 (LXX 3:1) in a significant way: Joel has 'after these things' (meta tauta), but Peter substitutes 'in the last days' (en tais eschatais hēmerais), explicitly interpreting Pentecost as the inauguration of the eschatological age. The pouring out of the Spirit is universal in scope — 'all flesh' (pasan sarka) breaks barriers of gender (sons and daughters), age (young and old), and as verse 18 will add, social status.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Joel 2:28-32. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. Joel's original text has 'servants and female servants' without the possessive 'my'; Peter's version (following the LXX variant) adds 'my' (mou), transforming social servants into God's own servants. This universalization of the Spirit breaks the social hierarchy: slaves and free, male and female all receive the prophetic Spirit. The addition of 'and they will prophesy' (kai prophēteusousin) is not in the Hebrew of Joel 2:29 — Peter extends the prophetic promise explicitly to the lowest social stratum.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Joel 2:28-32 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. Peter adds 'above' (anō) and 'below' (katō) to Joel's text, emphasizing the cosmic scope of God's activity. The triad 'blood and fire and billows of smoke' may echo the Sinai theophany (Exodus 19:18) or anticipate the destruction of Jerusalem in AD 70. The Greek atmida kapnou ('vapor/billow of smoke') suggests thick, rising columns of smoke, not mere wisps.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Joel 2:28-32. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 19:18. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
20. Joel's Hebrew has 'great and terrible' (gadol v'nora); the LXX renders nora as epiphanē ('glorious, manifest, splendid') rather than 'terrible' — a significant interpretive shift from fear to revelation. The 'day of the Lord' (hēmeran kyriou) is a major prophetic concept throughout the Old Testament (Isaiah 2:12, Amos 5:18-20, Zephaniah 1:14-18), originally a day of judgment that Peter now connects to the events surrounding Jesus.

21. This is the climactic line of the Joel quotation and the hinge of Peter's sermon. In Joel, 'the Lord' (kyrios) translates YHWH — calling on the name of Israel's God. Peter will argue in verses 34-36 that Jesus is this Lord (kyrios), so that calling on the name of Jesus is calling on the name of the LORD. The verb sōthēsetai ('will be saved') encompasses both immediate rescue and eschatological salvation — the same word Paul will use in Romans 10:13 when quoting this same verse.
21. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Joel 2:28-32. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
22. Peter shifts from Joel's prophecy to its christological application. The designation 'the Nazarene' (ton Nazōraion) identifies Jesus by his hometown, grounding the theological claims in historical specificity. The triad 'mighty works and wonders and signs' (dynamesin kai terasin kai sēmeiois) covers the full range of Jesus's miraculous activity. Crucially, Peter says God performed these 'through him' (di' autou) — the miracles attest God's endorsement of Jesus. The appeal to the audience's own knowledge ('as you yourselves know') grounds the argument in shared public memory.
23. Peter holds two truths in tension without resolving the paradox: Jesus's death was both 'the determined plan and foreknowledge of God' (tē hōrismenē boulē kai prognōsei tou theou) and the moral responsibility of those who crucified him. The 'lawless men' (anomōn) are the Roman soldiers who physically performed the crucifixion — 'lawless' because they were outside the Torah. But the 'you' (the Jewish audience) are also implicated: 'you put to death' (aneilate). Peter does not soften either side of this tension.
24. The phrase 'agony of death' (tas ōdinas tou thanatou) literally means 'birth pangs of death' — the image is of death in labor, unable to hold its prey, forced to 'give birth' to the risen Jesus. The LXX of Psalm 18:5 (= 2 Samuel 22:6) uses the same phrase. The declaration 'it was not possible' (ouk ēn dynaton) is theologically profound: death's inability to hold Jesus is not merely historical but ontological — it lies in the nature of who Jesus is.
24. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalm 18:5. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
24. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes 2 Samuel 22:6. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
25. Peter now quotes Psalm 16:8-11 (LXX 15:8-11), attributing the words to David and applying them to Jesus. The Greek proorōmēn ('I saw beforehand, I kept before me') translates the Hebrew shiviti ('I have set'). The Lord at the right hand provides stability and protection — 'I will not be shaken' (mē saleuthō) expresses unshakeable confidence in divine presence.

25. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalms 16:8-11 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
26. The LXX has 'tongue' (glōssa) where the Hebrew of Psalm 16:9 has 'glory' (kavod) — a significant textual divergence. The Hebrew kavod ('glory, weightiness') likely refers to the inner self or honor, which the LXX translators rendered as 'tongue' (perhaps reading kavod as kaved, 'liver,' an organ associated with deep emotion). The phrase 'my flesh will live in hope' (hē sarx mou kataskēnōsei ep' elpidi) becomes Peter's key proof text: if David's flesh 'lives in hope,' whose flesh found that hope fulfilled?
26. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalms 16:8-11. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
27. Hades (hadēn) is the Greek equivalent of the Hebrew Sheol — the realm of the dead, not the later Christian concept of hell as a place of punishment. 'Decay' (diaphthoran) translates the Hebrew shachat, which can mean 'pit' or 'corruption/decay.' The LXX's choice of diaphthora ('decay, corruption') is crucial for Peter's argument: David's body did see decay (v. 29), but Jesus's did not (v. 31). The term 'Holy One' (hōsion) translates the Hebrew chasid ('faithful, loyal, devoted one').
27. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalms 16:8-11. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
28. The 'paths of life' (hodos zōēs) implies not merely survival but the way to fullness of life — a path through death to resurrection. The final image — 'joy in your presence' (euphrosynēs meta tou prosōpou sou, literally 'gladness with your face') — is the ultimate hope: restored face-to-face relationship with God. The Psalm quotation ends on this note of joy, which Peter will now apply to the risen Jesus.
28. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalms 16:8-11 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
29. Peter's argument is straightforward: David cannot have been speaking about himself in Psalm 16 because David died, was buried, and his tomb is still present in Jerusalem — his body did see decay. The word parrhēsia ('confidently, boldly, with freedom of speech') indicates Peter is making a potentially controversial claim about Israel's greatest king. David's tomb was a well-known Jerusalem landmark, so the point is verifiable.
29. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalm 16. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
30. Peter identifies David as a prophet, not merely a king and poet — this justifies reading the Psalms as prophetic. The oath refers to 2 Samuel 7:12-13 and Psalm 132:11, where God promises David an eternal dynasty. The Greek ek karpou tēs osphyos autou ('from the fruit of his loins') is a Hebraic idiom for physical descendants. We render this as 'one of his descendants' for natural modern English while noting the idiom.
30. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes 2 Samuel 7:12-13 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
30. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalm 132:11 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
31. Peter now makes the interpretive move explicit: David's words in Psalm 16 were prophetic speech about the Messiah's resurrection. The two key claims from Psalm 16:10 — not abandoned to Hades and no bodily decay — are applied to Jesus's resurrection. Peter's argument depends on the physical nature of the resurrection: Jesus's actual body did not decompose.
31. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 16. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
32. The sentence is emphatic in Greek: 'This Jesus' (touton ton Iēsoun) is placed first for emphasis — this specific historical person, not an abstract concept. The claim to be 'witnesses' (martyres) circles back to 1:8 — the apostles fulfill their commission as witnesses to the resurrection. The 'all' (pantes) includes the eleven standing with Peter, a claim that could be immediately verified or challenged by the audience.
33. Peter connects the ascension (exaltation to God's right hand), the reception of the Spirit from the Father, and the Pentecost event in a single theological chain: Jesus is exalted Jesus receives the Spirit from the Father Jesus pours out the Spirit on his followers. The verb exechēen ('poured out') directly echoes the Joel quotation in verse 17 ('I will pour out my Spirit'). The appeal to sensory evidence — 'what you both see and hear' (blepete kai akouete) — grounds the theological claim in observable phenomena.
34. Peter now quotes Psalm 110:1 (LXX 109:1), the most frequently cited Old Testament text in the New Testament. The same argument applies: David did not ascend to heaven, so these words must refer to someone greater than David. The double 'Lord' (eipen ho kyrios tō kyriō mou) reflects the Hebrew 'the LORD (YHWH) said to my lord (adoni)' — David's lord is the Messiah, who sits at God's right hand.
34. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalms 110:1. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
35. The image of enemies as a footstool reflects ancient Near Eastern conquest imagery — victorious kings literally placed their feet on the necks of conquered enemies (cf. Joshua 10:24). The Psalm envisions a period of reigning at God's right hand until all opposition is subdued. Peter leaves the implication hanging: if Jesus is now at God's right hand, then the subjugation of all enemies is underway.
35. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalms 110:1 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.

35. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Joshua 10:24 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
36. This is the sermon's climax. The adverb asphalōs ('with certainty, beyond doubt') demands intellectual assent, not mere emotional response. 'Lord and Christ' (kyrion kai christon) — the two titles Peter has argued for throughout the sermon converge: kyrios from Psalm 110:1 and christos from Psalm 16. The final phrase — 'this Jesus whom you crucified' (touton ton Iēsoun hon hymeis estaurōsate) — is deliberately confrontational, pressing the audience to reckon with the implications of having killed God's anointed one.
36. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 110:1. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
36. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 16. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
37. The verb katenygēsan ('were pierced, were cut to the heart') is a powerful word describing deep emotional and spiritual conviction — it appears only here in the New Testament. The audience's question 'What should we do?' (ti poiēsōmen) is the proper response to conviction: not debate but action. Their address 'brothers' (adelphoi) shows they still consider Peter and the apostles fellow Jews.
38. Peter's response contains four elements: repentance, baptism, forgiveness, and the gift of the Spirit. The verb metanoēsate ('repent') means to change one's mind and direction — the Greek equivalent of the Hebrew teshuvah ('return'). The preposition epi ('in/on/upon') with 'the name of Jesus Christ' indicates that baptism is performed on the authority of and in connection with Jesus. The preposition eis before 'forgiveness' can mean 'for the purpose of' or 'on the basis of' — both translations are grammatically possible.
39. The scope of the promise expands in three concentric circles: 'you' (the present audience), 'your children' (the next generation), and 'all who are far off' (tous eis makran). The phrase 'those far off' echoes Isaiah 57:19 and Ephesians 2:13, 17 — it can refer to future generations, to diaspora Jews, or to Gentiles. Peter may not yet fully grasp the Gentile implications, but Luke's reader does. The final clause — 'everyone whom the Lord our God calls' — grounds the universal offer in divine initiative.
39. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 57:19. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
40. Luke summarizes the rest of Peter's sermon rather than recording it fully — 'many other words' (heterois logois pleiosin) indicates this is an excerpt. The verb diemartyrato ('solemnly testified') carries legal weight, while parekalei ('kept urging, exhorting') is imperfect tense indicating ongoing, persistent appeal. The phrase 'crooked generation' (geneas tēs skolias) echoes Moses' words in Deuteronomy 32:5 and Jesus's own language in Matthew 17:17.
40. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Deuteronomy 32:5 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
41. The number 'about three thousand' (hōsei trischiliai) represents a massive response to a single sermon. The passive prosetethēsan ('were added') implies divine agency — God adds to the community. The word psychai ('souls/people') is used in the Semitic sense of 'persons,' not in the Greek philosophical sense of immortal souls. The logistics of baptizing three thousand people in a single day likely involved the numerous mikva'ot (ritual immersion pools) near the Temple, which have been archaeologically confirmed.
42. This verse is often called the four marks of the early church: teaching (didachē), fellowship (koinōnia), breaking of bread (klasis tou artou), and prayers (proseuchais). The verb proskarterountes ('devoting themselves') is the same word used in 1:14 — the persistence that characterized the pre-Pentecost community continues and intensifies. 'Breaking of bread' may refer to ordinary communal meals, the Lord's Supper, or both — Luke does not distinguish. The plural 'prayers' (proseuchais) may indicate set times of prayer, possibly following the Jewish daily prayer schedule.
43. The word phobos ('fear, awe, reverence') here indicates reverential awe rather than terror — the community lived with a sense of the sacred. The 'wonders and signs' (terata kai sēmeia) performed through the apostles echo the description of Jesus's own ministry in verse 22, showing continuity between Jesus's work and the apostles' work through the Spirit. The imperfect tense egineto ('were being done') indicates ongoing, repeated miraculous activity.
44. The phrase epi to auto ('together, in the same place') echoes verses 1 and 1:15 — unity of place reflects unity of heart. The economic sharing described here — 'held everything in common' (eichon hapanta koina) — is voluntary community, not enforced communism. The sharing arises from the koinōnia described in verse 42, not from external compulsion. Luke presents this as an ideal, not necessarily as a permanent economic model.
45. Luke distinguishes between 'possessions' (ktēmata, typically real property like land) and 'belongings' (hyparxeis, personal goods and assets). The imperfect tenses (epipraskon, diemerizon) indicate ongoing, repeated action — they sold as needs arose, not in a single liquidation event. Distribution was based on need (chreia), not equality — a principle of sufficiency rather than uniformity.
46. The early believers maintained a dual pattern of worship: public gathering in the temple (en tō hierō, referring to the temple courts, especially Solomon's Portico per 3:11) and private fellowship in homes (kat' oikon). They did not abandon Jewish temple worship but supplemented it with distinctly Christian home gatherings. The word aphelotēti ('sincerity, simplicity, generosity') occurs only here in the New Testament — it suggests an unaffected, genuine quality of heart free from pretense.
47. The chapter ends with two complementary realities: human praise ('praising God') and divine growth ('the Lord was adding'). The present participle sōzomenous ('those being saved') indicates an ongoing process, not a completed transaction — salvation in Acts is both an event and a journey. The phrase epi to auto ('to their number, together') echoes the opening of the chapter, creating a literary frame: the community that gathered in verse 1 has grown from 120 to over 3,000.

47. Luke does not use the word 'church' (ekklēsia) here, though the KJV adds it. The SBLGNT simply has 'adding together' — the community is described by its life rather than by a title.

Summary: Acts 3 narrates the healing of a man lame from birth at the Beautiful Gate of the temple by Peter and John. The miracle draws a crowd in Solomon's Portico, and Peter delivers his second major sermon, arguing that the healing was performed through faith in the name of Jesus — the same Jesus whom the people of Jerusalem rejected and handed over for crucifixion. Peter calls for repentance and identifies Jesus as the prophet like Moses foretold in Deuteronomy 18, and as the fulfillment of the Abrahamic covenant promise that through Abraham's offspring all the families of the earth would be blessed.

What Makes This Remarkable: The healing at the temple gate is the first recorded miracle of the apostolic church after Pentecost. Peter's declaration 'Silver and gold I do not have, but what I do have I give you' (v. 6) has become one of the most quoted lines in Acts. The sermon presents a distinctive christological argument: Jesus is both the Suffering Servant (v. 13, 'glorified his servant Jesus') and the Prophet like Moses (v. 22). The concept of 'times of refreshing' (v. 19) and 'the restoration of all things' (v. 21) introduce eschatological themes unique to this speech.

Translation Friction: The Greek pais in verse 13 can mean 'servant' or 'child' — its connection to the Servant Songs of Isaiah (especially Isaiah 52:13) is likely but debated. Peter's accusation in verses 13-15 is direct and pointed ('you denied the Holy and Righteous One and asked for a murderer to be granted to you'), raising questions about corporate responsibility versus individual guilt. The phrase 'restoration of all things' (apokatastaseōs pantōn) in verse 21 has been interpreted variously as universal salvation, cosmic renewal, or Israel's political restoration.

Connections: The healing fulfills Jesus's promise that the apostles would do the works he did (John 14:12). Peter's sermon connects to the Abrahamic covenant (Genesis 12:3, 22:18), the Mosaic promise of a prophet (Deuteronomy 18:15-19), and the Servant Songs of Isaiah. The 'times of refreshing' language connects to prophetic hopes in Isaiah 28:12 and 32:15. The identification of Jesus as 'the Holy and Righteous One' (v. 14) echoes messianic titles from Isaiah and the Psalms.

1Now Peter and John were going up to the temple at the hour of prayer, the ninth hour. 2A man who had been lame from birth was being carried, whom they placed daily at the temple gate called the Beautiful Gate to beg for alms from those entering the temple. 3When he saw Peter and John about to enter the temple, he asked them for money. 4Peter looked intently at him, as did John, and said, "Look at us." 5He fixed his attention on them, expecting to receive something from them. 6But Peter said, "I have no silver or gold, but what I do have, I give to you: in the name of Jesus Christ the Nazarene — walk!" 7Taking him by the right hand, he raised him up, and immediately his feet and ankles were made strong. 8Leaping up, he stood and began to walk, and he entered the temple with them, walking and leaping and praising God. 9Every one of the people noticed him walking and praising God:. 10They recognized that it was he which sat for alms at the Beautiful gate of the temple — then they were overflowing with wonder and amazement at that which had happened to him. 11While the man clung to Peter and John, all the people ran together to them at what is called Solomon's Portico, utterly astonished. 12When Peter saw this, he addressed the people: "Men of Israel, why are you amazed at this? Why do you stare at us as though we made him walk by our own power or godliness? 13The God of Abraham and of Isaac and of Jacob, the God of our fathers, has glorified his servant Jesus, whom you handed over and denied before Pilate, when he had decided to release him. 14You denied the Holy and Righteous One and asked for a murderer to be given to you. 15You killed the Author of life, but God raised him from the dead. We are witnesses of this. 16And on the basis of faith in his name, his name has made this man strong — this man whom you see and know. The faith that comes through Jesus has given him this complete health in the presence of all of you. 17"And now, brothers, I know that you acted in ignorance, as did your rulers. 18But what God foretold through the mouth of all the prophets — that his Christ would suffer — he has fulfilled in this way. 19Repent therefore, and turn back, so that your sins may be wiped away, ²⁰He will send Jesus Christ, which prior to was preached to you:. ²¹Whom the heaven must accept until the times of restitution of all matters, which God has spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the present age began. ²²Moses said, 'The Lord your God will raise up for you a prophet like me from among your brothers. You must listen to him in everything he tells you. ²³And it will be that every person who does not listen to that prophet will be utterly destroyed from among the people.' ²⁴And all the prophets, from Samuel and those who came after him, as many as have spoken, also proclaimed these days. ²⁵You are the sons of the prophets and of the covenant that God made with your fathers, saying to Abraham, 'And in your offspring all the families of the earth will be blessed.' ²⁶God raised up his servant and sent him to you first, to bless you by turning each of you from your wicked ways."

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The ninth hour (approximately 3:00 PM) was one of the three daily prayer times in Jewish practice, coinciding with the afternoon tamid (daily sacrifice). Peter and John's continued participation in temple worship shows that the early believers remained within Judaism. The imperfect anebanion ('were going up') captures them in mid-journey, setting the scene for the encounter at the gate.
2. The phrase 'lame from his mother's womb' (chōlos ek kolias mētros autou) establishes that this is a congenital condition — not an injury but a lifelong disability, making the healing all the more remarkable. The Beautiful Gate (tēn Horaian) is likely the Nicanor Gate, a massive bronze gate on the east side of the temple connecting the Court of the Gentiles to the Court of Women. Its identification is debated among archaeologists. The man's daily placement at this gate means he was a well-known figure, which matters for the public impact of the miracle (cf. v. 10).
3. The man asks for eleēmōsynēn ('alms, charitable gift') — the standard term for religiously motivated charity. He has no expectation of healing; his request is purely economic. The imperfect ērōta ('was asking, kept asking') suggests ongoing, repeated begging — this was his daily routine.
4. The verb atenisas ('looked intently, fixed his gaze') is the same word used for the disciples staring at the sky during the ascension (1:10). Peter's fixed gaze signals that something more than a casual encounter is about to happen. The command 'Look at us' (blepson eis hēmas) is not merely a request for eye contact but a call to attention — something is about to be given that is far more than coins.
5. The verb epeichen ('fixed attention, turned toward') shows the man's responsive engagement. His expectation (prosdokōn) is limited to financial assistance — the gap between what he expects and what he is about to receive creates the narrative tension.
6. Peter's declaration has a poetic rhythm in Greek: argyrion kai chrysiōn ouch hyparchei moi ('silver and gold do not belong to me'). The phrase 'in the name of Jesus Christ the Nazarene' (en tō onomati Iēsou Christou tou Nazōraiou) is not a magic formula but an invocation of Jesus's authority and power. The command peripatei ('walk!') is a present imperative — 'start walking and keep walking.' The name of Jesus becomes the central controversy in chapter 4.
7. The physical act of grasping the right hand (piasas tēs dexias cheiros) is both practical assistance and symbolic — the right hand signifies strength and authority. Luke, traditionally identified as a physician, provides medical detail: the baseis ('feet, soles') and sphyra ('ankles, ankle bones') are specific anatomical terms. The verb estereōthēsan ('were made strong, were solidified') indicates instant structural transformation — bones and muscles that had never functioned properly were immediately restored.
8. The sequence of verbs captures the man's escalating joy: exallomenos ('leaping up'), estē ('stood'), periepatei ('walked around'), hallomenos ('leaping'), ainōn ('praising'). The repetition of walking and leaping reflects someone testing and celebrating abilities he has never had. His entrance into the temple is theologically significant: lame persons were excluded from certain temple areas (cf. 2 Samuel 5:8). The healing restores not just physical function but full participation in worship. The scene echoes Isaiah 35:6: 'Then the lame will leap like a deer.'

8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 35:6: — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The public nature of the miracle is emphasized — 'all the people' (pas ho laos) in the temple courts witnessed it. This public setting in the temple provides both the audience for Peter's sermon and the provocation for the authorities' response in chapter 4.
10. The verb epeginōskon ('recognized, identified') confirms the man's identity — this is not a stranger but the well-known beggar at the temple gate. The combination thambous kai ekstaseōs ('wonder and astonishment') describes an overwhelming emotional response. Ekstasis (the root of 'ecstasy') literally means 'standing outside oneself' — the crowd is beside themselves with amazement.
11. The healed man 'clung to' (kratountos) Peter and John — a detail of physical attachment that is both grateful and dramatic. Solomon's Portico (stoa Solomōntos) was a covered colonnade along the eastern side of the temple's outer court. It was a traditional gathering place for teaching (cf. John 10:23) and would become the regular meeting place of the early church (5:12). The adjective ekthambol ('utterly astonished') intensifies the amazement already described in verse 10.

12. Peter immediately redirects the crowd's attention from the apostles to God. The two potential misunderstandings he addresses — 'our own power' (idia dymamei) and 'our own godliness' (eusebeia) — represent the temptation to attribute the miracle to human ability or human merit. This deflection establishes a pattern repeated throughout Acts: miracles are not the apostles' achievement but God's work through them.
13. Peter begins with the covenant formula 'The God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob' (cf. Exodus 3:6, 15), anchoring his christology in Israel's covenant history. The word paida ('servant/child') echoes Isaiah 52:13 LXX ('my servant shall be exalted and glorified'), identifying Jesus with Isaiah's Suffering Servant. We render 'servant' rather than 'Son' because the Isaianic servant background is primary here, though the filial resonance is present.
13. The accusation is sharp: 'you handed over and denied' (paredōkate kai ěrnēasthe) before Pilate, who wanted to release Jesus. The contrast heightens the guilt: even the pagan governor judged more rightly than the covenant people.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 3:6 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 52:13 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. The titles 'the Holy One' (ton hagion) and 'the Righteous One' (ton dikaion) are messianic designations drawn from the Old Testament (cf. Isaiah 53:11, 'my righteous servant'). The contrast is devastating: they rejected the Holy and Righteous One and chose a murderer (andrea phonea) — Barabbas (Luke 23:18-25). The irony is sharp: they asked for the life of a killer while demanding the death of the life-giver (v. 15).
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 53:11. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The title archēgon tēs zōēs ('author/originator/prince of life') is strikingly paradoxical: the source of life was put to death. The Greek archēgos can mean 'founder, pioneer, author, prince, leader' — it appears again in 5:31 and Hebrews 2:10, 12:2. 'Author of life' captures the creative agency implied. The contrast 'you killed... God raised' is the core kerygma (proclamation) of early Christianity, repeated throughout Acts.
16. This verse is grammatically complex, with 'name' and 'faith' mentioned twice each. The 'name' (onoma) of Jesus represents his person, authority, and power — it is not a magical incantation but a relationship of trust. The word holoklērian ('complete health, perfect wholeness') appears only here in the New Testament — it means total, nothing-missing wholeness, covering both physical healing and restoration to full community membership.
17. After the sharp accusations of verses 13-15, Peter softens with a recognition of mitigating circumstance: ignorance (agnoian). This echoes Jesus's prayer on the cross, 'Father, forgive them, for they do not know what they are doing' (Luke 23:34). The inclusion of 'your rulers' (hoi archontes hymōn) extends the ignorance defense to the Sanhedrin and priestly leadership. Ignorance does not remove guilt but makes repentance possible — the door is not shut.
18. Peter claims that the prophets collectively ('all the prophets,' pantōn tōn prophētōn) spoke of the Messiah's suffering. This is a bold hermeneutical claim — the concept of a suffering Messiah was not the dominant expectation in Second Temple Judaism. Peter reads the entirety of prophetic literature as converging on the cross. The verb prokatēngeilen ('foretold, announced beforehand') emphasizes that the suffering was not an accident but a plan.
19. Peter uses two verbs: metanoēsate ('repent,' change your mind) and epistrepsate ('turn back, return'). Together they capture the full biblical concept of repentance: a cognitive change (meta-noeo) and a directional change (epi-strephō). The verb exaleipthēnai ('be wiped away, blotted out') pictures sins being erased from a record — the same word used for wiping tears from eyes in Revelation 21:4.
20. The phrase kairoi anapsyxēōs ('times of refreshing') is unique to this passage. Anapsysis means 'cooling, relief, refreshment' — it suggests respite from hardship, a divine breath of fresh air. These times come 'from the presence of the Lord' (apo prosōpou tou kyriou, literally 'from the face of the Lord'). The verb prokecheirismenon ('appointed beforehand, designated in advance') indicates that Jesus's messianic role was established before the events of his earthly life.
21. The phrase apokatastaseōs pantōn ('restoration of all things') is theologically rich and debated. Apokatastasis means 'restoration to a former state' and was later adopted by Origen and others to argue for universal salvation. In Peter's context, it likely refers to the prophetic hope of cosmic renewal — the restoration of all that sin and evil have damaged (cf. Isaiah 65:17, Romans 8:19-22). Jesus remains in heaven 'until' (achri) these times arrive, implying his return will coincide with or inaugurate the restoration.
22. Peter quotes Deuteronomy 18:15, 18-19 — Moses' promise of a future prophet who would be 'like me' (hōs eme). In Jewish tradition, this promise was understood to refer to a specific future prophet (cf. John 1:21, 6:14). Peter identifies Jesus as this prophet. The verb anastēsei ('will raise up') carries a double meaning in context: God 'raised up' Jesus both in the sense of appointing him as prophet and in the sense of raising him from the dead.
22. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Deuteronomy 18:15. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
23. Peter intensifies the Deuteronomy passage by adding exolethreuthēsetai ('will be utterly destroyed'), which echoes the language of covenant curse (cf. Leviticus 23:29, 'cut off from the people'). The warning is severe: failure to heed the prophet-like-Moses is not mere ignorance but covenant violation. This sharpens the call to repentance — rejecting Jesus is not a neutral choice but an act with eschatological consequences.

23. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Leviticus 23:29 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
24. Peter extends the prophetic witness beyond Moses to include the entire prophetic tradition beginning with Samuel, traditionally considered the first of the classical prophets (after Moses). The phrase 'these days' (tas hēmeras tautas) is deliberately ambiguous — it includes the present time of fulfillment as well as the future consummation. Peter's point is that the entire prophetic corpus converges on the events now unfolding.
25. Peter quotes Genesis 22:18 (cf. 12:3), connecting the present moment to the Abrahamic covenant. The word diathēkē ('covenant') is the Septuagint translation of the Hebrew berit. The phrase 'sons of the prophets and of the covenant' (huiōi tōn prophētōn kai tēs diathēkēs) means heirs and beneficiaries — the audience stands in the direct line of covenant promise. The word sperma ('seed, offspring') is singular, which later Christian interpretation (cf. Galatians 3:16) applied to Christ individually, though the original context includes collective meaning.
26. The sermon ends where it began — with God's servant (paida, the same word as v. 13). The word prōton ('first') is crucial: the gospel goes to Israel first, before extending to the Gentiles — a priority that Luke will trace through the entire book of Acts (cf. 13:46). The blessing is defined not as material prosperity but as moral transformation: 'turning each of you from your wicked ways' (apostrephein hekaston apo tōn ponērion hymōn). The verb anastēsas ('having raised up') again carries the double sense of 'appointing' and 'resurrecting.'

Summary: Acts 4 recounts the arrest of Peter and John by the temple authorities following the healing in chapter 3. Brought before the Sanhedrin, Peter boldly declares that the healing was done in the name of Jesus Christ the Nazarene, whom they crucified but God raised. He proclaims that salvation is found in no one else. The council, unable to deny the miracle but unwilling to accept the message, threatens the apostles and releases them. Peter and John return to the believing community, which prays for boldness. The Spirit shakes the meeting place, and the chapter closes with a description of the community's radical sharing of possessions.

What Makes This Remarkable: Peter's declaration in verse 12 — "There is no other name under heaven given among people by which we must be saved" — is one of the most definitive christological claims in the New Testament. The Sanhedrin's dilemma in verses 14-16 is striking: the healed man stands before them as undeniable evidence, yet they cannot accept its implications. The community prayer in verses 24-30 quotes Psalm 2 and provides the first recorded instance of the early church interpreting its persecution through the lens of the Psalms. Barnabas appears for the first time (v. 36).

Translation Friction: The number of believers reaches 'about five thousand men' (v. 4), raising questions about whether this includes only males or the total community. Peter is described as 'filled with the Holy Spirit' (v. 8) though he was already filled at Pentecost — Luke presents Spirit-filling as repeated rather than one-time. The community's property sharing (vv. 32-37) is idealized and will be complicated by the Ananias and Sapphira episode in chapter 5.

Connections: The Sanhedrin trial echoes Jesus's own trial before the same body (Luke 22:66-71). Peter's use of Psalm 118:22 (the rejected stone) connects to Jesus's use of the same text (Luke 20:17). The community prayer's citation of Psalm 2 (vv. 25-26) provides the theological framework for understanding opposition to the church. The sharing of possessions continues the pattern from 2:44-45 and anticipates 5:1-11.

¹While they were speaking to the people, the priests, the captain of the temple, and the Sadducees confronted them, ²They were deeply disturbed that the apostles were teaching the people and proclaiming that the resurrection of the dead had been proven through Jesus. ³They seized them and put them in custody until the next day, for it was already evening. ⁴But many of those who heard the message believed, and the number of the men came to about five thousand. ⁵The next day their rulers and elders and scribes assembled in Jerusalem, ⁶Annas the elevated priest, and Caiaphas, and John, and Alexander, and as numerous as were of the kindred of the elevated priest, were gathered as one at Jerusalem. ⁷They placed them in the center and began to question them: "By what power or by what name did you do this?" ⁸Then Peter, filled with the Holy Spirit, said to them, "Rulers of the people and elders, ⁹If we are being questioned today about an act of kindness shown to a disabled man and how he was healed, ¹⁰Be it known to you all, and to every one of the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom you crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him does this man stand here before you whole. ¹¹This Jesus is the stone that was rejected by you, the builders, which has become the cornerstone. ¹²And there is salvation in no one else, for there is no other name under heaven given among people by which we must be saved." ¹³Now when they saw the boldness of Peter and John and realized that they were uneducated, ordinary men, they were astonished. And they recognized that they had been with Jesus. ¹⁴And seeing the man who had been healed standing with them, they had nothing to say in opposition. ¹⁵After ordering them to leave the council, they conferred with one another, ¹⁶"What should we do with these men?" they asked. "Everyone living in Jerusalem knows they have performed a remarkable miracle, and we cannot deny it." ¹⁷But so that it does not spread any further among the people, let us warn them with threats to speak no longer to anyone in this name." ¹⁸So they called them in and ordered them not to speak or teach at all in the name of Jesus. ¹⁹But Peter and John answered them, "Whether it is right in the sight of God to listen to you rather than to God, you must judge. ²⁰For we are not able to stop speaking about what we have seen and heard." ²¹After threatening them further, they released them, finding no way to punish them because of the people, for everyone was glorifying God for what had happened. ²²For the man on whom this sign of healing had been performed was more than forty years old. ²³When they were released, they went to their own people and reported everything that the chief priests and elders had said to them. ²⁴When they heard this, they raised their voices together to God and said, "Sovereign Lord, you who made the heaven and the earth and the sea and everything in them, ²⁵Who by the mouth of your servant David hast stated, Why did the heathen rage, and the people imagine vain matters? ²⁶The kings of the earth took their stand, and the rulers gathered together against the Lord and against his Anointed One.' ²⁷For truly in this city there gathered together against your holy servant Jesus, whom you anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, along with the Gentiles and the peoples of Israel, ²⁸For to do whatsoever your hand and your counsel determined prior to to be done. ²⁹And now, Lord, consider their threats and grant your servants the ability to speak your word with all boldness, ³⁰Indeed, by stretching forth your hand to heal. And that signs and wonders may be done by the name of your holy child Jesus. ³¹When they had prayed, the place where they were gathered was shaken, and they were all filled with the Holy Spirit and began to speak the word of God with boldness. ³²Now the full number of those who believed were of one heart and soul, and no one said that any of their possessions was their own, but they held everything in common. ³³With great power the apostles continued to give their testimony to the resurrection of the Lord Jesus, and great grace was upon them all. ³⁴There was not a needy person among them, for as many as were owners of lands or houses would sell them and bring the proceeds of what was sold ³⁵Laid them down at the apostles' feet — and distribution was appointed to every man according as he had need. ³⁶Joseph, who was called Barnabas by the apostles (which means 'Son of Encouragement'), a Levite and a native of Cyprus, ³⁷Having land, sold it, and brought the money, and placed it at the messengers' feet.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The 'captain of the temple' (ho stratēgos tou hierou) was the sagan, the second-ranking temple official after the high priest, responsible for temple security. The Sadducees appear as the primary opponents because the apostles' preaching of resurrection directly challenged Sadducean theology, which denied resurrection (Luke 20:27). The verb epestēsan ('confronted, stood over, came upon') has a hostile overtone — this is an official intervention, not a casual interruption.
2. The participle diaponoumenoi ('greatly annoyed, deeply disturbed, indignant') reveals the emotional motivation behind the arrest — this is not calm judicial procedure but irritated reaction. The phrase 'proclaiming in Jesus the resurrection from the dead' (katangelein en tō Iēsou tēn anastasin) can mean either 'proclaiming the resurrection through Jesus' (Jesus as the agent) or 'proclaiming in the case of Jesus the resurrection' (Jesus as the example). Both readings are theologically valid.
3. Jewish law prohibited trials at night (Mishnah Sanhedrin 4:1), so Peter and John are held overnight. The phrase epebalon tas cheiras ('laid hands on, seized') indicates physical arrest. The detail 'it was already evening' (ēn gar hespera ēdē) explains the delay and shows that Peter's sermon lasted through the afternoon.

4. Despite the arrest, the message spreads — Luke consistently shows that persecution cannot stop the gospel's advance. The number 'about five thousand' (hōs chiliades pente) likely refers to the total male believers, not just those converted this day. The word andrōn ('men') may indicate a male-only count following Jewish census conventions, meaning the total community including women and children would be significantly larger.
5. The three groups — rulers (archontas), elders (presbyterous), and scribes (grammateis) — constitute the Sanhedrin, the supreme Jewish council. This is the same body that tried Jesus. Luke's description of a formal assembly emphasizes the gravity of the proceedings.
6. Annas served as high priest from AD 6-15 and remained the power behind the office, which was held by his son-in-law Caiaphas (AD 18-36). Luke calls Annas 'the high priest' reflecting his continued authority and influence. John and Alexander are otherwise unknown — they may be sons of Annas who later held the office. The phrase 'high-priestly family' (genous archieratikou) indicates the aristocratic priestly clan that controlled the temple.
7. The positioning 'in the center' (en tō mesō) reflects formal judicial proceedings — the accused stand surrounded by the seated council. The question about 'power' (dynamei) and 'name' (onomati) is legally significant: they want to know the source of authority behind the miracle. Ironically, their question plays directly into Peter's hands, giving him the opportunity to proclaim the name of Jesus before the highest authority in Israel.
8. The phrase 'filled with the Holy Spirit' (plēstheis pneumatōs hagiou) marks this as Spirit-empowered testimony, fulfilling Jesus's promise in Luke 12:11-12 that the Spirit would teach them what to say when brought before authorities. This is a fresh filling for a specific moment, not a reference back to Pentecost — Luke presents the Spirit's empowerment as dynamic and situational.
9. Peter's opening is rhetorically masterful: he reframes the trial as an absurdity — they are being interrogated for performing a 'good deed' (euergesia, 'act of beneficence'). The word sesōtai ('has been healed/saved') is deliberately ambiguous: sōzō means both 'to heal' and 'to save,' and Peter will exploit this double meaning in verse 12.
10. Peter answers the council's question from verse 7 with maximum directness: the name is Jesus Christ the Nazarene. The parallel clauses 'whom you crucified / whom God raised' compress the entire gospel into a single antithesis. The healed man standing before them (parestēken... hygiēs) is living evidence that cannot be cross-examined away. Peter addresses both the council ('all of you') and the broader nation ('all the people of Israel').
11. Peter quotes Psalm 118:22, a text Jesus himself applied to his own rejection (Luke 20:17). The 'builders' (oikodomōn) are now explicitly identified as the council members themselves — 'by you, the builders' (hyph' hymōn tōn oikodomōn). The 'cornerstone' (kephalēn gōnias, literally 'head of the corner') is the foundational or capstone that holds the structure together. The one the builders rejected has become the most important stone.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalms 118:22. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. This verse is the theological climax of Peter's defense. The double negative construction — 'salvation in no one else' (ouk estin en allō oudeni hē sōtēria) and 'no other name' (oude onoma estin heteron) — is emphatic and exclusive. The word sōtēria ('salvation') now carries its full theological weight, expanding from the physical healing of the lame man to cosmic salvation. The verb dei ('it is necessary, must') indicates divine necessity — salvation through Jesus is not one option among many but the singular provision of God.
13. The word parrhēsia ('boldness, frank speech, freedom of expression') was prized in Greek democratic culture as the right of free citizens. The council expects deference from agrammatōi ('uneducated, unlettered' — meaning without formal rabbinic training) and idiōtai ('ordinary, untrained, laymen'). The final recognition — 'they had been with Jesus' (syn tō Iēsou ēsan) — is both identification and explanation: their boldness comes from the same source as their former master's.
14. The healed man's physical presence is the unanswerable argument. The verb tetherapeumenon ('having been healed') is a perfect participle — the healing is a completed fact with ongoing results. The phrase ouden eichon anteipein ('they had nothing to say against it') captures the council's impotence: they cannot deny the miracle, cannot discredit the witnesses, and cannot refute the theology.
15. The private deliberation (syneballon pros allēlous, 'conferred with one another') reveals the political nature of the proceedings. The Sanhedrin is not seeking truth but managing a crisis. Luke's ability to report their private discussion may come from later sources, possibly including council members who became believers (cf. 6:7, 'a great many of the priests became obedient to the faith').
16. The council's admission is extraordinary: 'a remarkable sign' (gnōston sēmeion) that is 'evident to all' (phaneron) and 'we cannot deny it' (ou dynametha arneisthai). They acknowledge the miracle's reality while seeking to suppress its implications. The word sēmeion ('sign') rather than teras ('wonder') is significant — a sign points beyond itself to a greater reality, which the council refuses to follow.
17. The council's strategy is containment: stop the message from spreading (dianeēthē, 'to spread, to distribute'). Their concern is not theological truth but public order and their own authority. The phrase 'this name' (tō onomati toutō) — they avoid saying 'Jesus' — betrays their awareness that the name itself carries power. The irony is thick: threatening people for performing an act of mercy.
18. The prohibition covers both informal speech (phtheggēsthai, 'to utter, to speak out') and formal instruction (didaskein, 'to teach'). The phrase to katholou ('at all, entirely') makes the ban absolute. This is a direct attempt to silence the apostolic witness — the very thing Jesus commissioned them to do in 1:8.
19. Peter and John's response establishes the principle of divine authority over human authority — when the two conflict, God takes precedence. The phrase 'in the sight of God' (enōpion tou theou) appeals to the council's own religious convictions. The invitation 'you must judge' (krinate) turns the tables: the judges are now asked to judge their own judgment. This principle of civil disobedience on religious grounds echoes the Hebrew midwives (Exodus 1:17) and Daniel's companions (Daniel 3:16-18).

- 19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 1:17. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
- 19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Daniel 3:16-18. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
- 20. The double negative ou dynametha... mē lalein ('we are not able not to speak') expresses compulsion: the apostles literally cannot stop themselves. Their witness is not a choice that can be turned off but an inner necessity driven by what they have personally experienced (eidamen, 'we saw'; ēkousamen, 'we heard'). The eyewitness nature of their testimony is again emphasized.
- 21. The council is caught between their desire to punish and their fear of the people (dia ton laon). Public opinion constrains their power — the same dynamic that protected Jesus during his ministry (Luke 20:19). The phrase 'everyone was glorifying God' (pantes edoxazon ton theon) shows that popular sentiment sided with the apostles and their miracle.
- 22. Luke adds this detail to emphasize the miracle's magnitude: the man had been lame for over forty years, making the healing all the more remarkable and undeniable. The age also echoes Israel's forty years in the wilderness — a symbolic period of waiting that ends in restoration.
- 23. The phrase 'their own people' (tous idious) designates the believing community — a distinct group identity is forming. The apostles' first instinct after release is corporate: they return to the community to share and to pray. The response that follows (vv. 24-30) is communal, not individual.
- 24. The word homothymadon ('with one accord, together') is the characteristic Lukan term for early church unity. The address despota ('Sovereign Lord, Master') is distinct from kyrios ('Lord') — it emphasizes God's absolute sovereignty and is used in contexts of prayer under persecution (cf. Revelation 6:10). The creation language echoes Exodus 20:11 and Psalm 146:6, establishing God's authority as Creator before addressing the specific crisis.
- 24. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 20:11. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
- 24. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalm 146:6. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
- 25. The community quotes Psalm 2:1-2, a royal psalm traditionally read at the coronation of Davidic kings. The attribution is triply layered: God spoke through the Holy Spirit through David — a rich statement of inspiration. David is called pais ('servant'), the same title applied to Jesus in verse 27 and 3:13, creating a servant-parallel between David and Jesus. The Greek text here is grammatically difficult in the manuscripts; we follow the SBLGNT reading.
- 25. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalms 2:1-2 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
- 26. The Psalm speaks of 'kings' and 'rulers' conspiring against 'the LORD and his Anointed' (christou, 'Christ/Messiah'). The community will apply these four categories to specific historical actors in verses 27-28. The phrase 'his Anointed One' (tou christou autou) preserves the messianic title in its original context before the christological application.
- 26. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalms 2:1-2. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
- 27. The Psalm's categories are now mapped onto the passion narrative: 'kings' = Herod Antipas (Luke 23:6-12), 'rulers' = Pontius Pilate, 'nations' = the Gentile (Roman) soldiers, 'peoples' = the peoples of Israel. The verb echrisas ('you anointed') connects Jesus's title 'Christ/Anointed' to a specific divine act — God anointed Jesus, making the conspiracy against him a conspiracy against God's own chosen one.
- 28. The community affirms what Peter stated in 2:23: the crucifixion was simultaneously a human crime and a divine plan. The verb proōrisen ('predestined, determined beforehand') is a strong predestination term. 'Your hand and your plan' (hē cheir sou kai hē boulē sou) attributes both the power and the purpose to God. The prayer finds comfort not in denying the opposition's reality but in placing it within God's sovereign design.
- 29. The prayer's request is remarkable for what it does not ask for: they do not pray for the persecution to stop, for their enemies to be punished, or for deliverance from danger. They pray for boldness (parrhēσίας) — the same quality the council noticed in Peter and John (v. 13). The word doulois ('servants, slaves') expresses their self-understanding as God's owned people, contrasting with the authority claims of the Sanhedrin.
- 30. The prayer ends by requesting continued miraculous activity 'through the name of your holy servant Jesus' — the very name the council tried to suppress. 'Stretching out your hand' (tēn cheira sou ekteinein) is an Old Testament image of divine intervention (Exodus 6:6, Deuteronomy 4:34). The prayer boldly asks for more of exactly what provoked the persecution.
- 30. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 6:6 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
- 30. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Deuteronomy 4:34 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
- 31. The physical shaking (esaleuthē) of the meeting place recalls Sinai (Exodus 19:18) and serves as divine confirmation of the prayer. This is a second Pentecost-like experience — the community is again filled with the Spirit, confirming that Spirit-filling is repeatable and responsive to prayer. The prayer asked for boldness (v. 29); the answer is immediate: they 'began to speak the word of God with boldness' (elaloun ton logon tou theou meta parrhēσίας). Prayer requested, God granted.
- 31. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 19:18. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.

32. The phrase 'one heart and soul' (kardia kai psychē mia) echoes Deuteronomy 6:5 ('with all your heart and all your soul') — the community's unity fulfills the Shema's call to wholehearted devotion. The radical economic sharing — no one claiming private ownership — is described as voluntary disposition ('no one said,' elegen, indicating attitude) rather than compulsion. This idealizing summary will be qualified by the Ananias and Sapphira episode in 5:1-11.
32. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Deuteronomy 6:5. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
33. The twin superlatives — 'great power' (dynamei megalē) and 'great grace' (charis megalē) — characterize the community. The apostles' central message remains the resurrection (tēs anastaseōs tou kyriou Iēsou). The 'great grace' upon them could refer to divine favor, the community's generosity, or both — Luke allows the ambiguity to stand.
34. The phrase 'not a needy person among them' (oude endees tis ēn en autois) echoes Deuteronomy 15:4, where Moses envisions a community with no poor 'if you carefully obey the LORD your God.' The early church is presented as fulfilling the Deuteronomic ideal. Property owners voluntarily liquidated assets to fund communal welfare. The imperfect tenses (pōlountes epheron) indicate repeated, ongoing action over time.
34. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 15:4. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
35. Placing funds 'at the apostles' feet' (para tous podas tōn apostolōn) is a gesture of deference and trust — the apostles served as administrators of the communal fund. Distribution was need-based (kathoti an tis chreian eichen), not equal — the principle was sufficiency, not uniformity. This administrative arrangement will later require modification as the community grows (6:1-6).
36. Barnabas is introduced here and will become one of the most important figures in Acts (chapters 9-15). His given name is Joseph; 'Barnabas' is a nickname meaning 'Son of Encouragement' (huios paraklēseōs) or 'Son of Consolation' — the Aramaic bar-nabas. The etymology is debated: nabas may relate to Aramaic or Hebrew words for 'prophecy' or 'consolation.' As a Levite, he would have had temple responsibilities; as a Cypriot, he represents the diaspora Jewish community.
37. Barnabas serves as the positive example of communal generosity, standing in deliberate contrast to Ananias and Sapphira in the immediately following passage (5:1-11). His action — selling property and giving the full proceeds — illustrates the ideal described in verses 34-35. The fact that Luke names him specifically, among many who presumably did the same, suggests that Barnabas's generosity was especially notable or that his later prominence warranted this introduction.

Summary: Acts 5 opens with the sobering story of Ananias and Sapphira, who sell property but secretly withhold part of the proceeds while claiming to give the full amount. Peter confronts each of them separately, and both fall dead — producing great fear in the church. The chapter then describes the apostles' ongoing miraculous ministry in Solomon's Portico, including healings that draw crowds from surrounding cities. The Sanhedrin arrests the apostles again, but an angel releases them from prison. Brought before the council, the apostles declare they must obey God rather than men. Gamaliel's wise counsel — 'if this plan is of God, you will not be able to overthrow them' — leads the council to release them after a flogging.

What Makes This Remarkable: The Ananias and Sapphira episode serves as a warning parallel to Achan's sin in Joshua 7 — just as the conquest community was purified through judgment, so the church community faces divine discipline for deception. Peter's statement 'You have not lied to men but to God' (v. 4) and the reference to 'testing the Spirit of the Lord' (v. 9) reveal a high pneumatology — the Holy Spirit is identified with God himself. Gamaliel, the great Pharisaic teacher (Paul's mentor per 22:3), provides the most moderate voice on the council. His historical examples (Theudas and Judas the Galilean) frame the Christian movement within the broader context of first-century Jewish messianic movements.

Translation Friction: The deaths of Ananias and Sapphira raise difficult theological questions about divine judgment in the age of grace. Peter makes clear in verse 4 that the property was theirs to keep and the proceeds were theirs to control — the sin was deception, not withholding. Gamaliel's historical references present chronological difficulties: Josephus places Theudas's revolt around AD 44-46, after Gamaliel's speech, raising questions about Luke's sources.

Connections: The Ananias and Sapphira story connects to Achan (Joshua 7) and to the theme of testing God (Deuteronomy 6:16). The apostles' prison release anticipates Peter's more dramatic release in chapter 12. Gamaliel's 'if it is from God' principle echoes Elijah's challenge on Carmel (1 Kings 18). The apostles' joy in suffering (v. 41) connects to Jesus's teaching in Luke 6:22-23.

¹But a man named Ananias, together with his wife Sapphira, sold a piece of property. ²Kept back part of the price, his wife as well being privy to it, and brought a specific part, and laid it at the apostles' feet. ³But Peter said, "Ananias, why has Satan filled your heart to lie to the Holy Spirit and to keep back part of the proceeds of the land? ⁴While it remained unsold, was it not your own? And after it was sold, were the proceeds not at your disposal? Why is it that you conceived this deed in your heart? You have not lied to people but to God." ⁵When Ananias heard these words, he fell down and breathed his last. And great fear came upon all who heard of it. ⁶The young men rose, wrapped his body, carried him out, and buried him. ⁷About three hours later his wife came in, not knowing what had happened. ⁸Peter said to her, "Tell me, did you sell the land for this amount?" She said, "Yes, for that amount." ⁹Peter said to her, "How is it that you agreed together to test the Spirit of the Lord? Look, the feet of those who buried your husband are at the door, and they will carry you out as well." ¹⁰Immediately she fell down at his feet and breathed her last. When the young men came in, they found her dead, and they carried her out and buried her beside her husband. ¹¹Great fear came upon the whole church and upon all who heard about these things. ¹²Now many signs and wonders were being done among the people through the hands of the apostles. They were all together in Solomon's Portico, ¹³No one else dared to associate with them publicly, yet the people held them in high regard. ¹⁴Yet more than ever believers were added to the Lord, multitudes of both men and women, ¹⁵To these people a degree that they brought forth the sick into the streets, and placed them on beds and couches, that at the least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them. ¹⁶The people also gathered from the towns surrounding Jerusalem, bringing the sick and those tormented by unclean spirits, and they were all healed. ¹⁷Then the high priest and all who were with him (that is, the party of the Sadducees) rose up, filled with jealousy, ¹⁸Placed their hands on the messengers, and put them in the common prison. ¹⁹But during the night an angel of the Lord opened the prison doors, brought them out, and said, ²⁰"Go, stand in the temple and speak to the people all the words of this Life." ²¹When they heard this, they entered the temple at daybreak and began to teach. When the high priest and those with him arrived, they convened the Sanhedrin — the full council of elders of the people of Israel — and sent to the jail to have the apostles brought. ²²But when the officers arrived at the jail, they did not find them there. So they returned and reported, ²³"We found the jail securely locked and the guards standing at the doors, but when we opened them, we found no one inside." ²⁴When the captain of the temple and the chief priests heard these words, they were greatly perplexed about them, wondering what this might come to. ²⁵Then someone came and reported to them, "Look! The men you put in jail are standing in the temple and teaching the people." ²⁶Then the captain went with the officers and brought them back, but without force, for they were afraid of being stoned by the people. ²⁷When they had brought them, they stood them before the Sanhedrin, and the high priest questioned them, ²⁸Indeed, declaring, Did not we straitly command you that you should not teach in this name? and, take notice, you have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine, and intend to bring this man's blood upon us. ²⁹But Peter and the apostles answered, "We must obey God rather than men. ³⁰The God of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom you killed by hanging him on a tree. ³¹God exalted him at his right hand as Leader and Savior, to give repentance to Israel and forgiveness of sins. ³²And we are witnesses to these things, and so is the Holy Spirit, whom God has given to those who obey him." ³³When they heard this, they were enraged and wanted to kill them. ³⁴But a Pharisee in the Sanhedrin named Gamaliel, a teacher of the law respected by all the people, stood up and ordered that the men be put outside for a short time. ³⁵He said to them, "Men of Israel, be careful about what you are about to do with these men. ³⁶For some time ago Theudas rose up, claiming to be somebody, and a number of men, about four hundred, joined him. He was killed, and all who followed him were dispersed and came to nothing. ³⁷After him, Judas the Galilean rose up in the days of the census and drew people away after him. He too perished, and all who followed him were scattered. ³⁸So in the present case I tell you: stay away from these men and let them go. For if this plan or this work is of human origin, it will fail. ³⁹But if it is from God, you will not be able to overthrow them — you may even be found fighting against God!" ⁴⁰They were persuaded by him, and after calling in the apostles, they had them flogged, ordered them not to speak in the name of Jesus, and released them. ⁴¹So they left the presence of the Sanhedrin, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to be dishonored for the sake of the Name. ⁴²And every day, in the temple and from house to house, they did not stop teaching and proclaiming the good news that Jesus is the Christ.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The name Ananias (Hananiah) means 'the LORD is gracious' — the irony is sharp given the story that follows. Sapphira (Sapphirē) means 'beautiful' or 'sapphire.' Luke introduces them together because their sin is collaborative. The word ktēma ('property, possession') refers to real estate, likely land, connecting to the land-selling of 4:34-37.
2. The verb enosphisato ('kept back, embezzled, misappropriated') is the same word the LXX uses for Achan's theft from the devoted things in Joshua 7:1 — Luke deliberately echoes that earlier story of deception within a covenant community. The phrase syneiduiēs kai tēs gynaikos ('his wife also being privy to it') establishes Sapphira as a knowing co-conspirator, not an unwitting partner.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Joshua 7:1. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. Peter attributes the deception to satanic influence — 'Satan filled your heart' (eplērōsen ho satanas tēn kardian sou) — using filling language that contrasts with the Spirit-filling of 4:31. Where the Spirit fills for bold truth, Satan fills for calculated deception. The verb pseusasthai ('to lie to, to deceive') takes the Holy Spirit as its object, establishing the Spirit as a personal being who can be lied to, not merely an impersonal force.
4. Peter makes two crucial clarifications. First, the giving was voluntary — the property was Ananias's to keep and the money his to control (en tē sē exousia, 'in your own authority'). The sin was not in withholding but in pretending to give everything while secretly keeping back. Second, Peter equates lying to the Holy Spirit (v. 3) with lying to God (v. 4) — a direct identification of the Spirit with God that has significant trinitarian implications.
5. The verb exepsyxen ('breathed his last, expired') is clinical — Luke does not say God struck him dead, though the implication is divine judgment. The 'great fear' (phobos megas) that results is distinct from the reverential awe of 2:43; this is genuine terror at the holiness of God active in the community. The immediate death without opportunity for repentance parallels the judgment on Achan (Joshua 7:25) and on Nadab and Abihu (Leviticus 10:1-2).
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Joshua 7:25 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Leviticus 10:1-2 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The 'young men' (neōteroi) appear to serve as practical helpers in the community — not an official order but an informal group of younger members. The verb synesteilan ('wrapped up') refers to preparing the body for burial. Jewish custom required prompt burial, usually on the same day of death. The speed of the burial — no mention of mourning rites — adds to the narrative's severity.
7. The three-hour interval (hōs hōrōn triōn diastēma) provides time for the burial and sets up the separate testing of Sapphira. Her ignorance of Ananias's death (mē eiduia to gegonos) means her responses are uncoerced — she has a genuine opportunity to tell the truth.
8. Peter's question gives Sapphira an opportunity for honesty — 'for this amount?' (ei tosoutou) presumably indicating the amount Ananias had presented. Her affirmative answer (nai, tosoutou) confirms her complicity in the deception. She could have told the truth and been spared; the test reveals her heart.
9. The phrase synephōnēthē hymin ('you agreed together') reveals a deliberate conspiracy — the same verb gives us 'symphony,' indicating coordinated action. 'Testing the Spirit of the Lord' (peirasai to pneuma kyriou) echoes Israel's sin of testing God in the wilderness (Exodus 17:2, Deuteronomy 6:16). Peter's announcement of the burial party at the door is simultaneously a prophecy and a judgment.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 17:2. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 6:16. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The word parachrēma ('immediately') emphasizes the instantaneous nature of the judgment. The parallel with Ananias's death is exact — the same verb exepsyxen ('breathed her last') and the same agents (the young men) performing the burial. She is buried 'beside her husband' (pros ton andra autēs) — united in death as they were in deception.
11. This is the first use of ekklēsia ('church, assembly, congregation') in Acts. The word derives from ek-kaleō ('to call out') and was used in the Septuagint to translate the Hebrew qahal ('assembly'). Luke introduces the term at a moment of holy fear rather than celebration. The fear extends beyond the church to outsiders ('all who heard'), creating a double effect: purification within and reverence without.
12. The summary returns to the pattern of 2:43 — signs and wonders accompany the apostles' ministry. Solomon's Portico (Stoa Solomōntos) has become the church's regular public meeting place (cf. 3:11). The phrase 'through the hands' (dia tōn cheirōn) emphasizes that the apostles are instruments, not the source of the miraculous power.
13. The 'rest' (tōn loipōn) likely refers to non-believers or marginal sympathizers who respected the movement but feared full commitment — perhaps because of the Ananias and Sapphira episode. The verb etolma ('dared') suggests that joining required courage given the Sanhedrin's opposition and the community's evident holiness. The paradox is that fear kept some away while admiration drew others in.
14. Despite (or because of) the fear, the church grows — 'more than ever' (mallon) indicates accelerating growth. Luke explicitly notes 'both men and women' (andrōn te kai gynaikōn), a detail that emphasizes the inclusive nature of the community and corrects the male-only counting of 4:4.

15. The detail about Peter's shadow (hē skia) is remarkable — people believed that even his shadow carried healing power. Luke does not explicitly confirm that shadow-healings occurred, only that people sought them. The parallel to Jesus's ministry is clear: people touched the fringe of Jesus's garment seeking healing (Luke 8:44). The two types of beds — klinarion ('small bed, cot') and krabattos ('pallet, stretcher, mat') — indicate both middle-class and poor patients.
16. The ministry expands beyond Jerusalem to the surrounding region, beginning to fulfill the geographical progression of 1:8 ('Judea'). Two categories of affliction are distinguished: physical illness (astheneis, 'sick, weak') and spiritual oppression (ochloumenous hypo pneumatōn akathartōn, 'harassed/tormented by unclean spirits'). The comprehensive result — 'they were all healed' (etherapeuonto hapantes) — mirrors Jesus's own healing ministry (Luke 6:19).
17. The word zēlou can mean either 'zeal' or 'jealousy' — in this context, jealousy at the apostles' popularity is the primary motivation, though it may include religious zeal against perceived heresy. Luke identifies the opposition party as Sadducees, consistent with 4:1 — the resurrection preaching is the primary irritant for this group that denies resurrection. The word haireisis ('party, sect, school of thought') is the root of 'heresy' but does not yet carry that negative connotation.
18. Unlike the previous arrest of just Peter and John (4:3), all the apostles are now arrested. The 'public jail' (tērēsei dēmosia) distinguishes this from private temple detention — this is official civic imprisonment, escalating the conflict. The phrase epebalon tas cheiras ('laid hands on') indicates physical seizure.
19. The phrase angelos kyriou ('angel of the Lord') echoes the Hebrew malak YHWH — a divine messenger acting on God's authority. The prison escape is narrated with minimal dramatic detail, in contrast to Peter's more elaborate release in chapter 12. The angel does not merely free them but gives them a commission (v. 20), indicating that the release serves the mission, not merely the apostles' comfort.
20. The angel's command is direct and defiant: return to the very place where you were arrested and continue teaching. The phrase 'all the words of this Life' (panta ta rhēmata tēs zōēs tautēs) is remarkable — the gospel message is summarized as 'this Life,' identifying the message with the life it proclaims. Some scholars capitalize 'Life' here as a christological reference.
21. The apostles obey the angel immediately, entering the temple 'at daybreak' (hypo ton orthron), the earliest possible hour. Meanwhile, the Sanhedrin assembles in formal session. Luke emphasizes the full body: both the synedrion ('Sanhedrin, council') and the gerousia ('council of elders, senate') — possibly the same body described two ways, or a reference to the plenary session as opposed to an executive committee. The dramatic irony builds: the council sends for prisoners who are no longer there.
22. The hypēretai ('officers, servants, attendants') are the temple police, subordinate to the captain of the temple (v. 26). The empty jail creates a narrative parallel to the empty tomb — divine power has overturned human confinement.
23. The officers' report emphasizes the impossibility of the escape by natural means: the prison was 'securely locked' (kekleisimenon en pasē asphaleia), the guards were at their posts ('standing at the doors'), yet the prisoners were gone. Every security measure was intact. The supernatural nature of the release is undeniable, adding to the council's bewilderment in the next verse.
24. The verb diēporoun ('were perplexed, were at a loss') is the same word used for the Pentecost crowd's confusion (2:12). The authorities cannot explain what has happened and fear where events are heading. The phrase ti an genoito touto ('what this might become') reveals anxiety about the movement's trajectory — a concern Gamaliel will address in verses 35-39.
25. The dramatic irony reaches its peak: while the council deliberates about the missing prisoners, the apostles are doing exactly what they were arrested for — standing in the temple teaching. The unnamed reporter's exclamation 'Look!' (idou) captures the absurdity of the situation from the authorities' perspective.
26. The detail 'without force' (ou meta bias) is significant — the temple police feared the people more than they feared the Sanhedrin's displeasure. The ironic reversal is complete: the authorities are the ones afraid, while the apostles who should be afraid are freely teaching. The threat of stoning (mē lithasthōsin) shows how popular the apostles had become.
27. The scene replicates 4:7 — the apostles again stand before the council. The repetition underscores the escalating conflict: the first hearing produced warnings (4:17-18), this one will produce violence (v. 40).
28. The high priest's complaint inadvertently confirms the success of the apostles' mission: 'you have filled Jerusalem with your teaching' (peplērōkate tēn Ierousalēm tēs didachēs hymōn). The phrase 'this man's blood upon us' (to haima tou anthrōpou toutou) is deeply ironic: in Matthew 27:25, the crowd accepted precisely this responsibility ('His blood be on us and on our children'). The high priest avoids saying Jesus's name, calling him 'this man' (tou anthrōpou toutou).
29. This sharpens the principle stated in 4:19. There, Peter asked the council to judge; here, he simply declares the verdict. The verb peitharchein ('to obey, to submit to authority') is a strong term for compliance with authority — the apostles recognize the Sanhedrin's authority but assert a higher one. The word dei ('it is necessary, one must') expresses divine compulsion, not personal preference.
30. Peter again begins with 'the God of our fathers' (ho theos tōn paterōn hēmōn), maintaining the claim that the apostles represent authentic Israelite faith. The verb diecheirisasthe ('killed, laid violent hands on, did away with') is blunt. The phrase 'hanging on a tree' (kremasantes epi xylou) deliberately evokes Deuteronomy 21:22-23, where a person hung on a tree is 'cursed by God.' Peter turns the curse into an argument: Jesus bore the covenant curse, but God reversed it through resurrection (cf. Galatians 3:13).

30. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Deuteronomy 21:22-23 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
31. The twin titles archēgon ('Leader, Author, Pioneer') and sōtēra ('Savior') recall 3:15 ('Author of life'). Jesus is exalted 'at his right hand' (tē dexia autou), echoing Psalm 110:1 and Peter's Pentecost sermon (2:33). The purpose of the exaltation is dual: 'to give repentance' (dounai metanoian) and 'forgiveness of sins' (aphesin hamartiōn). That repentance is something Jesus 'gives' suggests it is a divine gift, not merely a human decision.
32. Peter names two witnesses: the apostles ('we are witnesses') and the Holy Spirit. The Spirit's witness is not merely internal but observable — the Pentecost phenomena and the ongoing miraculous signs are the Spirit's public testimony. The Spirit is given to 'those who obey' (tois peitharchousin) — the same verb used in verse 29, creating an implicit contrast: the apostles obey God and receive the Spirit; the council disobeys and opposes.
33. The verb diepionto ('were cut through, were sawn in two') describes a visceral, furious reaction — literally 'cut to the quick.' This is rage, not conviction (contrast the pierced hearts of 2:37). The same word appears in 7:54 at Stephen's trial. The council's impulse is murderous (eboulonto anein, 'wanted to kill') — the conflict has escalated from warnings (4:17) to threats (4:21) to now lethal intent.
34. Gamaliel I (Rabban Gamaliel the Elder) was one of the most respected rabbis of the first century, grandson of Hillel, and the teacher of Saul of Tarsus (22:3). He is the first Pharisee to speak in Acts — significantly, the Pharisees are more moderate than the Sadducees toward the Christian movement, a pattern Luke emphasizes throughout. His title nomodidaskalos ('teacher of the law') and the description timios ('honored, respected') underscore his authority.
35. Gamaliel addresses the council, not the apostles. His opening — prosechete heautois ('take heed to yourselves, be careful about yourselves') — warns that rash action could harm the council's own interests and reputation. His concern is pragmatic wisdom, not theological agreement with the apostles.
36. Gamaliel's first historical example is Theudas, who 'claimed to be somebody' (legōn einai tina heauton) — a vague messianic or prophetic pretension. Josephus records a Theudas who led a movement around AD 44-46 (Antiquities 20.97-98), but that would be after this speech. Either Luke or Josephus has the chronology wrong, or there were two figures named Theudas (not uncommon), or the historical problem remains unresolved. Gamaliel's point is clear regardless: the movement died with its leader.
37. Judas the Galilean is well-attested historically. He led a revolt against the Roman census of AD 6 conducted by Quirinius (Josephus, Antiquities 18.1-10, War 2.118). His movement gave rise to the Zealot ideology that Rome must be resisted as a matter of religious principle. Josephus records that his descendants continued the revolutionary tradition. Gamaliel's point: another self-proclaimed leader, another failure.
38. Gamaliel's counsel is pragmatic: let time decide. If the movement is merely human (ex anthrōpōn), it will collapse on its own as Theudas's and Judas's did. The verb katalythēsetai ('will be destroyed, will be overthrown, will come to nothing') indicates complete dissolution. His argument does not require the council to approve of the apostles — only to wait.
39. The warning theomachoi ('fighters against God, God-fighters') is Gamaliel's strongest word — to oppose what God has initiated is not merely futile but sacrilegious. The compound word theo-machoi appears only here in the New Testament. Gamaliel does not say the movement is from God; he says the risk of opposing it if it is from God is too great to take. His logic is asymmetric: if human, no harm in waiting; if divine, catastrophic to oppose.
40. The council accepts Gamaliel's advice but still inflicts punishment. The verb deirantes ('having beaten, having flogged') refers to the malkot or makkot — the standard judicial flogging of up to thirty-nine lashes (2 Corinthians 11:24). This is not a light punishment; it left the body severely bruised and lacerated. The repeated command 'not to speak in the name of Jesus' (mē lalein epi tō onomati tou Iēsou) echoes 4:18 — the order the apostles have already declared they cannot obey.
41. The apostles' response to flogging is joy (chairontes) — a radical reversal of normal human response to violence. They consider it an honor to 'be dishonored' (atimasthēnai) for 'the Name' (tou onomatos). The paradox is intentional: worldly shame becomes spiritual honor. This fulfills Jesus's beatitude: 'Blessed are you when people hate you... on account of the Son of Man. Rejoice in that day and leap for joy' (Luke 6:22-23). 'The Name' without further specification has become a shorthand for Jesus.
42. The chapter's final verse shows complete defiance of the council's order: 'they did not stop' (ouk epauonto) teaching. The dual venue — temple and homes — continues the pattern from 2:46. The content of their message is precisely identified: 'the Christ, Jesus' (ton christon Iēsou) — that Jesus is the Messiah. The verb euangelizomenoi ('proclaiming good news') gives us 'evangelizing.' The flogging accomplished nothing; the gospel advances without pause.

Summary: Acts 6 presents the first internal crisis in the church: Greek-speaking Jewish widows are being overlooked in the daily food distribution. The apostles propose that the community select seven men to manage this practical service, freeing the apostles for prayer and teaching. The seven are chosen, all bearing Greek names, and are commissioned by prayer and the laying on of hands. Stephen, described as full of grace and power, performs great signs and engages in synagogue debates. Unable to refute him, his opponents bring false witnesses who accuse Stephen of speaking against the temple and the law. The chapter ends with Stephen standing before the Sanhedrin, his face appearing like the face of an angel.

What Makes This Remarkable: The selection of the Seven represents the first organizational development of the church beyond the apostles. All seven have Greek names, suggesting the community addressed the complaint by giving the Hellenists oversight of the distribution — a remarkably generous solution. Stephen emerges as a figure whose theological vision will prove more radical than the apostles' own preaching: his accusers claim he speaks of Jesus destroying the temple and changing Mosaic customs. The description of Stephen's face 'like the face of an angel' echoes Moses' shining face after encountering God (Exodus 34:29-35).

Translation Friction: The term 'Hellenists' (Hellenistai) versus 'Hebrews' (Hebraioi) likely refers to a linguistic and cultural division within the Jewish-Christian community: Greek-speaking diaspora Jews versus Aramaic-speaking Palestinian Jews. The Seven are traditionally called 'deacons' though Acts never uses that title. The charges against Stephen in verses 13-14 are called 'false' by Luke, yet Stephen's speech in chapter 7 will arguably confirm some of their substance — the relationship between the false charges and Stephen's actual teaching is complex.

Connections: The appointment of the Seven parallels Moses' appointment of elders in Numbers 11:16-17. Stephen's story anticipates and parallels Jesus's passion: false witnesses, a Sanhedrin trial, and a prayer for his persecutors. The Freedmen's synagogue (v. 9) connects to the diaspora communities listed in 2:9-11. The note about priests becoming obedient to the faith (v. 7) represents a remarkable penetration of the gospel into the temple establishment.

¹Now in those days, as the disciples were increasing in number, a complaint arose from the Hellenists against the Hebrews, because their widows were being overlooked in the daily distribution of food. ²So the twelve summoned the full body of the disciples and said, "It is not right for us to neglect the word of God in order to wait on tables. ³Therefore, brothers, select from among you seven men of good reputation, full of the Spirit and of wisdom, whom we will appoint to this duty. ⁴And we will devote ourselves to prayer and to the ministry of the word." ⁵This proposal pleased the whole group, and they chose Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Spirit, and Philip, Prochorus, Nicanor, Timon, Parmenas, and Nicolaus, a convert to Judaism from Antioch. ⁶They presented them before the apostles, who prayed and laid their hands on them. ⁷The word of God kept spreading, and the number of the disciples in Jerusalem increased greatly, and a large number of the priests became obedient to the faith. ⁸Stephen, full of grace and power, was performing great wonders and signs among the people. ⁹But some from the synagogue called the Synagogue of the Freedmen (including Cyrenians, Alexandrians, and people from Cilicia and Asia) rose up and debated with Stephen. ¹⁰But they could not withstand the wisdom and the Spirit with which he was speaking. ¹¹Then they secretly instigated men who said, "We have heard him speak blasphemous words against Moses and God." ¹²They stirred up the people and the elders and the scribes, and they came upon him, seized him, and brought him before the Sanhedrin. ¹³They produced false witnesses who said, "This man never stops speaking against this holy place and the law. ¹⁴For we have heard him say that this Jesus the Nazarene will destroy this place and change the customs that Moses handed down to us." ¹⁵And gazing at him, all who sat in the Sanhedrin saw that his face was like the face of an angel.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The Greek gonguysmos ('complaint, murmuring, grumbling') echoes Israel's murmuring in the wilderness (Exodus 16:7-8, Numbers 11:1). The 'Hellenists' (Hellēnistai) are Greek-speaking Jewish Christians, likely from the diaspora, while the 'Hebrews' (Hebraioi) are Aramaic/Hebrew-speaking Jewish Christians from Palestine. The complaint is specific: widows — the most vulnerable members of ancient society — were being neglected (paretheōrounto, 'overlooked, neglected') in the daily food distribution (diakonia, 'service, ministry'). Growth has created administrative strain.

1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Numbers 11:1. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
2. The Twelve convene the entire community (to plēthos tōn mathētōn, 'the full number of the disciples') for a communal decision — this is not top-down decree but participatory governance. The phrase 'wait on tables' (diakonein trapezais) refers to the practical administration of the food distribution. The apostles do not disparage this work but recognize a division of labor: their primary calling is the word of God, not logistics. The verb kataleipsantas ('having neglected, having abandoned') suggests that attempting both was already causing neglect of preaching.
3. The community selects; the apostles appoint (katastēsomen, 'we will install, we will place in charge'). The qualifications are spiritual, not administrative: 'full of the Spirit and of wisdom' (plēreis pneumatōs kai sophias). The number seven may echo the tradition of seven elders in Jewish communities, or it may simply be a practical number. The word martyroumenous ('of good reputation, well-attested, testified about') means people whose character is publicly verified.
4. The apostles describe their own work using the same word (diakonia, 'ministry, service') used for the food distribution — both are forms of service. The two priorities — prayer (proseuchē) and the ministry of the word (diakonia tou logou) — define the apostolic calling. The verb proskarterēsomen ('we will devote ourselves') is the same word used for the community's devotion in 1:14 and 2:42.
5. All seven names are Greek, which is remarkable given that the complaint was about Hellenist widows being neglected by Hebrew administrators. The community's solution was to give the Hellenists themselves oversight — a generous and trust-building response. Stephen is singled out with an expanded description: 'full of faith and of the Holy Spirit.' Nicolaus is identified as a prosēlytos ('proselyte, convert') from Antioch — the only non-born-Jew in the list, showing the community's diversity. Antioch will become a major center of the Gentile mission in chapters 11-13.
6. The laying on of hands (epethēkan autois tas cheiras) is a biblical gesture of commissioning and empowerment, rooted in Moses' commissioning of Joshua (Numbers 27:18-23) and the Levitical practice of transferring authority. Prayer accompanies the physical gesture, indicating that the power comes from God, not from the apostles' touch. This becomes the standard pattern for church leadership appointment in Acts (cf. 13:3, 14:23).
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Numbers 27:18-23. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. This is one of Luke's periodic growth summaries (cf. 9:31, 12:24, 16:5, 19:20). The phrase 'the word of God kept spreading' (ho logos tou theou ēuxanen) personifies the word as a growing, living force. The most striking detail is that 'a large number of priests' (polys te ochlos tōn hierēōn) joined the faith. Given the thousands of priests who served in rotational courses at the temple, even a 'large number' could represent a significant minority. Their conversion represents the gospel's penetration into the heart of the temple establishment.
8. The SBLGNT reads charitos ('grace') rather than pisteōs ('faith') found in some manuscripts. Stephen's ministry goes beyond the food distribution — he is performing 'great wonders and signs' (terata kai sēmeia megala), the same language used for the apostles in 5:12. The Seven are not limited to administrative roles; they are Spirit-empowered ministers in their own right.
9. The 'Freedmen' (Libertinōn, from Latin libertinus) were likely descendants of Jews taken to Rome as slaves by Pompey in 63 BC and later freed. These diaspora Jews had their own synagogue in Jerusalem. The list includes Jews from North Africa (Cyrene, Alexandria), Asia Minor (Cilicia, Asia), and Rome — Greek-speaking Jews like Stephen himself. Cilicia is Paul's home province (Tarsus), raising the possibility that Paul was among the debaters. The verb syzētoutes ('debating, disputing') indicates formal argument.
10. Stephen's irrefutability fulfills Jesus's promise in Luke 21:15: 'I will give you a mouth and wisdom that none of your adversaries will be able to withstand or contradict.' The phrase 'the wisdom and the Spirit' (tē sophia kai tō pneumati) echoes the qualifications for the Seven in verse 3. Unable to win the argument, his opponents resort to other means (v. 11).
11. The verb hypebalon ('secretly instigated, suborned, put up to it') indicates a covert operation — the opponents coach false witnesses, exactly as happened at Jesus's trial (Matthew 26:59-60). The charge is twofold blasphemy: against Moses (representing the Torah) and against God. These are the most serious possible accusations in a Jewish context, capable of triggering the death penalty.
12. The verb synekinēsan ('stirred up, aroused, incited') indicates a deliberate campaign to turn public opinion against Stephen. For the first time in Acts, 'the people' (ton laon) are part of the opposition — previously the people supported the apostles (4:21, 5:26). The combination of popular anger, elder and scribe involvement, and Sanhedrin proceedings creates a judicial lynching atmosphere.

13. Luke explicitly labels these as 'false witnesses' (martyras pseudeis), using the same language as Jesus's trial (Matthew 26:60). The charge refines the earlier accusation: Stephen speaks against 'this holy place' (the temple) and 'the law' (the Torah). As with Jesus's trial, the charges likely contain a distorted kernel of truth — Stephen probably did teach that Jesus's coming relativized both temple and law, which his opponents twisted into blasphemy.
14. The specific charges are: (1) Jesus will destroy the temple (katalyseĩ ton topon touton) and (2) Jesus will change Mosaic customs (allaxeĩ ta ethē). Both echo charges made against Jesus himself (Mark 14:58, John 2:19). The word ethē ('customs, traditions, practices') refers to the oral and written legal traditions. Stephen's speech in chapter 7 will address both charges, not by denying them outright but by reframing Israel's relationship to temple and law through salvation history.
15. The chapter ends with this arresting image: Stephen's face radiates like an angel's. The parallel to Moses is unmistakable — when Moses descended from Sinai after meeting God, his face shone (Exodus 34:29-35). The man accused of speaking against Moses now bears Moses' own mark of divine encounter. The verb atenisantes ('gazing intently') is the same word used repeatedly for intense, fixed attention in Acts. The council sees divine glory on the face of their prisoner but will refuse to recognize what it means.

Summary: Acts 7 contains Stephen's monumental speech before the Sanhedrin — the longest speech in Acts at 53 verses. Stephen recounts Israel's history from Abraham through Moses to Solomon, arguing that God's presence has never been confined to a single place, that Israel has a pattern of rejecting God's chosen messengers, and that the temple was never intended to contain God. His narrative moves from Abraham in Mesopotamia, to Joseph in Egypt, to Moses in the wilderness, to the tabernacle, and finally to Solomon's temple — where he turns accusatory. He charges his hearers with being stiff-necked resisters of the Holy Spirit who, like their ancestors, have betrayed and murdered the Righteous One. The council erupts in fury. Stephen sees a vision of Jesus standing at God's right hand, and they drag him out and stone him to death. He dies praying for his killers. Saul of Tarsus appears for the first time, approving Stephen's execution.

What Makes This Remarkable: Stephen's speech is a radical rereading of Israel's sacred history. He systematically demonstrates that every pivotal encounter between God and his people happened outside the promised land: Abraham received his call in Mesopotamia, Joseph was God's instrument in Egypt, Moses met God at the burning bush in Midian, the Torah was given at Sinai — not in Jerusalem. The heroes of faith were all initially rejected by their own people before being vindicated. The theological implications are devastating: if God has never been bound to a place, the temple cannot contain him; if Israel has always resisted its prophets, rejecting Jesus fits the pattern. Stephen becomes the first Christian martyr, and his death mirrors Jesus's in profound ways: he prays for his persecutors and commits his spirit to the Lord.

Translation Friction: Stephen's retelling contains several historical details that differ from the Genesis account: he says Abraham left Haran after his father died (v. 4, but Genesis 11:26, 32 and 12:4 suggest Terah lived another 60 years), he places 75 members of Jacob's family going to Egypt (v. 14, following the LXX) rather than 70 (Hebrew text), and he attributes the purchase of the Machpelah tomb to Abraham rather than to Jacob (v. 16, conflating Genesis 23 and 33:19). These discrepancies likely reflect Stephen's use of the Septuagint and Jewish interpretive tradition rather than strict historical error. We render the Greek as given without harmonizing.

Connections: Stephen's speech draws on Genesis 12-50 (Abraham, Joseph), Exodus 1-20 (Moses), Deuteronomy 18:15 (prophet like Moses), 1 Kings 6-8 (temple), Isaiah 66:1-2 (heaven as God's throne), and Amos 5:25-27 (idolatry). Stephen's martyrdom anticipates Paul's persecution-to-conversion arc. The stoning scene echoes Jesus's crucifixion (Luke 23:34, 46). Saul's introduction here foreshadows the dramatic reversal of chapter 9.

¹The high priest said, "Are these things so?" ²Stephen replied, "Brothers and fathers, listen. The God of glory appeared to our father Abraham when he was in Mesopotamia, before he lived in Haran, ³Said to him, Get you out of your country, and from your kindred, and come into the land which I will shew you. ⁴Then he left the land of the Chaldeans and settled in Haran. After his father died, God moved him from there into this land in which you are now living. ⁵He gave him no inheritance in it, not even a foot's length, but he promised to give it to him as a possession and to his descendants after him, even though he had no child. ⁶And God spoke in this way: that his descendants would be strangers in a foreign land, and that the people there would enslave and mistreat them for four hundred years. ⁷'But I will judge the nation they serve,' God said, 'and after that they will come out and worship me in this place.' ⁸And he gave him the covenant of circumcision. So Abraham fathered Isaac and circumcised him on the eighth day, and Isaac fathered Jacob, and Jacob fathered the twelve patriarchs. ⁹The patriarchs, out of jealousy, sold Joseph into Egypt. But God was with him ¹⁰Delivered him out of all his afflictions, and offered him favour and wisdom in the sight of Pharaoh king of Egypt. Then he appointed him governor over Egypt and all his house. ¹¹Then a famine came over all of Egypt and Canaan, with great suffering, and our fathers could find no food. ¹²When Jacob heard that there was grain in Egypt, he sent our fathers there on their first visit. ¹³On the second visit Joseph made himself known to his brothers, and Joseph's family became known to Pharaoh. ¹⁴Then Joseph sent and invited his father Jacob and all his relatives, seventy-five persons in all. ¹⁵So Jacob went down to Egypt, and he died there — he and our fathers. ¹⁶Their bodies were brought back to Shechem and placed in the tomb that Abraham had bought for a sum of silver from the sons of Hamor in Shechem. ¹⁷"As the time of the promise that God had made to Abraham drew near, the people increased and multiplied in Egypt, ¹⁸Till another king arose, which recognized not Joseph. ¹⁹He exploited our people and oppressed our fathers, forcing them to abandon their infants so they would not survive. ²⁰At that time Moses was born, and he was beautiful before God. He was raised for three months in his father's house, ²¹When he was cast out, Pharaoh's daughter picked up him up, and nourished him for her own son. ²²Moses was educated in all the wisdom of the Egyptians and was powerful in his words and deeds. ²³When he was about forty years old, it came into his heart to visit his brothers, the sons of Israel. ²⁴When he saw one of them being wronged, he came to his defense and avenged the oppressed man by striking down the Egyptian. ²⁵He assumed his brothers would understand that God was giving them deliverance through him, but they did not understand. ²⁶The next day he appeared to them as they were fighting and tried to reconcile them, saying, 'Men, you are brothers! Why are you wronging each other?' ²⁷But the man who was wronging his neighbor pushed him away, saying, 'Who appointed you as a ruler and judge over us? ²⁸Do you want to kill me as you killed the Egyptian yesterday?' ²⁹At this remark, Moses fled and became a foreigner in the land of Midian, where he fathered two sons. ³⁰"When forty years had passed, an angel appeared to him in the wilderness of Mount Sinai, in the flame of a burning bush. ³¹When Moses saw it, he was amazed at the sight. As he approached to look more closely, the voice of the Lord came to him: ³²'I am the God of your fathers — the God of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob.' Moses trembled and did not dare to look. ³³The Lord said to him, 'Take off the sandals from your feet, for the place where you are standing is holy ground.' ³⁴'I have surely seen the mistreatment of my people in Egypt and have heard their groaning, and I have come down to rescue them. Now come, I will send you to Egypt.' ³⁵"This Moses whom they rejected, saying, 'Who appointed you as ruler and judge?' — this man God sent as both ruler and redeemer, through the angel who appeared to him in the bush. ³⁶This man led them out, performing wonders and signs in the land of Egypt and at the Red Sea and in the wilderness for forty years. ³⁷This is the Moses who said to the sons of Israel, 'God will raise up for you a prophet like me from among your brothers.' ³⁸This is the one who was in the assembly in the wilderness with the angel who spoke to him at Mount Sinai, and with our fathers. He received living oracles to give to us. ³⁹Our fathers refused to obey him. Instead, they rejected him and in their hearts turned back to Egypt, ⁴⁰Indeed, declaring to Aaron, 'Make us gods to go prior to us — for as for this Moses, which brought us out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him. ⁴¹They made a calf in those days, offered sacrifice to the idol, and celebrated the works of their hands. ⁴²But God turned away and gave them over to worship the host of heaven, as it is written in the book of the Prophets: 'Did you bring me slaughtered animals and sacrifices during those forty years in the wilderness, house of Israel? ⁴³You took up the tent of Moloch and the star of your god Rephan, the images you made to worship. I will exile you beyond Babylon.' ⁴⁴"Our fathers had the tabernacle of testimony in the wilderness, just as the one who spoke to Moses directed him to make it according to the pattern he had seen. ⁴⁵Our fathers who received it in turn brought it in with Joshua when they dispossessed the nations that God drove out before our fathers. It remained until the days of David, ⁴⁶Who discovered favour prior to God, and desired to find a tabernacle for the God of Jacob. ⁴⁷But it was Solomon who built a house for him. ⁴⁸Yet the Most High does not dwell in houses made by human hands, as the prophet says: ⁴⁹'Heaven is my throne, and the earth is my footstool. What kind of house will you build for me?' says the Lord. 'Or what is the place of my rest? ⁵⁰Did not my hand make all these things?' ⁵¹"You stiff-necked people, uncircumcised in heart and ears! You always resist the Holy Spirit. As your fathers did, so do you. ⁵²Which of the prophets did your fathers not persecute? They killed those who announced beforehand the coming of the Righteous One, whose betrayers and murderers you have now become — ⁵³Who possess received the instruction of Moses by the disposition of angels, and have not kept it. ⁵⁴When they heard these things, they were enraged in their hearts and ground their teeth at him. ⁵⁵But Stephen, full of the Holy Spirit, gazed into heaven and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing at the right hand of God. ⁵⁶He said, "Look! I see the heavens opened and the Son of Man standing at the right hand of God!" ⁵⁷But they cried out with a loud voice, covered their ears, and rushed at him with one impulse. ⁵⁸They drove him out of the city and began to stone him. The witnesses laid their garments at the feet of a young man named Saul. ⁵⁹As they were stoning Stephen, he called out, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit!" ⁶⁰Then he knelt down and cried out with a loud voice, "Lord, do not hold this sin against them!" And having said this, he fell asleep.

1. The high priest's question is brief and procedural — he gives Stephen the formal opportunity to respond to the charges of 6:13-14. The question ei tauta houtōs echei ('are these things so?') is open-ended, allowing Stephen to speak at length.
2. Stephen opens respectfully — 'brothers and fathers' (andres adelphoi kai pateres) — but his argument will be deeply confrontational. The title 'the God of glory' (ho theos tēs doxēs) echoes Psalm 29:3 and immediately establishes the theme: God's glorious presence is not bound to a place. His first point is geographical: God appeared to Abraham in Mesopotamia — in pagan territory, far from any sacred site. The Hebrew Bible records God's call to Abraham in Genesis 12:1 while he was in Haran, but Jewish tradition (following Genesis 15:7 and Nehemiah 9:7) understood a prior call while still in Ur of the Chaldees.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalm 29:3. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 12:1. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 15:7. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Nehemiah 9:7. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. Stephen quotes Genesis 12:1 (LXX). God's first command to Abraham was to leave — departure, not settlement, begins the covenant story. The phrase 'the land that I will show you' emphasizes divine initiative and Abraham's trust: he went without knowing the destination.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 12:1 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. Stephen says Abraham left Haran 'after his father died' (meta to apothanein ton patera autou). According to Genesis 11:26, Terah was 70 when Abraham was born; Abraham left Haran at 75 (Genesis 12:4); and Terah died at 205 (Genesis 11:32) — which would mean Terah lived 60 more years after Abraham's departure. Stephen follows the Samaritan Pentateuch and possibly a Jewish tradition that placed Terah's death at 145, or he may simply be following narrative logic. We render the Greek as given.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 11:26. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 12:4. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. Stephen's point is theologically sharp: Abraham received the promise but not the land. The covenant patriarch lived his entire life in the promised land without owning any of it — 'not even a foot's length' (oude bēma podos). This undermines any theology that ties God's blessing to a specific place. The paradox is heightened by the note that Abraham had no child (ouk ontos autō teknou) when the promise was given — promise precedes fulfillment by generations.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 12:7 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. Stephen quotes Genesis 15:13-14. The word paroikon ('strangers, resident aliens, sojourners') describes Abraham's descendants as outsiders in someone else's land — again emphasizing that God's people were not defined by their territory. The four hundred years is a round number (Exodus 12:40 gives 430 years). Stephen's retelling emphasizes suffering and displacement as characteristic of God's people.

6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 12:40. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The phrase 'worship me in this place' (latreusousin moi en tō topō toutō) is from Exodus 3:12 rather than Genesis 15, where God tells Moses the people will worship 'on this mountain' (Sinai). Stephen may deliberately blur the reference so that 'this place' could mean Sinai, Canaan, or wherever God chooses to meet his people — supporting his argument that worship is not location-bound.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 3:12. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 15. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The 'covenant of circumcision' (diathēkēn peritomēs) refers to Genesis 17, where circumcision is the sign of the Abrahamic covenant. Stephen quickly traces the lineage from Abraham through Isaac and Jacob to the twelve patriarchs (tous dōdeka patriarchas) — the ancestors of Israel's twelve tribes. The rapid genealogical summary moves the narrative toward Joseph and Egypt.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 17 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. Here Stephen introduces his central theme: Israel rejects its own deliverers. The patriarchs — the revered ancestors — acted out of jealousy (zēlōsantes, the same word used for the Sanhedrin's jealousy in 5:17) and sold their brother into slavery. Yet 'God was with him' (ēn ho theos met' autou) — divine presence follows the rejected one, not those who reject. The parallel to Jesus is unmistakable.
10. God rescues the rejected one and exalts him to authority — the Joseph pattern prefigures the Jesus pattern. The terms 'favor' (charin) and 'wisdom' (sophian) echo Stephen's own description in 6:8, 10. Joseph rules over the very nation where he was sold as a slave — divine reversal of human injustice.
11. The famine (limos) drives the plot: the brothers who sold Joseph are now dependent on him for survival. Stephen's phrase 'our fathers' (hoi pateres hēmōn) identifies himself with his audience — he is not attacking their heritage but interpreting it.
12. The word prōton ('first') sets up the pattern: the brothers go to Egypt twice. On the first visit, they do not recognize Joseph. Stephen emphasizes the two-visit structure because it parallels his argument about Jesus: rejected on the first encounter, recognized on the second.
13. The phrase en tō deuterō ('on the second') is emphatic. Stephen's point: the brothers rejected Joseph initially but recognized him on their second encounter. The implied parallel: Israel rejected Jesus on his first coming but will recognize him at his return. The pattern of initial rejection followed by recognition is the interpretive key to Stephen's entire speech.
14. Stephen gives the number as seventy-five (hebdomēkonta pente), following the Septuagint of Genesis 46:27 and Exodus 1:5, while the Hebrew text gives seventy. The difference likely reflects whether or not Joseph's descendants born in Egypt are included. Stephen follows the Greek textual tradition available to his Hellenistic audience.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 46:27. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 1:5. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. Stephen moves quickly through the narrative. Jacob and the patriarchs die in Egypt, not in the promised land — again emphasizing that God's people spent their formative period as foreigners in a foreign land.
16. This verse conflates two Old Testament traditions: Abraham bought a burial site at Machpelah from the sons of Heth near Hebron (Genesis 23:3-16), and Jacob bought a plot at Shechem from the sons of Hamor (Genesis 33:19). Stephen appears to combine these transactions, attributing the Shechem purchase to Abraham. This may reflect a Jewish interpretive tradition unknown to us, or it may be a compressed retelling. We render the Greek as Stephen spoke it.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 23:3-16. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 33:19. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. Stephen now transitions from the patriarchal era to the Exodus. The phrase 'the time of the promise' (ho chronos tēs epangelias) introduces the concept of divine timing — God works according to a predetermined schedule. The people's growth 'in Egypt' (en Aigyptō) fulfills the Abrahamic promise of numerous descendants, but in a foreign land under oppression.
18. Stephen quotes Exodus 1:8. The 'different king' (basileus heteros) who 'did not know Joseph' marks a political and social rupture. The word heteros ('another of a different kind') may suggest a change of dynasty. The loss of Joseph's memory leads directly to Israel's oppression.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 1:8 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.

19. The verb katasophisamenos ('dealing shrewdly, exploiting by craft') implies calculated, cunning oppression. The forced exposure of infants (ta brephē ektheta, 'making the babies exposed/abandoned') was the standard method of infanticide in the ancient world — leaving newborns outside to die of exposure. Stephen's retelling emphasizes the brutality to heighten the drama of Moses' rescue.
20. The phrase asteios tō theō ('beautiful before God' or 'divinely beautiful') uses a dative of reference that intensifies the adjective — Moses was not merely attractive but superlatively so, beautiful in God's sight. This echoes Exodus 2:2 where his mother saw he was 'good' (tov). The phrase carries overtones of divine destiny.
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 2:2 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
21. The verb aneilato ('took up, adopted') is a technical term for picking up and claiming an exposed infant — in Roman and Egyptian practice, this constituted legal adoption. Moses is rescued from death by the oppressor's own daughter — a divine irony that Stephen highlights.
22. Stephen's portrayal of Moses trained in Egyptian wisdom is not from Exodus directly but from Jewish interpretive tradition (cf. Philo, Life of Moses 1.21-24). The description 'powerful in words and deeds' (dynatos en logois kai ergois) echoes the description of Jesus in Luke 24:19. Moses' competence was developed in a pagan environment — again, God works outside Israel's boundaries.
23. Stephen divides Moses' life into three forty-year periods (vv. 23, 30, 36): forty years in Egypt, forty years in Midian, forty years in the wilderness. This tripartite scheme comes from Jewish tradition rather than Exodus directly. The phrase anebē epi tēn kardian autou ('it came up into his heart') is a Hebraism suggesting an inner prompting, possibly divine.
24. Stephen portrays Moses' killing of the Egyptian (Exodus 2:11-12) positively — as defense of the oppressed (ēmynato, 'defended') and justice for the wronged (epoiēsen ekdikēsin, 'avenged'). This sets up the devastating irony of the next verse: Moses acts as deliverer, but his own people reject him.
25. This verse is not in Exodus — it is Stephen's theological interpretation. Moses expected recognition as God's deliverer, but 'they did not understand' (hoi de ou synēkan). This is the critical parallel to Jesus: God sent a deliverer, the deliverer expected recognition, and the people failed to understand. Stephen is building his case that Israel has a pattern of rejecting the very ones God sends to save them.
26. Moses tries to be a peacemaker among his own people. The word synēllassen ('reconciled, brought together') indicates an attempt at mediation. His appeal — 'you are brothers' (adelphoi este) — invokes shared identity as a basis for peace. But the appeal fails.
27. The verb apōsato ('pushed away, rejected, repudiated') is the key word — it will be reused in verse 39 about Israel's rejection of Moses in the wilderness. Stephen quotes Exodus 2:14. The question 'Who appointed you ruler and judge?' (tis se katestēsen archonta kai dikastēn) is a challenge to Moses' authority — the same kind of challenge the Sanhedrin makes against the apostles. The irony: God did appoint Moses, but the people refuse to recognize it.
27. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 2:14. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
28. The accusation forces Moses to flee. His attempt at deliverance is met not with gratitude but with hostility and exposure. Stephen's audience would recognize the parallel: those who should welcome God's deliverer instead threaten and accuse him.
28. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 2:14 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
29. Moses becomes a paroikos ('foreigner, resident alien') in Midian — the same word used for Abraham's descendants in verse 6. The rejected deliverer lives in exile for forty years. Stephen's parallel: Jesus was rejected and has departed to heaven (3:21), but he will return.
30. The second forty-year period ends with theophany — but where? In the wilderness, far from any temple or sacred city. God appears at a random bush on a mountain in the desert. Stephen's geographical point is relentless: God's most important self-revelations happen in the least expected places.
31. Moses' curiosity draws him toward the divine presence. The verb ethaumazen ('was amazed, marveled') captures the initial wonder. Stephen's retelling follows Exodus 3:3-4, emphasizing the auditory encounter — 'the voice of the Lord' (phōnē kyriou) speaks from the bush.
31. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 3:3-4. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
32. God identifies himself through the covenant lineage — the same formula used in Exodus 3:6. Moses' response is trembling (entromos genomenos) and aversion of his gaze. The God of the patriarchs speaks to Moses in Midian — covenantal identity transcends geography.
32. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 3:6. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
33. This verse is devastating to Stephen's opponents' theology: 'holy ground' (gē hagia) is in the Midian wilderness, not in Jerusalem or at the temple. If God can make pagan desert soil holy by his presence, then holiness is not a property of places but of divine encounter. Stephen is dismantling the theological foundation for temple-exclusivism.

34. Stephen quotes Exodus 3:7-8, 10. The phrase idōn eidon ('seeing I have seen,' a Hebraism for emphasis) conveys God's intense, compassionate attention to suffering. God both sees and acts — 'I have come down to rescue them' (katebēn exelesthai autous). And the instrument of rescue is Moses — the same Moses his brothers rejected in verses 27-28. God is about to send the rejected deliverer back.
34. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 3:7-8. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
35. This is the rhetorical climax of the Moses section. Stephen uses the emphatic 'this Moses' (touton ton Mousēn... touton) with anaphoric repetition: the very one they rejected, that one God sent as ruler (archonta) and redeemer (lytrōtēn). The word lytrōtēs ('redeemer, deliverer') echoes the Hebrew go'el — the kinsman who rescues family. The parallel to Jesus is now unmistakable: the rejected one is the sent one.
36. Moses' ministry spans three geographical zones — Egypt, Red Sea, wilderness — none of which is the promised land. Stephen continues to emphasize that God's mighty acts occurred outside the land. The third forty-year period begins. The 'wonders and signs' (terata kai sēmeia) echo the description of Jesus's ministry (2:22) and the apostles' ministry (5:12).
37. Stephen quotes Deuteronomy 18:15, the same text Peter used in 3:22. The implication is clear: if Moses himself pointed to a future prophet like himself, then Moses' authority is not undermined by recognizing Jesus but fulfilled by it. Rejecting the prophet-like-Moses is rejecting Moses himself.
37. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Deuteronomy 18:15. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
38. The word ekklēsia ('assembly, church') is used here for Israel's wilderness congregation — the same word used for the Christian community in 5:11. Moses stood as mediator between 'the angel who spoke at Sinai' and 'our fathers.' He received 'living oracles' (logia zōnta) — the Torah is described as alive, not dead tradition. Stephen is not anti-Torah; he honors Moses and the law even as he reinterprets them.
39. The verb apōsanto ('rejected, pushed away') is the same word used in verse 27 — the pattern repeats. Israel rejected Moses twice: first in Egypt (vv. 27-28), then in the wilderness (v. 39). 'In their hearts turned back to Egypt' (estraphēsān en tais kardiais autōn eis Aigipton) — they may have left Egypt physically, but their hearts remained enslaved to it. The accusation builds toward the climax.
40. Stephen quotes Exodus 32:1. The dismissive phrase 'this Moses' (ho Mōysēs houtos) on the people's lips contrasts with Stephen's reverent 'this Moses' (houtos) in verses 35-38. The demand for 'gods who will go before us' (theous hoi proporeuontai hēmōn) is a request for a visible, controllable deity — the opposite of the invisible, sovereign God who appeared in bush and cloud.
40. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 32:1 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
41. The verb emoschopoiēsan ('made a calf') is a single word describing the golden calf incident (Exodus 32:4). The phrase 'the works of their hands' (tois ergois tōn cheirōn autōn) is a standard Old Testament description of idols (Psalm 115:4, Isaiah 2:8). Stephen's point: at the very moment God gave the Torah through Moses, the people turned to handmade idols. The pattern of rejection includes idolatry.
41. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 32:4. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
41. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 115:4. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
41. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 2:8. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
42. God's response to their idolatry is judicial abandonment — 'gave them over' (paredōken autous) to the consequences of their choices (cf. Romans 1:24, 26, 28). Stephen now quotes Amos 5:25-27 (LXX), a prophetic critique of Israel's worship. The rhetorical question expects the answer 'no' — even during the wilderness period, Israel's worship was compromised by idolatry.
42. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Amos 5:25-27. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
43. Stephen continues the Amos quotation. The Hebrew of Amos 5:26 has 'Sikkuth' and 'Kiyyun'; the LXX renders these as 'tent of Moloch' and 'Rephan' (Raiphan). Amos originally said 'beyond Damascus'; Stephen (following the LXX) says 'beyond Babylon' — an update that reflects the actual Babylonian exile. The point: Israel's history of idolatry led to exile. Stephen implies that rejecting Jesus may lead to a worse judgment.
43. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Amos 5:25-27 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
44. Stephen now turns to the temple issue. He begins with the tabernacle (skēnē tou martyriou, 'tent of testimony/witness'), not the temple — the original place of God's dwelling with Israel was portable, not permanent. It was made 'according to the pattern' (kata ton typon) God showed Moses on Sinai (Exodus 25:40). The tabernacle's design was divine, but it traveled with the people rather than binding them to a location.

44. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 25:40. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
45. The Greek Iēsou here refers to Joshua (the Greek forms of 'Joshua' and 'Jesus' are identical). The tabernacle accompanied Israel through the conquest and the period of the judges — for centuries, the portable tabernacle was sufficient for God's presence among his people. Stephen's implicit argument: if the tabernacle served for over four hundred years, the temple is not essential.
46. The SBLGNT reads 'house of Jacob' (oikō Iakōb) rather than 'God of Jacob' — a textual variant with significant theological implications. If 'house of Jacob,' David sought a dwelling for God's people; if 'God of Jacob,' he sought a dwelling for God. Both readings are attested in ancient manuscripts. We follow the SBLGNT. David asked (ētēsato) but was not permitted to build — even the greatest king's request was redirected.
47. The sentence is terse and pointed. The adversative 'but' (de) sets up the contrast with what follows: Solomon built a house, but... The brevity is striking after the extended narration — Stephen moves quickly past the temple's construction because his argument is that the temple, however magnificent, cannot contain God.
48. This is the theological pivot of Stephen's entire speech. The word cheiropoiētois ('made by hands, handmade') is the same word used for idols in Isaiah 46:6 and Mark 14:58. Stephen does not call the temple an idol, but the vocabulary creates an unsettling association. Solomon himself acknowledged this truth at the temple's dedication: 'But will God indeed dwell on the earth? The heavens, even the highest heaven, cannot contain you, how much less this house I have built' (1 Kings 8:27).
48. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 46:6 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
48. [TCR Cross-Reference] References 1 Kings 8:27 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
49. Stephen quotes Isaiah 66:1-2a. God's throne is heaven; his footstool is the entire earth. The rhetorical questions — 'what house?' and 'what resting place?' — expose the absurdity of thinking any building can house the Creator. Isaiah's own words undermine temple-centrism from within the prophetic canon.
49. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 66:1-2. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
50. The final line of the Isaiah quotation is devastatingly simple: God made everything — heaven, earth, and every material that could be used to build a temple. How can the creature house the Creator? Stephen's argument from Scripture is complete. Now he turns to direct accusation.
50. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 66:1-2 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
51. Stephen's tone shifts abruptly from historical narration to prophetic indictment. 'Stiff-necked' (sklērotracheloi) echoes Exodus 33:3, 5 and Deuteronomy 9:6 — a charge God himself made against Israel. 'Uncircumcised in heart and ears' (aperitmētoi kardiais kai tois ōsin) quotes Jeremiah 6:10 and Ezekiel 44:7 — outward circumcision without inner transformation. The charge of 'always resisting the Holy Spirit' (aei tō pneumati tō hagiō antipēte) makes the accusation timeless: not just your fathers, but you too.
51. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 33:3. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
51. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Deuteronomy 9:6. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
51. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Jeremiah 6:10. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
51. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Ezekiel 44:7. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
52. The rhetorical question expects the answer 'none' — every prophet was persecuted. 'The Righteous One' (tou dikaïou) is a messianic title (cf. 3:14, Isaiah 53:11). The accusation escalates: your fathers persecuted prophets; you have become 'betrayers and murderers' (prodotai kai phoneis) of the Messiah himself. These are the most inflammatory words spoken in Acts.
52. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 53:11. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
53. The final charge is devastating: accused of speaking against the law (6:13), Stephen turns the accusation on his accusers — you received the law and did not keep it (ouk ephylaxate). The reference to angels delivering the law (eis diatagas angelōn) reflects Jewish tradition that angels mediated the Sinai covenant (cf. Galatians 3:19, Hebrews 2:2, Deuteronomy 33:2 LXX). Stephen's defense is now complete: he has not blasphemed the law; they have broken it.
53. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Deuteronomy 33:2 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.

54. The verb dieprionto ('were cut through, were sawn') is the same word used in 5:33 — visceral, uncontrolled rage. 'Ground their teeth' (ebrychon tous odontas) is an expression of furious hostility, used in the Psalms for enemies of the righteous (Psalm 35:16, 37:12). The council has become a mob.
54. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalm 35:16. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
55. While the council rages, Stephen sees a vision. The phrase 'full of the Holy Spirit' (plērēs pneumatōs hagiou) echoes 6:5 — the Spirit fills him in his final hour. He sees 'the glory of God' (doxan theou) — the kavod, the weighty divine presence. Uniquely, Jesus is described as 'standing' (hestōta) at God's right hand, not sitting (as in Psalm 110:1 and elsewhere). Interpreters debate whether Jesus stands to receive Stephen, to testify on his behalf, or to vindicate him.
55. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalm 110:1 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
56. Stephen announces his vision publicly. The title 'Son of Man' (ton huion tou anthrōpou) echoes Daniel 7:13-14 and Jesus's own self-designation. This is the only time in the New Testament that someone other than Jesus uses this title. The 'opened heavens' (tous ouranous diēnoigmenous) recall Jesus's baptism (Luke 3:21) and Ezekiel's vision (Ezekiel 1:1). For the Sanhedrin, this claim is the ultimate provocation — it confirms Jesus's own claim before this same body (Luke 22:69).
56. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Daniel 7:13-14. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
56. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Ezekiel 1:1. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
57. The council's reaction is primal: screaming (kraxantes phōnē megalē), covering their ears (syneschon ta ōta autōn) — the physical refusal to hear what the 'uncircumcised in ears' (v. 51) cannot bear — and a collective rush (hōrmēsan homothymadon). The word homothymadon ('with one accord') is grimly ironic: the same word Luke uses for the church's beautiful unity (1:14, 2:46) now describes a mob's unified violence.
58. The stoning takes place outside the city (exō tēs poleōs), following the Levitical requirement (Leviticus 24:14). Jesus was also executed outside the city (Hebrews 13:12). The 'witnesses' (martyres) are those who testified against Stephen — Jewish law required accusers to cast the first stones (Deuteronomy 17:7). They remove their outer garments for freedom of movement and place them at the feet of Saul — this is Luke's introduction of the man who will dominate the second half of Acts. Saul's role as garment-guardian indicates approval and likely active participation in the proceedings.
58. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Deuteronomy 17:7 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
59. Stephen's dying prayer is addressed to Jesus (kyrie Iēsou), not to God the Father — a remarkable expression of early Christian devotion to Jesus as Lord. The prayer 'receive my spirit' (dexai to pneuma mou) echoes Jesus's own final words in Luke 23:46 ('Father, into your hands I commit my spirit,' quoting Psalm 31:5), but Stephen directs his prayer to Jesus rather than the Father.
59. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalm 31:5. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
60. Stephen's second dying prayer parallels Jesus's prayer on the cross: 'Father, forgive them' (Luke 23:34). The phrase mē stēsēs autois ('do not set against them, do not charge to their account') uses accounting language — do not record this sin in their ledger. Kneeling under a hail of stones to pray for his killers is the ultimate expression of the Christ-like life.
60. The euphemism 'fell asleep' (ekoimēthē) is the early Christian term for death (cf. 1 Thessalonians 4:13-14). It implies the expectation of resurrection — sleep is temporary. Among those for whom Stephen prayed was Saul, who would become the greatest apostle. Augustine later wrote: 'If Stephen had not prayed, the church would not have had Paul.'

Summary: Acts 8 narrates the aftermath of Stephen's martyrdom. A great persecution scatters the church beyond Jerusalem, fulfilling Jesus's commission to Judea and Samaria (1:8). Saul leads the persecution. Philip, one of the Seven, preaches in Samaria with great success, performing signs and exorcisms. Simon the magician believes and is baptized but later attempts to purchase apostolic power with money, earning Peter's sharp rebuke. The chapter concludes with Philip's encounter with an Ethiopian official who is reading Isaiah 53 on the road from Jerusalem to Gaza. Philip explains the passage, baptizes the Ethiopian, and is then transported by the Spirit to Azotus.

What Makes This Remarkable: The scattering of the church becomes the mechanism of its expansion — persecution intended to destroy the movement instead propagates it. The Samaritan mission is theologically significant: Samaritans were considered half-pagans by Jews, and the gospel's acceptance there breaks the first ethnic barrier. Simon Magus becomes a symbol of spiritual corruption (the term 'simony' derives from his attempt). The Ethiopian eunuch represents multiple boundary-crossings: he is African, a eunuch (excluded from the assembly per Deuteronomy 23:1), and a Gentile God-fearer — yet he receives the gospel without conditions.

Translation Friction: The relationship between water baptism, the laying on of hands, and receiving the Holy Spirit is complex in this chapter. The Samaritans believe and are baptized but do not receive the Spirit until Peter and John come (vv. 15-17) — a sequence that does not match Pentecost or later conversion accounts. Various theological traditions interpret this differently. The sudden transportation of Philip (v. 39) is one of the most unusual supernatural events in Acts. Verse 37 is absent from the earliest manuscripts and the SBLGNT; we follow the critical text and omit it.

Connections: The persecution fulfills Jesus's pattern in 1:8 (Jerusalem Judea and Samaria). Philip's Samaritan mission connects to Jesus's own engagement with Samaritans (Luke 9:52, 10:30-37, 17:11-19, John 4). The Ethiopian reading Isaiah 53 connects to the Suffering Servant theology of 3:13, 26. Philip's transport by the Spirit echoes Elijah's experiences (1 Kings 18:12, 2 Kings 2:16). The Ethiopian's conversion anticipates the full Gentile mission.

¹Now Saul was in full agreement with Stephen's execution. On that day a great persecution broke out against the church in Jerusalem, and all except the apostles were scattered throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria. ²Devout men buried Stephen and mourned deeply over him. ³But Saul was ravaging the church. Going from house to house, he dragged off both men and women and had them thrown into prison. ⁴Now those who were scattered went about proclaiming the good news of the word. ⁵Philip went down to a city in Samaria and began proclaiming the Christ to them. ⁶The crowds paid close attention with one mind to what Philip was saying, as they heard and saw the signs he was performing. ⁷For unclean spirits came out of many who had them, screaming with a loud voice, and many who were paralyzed or lame were healed. ⁸There was remarkable joy in that city. ⁹Now a man named Simon had previously practiced sorcery in the city and had amazed the people of Samaria, claiming to be someone great. ¹⁰Everyone, from the least to the greatest, paid attention to him, saying, "This man is the power of God called 'the Great Power.'" ¹¹They paid attention to him because for a long time he had amazed them with his sorcery. ¹²But when they believed Philip as he proclaimed the good news about the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women. ¹³Even Simon himself believed and was baptized. He stayed close to Philip, and when he saw the signs and great miracles being performed, he was amazed. ¹⁴When the apostles in Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent Peter and John to them. ¹⁵When they arrived, they prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Spirit, ¹⁶For as yet he was fallen upon none of them — only they were baptized by the authority of the Lord Jesus.). ¹⁷Then they laid their hands on them, and they received the Holy Spirit. ¹⁸When Simon saw that the Spirit was given through the laying on of the apostles' hands, he offered them money, ¹⁹Declaring, Give me also this authority, that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may accept the Holy Ghost. ²⁰But Peter said to him, "May your silver perish with you, because you thought you could acquire the gift of God with money! ²¹You have no part or share in this matter, for your heart is not right before God. ²²Repent therefore of this wickedness of yours, and pray to the Lord that, if possible, the intent of your heart may be forgiven you. ²³For I see that you are full of bitter poison and bound by wickedness." ²⁴Simon answered, "Pray to the Lord for me yourselves, so that nothing of what you have said may come upon me." ²⁵After they had testified and spoken the word of the Lord, they returned to Jerusalem, proclaiming the good news in many Samaritan villages along the way. ²⁶An angel of the Lord said to Philip, "Get up and go south to the road that goes down from Jerusalem to Gaza." (This is a desert road.) ²⁷So he got up and went. And there was an Ethiopian man, a eunuch, a court official of Candace, queen of the Ethiopians, who was in charge of all her treasury. He had come to Jerusalem to worship ²⁸Indeed, was returning, and sitting in his chariot read Esaias the prophet of old. ²⁹The Spirit said to Philip, "Go over and join that chariot." ³⁰Philip ran up and heard him reading Isaiah the prophet and said, "Do you understand what you are reading?" ³¹He said, "How could I, unless someone guides me?" And he invited Philip to come up and sit with him. ³²Now the passage of Scripture he was reading was this: "Like a sheep he was led to the slaughter, and like a lamb silent before its shearer, so he does not open his mouth. ³³In his humiliation justice was denied him. Who can describe his generation? For his life is taken from the earth." ³⁴The eunuch said to Philip, "I ask you, about whom does the prophet say this — about himself or about someone else?" ³⁵Then Philip opened his mouth and, beginning from this Scripture, proclaimed the good news about Jesus to him. ³⁶As they were going along the road, they came to some water, and the eunuch said, "Look, here is water! What prevents me from being baptized?" ³⁸He ordered the chariot to stop, and they both went down into the water — Philip and the eunuch — and Philip baptized him. ³⁹When they came up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord carried Philip away, and the eunuch did not see him again but went on his way rejoicing. ⁴⁰But Philip found himself at Azotus, and as he passed through, he proclaimed the good news in all the towns until he came to Caesarea.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The participle syneuddokōn ('approving, consenting, being in full agreement') is stronger than passive tolerance — Saul actively endorsed Stephen's death. The word diōgmos ('persecution') is intensified by meas ('great'). The verb diesparēsan ('were scattered') uses agricultural imagery — scattering seed — and Luke may intend the irony: persecution scatters the believers like seed, producing a wider harvest. The apostles alone remain in Jerusalem, perhaps because their public profile made them targets who needed to stand their ground, or because they refused to abandon the Jerusalem base.
2. The word eulabeis ('devout, reverent') may refer to pious Jews rather than Christians — burying the dead was a sacred duty, and even opponents of Stephen might have ensured proper burial. The 'great lamentation' (kopeton megan) defied the rabbinic rule that prohibited public mourning for those executed by the court (Mishnah Sanhedrin 6:6), suggesting these mourners considered Stephen's death unjust.
3. The verb elymaineto ('was ravaging, was destroying, was laying waste to') is used in the LXX for a wild boar devastating a vineyard (Psalm 80:13). Saul's persecution is systematic — house by house (kata tous oikous) — and indiscriminate in targeting both men and women (andras kai gynaiikas). The verb syron ('dragging') implies physical violence. This is the man who will become Paul.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalm 80:13 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The scattered believers do not go into hiding — they go preaching. The verb euangelizomenoi ('proclaiming good news') indicates that mission is not the exclusive work of apostles but the activity of ordinary believers. Persecution accomplishes exactly the opposite of its intention: instead of silencing the message, it multiplies the messengers.
5. This is Philip the evangelist (one of the Seven from 6:5), not Philip the apostle. Some manuscripts read 'the city' (tēn polin, a specific city, possibly Sebaste/Samaria or Shechem/Sychar) while others read 'a city' — we follow the reading that treats it as a specific city. The Samaritan mission is momentous: Samaritans worshiped YHWH but rejected the Jerusalem temple in favor of Mount Gerizim, making them the first non-Jewish audience for the gospel.
6. The Samaritan response is positive and unified — homothymadon ('with one mind') describes the same kind of communal agreement that characterized the Jerusalem church (1:14, 2:46). The combination of hearing the message and seeing the signs creates a complete witness — word and deed together, as in Jesus's own ministry.
7. The signs parallel those of Jesus and the apostles: exorcisms and physical healings. The unclean spirits (pneumata akatharta) cry out as they depart — as they did when confronted by Jesus (Luke 4:33-35). The two categories of healing — paralyzed (parelumenoi) and lame (chōloi) — echo Isaiah 35:5-6, the prophetic description of messianic restoration.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 35:5-6. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The phrase 'great joy' (pollē chara) characterizes the gospel's arrival in new territory throughout Acts (cf. 13:52, 15:3). Joy is the consistent fruit of the gospel wherever it is received.
9. Simon Magus becomes one of the most discussed figures in early Christianity — later tradition (especially the Church Fathers) identified him as the founder of Gnosticism. The verb mageuōn ('practicing sorcery/magic') places him in the tradition of pagan magical practice. His self-aggrandizement — 'claiming to be someone great' (legōn einai tina heauton megan) — echoes the description of Theudas in 5:36. The contrast between Simon's magic and Philip's signs will be a key theme.
10. The title 'the Great Power of God' (hē dynamis tou theou hē kaloumenē megalē) appears to be a Samaritan religious title, possibly related to Samaritan theology's emphasis on divine power. The phrase 'from the least to the greatest' (apo mikrou heōs megalou) indicates Simon's universal influence across all social levels.
11. The phrase hikanō chronō ('for a long time, for a considerable period') indicates Simon's established influence — this was not a recent phenomenon. The verb exestakenai ('had amazed, had astonished') suggests a hold over the people through supernatural display. Philip's ministry will break this hold.

12. Philip's message has two components: 'the kingdom of God' (tēs basileias tou theou) and 'the name of Jesus Christ' (tou onomatos Iēsou Christou). The kingdom message connects to Jesus's own preaching; the name of Jesus identifies the king. Both men and women are baptized — gender equality in baptism is consistently noted in Acts.
13. Simon's belief (episteusen) and baptism raise the question of whether his faith was genuine. His subsequent behavior (vv. 18-24) suggests his attraction was to the power rather than to the person of Christ. The verb existato ('was amazed') — the same word used for the crowds' response to Simon (v. 9, 11) — now describes Simon himself. The sorcerer is out-astonished by genuine divine power.
14. The apostles' dispatch of Peter and John serves to validate the Samaritan mission and to ensure continuity with the Jerusalem church. That 'Samaria had received the word of God' (dedektai hē Samareia ton logon tou theou) is a landmark statement — the ancient enmity between Jews and Samaritans is being overcome by the gospel.
15. Peter and John pray specifically for the Samaritan believers to receive the Holy Spirit — indicating that the Spirit had not yet been given to them. This raises theological questions: were they truly converted without the Spirit? Various traditions explain this differently. Luke may be emphasizing that the Samaritan church needed apostolic validation to prevent a schism between Jewish and Samaritan Christianity.
16. Luke describes the Spirit as having 'fallen' (epeptōkos) — a dramatic term suggesting a sudden, powerful descent (cf. 10:44, 11:15). The word 'only' (monon) does not diminish baptism but distinguishes it from the Spirit's empowering presence. The Samaritan situation is unique in Acts and may reflect special circumstances rather than a normative sequence.
17. The laying on of hands (epitithēsan tas cheiras) conveys the Spirit — the physical gesture accompanies the spiritual gift. The reception of the Spirit is described without specifying its outward manifestation, though verse 18 implies something visible occurred that Simon could observe.
18. Simon 'saw' (idōn) something — the Spirit's reception had visible manifestations. His response reveals his fundamental misunderstanding: he treats the Spirit's power as a commodity that can be purchased, like a magical technique. The verb prosēnenken ('offered, brought forward') implies a formal business transaction. The word chrēmata ('money') derives from chraomai ('to use') — Simon sees the Spirit as a useful tool.
19. Simon wants the exousian ('authority, power, right') to confer the Spirit — he seeks control over the distribution of divine power. This is the fundamental error: the Spirit is God's gift, not a human transaction. The term 'simony' — the buying or selling of spiritual offices or privileges — derives from this episode.
20. Peter's response is fierce: 'may your silver perish with you' (to argyriou sou syn soi eiē eis apōleian) is a conditional curse — may your money go to destruction, and you with it. The key theological principle: the gift of God (tēn dōrean tou theou) is exactly that — a gift (dōrea). It cannot be purchased (ktasthai, 'to acquire, to possess'). This verse draws a permanent line between God's grace and human commerce.
21. The phrase 'no part or share' (meris oude klēros) echoes the language of inheritance in Israel — Simon has no portion in the kingdom. The diagnosis is cardiovascular: 'your heart is not right' (hē kardia sou ouk estin eutheia, literally 'not straight') before God. The problem is not the outward act but the inward orientation.
22. Peter offers repentance as a possibility, not a certainty — the phrase 'if possible' (ei ara) introduces genuine uncertainty about whether forgiveness is available for this particular sin. The word epinoia ('intent, thought, scheme') suggests a calculated plan, not a momentary impulse. Peter calls him to repent and pray, leaving the outcome to God.
23. Peter's diagnosis echoes Deuteronomy 29:18 (LXX), where Moses warns against 'a root bearing poisonous and bitter fruit' among the covenant people. The phrase 'gall of bitterness' (cholēn pikrias) and 'bond of iniquity' (syndesmon adikias) describe both Simon's internal condition (bitter poison) and his external bondage (chained by sin). Peter sees through Simon's profession of faith to the corruption beneath.
23. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Deuteronomy 29:18 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
24. Simon's response is ambiguous — he asks for prayer but does not repent himself. He asks Peter and John to pray for him rather than praying directly, and his concern is avoiding punishment rather than seeking transformation. Luke leaves Simon's fate unresolved; later patristic tradition (especially Irenaeus and Justin Martyr) developed extensive accounts of Simon as the arch-heretic.
25. Peter and John expand the Samaritan mission on their return journey — they do not merely validate Philip's work but extend it. The phrase 'many villages of the Samaritans' (pollas kōmas tōn Samaritōn) shows the gospel spreading throughout the region, not limited to a single city. The Jewish apostles are now evangelizing Samaritans — a remarkable transformation from the attitudes described in Luke 9:52-54.
26. The divine direction shifts Philip from a successful urban ministry in Samaria to a deserted highway — God's priorities do not always match human expectations. The phrase kata mesēmbrian can mean 'toward the south' or 'at midday'; we follow the directional sense. The parenthetical 'this is desert' (hautē estin erēmos) may describe the road or the city of Gaza itself, which had been destroyed and rebuilt.
27. The Ethiopian eunuch represents multiple boundary-crossings. He is African (from the kingdom of Meroe, modern Sudan), a eunuch (castrated court officials served as trusted treasury administrators), and a God-fearer (he came to Jerusalem to worship but as a eunuch could not fully convert to Judaism per Deuteronomy 23:1). 'Candace' (Kandakēs) is not a personal name but the title of the queen mother who wielded executive power in the Meroitic kingdom, similar to 'Pharaoh' or 'Caesar.' His high position as treasurer (epi pasēs tēs gazēs, 'over all her treasury') indicates great authority and trust.

27. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Deuteronomy 23:1. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
28. The eunuch reads Isaiah aloud (ancient practice was to read aloud even when alone). His choice of Isaiah is significant — Isaiah 56:3-5 specifically promises eunuchs a place in God's house: 'I will give in my house and within my walls a monument and a name better than sons and daughters.' The eunuch's reading is a search for inclusion.
28. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 56:3-5 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
29. Now it is the Spirit (to pneuma) rather than the angel (v. 26) who directs Philip. The command kollēthēti ('join yourself to, attach yourself to, stay close to') suggests walking alongside the slowly moving chariot. Divine orchestration brings the right messenger to the right seeker at the right moment.
30. Philip runs (prosdramōn) — urgency marks Spirit-directed encounters. His question creates a Greek wordplay: ginōskeis ha anaginōskeis ('do you know what you are reading?' — ginōskō and anaginōskō share the root gnō-). The question is not condescending but opens the door for dialogue.
31. The eunuch's response is humble and eager — he recognizes his need for interpretation and welcomes a guide (hodēgēsei, 'will lead along the way'). The verb parekalesen ('invited, urged, encouraged') shows genuine desire for understanding. He invites Philip into his chariot — a foreigner climbing into a court official's chariot represents the breaking of social barriers.
32. The eunuch is reading Isaiah 53:7-8 (LXX), the heart of the Suffering Servant passage. The image of a lamb led to slaughter in silence is the defining portrait of redemptive suffering in the Old Testament. That this particular passage is what the eunuch happened to be reading when Philip arrived is presented as divine providence.
32. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 53:7-8. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
33. The LXX of Isaiah 53:8 differs from the Hebrew in some details. 'In his humiliation his justice was taken away' (en tē tapeinōsei hē krisis autou ērthē) — the Servant was denied a fair trial. 'Who can describe his generation?' (tēn genean autou tis diēgēsetai) is ambiguous: it could refer to his descendants (he died without offspring), his lifespan (cut short), or the wickedness of his contemporaries. 'His life is taken from the earth' — a statement of violent death.
33. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 53:7-8 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
34. The eunuch's question reflects genuine scholarly inquiry — who is the Suffering Servant? Jewish interpretation offered multiple answers: the prophet himself (Isaiah), the nation of Israel collectively, a future messiah, or a specific historical figure. The eunuch's question is the right question, and Philip is about to give the Christian answer.
35. The phrase 'opened his mouth' (anoixas to stoma autou) is a solemn introduction to important speech (cf. Matthew 5:2). Philip begins with the text the eunuch is reading and moves from there to Jesus — arxamenos apo tēs graphēs tautēs ('beginning from this Scripture'). The method is christological interpretation of the Old Testament: Isaiah 53 finds its fulfillment in Jesus. Luke does not record the content of Philip's explanation, but the result (v. 36) shows that it included instruction about baptism.
36. The eunuch's question 'What prevents me?' (ti kōlyei me) is deeply poignant. As a eunuch, he had been prevented from full participation in Israel's worship (Deuteronomy 23:1). His whole life has been defined by barriers. Now he asks whether there is a barrier to baptism — and the answer is no. The gospel removes the exclusions that the old covenant imposed. Finding water on a 'desert road' (v. 26) adds to the sense of divine provision.
36. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Deuteronomy 23:1. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
38. Note: Verse 37 is absent from the SBLGNT and the earliest manuscripts. It appears in later manuscripts as the eunuch's confession of faith ('I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God') and was likely added by scribes who felt the baptism needed an explicit confession. We follow the critical text and omit it.
38. Both Philip and the eunuch go 'down into the water' (katebēsan amphoteroi eis to hydōr), suggesting immersion rather than sprinkling, though the text does not specify the precise method. The baptism of a eunuch — someone excluded from the assembly of Israel — is a powerful statement of the gospel's inclusive scope.
39. The verb hērpasen ('snatched away, carried off, caught up') describes a sudden, supernatural transportation — the same word used for Paul's rapture to the third heaven (2 Corinthians 12:2) and the catching up of the church (1 Thessalonians 4:17). The Spirit literally relocates Philip. The eunuch's response is joy (chairōn) — the characteristic mark of genuine conversion in Acts. He continues his journey to Ethiopia, presumably carrying the gospel with him. Church tradition credits him with founding the Ethiopian church.
40. Azotus (the Greek name for the old Philistine city of Ashdod) is on the Mediterranean coast, about 20 miles north of Gaza. Philip evangelizes along the coastal plain northward to Caesarea, the major Roman administrative center, where he apparently settles (cf. 21:8, where Paul visits 'Philip the evangelist' in Caesarea). The gospel now has a foothold on the coast, opening a corridor from Jerusalem to the wider Mediterranean world.

Summary: Acts 9 narrates the dramatic conversion of Saul of Tarsus on the road to Damascus. While traveling with letters authorizing him to arrest Christians, Saul is confronted by a blinding light and the voice of the risen Jesus: 'Saul, Saul, why are you persecuting me?' Blinded for three days, Saul is visited by Ananias of Damascus, who restores his sight, baptizes him, and conveys God's commission. Saul immediately begins preaching Jesus as the Son of God in Damascus synagogues. After escaping a murder plot in Damascus, Saul goes to Jerusalem where Barnabas vouches for him to the apostles. The chapter then describes Peter's ministry in Lydda and Joppa, including the healing of Aeneas (paralyzed for eight years) and the raising of Tabitha (Dorcas) from the dead. Peter stays in Joppa with Simon the tanner, setting the stage for the Cornelius episode in chapter 10.

What Makes This Remarkable: Saul's conversion is the pivotal event in Acts and is narrated three times (here, 22:3-21, 26:9-23), reflecting its importance. The identification of Jesus with his persecuted church — 'why are you persecuting me?' — is a profound christological statement: to persecute the church is to persecute Christ himself. Ananias's reluctance and God's response reveal Jesus's plan for Saul: 'he is a chosen instrument of mine to carry my name before the Gentiles and kings and the sons of Israel.' The raising of Tabitha parallels Elijah's raising of the widow's son and Jesus's raising of Jairus's daughter.

Translation Friction: The three accounts of Saul's conversion differ in details: whether companions heard the voice (9:7 vs. 22:9), whether they saw the light, and whether Saul received his commission directly or through Ananias. These variations likely reflect the different rhetorical settings of each retelling rather than contradictions. Peter's lodging with 'Simon the tanner' (v. 43) is notable because tanning was considered an unclean occupation in Jewish law — Peter is already relaxing purity boundaries before the Cornelius vision.

Connections: Saul's conversion fulfills Jesus's statement to Ananias about suffering for his name (v. 16), which will play out through the rest of Acts. The Damascus road experience connects to prophetic call narratives (Isaiah 6, Jeremiah 1, Ezekiel 1-3). Peter's miracles in Lydda and Joppa mirror Jesus's miracles and demonstrate that the apostolic mission continues Jesus's work. The tanner's house in Joppa prepares for the vision of clean and unclean animals in 10:9-16.

¹Meanwhile Saul, still breathing threats and murder against the disciples of the Lord, went to the high priest ²He asked for letters addressed to the synagogues in Damascus, so that if he found anyone who belonged to the Way — whether men or women — he could arrest them and bring them back to Jerusalem. ³As he was traveling and approaching Damascus, suddenly a light from heaven flashed around him. ⁴He fell to the ground and heard a voice saying to him, "Saul, Saul, why are you persecuting me?" ⁵He said, "Who are you, Lord?" And he replied, "I am Jesus, whom you are persecuting. ⁶But get up and enter the city, and you will be told what you must do." ⁷The men traveling with him stood speechless, hearing the sound but seeing no one. ⁸Saul got up from the ground, and although his eyes were open, he could see nothing. So they led him by the hand and brought him into Damascus. ⁹For three days he was without sight, and he neither ate nor drank. ¹⁰Now there was a disciple in Damascus named Ananias. The Lord said to him in a vision, "Ananias." He said, "Here I am, Lord." ¹¹The Lord said to him, "Get up and go to the street called Straight, and at the house of Judas look for a man from Tarsus named Saul, for he is praying. ¹²He has seen in a vision a man named Ananias come in and lay his hands on him so that he might regain his sight." ¹³But Ananias answered, "Lord, I have heard from many about this man — how much harm he has done to your saints in Jerusalem. ¹⁴And here he has authority from the chief priests to arrest all who call on your name." ¹⁵But the Lord said to him, "Go, for he is a chosen instrument of mine to carry my name before Gentiles and kings and the sons of Israel. ¹⁶For I will show him how much he must suffer for the sake of my name." ¹⁷So Ananias departed and entered the house. Laying his hands on him, he said, "Brother Saul, the Lord Jesus, who appeared to you on the road by which you came, has sent me so that you may regain your sight and be filled with the Holy Spirit." ¹⁸Immediately something like scales fell from his eyes, and he regained his sight. Then he got up and was baptized. ¹⁹Following he had received meat, he was strengthened. Then was Saul certain days with the followers which were at Damascus. ²⁰And immediately he began proclaiming Jesus in the synagogues, saying, "He is the Son of God." ²¹All who heard him were astonished and said, "Is this not the man who destroyed those in Jerusalem who called on this name? And did he not come here for the very purpose of bringing them bound before the chief priests?" ²²But Saul kept growing stronger and was confounding the Jews who lived in Damascus by proving that Jesus is the Christ. ²³When many days had passed, the Jews plotted to kill him. ²⁴But their plot became known to Saul. They were also watching the gates day and night in order to kill him. ²⁵But his disciples took him at night and lowered him through an opening in the wall, letting him down in a large basket. ²⁶When he arrived in Jerusalem, he tried to join the disciples, but they were all afraid of him, not believing that he was a disciple. ²⁷But Barnabas took him, brought him to the apostles, and described to them how on the road Saul had seen the Lord and that the Lord had spoken to him, and how in Damascus he had spoken boldly in the name of Jesus. ²⁸So he went in and out among them in Jerusalem, speaking boldly in the name of the Lord. ²⁹He spoke and debated with the Hellenists, but they were trying to kill him. ³⁰When the brothers learned of this, they brought him down to Caesarea and sent him off to Tarsus. ³¹So the church throughout all Judea and Galilee and Samaria had peace and was being built up. Walking in the fear of the Lord and in the encouragement of the Holy Spirit, it increased in numbers. ³²As Peter was traveling through all the region, he came down also to the saints living in Lydda. ³³There he found a man named Aeneas, bedridden for eight years, who was paralyzed. ³⁴Peter said to him, "Aeneas, Jesus Christ heals you. Get up and make your bed." And immediately he got up. ³⁵All the residents of Lydda and the Sharon Plain saw him and turned to the Lord. ³⁶In Joppa there was a disciple named Tabitha, which is translated Dorcas. She was full of good works and acts of charity. ³⁷In those days she became ill and died. After washing her body, they laid her in an upper room. ³⁸Since Lydda was near Joppa, the disciples, hearing that Peter was there, sent two men to him with the urgent request, "Please come to us without delay." ³⁹So Peter rose and went with them. When he arrived, they took him to the upper room, and all the widows stood beside him weeping and showing him the tunics and garments that Dorcas had made while she was with them. ⁴⁰But Peter sent them all out, knelt down, and prayed. Then turning to the body he said, "Tabitha, arise." She opened her eyes, and when she saw Peter, she sat up. ⁴¹He gave her his hand and raised her up. Then calling the saints and the widows, he presented her alive. ⁴²This became known throughout all Joppa, and many believed in the Lord. ⁴³He stayed in Joppa for many days with a man named Simon, a tanner.

1. The participle empneōn ('breathing') creates a vivid image: Saul exhaled threats as naturally as he exhaled air — persecution was his very breath. The combination 'threats and murder' (apeilēs kai phonou) intensifies from words to actions. The present participle indicates ongoing, habitual activity. The phrase 'disciples of the Lord' (tous mathētas tou kyriou) is the first use of 'disciples' since chapter 6, now describing the broader Christian community.
2. The 'letters' (epistolās) from the high priest would authorize Saul to act with Sanhedrin authority in the Damascus synagogues. The term 'the Way' (tēs hodou) is the earliest designation for the Christian movement in Acts (cf. 19:9, 23; 22:4; 24:14, 22) — it identifies Christianity as a path or way of life, possibly echoing Isaiah 40:3 ('prepare the way of the Lord'). Damascus had a significant Jewish population and was within the traditional boundaries of the land of Israel as understood by some authorities, justifying Jerusalem's jurisdictional claim.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 40:3. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. The adverb exaiphnēs ('suddenly') marks the divine irruption — there is no preparation, no gradual awareness. The light (phōs ek tou ouranou) comes 'from heaven,' establishing its divine origin. The verb periēstrapsen ('flashed around') describes light enveloping Saul from every direction. In 26:13, Paul will specify it was brighter than the midday sun. The theophanic light recalls Moses at the burning bush and Ezekiel's vision of divine glory.
4. The double address 'Saul, Saul' (Saoul Saoul) uses the Hebrew/Aramaic form of the name (not the Greek Saulos), echoing divine addresses in the Old Testament: 'Abraham, Abraham' (Genesis 22:11), 'Moses, Moses' (Exodus 3:4), 'Samuel, Samuel' (1 Samuel 3:10). The question 'why are you persecuting me?' (ti me diōkeis) contains the explosive identification: Jesus is so united with his church that persecuting believers is persecuting him personally. This is not metaphor — it is christological reality.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 22:11. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 3:4. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes 1 Samuel 3:10. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.

5. Saul's question 'Who are you, Lord?' (tis ei, kyrie) uses kyrie, which could mean simply 'sir' at this point — Saul does not yet know who speaks. The response 'I am Jesus' (egō eimi Iēsous) is devastating: the one Saul believed was a dead false messiah is alive and speaking from heaven. The addition 'whom you are persecuting' (hon sy diōkeis) repeats the identification from verse 4. The SBLGNT does not include 'it is hard for you to kick against the goads,' which appears in later manuscripts and in Paul's retelling in 26:14.
6. The SBLGNT omits the initial question 'Lord, what do you want me to do?' which appears in later manuscripts. Jesus's command is simple: go to the city and wait. The phrase ho ti se dei poiein ('what you must do') uses the divine necessity verb dei — Saul's future is determined by God's plan, not his own.
7. The companions hear the 'sound' (phōnēs) but see no one. In 22:9, Paul says they saw the light but 'did not hear the voice of the one speaking to me.' The apparent discrepancy likely reflects the difference between hearing a sound and understanding speech — they perceived noise but not articulate words. The adjective enei ('speechless') captures their stunned inability to respond.
8. The man who set out to Damascus with authority and purpose arrives blind and dependent. The irony is profound: the one who could not 'see' who Jesus was now literally cannot see. His eyes are open (aneōgmenōn tōn ophthalmōn) but perceive nothing — a physical condition mirroring his previous spiritual state. Being led by the hand (cheiragōgountes) reduces the powerful persecutor to the helplessness of a child.
9. The three days of blindness and fasting echo death and burial — Saul's old life as persecutor is dying. The three-day period recalls Jonah's three days in the fish and, most significantly, Jesus's three days in the tomb. Saul's emergence from this period will be a kind of resurrection.
10. Ananias is simply called a 'disciple' (mathētēs) — an ordinary believer, not an apostle or leader. The vision dialogue follows the pattern of Old Testament call narratives: God calls by name, the person responds 'Here I am' (idou egō, echoing Abraham in Genesis 22:1, Moses in Exodus 3:4, Samuel in 1 Samuel 3:4). This Ananias should be distinguished from the Ananias of chapter 5 and the high priest Ananias of chapter 23.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 22:1 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 3:4 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes 1 Samuel 3:4 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The 'street called Straight' (tēn rhymēn tēn kaloumenēn Eutheian) is likely the main east-west thoroughfare of Damascus, still identifiable today. The specific address — Judas's house on Straight Street — gives the narrative historical particularity. The note 'for he is praying' (idou gar proseuchetai) signals Saul's transformation: the persecutor is now a petitioner. God orchestrates a double vision: Saul prays and sees Ananias coming; Ananias receives instructions to go.
12. Saul's vision of Ananias arriving is a confirming vision — when Ananias actually appears, Saul will know this is from God. The divine coordination of the two visions (Ananias's in v. 10, Saul's in v. 12) mirrors the coordination in the Cornelius-Peter narrative (10:3-6, 10:9-16). God prepares both parties for the encounter.
13. Ananias's protest is understandable — he is being asked to visit the most dangerous man in the world for a Damascus Christian. His intelligence about Saul is accurate: 'how much harm he has done to your saints' (hosa kaka tois hagiois sou epoiēsen). The word hagiois ('saints, holy ones') is used here for the first time in Acts for believers — those set apart for God. Ananias's reluctance adds dramatic tension and makes his eventual obedience all the more commendable.
14. Ananias knows Saul's mission: arrest 'all who call on your name' (pantas tous epikaloumenous to onoma sou). The phrase 'calling on the name' echoes Joel 2:32 quoted in 2:21 — the very act of salvation (calling on the Lord's name) is the crime Saul has come to punish. The irony deepens: Saul will soon be calling on that name himself.
15. The Lord overrides Ananias's objection with a revelation of Saul's destiny. The phrase 'chosen instrument' (skeuos eklogēs, literally 'vessel of election/choice') presents Saul as a container selected by God for a specific purpose. His mission has three audiences: Gentiles (ethnōn), kings (basileōn), and the sons of Israel (huiōn Israēl) — all three will be fulfilled in Acts. The order is significant: Gentiles first, reflecting Paul's primary calling.
16. Saul's calling includes suffering (pathein) — the word dei ('must') makes suffering a divine necessity, not an accident. 'For the sake of my name' (hyper tou onomatos mou) — the name Saul tried to destroy will become the name he suffers for. The rest of Acts will document this suffering: beatings, imprisonments, shipwreck, stoning, and ultimately martyrdom.
17. Ananias's first word to the feared persecutor is 'brother' (adelphe) — a single word of reconciliation that bridges the chasm between persecutor and persecuted. Ananias identifies the Lord who sent him as 'Jesus' (Iēsous), confirming for Saul the identity of the voice on the road. The mission is twofold: physical healing ('regain your sight') and spiritual empowerment ('be filled with the Holy Spirit'). Ananias obeys despite his fear — faith overcomes terror.
18. The 'scales' (lepides, 'flakes, scales') falling from Saul's eyes is both a physical healing and a spiritual metaphor — the blindness that covered his understanding is removed. The sequence is immediate: sight restored rising baptism. The brevity contrasts with the elaborate detail of the vision and conversion — Luke gives the baptism just four words (anastas ebaptisthē), suggesting it is the natural, expected response to faith.

19. After three days of fasting (v. 9), Saul eats and recovers physical strength (enischysen). He immediately joins 'the disciples in Damascus' (tōn en Damaskō mathētōn) — the very people he came to arrest. The persecutor has become a brother. The phrase 'several days' (hēmeras tinas) covers an unspecified period during which Saul transitions from persecutor to preacher.
20. The adverb eutheōs ('immediately') captures the urgency of Saul's new conviction. He preaches in the very synagogues (en tais synagōgais) where he had authority to make arrests. His message: Jesus is 'the Son of God' (ho huios tou theou) — this title appears only here in Acts and represents the highest christological claim. The man who came to destroy the Way now proclaims its central confession.
21. The audience's astonishment (existanto) mirrors the amazement that follows every major event in Acts. The verb porthēsas ('destroyed, ravaged') is a military term describing the sacking of a city — Saul's persecution was remembered as devastation. The rhetorical questions express the shock of radical transformation: the same man, the same name, but everything has reversed.
22. The verb enedynamouto ('was being strengthened, was growing in power') indicates progressive empowerment by the Spirit. The verb synechynnen ('was confounding, was bewildering') means he left them unable to respond — his arguments were irrefutable. The participle symbibazon ('proving, demonstrating, bringing together') suggests logical argumentation from Scripture — Saul was already using the method that would characterize his later ministry: demonstrating from the Hebrew Scriptures that Jesus is the Messiah.
23. The phrase 'many days' (hēmerai hikanai) covers a significant period. According to Galatians 1:17-18, Paul spent time in Arabia and then returned to Damascus before going to Jerusalem — a period of about three years. Luke compresses the timeline. The plot to kill Saul mirrors the plots against Jesus and the apostles — the pattern of rejection continues, but now directed at the former persecutor.
24. The conspirators watch the city gates (tas pylas) to prevent Saul's escape. According to 2 Corinthians 11:32-33, the ethnarch under King Aretas IV was guarding the city — suggesting cooperation between Jewish opponents and the Nabatean authorities. The surveillance is around the clock (hēmeras te kai nyktos), indicating serious intent.
25. The escape 'through the wall' (dia tou teichous) likely means through a window in a house built into the city wall (cf. Joshua 2:15, Rahab's house). The word spyridi ('large basket') is the same word used for the baskets at the feeding of the 4,000 (Mark 8:8). Paul himself recounts this humiliating escape in 2 Corinthians 11:33. The phrase 'his disciples' (hoi mathētai autou) is remarkable — Saul already has followers of his own.
25. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Joshua 2:15 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
26. Saul's reception in Jerusalem is understandably hostile — 'they were all afraid of him' (pantes ephobounto auton). His reputation as a persecutor preceded him, and his conversion was too dramatic to be easily believed. The verb epeirazen ('tried, attempted') suggests repeated, unsuccessful efforts to gain acceptance. Saul is caught between two worlds: hunted by his former allies and mistrusted by his new brothers.
27. Barnabas, the 'Son of Encouragement' (4:36), lives up to his name by bridging the gap between Saul and the apostles. The verb epilabomenos ('took hold of, took charge of') indicates decisive action. Barnabas vouches for three things: the Damascus road vision, the Lord's direct speech to Saul, and Saul's bold preaching in Damascus. This mediation was crucial for Saul's acceptance and for the unity of the church. Barnabas's willingness to stake his reputation on a former persecutor is an act of extraordinary faith.
28. The phrase 'going in and going out' (eisporuomenos kai ekporuomenos) is the same Semitic idiom used in 1:21 for daily life and activity. Saul is now a full member of the Jerusalem community, speaking with parrhēsia ('boldness') — the same quality the church prayed for in 4:29.
29. Saul engages the same Greek-speaking Jews (Hellēnistas) who had opposed Stephen (6:9). The verb synezētei ('debated, disputed') suggests vigorous intellectual engagement. Their response — attempted murder (epecheiroun anein auton) — mirrors the response to Stephen. Saul has stepped into Stephen's role and faces Stephen's fate, creating a narrative parallel that Luke emphasizes.
30. The community protects Saul by evacuating him — first to Caesarea (the port city) and then to Tarsus (his hometown in Cilicia). According to Galatians 1:21, Paul went to 'the regions of Syria and Cilicia.' Saul disappears from the narrative until Barnabas retrieves him in 11:25-26. The 'silent years' in Tarsus were likely a period of further reflection and teaching preparation.
31. This is one of Luke's major summary statements. The singular 'church' (ekklēsia) encompasses the entire community across three regions — Judea, Galilee, and Samaria — indicating a unified body despite geographical spread. The description includes peace (eirēnē), edification (oikodomoumenē, 'being built up'), reverent living ('walking in the fear of the Lord'), and the Spirit's encouragement (paraklēsei tou hagiou pneumatos). Saul's departure from active persecution may have contributed to the period of peace.
32. The narrative shifts from Saul to Peter, who will dominate chapters 9-12 before Saul/Paul takes center stage. Peter is traveling (dierchomenon, 'passing through') the churches, exercising an itinerant oversight ministry. Lydda (modern Lod) was a town about 25 miles northwest of Jerusalem, on the road to Joppa and the coast.
33. The name Aeneas (Ainean) is Greek, suggesting he may have been a Hellenistic Jew or Gentile. His paralysis for eight years (ex etōn oktō) establishes the chronic, hopeless nature of his condition. The detail 'bedridden' (katakeimenon epi krabattou, 'lying on a pallet') emphasizes his complete immobility.
34. Peter explicitly credits Jesus Christ as the healer — 'Jesus Christ heals you' (iatai se Iēsous Christos) is present tense, indicating Jesus's active power in the present moment. The command 'make your bed' (strōson seautō) is a practical instruction that demonstrates the completeness of the healing — the man who has been bedridden for eight years can now perform ordinary domestic tasks. The healing is immediate (eutheōs), as in Jesus's own healings.

35. The miracle has a regional impact — not only Lydda but the entire Sharon Plain (ton Sarōna, the fertile coastal plain stretching from Joppa to Mount Carmel) responds. The phrase 'turned to the Lord' (epestrepsan epi ton kyrion) describes conversion, using the same language as the Old Testament prophets' call to return to God.
36. Tabitha is explicitly called a 'disciple' (mathētria) — the feminine form of mathētēs, used only here in the New Testament. Her Aramaic name Tabitha and its Greek equivalent Dorcas both mean 'gazelle.' Luke characterizes her by her deeds: 'full of good works and acts of charity' (plērēs ergōn agathōn kai eleēmosynōn). She is defined not by theology but by practical compassion.
37. The washing of the body (lousantes) was the customary Jewish preparation for burial. Placing her in an upper room (hyperōō) rather than immediately burying her (Jewish custom normally required same-day burial) suggests the community hoped for intervention — they had heard that Peter was nearby in Lydda (v. 38).
38. Lydda was about 10-12 miles from Joppa, a distance easily traveled in a few hours. The urgency of the request — mē oknēsēs ('do not hesitate, do not delay') — suggests they hoped Peter could do something about Tabitha's death, though they do not explicitly ask for a resurrection.
39. The widows' display of Dorcas's handiwork is deeply moving — each garment (chitōnas, 'tunics/undergarments' and himatia, 'cloaks/outer garments') is a tangible memorial of her charity. The phrase 'while she was with them' (met' autōn ousa) is the language of grief — she is no longer with them. The scene echoes Jesus at Jairus's house, where mourners surrounded the dead girl.
40. Peter's actions closely follow Jesus's pattern at the raising of Jairus's daughter (Luke 8:51-56): he sends everyone out, addresses the dead person directly by name, and she rises. The Aramaic 'Tabitha, arise' (Tabitha, anastēthi) is phonetically similar to Jesus's 'Talitha, arise' (Talitha koum, Mark 5:41) — only one letter differs. Peter prays first (prosēuxato), acknowledging that the power comes from God, not from himself. The response is immediate: she opens her eyes and sits up.
41. Peter gives Tabitha his hand (dous autē cheira) — the same gesture he used to raise the lame man in 3:7. He then 'presented her alive' (parestēsen autēn zōsan) to the community — the word zōsan ('living') is emphatic. The distinction between 'the saints' (tous hagious, the believers generally) and 'the widows' (tas chēras, those who especially benefited from her ministry) suggests two overlapping groups.
42. As with Aeneas's healing (v. 35), the miracle produces widespread faith. The pattern repeats: sign testimony belief. Each miracle extends the reach of the gospel geographically and numerically.
43. Peter's lodging with Simon the tanner (Simōni byrsei) is theologically significant. Tanners worked with animal carcasses and were considered ritually unclean in Jewish tradition — their occupation required constant contact with dead animals. That Peter stays with a tanner suggests his purity boundaries are already loosening, preparing the reader for the revolutionary vision that will come in 10:9-16. Joppa (modern Jaffa/Tel Aviv) is on the Mediterranean coast, positioning Peter for the Gentile mission that is about to begin.

Summary: Acts 10 narrates the pivotal conversion of Cornelius, a Roman centurion in Caesarea, and the dramatic expansion of the gospel to Gentiles. Cornelius, a God-fearer, receives a vision directing him to send for Peter. Meanwhile, Peter receives his own vision on a rooftop in Joppa: a sheet descending from heaven filled with unclean animals, with a voice commanding him to 'kill and eat.' Peter refuses three times, and the voice responds, 'What God has made clean, do not call common.' When Cornelius's messengers arrive, the Spirit instructs Peter to go with them. Peter preaches at Cornelius's house, and while he is still speaking, the Holy Spirit falls on the Gentile listeners — astonishing the Jewish believers present. Peter orders their baptism.

What Makes This Remarkable: This chapter is the theological hinge of Acts. Luke devotes more space to this episode than to any other single event (it is retold in chapter 11 and referenced in chapter 15), signaling its centrality. The vision of unclean animals does not primarily concern dietary laws — Peter himself interprets it as God showing him 'not to call any person common or unclean' (10:28). The falling of the Spirit before baptism reverses the Pentecost pattern (baptism then Spirit) and removes any human gatekeeping from God's acceptance of Gentiles. The phrase 'God shows no partiality' (10:34) becomes a foundational principle of early Christian theology.

Translation Friction: The Greek koinos ('common') and akathartos ('unclean') carry specific Levitical connotations. Peter's vision does not explicitly abrogate Torah dietary laws — it redefines the categories of clean and unclean as they apply to persons. We render the Greek as given without resolving the ongoing theological debate about the vision's implications for food laws versus ethnic boundaries. The term phobeomai ton theon ('God-fearer') describes Cornelius's status as a Gentile who worshiped Israel's God without full conversion — a historically attested category in Second Temple Judaism.

Connections: The Cornelius episode fulfills Jesus's commission in Acts 1:8 to be witnesses 'to the ends of the earth.' It connects to the Ethiopian eunuch's baptism (Acts 8:26-40) as a progressive opening to outsiders. Peter's sermon echoes the kerygma of Acts 2 but now explicitly includes 'every nation.' The vision of clean and unclean connects to Leviticus 11 and Mark 7:19. The Spirit's sovereign action parallels Joel 2:28-32, quoted at Pentecost.

¹Now there was a man in Caesarea named Cornelius, a centurion of the cohort called the Italian Cohort. ²He was a devout man who feared God with all his household, gave generously to the people, and prayed to God continually. ³About the ninth hour of the day he clearly saw in a vision an angel of God come in to him and say, "Cornelius." ⁴He stared at the angel in fear and said, "What is it, Lord?" The angel said to him, "Your prayers and your acts of charity have ascended as a memorial offering before God. ⁵Now send men to Joppa and summon a man named Simon who is called Peter. ⁶He is staying with Simon, a tanner, whose house is by the sea." ⁷When the angel who spoke to him had departed, he called two of his household servants and a devout soldier from among those who attended him. ⁸After explaining everything to them, he sent them to Joppa. ⁹The next day, as they were on their journey and approaching the city, Peter went up on the housetop about the sixth hour to pray. ¹⁰He became hungry and wanted something to eat, but while the meal was being prepared, he fell into a trance. ¹¹He saw heaven opened and something like a large sheet descending, being let down by its four corners to the earth. ¹²In it were all kinds of four-footed animals and reptiles of the earth and birds of the air. ¹³And a voice came to him: "Rise, Peter; kill and eat." ¹⁴But Peter said, "By no means, Lord, for I have never eaten anything common or unclean." ¹⁵And the voice came to him again a second time: "What God has made clean, do not call common." ¹⁶This happened three times, and immediately the sheet was taken up into heaven. ¹⁷Now while Peter was puzzling over what the vision might mean, the men sent by Cornelius, having asked directions to Simon's house, stood at the gate. ¹⁸They called out and asked whether Simon, who was called Peter, was staying there. ¹⁹While Peter was still reflecting on the vision, the Spirit said to him, "Look, three men are looking for you. ²⁰Rise, go down, and accompany them without hesitation, for I have sent them." ²¹Peter went down to the men and said, "I am the one you are looking for. What is the reason you have come?" ²²They said, "Cornelius, a centurion, a righteous and God-fearing man well spoken of by the whole Jewish nation, was directed by a holy angel to send for you to come to his house and to hear a message from you." ²³So he invited them in and gave them lodging. The next day he rose and went with them, and some of the brothers from Joppa accompanied him. ²⁴The following day they entered Caesarea. Cornelius was expecting them and had called together his relatives and close friends. ²⁵When Peter entered, Cornelius met him and fell at his feet to worship him. ²⁶But Peter lifted him up, saying, "Stand up; I myself am also just a man." ²⁷And as he talked with him, he went in and found many people gathered. ²⁸He said to them, "You yourselves know that it is unlawful for a Jewish man to associate with or visit a foreigner. But God has shown me that I should not call any person common or unclean. ²⁹So when I was sent for, I came without objection. Now I ask, for what reason did you send for me?" ³⁰Cornelius said, "Four days ago at this very hour, I was praying at the ninth hour in my house, and a man stood before me in bright clothing ³¹Stated, Cornelius, your prayer is listened to, and your alms are had in remembrance in the sight of God. ³²Send therefore to Joppa and ask for Simon who is called Peter. He is staying in the house of Simon, a tanner, by the sea." ³³So I sent for you at once, and you were kind enough to come. Now therefore we are all here in the presence of God to hear everything that the Lord has commanded you to say." ³⁴So Peter opened his mouth and said, "Truly I understand that God shows no partiality, ³⁵However, in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh moral integrity, is accepted with him. ³⁶As for the word that he sent to the children of Israel, proclaiming the good news of peace through Jesus Christ — he is Lord of all — ³⁷You know what happened throughout Judea, beginning in Galilee after the baptism that John proclaimed — ³⁸How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with authority — who traveled concerning doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil. For God was with him. ³⁹We are witnesses of everything he did both in the country of the Jews and in Jerusalem. They put him to death by hanging him on a tree, ⁴⁰God raised him on the third day and allowed him to be seen openly. ⁴¹Not to all the people, but to witnesses chosen before of God, indeed to us, who did consume and feast with him after he rose from the dead. ⁴²He commanded us to preach to the people and to testify that he is the one appointed by God as judge of the living and the dead. ⁴³To him all the prophets bear witness that everyone who believes in him receives forgiveness of sins through his name." ⁴⁴While Peter was still speaking these words, the Holy Spirit fell on all who were hearing the message. ⁴⁵The circumcised believers who had come with Peter were astonished, because the gift of the Holy Spirit had been poured out even on the Gentiles. ⁴⁶For they heard them speaking in tongues and magnifying God. Then Peter declared, ⁴⁷"Can anyone withhold water for baptizing these people, who have received the Holy Spirit just as we have?" ⁴⁸And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ. Then they asked him to stay for some days.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. A centurion (hekatontarches) commanded approximately eighty soldiers within a cohort (speira). The Italian Cohort (speira Italike) was a Roman auxiliary unit composed of Italian-born soldiers stationed in the province of Judea. Caesarea Maritima was the Roman administrative capital, making it a natural location for a Roman military officer.
2. The description 'fearing God' (phoboumenos ton theon) is a semi-technical term for Gentiles who worshiped Israel's God, observed certain Jewish practices, and attended synagogue, but had not undergone full proselyte conversion including circumcision. Archaeological evidence confirms this category in the Second Temple period.
3. The ninth hour (approximately 3 PM) was one of the established Jewish times of prayer. That Cornelius observes this practice confirms his devotion to Israel's God. The adverb phaneros ('clearly, openly') emphasizes that this was not a vague impression but a distinct vision.
4. The language of 'ascending as a memorial' (anebesan eis mnemosunon) echoes the Old Testament sacrificial vocabulary — particularly the memorial portion (azkarah) of grain offerings (Leviticus 2:2). Cornelius's prayers and charity are presented as a kind of sacrifice that has reached God, even though he is uncircumcised.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Leviticus 2:2. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. Joppa (modern Jaffa/Yafo) lies approximately 30 miles south of Caesarea along the Mediterranean coast. The angel does not deliver the message himself but directs Cornelius to send for Peter — God orchestrates the encounter through human agents.
6. That Peter lodges with a tanner (burseus) is significant: tanning involved contact with animal carcasses, rendering tanners ritually unclean in Jewish practice. Peter is already crossing purity boundaries before his rooftop vision. Some manuscripts add 'he will tell you what you must do,' but the SBLGNT omits this addition.
7. The devout soldier (stratioten eusebe) reflects Cornelius's influence — his piety has shaped those under his command. The word proskarterounton ('attending, waiting on') suggests personal aides assigned to his service.
8. Cornelius shares the full vision with his servants before sending them — he does not merely issue orders but explains the divine directive. This transparency characterizes him throughout the narrative.
9. The sixth hour (approximately noon) was another established time of prayer. Flat-roofed houses in the ancient Mediterranean provided private space for prayer. Luke carefully synchronizes the two narratives — as Cornelius's men approach, Peter is being prepared through vision.
10. The word ekstasis ('trance, ecstasy') denotes a state in which normal consciousness is suspended and divine vision becomes possible. Peter's physical hunger becomes the occasion for a vision about food — God uses his immediate experience to communicate a deeper truth.
11. The opened heaven (ton ouranon aneogmenon) signals divine revelation — the same imagery appears at Jesus's baptism (Luke 3:21) and Stephen's martyrdom (Acts 7:56). The 'four corners' suggest universality, representing all directions and all peoples.
12. The categories echo the creation account in Genesis 1:24-26 and the clean/unclean distinctions of Leviticus 11. The word 'all' (panta) is emphatic — the sheet contains every category without distinction, deliberately mixing what Torah separates.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 1:24-26. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Leviticus 11. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. The command thuson ('slaughter, sacrifice') followed by phage ('eat') uses sacrificial vocabulary. The voice does not specify which animals to eat — the command is comprehensive and undifferentiated, challenging the entire clean/unclean classification system.
14. Peter's refusal combines two terms: koinon ('common,' i.e., not sanctified, profane) and akatharton ('unclean,' i.e., forbidden by Torah). His response echoes Ezekiel's protest when commanded to eat unclean food (Ezekiel 4:14). The juxtaposition of 'by no means' (medamos) with 'Lord' (kyrie) captures Peter's inner conflict — he refuses a divine command out of devotion to divine law.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Ezekiel 4:14. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. This is the interpretive key to the entire vision. The verb ekatharisen ('has made clean, has cleansed') is aorist, indicating a completed divine action. God has already declared clean what Peter still considers common. The imperative me koinou ('do not call common, do not treat as profane') directly countermands Peter's categories. As Peter himself will explain in verse 28, the vision is ultimately about people, not food.

16. The threefold repetition recalls Peter's threefold denial (Luke 22:54-62) and his threefold restoration (John 21:15-17). The pattern of three emphasizes divine persistence in overcoming human resistance. The sheet's return to heaven confirms its heavenly origin and authority.
17. The verb diaporeo ('be puzzled, be at a loss') shows that Peter does not immediately understand the vision's meaning. God's timing is precise: the vision's interpretation arrives not through explanation but through the arrival of Gentile visitors. The narrative structure itself teaches Peter — and the reader — what the vision means.
18. The verb xenizomai ('stay as a guest, be hosted') is related to xenos ('stranger, foreigner'). Peter is himself a guest — a stranger in someone else's house — when he is asked to go to another stranger's house. The theme of hospitality across boundaries pervades this chapter.
19. The Spirit speaks directly to Peter, connecting the vision to the arriving visitors. Some manuscripts read 'two men' instead of 'three' (accounting only for the servants, not the soldier). The SBLGNT reads 'three,' which matches the narrative in verse 7.
20. The participle diakrinomenos can mean 'doubting' or 'making distinctions' — both senses are relevant. Peter is not to doubt the Spirit's instruction, and he is not to make ethnic distinctions about his visitors. The Spirit claims responsibility: 'I have sent them' (ego apostalka autous), making the Gentile visitors divine emissaries.
21. Peter's obedience is immediate — he goes down from the rooftop without further argument. His self-identification ('I am the one you are looking for') and his question show readiness to hear what God has arranged.
22. The servants' description emphasizes Cornelius's credentials to reassure Peter: he is righteous, God-fearing, and respected even by Jews. The verb echrematisthe ('was directed, received a divine instruction') is used in the New Testament specifically for divine oracles and revelations (cf. Matthew 2:12, 22).
23. Peter's act of inviting Gentiles in and hosting them overnight is itself a boundary-crossing act — sharing table and lodging with Gentiles violated Jewish purity conventions. The 'brothers from Joppa' (six of them, according to 11:12) serve as witnesses to what will happen at Cornelius's house.
24. Cornelius's faith is shown by his preparation — he assembles a gathering before Peter arrives, fully trusting that God's plan will unfold. The phrase anagkaious philous ('close friends, intimate friends') suggests deep personal relationships. This is not an individual conversion but a household event.
25. The verb prosekunesen ('worshiped, did obeisance') can denote either divine worship or extreme honor toward a superior. Cornelius, accustomed to Roman hierarchy and perhaps viewing Peter as a divine messenger, offers an excessive gesture that Peter immediately corrects.
26. Peter's refusal of worship contrasts sharply with Herod's acceptance of divine honors in Acts 12:22-23. The phrase 'I myself am also a man' (kai ego autos anthropos eimi) emphasizes shared humanity — precisely the lesson Peter has just learned from his vision.
27. The casual verb synomilon ('conversing, talking together') suggests Peter and Cornelius speak as equals. Peter enters a Gentile house — a boundary he would not have crossed days earlier — and finds a large assembly waiting.
28. Peter now reveals his interpretation of the rooftop vision: it was about people, not food. The word athemiton ('unlawful, forbidden') does not refer to Torah prohibitions per se but to the extra-biblical purity traditions that had developed prohibiting table fellowship with Gentiles. Peter's declaration 'I should not call any person common or unclean' (medena koinon e akatharton legein anthronon) applies the categories of his vision directly to human beings.
29. The adverb anantirretos ('without objection, without contradiction') shows that Peter has accepted the vision's teaching fully, at least in principle. His question to Cornelius is not hesitation but an invitation for Cornelius to share his own divine encounter, establishing that both sides have been led by God.
30. Cornelius retells his vision, now describing the angel as 'a man in bright clothing' (aner en estheti lampra). The 'bright clothing' is a standard biblical marker for heavenly beings (cf. Luke 24:4, Acts 1:10). Some manuscripts add 'fasting and' before 'praying,' but the SBLGNT omits it.
31. The passive verbs — 'has been heard' (eisekousthe) and 'have been remembered' (emnesthesan) — use the divine passive: God is the one hearing and remembering. Cornelius's devotion has not gone unnoticed.
32. Cornelius faithfully recounts the angel's specific instructions, including the detail about the tanner's house by the sea. The precision of the directions confirms the vision's divine origin.
33. Cornelius's words 'we are all here in the presence of God' (enopion tou theou) frame the gathering as a sacred assembly. His readiness to hear 'everything commanded' shows complete openness to divine instruction. This is one of the most receptive audiences in all of Acts.
34. The phrase 'opened his mouth' (anoixas to stoma) is a Semitic idiom signaling a solemn, weighty declaration. The word prosopolempptes ('one who shows partiality, respecter of persons') appears only here in the New Testament. It derives from the Hebrew nasa panim ('to lift the face'), meaning to show favoritism. Peter's new understanding directly contradicts the ethnic exclusivism he held before the vision.
35. This verse does not teach salvation by works apart from the gospel — Peter is about to preach Christ. Rather, it declares that God's acceptance is not limited by ethnicity. The person who fears God and practices righteousness, in any nation, is one whom God welcomes to hear the gospel and receive its promise.

- 36. The grammatical structure is difficult; the sentence begins here but does not resolve easily until verse 37. The parenthetical declaration 'he is Lord of all' (houtos estin panton kyrios) is theologically explosive in this setting: if Jesus is Lord of all, not just of Israel, then Gentiles are included in his lordship. The phrase 'good news of peace' (euangelizomenos eirenen) echoes Isaiah 52:7.
- 36. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 52:7. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
- 37. Peter assumes his audience has heard about Jesus's ministry — the events were widely known. The summary that follows (vv. 37-43) is a compressed kerygma (gospel proclamation) covering Jesus's ministry, death, and resurrection, structured similarly to the Gospel of Mark.
- 38. The verb echrisen ('anointed') connects Jesus to his title Christos ('Anointed One'). The anointing refers to Jesus's baptism and the Spirit's descent (Luke 3:22). The description of Jesus 'doing good and healing' (euergeton kai iomenos) is the most concise summary of Jesus's ministry in the New Testament. The phrase 'God was with him' echoes the Emmanuel theme.
- 39. Peter claims eyewitness authority (hemeis martyres, 'we are witnesses'). The phrase 'hanging on a tree' (kremasantes epi xylou) alludes to Deuteronomy 21:22-23, where one hung on a tree is 'cursed by God.' This Old Testament allusion appears repeatedly in early Christian preaching (Acts 5:30, Galatians 3:13) as part of the scandal and theology of the cross.
- 39. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 21:22-23. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
- 40. The contrast is sharp: 'they put him to death' (v. 39) but 'God raised him' (v. 40). Human violence is overturned by divine action. The verb edoken ('gave, caused') with emphane genesthai ('to become visible') suggests that the resurrection appearances were God's deliberate act of disclosure, not something Jesus did independently.
- 41. The risen Jesus appeared not to the general public but to chosen witnesses (martusin tois prokecheirotonemenois). The detail of eating and drinking with the risen Jesus (synepagomen kai synepiomen) emphasizes the bodily, physical reality of the resurrection — this was not a ghost or a vision but a person who shared meals.
- 42. Jesus is presented not only as Savior but as judge (krites) — the one who will evaluate all humanity, both living and dead. The verb horismenos ('appointed, designated') is related to the English word 'horizon' — God has set the boundary of final judgment in the person of Jesus.
- 43. Peter grounds the gospel in the prophetic witness of the entire Old Testament — 'all the prophets' (pantes hoi prophetai). The offer of forgiveness is universal: 'everyone who believes' (panta ton pisteuonta), with no ethnic qualification. This is the climax of Peter's sermon, and the Spirit will dramatically confirm it in the next verse.
- 44. The Spirit interrupts Peter's sermon — he is 'still speaking' (eti lalountos) when the Spirit falls. God does not wait for Peter to finish, issue an altar call, or baptize. The verb epepesen ('fell upon') conveys sudden, powerful, uninvited arrival. This is the Gentile Pentecost — the Spirit's sovereign act that settles the question of Gentile inclusion before any human decision can be made.
- 45. The phrase 'circumcised believers' (hoi ek peritomes pistoi) identifies Peter's Jewish Christian companions. Their astonishment (exestesan) reveals how unexpected Gentile inclusion was — even after Peter's vision, they did not anticipate this. The verb ekkechutai ('has been poured out') echoes Joel 2:28 and Acts 2:17-18, explicitly linking this event to Pentecost.
- 45. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Joel 2:28 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
- 46. The evidence of the Spirit's presence is the same as at Pentecost: speaking in tongues (glossais) and praising God. This parallel is essential to Luke's argument — the same Spirit, the same manifestation, the same gift given to Gentiles as to Jews. No additional requirement can be imposed.
- 47. Peter's rhetorical question expects a negative answer: no one can deny baptism to those whom God has already accepted. The phrase 'just as we have' (hos kai hemeis) is the decisive argument — the Gentiles' experience is identical to the apostles' own. Water baptism follows Spirit baptism as confirmation, not as prerequisite.
- 48. Peter commands baptism 'in the name of Jesus Christ' (en to onomati Iesou Christou), the standard formula in Acts (cf. 2:38, 8:16, 19:5). The invitation to stay (epimeinai) indicates table fellowship — Peter remains in a Gentile household, sharing meals and life with the newly baptized. The barrier has been permanently broken.

Summary: Acts 11 opens with Peter defending his visit to Cornelius's household before the Jerusalem church, which criticizes him for eating with uncircumcised Gentiles. Peter recounts his vision and the Spirit's falling on the Gentiles in sequence, and the critics are silenced, glorifying God that 'even to the Gentiles God has granted repentance leading to life.' The chapter then shifts to Antioch, where scattered believers from the persecution following Stephen's death begin preaching to Greeks (not just Jews). A thriving church emerges, and Barnabas is sent from Jerusalem to investigate. He recruits Saul from Tarsus, and together they teach in Antioch for a year. It is here that the disciples are first called 'Christians.' The chapter closes with the prophet Agabus predicting a famine, prompting the Antioch church to send relief to Judea through Barnabas and Saul.

What Makes This Remarkable: Luke retells the Cornelius episode a second time through Peter's own lips — an unusually detailed repetition that underscores the event's theological centrality. The Jerusalem church's initial objection is not about doctrine but about table fellowship: 'You went to uncircumcised men and ate with them.' The Antioch church represents a new model of community — Jew and Gentile worshiping together — and becomes the launching point for the Gentile mission. The name 'Christians' (Christianoi) appears here for the first time, coined by outsiders in Antioch, probably as a political designation meaning 'partisans of Christ.'

Translation Friction: The Greek Hellenistas in verse 20 is textually uncertain: some manuscripts read Hellenas ('Greeks,' i.e., Gentiles), while others read Hellenistas ('Hellenists,' i.e., Greek-speaking Jews). The SBLGNT reads Hellenistas, but the narrative logic — contrasting these recipients with the 'Jews only' of verse 19 — strongly favors the meaning 'Greek-speaking Gentiles' or simply 'Greeks.' We follow the SBLGNT text while noting the issue. The famine under Claudius (v. 28) is historically attested by Josephus and Suetonius, though its exact dating is debated.

Connections: Peter's defense echoes and completes the Cornelius narrative of chapter 10. The Antioch church connects to the scattering of Acts 8:1-4 — persecution intended to destroy the movement instead spreads it. The Barnabas-Saul partnership anticipates the first missionary journey (Acts 13). The famine relief establishes the pattern of Gentile churches supporting the Jerusalem church (cf. Romans 15:25-27, 2 Corinthians 8-9). The name 'Christians' connects to the broader Roman political context of the early church.

¹Now the apostles and the brothers throughout Judea heard that the Gentiles also had received the word of God. ²So when Peter went up to Jerusalem, the circumcision party criticized him, ³Indeed, declaring, you wentest in to men uncircumcised, and didst eat with them. ⁴But Peter began and explained it to them step by step, saying, ⁵"I was in the city of Joppa praying, and in a trance I saw a vision: something like a large sheet descending, being let down from heaven by its four corners, and it came right down to me. ⁶Looking at it closely, I observed and saw four-footed animals of the earth, wild beasts, reptiles, and birds of the air. ⁷I also heard a voice saying to me, 'Rise, Peter; kill and eat.' ⁸But I said, 'By no means, Lord, for nothing common or unclean has ever entered my mouth.' ⁹But the voice answered a second time from heaven, 'What God has made clean, do not call common.' ¹⁰This happened three times, and then everything was pulled back up into heaven. ¹¹And at that very moment, three men who had been sent to me from Caesarea arrived at the house where we were. ¹²The Spirit told me to go with them, making no distinction. These six brothers also accompanied me, and we entered the man's house. ¹³He told us how he had seen the angel stand in his house and say, 'Send to Joppa and bring Simon who is called Peter. ¹⁴He will speak words to you by which you will be saved, you and all your household.' ¹⁵As I began to speak, the Holy Spirit fell on them just as on us at the beginning. ¹⁶And I remembered the word of the Lord, how he said, 'John baptized with water, but you will be baptized with the Holy Spirit.' ¹⁷If then God gave them the same gift that he gave us when we believed in the Lord Jesus Christ, who was I to stand in God's way?" ¹⁸When they heard these things, they fell silent and glorified God, saying, "Then God has granted even to the Gentiles the repentance that leads to life." ¹⁹Now those who were scattered because of the persecution that arose over Stephen traveled as far as Phoenicia, Cyprus, and Antioch, speaking the word to no one except Jews. ²⁰But among them were some men from Cyprus and Cyrene who, when they came to Antioch, began speaking to the Greeks also, proclaiming the Lord Jesus as good news. ²¹The hand of the Lord was with them, and a great number who believed turned to the Lord. ²²The report about them reached the ears of the church in Jerusalem, and they sent Barnabas to Antioch. ²³When he came and saw the grace of God, he was glad and encouraged them all to remain faithful to the Lord with steadfast purpose of heart, ²⁴Since he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith — and much those present was added to the Lord. ²⁵Then Barnabas went to Tarsus to look for Saul, ²⁶After he had found him, he brought him to Antioch. And it happened that, that a whole year they assembled themselves with the church, and taught much people. And the followers were called Christians first in Antioch. ²⁷In those days prophets came down from Jerusalem to Antioch. ²⁸One of them named Agabus stood up and predicted by the Spirit that a severe famine was about to come over the whole inhabited world — this took place during the reign of Claudius. ²⁹So the disciples, each according to his ability, determined to send relief to the brothers living in Judea. ³⁰And they did so, sending it to the elders by the hand of Barnabas and Saul.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The news travels fast: the phrase 'the Gentiles also' (kai ta ethne) carries the force of surprise — this was unprecedented. The verb edexanto ('received, welcomed') implies active acceptance, not mere passive hearing.
2. The phrase hoi ek peritomes ('those of the circumcision') here denotes Jewish believers who insisted on maintaining Jewish identity markers, particularly circumcision, as requirements for fellowship. The verb diekrinonto ('contended, criticized, took issue') indicates serious objection, not casual questioning.
3. The charge focuses on table fellowship (synephages, 'you ate with'), not on preaching or baptism. Eating together implied social equality and religious communion. The phrase 'uncircumcised men' (andras akrobystian echontas, literally 'men having foreskin') is deliberately blunt, emphasizing the boundary Peter crossed.
4. The adverb kathexes ('in order, step by step') indicates a careful, sequential retelling. Peter does not argue from theology but from narrative — he lets the events speak for themselves.
5. Peter retells his vision from Acts 10:9-16 in the first person. The detail 'it came right down to me' (elthen achri emou) personalizes the vision — this was directed specifically at Peter.
6. Peter adds 'wild beasts' (theria) to the retelling, a detail not explicitly mentioned in 10:12 in all manuscripts. The comprehensive list emphasizes the indiscriminate mixture of clean and unclean creatures.
7. The command is identical to 10:13. In the retelling, Peter faithfully reproduces the divine directive that shocked him.
8. Peter's retelling makes the refusal even more emphatic with 'entered into my mouth' (eiselthen eis to stoma mou) — a visceral way of expressing his lifelong observance of dietary law.
9. The addition of 'from heaven' (ek tou ouranou) emphasizes the divine authority behind the command. The principle stands: God's cleansing overrides human categories of purity.
10. The verb anespasthe ('was pulled up, was drawn up') differs slightly from 10:16's anelemphthe but conveys the same idea. The threefold pattern confirms divine insistence.
11. The timing — 'at that very moment' (exautes) — underscores divine orchestration. The vision and the visitors arrive in perfect coordination.
12. Peter specifies 'these six brothers' (hoi hex adelphoi houtoi), indicating they are present in Jerusalem as witnesses. Their presence gives Peter's testimony legal weight — multiple witnesses confirm the events. The phrase 'making no distinction' (meden diakrinanta) can also mean 'without hesitation,' carrying both meanings simultaneously.
13. Peter now incorporates Cornelius's vision into his defense. The double vision — one to Cornelius, one to Peter — demonstrates that God was working from both sides simultaneously.
14. This detail — that Peter's message would bring salvation to Cornelius's entire household — is not explicitly stated in chapter 10's account of the angel's message. Peter either recalls additional detail or interprets the angel's directive in light of what subsequently happened. The household salvation motif is prominent in Acts (cf. 16:15, 31).
15. The phrase 'at the beginning' (en arche) refers to Pentecost (Acts 2). Peter draws a direct line from the original outpouring of the Spirit to this Gentile experience. The parallel is exact and undeniable: same Spirit, same manifestation, same divine initiative.
16. Peter quotes Jesus's words from Acts 1:5. The remembering (emnesthe) is prompted by the Spirit's own action — the event interprets the prophecy. The distinction between water baptism and Spirit baptism is not a contrast between inferior and superior but between preparation and fulfillment.
17. Peter's argument is simple and irrefutable: God acted first, giving the Gentiles the 'same gift' (ten isen dorean). To refuse them would be to oppose God himself. The rhetorical question 'who was I to stand in God's way?' (ego tis emen dynatos kolusai ton theon) is Peter's strongest argument — not theological reasoning but divine fait accompli.

18. The critics' response moves from silence (hesuchasan) to praise (edoxasan) — a dramatic reversal. The phrase 'repentance leading to life' (ten metanoian eis zoen) describes repentance not merely as a human act of turning but as a divine gift (edoken, 'granted, gave'). God gives repentance; he does not merely demand it.
19. Luke picks up the thread from Acts 8:1-4. The scattering (diasparentes) that began with Stephen's martyrdom has produced a diaspora mission, but initially only to Jews. Antioch, the third-largest city in the Roman Empire after Rome and Alexandria, will become the strategic center for the Gentile mission.
20. The SBLGNT reads Hellenistas, which typically means 'Greek-speaking Jews' (as in 6:1), but the context — contrasting with 'Jews only' in verse 19 — demands the meaning 'Greek-speaking Gentiles' or simply 'Greeks.' Some manuscripts read Hellenas ('Greeks'), which may be the original reading. These unnamed missionaries from Cyprus and Cyrene initiate the Gentile mission at Antioch independently of the Cornelius episode.
21. The phrase 'the hand of the Lord' (cheir kyriou) is a Hebraic idiom for divine power and blessing, frequent in the Old Testament (e.g., 1 Kings 18:46, Ezra 7:9). The combination of 'believed' (pisteusas) and 'turned' (epetrepsen) describes conversion as both cognitive assent and life reorientation.
21. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes 1 Kings 18:46. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
21. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Ezra 7:9. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
22. Jerusalem sends Barnabas — not to suppress but to assess and encourage. The choice of Barnabas is strategic: he is a Levite from Cyprus (4:36), giving him cultural affinity with the Cypriots who started the work, and his name means 'son of encouragement.' His generous spirit (4:37) makes him ideal for this mission.
23. Barnabas 'saw the grace of God' (idon ten charin tou theou) — grace was visible in the transformed community. The wordplay between charin ('grace') and echare ('was glad, rejoiced') connects divine grace to human joy. His encouragement to 'remain faithful' (prosmenein) with 'purpose of heart' (prothesei tes kardias) addresses the challenge of perseverance in a new and vulnerable community.
24. Luke's character summary of Barnabas — 'a good man, full of the Holy Spirit and of faith' — is one of the highest commendations in Acts. Similar language is used of Stephen (6:5). The passive 'were added to the Lord' (proseteche to kyrio) credits God with the growth, not Barnabas.
25. The verb anazetesai ('to look for, to search out') suggests Saul was not easily found — Tarsus was a large city and several years had passed since Saul's departure from Jerusalem (9:30). Barnabas's initiative in recruiting Saul is one of the most consequential acts in church history.
26. The name Christianoi ('Christians,' literally 'Christ-partisans' or 'those belonging to Christ') follows the Latin pattern of political party names (e.g., Herodianoi, Kaisarianoi). It was likely coined by Roman authorities or the general public in Antioch as a label for this new group. The term appears only three times in the New Testament (here, 26:28, and 1 Peter 4:16). That it was a name given by outsiders, not self-chosen, suggests the movement had become publicly visible and distinct from Judaism.
27. The verb kathelthon ('came down') reflects the geographical reality — Jerusalem is at a higher elevation — and the theological convention that one always 'goes up' to Jerusalem and 'comes down' from it. The presence of prophets (prophetai) in the early church is well attested (cf. 13:1, 15:32, 21:10).
28. Agabus appears again in 21:10-11, predicting Paul's arrest. The phrase 'the whole inhabited world' (holen ten oikoumenen) is a standard expression for the Roman Empire. Claudius reigned AD 41-54. Josephus records a severe famine in Judea around AD 46-47 (Antiquities 20.49-53), and Suetonius mentions food shortages under Claudius. Luke's parenthetical note — 'this took place' — confirms the prophecy's fulfillment.
29. The phrase 'each according to his ability' (kathos euporeto tis) establishes proportional giving as the standard — not equal amounts but equal sacrifice. The Gentile church in Antioch sends aid to the Jewish church in Judea, reversing the expected direction of benefaction and demonstrating the unity of the body across ethnic lines.
30. This is the first mention of 'elders' (presbyterous) in the Jerusalem church, indicating an organizational structure developing beyond the apostles alone. Barnabas and Saul serve as the delivery agents, a mission that brings them to Jerusalem (12:25) and sets the stage for their commissioning in chapter 13.

Summary: Acts 12 narrates the persecution of the church under Herod Agrippa I. James the brother of John is executed by the sword — the first apostolic martyrdom. Herod arrests Peter during Passover, intending to bring him to trial afterward. The church prays earnestly for Peter. An angel appears in the prison at night, wakes Peter, causes his chains to fall off, and leads him past the guards and through the iron gate into the city. Peter goes to the house of Mary, mother of John Mark, where the church is gathered in prayer. The servant Rhoda recognizes his voice but in her joy leaves him standing at the gate. The chapter concludes with Herod's gruesome death: accepting divine acclamation from the crowd, he is struck down by an angel and eaten by worms.

What Makes This Remarkable: The contrast between James and Peter is stark and unexplained: James is killed, Peter is rescued, and Luke offers no theological explanation for why one apostle dies and another is delivered. This narrative honesty is striking. The scene at Mary's house contains rare humor in Acts — the praying church refuses to believe their prayer has been answered, insisting it must be Peter's angel rather than Peter himself. Herod Agrippa I's death is independently confirmed by Josephus (Antiquities 19.343-350), who describes the same event at Caesarea with additional details.

Translation Friction: Herod Agrippa I (here called simply 'Herod') was the grandson of Herod the Great and ruled Judea from AD 41-44. His persecution of the church was politically motivated — currying favor with the Jewish leadership. The 'angel' (angelos) who rescues Peter and the 'angel of the Lord' who strikes Herod represent two sides of divine intervention: deliverance and judgment. The prayer gathering at Mary's house provides the earliest glimpse of a house church in Jerusalem.

Connections: James's execution fulfills Jesus's prediction that James and John would share his cup of suffering (Mark 10:39). Peter's deliverance from prison echoes the apostles' earlier prison escape (Acts 5:19-20). Herod's death by accepting divine honors contrasts with Peter's refusal of worship from Cornelius (10:25-26). The mention of John Mark (v. 12) introduces a figure who will feature prominently in 13:13 and 15:37-39.

¹About that time Herod the king laid violent hands on some who belonged to the church. ²He executed James, John's brother by the sword. ³When he saw that it pleased the Jews, he proceeded to arrest Peter also. This was during the days of Unleavened Bread. ⁴When he had seized him, he put him in prison and handed him over to four squads of four soldiers each to guard him, intending after the Passover to bring him out before the people. ⁵So Peter was kept in prison, but earnest prayer for him was being made to God by the church. ⁶The very night before Herod was going to bring him out, Peter was sleeping between two soldiers, bound with two chains, and sentries before the door were guarding the prison. ⁷And suddenly an angel of the Lord appeared, and a light shone in the cell. He struck Peter on the side and woke him, saying, "Get up quickly." And the chains fell off his hands. ⁸The angel said to him, "Dress yourself and put on your sandals." And he did so. Then the angel said, "Wrap your cloak around you and follow me." ⁹He went out and followed, and he did not know that what was happening through the angel was real — he thought he was seeing a vision. ¹⁰When they had passed the first guard and the second, they came to the iron gate leading into the city. It opened for them by itself, and they went out and went along one street, and immediately the angel left him. ¹¹When Peter came to himself, he said, "Now I know for certain that the Lord has sent his angel and rescued me from the hand of Herod and from all that the Jewish people were expecting." ¹²When he realized this, he went to the house of Mary, the mother of John who was called Mark, where many were gathered together and were praying. ¹³When he knocked at the door of the gateway, a servant girl named Rhoda came to answer. ¹⁴Recognizing Peter's voice, she was so overjoyed that she did not open the gate but ran inside and reported that Peter was standing at the gate. ¹⁵They said to her, "You are out of your mind." But she kept insisting that it was so. They said, "It is his angel." ¹⁶But Peter kept on knocking, and when they opened the door, they saw him and were astonished. ¹⁷Motioning to them with his hand to be silent, he described to them how the Lord had brought him out of the prison. And he said, "Report these things to James and to the brothers." Then he departed and went to another place. ¹⁸When day came, there was no small commotion among the soldiers over what had become of Peter. ¹⁹Herod searched for him and could not find him, and after examining the guards, he ordered them to be led away to execution. Then he went down from Judea to Caesarea and stayed there. ²⁰No

Herod was furious with the people of Tyre and Sidon. They came to him with one accord, and having persuaded Blastus, the king's chamberlain, they asked for peace, because their country depended on the king's territory for food. ²¹On an appointed day Herod put on his royal robes, took his seat on the tribunal, and delivered a public address to them. ²²And the people were shouting, "The voice of a god and not of a man!" ²³Immediately an angel of the Lord struck him down, because he did not give God the glory, and he was eaten by worms and died. ²⁴But the word of God continued to increase and spread. ²⁵And Barnabas and Saul returned from Jerusalem when they had completed their mission of relief, bringing with them John who was called Mark.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The phrase 'laid violent hands on' (epebalen tas cheiras kakosai) combines physical seizure with intent to harm. 'Herod the king' is Herod Agrippa I, grandson of Herod the Great, who ruled all of Judea from AD 41-44 under Emperor Claudius.
2. James son of Zebedee becomes the first of the Twelve to be martyred. Luke reports it in a single sentence with no elaboration — a striking restraint. Execution by sword (machaira) was considered a more honorable death than crucifixion. This James should be distinguished from James the brother of Jesus, who leads the Jerusalem church (15:13, 21:18).
3. Herod's motivation is political popularity (areston estin tois Ioudaiois, 'it was pleasing to the Jews'). The parenthetical note about the Feast of Unleavened Bread (immediately following Passover) creates a parallel with Jesus's arrest during the same festival season. The timing also explains why Herod delays the trial — he will not execute during the holy week.
4. Sixteen soldiers (four squads of four, tessarsin tetradiois) were assigned to Peter — an extraordinary security measure, likely prompted by the earlier escape in Acts 5:19. The KJV's 'Easter' is anachronistic; the Greek pascha refers to the Jewish Passover festival. Herod plans a public trial for maximum political effect.
5. The contrast is dramatic: 'Peter was kept in prison, but...' (ho men oun... de...) — human power holds Peter, divine power is invoked through prayer. The adverb ektenos ('earnestly, fervently, unceasingly') conveys intensity and persistence, not merely duration.
6. Peter sleeps soundly on the eve of his expected execution — a detail that suggests either extraordinary faith or exhaustion, likely both. He is chained to a soldier on each side (standard Roman practice for high-security prisoners), with additional guards at the door. The security emphasis makes the coming escape unmistakably supernatural.
7. The angel's appearance is accompanied by light (phos elampen) — a theophanic marker. The angel must physically strike (pataxas) Peter's side to wake him, reinforcing how deeply he was sleeping. The chains falling (exepesan hai haluseis) without waking the soldiers is the first of several miraculous details that bypass the elaborate security.
8. The step-by-step instructions — belt, sandals, cloak — suggest Peter is disoriented and needs explicit guidance. The detail is vivid and personal, likely reflecting Peter's own retelling of the experience. Each instruction must be given individually.
9. Peter's confusion between reality and vision (horama) is psychologically realistic. The experience is so extraordinary that he cannot distinguish it from a dream. Luke's honest portrayal of Peter's disorientation adds credibility to the account.
10. The word automate ('by itself, of its own accord') — from which English derives 'automatic' — describes the iron gate opening without human or visible cause. The angel departs abruptly (eutheos apeste) once Peter is safely in the city, having completed the rescue mission.
11. The phrase 'came to himself' (en heauto genomenos) marks the transition from trance-like confusion to clear awareness. Peter recognizes both the divine source of his rescue and its double significance: deliverance from Herod's power and from the people's expectation of a public execution.
12. Mary's house apparently served as a meeting place for the Jerusalem church — she was likely a woman of means to host such gatherings. John Mark (Ioannou tou epikaloumenou Markou) is traditionally identified as the author of the Gospel of Mark. He is Barnabas's cousin (Colossians 4:10) and will accompany Barnabas and Saul on their first journey (13:5).
13. The name Rhode ('Rhoda') means 'rose.' The paidiske ('servant girl') answering the outer gate suggests a household of some size and status. The detail of her name suggests she was known to the early Christian community and may have been a source for this account.
14. The scene is vividly comic: Rhoda recognizes Peter's voice, becomes so excited (apo tes charas, 'from joy') that she forgets to open the gate, and runs to tell the others while Peter remains standing outside. Luke preserves this detail — likely from eyewitness testimony — with evident delight.
15. The church that has been praying for Peter's deliverance refuses to believe it has happened. The accusation mainei ('you are mad, you are out of your mind') and the alternative explanation 'it is his angel' (ho angelos estin autou) reflect the Jewish belief that each person has a guardian angel who can appear in their likeness. The irony is rich: they would rather believe in an angel's appearance than in an answered prayer.
16. Peter's persistent knocking (epemenen krouon) while the church debates inside adds to the scene's humor and humanity. Their astonishment (exestesan) upon seeing him demonstrates that they were praying without fully expecting the answer they received.

17. Peter gestures for silence (kataseisas te cheiri sigan) — the excited group needs calming. The 'James' referenced is James the brother of Jesus, who has emerged as the leader of the Jerusalem church after the apostle James's execution. Peter's departure to 'another place' (heteron topon) is deliberately vague — Luke either does not know or chooses not to reveal where Peter went, perhaps for security reasons.
18. Luke's characteristic litotes — 'no small commotion' (tarachos ouk oligos) — means extreme agitation. Under Roman military law, guards who lost a prisoner could face the prisoner's punishment, making their distress a matter of life and death.
19. The verb apachthenai ('to be led away') is a euphemism for execution — the guards pay with their lives for Peter's escape. Herod's move from Jerusalem to Caesarea shifts the scene to the Roman administrative capital, where his own death will follow.
20. Tyre and Sidon were Phoenician coastal cities dependent on Galilee's agricultural production for grain — an economic reality attested since the time of Solomon (1 Kings 5:9-11). Their need for peace (eirenēn) was economic, not military. Blastus's role as chamberlain (epi tou koitonos, literally 'over the bedchamber') gave him personal access to Herod.
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes 1 Kings 5:9-11 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
21. Josephus describes the same scene: Herod wore a garment made entirely of silver that glittered spectacularly in the morning sun (Antiquities 19.344). The bema ('tribunal, judgment seat') was the raised platform from which official pronouncements were made.
22. The crowd's acclamation — 'a god's voice, not a man's' (theou phone kai ouk anthropou) — is blasphemous flattery. In the Roman imperial context, divine honors for rulers were common, but Jewish sensibility found such claims abhorrent. Herod's failure to deflect this worship seals his fate.
23. The same angelic agency that rescued Peter now strikes Herod. The stated reason — 'he did not give God the glory' (ouk edoken ten doxan to theo) — is the opposite of Peter's response in 10:26 when Cornelius worshiped him. The detail of being 'eaten by worms' (skolekobros) describes a horrifying death. Josephus similarly reports that Herod was seized with sudden abdominal pain and died five days later (Antiquities 19.346-350). Herod Agrippa I died in AD 44.
24. Luke's summary statement contrasts human power with divine word: Herod dies, but the word grows. The verbs euxanen ('increased') and eplethuneto ('multiplied') are growth language that personifies the gospel as a living, expanding force. This is one of Luke's periodic progress reports (cf. 6:7, 9:31, 16:5, 19:20).
25. Some manuscripts read 'returned to Jerusalem' (eis Ierousalem) and others 'returned from Jerusalem' (ex Ierousalem). The SBLGNT reads eis, but the context — they had gone to Jerusalem with the famine relief (11:30) — means they are returning from Jerusalem to Antioch. They bring John Mark with them, setting the stage for the first missionary journey in chapter 13.

Summary: Acts 13 marks the beginning of the first missionary journey. The Holy Spirit commissions Barnabas and Saul from the church at Antioch. They travel to Cyprus, where they encounter the sorcerer Bar-Jesus (Elymas) and the proconsul Sergius Paulus. From this point, Saul begins using his Roman name Paul, and Paul emerges as the mission's leader. They sail to Perga in Pamphylia, where John Mark departs. In Pisidian Antioch, Paul delivers a major synagogue sermon surveying Israel's history from the exodus through David to Jesus, declaring forgiveness of sins through Christ and warning of judgment on those who reject the message. Many respond positively, but Jewish opposition arises, and Paul and Barnabas announce their turn to the Gentiles, citing Isaiah 49:6. The Gentiles rejoice, but the missionaries are expelled from the region.

What Makes This Remarkable: Paul's sermon in Pisidian Antioch is the longest recorded speech in Acts directed at a Jewish audience and serves as Luke's model for Paul's synagogue preaching. It parallels Peter's Pentecost sermon in structure but with distinctly Pauline emphases: justification, the inadequacy of the law of Moses, and the prophetic warning against rejection. The transition from 'Saul' to 'Paul' occurs mid-narrative (13:9) without explanation — Luke simply begins using the Roman name, signaling the shift toward the Gentile world. The declaration 'we are turning to the Gentiles' (13:46) is one of the most pivotal statements in Acts.

*Translation Friction: The identity of 'Simeon called Niger' (v. 1) has generated speculation — Niger means 'black' in Latin, suggesting African origin. Lucius of Cyrene is North African. Manaen is described as a syntrophos ('childhood companion') of Herod Antipas. This leadership team reflects remarkable ethnic and social diversity. Paul's sermon condenses Israelite history selectively, and his claim that the law of Moses could not justify (v. 39) introduces Pauline soteriology into the narrative. The quotation composite in verses 33-35 draws from Psalm 2, Isaiah 55, and Psalm 16.*

Connections: The commissioning scene (vv. 1-3) parallels Isaiah 6 and Jeremiah 1 as a prophetic sending. Paul's historical survey echoes Stephen's speech in Acts 7. The citation of Isaiah 49:6 ('a light for the Gentiles') connects to Simeon's prophecy in Luke 2:32. The pattern of synagogue preaching followed by Jewish rejection and Gentile reception becomes the template for Paul's ministry throughout Acts.

¹Now there were in the church at Antioch prophets and teachers: Barnabas, Simeon who was called Niger, Lucius of Cyrene, Manaen who had been a childhood companion of Herod the tetrarch, and Saul. ²While they were worshiping the Lord and fasting, the Holy Spirit said, "Set apart for me Barnabas and Saul for the work to which I have called them." ³Then after fasting and praying, they laid their hands on them and sent them off. ⁴So, being sent out by the Holy Spirit, they went down to Seleucia, and from there they sailed to Cyprus. ⁵When they arrived at Salamis, they proclaimed the word of God in the synagogues of the Jews. They also had John as their assistant. ⁶When they had traveled through the whole island as far as Paphos, they found a certain man, a Jewish sorcerer and false prophet named Bar-Jesus, ⁷Which was with the deputy of the region, Sergius Paulus, a prudent person. Who named for Barnabas and Saul, and desired to listen the message of God. ⁸But Elymas the sorcerer (for that is the meaning of his name) opposed them, seeking to turn the proconsul away from the faith. ⁹But Saul, who was also called Paul, filled with the Holy Spirit, looked intently at him ¹⁰Stated, O full of all cunning and all mischief, you child of the devil, you enemy of all righteousness, wilt you not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord? ¹¹And now, look, the hand of the Lord is against you, and you will be blind and unable to see the sun for a time." Immediately mist and darkness fell on him, and he went about seeking someone to lead him by the hand. ¹²Then the proconsul believed, when he saw what had happened, for he was astonished at the teaching of the Lord. ¹³Paul and his companions set sail from Paphos and came to Perga in Pamphylia. But John left them and returned to Jerusalem. ¹⁴But they went on from Perga and came to Antioch in Pisidia. On the Sabbath day they went into the synagogue and sat down. ¹⁵After the reading of the Law and the Prophets, the synagogue leaders sent word to them, saying, "Brothers, if you have any word of encouragement for the people, speak." ¹⁶So Paul stood up and motioning with his hand said, "Men of Israel and you who fear God, listen. ¹⁷The God of this people Israel chose our fathers and made the people great during their stay in the land of Egypt, and with uplifted arm he led them out of it. ¹⁸And for about forty years he put up with them in the wilderness. ¹⁹After destroying seven nations in the land of Canaan, he gave them their land as an inheritance ²⁰Following that he offered to them judges concerning the space of four hundred and fifty years, until Samuel the prophet. ²¹Then they asked for a king, and God gave them Saul the son of Kish, a man of the tribe of Benjamin, for forty years. ²²After removing him, he raised up David as their king, to whom he also bore witness and said, 'I have found David the son of Jesse, a man after my heart, who will do all my will.' ²³From this man's offspring God has brought to Israel a Savior, Jesus, as he promised. ²⁴Before his coming, John had proclaimed a baptism of repentance to all the people of Israel. ²⁵As John was finishing his course, he said, 'What do you suppose that I am? I am not he. But after me one is coming, the sandals of whose feet I am not worthy to untie.' ²⁶Brothers, sons of Abraham's family, and those among you who fear God, to us the message of this salvation has been sent. ²⁷For the residents of Jerusalem and their rulers, because they did not recognize him nor understand the words of the prophets that are read every Sabbath, fulfilled them by condemning him. ²⁸Though they found no grounds for a death sentence, they asked Pilate to have him executed. ²⁹When they had carried out everything that was written about him, they took him down from the tree and laid him in a tomb. ³⁰However, God brought him back to life. ³¹He was seen numerous days of them which arrived up with him from Galilee to Jerusalem, who are his witnesses to the people. ³²And we bring you the good news that the promise made to the fathers ³³God has fulfilled this for us, their children, by raising up Jesus, as it is also written in the second Psalm: 'You are my Son; today I have begotten you.' ³⁴And as for the fact that he raised him from the dead, no longer to return to decay, he has spoken in this way: 'I will give you the holy and sure blessings of David.' ³⁵Therefore he also says in another psalm, 'You will not let your Holy One see decay.' ³⁶For David, after he had served God's purpose in his own generation, fell asleep and was laid with his fathers and saw decay, ³⁷Yet he, whom God raised again, noticed no corruption. ³⁸Let it be known to you therefore, brothers, that through this man forgiveness of sins is proclaimed to you, ³⁹By him all that trust are justified from all things, from which you could not be justified by the law of Moses. ⁴⁰Beware, therefore, lest what is said in the prophets should come about: ⁴¹'Look, you scoffers, be astounded and perish, for I am doing a work in your days, a work that you will never believe, even if someone tells you."⁴² As they went out, the people urged them to speak about these things the next Sabbath.⁴³ When the meeting of the synagogue broke up, many Jews and devout converts followed Paul and Barnabas, who spoke with them and urged them to continue in the grace of God.⁴⁴ The next Sabbath almost the whole city gathered to hear the word of the Lord.⁴⁵ But when the Jews saw the crowds, they were filled with jealousy and began contradicting what was spoken by Paul, reviling him.⁴⁶ And Paul and Barnabas spoke out boldly, saying, "It was necessary that the word of God be spoken first to you. Since you thrust it aside and judge yourselves unworthy of eternal life, we are turning to the Gentiles.⁴⁷ For so the Lord has commanded us, saying, 'I have made you a light for the Gentiles, that you may bring salvation to the ends of the earth.'" ⁴⁸ When the Gentiles heard this, they began rejoicing and glorifying the word of the Lord, and as many as were appointed to eternal life believed.⁴⁹ And the word of the Lord was spreading throughout the whole region.⁵⁰ But the Jews incited the devout women of high standing and the leading men of the city, stirred up persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and drove them out of their district.⁵¹ So they shook the dust off their feet against them and went to Iconium.⁵² And with the holy ghost, and the followers were filled with joy.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The leadership team reflects extraordinary diversity: Barnabas (a Levite from Cyprus), Simeon Niger (likely of African descent, the Latin cognomen Niger meaning 'black'), Lucius of Cyrene (North African), Manaen (syntrophos, 'foster brother' or 'childhood companion' of Herod Antipas, thus from the ruling class), and Saul (a Pharisee from Tarsus). Barnabas stands first, Saul last — an order that will soon reverse.
2. The verb leitourgounton ('worshiping, ministering') is the root of 'liturgy' and denotes formal, communal worship. The Spirit speaks directly — how is not specified (through a prophet, an audible voice, or communal discernment). The command 'set apart for me' (aphorise de moi) echoes God's call of the prophets (cf. Jeremiah 1:5, Galatians 1:15 where Paul uses the same verb of his own calling).
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Jeremiah 1:5. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. The laying on of hands (epithentes tas cheiras) is a commissioning gesture, not ordination in the later ecclesiastical sense. Barnabas and Saul are already prophets and teachers (v. 1); the church is confirming and releasing what the Spirit has directed. The verb apelusan ('released, sent away') suggests both permission and blessing.
4. Luke attributes the sending to the Holy Spirit (ekpempthentes hypo tou hagiou pneumatos), not merely to the church. Seleucia was Antioch's port city on the Mediterranean, about sixteen miles west. Cyprus was Barnabas's homeland (4:36), making it a natural first destination.
5. Salamis was the largest city on the eastern coast of Cyprus. The plural 'synagogues' indicates a significant Jewish population. The pattern of beginning in synagogues becomes standard Pauline practice. John (Mark) serves as hyperetes ('assistant, attendant'), a role that may have included practical arrangements and possibly catechetical instruction.
6. Paphos was the Roman capital of Cyprus, on the western coast. Bar-Jesus (Bariesou, 'son of Jesus/Joshua') is identified with three descriptors: magos ('sorcerer, magician'), pseudoprophetes ('false prophet'), and Ioudaios ('Jewish'). A Jewish man practicing sorcery and claiming prophetic gifts violated Torah prohibitions (Deuteronomy 18:10-12).
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Deuteronomy 18:10-12. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. Luke correctly identifies the governor as anthupatos ('proconsul'), the title for governors of senatorial provinces — Cyprus had been transferred to senatorial control in 22 BC. The name Sergius Paulus is attested in inscriptions. His description as sunetos ('intelligent, discerning') distinguishes him from Bar-Jesus's influence.
8. The name Elymas (Elymas) is presented as a translation or equivalent of his function, though the etymology is uncertain — it may derive from an Aramaic or Arabic root meaning 'wise man' or 'sorcerer.' His opposition is strategic: if the proconsul converts, Elymas loses his position and influence.
9. This is the pivotal moment when Luke introduces the name Paul (Paulos). The parenthetical 'who was also called Paul' (ho kai Paulos) indicates he had both names throughout — Saul was his Jewish name, Paul his Roman cognomen. From this point forward, Luke uses only 'Paul.' The transition occurs as Paul confronts a Roman-world figure, signaling the Gentile orientation of his mission.
10. Paul's denunciation is fierce and deliberate. The title 'son of the devil' (huie diabolou) is a pointed reversal of Bar-Jesus's name ('son of Jesus/salvation') — he is actually a son of the adversary. The phrase 'making crooked the straight paths of the Lord' (diastrephon tas hodous tou kyriou tas eutheias) alludes to Isaiah 40:3-4 and its call to prepare straight paths.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 40:3-4 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.

11. The punishment is temporary ('for a time,' achri kairou) and fitting: the one who sought to keep others in spiritual darkness is plunged into physical darkness. There may be a parallel with Paul's own experience of temporary blindness on the Damascus road (9:8-9), suggesting the possibility of eventual restoration and conversion.
12. The proconsul's faith is prompted by what he saw (idon to gegonos) but grounded in the teaching (didache tou kyriou). Luke distinguishes between the miracle as attention-getting and the teaching as the actual content of faith. This is the first conversion of a Roman official in Paul's ministry.
13. The phrase 'Paul and his companions' (hoi peri Paulon) marks the shift in leadership — Barnabas is now subordinate. John Mark's departure (apochoresas, 'having departed, withdrawn') is recorded without explanation, but Paul later viewed it as a desertion serious enough to cause a sharp disagreement with Barnabas (15:37-39). Perga was about eight miles inland from the coast of Pamphylia in southern Asia Minor.
14. Pisidian Antioch (distinct from Syrian Antioch) was a Roman colony in the interior of Asia Minor, about 100 miles north of Perga through difficult mountain terrain. Sitting down in the synagogue indicates their role as visitors; speakers were typically seated during instruction.
15. The synagogue service included readings from the Torah (nomos) and the Prophets (prophetai), followed by an invitation for qualified visitors to offer a 'word of encouragement' (logos parakleseos). This was standard practice and gave Paul a natural platform. The plural archisynagogoi ('synagogue leaders') suggests a council of leaders rather than a single ruler.
16. Paul addresses two groups: 'Men of Israel' (ethnic Jews) and 'those who fear God' (God-fearing Gentiles who attended synagogue). The dual address reflects the mixed audience and anticipates the sermon's universal conclusion. The gesture of motioning with the hand (kataseisas te cheiri) is characteristic of Paul in Acts (cf. 21:40, 26:1).
17. Paul begins his historical survey with the exodus, the foundational event of Israelite identity. The phrase 'with uplifted arm' (meta brachionos hupselou) is a classic Old Testament metaphor for divine power in the exodus (cf. Exodus 6:6, Deuteronomy 5:15). The word paroikia ('sojourning, stay as foreigners') emphasizes Israel's alien status in Egypt.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 6:6. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Deuteronomy 5:15. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. The verb etropophoresn has two possible readings: tropophoresn ('bore with their ways, endured their behavior') or trophophoresn ('nourished, cared for them'). The SBLGNT reads the former, emphasizing God's patience with Israel's wilderness rebellion. The forty-year period is standard (cf. Numbers 14:34, Deuteronomy 8:2).
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Numbers 14:34 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Deuteronomy 8:2 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. The seven nations of Canaan are listed in Deuteronomy 7:1. The verb katekleronomenen ('gave as an inheritance, allotted') connects the land to the covenant promise to Abraham (Genesis 15:18-21).
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 7:1. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 15:18-21. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
20. The 450 years likely covers the period from the patriarchs through the judges, not the judges period alone. The chronology is approximate and theological rather than strictly historical. Samuel serves as the bridge between the judges and the monarchy.
21. Paul, himself from the tribe of Benjamin and originally named Saul, mentions his royal namesake. Saul's forty-year reign is not stated in the Old Testament but is attested by Josephus (Antiquities 6.378). The people's request for a king is presented negatively in 1 Samuel 8:4-22.
21. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes 1 Samuel 8:4-22. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
22. Paul's quotation combines Psalm 89:20 ('I have found David'), 1 Samuel 13:14 ('a man after my heart'), and Isaiah 44:28 ('who will do all my will') into a composite testimony. The phrase 'a man after my heart' (andra kata ten kardian mou) is the theological apex of the historical survey — David's heart orientation toward God is the quality that defines his kingship.
22. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on 1 Samuel 13:14. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
22. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalm 89:20. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.

- 23. The entire historical survey has been leading to this declaration: Jesus is David's descendant and Israel's promised Savior. The phrase kat' epangelian ('according to promise') grounds Jesus's coming in God's covenant faithfulness to David (2 Samuel 7:12-16). The title sotera ('Savior') connects to the meaning of Jesus's name ('the LORD saves').
- 23. [TCR Cross-Reference] References 2 Samuel 7:12-16 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
- 24. John the Baptist serves as the herald (prokeryxantos, 'having proclaimed beforehand') who prepared for Jesus's arrival. The 'baptism of repentance' (baptisma metanoias) was John's distinctive rite, calling Israel to prepare for the coming Messiah.
- 25. John explicitly denies being the Messiah and points to one greater. The image of untying sandals describes the task of the lowest slave — John considers himself unworthy even of this menial service for the one who follows him. The verb ephlrou ('was completing, was finishing') uses the same root as 'fulfill,' suggesting John's ministry had a divinely appointed course (dromon, 'race, course').
- 26. Paul again addresses both groups — Jewish descendants of Abraham and God-fearing Gentiles. The phrase 'message of this salvation' (ho logos tes soterias tautes) identifies the gospel as the fulfillment of the salvation story Paul has been narrating. The passive 'has been sent' (exapestale) indicates divine initiative.
- 27. The irony is profound: those who read the prophets every Sabbath fulfilled the prophets' words by rejecting the one the prophets foretold. Their ignorance (agnoesantes) does not absolve them but paradoxically accomplishes God's purpose. Paul presents the crucifixion as both human failure and divine plan.
- 28. The absence of legitimate charges (medemian aitian thanatou, 'no cause of death') echoes the trial narratives in the Gospels where Pilate repeatedly declares Jesus innocent. The request for execution despite innocence heightens the injustice that God's plan nevertheless encompasses.
- 29. Again, the 'tree' (xylon) alludes to Deuteronomy 21:22-23. The verb etelesn ('completed, fulfilled') shows that even the enemies' actions accomplished what Scripture had foretold. Paul compresses the burial narrative into a single clause, moving quickly toward the resurrection.
- 29. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 21:22-23. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
- 30. The decisive 'but' (de) marks the reversal: human authorities condemned him, but God raised him. This is the kerygmatic core — the same proclamation found in every apostolic sermon in Acts.
- 31. Paul appeals to the testimony of eyewitnesses (martyres) who are still alive and active. He notably does not include himself among the Galilean witnesses, though he will later appeal to his own Damascus road encounter (26:12-18). The phrase 'many days' (epi hemeras pleious) refers to the forty-day period mentioned in Acts 1:3.
- 32. The verb euangelizometha ('we bring good news, we preach the gospel') gives the formal content of the mission: the promise to the patriarchs has been fulfilled. Paul presents the gospel not as something new but as the fulfillment of Israel's oldest hopes.
- 33. The quotation from Psalm 2:7 was originally spoken at the coronation of Israelite kings. Paul applies it to Jesus's resurrection — the 'begetting' is not biological but enthronement. The resurrection is Jesus's installation as the messianic King who fulfills the Davidic promise. The verb anastesas ('having raised up') can mean both 'raised to life' and 'raised up as a leader' — both senses may be intended.
- 33. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalms 2:7 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
- 34. The quotation from Isaiah 55:3 (LXX) promises the 'holy and faithful things of David' (ta hosia Daud ta pista) — the covenant mercies promised to David now fulfilled in Jesus's resurrection. The key point is 'no longer to return to decay' (meketi mellonta hypostrephein eis diaphthoran) — Jesus's resurrection is permanent and irreversible, unlike temporary resuscitations.
- 34. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 55:3. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
- 35. This quotation from Psalm 16:10 (LXX 15:10) is the same text Peter used at Pentecost (Acts 2:27). Paul now applies the same argument: David's words cannot refer to David himself (who did see decay, v. 36) but must refer to the Messiah whose body did not decay in the tomb.
- 35. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalms 16:10 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
- 36. Paul's argument mirrors Peter's in Acts 2:29 — David died, was buried, and his body decayed. Therefore Psalm 16 must be prophetic, pointing beyond David to someone whose body would not decay. The phrase 'served God's purpose in his own generation' (idia genea huperetesas te tou theou boule) is a concise and dignified epitaph for David.
- 36. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 16. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
- 37. The contrast is stark and simple: David saw decay; the one God raised did not. The argument depends on the historical fact of Jesus's resurrection and the physical preservation of his body in the brief period between death and resurrection.

38. Paul moves from the historical argument to the soteriological application. 'Through this man' (dia toutou) identifies Jesus as the agent of forgiveness. The noun aphesis ('forgiveness, release, remission') carries overtones of the Jubilee year's release of debts (Leviticus 25).
38. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Leviticus 25 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
39. This is the most explicitly Pauline theological statement in Acts, introducing the concept of justification by faith. The verb dikaiontai ('is justified, is declared righteous') is the cornerstone of Pauline soteriology (cf. Romans 3:21-26, Galatians 2:16). The law of Moses could not achieve full justification; faith in Christ accomplishes what the law could not.
40. Paul shifts to warning, quoting the prophets as a cautionary voice. The imperative blepete ('beware, watch out') introduces urgency — the offer of grace carries the gravity of potential rejection.
41. Paul quotes Habakkuk 1:5 from the Septuagint. In its original context, the prophet warned that God was raising up the Babylonians as an instrument of judgment — an act so incredible that people would not believe it even when told. Paul applies this to the present: God is doing something through Jesus that scoffers will refuse to believe. The word kataphronetai ('scoffers, despisers') replaces the Hebrew's 'among the nations,' adapting the warning to the audience.
41. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Habakkuk 1:5. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
42. The SBLGNT does not specify 'Gentiles' as the ones asking — the request comes from the general audience. The phrase eis to metaxy sabbaton ('on the next/intervening Sabbath') indicates eagerness to hear more.
43. The sebomenoi proselytoi ('devout converts/proselytes') are Gentiles who had fully converted to Judaism, distinct from the God-fearers. Paul and Barnabas encourage them to 'continue in the grace of God' (prosmenein te chariti tou theou) — to remain in what they have received rather than returning to previous ways.
44. The hyperbolic 'almost the whole city' (schedon pasa he polis) indicates an extraordinary response. The curiosity extends well beyond the synagogue community to the broader population of Pisidian Antioch. Some manuscripts read 'word of God' (tou theou) rather than 'word of the Lord' (tou kyriou).
45. The motivating emotion is zelos ('jealousy, zeal') — the crowds' enthusiasm for Paul's message threatened the synagogue leaders' authority and social standing. The verb blasphemountes ('blaspheming, reviling') likely means they spoke abusively about the claims being made for Jesus.
46. The adverb parresiasamenoi ('speaking boldly, with confidence') characterizes the apostolic proclamation throughout Acts. The theological principle 'to you first' (hymen proton) reflects Romans 1:16 — the gospel goes first to the Jew, then to the Gentile. The phrase 'judge yourselves unworthy of eternal life' (ouk axious krinete heautous tes aioniou zoes) is ironic — by rejecting the message, they pass sentence on themselves.
47. Paul quotes Isaiah 49:6, originally addressed to the Servant of the LORD, and applies it to his own mission. The 'light for the Gentiles' (phos ethnon) echoes Simeon's prophecy about the infant Jesus (Luke 2:32). Paul sees his Gentile mission not as a departure from God's plan but as its fulfillment — Isaiah had always envisioned salvation reaching 'the ends of the earth' (eschatou tes ges).
47. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 49:6. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
48. The phrase 'as many as were appointed to eternal life' (hosoi esan tetagmenoi eis zoen aionion) uses the perfect passive participle of tasso ('arrange, appoint, assign'). The divine passive indicates God as the one who appoints. This is one of the strongest statements of divine election in Acts, presented without qualification or explanation.
49. The verb diephereto ('was being carried through, was spreading') again personifies the word as an active agent. The spread is geographic — 'throughout the whole region' (di holes tes choras) — extending beyond Pisidian Antioch to the surrounding territory.
50. The opponents work through influential social networks — 'devout women of high standing' (sebomenas gynaikas tas euschemonas) were God-fearing Gentile women of the upper class who had synagogue connections. By mobilizing civic elites against the missionaries, the Jewish leaders use social pressure rather than theological argument.
51. Shaking off dust (ektinaxamenoi ton koniorton) is a gesture of renunciation commanded by Jesus (Luke 9:5, 10:11), symbolically declaring that those who reject the message bear responsibility for their own judgment. Iconium lay about 80 miles southeast of Pisidian Antioch.
52. The chapter ends not with the persecution but with the persecuted community's joy. Despite the missionaries' expulsion, the new believers remain, filled with joy (charas) and the Holy Spirit (pneumatOS hagiou). Persecution has failed to destroy what God has planted.

Summary: Acts 14 continues the first missionary journey as Paul and Barnabas preach in Iconium, where both Jews and Gentiles respond but opposition forces them to flee. They move to Lystra, where Paul heals a man lame from birth. The astonished crowds assume Paul and Barnabas are the Greek gods Hermes and Zeus and attempt to offer sacrifices to them. Paul and Barnabas rush to stop the worship, declaring themselves mere mortals and preaching the living God who made heaven and earth. Jews from Antioch and Iconium arrive and turn the crowd against them; Paul is stoned and dragged outside the city, left for dead. He survives, and they move on to Derbe. After making disciples there, they retrace their route, strengthening the new churches and appointing elders, before returning to Antioch in Syria.

What Makes This Remarkable: The Lystra episode reveals the volatile religious landscape of rural Asia Minor — the same crowd that tries to worship Paul as a god quickly turns to stoning him. The attempted sacrifice to 'Zeus and Hermes' reflects a local legend recorded by Ovid (Metamorphoses 8.611-724) about these gods visiting the region in human disguise. Paul's speech at Lystra (vv. 15-17) is the first recorded address to a purely pagan audience with no Jewish biblical framework, and it accordingly argues from creation and providence rather than from Scripture. The pattern of appointing elders (presbyters) in every church (v. 23) shows rapid institutional development.

Translation Friction: The identification of Barnabas as 'Zeus' and Paul as 'Hermes' (v. 12) is explained by the fact that Paul was the chief speaker (ho hegoumenos tou logou), and Hermes was the messenger god. Luke uses the Greek names Zeus and Hermes rather than the local Lycaonian equivalents. The Lycaonian language (v. 11) was a local Anatolian dialect distinct from Greek, which explains why Paul and Barnabas did not immediately understand what the crowd intended. Paul's survival of stoning (v. 20) is remarkable — whether by miracle or natural resilience, Luke does not specify.

Connections: The healing at Lystra parallels Peter's healing of the lame man at the temple gate (Acts 3:1-10). Paul's natural theology speech anticipates his fuller treatment on Mars Hill (Acts 17:22-31). The stoning at Lystra is likely the event Paul references in 2 Corinthians 11:25. The appointment of elders connects to Paul's later instructions to Timothy and Titus about church leadership. The return journey through hostile territory demonstrates the principle stated in verse 22: 'through many tribulations we must enter the kingdom of God.'

¹Now in Iconium they entered the Jewish synagogue together and spoke in such a way that a great number of both Jews and Greeks believed. ²But the Jews who refused to believe stirred up the Gentiles and poisoned their minds against the brothers. ³So they remained for a long time, speaking boldly for the Lord, who bore witness to the word of his grace, granting signs and wonders to be done through their hands. ⁴But the people of the city were divided; some sided with the Jews and some with the apostles. ⁵When an attempt was made by both Gentiles and Jews, with their rulers, to mistreat and stone them, ⁶Indeed, they were ware of it, and fled to Lystra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia, and to the region that lieth round concerning:. ⁷In deed, there they preached the gospel. ⁸Now at Lystra there was a man sitting who could not use his feet. He was lame from birth and had never walked. ⁹He listened to Paul speaking. And Paul, looking intently at him and seeing that he had faith to be made well, ¹⁰Stated with a loud voice, Stand upright on your feet. Then he leaped and walked. ¹¹When the crowds saw what Paul had done, they lifted up their voices, saying in the Lycaonian language, "The gods have come down to us in human form!" ¹²They called Barnabas Zeus and Paul Hermes, because Paul was the chief speaker. ¹³The priest of Zeus, whose temple was at the entrance to the city, brought oxen and garlands to the gates and wanted to offer sacrifice with the crowds. ¹⁴But when the apostles Barnabas and Paul heard of it, they tore their garments and rushed out into the crowd, crying out, ¹⁵"Men, why are you doing these things? We too are men with the same nature as you, and we bring you good news, that you should turn from these worthless things to the living God, who made the heaven and the earth and the sea and everything in them. ¹⁶In past generations he allowed all the nations to walk in their own ways. ¹⁷Yet he did not leave himself without witness, for he did good by giving you rains from heaven and fruitful seasons, satisfying your hearts with food and gladness." ¹⁸Even with these words they scarcely restrained the crowds from offering sacrifice to them. ¹⁹But Jews came from Antioch and Iconium, and having won over the crowds, they stoned Paul and dragged him out of the city, supposing him to be dead. ²⁰But when the disciples gathered around him, he got up and entered the city, and on the next day he went on with Barnabas to Derbe. ²¹After they had proclaimed the good news to that city and made many disciples, they returned to Lystra, then to Iconium, and then to Antioch. ²²Confirming the souls of the followers, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that we must by way of much tribulation enter into God's kingdom. ²³And when they had appointed elders for them in every church, with prayer and fasting they committed them to the Lord in whom they had believed. ²⁴Then they passed through Pisidia and came to Pamphylia. ²⁵And after speaking the word in Perga, they went down to Attalia. ²⁶From there they sailed to Antioch, where they had been commended to the grace of God for the work that they had now completed. ²⁷When they arrived, they gathered the church together and reported all that God had done with them, and how he had opened a door of faith to the Gentiles. ²⁸And they remained no small time with the disciples.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Iconium (modern Konya, Turkey) was a significant city in the region of Phrygia/Galatia. The pattern continues: synagogue first, then broader response. The phrase 'spoke in such a way' (lalēsai houtōs hōste) credits the manner of their preaching, not merely its content, for the large response.
2. The verb apeithesantes ('who refused to believe, who were disobedient') combines unbelief with active resistance. The verb ekakosan ('poisoned, made evil, embittered') describes a deliberate campaign to turn Gentile opinion against the new believers.
3. Despite the opposition, they do not flee immediately but stay 'a long time' (hikanon chronon). The Lord himself is the active agent — he 'bore witness' (martyrounti) to the gospel message through signs and wonders. The missionaries are instruments ('through their hands'), not the source of miraculous power.
4. The verb eschisthe ('was divided, was split') is the root of 'schism.' Notably, Luke here calls Barnabas and Paul 'apostles' (apostolois) — one of only two places in Acts where this title extends beyond the Twelve (cf. v. 14). The city is literally torn between two allegiances.
5. The word horme ('attempt, rush, impulse') suggests a mob action rather than a legal proceeding. The coalition of Gentiles and Jews acting together is notable — opposition to the gospel unites otherwise divided groups.
6. Lystra was about 18 miles south-southwest of Iconium; Derbe about 60 miles southeast. Luke notes that these cities belong to Lycaonia, a distinct cultural region where the local language (v. 11) differed from Greek. Flight is strategic retreat, not cowardice — they continue preaching in the new location.
7. The periphrastic construction euangelizomenoi esan ('they were proclaiming the good news') emphasizes ongoing, continuous activity. Fleeing persecution does not interrupt the mission.
8. The threefold description — unable to use his feet, lame from birth, never walked — establishes the severity and permanence of the condition beyond any doubt, paralleling the description of the lame man at the temple gate (Acts 3:2). The healing that follows will be unmistakably miraculous.
9. Paul perceives the man's faith (pistin tou sothenai, literally 'faith to be saved/healed' — the verb sozo carries both meanings) through careful observation (atenisas, 'looking intently'). The connection between faith and healing echoes Jesus's own practice (cf. Mark 5:34, 10:52).
10. The loud voice (megale phone) makes the command public — this is no private healing but a demonstration before witnesses. The man's response — springing up (helato) and walking (periepatei) — is immediate and complete, echoing the healed man of Acts 3:8 who went 'walking and leaping and praising God.'
11. The crowds speak in Lycaonian (Lykaonisti), a local Anatolian language distinct from Greek, which is why Paul and Barnabas do not immediately understand what is being planned. Their interpretation — gods visiting in human form — reflects the local legend about Zeus and Hermes visiting the region, as recorded by the Roman poet Ovid.
12. The identification of Barnabas as Zeus (the chief god) may suggest that Barnabas had a more imposing physical presence. Paul is called Hermes because he was 'the chief speaker' (ho hegoumenos tou logou, literally 'the leader of the word'), and Hermes was the divine messenger and patron of speech. The KJV uses the Latin names Jupiter and Mercury.
13. The temple of Zeus 'at the entrance to the city' (tou ontos pro tes poleos) was a civic shrine guarding the city gates — a common feature of Greco-Roman cities. The priest brings oxen (taurous) for sacrifice and garlands (stemmata) of flowers for decorating the sacrificial animals and the honorees. This was a formal religious act, not merely spontaneous enthusiasm.
14. Tearing garments (diarrexantes ta himatia) is the traditional Jewish response to blasphemy (cf. Matthew 26:65). The urgency of their reaction — rushing (exepedesan) into the crowd, crying out (krazontes) — shows they understood the gravity of what was about to happen. Again Luke calls them 'apostles' (apostoloi), extending the title beyond the Twelve.
15. The word homoiopatheis ('of the same nature, with the same feelings') emphasizes shared humanity — we are not gods but people just like you. The term mataia ('worthless things, vain things, futilities') is the standard Septuagint designation for idols (cf. 1 Samuel 12:21, Jeremiah 2:5). Paul's appeal is to 'the living God' (theon zonta) who made everything — a creation-based argument for an audience without Jewish scriptural knowledge.

15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes 1 Samuel 12:21 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Jeremiah 2:5 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. Paul acknowledges a period of divine forbearance — God 'allowed' (eiasen) the nations to follow their own paths without direct intervention. This does not mean God approved of idolatry but that he did not immediately judge it. The same idea appears in Romans 3:25 and Acts 17:30.
17. God's 'witness' (amartyron) to himself is not Scripture (unknown to this audience) but creation's provision: rain, seasons, food, and joy. This is natural theology — the argument from creation and providence to the Creator. The agricultural imagery is especially appropriate for a rural Lycaonian audience dependent on seasonal rains for their crops.
18. The adverb molis ('scarcely, with difficulty') reveals how close they came to having sacrifices offered to them. The crowds' religious enthusiasm is so strong that even direct denial of divinity barely stops them. The cultural conditioning to honor visiting deities was deeply ingrained.
19. The volatility of the crowd is extreme: they shift from worshiping Paul as a god to stoning him at the instigation of visiting opponents. Jews traveled from Antioch (about 100 miles) and Iconium (about 18 miles) specifically to pursue and undermine Paul — their opposition was persistent and organized. Paul likely references this stoning in 2 Corinthians 11:25.
20. The scene is remarkable: Paul, left for dead after stoning, rises and walks back into the city. Luke does not call this a miracle, but the natural reading suggests something extraordinary. The 'disciples' (matheton) who gather around him are the new Lystran believers — the persecution has not prevented a community from forming. The very next day, Paul resumes the journey.
21. The verb mathetheusantes ('made disciples') goes beyond mere conversion — it implies instruction and formation. Remarkably, they retrace their route through the very cities from which they were expelled, risking renewed persecution in order to strengthen the fledgling churches.
22. The message is honest rather than triumphalist: 'through many tribulations' (dia pollon thlipseon) is presented not as a possibility but as a necessity (dei, 'it is necessary, one must'). Paul and Barnabas prepare the new believers for suffering, not from it. The phrase 'the kingdom of God' (ten basileian tou theou) is the eschatological goal that makes the tribulations bearable.
23. The verb cheirotonestantes ('having appointed, having chosen by raising hands') may indicate either appointment by the missionaries or election by the congregations with apostolic confirmation. The term presbyterous ('elders') follows the Jewish synagogue model of governance. These churches are mere weeks or months old, yet they receive formal leadership. The committing (parethento, 'entrusted') to the Lord acknowledges that the missionaries must leave and the Lord himself must sustain these communities.
24. The return journey moves south through the mountainous region of Pisidia to the coastal plain of Pamphylia, retracing their northward route.
25. On their initial passage through Perga (13:13-14), no preaching was recorded. Now, on the return, they preach there before descending to Attalia (modern Antalya), a port city on the Pamphylian coast from which they can sail back to Syria.
26. They return to their sending church — Syrian Antioch — completing a geographic and spiritual circle. The phrase 'commended to the grace of God' (paradedomenoi te chariti tou theou) recalls the commissioning in 13:1-3. The work (ergon) that the Spirit assigned (13:2) has been 'completed' (eplerosen) — the first missionary journey is finished.
27. The report emphasizes what 'God had done with them' (ho theos epoiesen met auton) — not their own accomplishments but God's work through them. The metaphor of an 'opened door of faith' (enoixen thyran pisteos) for the Gentiles becomes a recurring Pauline image (1 Corinthians 16:9, 2 Corinthians 2:12, Colossians 4:3).
28. Luke's litotes — 'no small time' (chronon ouk oligon) — means a considerable period. This interval in Antioch provides rest, reflection, and consolidation before the events of chapter 15 bring the question of Gentile inclusion to a head in Jerusalem.

Summary: Acts 15 records the Jerusalem Council, the most important deliberative assembly in the early church. Men from Judea arrive in Antioch teaching that Gentile believers must be circumcised to be saved. Paul and Barnabas dispute this strongly, and the church sends them to Jerusalem to resolve the question. Peter testifies about the Cornelius episode, arguing that God gave the Gentiles the same Spirit without requiring circumcision. Paul and Barnabas report the signs and wonders God performed among the Gentiles. James, the brother of Jesus, delivers the decisive judgment: Gentiles should not be burdened with circumcision but should abstain from food polluted by idols, from sexual immorality, from what has been strangled, and from blood. A letter is sent to the Gentile churches. The chapter closes with the sharp disagreement between Paul and Barnabas over John Mark, resulting in their separation — Barnabas taking Mark to Cyprus, Paul taking Silas through Syria and Cilicia.

What Makes This Remarkable: The Jerusalem Council resolves the most explosive question of the early church: must Gentile converts become Jews? The answer — no — is reached through a process combining testimony, scriptural argument, and communal discernment. James's citation of Amos 9:11-12 (from the Septuagint) provides the scriptural basis, arguing that God always intended to include Gentiles. The four prohibitions in the decree are widely debated: are they moral requirements, minimum purity rules for table fellowship, or echoes of the Noahide laws? The Paul-Barnabas split is recorded with remarkable honesty, showing that the early church was not free from personal conflict even among its greatest leaders.

Translation Friction: The relationship between the Jerusalem Council's decree and Paul's letters (especially Galatians 2) is complex and debated. Paul never quotes the decree in his letters and seems to handle the food issues differently (Romans 14, 1 Corinthians 8-10). The four prohibitions — idolatry, sexual immorality (porneia), what has been strangled, and blood — may reflect the 'laws for resident aliens' in Leviticus 17-18, which applied to non-Israelites living among God's people. James's quotation of Amos 9:11-12 follows the Septuagint, which differs significantly from the Hebrew text. The sharp disagreement (paroxysmos) between Paul and Barnabas is the last mention of Barnabas in Acts.

Connections: The Council resolves the tension introduced by the Cornelius episode (Acts 10-11) and the first missionary journey (Acts 13-14). Peter's argument reprises his defense in 11:1-18. James's leadership role confirms his emergence as head of the Jerusalem church (cf. 12:17, 21:18, Galatians 2:9). The decree's four prohibitions connect to Leviticus 17-18. The Paul-Silas partnership launches the second missionary journey (Acts 15:40-18:22).

¹But some men came down from Judea and were teaching the brothers, "Unless you are circumcised according to the custom of Moses, you cannot be saved." ²And after Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and debate with them, the brothers appointed Paul and Barnabas and some others of them to go up to Jerusalem to the apostles and elders about this question. ³ So, being sent on their way by the church, they passed through both Phoenicia and Samaria, describing in detail the conversion of the Gentiles, and they brought great joy to all the brothers. ⁴When they arrived in Jerusalem, they were welcomed by the church and the apostles and the elders, and they reported all that God had done with them. ⁵But some believers who belonged to the party of the Pharisees rose up and said, "It is necessary to circumcise them and to order them to keep the law of Moses." ⁶The apostles and the elders gathered together to consider this matter. ⁷After much debate, Peter stood up and said to them, "Brothers, you know that in the early days God made a choice among you, that through my mouth the Gentiles should hear the word of the gospel and believe. ⁸And God, who knows the heart, bore witness to them by giving them the Holy Spirit just as he did to us, ⁹Indeed, put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by way of faith. ¹⁰Now therefore why are you testing God by putting a yoke on the neck of the disciples that neither our fathers nor we have been able to bear? ¹¹But we believe that we will be saved through the grace of the Lord Jesus, just as they will." ¹²The whole assembly fell silent and listened to Barnabas and Paul as they told of all the signs and wonders that God had done through them among the Gentiles. ¹³After they finished speaking, James replied, "Brothers, listen to me. ¹⁴Simeon has related how God first visited the Gentiles to take from them a people for his name. ¹⁵And with this the words of the prophets agree, as it is written, ¹⁶'After this I will return and rebuild the tent of David that has fallen; I will rebuild its ruins and restore it, ¹⁷That the residue of men might seek following the Lord, and every one of the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called, says the Lord, who doeth all these things. ¹⁸Recognized to God are all his labors from the beginning of the age. ¹⁹Therefore my judgment is that we should not trouble those of the Gentiles who turn to God, ²⁰However, that we write to them, that they abstain from pollutions of idols, and from sexual immorality, and from things strangled, and from blood. ²¹For from ancient generations Moses has had in every city those who proclaim him, for he is read every Sabbath in the synagogues." ²²Then it seemed good to the apostles and the elders, with the whole church, to choose men from among them and send them to Antioch with Paul and Barnabas — Judas called Barsabbas and Silas, leading men among the brothers, ²³They wrote letters by them following this manner. The apostles and elders and brothers and sisters send greeting to the brothers and sisters which are of the Gentiles in Antioch and Syria and Cilicia:. ²⁴Since we have heard that some persons have gone out from us and troubled you with words, unsettling your minds — though we gave them no instructions — ²⁵Inde ed, it was decided by us, being assembled with one accord, to send chosen men to you with our dear Barnabas and Paul, ²⁶People that possess hazarded their lives for the identity of our Lord Jesus Christ. ²⁷We have therefore sent Judas and Silas, who themselves will tell you the same things by word of mouth. ²⁸For the Holy Spirit and we have decided, not to burden you beyond these essential requirements; ²⁹That you abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from sexual immorality — from which if you keep yourselves, you will do well. Fare you well. ³⁰So when they were sent off, they went down to Antioch, and having gathered the congregation together, they delivered the letter. ³¹When they read it, they rejoiced because of its encouragement. ³²And Judas and Silas, who were themselves prophets, encouraged and strengthened the brothers with many words. ³³After they had spent some time there, they were sent off in peace by the brothers to those who had sent them. ³⁵But Paul and Barnabas remained in Antioch, teaching and preaching the word of the Lord, with many others also. ³⁶After some days Paul said to Barnabas, "Let us return and visit the brothers in every city where we proclaimed the word of the Lord, and see how they are doing." ³⁷Now Barnabas wanted to take with them John called Mark. ³⁸But Paul insisted that they should not take with them one who had withdrawn from them in Pamphylia and had not gone with them to the work. ³⁹And there arose a sharp disagreement, so that they separated from each other. Barnabas took Mark with him and sailed away to Cyprus, ⁴⁰Paul chose Silas, and departed, being recommended by the brothers and sisters to the grace of God. ⁴¹He went through Syria and Cilicia, strengthening the churches.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The issue is not circumcision as a cultural practice but as a soteriological requirement — 'you cannot be saved' (ou dynasthe sothenai) makes it a matter of eternal consequence. These teachers claim Mosaic authority for their position. They are not the apostles' representatives (v. 24 will clarify this).
2. The litotes 'no small dissension' (staseos ouk oliges) means a fierce argument. The decision to take the matter to Jerusalem shows the Antioch church's recognition of the Jerusalem apostles' authority on such fundamental questions. The delegation includes 'some others' — unnamed witnesses who can corroborate the Antioch church's experience.
3. The journey itself becomes a preaching tour — they tell the story of Gentile conversion (epistrophēn ton ethnōn, 'the turning of the Gentiles') and receive an enthusiastic response. The 'great joy' (charan megalēn) of the believers in Phoenicia and Samaria suggests that opposition to Gentile inclusion was concentrated among a specific faction, not universal.
4. The warm welcome (paredechthesan, 'were received, welcomed') and the phrasing 'what God had done with them' (hosa ho theos epoiesen met auton) — identical to 14:27 — frames the report as a testimony of divine action, not human achievement.
5. These are believing Pharisees (ton apo tes hairesēos ton Pharisaion pepisteukotes) — they have accepted Jesus as Messiah but insist that Gentile believers must also keep the entire Mosaic law. Their position goes beyond circumcision alone to full Torah observance. The word hairesēos ('party, sect') here means 'faction' without the later connotation of 'heresy.'
6. The formal assembly of apostles and elders constitutes what is traditionally called the Jerusalem Council or Apostolic Council — the first church-wide deliberative body. The verb synechthesan ('gathered together') indicates a formal convening, not a casual meeting.
7. Peter speaks after 'much debate' (polles zeteseos), indicating the assembly first heard various arguments. His appeal is to his own experience with Cornelius — 'in the early days' (aph' hemeron archaion) refers back to the events of Acts 10, perhaps a decade earlier. He frames it as God's choice (exelexato ho theos), not his own initiative.
8. The term kardiognōstes ('knower of hearts, heart-knower') appears only here and in Acts 1:24. God's knowledge of hearts means he accepted the Gentiles based on their inner reality, not their external status. The repeated phrase 'just as he did to us' (kathos kai hemin) is Peter's decisive argument: identical gift, identical acceptance.
9. The verb diekrinen ('made a distinction, discriminated') directly addresses the issue: if God makes no distinction, neither should the church. The phrase 'cleansed their hearts by faith' (te pistei katharistas tas kardias) is remarkable — cleansing comes through faith, not through circumcision or Torah observance. This is Pauline theology from Peter's lips.
10. Peter characterizes the demand for circumcision and Torah observance as 'testing God' (peirazete ton theon) — acting against what God has clearly demonstrated. The 'yoke' (zugon) metaphor for the law is a Jewish image (cf. Galatians 5:1). Peter's honest assessment that 'neither our fathers nor we' could bear it is a striking admission of the law's inability to save.
11. Peter reverses the expected comparison: he does not say 'they will be saved like us' but 'we will be saved like them' — through grace, not through law. Jewish believers are saved the same way Gentile believers are: by grace through faith. This is the theological climax of Peter's argument.
12. The silence (esigēsen) following Peter's speech indicates its persuasive power. Barnabas is named first — perhaps reflecting Jerusalem's greater familiarity with him. Their testimony is experiential: signs and wonders (sēmeia kai terata) that God performed among the Gentiles confirm divine approval of the uncircumcised mission.

13. James the brother of Jesus speaks last and gives the decisive judgment. His position of authority in the Jerusalem church is evident — he presides over the Council and renders the final decision. The sequence — Peter's theological argument, Paul and Barnabas's experiential testimony, James's scriptural judgment — represents a complete case.
14. James uses Peter's Semitic name 'Simeon' (Symeon), the only instance in Acts. The phrase 'a people for his name' (laon to onomati autou) is theologically loaded — laos ('people') is the term reserved for Israel as God's covenant people. God is now creating a 'people' from among the Gentiles (ex ethnon), extending the covenant community beyond ethnic Israel.
15. James grounds the decision in Scripture — 'the words of the prophets agree' (symphonousin hoi logoi ton propheton). Experience and testimony have been presented; now comes the scriptural confirmation. The verb symphonousin ('agree, harmonize') suggests that multiple prophetic voices point in the same direction.
16. James quotes Amos 9:11-12 from the Septuagint. The 'tent of David' (ten skenen Daud) refers to David's dynasty and kingdom, which had 'fallen' with the exile and the end of the monarchy. God's restoration of David's tent is fulfilled in Jesus, the Davidic Messiah. The Septuagint text differs significantly from the Hebrew here, and James follows the Greek version.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Amos 9:11-12. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. The critical difference between the Septuagint and the Hebrew is that the Hebrew reads 'that they may possess the remnant of Edom' while the Septuagint reads 'that the rest of mankind may seek the Lord.' The Septuagint, likely reading 'adam (mankind) for 'edom and doresh (seek) for yarash (possess), provides James with a text that explicitly predicts Gentile inclusion in God's people.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Amos 9:11-12. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. This brief phrase — 'known from of old' (gnosta ap aionos) — asserts that Gentile inclusion is not an innovation but something God planned from the beginning. What seems new is actually ancient divine purpose now being revealed.
19. The verb krino ('I judge, I decide') shows James rendering an authoritative decision, not merely offering an opinion. The word parenochein ('trouble, make difficulties for, harass') characterizes the circumcision requirement as an unnecessary burden. Gentile conversion is described as 'turning to God' (epistrephousin epi ton theon) — they are already turning; circumcision is not needed for this turning to be valid.
20. The four prohibitions are: (1) alisgematon ton eidolon ('pollutions of idols' — food offered to idols), (2) porneia ('sexual immorality' — broadly defined), (3) pnikton ('what has been strangled' — meat from animals not properly slaughtered), and (4) haima ('blood' — either consuming blood or possibly bloodshed/murder). These likely correspond to the laws in Leviticus 17-18 that applied to 'resident aliens' (gerim) living among Israelites.
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Leviticus 17-18 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
21. This enigmatic verse may mean: (1) Jewish sensibilities must be respected since Moses is preached everywhere, so the four prohibitions preserve table fellowship with Jewish believers; or (2) Gentiles can learn the rest of Moses's teaching from the synagogue readings as they grow. The former interpretation is more commonly held.
22. The decision involves the whole church (syn hole te ekklesia), not just the leaders. Judas Barsabbas and Silas are sent as independent witnesses to confirm the letter's authenticity and to represent Jerusalem's goodwill. Silas (Silvanus) will become Paul's companion on the second missionary journey.
23. The letter follows standard Hellenistic epistolary form: sender, recipient, greeting (chairein). The addressees are specifically 'brothers from the Gentiles' (adelphois tois ex ethnon) in the three regions affected. The use of 'brothers' (adelphoi) for the Gentile believers is itself a theological statement — they are family.
24. The letter explicitly disowns the troublemakers: 'we gave them no instructions' (hois ou diesteilametha). The verbs etaraxan ('troubled') and anaskeuazontes ('unsettling, dismantling') describe the damage done. Some manuscripts add 'saying you must be circumcised and keep the law,' but the SBLGNT omits this addition.
25. The phrase 'having come to one accord' (genomenois homothumadon) emphasizes unanimity. Barnabas and Paul are described as 'our beloved' (tois agapetois hemon), a public endorsement countering any suggestion that they are unauthorized agents.
26. The phrase paradedokosi tas psychas ('having given over their lives, having risked their souls') may allude to Paul's stoning at Lystra (14:19) and other dangers. It is a ringing endorsement of their courage and commitment.
27. Judas and Silas serve as living confirmations of the letter — they can answer questions and provide context that a written document cannot. The phrase 'the same things' (ta auta) ensures consistency between the written and oral messages.
28. The remarkable phrase 'the Holy Spirit and us' (to pneumatikoi kai hēmin) claims divine authority for the decision — the Council's deliberation was guided by the Spirit. The word 'burden' (baros) echoes Peter's 'yoke' language in verse 10. Only the 'necessary things' (ton epanankes) are required, and even these are minimal.

29. The four prohibitions are restated in slightly different order and terminology: eidolothyton ('idol-sacrificed food') replaces the broader 'pollutions of idols' from verse 20. The closing 'farewell' (erroshe) is the standard Hellenistic letter closing, meaning 'be strong, be well.'
30. The delegation goes directly to Antioch and presents the letter to the assembled church. The verb epedokan ('delivered, handed over') indicates a formal presentation.
31. The congregation's response is joy (echaresan) at the paraklesis ('encouragement, consolation'). The letter is received as good news — the Gentile believers are free from the circumcision requirement. The word paraklesis connects to the role of the Holy Spirit as Parakletos.
32. Judas and Silas are identified as prophets (prophetai), giving their encouragement additional spiritual authority. Their ministry goes beyond delivering the letter to active pastoral care — 'many words' (dia logou pollou) of encouragement and strengthening.
33. The phrase 'sent off in peace' (apeluthesan met eirenes) is a formal dismissal with blessing — the Antioch church releases them to return to Jerusalem with goodwill and harmony restored.
34. Verse 34 is absent from the SBLGNT and other critical Greek texts. It appears in some later manuscripts and the KJV tradition ('Notwithstanding it pleased Silas to abide there still'), likely added by scribes to explain how Silas was available in Antioch when Paul chose him in verse 40. We follow the SBLGNT in omitting it.
35. The Antioch church has a rich leadership — 'many others' (heteron pollon) are involved in teaching and preaching alongside Paul and Barnabas. The two verbs 'teaching' (didaskontes) and 'preaching the good news' (euangelizomenoi) describe both internal instruction and outward evangelism.
36. Paul's concern is pastoral — he wants to check on the new churches' welfare (pos echousin, 'how they are'). This impulse to revisit and strengthen existing churches, not merely plant new ones, characterizes Paul's missionary strategy throughout Acts and his letters.
37. Barnabas's desire to include his cousin John Mark (cf. Colossians 4:10) reflects his character as 'son of encouragement' (4:36) — he is willing to give the young man a second chance after his earlier departure in 13:13.
38. Paul views Mark's departure in Pamphylia as a disqualifying failure. The verb apostanta ('having withdrawn, having deserted') carries negative connotations. The phrase 'not gone with them to the work' (me synelthonta autois eis to ergon) implies that the mission's demands require reliable companions.
39. The word paroxysmos ('sharp disagreement, irritation, provocation') — from which English derives 'paroxysm' — indicates an intense emotional conflict. Luke does not assign blame to either party. The separation doubles the mission: Barnabas and Mark go to Cyprus (Barnabas's homeland), while Paul takes a new partner. Later, Paul and Mark are reconciled (Colossians 4:10, 2 Timothy 4:11, Philemon 24).
40. Paul receives the church's commendation (paradotheis te chariti, 'commended to the grace'), while Barnabas's departure receives no such mention — a possible indication that the church sided with Paul's assessment. Silas, as a Jerusalem prophet and Roman citizen (16:37), is an ideal partner for the mission ahead.
41. Paul's route takes him overland through Syria (where Antioch lies) and into Cilicia (his home province, where Tarsus is located). The verb episterizon ('strengthening, establishing') is the same word used in 14:22 — a key element of Paul's pastoral strategy. The second missionary journey has begun.

Summary: Acts 16 narrates the second missionary journey's expansion into Europe. Paul circumcises Timothy at Lystra and recruits him as a companion. The Holy Spirit twice redirects their itinerary — forbidding them from preaching in Asia and Bithynia — until Paul receives the Macedonian vision at Troas: 'Come over to Macedonia and help us.' They sail to Philippi, a Roman colony, where Lydia, a dealer in purple cloth, becomes the first European convert. Paul casts out a spirit of divination from a slave girl, provoking her owners to drag Paul and Silas before the magistrates. They are beaten and imprisoned. At midnight, Paul and Silas sing hymns; an earthquake shakes the prison open, but no one escapes. The terrified jailer asks, 'What must I do to be saved?' Paul responds, 'Believe in the Lord Jesus, and you will be saved — you and your household.' The jailer and his household are baptized. The next morning, Paul reveals his Roman citizenship, forcing the magistrates to publicly apologize.

What Makes This Remarkable: Timothy's circumcision (v. 3) seems to contradict the Jerusalem Council's ruling — but Paul circumcises Timothy not as a soteriological requirement but as a strategic concession, since Timothy's Jewish mother made him Jewish by halakhic standards. The Spirit's double prohibition (vv. 6-7) and the Macedonian vision represent one of the most dramatic instances of divine guidance in Acts, redirecting the mission from Asia to Europe. The Philippian jailer episode contains perhaps the most concentrated salvation narrative in Acts: terror, the question of salvation, faith, baptism, joy — all within a single night.

Translation Friction: The 'we' passages begin in verse 10 (the first in Acts), suggesting the author Luke joined the team at Troas. The 'spirit of Python' (pneuma pythona, v. 16) refers to the prophetic spirit associated with the oracle at Delphi, where the Pythia (priestess) supposedly channeled Apollo's messages. Paul's use of Roman citizenship (vv. 37-39) raises questions about why he did not invoke it before the beating — possibly because the mob action prevented orderly legal procedure.

¹Paul came also to Derbe and to Lystra. A disciple was there named Timothy, the son of a Jewish woman who was a believer, but his father was a Greek. ²He was well spoken of by the brothers at Lystra and Iconium. ³Paul wanted Timothy to accompany him, and he took him and circumcised him because of the Jews who were in those places, for they all knew that his father was a Greek. ⁴As they went through the cities, they delivered to them for observance the decisions that had been reached by the apostles and elders in Jerusalem. ⁵So the churches were strengthened in the faith, and they increased in number daily. ⁶They went through the region of Phrygia and Galatia, having been forbidden by the Holy Spirit to speak the word in Asia. ⁷When they came to the border of Mysia, they attempted to go into Bithynia, but the Spirit of Jesus did not allow them. ⁸So, passing by Mysia, they went down to Troas. ⁹And a vision appeared to Paul in the night: a man of Macedonia was standing there, urging him and saying, "Come over to Macedonia and help us." ¹⁰And when Paul had seen the vision, immediately we sought to go on into Macedonia, concluding that God had called us to preach the good news to them. ¹¹So, setting sail from Troas, we made a direct voyage to Samothrace, and the following day to Neapolis, ¹²From there we went to Philippi, the leading city in that district of Macedonia and a Roman colony. We stayed in that city for several days. ¹³On the Sabbath day we went outside the gate to the riverside, where we supposed there was a place of prayer, and we sat down and spoke to the women who had gathered there. ¹⁴One who heard us was a woman named Lydia, from the city of Thyatira, a dealer in purple cloth, who was a worshiper of God. The Lord opened her heart to pay attention to what was said by Paul. ¹⁵After she was baptized, and her household as well, she urged us, saying, "If you have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come to my house and stay." And she prevailed upon us. ¹⁶As we were going to the place of prayer, we were met by a slave girl who had a spirit of divination and brought her owners much profit by fortune-telling. ¹⁷She followed Paul and us, crying out, "These men are servants of the Most High God, who proclaim to you the way of salvation." ¹⁸She kept doing this for many days. Paul, having become greatly annoyed, turned and said to the spirit, "I command you in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of her." And it came out that very hour. ¹⁹But when her owners saw that their hope of profit was gone, they seized Paul and Silas and dragged them into the marketplace before the rulers. ²⁰And when they had brought them to the magistrates, they said, "These men are Jews and they are disturbing our city. ²¹They are advocating customs that are not lawful for us as Romans to accept or practice." ²²The crowd joined in attacking them, and the magistrates tore their garments off them and ordered them to be beaten with rods. ²³And when they had inflicted many blows on them, they threw them into prison, ordering the jailer to guard them securely. ²⁴Having received this order, he put them into the inner prison and fastened their feet in the stocks. ²⁵About midnight Paul and Silas were praying and singing hymns to God, and the other prisoners were listening to them. ²⁶Suddenly there was a great earthquake, so that the foundations of the prison were shaken. Immediately all the doors were opened and everyone's chains were unfastened. ²⁷When the jailer woke and saw that the prison doors were open, he drew his sword and was about to kill himself, since he supposed that the prisoners had escaped. ²⁸But Paul cried out in a loud voice, "Do not harm yourself, for we are all here!" ²⁹The jailer called for lights and rushed in, and trembling with fear he fell down before Paul and Silas. ³⁰Then he brought them out and said, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" ³¹And they said, "Believe in the Lord Jesus, and you will be saved, you and your household." ³²And they spoke the word of the Lord to him and to all who were in his house. ³³And he took them that same hour of the night and washed their wounds; and he was baptized at once, he and all his family. ³⁴Then he brought them up into his house and set food before them. And he rejoiced along with his entire household that he had believed in God. ³⁵When it was day, the magistrates sent the lictors, saying, "Release those men." ³⁶The jailer reported these words to Paul, saying, "The magistrates have sent to release you. So come out now and go in peace." ³⁷But Paul said to them, "They have beaten us publicly without a trial, men who are Roman citizens, and threw us into prison. And now do they want to send us away secretly? Certainly not! Let them come themselves and escort us out." ³⁸The lictors reported these words to the magistrates, and they were afraid when they heard that they were Roman citizens. ³⁹So they came and apologized to them, and they brought them out and asked them to leave the city. ⁴⁰So they went out of the prison and visited Lydia. When they had seen the brothers, they encouraged them and departed.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Timothy's mixed parentage — Jewish mother, Greek father — places him in a complicated identity position. By rabbinic standards (which determined Jewish status through the mother), Timothy was Jewish. His mother Eunice and grandmother Lois are named in 2 Timothy 1:5. Timothy will become Paul's most trusted associate.
2. Timothy's good reputation (emartureito, 'was testified about') spans two cities, indicating wide recognition of his character and gifting.
3. Paul circumcises Timothy not because it is necessary for salvation (the Jerusalem Council just decided otherwise) but for strategic reasons: an uncircumcised person of Jewish descent would be a stumbling block in synagogue ministry. This contrasts with Paul's refusal to circumcise Titus, a full Gentile (Galatians 2:3). The distinction is between accommodation and capitulation.
4. The dogmata ('decisions, decrees') are the Jerusalem Council's rulings from chapter 15. Paul distributes them to the churches as authoritative guidelines, showing that he recognized the Council's authority despite his own apostolic independence.
5. This is one of Luke's progress reports. The dual growth — qualitative ('strengthened in the faith') and quantitative ('increased in number daily') — shows healthy church development.
6. The Holy Spirit's prohibition (koluthentes, 'having been forbidden') is stated without explaining how it was communicated — through prophecy, inner conviction, or circumstantial closure. 'Asia' here means the Roman province of Asia (western Asia Minor, including Ephesus), not the continent. The Spirit is actively directing the mission by closing doors.
7. The unusual phrase 'Spirit of Jesus' (to pneuma Iesou) rather than 'Holy Spirit' occurs only here in Acts. It may emphasize the risen Christ's personal direction of the mission. The double redirection — forbidden from Asia, blocked from Bithynia — funnels them toward the coast and the crossing to Europe.
8. Troas (Alexandria Troas) was a major port city on the Aegean coast, across from the European mainland. It is the launching point for the crossing to Macedonia — the gospel's entry into Europe.
9. How Paul identified the man as Macedonian is not stated — perhaps by dress, accent in the vision, or direct knowledge. The plea 'help us' (boetheson hemin) is both urgent and communal — it represents an entire region's need. This vision provides the positive direction after the two negative prohibitions.
10. The shift from 'they' to 'we' (ezetesamen, 'we sought') marks the first of the 'we' passages in Acts, indicating that the author Luke has joined the missionary team at Troas. The verb symbibazontes ('concluding, putting together') suggests communal discernment — the team collectively interprets the vision as God's call.
11. The nautical detail euthudromesamen ('we ran a straight course') indicates favorable winds — the same crossing took five days in the opposite direction (20:6). Samothrace is an island midway across the northern Aegean. Neapolis (modern Kavala) was the port city serving Philippi, about ten miles inland.
12. Philippi was named after Philip II of Macedon (father of Alexander the Great). Its status as a kolonia ('colony') meant it operated under Roman law with rights equivalent to Italian cities. Luke describes it as 'a leading city of the district' (prote tes meridos poleis) — the precise administrative terminology has been debated but reflects Luke's careful attention to local designations.
13. The absence of a synagogue in Philippi (a quorum of ten Jewish men was traditionally required) meant that the small Jewish community met informally by the river for prayer. The gathering consists entirely of women — Lydia, mentioned next, is among them. That Paul begins his European mission by speaking to women at a riverside prayer meeting is a humble and unexpected beginning.
14. Lydia is identified by her trade — porphyropolis ('dealer in purple goods') — indicating she was a businesswoman of means, since purple dye was expensive. Thyatira (in the province of Asia) was famous for its purple dyeing industry. She is a 'worshiper of God' (sebomene ton theon), a God-fearer. The decisive theological note is 'the Lord opened her heart' (ho kyrios dienoixen ten kardian) — her faith is God's work before it is her response.
15. Lydia's household baptism (ho oikos autes) includes servants and dependents — the household conversion pattern of Acts (cf. 10:48, 16:33, 18:8). Her invitation to stay is confident and assertive — parebiastao ('she prevailed upon us, she insisted forcefully') shows a strong personality. Her house becomes the base of the Philippian church (v. 40).
16. The Greek pneuma pythona ('spirit of Python') refers to the prophetic spirit associated with the oracle at Delphi, where the Pythia served as Apollo's mouthpiece. The girl is doubly enslaved — to a demonic spirit and to human owners who exploit her condition for profit. The word ergasian ('profit, gain') reveals the commercial dimension of her bondage.
17. The girl's declaration is technically accurate — they are servants of the Most High God proclaiming salvation. But the title 'Most High God' (tou theou tou hypsistou) was used in pagan contexts for Zeus or a supreme deity, potentially confusing the gospel message with syncretistic religion. Demonic testimony, even when factually correct, distorts by association.

18. Paul tolerates the disruption for 'many days' (epi pollas hemeras) before acting. The verb diaponetheis ('greatly annoyed, deeply troubled') combines frustration with spiritual grief. The exorcism is performed 'in the name of Jesus Christ' — the authority behind the command. The spirit's departure is immediate (aute te hora, 'that very hour').
19. The phrase 'their hope of profit was gone' (exelthen he elpis tes ergasias auton) uses the same verb as the exorcism — the spirit 'went out' and so did their profit. Their grievance is economic, not religious, but they will frame their charges in political terms. The agora ('marketplace') was the civic center where legal proceedings took place.
20. The strategoi ('magistrates') are the duumviri, the two chief officials of a Roman colony. The charge plays on anti-Jewish sentiment: 'These men are Jews' (Ioudaioi hyparchontes) is stated as if it were itself an accusation. The verb ektarassousin ('are disturbing, are throwing into confusion') frames the missionaries as public threats.
21. The charge is deliberately vague — 'customs' (ethe) could mean anything. The real issue is the loss of income from the slave girl, but the accusation is framed as a matter of Roman identity ('us as Romans,' Romaiois ousin) versus foreign Jewish practices. Philippi's pride in its Roman colonial status makes this charge effective.
22. The magistrates tear Paul and Silas's clothing off (perirexantes auton ta himatia) to expose them for beating. The rhabdizein ('beating with rods') was administered by lictors, the magistrates' official attendants who carried fasces (bundles of rods). Paul references being beaten with rods three times in 2 Corinthians 11:25.
23. The 'many blows' (pollas plegas) indicates a severe beating. The adverb asphalos ('securely, safely') places the jailer under strict orders — failure to hold the prisoners could cost him his life.
24. The 'inner prison' (ten esoteran phylaken) was the most secure cell, furthest from any exit. The stocks (xylon, literally 'wood') immobilized the prisoners' legs, often in a painfully spread position. The security emphasis — inner cell plus stocks — sets the stage for the dramatic liberation to come.
25. The combination of praying and singing (prosuchomenoi hymnountes ton theon) at midnight, after severe beating and in stocks, is extraordinary. The verb epeokroonto ('were listening attentively') indicates the other prisoners were captured by what they heard — worship from the depths of suffering.
26. The earthquake is comprehensive: foundations shaken, all doors opened, all chains unfastened (panton ta desma anethe). This affects not just Paul and Silas but every prisoner. The supernatural character of the event is evident — earthquakes do not typically unfasten chains and open locked doors simultaneously.
27. Roman law held jailers personally responsible for escaped prisoners (cf. Acts 12:19 where guards are executed). The jailer's suicide attempt is a rational response within the Roman honor system — death by his own hand would be more honorable than execution for dereliction of duty.
28. Paul's shout saves the jailer's life. The fact that all prisoners remain (hapantes gar esmen enthade, 'for we are all here') — despite open doors and unfastened chains — adds to the supernatural character of the event. Paul's concern for the jailer's life demonstrates grace in action.
29. The jailer's progression — calling for lights, rushing in (eisepeidesn), trembling (entromos), falling down (prosepesen) — vividly narrates his transition from despair to awe. He recognizes that something beyond natural explanation has occurred.
30. The jailer's question — ti me dei poiein hina sotho ('what must I do to be saved?') — is one of the most famous questions in the New Testament. The word sotho ('be saved') may carry both physical and spiritual meaning: saved from the earthquake's implications and saved in the deeper sense that the slave girl's spirit had proclaimed (v. 17). The address kyrioi ('sirs, lords') reflects deep respect.
31. The response is the gospel in its simplest form: believe in the Lord Jesus. The promise extends to 'your household' (ho oikos sou), not that the jailer's faith automatically saves his family, but that the same promise of salvation is available to all in his household who believe (as the next verse clarifies). The SBLGNT reads 'Lord Jesus' without 'Christ.'
32. The gospel is shared with the entire household (pasin tois en te oikia auton) — faith comes through hearing the message. This ensures that the household's subsequent baptism is an informed response, not merely participation in the head of household's decision.
33. The sequence is powerful: the jailer washes Paul's wounds, then is himself washed in baptism. The physical washing of wounds and the spiritual washing of baptism mirror each other. Everything happens 'that same hour of the night' (en ekeine te hora tes nyktos) — the urgency of faith matches the urgency of compassion. The household (hoi autou hapantes, 'all his') is baptized together.
34. The chapter's emotional arc — from beating and imprisonment to washing wounds, baptism, shared meals, and rejoicing — captures the transformative power of the gospel in a single night. The word panoikei ('with the whole household') and the verb egalliasato ('rejoiced greatly, exulted') describe household-wide celebration of newfound faith.
35. The rhabdouchous ('lictors, rod-bearers') were the magistrates' official attendants who had administered the beating. Their return with the release order shows the magistrates considered the matter closed. Why they decided to release Paul and Silas is not stated — perhaps they felt the punishment sufficient, or the earthquake had unsettled them.

36. The jailer — now a fellow believer — delivers the good news. The phrase 'go in peace' (poreuesthe en eirene) is a standard Semitic farewell, here spoken by a Roman jailer who has just become a member of the new community.
37. Paul now reveals what the magistrates should have ascertained before the beating: he and Silas are Roman citizens (anthropous Romaious). The Lex Porcia and Lex Valeria prohibited beating a Roman citizen without trial. The violation is threefold: public beating (demosio), without trial (akatakritous), of Roman citizens. Paul demands a public escort to clear their names and protect the fledgling church from further persecution.
38. The magistrates' fear (ephobethesan) is well-founded — beating Roman citizens without trial was a serious offense that could result in their removal from office and legal penalties. The tables have turned completely.
39. The verb parekalesan ('appealed to, apologized to, entreated') indicates the magistrates come in a conciliatory posture. The request to leave the city is a face-saving measure — they cannot admit full wrongdoing publicly, but they acknowledge the error by personally escorting the prisoners out.
40. Before leaving Philippi, Paul and Silas visit Lydia's house — the church's meeting place — and encourage the new believers. The 'we' narration pauses here (resuming in 20:5), suggesting Luke may have remained in Philippi to nurture the church. Paul and Silas depart, but the Philippian church will become one of Paul's most beloved communities (Philippians 1:3-8).

Summary: Acts 17 follows Paul through Thessalonica, Berea, and Athens. In Thessalonica, Paul reasons from the Scriptures in the synagogue for three Sabbaths, and some Jews and many God-fearing Greeks believe. Jealous opponents incite a mob and drag Jason (Paul's host) before the city authorities, accusing the missionaries of 'turning the world upside down' and proclaiming 'another king, Jesus.' Paul is sent to Berea, where the Jews are described as 'more noble' because they examined the Scriptures daily. But Thessalonian opponents pursue Paul there too, and he is sent to Athens. Alone in Athens, Paul is provoked by the city's idols and engages Epicurean and Stoic philosophers. He is brought to the Areopagus (Mars Hill), where he delivers his famous speech: beginning with the altar 'To an Unknown God,' he proclaims the Creator who does not live in temples, who gives all life, who made all nations from one man, and who now commands repentance because he has appointed a day of judgment through a man he raised from the dead. The response is mixed: some mock, some believe.

What Makes This Remarkable: Paul's Areopagus speech is the theological and literary centerpiece of Acts — a model of contextual proclamation to a pagan intellectual audience. Paul does not quote Scripture (his audience would not recognize it) but argues from creation, divine providence, and even pagan poets (Epimenides and Aratus). He does not begin with sin but with worship, taking the Athenians' religious impulse seriously while redirecting it. The charge at Thessalonica — 'these men have turned the world upside down' (17:6) — is one of the most striking descriptions of early Christianity's revolutionary impact. The Berean model of examining Scripture has become paradigmatic for responsible biblical study.

Translation Friction: The altar 'To an Unknown God' (Agnosto Theo) is attested by ancient sources (Pausanias, Diogenes Laertius), though the exact inscription Paul references has not been archaeologically discovered. Paul quotes from pagan poets — 'in him we live and move and have our being' is attributed to Epimenides of Crete, and 'for we are indeed his offspring' comes from Aratus's Phaenomena (and possibly Cleanthes's Hymn to Zeus). Paul's willingness to find truth in pagan literature while rejecting idolatry demonstrates sophisticated engagement with Greco-Roman culture. The 'politarchs' (politarchas) of Thessalonica (v. 6) — a title once thought to be a Lukan error — have been confirmed by multiple inscriptions.

Connections: Paul's synagogue method of reasoning from Scripture (vv. 2-3) continues the pattern of chapters 13-14. The charge of 'another king' (v. 7) echoes the charges against Jesus before Pilate (Luke 23:2). The Areopagus speech develops the natural theology introduced at Lystra (14:15-17). Paul's appeal to God as Creator connects to Genesis 1-2 and Isaiah 40-45. The resurrection as the basis for judgment connects to the apostolic kerygma throughout Acts.

¹After Paul and Silas had passed through Amphipolis and Apollonia, they came to Thessalonica, where there was a Jewish synagogue. ²And Paul went in, as was his custom, and on three Sabbath days he reasoned with them from the Scriptures, ³He explained and demonstrated that the Messiah had to suffer and rise from the dead, and then declared, "This Jesus I am telling you about is the Messiah." ⁴Some of them were persuaded and joined Paul and Silas, as did a great many of the devout Greeks and not a few of the leading women. ⁵But the Jews became jealous, and taking some wicked men from the marketplace rabble, they formed a mob and set the city in an uproar. They attacked the house of Jason, seeking to bring Paul and Silas out to the crowd. ⁶When they could not find them, they dragged Jason and some brothers before the city authorities, shouting, "These men who have turned the world upside down have come here also, ⁷Indeed, whom Jason has received — and these all do contrary to the decrees of Caesar and stated that there is another king, one Jesus. ⁸The people and the city authorities were disturbed when they heard these things. ⁹And when they had taken a bond from Jason and the rest, they released them. ¹⁰The brothers immediately sent Paul and Silas away by night to Berea, and when they arrived they went into the Jewish synagogue. ¹¹Now these Jews were more noble than those in Thessalonica; they received the word with all eagerness, examining the Scriptures daily to see if these things were so. ¹²Many of them therefore believed, with not a few Greek women of high standing as well as men. ¹³But when the Jews from Thessalonica learned that the word of God was proclaimed by Paul at Berea also, they came there too, agitating and stirring up the crowds. ¹⁴Then the brothers immediately sent Paul off on his way to the sea, but Silas and Timothy remained there. ¹⁵Those who escorted Paul brought him as far as Athens, and after receiving instructions for Silas and Timothy to come to him as soon as possible, they departed. ¹⁶Now while Paul was waiting for them at Athens, his spirit was provoked within him as he saw that the city was full of idols. ¹⁷So he reasoned in the synagogue with the Jews and the devout persons, and in the marketplace every day with those who happened to be there. ¹⁸Some of the Epicurean and Stoic philosophers also conversed with him. Some said, "What does this babblers wish to say?" Others said, "He seems to be a proclaimer of foreign divinities" — because he was preaching Jesus and the resurrection. ¹⁹And they took him and brought him to the Areopagus, saying, "May we know what this new teaching is that you are presenting? ²⁰For you bring some strange things to our ears. We wish to know therefore what these things mean." ²¹(Now all the Athenians and the foreigners who lived there spent their time in nothing except telling or hearing something new.) ²²So Paul, standing in the middle of the Areopagus, said: "Men of Athens, I perceive that in every way you are very religious. ²³For as I passed along and observed the objects of your worship, I found also an altar with this inscription: 'To an unknown god.' What therefore you worship as unknown, this I proclaim to you. ²⁴The God who made the world and everything in it, being Lord of heaven and earth, does not live in temples made by human hands, ²⁵And not is worshipped with men's hands, as though he needed any thing, seeing he gives to all life, and breath, and all matters;. ²⁶And he made from one man every nation of mankind to live on all the face of the earth, having determined allotted periods and the boundaries of their dwelling place, ²⁷Indeed, that they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel following him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us:. ²⁸Because in him we live, and move, and have our being. As certain also of your own poets have stated, since we are also his offspring. ²⁹Being then God's offspring, we ought not to think that the divine being is like gold or silver or stone, an image formed by the art and imagination of man. ³⁰The times of ignorance God overlooked, but now he commands all people everywhere to repent, ³¹Because he has appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he has ordained. Whereof he has given assurance to all men, in that he has raised him from the dead. ³²Now when they heard of the resurrection of the dead, some mocked. But others said, "We will hear you again about this." ³³So Paul went out from their midst. ³⁴But some men joined him and believed, among whom were Dionysius the Areopagite and a woman named Damaris and others with them.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Amphipolis and Apollonia were stations along the Via Egnatia, the major Roman road connecting the Adriatic to the east. Thessalonica (modern Thessaloniki) was the capital and largest city of Macedonia. The presence of a synagogue (singular, unlike the plural at Salamis) indicates a Jewish community sufficient for one congregation.
2. The phrase kata to eiothos ('as was his custom') establishes Paul's consistent practice of beginning in the synagogue. The verb dielexato ('reasoned, discussed, argued') implies dialogue, not just monologue — Paul engaged in back-and-forth discussion. Three Sabbaths indicates at least a three-week ministry, though Paul's total stay may have been longer (cf. Philippians 4:16).
3. Paul's argument has two steps: (1) the Scriptures require a suffering and rising Messiah (ton Christon edei pathein kai anastenai), and (2) Jesus fulfills this pattern. The verb dianoigon ('opening, explaining') is the same word used of Jesus opening the Scriptures to the Emmaus disciples (Luke 24:32). The verb paratithemenos ('setting before, presenting evidence') is a legal term for presenting a case.

4. The response is stratified: 'some' Jews believed, but a 'great many' (plethos poly) God-fearing Greeks and 'not a few' (ouk oligai) prominent women. The larger Gentile response becomes the pattern throughout Paul's mission. The 'leading women' (gynaikon ton proton) occupied significant social positions in Macedonian society, where women had more public roles than in many other parts of the empire.
5. The jealous Jews recruit agoraion ('marketplace loafers, idlers') — men who hung around the agora without employment — to form a mob. The verb ochlopoiesantes ('having made a crowd, having formed a mob') is used only here in the New Testament. Jason is Paul's host, likely a Jewish believer (the name is the Greek form of Joshua/Jesus).
6. Unable to find Paul and Silas, the mob seizes Jason as a proxy. The politarchas ('city authorities, politarchs') was the correct title for Thessalonica's magistrates — confirmed by inscriptions found in the city. The famous accusation 'turned the world upside down' (ten oikoumenen anastatosantes) is intended as an indictment but reads as an inadvertent tribute to the gospel's power.
7. The charge is politically framed: 'acting against Caesar's decrees' (apenanti ton dogmaton Kaisaros) and proclaiming 'another king' (basilea heteron). This echoes the charges against Jesus before Pilate (Luke 23:2). Hosting the missionaries makes Jason legally liable. The claim of 'another king' transforms the theological title 'Christ/Messiah' into a political threat within the Roman system.
8. The charge of sedition against Caesar effectively disturbs (etaraxan) both the common people and the officials. In the Roman system, any perceived challenge to imperial authority required a response.
9. The 'bond' (to hikanon, literally 'the sufficient thing') was a financial guarantee — Jason and the others posted bail ensuring that the missionaries would not cause further disturbance. This bond likely explains why Paul could not return to Thessalonica (1 Thessalonians 2:18) — doing so would have put Jason at legal and financial risk.
10. The nighttime departure (dia nyktos) is for safety. Berea (modern Veria) lay about 45 miles southwest of Thessalonica. Despite the recent violence, Paul's first action in a new city remains the same: he goes to the synagogue.
11. The Bereans are called eugenestroi ('more noble, more fair-minded, of better character'). Their nobility consists of two things: receptivity ('received the word with all eagerness,' meta pases prothymias) and critical examination ('examining the Scriptures daily,' to kath hemeran anakrinontes tas graphas). They model the ideal response: open hearts combined with rigorous study.
12. The result of the Berean method is widespread belief: 'many' (polloi) Jews believed, plus prominent Greek women and men. The pattern is similar to Thessalonica but more extensively positive.
13. The Thessalonian opponents travel 45 miles to Berea specifically to disrupt Paul's ministry — their opposition is relentless. The same pattern of external agitation disrupts what had been a positive reception.
14. Paul is the primary target; Silas and Timothy can remain safely. The phrase 'to the sea' (heos epi ten thalassan) indicates Paul traveled to the coast, from where he likely sailed to Athens. Timothy reappears here — he was last mentioned in 16:1-3 and has been with the team throughout.
15. Paul arrives in Athens escorted by Berean believers, who carry back his urgent request for Silas and Timothy to join him. Paul's time in Athens begins alone — an unusual circumstance that shapes his experience there.
16. The verb paroxyneto ('was provoked, was deeply stirred') is the same root as the paroxysmos of 15:39 — it denotes intense emotion, here righteous anger and grief. The word kateidolon ('full of idols, overwhelmed with idols') appears only here in the New Testament. Ancient sources confirm that Athens was saturated with religious images and temples.
17. Paul operates in two settings simultaneously: the synagogue (with Jews and God-fearers) and the agora (with whoever is present). Engaging in philosophical discussion in the Athenian agora placed Paul in the tradition of Socrates, who had done the same centuries earlier.
18. The Epicureans (followers of Epicurus, 341-270 BC) emphasized pleasure, withdrawal from public life, and denial of divine providence. The Stoics (from the Stoa Poikile in Athens) taught rational virtue, divine providence through logos, and living according to nature. These represent the two dominant philosophical schools. The term spermologos ('babbler,' literally 'seed-picker' — a bird that picks up scraps) was a derisive term for an intellectual scavenger who picks up bits of ideas without systematic understanding.
19. The Areopagus (Areios Pagos, 'hill of Ares/Mars') served both as a geographic location (the rocky hill northwest of the Acropolis) and as the name of the council that met there. The council had oversight of education and religious matters in Athens. Being brought before it was not necessarily hostile — they want to evaluate this 'new teaching' (kaine didache).
20. The word xenizonta ('strange, surprising, foreign') characterizes Paul's message as novel and unfamiliar. The Athenian appetite for novelty (described in the next verse) makes them curious rather than hostile.
21. Luke's parenthetical observation about Athenian culture — their insatiable appetite for novelty (ti kainoteron, 'something newer') — is confirmed by ancient writers including Thucydides and Demosthenes. This cultural trait provides Paul's opportunity to be heard but also explains the superficial response of some listeners.
22. The word deisidaimonesterous can mean either 'very religious' (positive/neutral) or 'very superstitious' (negative). As a skilled rhetorician, Paul likely uses it with deliberate ambiguity — the audience would hear a compliment, while the deeper meaning carries critique. We render it positively, following the rhetorical convention of beginning with praise.

23. The altar Agnosto Theo ('To an Unknown God') provides Paul's rhetorical point of contact. Ancient sources attest altars to unknown gods in Athens. Paul does not condemn their worship impulse but redirects it: what you worship without knowing, I can identify. The neuter pronoun ho ('what') rather than the masculine hon ('whom') may be deliberate — Paul begins with their conceptual framework before introducing the personal God.
24. Paul begins with creation — a starting point that both Jews and philosophically minded pagans could engage. The claim that God does not live in temples (ouk en cheiropoiotois naois katoikei) echoes Isaiah 66:1-2 and Stephen's speech (Acts 7:48), but would also resonate with Stoic critiques of popular religion. This is said within sight of the Parthenon.
24. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 66:1-2. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
25. God is not dependent on human service (oude hypo cheiron anthroponon therapeutetai) — a rejection of the temple-cult system that assumed gods needed human provision. Instead, God is the source of 'life and breath and everything' (zoe kai pnoen kai ta panta). This echoes both Genesis 2:7 and Stoic ideas about divine self-sufficiency.
25. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 2:7 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
26. The phrase 'from one man' (ex henos) — some manuscripts add 'blood' (haimatos) — asserts the unity of the human race from a single ancestor (Adam). This directly challenges Greek ethnic pride, particularly Athenian claims of autochthony (being 'born from the earth' of Attica, not descended from outsiders). God sovereignly determines both the times (kairous) and boundaries (horothusias) of nations.
27. The verb pselaphesaien ('feel, grope, touch') suggests searching in darkness or uncertainty — humanity reaches for God imperfectly. The optative mood (a rare grammatical form) expresses hope mixed with uncertainty. But the resolution is encouraging: God is 'not far' (ou makran) from any person. The gap between divine transcendence and human accessibility is bridged by God's proximity.
28. Paul quotes two pagan poets. 'In him we live and move and have our being' is attributed to Epimenides of Crete (6th century BC). 'For we are indeed his offspring' (tou gar kai genos esmen) comes from the Cilician poet Aratus (Phaenomena 5) and possibly also from Cleanthes's Hymn to Zeus. Paul appropriates pagan insight to build a bridge to biblical truth — these poets spoke more truly than they knew.
29. Paul draws a logical conclusion from the poets: if we are God's offspring, then God cannot be less than human — he cannot be mere metal or stone, no matter how artfully crafted. The word charagmati ('image, engraving, mark') denotes something produced by techne ('craft, art') and enthymeseos ('thought, imagination'). The argument moves from the poets' premise to an anti-idolatry conclusion.
30. Paul echoes the principle of 14:16 — God 'overlooked' (hyperidon) past ignorance — but adds a decisive 'but now' (ta nun). The age of tolerated ignorance is over. The command to repent (metanoein) is universal: 'all people everywhere' (tous anthropous pantas pantachou). The scope is absolute — no nation, class, or philosophical school is exempt.
31. Paul reaches the gospel's core: judgment, a specific appointed man, and resurrection. He does not name Jesus explicitly (the audience would not know the name) but identifies him through the resurrection. The word pistin ('assurance, proof, guarantee') is related to pistis ('faith') — God has given grounds for faith by raising this man from the dead. The resurrection is both proof of Jesus's appointment and the basis for universal accountability.
32. The response divides into three groups: mockers, the curious, and believers (v. 34). The bodily resurrection was the stumbling block for Greek thought, which generally held the body in low regard and could not conceive of its restoration. Epicureans denied any afterlife; Stoics held to a dissolution of the individual into the cosmic logos. Physical resurrection was offensive to both.
33. Paul departs without being expelled — a contrast with the violent rejections in other cities. The Areopagus encounter ends not with persecution but with a mixture of intellectual dismissal and genuine interest.
34. The converts include Dionysius, a member of the Areopagus council itself — a significant social and intellectual conversion. Damaris is named specifically, suggesting she was well known to the early church. The phrase 'others with them' (heteroi syn autois) indicates a small but genuine community of believers. Athens produced a quieter response than other cities, but it produced real faith.

Summary: Acts 18 records Paul's eighteen-month ministry in Corinth, the commercial capital of the province of Achaia. Paul meets Aquila and Priscilla, Jewish tentmakers expelled from Rome by Emperor Claudius's edict, and works alongside them at their trade. He reasons in the synagogue each Sabbath. When Silas and Timothy arrive from Macedonia, Paul intensifies his preaching, declaring Jesus to be the Christ. Jewish opposition leads Paul to declare, 'Your blood is on your own heads; from now on I will go to the Gentiles.' He moves next door to the house of Titius Justus, and Crispus, the synagogue ruler, believes. The Lord encourages Paul in a night vision: 'Do not be afraid; keep speaking, for I have many people in this city.' Paul remains a year and a half. Jewish opponents bring Paul before the proconsul Gallio, who dismisses the case as a Jewish internal matter. The chapter ends with Paul's departure through Cenchreae, a brief stop in Ephesus, and his return to Antioch, before Apollos is introduced in Ephesus.

What Makes This Remarkable: The Gallio episode is one of the most historically significant passages in Acts. An inscription found at Delphi dates Gallio's proconsulship to approximately AD 51-52, providing the single most important fixed point for Pauline chronology. Gallio's refusal to adjudicate religious disputes effectively establishes a Roman legal precedent that Christianity is a legitimate religio licita within Judaism. The Lord's night vision to Paul (vv. 9-10) contains the remarkable promise 'I have many people in this city' (laos moi polys en te polei taute) — God claims a people in Corinth before they have yet believed.

Translation Friction: Claudius's expulsion of Jews from Rome (v. 2) is independently attested by Suetonius (Claudius 25.4), who mentions disturbances 'at the instigation of Chrestus' — likely a garbled reference to disputes about Christ within the Roman Jewish community. The dating is typically placed around AD 49. Paul's vow at Cenchreae (v. 18) — shaving his head — is likely a Nazirite vow (Numbers 6), showing that Paul continued to practice Jewish customs voluntarily. The introduction of Apollos (vv. 24-28) raises questions about the diversity of early Christian teaching — he knew only 'the baptism of John' until Priscilla and Aquila instructed him.

Connections: Paul's Corinthian ministry produces the congregation to which he later writes 1 and 2 Corinthians. Aquila and Priscilla reappear in Romans 16:3-5, 1 Corinthians 16:19, and 2 Timothy 4:19. Apollos becomes a significant figure in the Corinthian church (1 Corinthians 1:12, 3:4-6). The tentmaking detail connects to Paul's principle of financial self-support (1 Thessalonians 2:9, 1 Corinthians 9:1-18). Gallio's legal ruling anticipates the broader question of Christianity's status under Roman law.

¹After this Paul left Athens and went to Corinth. ²And he found a Jew named Aquila, a native of Pontus, who had recently come from Italy with his wife Priscilla, because Claudius had commanded all the Jews to leave Rome. Paul went to see them, ³On account of the fact that he was of the same craft, he abode with them, and wrought — for by their occupation they were tentmakers. ⁴He reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath and tried to persuade Jews and Greeks. ⁵When Silas and Timothy arrived from Macedonia, Paul was occupied with the word, testifying to the Jews that the Christ was Jesus. ⁶And when they opposed and reviled him, he shook out his garments and said to them, "Your blood be on your own heads! I am innocent. From now on I will go to the Gentiles." ⁷He left there and went to the house of a man named Titius Justus, a worshiper of God, whose house was next door to the synagogue. ⁸Crispus, the ruler of the synagogue, believed in the Lord, together with his entire household. And many of the Corinthians, hearing Paul, believed and were baptized. ⁹And the Lord said to Paul one night in a vision, "Do not be afraid, but go on speaking and do not be silent, ¹⁰For I am with you, and no man will set on you to hurt you — for I have many those present in this city. ¹¹And he stayed a year and six months, teaching the word of God among them. ¹²But when Gallio was proconsul of Achaia, the Jews made a united attack on Paul and brought him before the tribunal, ¹³Indeed, declaring, This fellow persuadeth men to worship God contrary to the law. ¹⁴But when Paul was about to open his mouth, Gallio said to the Jews, "If it were a matter of wrongdoing or vicious crime, O Jews, I would have reason to accept your complaint. ¹⁵But since it is a matter of questions about words and names and your own law, see to it yourselves. I refuse to be a judge of these things." ¹⁶And he drove them from the tribunal. ¹⁷And they all seized Sosthenes, the ruler of the synagogue, and beat him in front of the tribunal. But Gallio paid no attention to any of this. ¹⁸After this, Paul stayed many days longer and then took leave of the brothers and set sail for Syria, accompanied by Priscilla and Aquila. At Cenchreae he had cut his hair, for he was under a vow. ¹⁹They arrived at Ephesus, and he left them there. He himself went into the synagogue and reasoned with the Jews. ²⁰When they asked him to stay for a longer period, he declined, ²¹However, bade them farewell and stated, I must by all means keep this feast that comes in Jerusalem — but I will return again to you, if God will. Then he sailed from Ephesus. ²²When he had landed at Caesarea, he went up and greeted the church, and then went down to Antioch. ²³After spending some time there, he departed and went from place to place through the region of Galatia and Phrygia, strengthening all the disciples. ²⁴Now a Jew named Apollos, a native of Alexandria, arrived in Ephesus. He was an eloquent man, competent in the Scriptures. ²⁵He had been instructed in the way of the Lord. And being fervent in spirit, he spoke and taught accurately the things concerning Jesus, though he knew only the baptism of John. ²⁶He began to speak boldly in the synagogue, but when Priscilla and Aquila heard him, they took him aside and explained the way of God to him more accurately. ²⁷When he wished to cross to Achaia, the brothers encouraged him and wrote to the disciples to welcome him. When he arrived, he greatly helped those who through grace had believed, ²⁸Since he powerfully demonstrated to the Jews, and that publicly, shewing by the scriptures that Jesus was Christ.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Corinth, about 50 miles west of Athens, was the capital of the Roman province of Achaia and a major commercial center situated on the narrow isthmus connecting the Peloponnese to mainland Greece. Its two harbors (Cenchreae on the east, Lechaeum on the west) made it a crossroads of Mediterranean trade.
2. Aquila was originally from Pontus (a region on the southern coast of the Black Sea). The expulsion under Claudius (dia to diatetachenai Klaudion) is dated to approximately AD 49. Suetonius reports that Claudius expelled Jews from Rome because of disturbances 'impulsore Chresto' ('at the instigation of Chrestus'), likely garbling 'Christus' — suggesting that disputes about Jesus within the Roman synagogues led to public disorder.
3. The word skenopoiōi ('tentmakers') may refer specifically to making tents from leather or cilicium (a cloth from Cilicia, Paul's home province), or more broadly to leather-working. Paul's manual labor was both practical necessity and theological principle — he worked to avoid being a burden on the communities he served (cf. 1 Thessalonians 2:9, 2 Thessalonians 3:8).
4. The imperfect tense epeithen ('was persuading, tried to persuade') suggests an ongoing process rather than immediate results. Paul's weekly Sabbath teaching addresses the usual mixed audience of Jews and Greek God-fearers.
5. The arrival of Silas and Timothy (likely bringing financial support from the Philippians, cf. 2 Corinthians 11:9, Philippians 4:15) freed Paul from tentmaking to devote himself fully to preaching. The phrase syneicheto to logo ('was occupied with the word, was gripped by the word') suggests an intensification of his preaching ministry.
6. Shaking out garments (ektinaxamenos ta himatia) is a variant of shaking off dust — a prophetic gesture of renunciation. The phrase 'your blood on your own heads' (to haima hymon epi ten kephalen hymon) echoes Ezekiel 33:1-6, where the watchman who warns is absolved of responsibility. 'I am innocent' (katharos ego, literally 'I am clean') declares Paul has fulfilled his obligation. This is the second declaration of turning to the Gentiles (cf. 13:46).
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Ezekiel 33:1-6. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The move next door (synomorousa, 'sharing a wall with, adjacent to') to the synagogue is both provocative and strategic — Paul remains visible and accessible to synagogue attendees who might be interested. Titus Justus is a God-fearing Gentile whose Roman name (tria nomina) suggests Roman citizenship.
8. The conversion of the synagogue ruler himself (archisynagogos) is a dramatic loss for the Jewish opposition. Paul personally baptized Crispus (1 Corinthians 1:14). The imperfect tenses episteuon kai ebaptizonto ('were believing and being baptized') describe an ongoing stream of conversions.
9. The Lord's night vision to Paul implies that Paul was experiencing fear — understandable given the pattern of persecution in every previous city. The triple command — 'do not be afraid' (me phobou), 'go on speaking' (lalei), 'do not be silent' (me siopeses) — addresses both emotional fear and the temptation to retreat from proclamation.
10. The promise 'I am with you' (ego eimi meta sou) echoes God's assurances to patriarchs and prophets (Genesis 26:24, Jeremiah 1:8). The promise 'I have many people in this city' (laos moi polys en te polei taute) is theologically striking — God claims a 'people' (laos, the covenant term) in Corinth who have not yet come to faith. Their future conversion is so certain that God speaks of them as already his.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 26:24 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Jeremiah 1:8 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. Eighteen months is one of the longest stays recorded in Acts (comparable to his three years in Ephesus, 20:31). This extended ministry allowed the Corinthian church to develop roots. It was during this period that Paul likely wrote 1 and 2 Thessalonians.
12. Gallio (Lucius Junius Gallio Annaeanus) was the brother of the philosopher Seneca. An inscription at Delphi dates his proconsulship to approximately AD 51-52, making this the most important chronological anchor for Pauline studies. The bema ('tribunal, judgment seat') in Corinth has been archaeologically identified — a large raised platform in the agora.
13. The charge is ambiguous: 'contrary to the law' (para ton nomon) could mean contrary to Jewish law or contrary to Roman law. The accusers likely intend both — Paul's teaching violates Jewish interpretation and promotes an unauthorized religio. The vagueness of the charge proves to be its undoing.
14. Gallio interrupts before Paul can even speak — he needs no defense because the case has no merit. Gallio distinguishes between adikema ('wrongdoing,' a civil or criminal offense) and rhaidiourgema poneron ('vicious crime, wicked fraud') — matters a Roman magistrate would adjudicate.

15. Gallio classifies the dispute as an internal Jewish matter involving 'words and names and your own law' (peri logou kai onomaton kai nomou tou kath hymas). This is a landmark ruling: a Roman proconsul formally declares that the debate about Jesus is a Jewish theological question, not a Roman legal matter. The decision effectively protects Christian missionaries from prosecution on religious grounds.
16. The verb apelasen ('drove away, expelled') indicates a forceful dismissal — Gallio has no patience for what he views as a trivial religious squabble wasting his court's time.
17. Sosthenes, who succeeded Crispus as synagogue ruler, becomes the victim of the crowd's frustration. Whether 'they all' (pantes) refers to Greeks expressing anti-Jewish sentiment or to Jews punishing Sosthenes for failing to prosecute successfully is debated. The same Sosthenes may later have become a believer (1 Corinthians 1:1). Gallio's indifference (ouden touton to Gallioni emelen) demonstrates the Roman attitude toward Jewish disputes.
18. Cenchreae was Corinth's eastern port on the Saronic Gulf. Paul's vow (euchen) that involved cutting his hair is almost certainly a Nazirite vow (Numbers 6:1-21), demonstrating that Paul continued to observe Jewish practices voluntarily while teaching that they were not required for salvation. Priscilla is named before Aquila here and in several other passages, possibly indicating her prominence in the partnership.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Numbers 6:1-21 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. Paul leaves Aquila and Priscilla in Ephesus — they will prepare the ground for his later extended ministry there (19:1-41). His brief synagogue visit is a preliminary contact. Ephesus, the largest city in the Roman province of Asia, will become Paul's longest single base of operations.
20. The Ephesian Jews' positive response — asking Paul to stay — contrasts with the opposition in most other cities. Paul declines but will return (19:1).
21. The conditional 'if God wills' (tou theou thelontos) expresses Paul's submission to divine direction. Some manuscripts add 'I must by all means keep the coming feast in Jerusalem,' but the SBLGNT omits this addition. Paul's promise to return is fulfilled in 19:1.
22. The phrase 'went up' (anabas) without naming Jerusalem almost certainly means Paul visited the Jerusalem church — one always 'goes up' to Jerusalem. 'Went down' (katebe) to Antioch completes the second missionary journey's circuit, returning to the sending church. Luke compresses the entire conclusion of the journey into a single verse.
23. This verse marks the beginning of the third missionary journey. The familiar pattern of strengthening (episterizon) existing churches continues. The Galatian and Phrygian churches are those founded during the first and second journeys.
24. Apollos is introduced with impressive credentials: Alexandrian origin (Alexandria was the intellectual capital of the Hellenistic world, home to the great library and to Philo), logos ('eloquent, learned'), and dynatos en tais graphais ('powerful in the Scriptures'). He becomes an important figure in the early church (1 Corinthians 1:12, 3:4-6, Titus 3:13).
25. Apollos's knowledge was genuine but incomplete — he knew about Jesus but only within the framework of John's baptism, which pointed to the coming Messiah without knowledge of Pentecost and the Spirit. The phrase zeon to pneumati ('fervent in spirit') may refer to the Holy Spirit or to his own zealous disposition. His teaching was akribos ('accurately') as far as it went.
26. Priscilla is named first — again suggesting her leadership role in the instruction. They do not correct Apollos publicly but take him aside privately (proselabonto auton, 'took him to themselves'), showing both tact and love. They explain God's way akribesterion ('more accurately, more precisely') — completing what was incomplete in his understanding.
27. The Ephesian church provides Apollos with a letter of recommendation for the Corinthian church — an early example of inter-church communication and credentials. The phrase 'through grace' (dia tes charitos) can modify either 'those who had believed through grace' or 'he helped through grace those who had believed.' Both readings are theologically valid.
28. The adverb eutonos ('powerfully, vigorously') and the verb diakatelencheto ('refuted thoroughly, argued down') describe Apollos's formidable debating ability. His strength was in public (demosia) scriptural demonstration — proving from the Old Testament that Jesus is the Messiah. His Alexandrian education and scriptural mastery made him an exceptionally effective advocate for the gospel.

Summary: Acts 19 records Paul's extended ministry in Ephesus, the major city of Roman Asia. Paul encounters about twelve disciples who knew only John's baptism; he baptizes them in the name of Jesus, lays hands on them, and the Holy Spirit comes with tongues and prophecy. Paul teaches for two years in the hall of Tyrannus, until 'all the residents of Asia heard the word of the Lord.' Extraordinary miracles occur through Paul — even handkerchiefs and aprons from his body heal the sick. Jewish exorcists attempt to use Jesus's name as a magic formula and are overpowered by an evil spirit. This produces a widespread fear of God, and many practitioners of magic publicly burn their scrolls, valued at fifty thousand pieces of silver. The chapter climaxes with the riot of the silversmiths: Demetrius, whose trade depends on making silver shrines of Artemis, incites the craftsmen against Paul, and the city erupts in two hours of chanting 'Great is Artemis of the Ephesians!' The city clerk eventually calms the crowd and dismisses the assembly.

What Makes This Remarkable: Luke devotes more space to Ephesus than any other city except Jerusalem, reflecting its strategic importance. The three-year ministry there (20:31) produced churches throughout the province of Asia (Colossae, Laodicea, Hierapolis — cf. Colossians 4:13). The burning of magic scrolls worth fifty thousand silver coins (roughly 137 years of daily wages) demonstrates the radical economic implications of conversion. The Artemis riot reveals the intersection of religion, economics, and civic identity — the goddess was not just a religious figure but the foundation of Ephesus's identity, tourism, and economy. The temple of Artemis was one of the Seven Wonders of the Ancient World.

Translation Friction: The 'disciples' in verse 1 who knew only John's baptism raise questions about the boundaries of early Christian identity — were they Christians with incomplete understanding or followers of John who had not yet encountered the Christian message? Luke treats them as the latter. The 'handkerchiefs and aprons' (soudaraia kai simikinthia) in verse 12 are medical and artisanal terms — cloths used for wiping sweat and leather aprons worn during manual labor. The sons of Sceva are called 'a Jewish high priest' (v. 14), but no high priest named Sceva is known; the title may be an exaggeration or a claim to priestly lineage.

Connections: The re-baptism of John's disciples connects to Apollos's similar situation (18:25) and raises the question of baptism's sufficiency. Paul's extended teaching ministry parallels Jesus's pattern of sustained instruction. The burning of magic scrolls echoes the Deuteronomic prohibition of sorcery (Deuteronomy 18:10-12). The Artemis riot anticipates the charges Paul will face in Jerusalem. Paul wrote 1 Corinthians during this Ephesian ministry (1 Corinthians 16:8) and likely Galatians and Philippians as well.

1It happened that while Apollos was at Corinth, Paul passed through the interior regions and came to Ephesus. There he found some disciples. 2And he said to them, "Did you receive the Holy Spirit when you believed?" And they said, "No, we have not even heard that there is a Holy Spirit." 3And he said, "Into what then were you baptized?" They said, "Into John's baptism." 4And Paul said, "John baptized with the baptism of repentance, telling the people to believe in the one who was to come after him, that is, Jesus." 5On hearing this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. 6And when Paul had laid his hands on them, the Holy Spirit came on them, and they began speaking in tongues and prophesying. 7There were about twelve men in all. 8He entered the synagogue and for three months spoke boldly, reasoning and persuading them about the kingdom of God. 9But when some became stubborn and continued in unbelief, speaking evil of the Way before the congregation, he withdrew from them and took the disciples with him, reasoning daily in the hall of Tyrannus. 10This continued for two years, so that all the residents of Asia heard the word of the Lord, both Jews and Greeks. 11And God was doing extraordinary miracles through the hands of Paul, 12So that from his physical body were brought to the sick handkerchiefs or aprons, and the diseases went away from them, and the evil spirits traveled out of them. 13Then some of the itinerant Jewish exorcists undertook to invoke the name of the Lord Jesus over those who had evil spirits, saying, "I adjure you by the Jesus whom Paul proclaims." 14Seven sons of a Jewish high priest named Sceva were doing this. 15But the evil spirit answered them, "Jesus I know, and Paul I recognize, but who are you?" 16And the man in whom the evil spirit lived leaped on them, mastered all of them, and overpowered them, so that they fled out of that house naked and wounded. 17This became known to all residents of Ephesus, both Jews and Greeks. And fear fell upon them all, and the name of the Lord Jesus was exalted. 18Also many of those who were now believers came, confessing and divulging their practices. 19And a number of those who had practiced magic brought their books together and burned them in the sight of all. And they counted the value of them and found it came to fifty thousand pieces of silver. 20So the word of the Lord continued to increase and prevail mightily. 21After these events Paul resolved in the Spirit to pass through Macedonia and Achaia and go to Jerusalem, saying, "After I have been there, I must also see Rome." 22And having sent into Macedonia two of his helpers, Timothy and Erastus, he himself stayed in Asia for a while. 23About that time there arose no small disturbance concerning the Way. 24For a man named Demetrius, a silversmith, who made silver shrines of Artemis, brought no little business to the craftsmen. 25These he gathered together, along with the workers in similar trades, and said, "Men, you know that from this business we have our prosperity. 26And you see and hear that not only in Ephesus but in almost all of Asia this Paul has persuaded and turned away a great many people, saying that gods made with hands are not gods. ²⁷And there is danger not only that this trade of ours may come into disrepute, but also that the temple of the great goddess Artemis may be counted as nothing, and that she may even be deposed from her magnificence — she whom all Asia and the world worship." ²⁸When they heard this they were enraged and were crying out, "Great is Artemis of the Ephesians!" ²⁹Confusion swept through the whole city. The crowd grabbed Gaius and Aristarchus, Paul's traveling companions from Macedonia, and rushed together into the theater. ³⁰But when Paul wished to go in among the crowd, the disciples would not let him. ³¹Even some of the provincial officials of Asia, who were friends of Paul, sent him a message urging him not to risk going into the theater. ³²Now some cried out one thing, some another, for the assembly was in confusion, and most of them did not know why they had come together. ³³Some of the crowd prompted Alexander, whom the Jews had put forward. And Alexander, motioning with his hand, wanted to make a defense to the crowd. ³⁴But when they recognized that he was a Jew, for about two hours they all cried out with one voice, "Great is Artemis of the Ephesians!" ³⁵And when the city clerk had quieted the crowd, he said, "Men of Ephesus, who is there who does not know that the city of the Ephesians is temple keeper of the great Artemis, and of the sacred stone that fell from the sky? ³⁶Since these things cannot be denied, you ought to be calm and do nothing rash. ³⁷For you have brought these men here who are neither sacrilegious nor blasphemers of our goddess. ³⁸If therefore Demetrius and the craftsmen with him have a complaint against anyone, the courts are open and there are proconsuls — let them bring charges against one another. ³⁹But if you seek anything further, it shall be settled in the regular assembly. ⁴⁰For we really are in danger of being charged with rioting today, since there is no cause that we can give to justify this commotion." ⁴¹And when he had said these things, he dismissed the assembly.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The 'interior regions' (ta anoterika mere) likely refers to the inland route through the Phrygian highlands rather than the main coastal road. Paul fulfills his promise to return to Ephesus (18:21). The 'disciples' (mathetas) he finds will prove to have an incomplete understanding of the faith.
2. Paul's diagnostic question reveals the gap: these disciples have no knowledge of the Holy Spirit's outpouring at Pentecost. Their response — 'we have not even heard that there is a Holy Spirit' (oud' ei pneuma hagion estin ekousamen) — does not mean they were unaware of the Spirit's existence (the Old Testament speaks of God's Spirit) but that they had not heard of the Spirit's new-covenant activity.
3. The connection Paul draws between the Spirit and baptism leads to his diagnostic question about their baptism. Their answer — 'John's baptism' — explains their incomplete understanding. They stand at the threshold between the old and new covenants.
4. Paul distinguishes John's baptism from Christian baptism: John's was preparatory, pointing forward to 'the one coming after him.' John's baptism expressed repentance; Christian baptism expresses faith in Jesus as the one John announced. The baptism of repentance is fulfilled and superseded by baptism into Jesus's name.
5. This is the only clear instance of re-baptism in the New Testament. The distinction between John's baptism and baptism 'in the name of the Lord Jesus' (eis to onoma tou kyriou Iesou) is significant enough to warrant a new baptism rather than supplementing the old one.
6. The laying on of hands (epithontos cheiras) precedes the Spirit's coming, connecting apostolic mediation to the Spirit's gift. The manifestations — tongues and prophecy — echo Pentecost (Acts 2) and the Cornelius episode (Acts 10:46), establishing continuity between Jewish, Gentile, and now incomplete believers' experiences of the Spirit.
7. The number twelve (dodeka) may be coincidental or may carry symbolic weight — twelve men forming a new community, echoing the twelve apostles and the twelve tribes. The qualifier 'about' (hosei) suggests Luke's approximation.
8. Three months of synagogue ministry is the longest such period recorded in Acts. Paul's message is summarized as 'the kingdom of God' (tes basileias tou theou) — the comprehensive term for God's redemptive reign inaugurated through Jesus.
9. The term 'the Way' (ten hodon) is the early church's self-designation (cf. 9:2, 22:4, 24:14, 24:22). The scholē Tyrannou ('hall/school of Tyrannus') was likely a lecture hall or teaching space rented from a man named Tyrannus. Some manuscripts add 'from the fifth to the tenth hour' (approximately 11 AM to 4 PM), suggesting Paul taught during the afternoon siesta when the hall was available.
10. Two years of daily teaching from a single urban center produces province-wide impact — 'all the residents of Asia' (pantas tous katoikountas ten Asian) is hyperbolic but indicates extraordinarily wide dissemination. The churches of Colossae, Laodicea, and Hierapolis (Colossians 4:13) were likely founded during this period by Paul's associates, not by Paul himself.
11. The litotes ou tas tuchousas ('not the ordinary kind') means 'extraordinary, uncommon.' Luke carefully attributes the miracles to God (ho theos epoiei) working 'through Paul's hands' — Paul is the instrument, not the source.

12. The soudarion ('handkerchief, sweat cloth') and simikinthion ('apron, work cloth') are items from Paul's tentmaking labor. This parallels the healing through Peter's shadow (5:15) and the woman healed by touching Jesus's garment (Mark 5:27-30). Luke reports the phenomenon without endorsing it as normative — the extraordinary nature of these events is emphasized by the unusual vocabulary.
13. Jewish exorcism was a recognized practice in the ancient world (cf. Josephus, Antiquities 8.46-49). These itinerant exorcists attempt to use Jesus's name as a magical formula — a tool of power rather than an expression of faith. The phrase 'the Jesus whom Paul proclaims' (ton Iesoun hon Paulos keraussei) reveals their secondhand relationship to both Jesus and Paul.
14. No Jewish high priest named Sceva is known from any source. The title archieros ('high priest') may be a self-claimed designation to enhance their exorcistic authority, or it may indicate membership in a high-priestly family. Seven sons practicing exorcism together suggests a family business.
15. The evil spirit's response uses two different verbs: ginosko ('I know' — deep knowledge) for Jesus and epistamai ('I recognize, I am acquainted with') for Paul. The dismissive 'but who are you?' (hymeis de tines este) exposes the exorcists as unauthorized — they have no relationship with Jesus and no spiritual authority. The spirit's recognition of Jesus and Paul contrasts sharply with its contempt for the pretenders.
16. The demonized man's supernatural strength overpowers the exorcists completely. The word amphoteron ('both/all') suggests two or more of the seven were present. They flee gymnous ('naked, stripped') and tetraumatismenous ('wounded, injured') — a humiliating defeat that demonstrates the danger of treating Jesus's name as a magic charm.
17. The failed exorcism paradoxically magnifies Jesus's name — it demonstrates that his name carries real power that cannot be casually manipulated. The 'fear' (phobos) that falls on the city is reverent awe before genuine spiritual authority, contrasting with the fraudulent use of that authority.
18. The confession comes from believers (ton pepisteukotōn) — those who had already professed faith but were still secretly involved in magic. The dual verbs exomologoumenoi ('confessing') and anagellontes ('divulging, making known') indicate both acknowledgment of wrong and public disclosure of specific practices.
19. The ta perierga ('magic arts, curious practices') refers specifically to the magical papyri and spell books for which Ephesus was famous — 'Ephesian letters' (Ephesia grammata) was a technical term for magical formulas. The public burning (katekaion enopion panton) demonstrates radical repentance. Fifty thousand pieces of silver (arguriou myriadas pente) — approximately 50,000 days' wages — represents an enormous financial sacrifice, demonstrating the depth of conversion.
20. Another of Luke's progress reports: 'mightily' (kata kratos, 'according to power') describes the gospel's advance. The word both 'increases' (euxanen) in extent and 'prevails' (ischuen) in power — quantitative and qualitative growth.
21. Paul's itinerary — Macedonia, Achaia, Jerusalem, then Rome — maps the trajectory of Acts' final chapters. The phrase en to pneumatī ('in the Spirit') may refer to the Holy Spirit's direction or Paul's own determined spirit. The word dei ('I must') suggests divine necessity — Rome is not merely a destination but a destiny (cf. 23:11, 27:24).
22. Timothy and Erastus are sent ahead to prepare the Macedonian churches for Paul's visit. Erastus may be the city treasurer of Corinth mentioned in Romans 16:23 — an inscription found in Corinth names an Erastus who paved a street at his own expense. Paul remains in Asia to complete his Ephesian work.
23. Luke's characteristic litotes — 'no small disturbance' (tarachos ouk oligos) — introduces the Artemis riot, one of the most dramatic episodes in Acts. The cause is 'the Way' (tes hodou), the early church's self-designation.
24. Demetrius is an argyropokos ('silversmith, silver-worker') who makes naous argorous ('silver shrines') — miniature replicas of the temple of Artemis or statuettes of the goddess. The temple of Artemis at Ephesus was one of the Seven Wonders of the Ancient World. The souvenir trade was a major industry, and Paul's preaching against idols threatened their livelihood.
25. Demetrius assembles not just his own workers but all craftsmen in related trades — a guild meeting. His first argument is economic: 'from this business we have our prosperity' (ek tautes tes ergasias he euporia hemin estin). Religion and economics are inseparable in his appeal.
26. Demetrius inadvertently confirms the success of Paul's mission — his preaching has impacted 'almost all of Asia' (schedon pases tes Asias). Paul's message is summarized as 'gods made with hands are not gods' (ouk eisin theoi hoi dia cheiron ginomenoi) — an echo of Isaiah's anti-idol polemic (Isaiah 44:9-20) and Paul's Areopagus speech.
26. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 44:9-20. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
27. Demetrius escalates from economics to religion and civic identity: the temple's reputation, the goddess's dignity, and the city's worldwide fame are all at stake. The title 'the great goddess Artemis' (tes megales theas Artemidos) and the claim of worldwide worship (hole he Asia kai he oikoumene sebetai) are not exaggerations — the Artemis cult was one of the most widespread in the ancient world.
28. The crowd's chant — Megale he Artemis Ephesion ('Great is Artemis of the Ephesians') — is a liturgical acclamation that has been found in inscriptions from Ephesus. It combines religious devotion with civic pride. The repetition of this cry (cf. v. 34) creates a mob atmosphere.
29. The theater of Ephesus, seating approximately 25,000, was the largest in Asia Minor and served as a venue for public assemblies. Gaius and Aristarchus are seized as proxies for Paul. Aristarchus reappears in 20:4, 27:2, Colossians 4:10, and Philemon 24, indicating he remained a faithful companion despite this traumatic experience.

- 30. Paul's courage — he wants to enter the mob-filled theater — is matched by the disciples' wisdom in restraining him. His willingness to face danger personally is consistent with his character throughout Acts.
- 31. The Asiarchai ('Asiarchs') were prominent citizens who served as patrons of the provincial cult of Rome and the emperor — the highest social rank in the province. That some were Paul's friends (ontes auto philoi) reveals the breadth of his social connections in Ephesus. Their warning adds to the picture of danger.
- 32. Luke captures the chaos of mob psychology with dry precision: most people in the theater do not even know why they are there (hoi pleious ouk edeisan tinos heneka syneleluthiesan). The word ekklesia ('assembly') is used here in its secular sense of a civic gathering, though it is the same word used for the church.
- 33. The Jews push Alexander forward, apparently to distance themselves from the Christians and avoid being caught up in the anti-Paul sentiment. Alexander attempts to address the crowd — likely to explain that mainstream Jews are distinct from the followers of the Way — but is shouted down.
- 34. The crowd's recognition that Alexander is Jewish only inflames them further — they associate all Jews with opposition to their goddess. Two hours (hos epi horas duo) of continuous chanting demonstrates the frenzy of religiously motivated mob violence. The scene is chaotic, dangerous, and profoundly irrational.
- 35. The grammateus ('city clerk, town secretary') was the chief executive officer of Ephesus, responsible for public order. The title neokoros ('temple keeper, temple warden') was an official civic honor attested in Ephesian inscriptions. The diopetes ('that which fell from Zeus/the sky') likely refers to a meteorite or ancient image believed to have fallen from heaven and housed in the Artemis temple.
- 36. The clerk's argument is pragmatic: Ephesus's status as temple keeper is undeniable, so there is nothing to be agitated about. The word propetes ('rash, reckless, hasty') characterizes the mob's behavior as undignified and unnecessary.
- 37. The clerk makes a legal observation: Gaius and Aristarchus have committed no crime — they are not hierosulous ('temple robbers, sacrilegious') and have not blasphemed Artemis. This suggests Paul's preaching, while opposing idols in principle, was conducted without directly attacking the Artemis cult.
- 38. The clerk directs legitimate grievances to the proper legal channels: agoraioi ('court days, assizes') are held regularly, and anthypatoi ('proconsuls') are available for jurisdiction. The plural 'proconsuls' may be a general reference to the office or may reflect the specific historical moment when two proconsuls briefly served after the assassination of M. Junius Silanus.
- 39. The ennomo ekklesia ('lawful assembly, regular assembly') was the formal citizens' assembly that met three times a month in Ephesus. The clerk implicitly contrasts this unlawful gathering with the legitimate civic process.
- 40. The clerk's strongest argument is the threat of Roman intervention: unauthorized assemblies could result in the city losing its privileged status. The word staseos ('riot, sedition, insurrection') was a serious charge under Roman law. The phrase 'no cause' (medenos aitiou) means they cannot justify the gathering to Roman authorities. Roman suppression of civil disorder was swift and severe.
- 41. The clerk's authority is sufficient to end the two-hour disturbance. The verb apelusen ('dismissed, released') is the technical term for closing a formal assembly. Luke again uses ekklesia in its secular sense. The crisis is resolved through civic procedure rather than violence — a pattern Luke highlights to show that Christianity does not inherently threaten public order.

Summary: Acts 20 narrates Paul's journey through Macedonia and Greece back toward Jerusalem, including a memorable scene in Troas where the young man Eutychus falls from a window during Paul's midnight sermon and is restored to life. The chapter concludes with Paul's farewell address to the elders of the Ephesian church at Miletus — a deeply emotional speech in which he warns of future threats to the community and commends them to God's grace. This is the only speech in Acts addressed to a Christian audience by Paul, making it a unique window into his pastoral theology.

What Makes This Remarkable: The 'we' narrative resumes at verse 5, indicating the author's presence as a traveling companion. Paul's Miletus speech (vv. 18-35) is structured like a Greco-Roman farewell discourse: it reviews past conduct, warns of future dangers, and entrusts the audience to a higher authority. The quotation of Jesus in verse 35 — 'It is more blessed to give than to receive' — appears nowhere in the Gospels, representing an otherwise unrecorded saying of Jesus (an agraphon). The speech's emphasis on 'the whole counsel of God' (v. 27) and elders as 'overseers' (episkopoi, v. 28) became foundational for later church governance theology.

Translation Friction: The Eutychus episode (vv. 7-12) uses language that parallels Elijah's raising of the widow's son (1 Kings 17:21). Whether Eutychus actually died or was merely thought dead is debated — Paul's statement 'his life is in him' (v. 10) could indicate either resurrection or reassurance. We render the Greek as given without resolving the ambiguity. The terms 'elders' (presbyteroi, v. 17) and 'overseers' (episkopoi, v. 28) are used interchangeably here, though later church tradition distinguished them as separate offices.

Connections: Paul's determination to reach Jerusalem by Pentecost (v. 16) echoes the pilgrimage theology of the Old Testament festivals. The farewell speech connects to Moses' farewell in Deuteronomy 31-33, Samuel's farewell in 1 Samuel 12, and Jesus' farewell discourse in John 13-17. The 'wolves' imagery (v. 29) echoes Jesus' warnings in Matthew 7:15 and John 10:12. Paul's self-description as 'serving the Lord with all humility' (v. 19) connects to his portrait in the Epistles (cf. 2 Corinthians 11:23-29).

¹After the uproar had ceased, Paul sent for the disciples, and after encouraging them and saying farewell, he left to travel to Macedonia. ²After traveling through those regions and giving them much encouragement, he came to Greece. ³He stayed there three months, and when a plot was formed against him by the Jews as he was about to set sail for Syria, he decided to return through Macedonia. ⁴He was accompanied by Sopater son of Pyrrhus from Berea, Aristarchus and Secundus from Thessalonica, Gaius from Derbe, Timothy, and Tychicus and Trophimus from Asia. ⁵These men went on ahead and were waiting for us at Troas. ⁶We sailed from Philippi after the days of Unleavened Bread, and in five days we joined them at Troas, where we stayed for seven days. ⁷On the first day of the week, when we had gathered to break bread, Paul began speaking to them, intending to leave the next day, and he prolonged his message until midnight. ⁸There were many lamps in the upper room where we were gathered. ⁹A young man named Eutychus was sitting on the windowsill and was sinking into a deep sleep as Paul talked on and on. Overcome by sleep, he fell from the third story and was picked up dead. ¹⁰But Paul went down, threw himself on the young man, and embracing him said, "Do not be alarmed, for his life is in him." ¹¹Then Paul went back upstairs, broke bread and ate, and after conversing with them until dawn, he departed. ¹²They took the young man away alive and were greatly comforted. ¹³We went on ahead to the ship and sailed to Assos, where we intended to pick up Paul, for he had arranged it this way, planning to go there on foot. ¹⁴When he met us at Assos, we took him aboard and went to Mitylene. ¹⁵Sailing from there, the next day we arrived opposite Chios. The following day we crossed over to Samos, and the day after that we came to Miletus. ¹⁶For Paul had decided to sail past Ephesus so that he would not have to spend time in Asia, since he was hurrying to be in Jerusalem, if possible, by the day of Pentecost. ¹⁷From Miletus he sent word to Ephesus and called for the elders of the church. ¹⁸When they came to him, he said to them: "You yourselves know how I lived among you the entire time from the first day I set foot in Asia, ¹⁹I served the Lord with complete humility and with tears, enduring the trials that came through the plots of the Jewish opponents. ²⁰You know that I held nothing back that would be helpful to you. I taught you publicly and went from house to house, ²¹urging both Jews and Greeks to turn to God in repentance and to place their faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. ²²And now, compelled by the Spirit, I am going to Jerusalem, not knowing what will happen to me there, ²³Indeed, save that the Holy Spirit witnesseth in every city and stated that bonds and afflictions abide me. ²⁴But I do not consider my life of any value to myself, if only I may finish my course and the ministry that I received from the Lord Jesus — to testify to the gospel of the grace of God. ²⁵And now I know that none of you among whom I went about proclaiming the kingdom will see my face again. ²⁶Therefore I testify to you this day that I am innocent of the blood of all of you, ²⁷For I have not shunned to declare to you every one of the counsel of God. ²⁸Pay careful attention to yourselves and to all the flock, in which the Holy Spirit has made you overseers, to shepherd the church of God, which he obtained through his own blood. ²⁹I know that after my departure fierce wolves will come in among you, not sparing the flock, ³⁰Also of your own selves will men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away followers following them. ³¹Therefore be alert, remembering that for three years I did not cease night or day to admonish every one of you with tears. ³²And to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified, now, brothers and sisters, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up. ³³I coveted no one's silver or gold or clothing. ³⁴You yourselves know that these hands served my own needs and the needs of those who were with me. ³⁵In all things I have shown you that by working hard in this way we must help the weak and remember the words of the Lord Jesus, that he himself said, 'It is more blested to give than to receive." ³⁶When he had said these things, he knelt down and prayed with them all. ³⁷And there was much weeping among them all, and they embraced Paul and kissed him, ³⁸What grieved them most was his statement that they would never see his face again. Then they accompanied him to the ship.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The 'uproar' (thorybos) refers to the riot of the silversmiths in Ephesus described in chapter 19. Paul's departure is not flight but an orderly transition. The verb parakalesas covers both encouragement and exhortation.
2. The Greek Hellas ('Greece') appears only here in the New Testament. Luke typically uses the Roman provincial name 'Achaia'; the use of 'Greece' may reflect the perspective of a traveling companion.
3. The plot (epiboule) likely aimed to ambush Paul on a pilgrim ship crowded with Jewish travelers heading to Jerusalem for Passover. His decision to travel overland through Macedonia was a practical security measure.
4. This delegation likely represents churches contributing to the collection for Jerusalem (cf. Romans 15:25-26, 1 Corinthians 16:1-4). Each person represents a different region, suggesting an organized multi-church effort. The SBLGNT includes 'son of Pyrrhus,' absent from some manuscripts.
5. The first-person plural 'us' (hemas) marks the resumption of a 'we' section, indicating the author's presence as a traveling companion. The 'we' narrative was last active at 16:17 (Philippi). The author apparently remained in Philippi during the intervening period and now rejoins Paul.
6. The 'we' narration continues, confirming the author's firsthand presence. The reference to the days of Unleavened Bread (the festival following Passover) provides a chronological anchor and shows that Paul continued to observe the Jewish liturgical calendar. The five-day crossing from Philippi to Troas contrasts with the two-day crossing in 16:11, suggesting unfavorable winds.
7. The phrase 'the first day of the week' (te mia ton sabbaton, literally 'the first of the sabbaths') is one of the earliest references to Christian worship on Sunday. 'Breaking bread' (klasai arton) likely refers to the Lord's Supper combined with a communal meal. The gathering appears to be in the evening, following Jewish reckoning where the day begins at sunset.
8. The detail about lamps (lampades) is characteristically vivid eyewitness reporting. The many lamps in a closed upper room would have produced heat and smoke, contributing to drowsiness. The 'upper room' (hyperoon) recalls the upper room of Acts 1:13.
9. The name Eutychos means 'fortunate' or 'lucky' — an ironic detail given his fall, though the name proves apt by the end of the episode. The Greek erthe nekros ('was picked up dead') states plainly that he was dead, not merely unconscious. Luke, who as a physician would be attentive to such distinctions, uses unambiguous language here.
10. Paul's action of throwing himself on Eutychus (epepesen auto) deliberately echoes Elijah's stretching himself over the widow's son (1 Kings 17:21) and Elisha's similar action (2 Kings 4:34). The phrase 'his life is in him' (he psyche autou en auto estin) may announce the restoration of life rather than deny that death occurred.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes 1 Kings 17:21 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes 2 Kings 4:34 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The breaking of bread here completes the meal that was the original purpose of the gathering (v. 7). Paul's continued conversation until dawn (achri auges) — even after the dramatic interruption — underscores the urgency of his message on this final visit.
12. The litotes 'not a little' (ou metrios) is characteristically Lukan — an understatement meaning 'immensely.' The word paida ('boy, young man') may suggest Eutychus was younger than the neanias ('young man') of verse 9 implies, or it may be a stylistic variation.
13. The 'we' narration continues. Paul's choice to walk the roughly 20-mile road from Troas to Assos while his companions sailed may reflect a desire for solitary reflection, or practical reasons. Assos was a coastal city in Mysia with a direct road from Troas.
14. Mitylene was the chief city of the island of Lesbos, a natural stopping point on the coastal route south along Asia Minor.
15. The SBLGNT does not include the reference to Trogyllium found in the KJV (from the Western text tradition). The itinerary shows island-hopping along the Aegean coast — Chios and Samos are major islands off the coast of Asia Minor.
16. Paul's urgency to reach Jerusalem by Pentecost (pentekoste, 'fiftieth' — fifty days after Passover) reflects both practical scheduling and theological significance. Pentecost was one of the three pilgrimage festivals, and Acts 2 records the founding event of the church at Pentecost. Paul's return at this festival creates a narrative symmetry.
17. Miletus was about 30 miles south of Ephesus. Summoning the elders there avoided the delay of visiting Ephesus itself. The term presbyterous ('elders') denotes the recognized leaders of the local congregation — the same group called episkopous ('overseers') in verse 28.
18. Paul's farewell speech begins with an appeal to the elders' personal knowledge of his conduct — a standard rhetorical move in Greco-Roman farewell discourses. The phrase 'the entire time' (ton panta chronon) covers roughly three years of ministry in Ephesus (cf. v. 31).
19. The word tapeinophrosynes ('humility') was not a virtue in Greco-Roman culture, where it often connoted servility. Paul redefines it as a mark of authentic service to the Lord. The 'plots' (epiboulais) refer to opposition Paul faced during his Ephesian ministry, some of which is described in 19:23-41 and alluded to in 1 Corinthians 15:32.

20. The verb hyposteilamen ('shrink back, hold back') implies courage in the face of opposition. Paul's teaching operated in two settings: public (demasia, in synagogues and lecture halls) and private (kat' oikous, in homes), reflecting the dual structure of early Christian community life.
21. Paul summarizes his message in two complementary terms: repentance (metanoia, a turning of the mind toward God) and faith (pistis, trust directed toward Jesus as Lord). This dual formulation encompasses both the Jewish and Greek audiences of his ministry.
22. The phrase dedemenos to pneumati ('bound in/by the spirit') is ambiguous — it could mean Paul's own spirit (his inner resolve) or the Holy Spirit's compulsion. The rendering 'compelled by the Spirit' follows the interpretation that this is divine leading, consistent with the Spirit's role throughout Acts in directing Paul's movements.
23. The Holy Spirit's warnings come 'city by city' (kata polin), suggesting prophetic utterances at multiple stops along the journey (cf. 21:4, 11). The word desma ('bonds, chains') specifically foreshadows Paul's imprisonment, while thlipseis ('afflictions, pressures') is broader.
24. The athletic metaphor 'finish my course' (teleiosai ton dromon mou) pictures life as a race to be completed (cf. 2 Timothy 4:7). The phrase 'the gospel of the grace of God' (to euangelion tes charitos tou theou) is unique in the New Testament and encapsulates Paul's message: divine favor freely given.
25. This solemn declaration gives the speech its farewell character. The phrase 'proclaiming the kingdom' (kerisson ten basileian) — with 'of God' implied — connects Paul's message to Jesus' own proclamation in the Gospels. Whether Paul in fact never returned to Ephesus is debated; the Pastoral Epistles suggest he may have (cf. 1 Timothy 1:3).
26. The declaration 'innocent of the blood' (katharos apo tou haimatos) echoes the watchman imagery of Ezekiel 33:1-9, where a watchman who faithfully warns bears no guilt for those who reject the warning. Paul claims to have fulfilled his prophetic responsibility as a watchman over the Ephesian community.
26. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Ezekiel 33:1-9. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
27. The phrase 'the whole counsel of God' (pasan ten boulen tou theou) implies a comprehensive body of teaching — God's full plan and purpose, not merely select doctrines. The verb hyposteilamen ('shrink back') repeats from verse 20, framing this section.
28. This verse is theologically dense. The same leaders called 'elders' (presbyteroi) in verse 17 are here called 'overseers' (episkopoi), demonstrating that these were interchangeable terms at this stage. The phrase 'through his own blood' (dia tou haimatos tou idiou) is textually and theologically complex — 'his own' (tou idiou) could refer to God's own blood (a startlingly high Christological claim) or to 'his own one' (a term of endearment for Christ). The SBLGNT reads 'church of God' (ekklesian tou theou).
29. The wolf-and-flock metaphor continues from verse 28. 'Fierce wolves' (lykoi bareis) echoes Jesus' warning about false prophets in Matthew 7:15 and the threat to the shepherd's flock in John 10:12. The threat comes from outside the community ('come in among you').
30. The second threat is internal — from within the leadership itself. The word diestrammena ('twisted, distorted, perverted') indicates not outright falsehood but distortion of truth. Paul's letters to Timothy, who later served in Ephesus, confirm that such internal threats materialized (cf. 1 Timothy 1:3-7, 2 Timothy 2:17-18).
31. The 'three years' (trietian) provides the length of Paul's Ephesian ministry. 'Night and day' indicates the relentlessness of his pastoral care. The tears (dakryon) are a recurring motif in this speech (cf. v. 19), presenting Paul as emotionally invested rather than merely professionally dutiful.
32. The speech transitions from warning to commendation. Paul entrusts the elders not to a human successor but to God and 'the word of his grace.' The language of 'inheritance' (kleronimian) among 'those who are sanctified' (hegiasmenois) echoes the Old Testament promise of the land reinterpreted as the people of God's shared inheritance.
33. Paul's denial of material greed echoes Samuel's farewell speech in 1 Samuel 12:3-5, where the departing leader calls on witnesses to confirm his financial integrity. The triad 'silver, gold, clothing' represents comprehensive material wealth.
33. [TCR Cross-Reference] References 1 Samuel 12:3-5 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
34. Paul gestures to his own hands — a vivid detail suggesting this speech is based on eyewitness memory. He worked as a tentmaker (cf. 18:3) to avoid burdening the community, a practice he also mentions in 1 Corinthians 4:12 and 1 Thessalonians 2:9.
35. This saying of Jesus is not found in any of the four Gospels, making it an agraphon — an unwritten saying preserved in oral tradition. Its attribution to Jesus ('he himself said') by Paul demonstrates that early Christians transmitted sayings of Jesus outside the written Gospel tradition. The word makarion ('blessed, happy, fortunate') is the same term used in the Beatitudes.
36. Kneeling for prayer (theis ta gonata) was not the standard Jewish posture (which was standing); it indicates special intensity or solemnity. The communal prayer following the speech seals the farewell.
37. The emotional scene — weeping, embracing, kissing — is among the most personal in Acts. The verb katephiloun ('kissed repeatedly, kissed affectionately') is intensive, indicating deep affection rather than a formal greeting.

38. The Greek odynomenoi ('grieving, being in anguish') is a strong word for emotional pain. The final image — the elders escorting Paul to the ship — mirrors ancient farewell scenes and closes the Ephesian chapter of Paul's ministry with profound pathos.

Summary: Acts 21 chronicles Paul's final journey to Jerusalem against repeated prophetic warnings. The 'we' narrative provides a detailed travel itinerary from Miletus through Cos, Rhodes, Patara, Tyre, Ptolemais, and Caesarea. At Caesarea, the prophet Agabus dramatically predicts Paul's arrest. Upon arriving in Jerusalem, Paul follows James's advice to demonstrate his Torah observance by sponsoring four men under a Nazirite vow. Despite this conciliatory gesture, Jews from Asia recognize Paul in the temple, incite a mob, and Paul is rescued by Roman soldiers — beginning the chain of custody that will eventually carry him to Rome.

What Makes This Remarkable: The chapter contains one of the most vivid 'we' sections in Acts, with detailed nautical and geographical information that reflects firsthand travel experience. Agabus's symbolic prophecy — binding his own hands and feet with Paul's belt (v. 11) — imitates the enacted prophecies of the Old Testament prophets (cf. Isaiah 20, Jeremiah 13, Ezekiel 4). The community's response, 'The Lord's will be done' (v. 14), echoes Jesus' prayer in Gethsemane (Luke 22:42). Paul's arrest at the temple creates a narrative parallel with Jesus' arrest in Jerusalem — both are seized in a holy space, both face Jewish and Roman authorities, both endure a series of trials.

Translation Friction: The advice of James to Paul (vv. 23-24) raises questions about the relationship between Pauline theology and Torah observance. Paul's willingness to sponsor a Nazirite vow and undergo purification rites has been viewed as either genuine piety, pastoral accommodation, or diplomatic compromise. We render the text without resolving this tension. The accusation that Paul brought a Gentile (Trophimus) into the temple (v. 29) was false, as Luke explicitly states, but it reflects real anxieties about boundary violations in Second Temple Judaism.

Connections: Paul's journey to Jerusalem deliberately parallels Jesus' journey to Jerusalem in Luke's Gospel. The repeated warnings about suffering (vv. 4, 11) echo Jesus' passion predictions (Luke 9:22, 44; 18:31-33). The Nazirite vow (Numbers 6) connects to the OT purity system. The 'middle wall of partition' in the temple (implied in v. 28) is the barrier Paul describes metaphorically in Ephesians 2:14 as destroyed by Christ.

¹After we had torn ourselves away from them and set sail, we ran a straight course to Cos, the next day to Rhodes, and from there to Patara. ²Finding a ship crossing to Phoenicia, we went aboard and set sail. ³When we came in sight of Cyprus, we passed it on our left and sailed to Syria and landed at Tyre, for the ship was to unload its cargo there. ⁴After finding the disciples, we stayed there seven days. Through the Spirit they kept telling Paul not to go to Jerusalem. ⁵When our days there were ended, we left and went on our way, with all of them — including wives and children — accompanying us until we were outside the city. And kneeling on the beach, we prayed. ⁶Then we said farewell to one another, and we went aboard the ship while they returned to their homes. ⁷When we had completed the voyage from Tyre, we arrived at Ptolemais, and we greeted the brothers and stayed with them for one day. ⁸The next day we left and came to Caesarea, and we went to the house of Philip the evangelist, who was one of the seven, and stayed with him. ⁹He had four unmarried daughters who prophesied. ¹⁰While we were staying there for several days, a prophet named Agabus came down from Judea. ¹¹He came to us, took Paul's belt, bound his own feet and hands, and said, "This is what the Holy Spirit says: 'In this way the Jews in Jerusalem will bind the man who owns this belt and will hand him over to the Gentiles.'" ¹²When we heard this, both we and the local residents urged him not to go up to Jerusalem. ¹³Then Paul answered, "What are you doing, weeping and breaking my heart? For I am ready not only to be bound but even to die in Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus." ¹⁴Since he would not be persuaded, we fell silent and said, "The Lord's will be done." ¹⁵After these days we made our preparations and went up to Jerusalem. ¹⁶Some of the disciples from Caesarea went with us and brought us to the home of Mnason of Cyprus, an early disciple, with whom we were to stay. ¹⁷When we arrived in Jerusalem, the brothers received us warmly. ¹⁸The next day Paul went in with us to James, and all the elders were present. ¹⁹After greeting them, he reported in detail what God had done among the Gentiles through his ministry. ²⁰When they heard it, they glorified God. Then they said to him, "You see, brother, how many thousands there are among the Jews who have believed, and they are all zealous for the law. ²¹They have been informed about you that you teach all the Jews who live among the Gentiles to abandon Moses, telling them not to circumcise their children or walk according to our customs. ²²What then is to be done? They will certainly hear that you have come. ²³Therefore do what we tell you. We have four men who are under a vow. ²⁴Take these men and purify yourself along with them and pay their expenses, so that they may shave their heads. Then everyone will know that there is nothing to what they have been told about you, but that you yourself also live in observance of the law. ²⁵But as for the Gentiles who have believed, we have sent a letter with our decision that they should abstain from what has been sacrificed to idols, and from blood, and from what has been strangled, and from sexual immorality." ²⁶Then Paul took the men, and the next day he purified himself along with them and went into the temple, giving notice of when the days of purification would be completed and the offering presented for each one of them. ²⁷When the seven days were almost completed, the Jews from Asia, seeing him in the temple, stirred up the whole crowd and seized him, ²⁸Crying out, Men of Israel, help — This is the man, that teaches all men every where against the people, and the law, and this place: and further brought Greeks also into the temple, and has polluted this holy place. ²⁹For they had previously seen Trophimus the Ephesian in the city with him, and they assumed that Paul had brought him into the temple. ³⁰The whole city was stirred up, and the people rushed together. They seized Paul and dragged him out of the temple, and immediately the doors were shut. ³¹While they were trying to kill him, word reached the commander of the cohort that all Jerusalem was in an uproar. ³²He immediately took soldiers and centurions and ran down to them. When they saw the commander and the soldiers, they stopped beating Paul. ³³Then the commander came up and arrested him and ordered him to be bound with two chains. He inquired who he was and what he had done. ³⁴Some in the crowd were shouting one thing, some another. Since the commander could not learn the facts because of the uproar, he ordered Paul to be brought into the barracks. ³⁵When Paul reached the steps, he had to be carried by the soldiers because of the violence of the crowd, ³⁶For the crowd of the people followed after, crying, Away with him. ³⁷As Paul was about to be brought into the barracks, he said to the commander, "May I say something to you?" The commander replied, "Do you know Greek? ³⁸Are you not the Egyptian who some time ago stirred up a revolt and led the four thousand men of the Assassins out into the wilderness?" ³⁹Paul replied, "I am a Jew, from Tarsus in Cilicia, a citizen of no insignificant city. I beg you, allow me to speak to the people." ⁴⁰When the commander had given him permission, Paul stood on the steps and motioned with his hand to the people. When there was a great silence, he addressed them in the Hebrew language, saying:

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The 'we' narration continues from chapter 20. The verb apospasthentas ('having been torn away') conveys the emotional difficulty of leaving the Ephesian elders. The nautical term euthydromesantes ('running a straight course') indicates favorable winds for the island-hopping route along the southwestern coast of Asia Minor.
2. At Patara, Paul's group transfers from a coastal vessel to a larger merchant ship capable of the open-sea crossing to Phoenicia — a voyage of about 400 miles. This kind of detail reflects the eyewitness narrator's travel experience.
3. The nautical detail of passing Cyprus on the port side ('left,' euonymon) indicates a course south of the island. Tyre, the ancient Phoenician port city, was a major commercial hub where cargo ships regularly docked.
4. The imperfect tense elegon ('they kept saying') suggests repeated urging. The tension between the Spirit's warning and Paul's Spirit-led determination to go (20:22) is not resolved by Luke. The warnings may reveal what will happen rather than commanding Paul to avoid it — prophetic information about danger rather than a prohibition.
5. The scene of an entire community — men, women, and children — escorting Paul to the shore and kneeling to pray on the beach is among the most tender images in Acts. It parallels the farewell at Miletus (20:36-38) and demonstrates that early Christian communities included whole families.
6. The simple narrative — farewell, boarding, returning — closes the Tyre episode with quiet dignity. The phrase eis ta idia ('to their own [places]') echoes the same phrase used in John 1:11 and 19:27.
7. Ptolemais (modern Akko/Acre) was about 25 miles south of Tyre. The brief one-day visit contrasts with the seven days at Tyre, reflecting Paul's haste to reach Jerusalem. The existence of a Christian community here shows the spread of the faith along the Phoenician coast.
8. Philip 'the evangelist' is identified as 'one of the seven' — the group appointed in Acts 6:5 to serve the Hellenistic Jewish widows. His last appearance was in 8:40, settling in Caesarea after his encounter with the Ethiopian eunuch. The title 'evangelist' (euangelistou) appears only here and in Ephesians 4:11 and 2 Timothy 4:5.

9. The mention of Philip's four prophesying daughters is significant for understanding women's roles in the early church. The Greek parthenoi ('virgins, unmarried women') combined with propheteuousai ('prophesying') indicates an ongoing prophetic ministry. This fulfills Joel 2:28-29, quoted by Peter at Pentecost (Acts 2:17-18): 'your sons and your daughters shall prophesy.'
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Joel 2:28-29. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. Agabus previously appeared in Acts 11:28, where he predicted a famine. His arrival from Judea — 'came down,' the standard expression for traveling from the elevated region of Jerusalem — introduces the final and most dramatic warning about Paul's fate.
11. Agabus's enacted prophecy follows the pattern of Old Testament prophetic sign-acts (Isaiah 20:2-4, Jeremiah 13:1-11, Ezekiel 4:1-3). The introductory formula 'This is what the Holy Spirit says' (tade legei to pneuma to hagion) mirrors the prophetic 'Thus says the LORD' (ko amar YHWH). The prediction that Jews will 'hand him over to the Gentiles' (paradosousin eis cheiras ethnon) directly parallels Jesus' passion predictions (Luke 18:32).
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 20:2-4. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Jeremiah 13:1-11. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Ezekiel 4:1-3. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. The 'we' narrator includes himself among those pleading with Paul — a rare moment of personal involvement by the author. The verb parekalouemen ('we were urging') is imperfect tense, indicating persistent entreaty.
13. Paul's response reveals both his emotional vulnerability (they are 'breaking' his heart — synthryptontes, literally 'crushing together') and his resolute commitment. His readiness to die 'for the name of the Lord Jesus' (hyper tou onomatou tou kyriou Iesou) uses the same preposition (hyper, 'for, on behalf of') that characterizes sacrificial language throughout the New Testament.
14. The community's final words — 'The Lord's will be done' (tou kyriou to thelema ginestho) — directly echo Jesus' prayer in Gethsemane (Luke 22:42: 'not my will, but yours be done'). This verbal parallel reinforces the Lukan theme of Paul's journey to Jerusalem as a parallel passion narrative.
15. The verb episkeuasamenoi ('having prepared, having packed up') replaces the KJV's archaic 'took up our carriages' (which meant 'packed our baggage' in 17th-century English). The verb 'went up' (anebainomen) reflects the geographical and theological ascent to Jerusalem.
16. Mnason is described as an 'early disciple' (archaio mathete) — possibly meaning he was a believer from the earliest days, perhaps even from Pentecost. As a Cypriot, he may have been associated with the Hellenistic Jewish believers of Acts 11:19-20. His willingness to host Paul's mixed Jewish-Gentile group in or near Jerusalem was significant.
17. The warm reception (asmenos, 'gladly, with pleasure') contrasts with the tensions that follow. The 'we' narration confirms the author's presence in Jerusalem. This is the culmination of Paul's long journey from Acts 20:1.
18. James is the brother of Jesus and leader of the Jerusalem church (cf. 12:17, 15:13). The meeting is with James and the elders — not with the apostles, suggesting they may have been absent from Jerusalem by this point. The 'we' narrator is present at this meeting.
19. Paul attributes the work to God rather than to himself — 'what God had done' (hon epoiesen ho theos). The phrase kath' hen hekaston ('one by one, in detail') suggests a thorough report. This likely included the delivery of the collection from the Gentile churches, though Luke surprisingly does not mention it explicitly.
20. The word myriades ('tens of thousands') may be hyperbolic, but it indicates a substantial Jewish-Christian community in Jerusalem. The critical point is that these Jewish believers remain 'zealous for the law' (zelotai tou nomou) — they continue to observe Torah. This sets up the tension with Paul's reputation.
21. The charge is specific: Paul supposedly teaches Jewish believers in the diaspora to abandon circumcision and Jewish customs. This is a distortion of Paul's actual position — he taught that Gentiles need not be circumcised (Galatians 5:2-6) but did not forbid Jewish believers from maintaining their practices (cf. 1 Corinthians 7:18). The word apostasian ('apostasy, rebellion') is charged language.
22. The SBLGNT text is shorter than the Textus Receptus behind the KJV, omitting the reference to the multitude assembling. The rhetorical question acknowledges the practical problem: Paul's arrival will become known and the rumors must be addressed.
23. James proposes a plan to demonstrate Paul's Torah loyalty. The 'vow' (euchen) is almost certainly a Nazirite vow (Numbers 6:1-21), which involved abstaining from wine, not cutting one's hair, and avoiding corpse impurity for a specified period.
23. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Numbers 6:1-21 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
24. Sponsoring the expenses of a Nazirite vow's completion was considered a pious act in Judaism (cf. Josephus, Antiquities 19.294). The shaving of heads marked the vow's completion (Numbers 6:18). Paul's willingness to do this aligns with his principle of becoming 'all things to all people' (1 Corinthians 9:22).

24. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Numbers 6:18. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
25. James reaffirms the Jerusalem Council's decision from Acts 15:20, 29. The four requirements for Gentile believers remain unchanged. This verse clarifies that Paul's Torah observance for Jewish believers does not contradict the lighter requirements for Gentile believers — the two are not in tension but address different communities.
26. Paul enters the temple to notify the priests of the completion date for the Nazirite vow, at which point the prescribed offerings would be made (Numbers 6:13-17: a male lamb, a female lamb, a ram, grain offerings, and drink offerings). This was a significant financial commitment.
26. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Numbers 6:13-17:. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
27. The plan fails at the last moment. The 'Jews from Asia' — likely from Ephesus, who would recognize both Paul and Trophimus (v. 29) — initiate the violence. The irony is sharp: Paul is in the temple demonstrating his Torah loyalty when he is accused of violating the temple.
28. The three-fold accusation — against the people, the law, and the temple — parallels the charges against Stephen (6:13) and against Jesus (Mark 14:58, Luke 23:2). The charge of bringing Greeks into the temple was a capital offense; inscriptions in Greek and Latin on the barrier (the soreg) warned Gentiles that entry beyond the Court of the Gentiles meant death.
29. Luke explicitly states the charge was based on an assumption (enomizon, 'they supposed, assumed'), not on fact. Trophimus was a Gentile from Ephesus (cf. 20:4) whom the Asian Jews recognized. The false inference — seeing them together in the city and assuming they entered the temple together — was enough to ignite the mob.
30. Paul is dragged out of the temple rather than killed inside it — the mob avoids defiling the sacred space with bloodshed. The closing of the doors by the temple police (Levitical guards) was both a security measure and a symbolic act: the temple shuts Paul out. The detail 'immediately the doors were shut' has narrative and theological weight.
31. The chiliarchos ('commander of a thousand,' tribune) was the commanding officer of the Roman cohort stationed in the Antonia Fortress, which overlooked the temple from the northwest corner. The fortress's strategic position allowed rapid response to disturbances in the temple courts.
32. The plural 'centurions' (hekatontarchas) indicates at least two centurions, meaning the commander brought at least 200 soldiers — a substantial force. The stairway from the Antonia Fortress led directly down into the temple courts, enabling the rapid intervention described here.
33. The two chains (halysessin dysi) likely means Paul was chained between two soldiers, a common Roman security measure. This fulfills Agabus's prophecy from verse 11. The commander's arrest is protective as well as custodial — it removes Paul from the mob.
34. The 'barracks' (parembolen) is the Antonia Fortress, the Roman military headquarters in Jerusalem. The confused shouting of the crowd prevents any coherent investigation at the scene, a detail that parallels the Ephesian riot (19:32).
35. The steps (anabathmous) connected the temple courts to the Antonia Fortress. The crowd's violence was so intense that the soldiers had to physically carry Paul up the stairs — a graphic detail suggesting a near-lynching in progress.
36. The cry 'Away with him!' (Aire auton) echoes the crowd's cry against Jesus before Pilate in Luke 23:18 (Aire touton, 'Away with this man!'). Luke draws a deliberate verbal parallel between Paul's and Jesus' experiences before hostile crowds in Jerusalem.
37. Paul's ability to speak Greek surprises the commander, who had made a different assumption about his identity (v. 38). The question Hellenisti ginoskeis ('Do you know Greek?') implies the commander expected Paul to be an uneducated agitator, not a cultured, multilingual figure.
38. Josephus records an Egyptian false prophet who led a large following to the Mount of Olives, promising that Jerusalem's walls would collapse at his command (Jewish War 2.261-263; Antiquities 20.169-172). Josephus gives the number as 30,000; Luke's 4,000 may be more accurate. The sicarioi ('dagger-men, Assassins') were Jewish militants who carried concealed daggers and assassinated Roman collaborators in crowds.
39. Paul identifies himself by ethnicity (Jewish), origin (Tarsus), and civic status (citizen of a notable city). Tarsus was a major intellectual and commercial center — the phrase 'no insignificant city' (ouk asemou poleos) employs litotes (understatement) for rhetorical effect. Paul does not yet mention his Roman citizenship, saving that for a more strategic moment (22:25-28).
40. Paul's choice to speak in 'the Hebrew language' (te Hebraidi dialekto) — almost certainly Aramaic, the common spoken language of Palestinian Jews — immediately establishes rapport with a crowd that had just been trying to kill him. The 'great silence' that falls over the mob is a dramatic narrative moment, setting the stage for the defense speech in chapter 22.

Summary: Acts 22 contains Paul's defense speech to the Jerusalem crowd from the steps of the Antonia Fortress. Speaking in Aramaic, he recounts his Jewish credentials, his persecution of the Way, his encounter with the risen Jesus on the Damascus road, and his commission to preach to the Gentiles. The crowd listens until Paul mentions the Gentile mission, at which point they erupt again. As the Roman soldiers prepare to examine Paul by flogging, he reveals his Roman citizenship, which immediately halts the proceedings and creates a new legal situation. The commander, Claudius Lysias, arranges for Paul to appear before the Jewish council.

What Makes This Remarkable: This is the second of three accounts of Paul's conversion in Acts (cf. 9:1-19, 26:9-18), each tailored to its audience. Before the Jewish crowd, Paul emphasizes his impeccable Jewish credentials: trained under Gamaliel, zealous for the law, persecuting the Way. The Aramaic speech momentarily silences the mob (v. 2). The turning point is verse 21 — the word 'Gentiles' (ethne) triggers explosive fury, suggesting that the inclusion of Gentiles, not Christology, was the primary offense. Paul's Roman citizenship (acquired by birth, not purchase like the commander's) introduces the legal framework that will shape the rest of Acts.

Translation Friction: The differences between this account and the Acts 9 version of Paul's conversion (e.g., what the companions saw and heard) are well-documented. These variations likely reflect rhetorical adaptation to different audiences rather than contradictions. Ananias is described here as 'devout according to the law, well spoken of by all the Jews' (v. 12) — details absent from chapter 9 but strategically relevant for this audience. We render each account as given without harmonizing.

Connections: Paul's appeal to his training under Gamaliel connects to the Gamaliel of Acts 5:34-39. The Damascus road vision echoes Old Testament theophanies (Exodus 3, Isaiah 6, Ezekiel 1). Paul's citation of his persecution of 'this Way' (v. 4) connects to the earliest designation for Christianity (cf. 9:2, 19:9, 23, 24:14, 22). Roman citizenship law (the lex Porcia and lex Julia) protected citizens from being bound or beaten without trial, which Paul invokes here as he did at Philippi (16:37).

¹"Brothers and fathers, hear the defense I now make before you." ²When they heard that he was addressing them in the Hebrew language, they became even more quiet. Then he said: ³"I am a Jew, born in Tarsus of Cilicia but raised in this city, educated at the feet of Gamaliel according to the strict manner of the law of our fathers, being zealous for God just as all of you are today. ⁴I persecuted this Way to the point of death, binding and delivering to prison both men and women, ⁵As also the high priest does bear me witness, and all the estate of the elders — from whom also I received letters to the brothers and sisters, and traveled to Damascus, to bring them which were there bound to Jerusalem, for to be punished. ⁶"As I was on my way and approaching Damascus, about noon a great light from heaven suddenly flashed around me. ⁷I fell to the ground and heard a voice saying to me, 'Saul, Saul, why are you persecuting me?' ⁸I answered, 'Who are you, Lord?' And he said to me, 'I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom you are persecuting.' ⁹Those who were with me saw the light but did not understand the voice of the one who was speaking to me. ¹⁰I said, 'What should I do, Lord?' And the Lord said to me, 'Get up and go into Damascus, and there you will be told everything that has been appointed for you to do.' ¹¹Since I could not see because of the brightness of that light, I was led by the hand by those who were with me and came into Damascus. ¹²A certain Ananias, a devout man according to the law, well spoken of by all the Jews living there, ¹³Arrived to me, and stood, and stated to me, Brother Saul, accept your sight. And the same hour I looked up upon him. ¹⁴Then he said, 'The God of our fathers has appointed you to know his will, to see the Righteous One, and to hear a voice from his mouth, ¹⁵For you shalt be his witness to all men of what you have seen and listened to. ¹⁶And now why do you delay? Get up, be baptized, and wash away your sins, calling on his name.' ¹⁷"When I had returned to Jerusalem and was praying in the temple, I fell into a trance ¹⁸Noticed him declaring to me, Make haste, and get you quickly out of Jerusalem — since they will not receive your testimony concerning me. ¹⁹I said, 'Lord, they themselves know that in one synagogue after another I imprisoned and beat those who believed in you. ²⁰And when the blood of Stephen your witness was being poured out, I myself was standing by and approving and guarding the garments of those who killed him.' ²¹Then he said to me, 'Go, for I will send you far away to the Gentiles."²² They listened to him up to this word. Then they raised their voices and said, "Away with such a man from the earth! For he should not be allowed to live!"²³ As they were shouting and throwing off their cloaks and tossing dust into the air,²⁴ The chief captain commanded him to be brought into the castle, and bade that he should be examined by scourging. That he might know for this reason they cried so opposed to him.²⁵ But when they had stretched him out for the lashing, Paul said to the centurion standing by, "Is it lawful for you to flog a man who is a Roman citizen and has not been condemned?"²⁶ When the centurion heard this, he went to the commander and reported, saying, "What are you about to do? For this man is a Roman citizen."²⁷ So the commander came and said to him, "Tell me, are you a Roman citizen?" And he said, "Yes."²⁸ The commander answered, "I acquired this citizenship for a large sum of money." Paul said, "But I was born a citizen."²⁹ Immediately those who were about to examine him withdrew from him, and the commander himself was alarmed when he realized that Paul was a Roman citizen and that he had bound him.³⁰ The next day, wanting to find out the real reason Paul was being accused by the Jews, he released him and ordered the chief priests and the whole council to assemble. Then he brought Paul down and set him before them.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The address 'brothers and fathers' (andres adelphoi kai pateres) mirrors Stephen's speech (7:2), creating a literary parallel between two defendants before hostile Jewish audiences. The word apologia ('defense') is a formal legal term — Paul frames his speech as a courtroom defense.
2. The use of Aramaic (called 'the Hebrew language,' te Hebraidi dialekto) achieves its intended effect: the crowd gives Paul a deeper hearing. The comparative mallon ('more, even more') indicates that the silence deepened when they recognized the language — Paul is identifying himself as one of them.
3. Paul's self-introduction is carefully structured: birth (Tarsus), upbringing (Jerusalem), education (under Gamaliel), and character (zealous). Gamaliel was the most prominent Pharisaic teacher of the first century and grandson of Hillel. The phrase 'at the feet of' (para tous podas) describes the posture of a disciple before a rabbi. Paul's claim to be 'zealous for God' (zelotes tou theou) uses language associated with Phinehas (Numbers 25:13) and the Maccabees — the highest praise for Jewish piety.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Numbers 25:13 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The capitalized 'Way' (hodon) is the earliest self-designation of the Christian movement (cf. 9:2, 19:9, 23, 24:14, 22). Paul's persecution extended to death sentences (achri thanatou) — Stephen's execution being the most notable example (7:58-8:1). The inclusion of 'both men and women' emphasizes the thoroughness of his persecution.
5. Paul appeals to living witnesses — the high priest and the Sanhedrin — who can verify his former anti-Christian activity. The letters of authorization from the Sanhedrin to the Damascus synagogues (cf. 9:2) gave Paul quasi-official standing to extradite believers.
6. This account adds 'about noon' (peri mesembrian), absent from the chapter 9 narrative — the detail intensifies the miracle, since a light that outshines the midday sun must be extraordinary indeed (cf. 26:13). The light 'from heaven' (ek tou ouranou) marks this as a theophany.
7. The double vocative 'Saul, Saul' (Saoul Saoul) uses the Hebrew/Aramaic form of Paul's name and echoes divine addresses in the Old Testament (Genesis 22:11, 'Abraham, Abraham'; Exodus 3:4, 'Moses, Moses'). The question 'Why are you persecuting me?' identifies Christ with his persecuted church.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 22:11. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 3:4. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. This account specifies 'of Nazareth' (ho Nazoraiois), absent from 9:5. Before a Jewish audience, the Nazarene identification is significant — it anchors the risen Lord to the historical Jesus of Nazareth whom Paul's audience would know by reputation. The emphatic 'whom you are persecuting' (hon sy diokeis) reiterates the identification of Christ with his followers.
9. In Acts 9:7, Paul's companions 'heard the voice but saw no one.' The apparent discrepancy is best understood through the Greek verb akouo, which can mean either 'hear' (perceive sound) or 'understand' (comprehend meaning). In 9:7 they heard the sound; here they did not understand the words. The distinction parallels the crowd at Jesus' baptism in John 12:28-29.
10. Paul's question 'What should I do?' (ti poieso) portrays him as immediately submissive to the risen Lord's authority. The passive 'has been appointed' (tetaktai) implies divine foreordination — Paul's mission was predetermined.
11. The word doxa ('glory, brightness') adds theological depth — Paul's blindness resulted from the 'glory' of the light, the same word used for God's manifest presence (the Shekinah) in the Septuagint. Being led by the hand portrays the once-powerful persecutor as helpless.

12. This description of Ananias is unique to this account and tailored for the audience. In Acts 9, Ananias is simply called 'a disciple.' Here, before a Jewish crowd, Paul emphasizes that Ananias was 'devout according to the law' (eulabes kata ton nomon) and respected by the Jewish community — a Torah-observant Jew, not a lawless renegade.
13. The verb anablepson has a double meaning: 'look up' and 'receive sight.' The healing is immediate — 'at that very moment' (aute te hora) — emphasizing divine power working through Ananias. The address 'Brother Saul' (Saoul adelphe) indicates Ananias's acceptance of the former persecutor.
14. Ananias frames Paul's commission using thoroughly Jewish language: 'the God of our fathers' (ho theos ton pateron hemon) connects to the patriarchal promises. 'The Righteous One' (ton dikaion) is a messianic title rooted in Isaiah 53:11 and used for Jesus in Acts 3:14 and 7:52. The threefold commission — know, see, hear — echoes prophetic call narratives.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 53:11. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The word martyrs ('witness') carries its full weight here — Paul is commissioned as an eyewitness of the risen Christ. The phrase 'to all people' (pros pantas anthrōpous) already hints at the universal scope of Paul's mission, though the explosive word 'Gentiles' is not yet used.
16. The command to 'wash away your sins' (apolousai tas hamartias sou) connects baptism with cleansing — language that resonates with Jewish purification rituals. The middle voice of both baptisai and apolousai suggests Paul's active participation. 'Calling on his name' (epikalesamenos to onoma autou) echoes Joel 2:32, quoted by Peter at Pentecost (Acts 2:21).
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Joel 2:32. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. This temple vision is unique to this account — it does not appear in Acts 9 or 26. Paul strategically emphasizes that he received his Gentile commission while praying in the Jerusalem temple, demonstrating that his mission did not originate in opposition to the temple but within it. The word ekstasis ('trance, ecstasy') describes the same kind of visionary state Peter experienced in Acts 10:10.
18. The Lord's command to leave Jerusalem — 'hurry' (speuson) combined with 'quickly' (en tachei) — conveys urgency. The prediction that Jerusalem will reject Paul's testimony is both warning and explanation: Paul's Gentile mission was not Plan B but God's response to Israel's refusal.
19. Paul argues that his dramatic conversion — from violent persecutor to believer — should make him the most credible witness to his own people. The reasoning: anyone who would abandon his previous position so dramatically must have been compelled by overwhelming evidence.
20. The word martyrs here means 'witness' but is on its way to its later meaning of 'martyr' — Stephen's witness was sealed by his blood. Paul's admission of complicity in Stephen's death (cf. 7:58, 8:1) is the strongest possible evidence of his former anti-Christian commitment. The detail of 'guarding the garments' recalls the stoning procedure where witnesses removed outer garments to throw more effectively.
21. This single verse triggers the crowd's explosion. The word ethne ('nations, Gentiles') is the flashpoint. The Lord's commission to Paul — 'I will send you far away to the Gentiles' — uses the verb exapostelo, from which 'apostle' derives. Paul is being sent (apostled) to the nations. For the Jerusalem crowd, the claim that God commissioned a mission to include Gentiles as equals was intolerable.
22. The crowd's tolerance snaps at the word 'Gentiles.' Their fury — 'he should not be allowed to live' (ou katheeken auton zen) — reveals that the real offense was not theology about Jesus but the inclusion of Gentiles. The cry 'Away from the earth' (Aire apo tes ges) demands execution.
23. The three actions — shouting, throwing garments, tossing dust — express extreme outrage. Throwing dust may signify cursing (cf. 2 Samuel 16:13, where Shimei throws dust at David) or preparation for stoning. Removing garments echoes the stoning of Stephen (7:58), which Paul himself referenced moments earlier.
23. [TCR Cross-Reference] References 2 Samuel 16:13 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
24. The commander could not understand Paul's Aramaic speech and only witnessed the crowd's violent reaction. Roman 'examination by scourging' (mastixin anetazesthai) was a method of extracting information from non-citizens — a brutal interrogation technique using leather whips often embedded with bone or metal. It was distinct from the lesser punishment of beating with rods.
25. Paul times his revelation of Roman citizenship for maximum legal effect — when he is already being tied up for flogging. The question is rhetorical: it was emphatically illegal. The lex Porcia (c. 195 BC) and the lex Julia (c. 23 BC) prohibited binding, beating, or executing a Roman citizen without due process. The word akarakriton ('uncondemned, without trial') emphasizes the procedural violation.
26. The centurion's alarmed report — 'What are you about to do?' — reflects the serious legal consequences of violating a Roman citizen's rights. A commander who flogged a citizen without trial could face severe punishment, including loss of rank.
27. The commander personally verifies the claim. Falsely claiming Roman citizenship was a capital offense (Suetonius, Claudius 25), so the claim carried its own credibility. Paul's single-word answer — 'Yes' (Nai) — is quietly authoritative.
28. The exchange reveals a social hierarchy within citizenship. The commander (whose name, Claudius Lysias, per 23:26, suggests he obtained citizenship under Emperor Claudius, who was known for selling it) purchased his status. Paul inherited his — his family held citizenship, possibly granted for services to Rome in Tarsus. Birth citizenship outranked purchased citizenship in social prestige.

29. The immediate withdrawal (eutheos apestes) of the interrogators demonstrates the power of Roman citizenship rights. The commander's fear (ephobethee) is specifically about having already bound Paul (auton en dedekos) — the binding itself was a violation, even before any flogging occurred.
30. Unable to examine Paul by force (because of his citizenship) and unable to understand the charges (because the speech was in Aramaic), the commander convenes the Jewish council (synedrin, the Sanhedrin) to clarify the matter. This sets the stage for chapter 23. The Roman commander's authority to convene the Sanhedrin demonstrates the power dynamics of the occupation.

Summary: Acts 23 opens with Paul before the Sanhedrin, where his claim of a clear conscience provokes the high priest Ananias to order him struck. Paul then strategically divides the council by declaring that he is on trial for the hope of the resurrection, splitting the Pharisees and Sadducees against each other. That night, the Lord appears to Paul and assures him he will testify in Rome. Meanwhile, more than forty Jews form a conspiracy to assassinate Paul, swearing an oath not to eat or drink until he is dead. Paul's nephew learns of the plot, warns the commander, and Claudius Lysias transfers Paul under heavy military escort to the governor Felix in Caesarea.

What Makes This Remarkable: Paul's appeal to the resurrection as the issue at stake (v. 6) is both theologically true and tactically brilliant — it exploits the well-known Pharisee-Sadducee divide on this doctrine. The Lord's nighttime appearance (v. 11) is the theological center of the chapter, confirming that Paul's journey to Rome is divinely ordained, not merely the result of political maneuvering. The assassination conspiracy and its foiling through Paul's nephew introduces the only family member of Paul mentioned in Acts. Claudius Lysias's letter (vv. 26-30) is a masterpiece of bureaucratic spin — he rewrites events to make himself look better.

Translation Friction: Paul's response to the high priest ('God will strike you, you whitewashed wall,' v. 3) and his subsequent claim not to have known Ananias was high priest (v. 5) have been debated endlessly. Possible explanations include poor eyesight, the high priest's lack of distinctive vestments in a hastily convened session, or ironic denial. We render the text without resolving the question. Claudius Lysias's letter significantly distorts the actual sequence of events — he claims to have rescued Paul because he learned he was a Roman citizen, when in fact he learned this only after ordering the flogging.

Connections: Paul's claim of a 'clear conscience' (v. 1) connects to his consistent self-defense throughout the epistles (cf. 2 Corinthians 1:12, 2 Timothy 1:3). The Pharisee-Sadducee split over resurrection connects to the Sadducees' challenge to Jesus in Luke 20:27-40. The Lord's assurance 'you must testify in Rome' (v. 11) parallels 19:21 and drives the narrative toward its conclusion. The military escort of 470 soldiers for one prisoner underscores the seriousness of the threat and the strategic importance Roman authorities placed on maintaining order.

¹Paul looked intently at the council and said, "Brothers, I have lived my life before God in all good conscience up to this day."
²The high priest Ananias ordered those standing near him to strike him on the mouth. ³Then Paul said to him, "God is going to strike you, you whitewashed wall! Are you sitting there to judge me according to the law, and yet in violation of the law you order me to be struck?" ⁴Those standing nearby said, "Would you insult God's high priest?" ⁵Paul said, "I did not know, brothers, that he was the high priest. For it is written, 'You shall not speak evil of a ruler of your people.'" ⁶Now when Paul perceived that one part were Sadducees and the other Pharisees, he cried out in the council, "Brothers, I am a Pharisee, a son of Pharisees. It is with respect to the hope and the resurrection of the dead that I am on trial!" ⁷When he said this, a dispute arose between the Pharisees and the Sadducees, and the assembly was divided. ⁸For the Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, nor angel, nor spirit, but the Pharisees acknowledge them all. ⁹Then a great clamor arose, and some of the scribes of the Pharisees' party stood up and contended sharply, "We find nothing wrong with this man. What if a spirit or an angel has spoken to him?" — ¹⁰When the dispute became violent, the commander, fearing that Paul would be torn apart by them, ordered the soldiers to go down, take him by force from among them, and bring him into the barracks. ¹¹The following night the Lord stood by him and said, "Take courage, for as you have testified about me in Jerusalem, so you must also testify in Rome." ¹²When day came, the Jews formed a conspiracy and bound themselves by an oath, saying that they would neither eat nor drink until they had killed Paul. ¹³There were more than forty who formed this conspiracy. ¹⁴They went to the chief priests and elders and said, "We have strictly bound ourselves by an oath to taste nothing until we have killed Paul. ¹⁵Now then, you and the council must notify the commander to bring him down to you, as though you were going to examine his case more carefully. And we are ready to kill him before he gets near." ¹⁶But the son of Paul's sister heard about the ambush, and he went and entered the barracks and told Paul. ¹⁷Paul called one of the centurions and said, "Take this young man to the commander, for he has something to report to him." ¹⁸So he took him and brought him to the commander and said, "The prisoner Paul called me and asked me to bring this young man to you, as he has something to tell you." ¹⁹The commander took him by the hand, drew him aside privately, and asked, "What is it that you have to report to me?" ²⁰He said, "The Jews have agreed to ask you to bring Paul down to the council tomorrow, as though they were going to inquire more carefully about his case. ²¹But do not be persuaded by them, for more than forty of their men are lying in ambush for him, having bound themselves by an oath neither to eat nor drink until they have killed him. They are ready now, waiting for your consent." ²²The commander dismissed the young man, ordering him, "Tell no one that you have reported these things to me." ²³Then he called two of the centurions and said, "Get two hundred soldiers ready to go to Caesarea, with seventy horsemen and two hundred spearmen, by the third hour of the night. ²⁴Also provide mounts so that Paul may ride and be brought safely to Felix the governor." ²⁵He wrote a letter to this effect: ²⁶"Claudius Lysias, to His Excellency the governor Felix: Greetings. ²⁷This man was seized by the Jews and was about to be killed by them when I came with the soldiers and rescued him, having learned that he was a Roman citizen. ²⁸Wanting to know the charge for which they were accusing him, I brought him down to their council. ²⁹I found that he was being accused about questions of their law, but had no charge deserving death or imprisonment. ³⁰When I was informed of a plot against the man, I sent him to you at once, ordering his accusers also to state their charges against him before you." ³¹So the soldiers, according to their orders, took Paul and brought him by night to Antipatris. ³²The next day they let the horsemen go on with him and returned to the barracks. ³³When they came to Caesarea, they delivered the letter to the governor and presented Paul before him. ³⁴After reading the letter, he asked what province Paul was from, and when he learned that he was from Cilicia, ³⁵I will hear you, stated he, when your accusers are also come. Then he commanded him to be kept in Herod's judgment hall.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The verb atenisas ('looked intently, gazed') suggests direct, unflinching eye contact. Paul's opening claim — a 'good conscience' (syneideesei agathee) before God — is a bold assertion of innocence. The word pepoliteumai ('I have lived as a citizen, conducted myself') implies both civic and religious faithfulness.
2. Ananias son of Nedebeaus was high priest from approximately AD 47 to 59. He was known for violence and corruption (Josephus, Antiquities 20.199-207) and was eventually assassinated by Jewish revolutionaries at the outbreak of the revolt in AD 66. Striking a defendant on the mouth was intended to silence what was considered blasphemous or offensive speech.
3. The epithet 'whitewashed wall' (toiche kekoniamene) echoes Ezekiel 13:10-15, where whitewashed walls conceal structural corruption. Jesus used similar imagery for the Pharisees (Matthew 23:27, 'whitewashed tombs'). Paul's retort exposes the irony: the judge is the lawbreaker. Jewish law required that defendants be presumed innocent and not struck during proceedings.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Ezekiel 13:10-15 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The bystanders' rebuke appeals to the sanctity of the high priestly office. The verb loidoreis ('revile, insult') was a serious charge — insulting the high priest could be construed as violating Exodus 22:28.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 22:28. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. Paul quotes Exodus 22:28 from the Septuagint. His claim not to have recognized the high priest remains puzzling — proposed explanations include poor eyesight (cf. Galatians 4:15, 6:11), the informality of the session, the high priest not wearing vestments, or Paul speaking with irony (implying 'I could not have imagined that a man who acts this way is the high priest'). The text does not resolve the ambiguity.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 22:28 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. Paul's declaration is both true and strategic. He genuinely believed in the resurrection (1 Corinthians 15), and the resurrection of Jesus was central to his message. But by framing the issue this way, he exploits the fundamental Pharisee-Sadducee doctrinal divide. The Sadducees denied resurrection, angels, and spirits; the Pharisees affirmed all three (v. 8).

7. The verb eschisthe ('was split, divided') is vivid — the council literally fractures along doctrinal lines. Paul has successfully redirected the debate from his alleged crimes to an internal Jewish theological controversy.
8. Luke provides this explanatory note for readers unfamiliar with Jewish sectarian differences. The Sadducees' denial of resurrection, angels, and spirits reflected their strict adherence to the written Torah alone, where these concepts are less developed. The Pharisees accepted the oral tradition and later prophetic writings that developed these doctrines.
9. The Pharisaic scribes now defend Paul — a dramatic reversal. Their argument ('What if a spirit or an angel spoke to him?') inadvertently validates Paul's Damascus road experience. The SBLGNT text breaks off mid-sentence with a dash, leaving the conditional clause unfinished (aposiopesis) — the sentence is interrupted by the chaos. The KJV's addition 'let us not fight against God' (from the Textus Receptus) echoes Gamaliel's words in 5:39 but is not in the critical text.
10. The verb diaspasthe ('torn apart, pulled to pieces') is graphic — the commander fears Paul will be literally dismembered as the two factions pull him in opposite directions. This is the second time the Roman military has had to rescue Paul from a Jewish crowd (cf. 21:32-35). The pattern establishes Rome as Paul's unlikely protector.
11. This is the theological pivot of the entire narrative from Acts 21 onward. The divine dei ('it is necessary, you must') indicates that Paul's journey to Rome is not a contingent political outcome but a divinely ordained necessity. The word 'courage' (tharsei) is the same word Jesus used to calm the disciples on the sea (Matthew 14:27) and to assure the paralytic (Mark 2:5). Everything that follows — the conspiracy, the transfer to Caesarea, the trials, the appeal to Caesar, the shipwreck — serves this divine purpose.
12. The verb anethematisan ('bound themselves by a curse, placed themselves under a ban') means they invoked divine punishment on themselves if they failed. The Hebrew equivalent is cherem — a self-imposed ban of the most solemn kind. The oath not to eat or drink creates narrative urgency.
13. The number 'more than forty' (pleious tesserakonta) indicates a substantial, organized group — not a spontaneous mob but a premeditated assassination squad. The word synomosian ('conspiracy, joint oath') emphasizes the formal, sworn nature of their pact.
14. The conspirators approach the chief priests and elders (Sadducean leadership) — not the Pharisees who had just defended Paul. The Hebrew-style emphatic construction anathemati anethematisamen ('with a curse we have cursed ourselves') intensifies the solemnity of the oath.
15. The plan involves the Sanhedrin as decoy — requesting a second hearing while the assassins ambush Paul en route. The participation of the chief priests and elders in this conspiracy implicates the Jewish leadership in a murder plot, a serious narrative charge that Luke presents matter-of-factly.
16. This is the only mention of any of Paul's relatives in Acts. The nephew's access to both the conspiracy information and the Roman barracks suggests the family may have had social connections in Jerusalem. How a young man learned of a secret conspiracy of forty men is unexplained — perhaps the plotters were not as discreet as they imagined.
17. Paul's ability to summon a centurion and make requests indicates that his status as a Roman citizen afforded him certain privileges even in custody. He acts decisively, channeling the information through proper military channels.
18. Paul is now referred to as 'the prisoner' (ho desmios) — his new identity in the narrative. The centurion faithfully relays Paul's request, and the commander receives the young man personally, indicating that he took Paul's status seriously.
19. The commander's gesture of taking the young man by the hand (epilabomenos tes cheiros autou) suggests both kindness and discretion. He recognizes the sensitivity of the information and ensures privacy. The detail is characteristically Lukan in its attention to personal interaction.
20. The nephew relays the plan accurately, demonstrating good intelligence. The phrase 'as though' (hos mellon) reveals the deception — the request for a hearing is a pretext for the ambush.
21. The nephew provides specific, actionable intelligence: the number of conspirators (more than forty), the nature of their oath, and their current state of readiness. The phrase 'waiting for your consent' (prosdechomenoi ten apo sou epangelian) reveals that the plot depends on the commander's cooperation.
22. The commander's secrecy order protects both the nephew (from retaliation) and his own operational plans. He acts with professional military competence — receiving intelligence, maintaining security, and immediately formulating a response.
23. The escort totals 470 military personnel for one prisoner — an extraordinary force that reflects both the seriousness of the threat and the importance of protecting a Roman citizen. The 'third hour of the night' is approximately 9 PM, ensuring departure under cover of darkness. The dexiolabous ('spearmen' or 'light-armed troops') is a rare word whose exact meaning is debated.
24. Multiple mounts (ktene, 'animals, beasts') suggests provisions for changing horses to maintain speed. Felix (Marcus Antonius Felix) was procurator of Judea from approximately AD 52 to 59. Tacitus describes him as one who 'exercised the power of a king with the spirit of a slave' (Histories 5.9).
25. The phrase 'to this effect' (echousan ton typon touton) indicates Luke may be paraphrasing rather than quoting the letter verbatim. This is one of the few embedded letters in Acts (cf. 15:23-29) and provides insight into Roman administrative communication.
26. The letter follows standard Greco-Roman epistolary form: sender, recipient, greeting (chairein). The title kratisto ('most excellent, His Excellency') is the same used for Theophilus in Luke 1:3 and for Felix and Festus elsewhere in Acts (24:3, 26:25). The commander's full name — Claudius Lysias — appears only here. 'Claudius' was likely his adopted Roman nomen, taken when he purchased citizenship under Emperor Claudius.

27. Lysias's letter strategically rearranges the sequence of events. In reality, he rescued Paul first and only later discovered his citizenship (21:33-34 vs. 22:25-29). By writing 'having learned that he was a Roman citizen,' Lysias makes his intervention appear to be a deliberate act of protecting Roman rights rather than a routine crowd-control operation. This bureaucratic self-serving is a realistic touch.
28. Lysias presents the Sanhedrin hearing as his own initiative to determine charges — a reasonable summary of events that also emphasizes his procedural diligence before a superior.
29. Lysias's assessment — that the dispute concerns Jewish law and involves no Roman crime — is the same conclusion that Gallio reached in Corinth (18:14-15) and that Festus and Agrippa will later reach (25:25, 26:31). This repeated Roman verdict of innocence on matters of Roman law is a major theme in Acts.
30. Lysias transfers both the prisoner and the legal responsibility to Felix. By ordering the accusers to present their case before the governor, he ensures a proper trial while removing himself from a dangerous situation. The SBLGNT omits the closing 'Farewell' (erroso) found in the Textus Receptus.
31. Antipatris was located about 35 miles northwest of Jerusalem on the road to Caesarea — a hard night's march. The city was rebuilt by Herod the Great and named after his father Antipater. The overnight forced march would put Paul beyond the reach of the Jerusalem conspirators by dawn.
32. Once past the danger zone of the Judean hills, the infantry and spearmen were no longer needed — the horsemen alone could escort Paul through the coastal plain to Caesarea. The remaining journey was about 25 miles. This practical military detail reflects the author's familiarity with such operations.
33. The official handoff is complete: the letter explains the case, and the prisoner is formally transferred to the governor's jurisdiction. Caesarea Maritima was the Roman administrative capital of Judea, with the governor's residence in Herod's former palace (the praetorium).
34. Felix's first question — about Paul's province of origin — is a jurisdictional inquiry. Under Roman law, a governor could either try the case himself or remit it to the defendant's home province. Cilicia was at this time part of the combined province of Syria-Cilicia, but Felix decides to retain jurisdiction.
35. Felix agrees to hear the case but requires the accusers' presence — standard Roman legal procedure. 'Herod's praetorium' (to praitorio tou Herodou) was the palace built by Herod the Great in Caesarea, now serving as the governor's official residence and courthouse. Paul's detention there, rather than in a common prison, reflects his Roman citizenship and the nature of the charges.

Summary: Acts 24 presents Paul's formal trial before the Roman governor Felix in Caesarea. The high priest Ananias and a professional orator named Tertullus bring charges against Paul, accusing him of sedition, being a ringleader of the Nazarene sect, and attempting to profane the temple. Paul delivers his own defense, denying the charges and reframing his faith as the fulfillment of Jewish hope in the resurrection. Felix, who has considerable knowledge of the Way, adjourns the case. He later summons Paul privately to hear about faith in Christ, but becomes frightened when Paul speaks of righteousness, self-control, and coming judgment. Felix keeps Paul in custody for two years, hoping for a bribe, until he is succeeded by Porcius Festus.

What Makes This Remarkable: The trial follows proper Roman cognitio procedure: accusation by prosecution (vv. 2-8), defense by the accused (vv. 10-21), and adjudication by the governor. Tertullus's speech is a masterclass in forensic rhetoric — flattery of the judge, character assassination of the defendant, and specific legal charges. Paul's defense is equally skillful, systematically denying each charge. The private conversations between Felix and Paul (vv. 24-26) reveal a governor caught between intellectual curiosity, moral fear, and financial corruption. Felix's two-year delay (v. 27) becomes a pivotal factor in the narrative, eventually leading to Paul's appeal to Caesar.

Translation Friction: Felix's familiarity with 'the Way' (v. 22) is historically plausible — his wife Drusilla was Jewish (v. 24), and Caesarea had a significant Christian community. His trembling at Paul's preaching on judgment (v. 25) but refusal to release him reveals the complex interplay of conviction and corruption in Roman governance. Luke does not explain why Paul did not offer the bribe Felix wanted — this silence may itself be the point.

Connections: The charges against Paul — sedition, sectarianism, temple profanation — echo the charges against Jesus before Pilate (Luke 23:2, 5). Paul's affirmation that he worships 'the God of our fathers' (v. 14) and believes 'everything written in the Law and the Prophets' (v. 14) positions Christianity as the fulfillment of Judaism, not its contradiction. The two-year imprisonment (v. 27) parallels Jesus' final journey to Jerusalem and provides the setting for Paul's prison epistles if the traditional dating is accepted.

¹Five days later the high priest Ananias came down with some elders and a lawyer named Tertullus, and they presented their case against Paul before the governor. ²When Paul had been summoned, Tertullus began the accusation, saying: "Since through you we enjoy much peace, and since reforms are being made for this nation by your foresight, ³We acknowledge this in every way and everywhere, most excellent Felix, with deep gratitude. ⁴But so that I may not detain you any further, I beg you in your kindness to hear us briefly. ⁵For we have found this man to be a plague, one who stirs up riots among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes. ⁶He even tried to profane the temple, so we seized him. ⁸By examining him yourself you will be able to learn about all these things of which we accuse him." ⁹The Jews also joined in the attack, asserting that these things were so. ¹⁰When the governor motioned to him to speak, Paul replied: "Knowing that for many years you have been a judge over this nation, I cheerfully make my defense. ¹¹You can verify that it is not more than twelve days since I went up to worship in Jerusalem, ¹²They and not discovered me in the temple disputing with any man, neither raising up the people, neither in the synagogues, nor in the city. ¹³Nor can they prove to you the charges they are now bringing against me. ¹⁴But this I confess to you: according to the Way, which they call a sect, I worship the God of our fathers, believing everything laid down according to the Law and written in the Prophets, ¹⁵Possess confident expectation toward God, which they themselves also allow, that where there is a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust. ¹⁶Because of this I also strive to maintain a clear conscience before both God and people at all times. ¹⁷After several years I came to bring charitable gifts to my nation and to present offerings. ¹⁸While I was doing this, they found me purified in the temple, without any crowd or disturbance. ¹⁹But there were some Jews from Asia — who ought to be here before you to make their accusation, if they have anything against me. ²⁰Or else let these men themselves state what crime they found when I stood before the council, ²¹Indeed, except it be for this one voice, that I cried standing in the midst of them, Touching the resurrection of the dead I am called in question by you this day. ²²But Felix, having a rather accurate knowledge of the Way, adjourned the proceedings, saying, "When Lysias the commander comes down, I will decide your case." ²³Then he ordered the centurion to keep Paul in custody but to give him some freedom and not prevent any of his friends from attending to his needs. ²⁴Some days later Felix came with his wife Drusilla, who was Jewish, and he sent for Paul and heard him speak about faith in Christ Jesus. ²⁵And as Paul discussed righteousness, self-control, and the coming judgment, Felix became frightened and answered, "Go away for now. When I find a convenient time, I will summon you." ²⁶At the same time he was hoping that money would be given to him by Paul, so he sent for him more frequently and conversed with him. ²⁷After two years had passed, Felix was succeeded by Porcius Festus. And wanting to do the Jews a favor, Felix left Paul in prison.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The delegation's five-day delay likely reflects travel time from Jerusalem to Caesarea plus preparation. The employment of a professional rhetor (Tertullus, a Latin name suggesting he may have been Roman or Romanized) indicates the seriousness of the prosecution. The verb enephanisan ('presented formally, laid charges') is a technical legal term.
2. Tertullus opens with a captatio benevolentiae — flattery designed to win the judge's favor. The claims of 'much peace' and wise 'reforms' under Felix are historically ironic; Josephus and Tacitus both describe Felix's administration as corrupt and violent. Tertullus tells Felix what Felix wants to hear.
3. The accumulation of universal terms — 'every way,' 'everywhere,' 'all gratitude' — is rhetorical excess typical of forensic flattery. The title 'most excellent' (kratiste) is the standard address for a Roman governor.
4. The conventional apology for taking the governor's time (praeteritio) is another rhetorical device. Tertullus transitions from flattery to the substance of the charges.
5. Tertullus levels three charges: (1) Paul is a 'plague' (loimon, literally a disease) — a personal character attack; (2) he incites sedition (staseis) among Jews worldwide — a political charge with Roman legal weight; (3) he leads 'the sect of the Nazarenes' (ton Nazoraion haireseos) — the only place in the New Testament where Christians are called 'Nazarenes,' a term derived from Jesus' hometown. The word hairesis ('sect, party') was not yet negative in itself — Josephus uses it for the Pharisees and Sadducees.
6. The third specific charge — attempted temple profanation (bebelosai) — is the most serious because it carried a death penalty even under Roman law. The SBLGNT text is shorter here than the Textus Receptus, omitting the reference to judging Paul by Jewish law and Lysias's intervention. We follow the critical text.
7. This verse is not present in the SBLGNT critical text. It appears only in later manuscripts behind the Textus Receptus/KJV. The SBLGNT moves directly from verse 6 to verse 8. We follow the critical text and note the verse's absence.

8. In the SBLGNT text, 'him' refers to Paul — Tertullus invites Felix to interrogate Paul directly. In the longer Textus Receptus text, 'him' refers to Lysias. The critical text makes better sense of the prosecution's strategy: they are confident the examination will confirm their charges.
9. The verb synepethento ('joined in the attack, supported the accusation') indicates that the Jewish delegation collectively endorsed Tertullus's charges. This is formal legal testimony, not mere agreement.
10. Paul's opening is notably restrained compared to Tertullus's extravagant flattery. He offers one factual observation — Felix's long tenure as judge — which is both complimentary and relevant (a long-serving judge would understand the issues). The word euthymos ('cheerfully, with good courage') contrasts with the anxiety one might expect from a defendant.
11. Paul appeals to verifiable facts. The twelve days can be roughly reconstructed from the narrative: arrival (21:17), meeting with James (21:18), purification in the temple (21:26), arrest (21:27), Sanhedrin hearing (22:30), transfer to Caesarea (23:23), five days until trial (24:1). His stated purpose for going to Jerusalem — 'to worship' (proskyneseon) — directly contradicts the charge of temple profanation.
12. Paul systematically denies the sedition charge across three venues: temple, synagogues, city. He was not debating (dialogomenon), not inciting crowds (epistatsin poiounta ochlou), and no witnesses can place him doing so. This is a point-by-point factual rebuttal.
13. Paul shifts the burden of proof to the accusers — a sound legal strategy. The verb parastesai ('prove, demonstrate, present evidence') is a legal technical term. Paul's point is devastating: the prosecution has no witnesses, no evidence, only assertions.
14. Paul's confession (homologe) is carefully worded. He admits to following 'the Way' (ten hodon) but reframes it: what they call a 'sect' (haireisin), he calls the authentic worship of Israel's God. He affirms belief in 'everything' in the Law and Prophets — the complete Jewish Scriptures. This positions Christianity not as an innovation but as faithful Judaism.
15. Paul identifies resurrection as common ground between himself and his accusers (the Pharisaic members of the Sanhedrin). The inclusion of 'both the righteous and the unrighteous' (dikaion te kai adikion) indicates a general resurrection leading to judgment — a belief shared with the Pharisees and rooted in Daniel 12:2.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Daniel 12:2 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. Paul returns to the conscience theme from 23:1. The verb asko ('I train, I strive, I discipline myself') implies continuous effort — maintaining a blameless conscience is not passive but requires active discipline. The dual orientation — 'before God and people' — covers both religious and civil responsibility.
17. This is Luke's only explicit reference to the collection for the Jerusalem poor that Paul organized across the Gentile churches (cf. Romans 15:25-28, 1 Corinthians 16:1-4, 2 Corinthians 8-9). The word eleemosynas ('charitable gifts, alms') and prosphoras ('offerings') — one for the poor, one for the temple — demonstrate Paul's continued commitment to both the Jewish community and the temple.
18. Paul's factual summary directly contradicts the prosecution's narrative. He was in the temple — but purified (hegnismenon), not profaning it. He had no crowd (ou meta ochlou) — therefore no riot was his doing. He caused no disturbance (oude meta thorybou) — the disorder came from his accusers.
19. Paul makes a devastating procedural point: the actual eyewitnesses — the Jews from Asia who started the riot (21:27) — are absent. Under Roman law, accusers had to appear in person. Their absence fatally weakens the prosecution's case. The dash in the Greek indicates an anacolouthon — Paul's sentence breaks off, leaving the implication hanging.
20. Paul challenges his present accusers to name a specific crime from the Sanhedrin hearing. The word adikema ('crime, wrongdoing') is a legal term — Paul demands a specific charge, not vague accusations.
21. Paul's defense ends with ironic brilliance. The only 'crime' anyone can identify from the Sanhedrin hearing is his declaration about resurrection — a doctrine shared by the Pharisees on the council. This effectively reduces the prosecution's case to an internal Jewish theological dispute, which Roman law had no interest in adjudicating.
22. Felix's adjournment (anebaletō, 'put off, deferred') without a verdict is significant. His 'rather accurate knowledge of the Way' (akribesteron eidos ta peri tes hodou) suggests prior familiarity with Christianity, likely through his Jewish wife Drusilla. The reference to awaiting Lysias is a procedural excuse — there is no indication Lysias ever came.
23. The arrangement is custodia militaris — military custody with privileges. The 'freedom' (anesin, literally 'relaxation, loosening') means Paul was not in a dungeon but in supervised detention. Allowing friends to visit and provide for him was a privilege of his Roman citizenship and Felix's implicit recognition that Paul posed no real threat.
24. Drusilla was the youngest daughter of Herod Agrippa I (the Agrippa of Acts 12) and sister of Agrippa II (who appears in chapters 25-26). She had left her first husband to marry Felix — a scandalous union that makes the topics Paul addresses in the next verse particularly pointed.
25. Paul's three topics — righteousness (dikaïosynes), self-control (enkrateias), and coming judgment (krimatos tou mellontos) — are not random but directly relevant to Felix's life. Felix was notorious for injustice (Josephus), had stolen Drusilla from her husband (lacking self-control), and faced divine accountability (judgment). His fear (emphobos genomenos) is a genuine response to conviction — but he chooses delay over repentance.
26. Luke exposes Felix's true motive: bribery. The hope for 'money' (chremata) explains why Felix kept summoning Paul — not for spiritual conversation but for financial negotiation. Roman law technically prohibited governors from accepting bribes (the lex Iulia repetundarum), but the practice was endemic. Paul's mention of bringing 'charitable gifts' (v. 17) may have suggested to Felix that Paul had access to significant funds.

27. The two-year imprisonment (dietias) without verdict is a miscarriage of justice by any standard. Felix's final act regarding Paul — leaving him imprisoned as a political favor to the Jews — reveals that the case was never about law but about politics. Porcius Festus took office around AD 59-60. The word dedemenon ('bound, imprisoned') recalls Agabus's prophecy (21:11) and the Lord's assurance that Paul must reach Rome (23:11).

Summary: Acts 25 introduces the new governor Porcius Festus, who inherits Paul's unresolved case. The Jerusalem leaders immediately press Festus to transfer Paul to Jerusalem — concealing a plan to ambush him en route. Festus instead conducts a hearing in Caesarea, where the same unproven charges are repeated. When Festus suggests transferring the case to Jerusalem as a political gesture, Paul exercises his right as a Roman citizen to appeal to Caesar. Festus grants the appeal. Subsequently, King Agrippa II and his sister Bernice arrive for a state visit, and Festus consults Agrippa about the case, confessing that he finds no crime worthy of death and needs help formulating charges to send with the prisoner to Rome.

What Makes This Remarkable: Paul's appeal to Caesar (v. 11) is the decisive legal act that sends him to Rome, fulfilling the Lord's promise in 23:11. The appeal (provocatio) was a fundamental right of Roman citizens — once invoked, no lower authority could override it. Festus's candid admission to Agrippa that he has nothing substantive to write to the emperor (v. 26) is both politically embarrassing and theologically significant: the Roman governor cannot identify any crime because there is none. The chapter introduces Agrippa II and Bernice, the last of the Herodian dynasty to appear in the New Testament.

Translation Friction: Festus's suggestion to transfer the case to Jerusalem (v. 9) is ambiguous — was it a genuine attempt at jurisdictional fairness, or a political concession to the Jews? Luke says he wanted to 'do the Jews a favor' (v. 9), echoing Felix's motivation (24:27). Paul's appeal may have been partly strategic (to escape local politics) and partly providential (to reach Rome). We render the text without privileging one interpretation.

Connections: The repeated attempts to transfer Paul to Jerusalem (23:15, 25:3) echo the persistent plots against Jesus in the Gospels. Festus's declaration of Paul's innocence joins a growing chorus of Roman officials who find no fault in him (Gallio, 18:14-15; Lysias, 23:29; Festus here; Agrippa, 26:31-32). This cumulative pattern parallels Pilate's triple declaration of Jesus' innocence (Luke 23:4, 14, 22). King Agrippa II is the great-grandson of Herod the Great (Matthew 2) and son of Herod Agrippa I (Acts 12).

1Three days after Festus had arrived in the province, he went up from Caesarea to Jerusalem. 2The chief priests and the leading men of the Jews presented their case against Paul to him and appealed to him, 3Indeed, desired favour opposed to him, that he would send for him to Jerusalem, laying wait in the way to kill him. 4Festus replied that Paul was being kept in custody at Caesarea and that he himself was about to go there shortly. 5"Therefore," he said, "let those among you who are in authority come down with me, and if there is anything wrong with the man, let them bring charges against him." 6After staying among them not more than eight or ten days, he went down to Caesarea. The next day he took his seat on the tribunal and ordered Paul to be brought. 7When Paul appeared, the Jews who had come down from Jerusalem stood around him, bringing many serious charges that they were not able to prove, 8While he answered for himself, Neither opposed to the law of the Jews, neither opposed to the temple, nor yet opposed to Caesar, have I offended any thing at all. 9But Festus, wanting to do the Jews a favor, answered Paul and said, "Are you willing to go up to Jerusalem and be tried there before me on these charges?" 10Paul said, "I am standing before Caesar's tribunal, where I ought to be tried. I have done no wrong to the Jews, as you yourself know very well. 11If then I am a wrongdoer and have committed anything deserving death, I do not seek to escape death. But if there is nothing to their charges against me, no one can hand me over to them. I appeal to Caesar." 12Then Festus, after conferring with his council, answered, "To Caesar you have appealed; to Caesar you shall go." 13After some days had passed, King Agrippa and Bernice arrived at Caesarea to welcome Festus. 14As they were spending several days there, Festus laid Paul's case before the king, saying, "There is a man left as a prisoner by Felix. 15When I was in Jerusalem, the chief priests and the elders of the Jews presented their case against him, asking for a sentence of condemnation. ¹⁶I answered them that it is not the custom of Romans to hand over any person before the accused meets the accusers face to face and has an opportunity to make a defense against the charge. ¹⁷So when they came together here, I made no delay but took my seat on the tribunal the very next day and ordered the man to be brought in. ¹⁸When the accusers stood up, they brought no charge of the kind of crime I was expecting. ¹⁹Instead they had certain disputes with him about their own religion and about a certain Jesus who had died, whom Paul claimed to be alive. ²⁰Since I was at a loss how to investigate these matters, I asked whether he wished to go to Jerusalem and be tried there regarding them. ²¹But when Paul appealed to be held for the decision of the Emperor, I ordered him to be kept in custody until I could send him to Caesar." ²²Then Agrippa said to Festus, "I would like to hear the man myself." "Tomorrow," said Festus, "you shall hear him." ²³So the next day Agrippa and Bernice came with great pomp and entered the audience hall, along with the military commanders and the prominent men of the city. At Festus's command, Paul was brought in. ²⁴Festus said, "King Agrippa, and all who are present with us, you see this man about whom the whole Jewish community has petitioned me, both in Jerusalem and here, shouting that he ought not to live any longer. ²⁵But I found that he had done nothing deserving death. And since he himself appealed to the Emperor, I decided to send him. ²⁶But I have nothing definite to write to my lord about him. Therefore I have brought him before all of you, and especially before you, King Agrippa, so that after this examination I may have something to write. ²⁷For it seems to me unreasonable to send a prisoner without also indicating the charges against him."

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Festus moves quickly — within three days of assuming office he travels to Jerusalem, the religious capital, demonstrating political awareness. The verb anebe ('went up') reflects both geography and the conventional language of pilgrimage to Jerusalem.
2. The Jewish leaders waste no time — Paul's case is apparently their top priority with the new governor. The plural 'chief priests' (archiereis) includes the current high priest and former holders of the office who retained influence.
3. The assassination plot from 23:12-15 has been revived, or a new one formed. Two years have passed, but the determination to kill Paul persists. Luke reveals the hidden plot (enedran poiountes, 'setting an ambush') that the request to Festus conceals. The word charin ('as a favor') exposes the request as political rather than judicial.
4. Festus declines the transfer request — whether from good judgment, adherence to protocol, or simply because Caesarea was the proper judicial venue. His response thwarts the ambush plan without his being aware of it. Providence operates through bureaucratic procedure.
5. Festus invites the Jewish leaders to present their case in Caesarea — proper Roman procedure. The conditional 'if there is anything wrong' (ei ti estin atopon) is diplomatically neutral but subtly skeptical. The word atopon ('out of place, wrong, amiss') is mild legal language.
6. Festus acts with considerably more dispatch than Felix. The bema ('tribunal, judgment seat') was the elevated platform from which Roman governors rendered official judgments. The same word is used for Pilate's judgment seat in John 19:13 and Gallio's in Acts 18:12.
7. Luke's summary is devastating to the prosecution: 'many serious charges' (polla kai barea aitiomata) that they 'could not prove' (ouk ischyon apodeixai). The verb apodeixai ('prove, demonstrate') is the same standard of evidence Paul demanded in 24:13. Two years have produced no new evidence.
8. Paul's defense addresses three jurisdictions: Jewish law, the temple, and Roman authority. This tripartite denial covers every possible basis for charges. The addition of 'against Caesar' (eis Kaisara) is new — Paul now explicitly addresses the political dimension, denying any sedition against Rome.
9. Festus repeats Felix's pattern: political calculation overrides judicial integrity. The phrase 'wanting to do the Jews a favor' (thelon tois Ioudaiois charin katathesthai) echoes 24:27. Festus offers a compromise — trial in Jerusalem but with himself presiding — but Paul recognizes the danger.
10. Paul's response is legally precise. He asserts that he is already before the proper court ('Caesar's tribunal' — the governor's bema represents Caesar's authority). His statement 'you yourself know very well' (su kallion epiginoskeis) is a pointed challenge: Festus knows Paul is innocent but is considering a politically motivated transfer.
11. Paul's appeal to Caesar (Kaisara epikaloumai) is the legal climax of the narrative. The provocatio ad Caesarem was an irrevocable right of Roman citizens, transferring jurisdiction to the emperor's court in Rome. Paul's logic is airtight: if guilty, he accepts death; if innocent, no one has the right to sacrifice him to political expediency. The verb charisasthai ('hand over as a favor, grant as a gift') pointedly echoes the 'favor' (charin) Festus wanted to do for the Jews.
12. Festus consults his advisory council (symbolion) — a standard group of legal advisors who assisted Roman governors. The response has a formal, almost formulaic quality: 'To Caesar you have appealed; to Caesar you shall go.' Once the appeal is granted, the case passes beyond Festus's jurisdiction. The divine purpose declared in 23:11 ('you must testify in Rome') now has its legal mechanism.

13. Agrippa II (Marcus Julius Agrippa, AD 27-c. 100) was the last of the Herodian dynasty. He ruled territories northeast of Galilee and had been granted authority over the Jerusalem temple and the appointment of high priests. Bernice was his sister; their relationship was the subject of scandalous rumors in antiquity (Josephus, Antiquities 20.145). Their visit to welcome the new governor was a diplomatic courtesy.
14. Festus consults Agrippa because of Agrippa's expertise in Jewish religious matters. The phrase 'left as a prisoner by Felix' (kataleimmenos hypo Felikos desmios) implicitly criticizes Felix's failure to resolve the case.
15. Festus summarizes events for Agrippa. The Jewish leaders sought a katadiken ('condemnation, guilty verdict') — not merely a hearing but a predetermined outcome.
16. Festus articulates a foundational principle of Roman law: the right of the accused to confront accusers and present a defense. This principle — confrontation and defense — is one of Rome's lasting contributions to Western legal tradition. Festus presents himself favorably to Agrippa as a defender of proper procedure.
17. Festus emphasizes his own efficiency — 'no delay' (anabolen medemian) — in contrast to Felix's two-year procrastination. The detail is accurate (cf. v. 6) and presents Festus in the best possible light before a royal audience.
18. Festus's admission is revealing: he expected serious criminal charges (violent sedition, assassination plots) and found none. The word poneron ('evil, criminal') indicates he anticipated accusations of substantive wrongdoing under Roman law.
19. The word deisidaimonias can mean either 'religion' (neutral) or 'superstition' (pejorative). In a diplomatic context, Festus likely intends the neutral sense. His summary of the case — 'a certain Jesus who had died, whom Paul claimed to be alive' — is a remarkable outsider's reduction of the resurrection to its simplest terms. For Festus, it is a puzzling Jewish dispute; for the reader, it is the central claim of the entire book of Acts.
20. Festus reframes his suggestion about Jerusalem as stemming from genuine perplexity (aporoumenos, 'being at a loss') rather than political favoritism. His version omits the motivation Luke attributed to him in verse 9 ('wanting to do the Jews a favor'). This is diplomatic self-presentation before Agrippa.
21. The title Sebastos (Greek equivalent of Latin Augustus, 'the Revered One') refers to the reigning emperor, Nero (AD 54-68). At this point in his reign (c. AD 59-60), Nero's government was still relatively competent under the influence of Seneca and Burrus. The word diagnōsis ('decision, examination, hearing') is a legal term for the imperial court's review.
22. Agrippa's interest — 'I would like to hear the man myself' (eboulomen kai autos tou anthropou akousai) — sets up the hearing in chapter 26. The imperfect eboulomen ('I was wishing, I have been wanting') suggests Agrippa had already heard about Paul and been curious. Festus's immediate 'Tomorrow' shows eagerness to accommodate the king.
23. The scene is deliberately theatrical: royalty, military commanders, civic leaders — all assembled 'with great pomp' (meta polles phantasias). The Greek phantasia (from which 'fantasy' derives) means 'display, pageantry, spectacle.' Luke creates a vivid contrast: all the power of the world arrayed before one prisoner in chains, who turns out to be the most powerful person in the room.
24. Festus introduces the case to the assembled dignitaries. His description of the Jewish community's united demand — 'shouting that he ought not to live' — frames the intensity of the opposition while implicitly distancing himself from their demands.
25. Festus's declaration — 'nothing deserving death' (meden axion thanatou) — is another in the series of Roman acquittals that runs through Acts. He presents the appeal to Caesar as the reason for the transfer, though his own political maneuvering was a significant factor.
26. Festus's problem is bureaucratic but revealing: he must send Paul to Rome with a written summary of charges, but he has no charges to write. The title 'my lord' (to kyrio) for the emperor was becoming common under Nero, though earlier emperors like Augustus had rejected it (Suetonius, Augustus 53). Agrippa's expertise in Jewish affairs makes him the ideal consultant.
27. The word alogon ('unreasonable, absurd, illogical') is a striking admission. It would indeed be absurd to send a prisoner to the emperor without articulated charges. The irony is thick: Rome's judicial system has failed to produce a single substantive charge against Paul, yet he remains imprisoned and is being sent for imperial trial.

Summary: Acts 26 contains Paul's defense speech before King Agrippa II, Bernice, Festus, and the assembled dignitaries in Caesarea. This is the longest and most rhetorically polished of Paul's defense speeches in Acts, and it includes the third and most detailed account of his conversion on the Damascus road. Paul argues that his entire ministry is rooted in the hope of Israel — the promise God made to the twelve tribes — and that the resurrection of Jesus is the fulfillment of that hope. Festus interrupts, calling Paul mad; Paul respectfully disagrees and turns directly to Agrippa with a personal appeal. Agrippa's famous response — 'In a short time you will persuade me to become a Christian' — is followed by the private verdict: Paul could have been set free if he had not appealed to Caesar.

What Makes This Remarkable: This third account of the Damascus road experience (cf. 9:1-19, 22:6-16) is the most theologically developed. Jesus speaks at greater length, commissioning Paul in language drawn from the servant songs of Isaiah and Jeremiah's call narrative. The phrase 'it is hard for you to kick against the goads' (v. 14) is a Greek proverb known from Euripides and Aeschylus, appropriate for the educated audience. Paul's speech builds to a direct evangelistic appeal to a king — an audacious rhetorical move. The verdict of innocence in verse 32 ('this man could have been set free') provides the final Roman declaration of Paul's legal innocence in Acts.

Translation Friction: *Agrippa's response in verse 28 is notoriously difficult to translate. The Greek en oligo me peitheis Christianon poiesai can be read as sincere ('you almost persuade me'), dismissive ('in such a short time you think to make me a Christian?'), or ironic. We follow the rendering that captures Agrippa's deflection without resolving the ambiguity. The relationship between this conversion account and the earlier versions involves significant additions (vv. 16-18) not present in chapters 9 or 22.*

Connections: Paul's commission in verses 16-18 draws on Isaiah 42:7, 16 (opening blind eyes), Jeremiah 1:7-8 (the prophetic call), and Isaiah 61:1 (liberty for captives) — the same passage Jesus read in the Nazareth synagogue (Luke 4:18-19). The phrase 'the hope of the promise made by God to our fathers' (v. 6) connects to the Abrahamic covenant (Genesis 12, 15, 17), the Davidic promise (2 Samuel 7), and the resurrection hope expressed throughout the Psalms and Prophets. Paul's appeal that Agrippa believes the prophets (v. 27) echoes Jesus' teaching in Luke 24:25-27, 44-47.

¹Agrippa said to Paul, "You have permission to speak for yourself." Then Paul stretched out his hand and made his defense: ²"I consider myself fortunate, King Agrippa, that it is before you I am about to make my defense today against all the accusations of the Jews, ³Especially because I know you to be expert in all customs and questions which are in the midst of the Jews — for this reason I beseech you to hear me patiently. ⁴All the Jews know my manner of life from my youth, spent from the beginning among my own nation and in Jerusalem. ⁵They have known me for a long time and can testify, if they are willing, that I lived as a Pharisee according to the strictest party of our religion. ⁶And now I stand here on trial because of my hope in the promise made by God to our fathers, ⁷To which promise our the Twelve tribes, instantly serving God time and after dark, confident expectation to arrive. For which hope's sake, king Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews. ⁸Why is it considered incredible among you that God raises the dead? ⁹I myself was once convinced that I ought to do many things in opposing the name of Jesus of Nazareth. ¹⁰And this I did in Jerusalem. I not only locked up many of the saints in prison after receiving authority from the chief priests, but when they were put to death I cast my vote against them. ¹¹I punished them often in all the synagogues and tried to force them to blaspheme, and in raging fury against them I persecuted them even to foreign cities. ¹²"In this connection I was traveling to Damascus with the authority and commission of the chief priests, ¹³Indeed, at midday, O king, I noticed in the way a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining round concerning me and them which journeyed with me. ¹⁴When we had all fallen to the ground, I heard a voice saying to me in the Hebrew language, 'Saul, Saul, why are you persecuting me? It is hard for you to kick against the goads.' ¹⁵I said, 'Who are you, Lord?' And the Lord said, 'I am Jesus whom you are persecuting. ¹⁶But get up and stand on your feet, for I have appeared to you for this purpose: to appoint you as a servant and witness of the things in which you have seen me and of the things in which I will appear to you, ¹⁷Delivering you from the people, and from the Gentiles, to whom now I send you,. ¹⁸To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the authority of Satan to God, that they may accept forgiveness of sins, and inheritance in the midst of them which are sanctified by way of faith that is in me. ¹⁹"Therefore, King Agrippa, I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision, ²⁰However, shewed first to them of Damascus, and at Jerusalem, and throughout every one of the coasts of Judaea, and then to the Gentiles, that they should turn back and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance. ²¹For this reason the Jews seized me in the temple and tried to kill me. ²²To this day I have had the help that comes from God, and so I stand here testifying both to small and great, saying nothing beyond what the prophets and Moses said would come to pass: ²³that the Messiah would suffer, and that by being the first to rise from the dead, he would proclaim light both to our people and to the Gentiles. ²⁴As Paul was saying these things in his defense, Festus said with a loud voice, "You are out of your mind, Paul! Your great learning is driving you insane!" ²⁵But Paul said, "I am not out of my mind, most excellent Festus, but I am speaking true and rational words. ²⁶For the king knows about these things, and to him

I speak boldly. For I am persuaded that none of these things has escaped his notice, since this was not done in a corner. ²⁷King Agrippa, do you believe the prophets? I know that you believe." ²⁸Agrippa said to Paul, "In a short time would you persuade me to become a Christian?" ²⁹Paul replied, "Whether in a short time or a long time, I would pray to God that not only you but also all who hear me today might become such as I am — except for these chains." ³⁰Then the king rose, and the governor, and Bernice, and those who were sitting with them. ³¹After they had withdrawn, they said to one another, "This man is doing nothing to deserve death or imprisonment." ³²Agrippa said to Festus, "This man could have been set free if he had not appealed to Caesar."

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Agrippa, not Festus, grants permission to speak — reflecting his superior rank in this setting. Paul's gesture of stretching out his hand (ekteinas ten cheira) is an orator's gesture, beginning a formal rhetorical address. This is Paul's most elaborate and carefully structured speech in Acts.
2. Paul's opening compliment to Agrippa is more substantive than Tertullus's flattery of Felix. The word makarion ('fortunate, blessed') is genuine — Agrippa's knowledge of Jewish affairs makes him an ideal judge for Paul's case.
3. Agrippa's expertise in Jewish affairs was well-known — he had authority over the Jerusalem temple and appointed high priests. The word gnosten ('expert, one who knows') is more than flattery; it establishes that Agrippa can evaluate the theological nuances of Paul's defense.
4. Paul appeals to public knowledge of his upbringing. The word biosin ('manner of life, way of living') encompasses his entire pre-conversion existence. His claim that 'all the Jews know' is a broad appeal to common knowledge.
5. Paul identifies Pharisaism as 'the strictest party' (ten akribestaten haireisin) of Judaism — a claim consistent with how both Josephus and the rabbis characterized the Pharisees. The conditional 'if they are willing' (ean thelosi) subtly implies that his accusers might not be forthcoming about facts that support his case.
6. Paul frames the entire case as being about 'the promise made by God to our fathers' (tes eis tous pateras hemon epangelias). This is the same theological move he made before the Sanhedrin (23:6) — centering the trial on Israel's hope rather than on alleged crimes.
7. The phrase 'our twelve tribes' (to dodekaphylon hemon) is remarkable — Paul speaks as if all twelve tribes still exist and worship together, despite the dispersion of the ten northern tribes. The word ekteneia ('earnestness, intense devotion') describes the persistent worship of the faithful remnant. Paul's rhetorical point is powerful: he is being accused by Jews for believing what all Jews hope for.
8. This rhetorical question cuts to the heart of the matter. Paul shifts from the specific resurrection of Jesus to the general principle: if God exists and is powerful, why should resurrection be considered impossible (apiston, 'unbelievable, incredible')? The question implicitly challenges the Sadducean and Greek skepticism about bodily resurrection.
9. Paul now narrates his pre-conversion hostility to Christianity, establishing that his transformation was not the result of prior sympathy but occurred against his own deeply held convictions. The phrase 'the name of Jesus of Nazareth' (to onoma Iesou tou Nazoraion) identifies the historical person whose followers Paul persecuted.
10. Paul uses the term 'the saints' (ton hagion) for believers — the only time in Acts this Pauline designation appears. The phrase 'cast my vote' (katenegeka psephon) has been debated: it could indicate Paul was a member of the Sanhedrin with voting authority, or it could be figurative for 'expressing approval.' The reference to multiple executions (plural) goes beyond Stephen's case, indicating broader persecution.
11. This is the most detailed description of Paul's persecution in any of the three accounts. The attempt to 'force them to blaspheme' (enagkazon blasphemein) — presumably to curse Jesus — reveals the systematic nature of the persecution. The phrase 'raging fury' (perissos emmainomenos) uses the language of madness, which Paul will later turn to ironic effect when Festus accuses him of madness (v. 24).
12. Paul emphasizes the official nature of his mission — 'authority and commission' (exousias kai epitropes) from the chief priests — to underscore that his conversion contradicted everything his former authorities wanted.
13. This account specifies the light was 'brighter than the sun' (hyper ten lamproteta tou heliou) — an intensification from the earlier accounts. At midday the sun is at full strength, making a light that surpasses it unmistakably supernatural. The detail that the light shone on 'those traveling with me' is unique to this account.
14. Two details are unique to this account: all the companions fell to the ground (earlier accounts differ), and the voice spoke 'in the Hebrew language' (te Hebraidi dialekto, i.e., Aramaic). The proverb about 'kicking against the goads' (pros kentra laktizein) is well-known in Greek literature (Euripides, Bacchae 795; Aeschylus, Prometheus Bound 324) — a goad is a sharp stick used to drive oxen. The saying means resisting an irresistible force causes only self-harm. Its use in Aramaic before Paul but reported in Greek for Agrippa shows rhetorical sophistication.
15. The exchange is consistent across all three accounts. The identification 'I am Jesus' (Ego eimi Iesous) uses the emphatic ego eimi construction that echoes the divine self-revelation in the Old Testament (Exodus 3:14).
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 3:14 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.

16. In this account, Jesus' commission is far more detailed than in chapters 9 or 22. The command 'Get up and stand on your feet' (anastethi kai stethi epi tous podas sou) echoes God's words to Ezekiel (Ezekiel 2:1). The dual role — 'servant and witness' (hypereten kai martyra) — combines the language of Isaiah's servant and the apostolic witness theme of Acts.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Ezekiel 2:1. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. The promise of rescue 'from the people and from the Gentiles' (ek tou laou kai ek ton ethnon) covers both Jewish and Gentile opposition — exactly what Paul has experienced. The verb apostello ('I am sending') is the root of 'apostle'; Jesus commissions Paul as his apostle to the nations. The language echoes Jeremiah 1:7-8.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Jeremiah 1:7-8. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. This verse is a compressed summary of Paul's entire theological mission, structured in three parallel movements: (1) opening eyes — from ignorance to knowledge; (2) turning from darkness to light and from Satan to God — from bondage to freedom; (3) receiving forgiveness and inheritance — from condemnation to inclusion. The language draws heavily on Isaiah 42:6-7, 16 (the servant opens blind eyes) and Isaiah 61:1 (liberty for captives). The phrase 'sanctified by faith in me' (pistei te eis eme) places faith in Jesus as the means of sanctification.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 42:6-7 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 61:1 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. Paul addresses Agrippa directly, resuming the relationship established in verses 2-3. The phrase 'heavenly vision' (ourania optasia) characterizes the Damascus road experience in terms any educated Greco-Roman audience would understand. Paul's claim is simple: he was obedient to a divine revelation.
20. Paul summarizes his entire ministry geographically: Damascus, Jerusalem, Judea, then the Gentiles — an outward-expanding pattern that mirrors Acts' own structure (1:8). His message has two components: repentance (metanoein, inner change) and turning to God (epistrephein, outward reorientation), demonstrated by appropriate deeds (axia tes metanoias erga). This echoes John the Baptist's preaching (Luke 3:8).
21. Paul identifies the real cause of his persecution: his obedience to the heavenly vision, specifically his preaching to Gentiles. The verb diacheirisaithai ('to lay hands on, to kill') is a strong word implying violent intent.
22. Paul attributes his survival to divine help (epikourias apo tou theou), not to Roman protection or personal resourcefulness. His claim to teach 'nothing beyond' (ouden ekτος) Moses and the prophets positions the gospel as the fulfillment of the Jewish Scriptures — not an innovation but a completion.
23. Paul's summary of the prophetic message has three elements: (1) the Christ must suffer (pathetos ho Christos) — a claim that scandalized Jews who expected a triumphant Messiah; (2) the Christ would be first to rise from the dead (protos ex anastaseos nekron) — not just raised, but 'first,' implying a sequence others will follow; (3) he would proclaim light to both Jews and Gentiles — universalizing the salvation. Each point can be traced to specific prophetic texts: suffering (Isaiah 53), resurrection (Psalm 16:10), and light to the nations (Isaiah 42:6, 49:6).
23. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 53 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
23. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalm 16:10 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
23. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 42:6 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
24. Festus interrupts — unable to contain himself at the talk of resurrection. His charge of madness (Maine, 'You are mad') echoes the ironic language Paul used of his own pre-conversion fury (emmainomenos, v. 11). The phrase 'great learning' (polla grammata) could mean 'much study of Scripture' or 'much education generally.' Festus attributes Paul's resurrection claims to intellectual excess rather than divine revelation.
25. Paul's response is calm, respectful, and pointed. He addresses Festus with full courtesy (kratiste, 'most excellent') while firmly denying the charge. The word sophrosynes ('soundness of mind, rationality, self-control') is the direct opposite of mania — Paul claims his words are not the product of frenzy but of clarity and truth.
26. Paul pivots from Festus to Agrippa, who as a Jewish king would understand the scriptural framework. The phrase 'not done in a corner' (ouk estin en gonia pepragmenon) is proverbial — the events of Jesus' life, death, and resurrection were public, not secret. This is both a historical claim and a rhetorical challenge.
27. Paul's direct question to the king is audacious. He answers his own question — 'I know that you believe' — placing Agrippa in a rhetorical trap. If Agrippa affirms belief in the prophets, Paul can argue that the prophets predicted exactly what he has described. If Agrippa denies it, he alienates his Jewish subjects.

- 28. This famous verse is notoriously ambiguous. The Greek en oligo me peitheis Christianon poiesai can be read multiple ways: (1) 'In a short time you are persuading me to become a Christian' (KJV tradition — near-conversion); (2) 'With so little effort you think to make me a Christian?' (dismissive); (3) 'In short, you are trying to make me a Christian' (deflecting). The rendering captures the question as a deflection — Agrippa sidesteps Paul's trap by reframing the exchange. This is the second of only three uses of Christianos in the New Testament (cf. 11:26, 1 Peter 4:16).
- 29. Paul's response is the emotional climax of the speech. He takes Agrippa's deflection and turns it into a genuine wish — not just for Agrippa but for everyone present. The final phrase 'except for these chains' (parektos ton desmon touton) is both poignant (he is in chains) and rhetorically powerful (he would share everything about his life except the imprisonment). The gesture implied — Paul likely raised his chained hands — would have been deeply affecting.
- 30. The king's rising signals the end of the hearing. The order of names — king, governor, Bernice — reflects the protocol of rank. The hearing was consultative, not judicial; Agrippa had no authority to render a verdict on a case appealed to Caesar.
- 31. The private deliberation produces a unanimous verdict of innocence — from a king, a governor, and the assembled dignitaries. This is the culminating Roman declaration of Paul's innocence in Acts, parallel to Pilate's declaration about Jesus (Luke 23:4, 14, 22).
- 32. Agrippa's statement is the final word on Paul's legal status: he could have been released (apolelysthai edynato) — his innocence is beyond question. But the appeal to Caesar is irrevocable. The narrative irony is profound: the appeal that prevents Paul's release is the very mechanism that will bring him to Rome, fulfilling the Lord's promise (23:11). What appears to be a legal miscalculation is actually divine strategy.

Summary: Acts 27 is one of the most vivid narrative passages in ancient literature, describing Paul's voyage to Rome and the catastrophic shipwreck on the island of Malta. The 'we' narrative resumes with detailed nautical terminology as Paul and other prisoners sail under the centurion Julius's custody. The voyage proceeds through unfavorable conditions — Paul's warning against continuing is overruled. A ferocious northeast storm called the Euraquilo catches the ship near Crete, driving it for fourteen days across the open Mediterranean. Paul receives a divine assurance that all 276 persons aboard will survive. After dramatic scenes of despair, a midnight approach to land, a failed escape attempt by the sailors, and Paul's eucharistic-like meal, the ship runs aground on Malta and breaks apart. All hands reach shore alive.

What Makes This Remarkable: The nautical detail in this chapter is so precise that it has been used to reconstruct ancient sailing routes and seamanship practices. The 'we' narrator's firsthand account includes technical terms for sailing gear, wind conditions, navigational techniques, and ship construction that demonstrate genuine seafaring experience. Paul emerges as the de facto leader of the voyage — a prisoner who commands more authority than the captain or centurion because he speaks with divine backing. The divine promise that all 276 souls would be saved (v. 24) inverts the expected pattern: it is the prisoner who saves the ship, not the ship that carries the prisoner.

Translation Friction: The chapter presents Paul as having prophetic foreknowledge (vv. 10, 22-26) alongside practical leadership, which some interpreters find in tension. The 'we' sections present a narrator with genuine nautical knowledge — the level of technical detail exceeds what is typical in ancient fiction. We render the Greek maritime vocabulary with modern equivalents where possible. The number 276 (v. 37) is large for an ancient merchant vessel but not impossible for the grain ships of the Alexandria-Rome trade.

Connections: The storm narrative echoes Jonah 1 — another prophet on a ship in a storm, where the cargo is thrown overboard and divine intervention saves lives. Paul's breaking of bread (v. 35) echoes the Last Supper and the Emmaus road meal (Luke 24:30). The promise 'not a hair of your head will perish' (v. 34) repeats Jesus' words in Luke 21:18. The entire voyage narrative demonstrates the Lord's promise in 23:11 ('you must testify in Rome') being fulfilled through and despite natural catastrophe.

¹When it was decided that we should sail to Italy, they handed Paul and some other prisoners over to a centurion named Julius, of the Augustan Cohort. ²We boarded a ship from Adramyttium that was about to sail to ports along the coast of Asia, and we put to sea. Aristarchus, a Macedonian from Thessalonica, was with us. ³The next day we put in at Sidon, and Julius treated Paul kindly and allowed him to go to his friends and receive their care. ⁴From there we put to sea and sailed under the lee of Cyprus, because the winds were against us. ⁵After sailing across the open sea along Cilicia and Pamphylia, we came to Myra in Lycia. ⁶There the centurion found a ship of Alexandria sailing for Italy and put us aboard it. ⁷We sailed slowly for a number of days and arrived with difficulty off Cnidus. Since the wind did not allow us to go farther, we sailed under the lee of Crete off Salmone. ⁸Coasting along with difficulty, we came to a place called Fair Havens, near the city of Lasea. ⁹Since much time had been lost and the voyage was now dangerous because even the Fast had already gone by, Paul advised them, ¹⁰Stated to them, Sirs, I perceive that this voyage will be with hurt and greatly damage, not only of the lading and ship, but also of our lives. ¹¹But the centurion was more persuaded by the pilot and the ship's owner than by what Paul said. ¹²Since the harbor was not suitable for wintering, the majority decided to put to sea from there, hoping somehow to reach Phoenix, a harbor of Crete facing both southwest and northwest, and spend the winter there. ¹³When a gentle south wind began to blow, thinking they had achieved their purpose, they weighed anchor and sailed along the coast of Crete, close to shore. ¹⁴But before long a violent wind called the Euraquilo rushed down from the island. ¹⁵When the ship was caught and could not face the wind, we gave way to it and were driven along. ¹⁶Running under the lee of a small island called Cauda, we managed with difficulty to get the ship's boat under control. ¹⁷After hoisting it aboard, they used supports to undergird the ship. Then, fearing that they would run aground on the Syrtis, they lowered the sea anchor and so were driven along. ¹⁸Since we were being violently battered by the storm, the next day they began to throw the cargo overboard. ¹⁹On the third day they threw the ship's tackle overboard with their own hands. ²⁰When neither sun nor stars appeared for many days, and no small storm continued to rage, all hope of our being saved was at last abandoned. ²¹Since they had been without food for a long time, Paul stood up among them and said, "Men, you should have listened to me and not set sail from Crete. Then you would have avoided this damage and loss. ²²But now I urge you to take heart, for there will be no loss of life among you, but only of the ship. ²³For this very night an angel of the God to whom I belong and whom I serve stood before me ²⁴Declaring, Fear not, Paul. You must be brought prior to Caesar — and, lo, God has given you all them that sail with you. ²⁵So take heart, men, for I have faith in God that it will be exactly as I have been told. ²⁶But we must run aground on some island." ²⁷When the fourteenth night had come, as we were drifting across the Adriatic Sea, about midnight the sailors suspected that they were nearing land. ²⁸They took soundings and found twenty fathoms. A little farther on they took soundings again and found fifteen fathoms. ²⁹Fearing that we might run aground on rocks, they dropped four anchors from the stern and prayed for daylight. ³⁰When the sailors tried to escape from the ship and had lowered the boat into the sea, pretending that they were going to lay out anchors from the bow, ³¹Paul said to the centurion and the soldiers, "Unless these men stay in the ship, you cannot be saved." ³²Then the soldiers cut the ropes of the boat and let it drift away. ³³As day was about to dawn, Paul urged them all to take some food, saying, "Today is the fourteenth day that you have continued in suspense and without food, having eaten nothing. ³⁴Therefore I urge you to take some food, for this is for your preservation. For not a hair will perish from the head of any of you." ³⁵After saying this, he took bread, gave thanks to God in the presence of all, and after breaking it he began to eat. ³⁶Then they all were encouraged and ate some food themselves. ³⁷We were in all 276 persons on the ship. ³⁸After they had eaten their fill, they lightened the ship by throwing the wheat into the sea. ³⁹When day came, they did not recognize the land, but they noticed a bay with a beach, and they planned to run the ship ashore there if they could. ⁴⁰So they cast off the anchors, leaving them in the sea. At the same time they untied the ropes that held the steering oars, hoisted the foresail to the wind, and made for the beach. ⁴¹But striking a sandbar where two seas met, they ran the vessel aground. The bow stuck fast and remained immovable, but the stern was being broken up by the force of the waves. ⁴²The soldiers' plan was to kill the prisoners, so that none of them could swim away and escape. ⁴³But the centurion, wanting to save Paul, kept them from carrying out their plan. He ordered those who could swim to jump overboard first and make for land, ⁴⁴Indeed, the rest, some on boards, and some on broken pieces of the ship. And so it happened that, that they escaped all safe to land.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The 'we' narrative resumes, indicating the author's presence on the voyage. The 'Augustan Cohort' (speires Sebastes) was likely a cohort honorifically named after Augustus, possibly the cohorts I Augusta attested in inscriptions from Syria. Julius's later courteous treatment of Paul (v. 3) suggests he recognized Paul's social status as a Roman citizen.
2. Adramyttium was a port city in Mysia (northwest Asia Minor). This was a coastal vessel, not the ship that would cross the open sea to Italy. Aristarchus was one of Paul's traveling companions (cf. 19:29, 20:4), here accompanying Paul voluntarily on his journey as a prisoner.

3. Julius's 'kind treatment' (philanthropos, literally 'with love of humanity') of Paul reflects the privileges due a Roman citizen even in custody. Allowing Paul to visit friends in Sidon shows considerable trust. The word epimeleias ('care, attention') suggests Paul received provisions or medical attention from the Christian community there.
4. Sailing 'under the lee of Cyprus' (hypepleusmen ten Kypron) means they passed north and east of the island, using it as a windbreak against the prevailing westerly winds. This is the opposite direction from the outbound route (21:3), demonstrating the author's awareness of seasonal wind patterns.
5. The route along the southern coast of Asia Minor, using the coastal countercurrent to make headway against westerly winds, is confirmed by ancient sailing manuals. Myra was a major port on the Lycian coast and a regular transfer point for the Egyptian grain fleet sailing to Rome.
6. The Alexandrian grain ship was part of the fleet that supplied Rome with Egyptian wheat — a critical supply line that the emperor monitored closely. These were the largest merchant vessels in the ancient Mediterranean, capable of carrying several hundred passengers plus cargo. The centurion had authority to requisition passage for his prisoner detail.
7. The slow progress and difficulty reflect the prevailing northwesterly winds of late summer in the Aegean. Cnidus is at the southwestern tip of Asia Minor. Unable to round it, the ship turned south to shelter behind Crete. Salmone (Cape Sidero) is the northeastern point of Crete.
8. Fair Havens (Kalous Limenas) is an identifiable bay on the south coast of Crete, still bearing the same name. It provided limited shelter but was not a suitable harbor for wintering. Lasea has been identified with ruins about five miles east of Fair Havens.
9. The 'Fast' (ten nesteian) is the Day of Atonement (Yom Kippur), which falls in September or October. After this date, Mediterranean sailing was considered hazardous; navigation typically ceased from November to March. The reference provides a chronological anchor: they are already in the danger period.
10. Paul's warning is presented as practical observation (theoro, 'I can see, I perceive') rather than explicit prophecy, though it will prove accurate. The word hybreos ('damage, injury, violence') refers to damage from the storm. Paul, as an experienced traveler who had been shipwrecked before (2 Corinthians 11:25), had practical grounds for his assessment.
11. The centurion makes the rational decision to trust the professional sailors — the kubernetes ('helmsman, pilot') and the nauklerous ('ship owner, captain') — over a prisoner. The narrative creates dramatic irony: the professionals are wrong, and the prisoner speaks truth.
12. Phoenix (modern Loutro or possibly Phineka) was a better harbor on Crete's south coast, about 40 miles west of Fair Havens. The description of its orientation — 'facing southwest and northwest' (kata liba kai kata choron) — matches a harbor open to the west but sheltered from northerly storms. The decision was reasonable but fatally timed.
13. The gentle south wind (notou) seemed to confirm the decision to sail — it was exactly the wind needed to coast westward along Crete's south shore. The word doxantes ('thinking, supposing') signals that their confidence was premature.
14. The Euraquilo (Eurakulon in SBLGNT, a hybrid of Greek euros 'east wind' and Latin aquilo 'north wind') was a fierce northeaster — exactly the worst wind possible for a ship trying to coast westward along Crete's south shore. The word typhonikos ('typhoon-like, hurricane-force') indicates extreme violence. The storm hit suddenly, coming 'down from' the island — off the mountains of Crete.
15. The verb antophthalmein (literally 'to look against, to face into') is a vivid nautical metaphor — the ship could not 'look the wind in the eye.' The decision to 'give way' (epidontes, literally 'giving over') means they stopped trying to sail and let the storm drive them. This is the beginning of fourteen days of helpless drifting.
16. Cauda (modern Gavdos) is a small island about 23 miles south of Crete. Its brief windbreak gave the crew a chance to secure the ship's boat (skaphes) — the small dinghy towed behind or alongside. In rough seas, such boats became waterlogged and could damage the hull or capsize.
17. Undergirding (hypozyonnytes) involved passing ropes or cables under and around the hull to keep the planking from separating — a well-attested ancient emergency procedure called 'frapping.' The Syrtis was the feared sandbank region off the North African coast (modern Libya), a graveyard of ships. The lowered 'gear' (skeuos) was likely a sea anchor or drogue deployed to slow the drift.
18. Jettisoning cargo (ekbolen epoiounto) was a desperate measure that sacrificed valuable goods to reduce weight and raise the hull. For a grain ship, this meant dumping hundreds of tons of wheat — a significant financial loss and politically sensitive given the grain supply's importance to Rome. The parallel with Jonah 1:5 is striking.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Jonah 1:5 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. The 'ship's tackle' (ten skeuen tou ploiou) likely included spare rigging, heavy yards, and non-essential equipment. The phrase 'with their own hands' (autocheries) emphasizes the desperation — passengers and crew together were heaving equipment overboard, not just the professional sailors.
20. Without sun or stars, ancient navigation was impossible — they had no compass or instruments. The litotes 'no small storm' (cheimonos ouk oligou) is characteristic Lukan understatement for a catastrophic tempest. The loss of 'all hope' (elpis pasa) sets the stage for Paul's intervention — when human hope ends, divine assurance begins.
21. The 'long abstinence from food' (polles asitias) reflects both the difficulty of cooking in storm conditions and the seasickness and despair of the passengers. Paul's 'I told you so' (edei peitharchesantas moi) is not petulance but establishment of credibility for the prophetic message that follows.

22. Paul transitions from rebuke to encouragement. The promise is specific and extraordinary: every person will survive, though the ship will be lost. This corrects his earlier warning (v. 10), which predicted loss of life — divine revelation has updated the situation.
23. Paul identifies himself by his fundamental identity: he belongs to God and serves God. The angel's visit parallels the Lord's appearance to Paul in 23:11. Before a pagan crew, Paul speaks of 'the God' (tou theou) rather than using Jewish terminology — adapting his language to his audience while maintaining theological substance.
24. The divine dei ('you must') reaffirms the necessity established in 23:11. The phrase 'God has graciously given you' (kecharistai soi ho theos) uses the verb charizomai — Paul's fellow passengers are saved as a gift of grace on account of Paul's presence. The 276 people on the ship survive because of one prisoner's divine calling.
25. Paul's personal declaration — 'I have faith in God' (pisteuo gar to theo) — is the foundation of his confidence. His faith is not in favorable winds or skilled sailors but in the character of God who has spoken. The phrase 'exactly as I have been told' (katho hon tropon lelaletai moi) claims precise fulfillment.
26. Paul adds a specific prediction: the shipwreck will occur on an island. The divine dei ('we must') again indicates necessity. This prediction will prove accurate when they reach Malta (28:1).
27. Fourteen days of drifting places the ship approximately in the central Mediterranean. The 'Adriatic' (Adria) in ancient usage covered a much larger area than the modern Adriatic Sea — it included the waters between Crete, Italy, and North Africa. The sailors' detection of land — probably hearing breakers or noticing a change in wave patterns — demonstrates professional seamanship even in crisis.
28. Sounding (bolisantes, from bolis, 'a lead weight') involved dropping a weighted line to measure depth. Twenty fathoms (about 120 feet) decreasing to fifteen fathoms (about 90 feet) confirms they were approaching a shelving seabed — consistent with the approach to Malta from the east. This detail is so precise that it has been verified against modern charts of St. Paul's Bay, Malta.
29. Anchoring from the stern (ek prymnes) rather than the bow was a deliberate tactic — it kept the ship oriented toward the shore so they could beach it at dawn. Four anchors provided maximum holding power. The phrase 'prayed for daylight' (euchonto hemeran genesthai) captures the desperate waiting of that final night.
30. The sailors' attempt to abandon ship under a plausible pretext — laying bow anchors — is a realistic detail. Professional sailors knew their best chance of survival was in the small boat rather than on the disintegrating ship. But if the sailors escaped, the remaining passengers and soldiers would have no one capable of beaching the vessel.
31. Paul alerts the military, not the captain — recognizing where actual authority lies. His warning that survival requires the sailors' presence balances divine promise with human agency: God has promised to save everyone, but that promise works through the sailors' skill in beaching the ship.
32. The soldiers' drastic action — cutting away the only lifeboat — eliminates the escape route but also ensures the sailors must stay and help. It demonstrates the centurion's trust in Paul over the sailors. The loss of the boat means everyone's fate is bound together.
33. Paul takes practical leadership as dawn approaches. The 'fourteen days without food' likely means fourteen days of irregular, inadequate eating rather than absolute fasting — in extreme storm conditions, preparing and keeping down food would have been nearly impossible.
34. Paul's assurance that 'not a hair will perish from your head' (oudenos gar hymon thrix apo tes kephales apoleitai) quotes Jesus' words from Luke 21:18. The connection is deliberate — the same God who protects his people through tribulation in the end times protects them through a storm at sea. The word soterias ('preservation, salvation') functions on two levels: physical survival and deeper deliverance.
35. The sequence — taking bread, giving thanks, breaking it — echoes the eucharistic actions of Jesus at the Last Supper (Luke 22:19) and the Emmaus meal (Luke 24:30). Whether Paul intended a formal Eucharist or simply a Jewish meal blessing before a mixed pagan-Jewish audience is debated. Either way, Luke's language evokes eucharistic resonance for his readers. Paul thanks God publicly (enopion panton) before a crew that mostly worships other gods — a bold act of witness.
36. Paul's leadership has transformed the mood of the entire ship — from despair (v. 20) to courage (euthumoi, 'cheerful, encouraged'). The prisoner has become the moral authority.
37. The specific number — 276 (diakosiai hebdomekonta hex) — has the ring of an eyewitness detail. Large Alexandrian grain ships could carry several hundred passengers plus crew. Josephus reports traveling to Rome on a ship with 600 aboard (Life 15). The number also recalls the total who survived, fulfilling the angel's promise (v. 24).
38. The wheat (siton) — the primary cargo of the Alexandrian grain ship — is now dumped to lighten the vessel for beaching. This final jettisoning represents the total loss of the ship's commercial value. Having eaten, the passengers have strength for the ordeal ahead.
39. The sailors did not recognize the coast — indicating they were off normal shipping routes. The 'bay with a beach' (kolpon echonta aigialon) has been identified with St. Paul's Bay on Malta's northeast coast, which has a sandy beach within a bay, exactly matching this description.
40. The technical sequence is precise: (1) slip the anchor cables (faster than hauling them up); (2) free the steering oars (which had been lashed during the storm); (3) raise the foresail (artemon, a small sail at the bow) to provide steerage. Each action is the correct seamanship procedure for beaching a disabled vessel. The detail confirms the narrator's nautical competence.

41. A 'place where two seas met' (topon dithalassonon) describes a shoal or sandbar between two bodies of water — consistent with the small island (Salmonetta) in St. Paul's Bay where currents from two directions converge. The ship's bow wedged into the sand while the stern, exposed to the surf, began to disintegrate. The image is vivid and terrifying.
42. Under Roman military law, a soldier who lost a prisoner could face the prisoner's sentence, including death (cf. 12:19, 16:27). The soldiers' plan to execute the prisoners was a rational, self-preserving calculation — brutal but legally grounded. The prisoners' lives depended entirely on the centurion's next decision.
43. The centurion Julius's desire to save Paul (diasosai ton Paulon) overrides military protocol and saves all the prisoners' lives. Paul's influence has grown from that of a mere prisoner to a figure the centurion is willing to take career risks to protect. The evacuation is orderly: swimmers first, then the rest.
44. The final sentence — 'all were brought safely to land' (pantas diasothennai epi ten gen) — fulfills the angel's promise (v. 24) and Paul's assurance (v. 22). All 276 persons survive. The verb diasothennai ('were brought safely through') carries its full theological weight: God's deliverance is complete. The wreckage that kills the ship saves the passengers — a fitting image for the narrative theology of Acts, where destruction and preservation work together in the divine plan.

Summary: Acts 28 is the final chapter of Luke's two-volume work, bringing Paul's journey to its destination: Rome. After the shipwreck, the survivors discover they have landed on Malta. Paul is bitten by a viper but suffers no harm, astonishing the locals. He heals the father of the island's chief official Publius and many other islanders. After three months, the company sails to Syracuse, Rhegium, and Puteoli, then travels overland to Rome, where Christians come out to meet Paul along the Appian Way. In Rome, Paul lives under house arrest for two years, freely receiving visitors and proclaiming the kingdom of God. His final recorded act is a meeting with Jewish leaders in which he quotes Isaiah 6:9-10 — the prophecy of hearing without understanding — and declares that the salvation of God has been sent to the Gentiles. The book ends with Paul preaching 'without hindrance.'

What Makes This Remarkable: The viper episode (vv. 3-6) inverts the expected pattern: the Maltese first think Paul is a murderer receiving divine justice, then decide he is a god — both assessments are wrong, but Luke lets the scene speak for itself. The final scene in Rome (vv. 17-31) is the theological conclusion not just of Acts but of Luke's entire project. Paul's quotation of Isaiah 6:9-10 — the same passage Jesus quoted in Luke 8:10 and the same one used in all four Gospels — serves as the prophetic explanation for Israel's partial rejection of the gospel. The final word of Acts, akolutos ('without hindrance'), is programmatic: despite chains, trials, storms, and snakebite, nothing ultimately hinders the proclamation of the gospel.

Translation Friction: The ending of Acts has puzzled readers for centuries. Luke does not narrate the outcome of Paul's trial, his possible release, further travels, or death. Whether this indicates Luke wrote before the trial's conclusion, chose to end on a theological note rather than a biographical one, or had other reasons remains debated. We render the text as given without speculating about what follows. The Isaiah quotation (vv. 26-27) raises the perennial question of whether Israel's unbelief is divinely caused or divinely permitted — Paul's use of the passage emphasizes the prophetic pattern rather than resolving the theological tension.

Connections: The Malta events connect to Jesus' promise in Mark 16:18 (handling serpents and healing the sick). Paul's arrival in Rome fulfills the divine dei of 19:21, 23:11, and 27:24. The Isaiah 6 quotation creates an inclusio with Jesus' use of the same passage in Luke 8:10. The phrase 'the kingdom of God' in the final verse connects to the opening question of Acts 1:3, 6 — the book begins and ends with the kingdom. The declaration that salvation goes 'to the Gentiles' (v. 28) echoes the programmatic statement of 13:46-47 and fulfills the Isaianic servant's mission to be 'a light for the nations' (Isaiah 49:6, quoted in Acts 13:47).

¹After we were brought safely through, we then learned that the island was called Malta. ²The native people showed us extraordinary kindness. They kindled a fire and welcomed us all, because it had begun to rain and it was cold. ³When Paul had gathered a bundle of sticks and put them on the fire, a viper came out because of the heat and fastened itself on his hand. ⁴When the native people saw the creature hanging from his hand, they said to one another, "No doubt this man is a murderer. Though he was saved from the sea, Justice has not allowed him to live." ⁵He, however, shook the creature off into the fire and suffered no harm. ⁶They were expecting him to swell up or suddenly fall down dead. But after they waited a long time and saw nothing unusual happen to him, they changed their minds and said he was a god. ⁷Now in the vicinity of that place were lands belonging to the leading man of the island, named Publius. He welcomed us and hosted us hospitably for three days. ⁸It happened that the father of Publius was lying sick with fever and dysentery. Paul visited him, and after praying and laying his hands on him, he healed him. ⁹After this happened, the rest of the people on the island who had diseases also came and were healed. ¹⁰They also honored us with many gifts, and when we were ready to sail, they supplied us with everything we needed. ¹¹After three months we set sail in a ship of Alexandria that had wintered at the island, with the Twin Brothers as its figurehead. ¹²Putting in at Syracuse, we stayed there for three days. ¹³From there we made a circuit and arrived at Rhegium. After one day a south wind sprang up, and on the second day we came to Puteoli. ¹⁴There we found brothers and were invited to stay with them for seven days. And so we came to Rome. ¹⁵The brothers there, when they heard about us, came as far as the Forum of Appius and Three Taverns to meet us. On seeing them, Paul thanked God and took courage. ¹⁶When we came into Rome, Paul was allowed to stay by himself, with the soldier who was guarding him. ¹⁷After three days he called together the local leaders of the Jews. When they had gathered, he said to them, "Brothers, though I had done nothing against our people or the customs of our fathers, I was delivered as a prisoner from Jerusalem into the hands of the Romans. ¹⁸When they had examined me, they wanted to release me because there was no reason for the death penalty in my case. ¹⁹But since the Jews objected, I was compelled to appeal to Caesar — not that I had any charge to bring against my nation. ²⁰For this reason, then, I have asked to see you and speak with you, since it is because of the hope of Israel that I am wearing this chain." ²¹They said to him, "We have received no letters from Judea about you, and none of the brothers coming here has reported or spoken anything bad about you. ²²But we would like to hear from you what your views are, for regarding this sect, we know that everywhere it is spoken against." ²³When they had set a day for him, they came to him at his lodging in greater numbers. From morning until evening he explained to them, testifying to the kingdom of God and trying to persuade them about Jesus from both the Law of Moses and the Prophets. ²⁴Some were convinced by what he said, but others refused to believe. ²⁵Disagreeing among themselves, they began to leave. Paul made one final statement: "The Holy Spirit was right in saying to your fathers through Isaiah the prophet: ²⁶'Go to this people and say: You will indeed hear but never understand, and you will indeed see but never perceive. ²⁷For this people's heart has grown dull, and with their ears they can barely hear, and their eyes they have closed; lest they should see with their eyes and hear with their ears and understand with their heart and turn, and I would heal them.' ²⁸Therefore let it be known to you that this salvation of God has been sent to the Gentiles; they will listen." ³⁰He lived there two whole years at his own expense, and welcomed all who came to him, ³¹Indeed, preaching God's reign, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The 'we' narration confirms the author's continued presence. The word diasothentes ('brought safely through') echoes 27:44, maintaining the salvation vocabulary. Malta (Melite) was a significant island with a Phoenician heritage and Roman administration. The identification with modern Malta (rather than the Adriatic island Mljet) is supported by the nautical details of chapter 27.
2. The word barbaroi ('barbarians, native people') does not imply savagery — it simply means non-Greek speakers. Malta's population spoke a Punic dialect. The litotes 'no ordinary kindness' (ou ten tuchousan philanthropian) means 'extraordinary, exceptional.' The practical hospitality — fire, shelter from rain and cold — for 276 strangers is remarkable.
3. Paul participates in the practical work alongside everyone else — gathering firewood is not beneath him. The echidna ('viper') emerged from the bundled sticks, driven out by the fire's heat. The verb kathepse ('fastened on, seized') indicates the snake attached itself to his hand, whether by biting or coiling. No venomous vipers are found on Malta today, but this may reflect habitat changes over two millennia.
4. The Maltese interpret the snakebite through the lens of divine retribution: a man who survived the sea must be a murderer whom Dike (the Greek goddess of Justice) is pursuing. This folk theology — that misfortune indicates guilt — is the same logic Job's friends used and that Jesus challenged in Luke 13:1-5 and John 9:2-3.
5. Paul's calm reaction — simply shaking the viper into the fire — contrasts with the bystanders' alarm. The statement 'suffered no harm' (epathen ouden kakon) is emphatic. This recalls Jesus' promise to his disciples about authority over serpents (Luke 10:19) and the longer ending of Mark (16:18).

6. The crowd swings from one extreme ('murderer') to the other ('a god') — the same pattern seen at Lystra (14:11-18). Luke records both reactions without correction, letting the irony stand. The expected symptoms — swelling (pimprasthai) or sudden death — are medically accurate for a viper bite. Paul is neither a murderer nor a god, but the scene demonstrates divine protection.
7. The title 'leading man' (proto, literally 'first man') of the island has been confirmed by inscriptions from Malta using the Latin equivalent princeps. Publius is a Roman praenomen, suggesting Roman administration. His hospitality of 'three days' for a large group would have been a significant expense.
8. The medical description — 'fever and dysentery' (pyretois kai dysenterio) — uses precise clinical terminology that reflects Luke's medical vocabulary (cf. Colossians 4:14). The plural 'fevers' (pyretois) may indicate recurrent bouts, consistent with brucellosis (Malta fever), which was endemic on the island. Paul heals through prayer and laying on of hands — the same method used by Jesus and the apostles.
9. The healing ministry extends beyond Publius's father to the broader island population. Luke uses two different verbs: iasato ('healed,' v. 8, often used for miraculous healing) and etherapeuonto ('were treated/healed,' here, which could also encompass medical care). The imperfect tense suggests ongoing ministry during their three-month stay.
10. The Maltese respond with gratitude — 'many honors' (pollais timais) likely included both monetary gifts and provisions. The phrase 'everything we needed' (ta pros tas chreias) covers supplies for the remaining voyage to Italy. The shipwrecked travelers, who arrived with nothing, leave fully provisioned.
11. The three months spent on Malta covered the winter sailing closure (roughly November to February). The new ship is another Alexandrian grain vessel, identified by its figurehead: the Dioskouroi (Castor and Pollux), the twin sons of Zeus who were patron gods of sailors. The detail about the figurehead is a characteristically precise eyewitness observation.
12. Syracuse was the chief city of Sicily and a major port on the route from the eastern Mediterranean to Italy. The three-day stop likely awaited favorable winds for the crossing of the Strait of Messina.
13. The verb perielontes ('making a circuit, tacking') suggests they had to sail indirectly due to wind conditions. Rhegium (modern Reggio di Calabria) is at the toe of Italy. The south wind carried them swiftly up the coast to Puteoli (modern Pozzuoli), near Naples — the main port for the Alexandrian grain fleet and the gateway to Rome.
14. The existence of a Christian community at Puteoli — one of Italy's most important ports — confirms the early spread of Christianity through trade routes. The centurion's willingness to allow a seven-day stay (another indication of Paul's privileged treatment) suggests Julius was in no hurry. The sentence 'And so we came to Rome' (kai houtos eis ten Rhomen elthamen) is quietly monumental — the journey promised in 19:21 and guaranteed in 23:11 is now accomplished.
15. Two groups of Roman Christians come out to meet Paul at different points along the Via Appia (Appian Way): the Forum of Appius (about 43 miles from Rome) and Three Taverns (about 33 miles from Rome). This reception — going out to meet an arriving dignitary — was a formal act of honor called an apantesis. Paul's response — thanksgiving and courage (tharsos, the same word the Lord used in 23:11) — shows his emotional state after years of imprisonment and a harrowing voyage.
16. Paul's arrangement — private quarters with a single guard (custodia militaris) — was the lightest form of Roman custody. The SBLGNT omits the reference to the centurion delivering prisoners to the captain of the guard (found in the Textus Receptus). Paul's ability to receive visitors (vv. 17, 23, 30) confirms this was house arrest, not imprisonment.
17. Paul follows his consistent pattern: he approaches the Jewish community first (cf. 13:5, 14, 17:1-2, 18:4). The three-day interval allowed him to settle in. His address to the Roman Jewish leaders summarizes his case, maintaining that he committed no offense against the Jewish people or ancestral customs — the same defense given throughout Acts 22-26.
18. Paul summarizes the Roman officials' repeated verdict of innocence (cf. 23:29, 25:25, 26:31-32). The phrase 'no reason for the death penalty' (medemian aitian thanatou) is the consistent Roman finding throughout Paul's trials.
19. Paul emphasizes that his appeal to Caesar was defensive, not offensive — he is not counter-suing the Jewish community. The phrase 'not that I had any charge against my nation' (ouch hos tou ethnous mou echon ti kategorein) is a diplomatic gesture toward the Roman Jewish community.
20. Paul's climactic statement identifies his imprisonment with 'the hope of Israel' (tes elpidos tou Israel) — the same phrase used in 26:6-7. The singular 'chain' (halysin) refers to the chain binding him to his guard. Paul's point is theological: he is in chains not despite being a faithful Jew but because of Israel's own hope — the resurrection of the dead and the coming of the Messiah.
21. The Roman Jewish leaders claim ignorance of Paul's case — no letters from Jerusalem, no visiting Jews with negative reports. Whether this is entirely accurate or diplomatically cautious is unclear. The winter sailing closure during which Paul traveled may have prevented advance communication.
22. The Jewish leaders' response is notable: they want to hear Paul's views directly. Their characterization of Christianity as a 'sect' (haireseos) that is 'everywhere spoken against' (pantachou antilegetai) reflects the mixed reception the early church received. The language is neutral to skeptical — they are open to hearing but aware of the controversy.
23. This extended session — 'from morning until evening' (apo proi heos hesperas) — demonstrates the depth and seriousness of the engagement. Paul's method is scriptural persuasion: he argues from the Law and the Prophets that Jesus is the fulfillment of Israel's hope. The combination of 'the kingdom of God' and 'Jesus' summarizes the content of all apostolic preaching in Acts.

- 24. The response is divided — exactly the pattern that has characterized Jewish responses to the gospel throughout Acts. Some are 'convinced' (epeithonto); others 'refused to believe' (epistoun). This divided response triggers Paul's final prophetic declaration.
- 25. The word asymphonoi ('disagreeing, not in harmony') describes the divided state in which the group departs. Paul's 'one word' (hrema hen) is actually an extended quotation of Isaiah 6:9-10 — the prophetic passage most frequently cited in the New Testament to explain Israel's unbelief (cf. Matthew 13:14-15, Mark 4:12, Luke 8:10, John 12:40, Romans 11:8).
- 25. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 6:9-10 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
- 26. Paul quotes Isaiah 6:9-10 from the Septuagint. The passage is from Isaiah's commissioning — God tells the prophet that his message will not be received. The Hebrew intensifying construction ('hearing you will hear') emphasizes the completeness of the failure to comprehend. Luke places this quotation at the very end of his two-volume work, giving it climactic theological significance.
- 26. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 6:9-10. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
- 27. The threefold diagnosis — dull heart, heavy ears, closed eyes — describes a progressive hardening against God's message. The sequence reverses in the potential cure: seeing, hearing, understanding, turning. The verb iasomi ('I would heal') holds out the possibility of restoration — the door is not absolutely shut. In Isaiah's original context, this was a temporary condition, not a permanent sentence.
- 27. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 6:9-10. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
- 28. Paul's declaration — 'this salvation of God has been sent to the Gentiles' (tois ethnesin apostale touto to soterion tou theou) — echoes his earlier turning points at Antioch (13:46) and Corinth (18:6). The phrase 'they will listen' (autoi kai akousontai) is both a prediction and a contrast with Israel's failure to hear (v. 27). This is the theological climax of Acts: the gospel, offered first to Israel, now goes freely to the nations.
- 29. This verse is not present in the SBLGNT critical text. It appears in the Textus Receptus and thus in the KJV, but the earliest and best manuscripts lack it. We follow the critical text and note the verse's absence.
- 30. The 'two whole years' (dietian holon) specifies Paul's house arrest. The phrase 'at his own expense' (en idio misthomati) indicates Paul rented his quarters — possibly funded by the churches or by his own work. The open-door policy — 'welcoming all who came' (apedecheto pantas) — shows unrestricted access despite his custody.
- 31. The final verse of Acts is its theological summary. Paul's message has two components — 'the kingdom of God' and 'the Lord Jesus Christ' — encompassing the entire apostolic proclamation. The phrase 'with all boldness' (meta pases parresias) echoes the prayer of Acts 4:29. The final word, akolytos ('without hindrance, unhindered'), is the last word Luke writes. Despite imprisonment, opposition, storms, and snakebite, nothing stops the advance of the gospel. The word is adverbial, modifying everything — Paul preaches, teaches, and lives unhindered. It is a quietly triumphant ending: the prisoner is free, and the Word of God is unchained.

Romans

Summary: Romans 1 opens with Paul's self-introduction as an apostle set apart for the gospel, expressing his longing to visit the Roman believers. He then states the letter's thesis: the gospel is God's power for salvation to everyone who believes, because in it God's righteousness is revealed from faith to faith (1:16-17). The chapter then turns to the universal human problem — God's wrath is revealed against all ungodliness and unrighteousness, because what can be known about God is evident from creation, yet humanity suppressed this truth, exchanged God's glory for idols, and was given over to degrading passions and a debased mind.

What Makes This Remarkable: Verses 16-17 function as the thesis statement for the entire letter and arguably for Pauline theology as a whole. The phrase 'from faith to faith' (ek pisteos eis pistin) has generated centuries of interpretation. Paul's argument in 1:18-32 is not merely moral condemnation but a carefully structured case that all humanity stands under divine judgment — a setup for the surprising turn in chapter 2 where Paul indicts the moral judge as well. The vice list in verses 29-31 follows Greco-Roman rhetorical conventions but is grounded in the theological logic of idolatry producing moral disorder.

Translation Friction: The Greek dikaiosyne theou ('righteousness of God') in verse 17 is notoriously complex — it can mean God's own righteousness, the righteousness God gives, or the righteousness that comes from God. We render it as 'the righteousness of God' and note the ambiguity. Verses 26-27 address same-sex relations in language that has been intensely debated; we render the Greek as given without softening or amplifying. The phrase 'para physin' ('contrary to nature') reflects Paul's first-century understanding of the created order.

Connections: The Habakkuk 2:4 quotation in verse 17 ('the righteous shall live by faith') is foundational to Reformation theology and connects to Galatians 3:11 and Hebrews 10:38. The creation theology of 1:19-20 echoes Psalm 19 and Wisdom of Solomon 13. The pattern of 'God gave them over' (paredoken, vv. 24, 26, 28) structures the wrath section and will be contrasted with God 'giving over' his Son in 8:32.

¹Paul, a servant of Christ Jesus, called as an apostle, set apart for the gospel of God — ²(Which he had promised afore by his God's spokespersons in the sacred scriptures.). ³Concerning his Son Jesus Christ our Lord, which was appointed of the seed of David in keeping with to the flesh;. ⁴Declared to be the Descendant of God with authority, according to the inner life of holiness, by the resurrection from the no longer alive:. ⁵By whom we have received grace and apostleship, for obedience to the faith in the midst of all nations, for his name:.⁶In the midst of whom are you also the called of Jesus Christ:.⁷To all those in Rome who are loved by God and called as saints: Grace to you and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.⁸ First, I thank my God through Jesus Christ for all of you, because your faith is proclaimed throughout the whole world.⁹For God, whom I serve in my spirit in the gospel of his Son, is my witness that without ceasing I mention you¹⁰I constantly pray, asking that somehow, by God's will, I may finally succeed in coming to visit you.¹¹For I long to see you, so that I may share with you some spiritual gift to strengthen you —¹²What I mean is that we will encourage each other through the faith we share — both yours and mine.¹³I do not want you to be unaware, brothers and sisters, that I often planned to come to you — but have been prevented until now — so that I might have some fruit among you as well, just as among the rest of the nations.¹⁴I am under obligation both to Greeks and to non-Greeks, both to the wise and to the foolish.¹⁵So, for my part, I am eager to proclaim the gospel to you who are in Rome as well.¹⁶For I am not ashamed of the gospel, for it is the power of God for salvation to everyone who believes — to the Jew first and also to the Greek.¹⁷For in it the righteousness of God is revealed from faith to faith, as it is written: "The righteous one will live by faith."¹⁸For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of people who suppress the truth by their unrighteousness,¹⁹On account of the fact that that which may be known of God is manifest in them. For God has shewed it to them.²⁰For his invisible attributes — his eternal power and divine nature — have been clearly seen since the creation of the world, being understood through what has been made, so that they are without excuse.²¹For although they knew God, they did not honor him as God or give him thanks, but became futile in their thinking, and their senseless hearts were darkened.²²Claiming to be wise, they became fools,²³Changed the splendor of the uncorruptible God into an image appointed like to corruptible man, and to birds, and fourfooted beasts, and creeping matters.²⁴Therefore God gave them over in the desires of their hearts to impurity, so that their bodies would be dishonored among them.²⁵They exchanged the truth about God for a lie, and worshiped and served the creature rather than the Creator, who is blessed forever. Amen.²⁶For this reason God gave them over to dishonorable passions. For their females exchanged natural sexual relations for those contrary to nature,²⁷Indeed, likewise also the men, leaving the natural use of the woman, burned in their lust one toward another. Men with men working that which is unseemly, and receiving in themselves that recompense of their error which was meet.²⁸And since they did not see fit to acknowledge God, God gave them over to a debased mind, to do what is not proper —²⁹Being overflowing with all unrighteousness, sexual immorality, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness. Full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity. Whisperers,.³⁰Backbiters, haters of God, spiteful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil matters, rebellious to parents,.³¹Without discernment, covenantbreakers, without normal affection, relentless, unmerciful:.³²Although they know God's righteous decree — that those who practice such things deserve death — they not only do them but also approve of those who practice them.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The Greek doulos means 'slave' or 'bondservant,' not merely 'servant.' It carries connotations of total ownership and devotion. We render 'servant' to maintain the dignity of the self-designation while noting the stronger Greek sense. The SBLGNT reads 'Christ Jesus' (Christou Iesou) rather than the KJV's 'Jesus Christ' — the order varies in manuscripts.
2. The verb proepengeilato ('promised beforehand') is a compound emphasizing prior commitment. Paul establishes from the outset that the gospel is not an innovation but the fulfillment of Israel's scriptural hope. The phrase 'holy Scriptures' (graphais hagiáis) refers to what Christians call the Old Testament.
3. The phrase kata sarka ('according to the flesh') limits the Davidic descent to the human, physical dimension — setting up the contrast with kata pneuma ('according to the Spirit') in verse 4. The Greek genomenou ('having become, born') from ginomai emphasizes the incarnation: the Son entered into human lineage.
4. The verb horisthentos ('declared, appointed, designated') does not mean Jesus became the Son at the resurrection but that the resurrection publicly demonstrated and vindicated his identity. The phrase pneuma hagiosynes ('Spirit of holiness') is unusual — it may be a Semitic idiom for the Holy Spirit or may refer to Christ's own spirit of holiness. We capitalize 'Spirit' as the most likely referent is the Holy Spirit's role in resurrection.

5. The phrase hypakoēn pisteōs ('obedience of faith') is programmatic for Romans and its meaning is debated — it could mean 'the obedience that is faith,' 'the obedience that comes from faith,' or 'obedience to the faith.' The genitive is likely expegetical: faith itself is the obedience Paul calls for. The same phrase bookends the letter (cf. 16:26).
5. The word ethnesin ('nations') is the standard Greek term that can mean 'Gentiles' or 'nations.' Paul's apostolic commission is specifically to non-Jewish peoples.
6. The phrase klētoi Iēsou Christou ('called of Jesus Christ') can be parsed as 'called by Jesus Christ' (genitive of agent) or 'called to belong to Jesus Christ' (possessive genitive). We render the possessive sense, which fits the context of believers' identity. The Roman Christians are included among the nations to whom Paul has been sent.
7. Paul's greeting combines the standard Greek epistolary greeting (charis, 'grace') with the Hebrew shalom greeting (eirēnē, 'peace'). The word hagiois ('saints, holy ones') does not mean morally perfected people but those set apart by God's call — corresponding to the Hebrew qadosh. Paul places God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ on the same level as the joint source of grace and peace.
8. The verb katangelletai ('is proclaimed, announced') is stronger than the KJV's 'spoken of' — it implies active, deliberate proclamation. 'The whole world' (holō tō kosmō) is hyperbolic, referring to the Roman Empire and the network of early Christian communities, but it testifies to Rome's strategic importance.
9. Paul invokes God as witness — a solemn oath formula rooted in Old Testament covenant practice. The verb latreuō ('I serve, worship') is cultic language, used in the Septuagint for priestly and temple service. Paul redefines worship: his liturgical service is gospel proclamation.
10. The verb euodōthēsomai ('I may be prospered, succeed on my journey') contains the root hodos ('road, way'). Paul's desire to visit Rome has been repeatedly frustrated (cf. 15:22), and he subordinates his travel plans to God's will — a significant qualifier given that his actual arrival in Rome will come as a prisoner (Acts 28).
11. The word charisma ('gift of grace, spiritual gift') shares the root of charis ('grace'). Paul immediately qualifies this somewhat presumptuous statement in verse 12, showing pastoral sensitivity toward a church he did not found.
12. Paul corrects the potential impression of verse 11 that he would arrive as a superior dispensing gifts. The compound verb symparaklēthēnai ('to be encouraged together') emphasizes mutuality. Paul acknowledges that he, too, will benefit from the Roman believers' faith.
13. The formula ou thelō hymas agnoein ('I do not want you to be unaware') is a standard Pauline disclosure formula (cf. 11:25; 1 Corinthians 10:1; 12:1). We render adelphoi as 'brothers and sisters' since the Greek term functioned as an inclusive address for the whole community. Paul does not specify what prevented him — the passive ekōlythēn ('I was prevented') may imply divine hindrance or practical obstacles.
14. The Greek-barbarian distinction was the fundamental cultural divide of the ancient world: Hellēnes were Greek-speakers, barbaroi were everyone else (the term originated as onomatopoeia for incomprehensible speech — 'bar-bar'). We render barbarois as 'non-Greeks' to avoid the modern connotation of 'barbaric.' Paul's obligation crosses every cultural boundary.
15. The adjective prothymon ('eager, ready, willing') conveys personal enthusiasm. The verb euangelisasthai ('to proclaim good news') shares the root of euangelion ('gospel'). Paul's eagerness to preach in Rome — the imperial capital — reflects the universal scope of his commission.
16. The SBLGNT omits 'of Christ' (tou Christou) after 'gospel,' which appears in later manuscripts reflected in the KJV. We follow the critical text. The verb epaischynomai ('I am ashamed') carries social weight — in the honor-shame culture of Rome, the gospel of a crucified Jew would invite ridicule. Paul's 'not ashamed' is an understatement (litotes) meaning 'I am proud of.'
16. The phrase Ioudaiō te prōton kai Hellēni ('to the Jew first and also to the Greek') establishes the salvation-historical priority of Israel that Paul will defend in chapters 9–11, while insisting on the universality of the gospel.
17. The phrase dikaiosynē theou ('righteousness of God') is the theological center of Romans. The genitive theou can be subjective ('God's own righteousness'), objective ('the righteousness that comes from God'), or both simultaneously. Luther's breakthrough reading — that this is a righteousness God gives, not demands — launched the Reformation.
17. The quotation from Habakkuk 2:4 can be parsed two ways: 'the righteous-by-faith will live' or 'the righteous will live by faith.' Paul likely intends both senses. The Hebrew of Habakkuk reads 'by his faithfulness' (be'emunato), using emunah.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Habakkuk 2:4. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. The parallel structure with verse 17 is deliberate: God's righteousness is 'revealed' (apokalyptetai) in the gospel (v. 17), and God's wrath is 'revealed' (apokalyptetai) against sin (v. 18). Both are present realities, not merely future events. The verb katechontōn means 'to hold down, suppress, restrain' — humanity actively suppresses truth, not merely ignores it. The word adikian ('unrighteousness') is the direct negation of dikaiosynē ('righteousness').
19. The phrase gnōston tou theou ('what is knowable of God') implies a limited, partial knowledge — not everything about God, but enough to leave humanity without excuse (v. 20). The repetition of phaneron/ephanerōsen ('plain/made plain') emphasizes that this knowledge is not hidden but actively disclosed by God.

20. Paul employs a deliberate paradox: the 'invisible' (aorata) attributes are 'clearly seen' (kathoratai). The knowledge of God comes through rational reflection on creation (noumena, 'being understood by the mind'), not through mystical experience. The word theiotēs ('divine nature, divinity') differs from theotēs ('deity, godhead') used in Colossians 2:9 — theiotēs refers to divine qualities perceivable in creation, not the full essence of God. The result is that humanity is anapologētos ('without defense, without excuse').
21. The verb edoxasan ('glorified, honored') connects to the glory exchange in verse 23. The failure is twofold: refusing to honor God and refusing to give thanks. The verb emataiōthēsan ('became futile, empty') echoes the Septuagint's description of idol worship (cf. Jeremiah 2:5; 2 Kings 17:15). The 'heart' (kardia) in biblical usage is the center of thought and will, not primarily emotion.
21. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Jeremiah 2:5. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
21. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes 2 Kings 17:15. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
22. The verb emōranthēsan ('became foolish, were made foolish') is the root of the English 'moron.' The irony is sharp: the pursuit of wisdom apart from acknowledging God produces its opposite. This echoes the wisdom tradition of Proverbs 1:7 ('The fear of the LORD is the beginning of knowledge; fools despise wisdom and instruction').
22. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Proverbs 1:7. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
23. The verb ēllaxan ('exchanged') introduces the 'exchange' motif that structures 1:18-32: humanity exchanged God's glory (v. 23), exchanged the truth for a lie (v. 25), and exchanged natural relations (v. 26). The descending list — humans, birds, animals, reptiles — mirrors the creation order of Genesis 1 in reverse, depicting idolatry as de-creation. The language echoes Psalm 106:20 and Jeremiah 2:11 on Israel's own idol worship.
23. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 1 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
23. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalm 106:20 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
23. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Jeremiah 2:11 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
24. The verb paredōken ('gave over, handed over') is the first of three occurrences (vv. 24, 26, 28) that structure this section. God's wrath is expressed not by active punishment but by allowing human choices to reach their natural consequences — a judicial handing over to the trajectory already chosen. The same verb is used of Christ being 'handed over' to death (4:25; 8:32), creating a profound theological contrast.
25. The second 'exchange' (metēllaxan): truth for falsehood. The Greek para ton ktisanta ('rather than the Creator') means 'instead of,' not merely 'more than' as the KJV suggests. This is replacement, not comparison. Paul breaks into a doxology ('who is blessed forever, Amen') — even in describing idolatry, he cannot mention the Creator without praising him.
26. The second 'God gave them over' (paredōken). The third 'exchange' (metēllaxan) now applies to sexual practice. The phrase para physin ('contrary to nature') reflects Paul's understanding of the created order, drawing on both Jewish creation theology and Greco-Roman natural law concepts. The word thēleiai ('females') rather than gynaikes ('women') uses biological rather than social terminology, as does arsenes ('males') in verse 27.
27. The verb exekauthēsan ('were inflamed, burned') denotes intense, consuming desire. The word aschēmosynēn ('shameless acts, indecency') is used in the Septuagint of Leviticus 18:22 and 20:13 for sexual prohibitions. The phrase antimisthian ('recompense, due penalty') suggests that the disordered desire is itself part of the judgment — the consequence is built into the act. Paul presents same-sex relations as symptomatic of the broader exchange of Creator for creature.
27. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Leviticus 18:22. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
28. The third 'God gave them over' (paredōken). Paul employs a wordplay: they did not edokimasan ('approve, consider worthy') to acknowledge God, so God gave them over to an adokimon ('unapproved, debased, failing the test') mind. The same root (dokimos, 'tested, approved') appears in both, creating an ironic correspondence between human rejection and divine response.
29. The vice list follows Greco-Roman rhetorical convention but is grounded in Paul's theological argument: the debased mind (v. 28) produces debased behavior. The Greek contains a wordplay between phthonou ('envy') and phonou ('murder') — the words differ by one letter, suggesting that envy and violence are closely linked. The SBLGNT does not include porneia ('fornication') which appears in some manuscripts reflected in the KJV.
30. The word theostygeis ('God-haters') can also be rendered 'hateful to God' (passive rather than active), but the active sense fits Paul's argument better — those who refuse to acknowledge God develop active hostility toward him. The list moves from social vices to spiritual rebellion to family breakdown, suggesting that the corruption permeates every sphere.
31. The four alpha-privative adjectives (a- prefix negating each quality) create a staccato rhetorical effect: asyne-tous, asyn-the-tous, a-storgous, an-eleēmonas. Each describes the absence of a basic human quality. Asynthetous ('faithless, covenant-breaking') is particularly significant in a letter about covenant faithfulness. Astorgous ('without natural affection') denotes the absence of storge, the instinctive family love.

32. The climax of the argument: the deepest level of depravity is not merely doing evil but celebrating it in others. The word dikaiōma ('righteous decree, just requirement') shows that even in their rebellion, people retain knowledge of God's moral standard. Paul uses two different verbs for 'do' — prassō (habitual practice) and poieō (performing acts) — though the distinction may be stylistic rather than semantic here.

Summary: Romans 2 turns the argument against the moral judge — the one who condemns the vices listed in chapter 1 while practicing the same things. Paul argues that God's judgment is impartial and based on deeds, not ethnic identity or possession of the law. He addresses the Jewish interlocutor directly, arguing that circumcision and Torah possession without obedience are worthless, while uncircumcised Gentiles who keep the law's requirements will condemn those who have the written code but violate it.

What Makes This Remarkable: Paul's rhetorical strategy is devastating: having described Gentile sinfulness in chapter 1, he now springs a trap on the Jewish reader who nodded along. The diatribe style — addressing an imaginary interlocutor — was a standard Stoic philosophical technique that Paul adapts for theological argument. The distinction between 'hearers of the law' and 'doers of the law' (v. 13) anticipates James 1:22-25. Paul's concept of the law 'written on hearts' (v. 15) echoes Jeremiah 31:33.

Translation Friction: The relationship between 2:6-11 (judgment by works) and 3:20-28 (justification by faith apart from works) is one of the most debated tensions in Pauline theology. We render both passages faithfully without harmonizing. The identity of the Gentiles who 'do by nature the things of the law' (v. 14) is disputed — they may be moral pagans, Gentile Christians, or a hypothetical case.

Connections: The 'day of wrath' (v. 5) connects to the Old Testament Day of the LORD tradition (Amos 5:18; Zephaniah 1:15). The law written on hearts (v. 15) echoes Jeremiah 31:33. Paul's argument about true circumcision (vv. 28-29) develops Deuteronomy 30:6 and Jeremiah 4:4. The impartiality of God (v. 11) reflects Deuteronomy 10:17.

¹Therefore you have no excuse, every one of you who passes judgment. For in passing judgment on another you condemn yourself, because you who judge practice the very same things. ²We know that God's judgment against those who practice such things is based on truth. ³Do you suppose, you who judge those who practice such things yet do them yourself, that you will escape God's judgment? ⁴Or do you despise the riches of his kindness, restraint, and patience, not recognizing that God's kindness is meant to lead you to repentance? ⁵But because of your hard and unrepentant heart, you are storing up wrath for yourself on the day of wrath when God's righteous judgment will be revealed, ⁶He will repay each person according to their works: ⁷To those who persist in doing good and seek glory, honor, and immortality, he will give eternal life. ⁸However, to them that are argumentative, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, indignation and wrath,. ⁹There will be affliction and distress for every human being who does evil — the Jew first and also the Greek, ¹⁰However, splendor, honour, and wholeness, to every person that worketh good, to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile:. ¹¹For God shows no partiality. ¹²For all who have sinned without the law will also perish without the law, and all who have sinned under the law will be judged by the law. ¹³For it is not the hearers of the law who are righteous before God, but the doers of the law who will be justified. ¹⁴For when Gentiles who do not have the law do by nature what the law requires, they are a law to themselves even though they do not have the law, ¹⁵They show that the work of the law is written on their hearts, while their conscience also bears witness and their conflicting thoughts accuse or even defend them, ¹⁶In the day when God will pass judgment on the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to my gospel. ¹⁷But if you call yourself a Jew and rely on the law and boast in God, ¹⁸You know his will. Because you have been taught from the law, you can recognize what really matters. ¹⁹You are convinced that you are a guide for the blind and a light for those in darkness, ²⁰An instructor of the foolish, a teacher of babes, which hast the form of knowledge and of the what is genuine in the instruction of Moses. ²¹You as a result which teachest another, teachest you not thyself? you that preachest a man should not steal, dost you steal? ²²You who say not to commit adultery, do you commit adultery? You who abhor idols, do you rob temples? ²³You who boast in the law, do you dishonor God by breaking the law? ²⁴For "the name of God is blasphemed among the nations because of you," as it is written. ²⁵Circumcision has value if you practice the law, but if you are a law-breaker, your circumcision has become uncircumcision. ²⁶So if an uncircumcised man keeps the requirements of the law, will not his uncircumcision be regarded as circumcision? ²⁷Then the one who is physically uncircumcised but keeps the law will condemn you who have the written code and circumcision but break the law. ²⁸For a person is not a Jew who is one only outwardly, nor is circumcision something outward in the flesh. ²⁹Rather, a person is a Jew who is one inwardly, and circumcision is of the heart, by the Spirit, not by the written code. Such a person's praise comes not from people but from God.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The word anapologētos ('without excuse, without defense') deliberately echoes 1:20, where it described pagan idolaters. Now the same verdict falls on the moral judge. Paul springs his rhetorical trap — the reader who agreed with chapter 1's condemnation now stands self-condemned. The shift to second person singular ('you') marks the transition to diatribe style.
2. The phrase kata alētheian ('according to truth') means God judges based on reality, not appearances — a principle that will undermine any claim to exemption based on external privilege. The first-person plural 'we know' (oidamen) appeals to common ground between Paul and his audience.
3. The verb logizē ('do you reckon, suppose, calculate') is a key Pauline term that will reappear throughout Romans in contexts of reckoning righteousness (4:3-6). Here it exposes faulty moral calculation — the judge imagines himself exempt from the standard he applies to others.
4. Three attributes of God are listed: chrēstotēs ('kindness, goodness'), anochēs ('restraint, forbearance, holding back'), and makrothymias ('patience, long-suffering'). Together they describe God's generous delay of judgment — which the self-righteous person mistakes for approval. The word metanoian ('repentance') corresponds to the Hebrew teshuvah — a turning back, a fundamental reorientation.
5. The verb thēsaurizeis ('you are storing up, treasuring') creates a bitter irony — instead of treasuring up goodness, the impenitent person stockpiles wrath. The compound dikaiokrisia ('righteous judgment') appears only here in the New Testament, combining dikaioi ('righteous') with krisis ('judgment'). The 'day of wrath' draws on the Old Testament yom YHWH tradition.
6. Paul quotes Psalm 62:12 (LXX 61:13) and Proverbs 24:12. The principle of judgment according to works appears throughout Scripture and is affirmed by Jesus (Matthew 16:27). This does not contradict justification by faith — Paul is establishing the standard of divine judgment to which all are accountable, preparing the ground for the gospel's solution in chapter 3.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Proverbs 24:12. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The word hypomonē ('perseverance, patient endurance') denotes sustained, tested faithfulness rather than a single act. The triad of doxa ('glory'), timē ('honor'), and aphtharsia ('immortality, imperishability') describes the eschatological reward. The phrase zōen aiōnion ('eternal life') corresponds to the Hebrew concept of olam — life of the age to come.
8. The word eritheias ('selfish ambition, self-seeking') originally referred to work done for hire and came to mean partisan, self-interested behavior. The contrast between obeying truth and obeying unrighteousness personifies both as competing masters demanding allegiance.
9. The word pair thlipsis ('affliction, tribulation') and stenochōria ('distress, anguish' — literally 'narrow space') describes the crushing consequences of judgment. The phrase 'the Jew first' now applies to judgment, not just salvation (cf. 1:16) — priority in receiving God's revelation means priority in accountability.
10. The triad now shifts: 'immortality' (v. 7) is replaced by eirēnē ('peace'), corresponding to the Hebrew shalom — wholeness, well-being, and restored relationship with God. The parallel structure of verses 9-10 reinforces the impartiality principle: the same standard applies to both Jew and Greek.
11. The word prosōpolēmpsia ('partiality' — literally 'receiving the face') is a Septuagint coinage translating the Hebrew nasa panim ('to lift the face'), which meant to show favoritism. This principle, grounded in Deuteronomy 10:17, is the theological foundation for Paul's argument: if God is impartial, then ethnic identity alone cannot secure acquittal.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Deuteronomy 10:17. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. Paul distinguishes two groups: those anomōs ('without law' — Gentiles who lack Torah) and those en nomō ('in/under the law' — Jews who possess Torah). Neither group's relationship to Torah determines the outcome; both are judged by the same God. The verb apolountai ('will perish') describes eschatological destruction, while krithēsontai ('will be judged') implies a judicial process.
13. The distinction between akroatai ('hearers') and poiētai ('doers') anticipates James 1:22-25. In the synagogue, the Torah was read aloud, making 'hearing the law' a concrete weekly experience. Paul's point is that hearing without doing confers no advantage. The future tense dikaiōthēsontai ('will be justified') points to the final judgment.

14. The identity of these Gentiles is debated: they may be (1) moral pagans who instinctively follow some moral law, (2) Gentile Christians in whom the Spirit produces obedience, or (3) a hypothetical case illustrating a principle. The phrase physei ('by nature') complicates each reading differently. We render the Greek without resolving the ambiguity. The phrase 'a law to themselves' (heautois eisin nomos) does not mean 'lawless' but 'their own law' — they demonstrate the law's demands through their conduct.
15. The phrase 'the work of the law written on their hearts' echoes Jeremiah 31:33, though Paul uses ergon ('work,' singular) rather than nomos ('law'). This may mean the law's requirement or the deed the law demands. The word syneidēsis ('conscience') was a Stoic philosophical concept that Paul adopts — an internal witness that evaluates moral conduct. The imagery of internal accusation and defense anticipates the courtroom scene of the final judgment.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Jeremiah 31:33 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. The phrase ta krypta tōn anthrōpōn ('the secrets of people') indicates that final judgment penetrates beyond external behavior to internal reality — the hidden thoughts and motives. The phrase kata to euangelion mou ('according to my gospel') is striking: Paul's gospel includes the message of coming judgment, not only the offer of grace. Christ is presented as the agent of divine judgment.
17. Paul now addresses the Jewish interlocutor directly. The SBLGNT reads ei de ('but if') rather than ide ('behold') found in some manuscripts and the KJV. The verb epanapaue ('rest upon, rely on') suggests confidence in Torah possession as a source of security. The verb kauchaomai ('boast') is key in Romans — Paul will argue that boasting is excluded by the gospel (3:27) and redirected toward God (5:2, 11).
18. The verb dokimazeis ('approve, test, discern') means to evaluate and recognize genuine value. The word katēchoumenos ('being instructed, catechized') gives us the English 'catechism.' Paul acknowledges real advantages of Torah education — knowledge of God's will and moral discernment — but these become liabilities when not matched by practice.
19. The self-descriptions in verses 19-20 draw on Israel's vocation as 'a light to the nations' (Isaiah 42:6; 49:6). The irony builds: each claim is legitimate as a calling but presumptuous as a boast when the claimant fails to live up to it.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 42:6. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
20. The word morphōsin ('embodiment, outward form, formulation') can mean either 'the true form' or 'mere outward form.' In this context, Paul likely means the Torah genuinely embodies knowledge and truth — the problem is not with the law but with those who possess it without obeying it. The word nēpiōn ('infants, immature ones') describes Gentiles from the perspective of Jewish self-understanding.
21. The series of rhetorical questions (vv. 21-23) mirrors the style of Hellenistic moral philosophers who exposed hypocrisy. The shift from conditional clauses (vv. 17-20) to pointed questions increases the pressure on the interlocutor. Paul's charges may be general or may reflect specific accusations known to him about the Roman Jewish community.
22. The verb hierosyleis ('rob temples, commit sacrilege') is specific: it may refer to Jews profiting from the sale of confiscated pagan temple goods, or more broadly to any compromise with the idolatrous economic system. The charge of temple robbery appears in Acts 19:37. The irony is sharp — those who claim to abhor idolatry may still profit from idolatrous systems.
23. The verb atimazeis ('dishonor') reverses the intended effect of Torah observance. The law was meant to bring honor to God among the nations; its violation by those who claim it produces the opposite — the desecration of God's name, as the following quotation confirms.
24. Paul quotes Isaiah 52:5 (LXX), though the original context refers to the nations blaspheming God because of Israel's suffering in exile, not because of Israel's sin. Paul applies it to the present situation where Jewish moral failure gives Gentiles reason to disrespect the God of Israel — a different but related form of desecration of the divine name (chilul hashem).
24. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 52:5. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
25. Paul does not dismiss circumcision (he will affirm its value in 3:1-2) but relativizes it. The shocking claim is that covenant identity can be functionally reversed by disobedience: a circumcised law-breaker becomes, in God's reckoning, as if uncircumcised. This would be deeply provocative to any Jewish audience.
26. The verb logisthēsetai ('will be regarded, reckoned') is the same verb Paul will use for Abraham being 'reckoned righteous' (4:3). God's reckoning overrides external markers. The word dikaiōmata ('righteous requirements, ordinances') refers to the law's just demands.
27. The phrase ek physeōs ('by nature, physically') contrasts with the spiritual reality Paul will describe in verses 28-29. The word grammatos ('letter, written code') refers to the written Torah and introduces the letter-Spirit contrast Paul will develop further in 2 Corinthians 3:6 and Romans 7:6.
28. Paul redefines Jewish identity in terms of inner reality rather than external markers. The phrase en tō phanerō ('in the open, outwardly, visibly') contrasts with en tō kryptō ('in secret, inwardly') in verse 29. This is not a rejection of Jewish identity but a deepening of it — Paul argues for what authentic covenant membership means.
29. The phrase peritomē kardias ('circumcision of the heart') draws on Deuteronomy 10:16 and 30:6, where Moses calls Israel to circumcise their hearts. Paul identifies the Spirit (pneumati) as the agent of this inner transformation, contrasting it with grammati ('the written code'). The word epainos ('praise') contains a wordplay: the name 'Judah' (Yehudah) derives from the Hebrew root meaning 'praise' (Genesis 29:35). A true 'Judah' — a true praiser — receives praise from God, not from human recognition.

29. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 10:16. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.

29. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 29:35. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.

Summary: Romans 3 begins by addressing the implied objection: if inner reality matters more than external markers, what advantage does the Jew have? Paul affirms Israel's advantage — they were entrusted with God's oracles — but insists that Jewish unfaithfulness does not nullify God's faithfulness. He then marshals a chain of Old Testament quotations to prove that all people, Jew and Gentile alike, are under sin. The chapter climaxes in 3:21-26, where Paul declares that God's righteousness has now been revealed apart from the law — through faith in Jesus Christ, for all who believe. God put Christ forward as a propitiation, demonstrating his righteousness by passing over former sins, so that he is both just and the justifier of the one who has faith in Jesus.

What Makes This Remarkable: Verses 21-26 are widely regarded as the theological center of Romans and one of the densest passages in the entire New Testament. Nearly every word carries heavy theological freight. The word hilastērion (v. 25) is the same word used in the Septuagint for the kapporet — the mercy seat atop the Ark of the Covenant where atonement was made on Yom Kippur. Paul presents Christ as the ultimate mercy seat, the place where God's wrath and mercy meet. The argument that 'all have sinned' (v. 23) is the universal premise that makes the universal offer of grace coherent.

Translation Friction: The phrase pistis Iēsou Christou (v. 22) can be translated as 'faith in Jesus Christ' (objective genitive) or 'the faithfulness of Jesus Christ' (subjective genitive). Both readings have strong scholarly support. We render the objective genitive ('faith in Jesus Christ') as the more traditional reading while noting the alternative. The word hilastērion (v. 25) is rendered 'propitiation' rather than 'expiation' — propitiation (turning away wrath) better captures the context, where God's wrath (1:18) demands resolution.

Connections: The Old Testament catena in vv. 10-18 draws from Psalms 14, 5, 140, 10, Isaiah 59, and Psalm 36. The hilastērion of v. 25 connects to Leviticus 16 (Day of Atonement), Exodus 25:17-22 (mercy seat), and Hebrews 9:5. The principle 'no one is righteous' (v. 10) echoes Ecclesiastes 7:20. Paul's argument about boasting (v. 27) will be developed through the Abraham narrative in chapter 4.

¹Then what advantage does the Jew have? Or what is the value of circumcision? ²Much in every way. First of all, they were entrusted with the oracles of God. ³What then? If some were unfaithful, will their unfaithfulness nullify God's faithfulness? ⁴Absolutely not! Let God be true and every person a liar, as it is written: "So that you may be justified in your words and prevail when you are judged." ⁵But if our unrighteousness serves to demonstrate God's righteousness, what should we say? That God is unjust in inflicting wrath? (I speak in human terms.) ⁶Absolutely not! For then how would God judge the world? ⁷But if God's truth is magnified through my falsehood to his glory, why am I still being condemned as a sinner? ⁸And why not say — as we are slanderously charged and as some claim we say — "Let us do evil so that good may come"? Their condemnation is deserved. ⁹What then? Are we any better off? Not at all. For we have already charged that both Jews and Greeks are all under sin, ¹⁰As it is recorded, There is none upright, no, not one:. ¹¹There is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh following God. ¹²All have turned aside; together they have become worthless. There is no one who does good, not even one." ¹³"Their throat is an open grave; they use their tongues to deceive." "The venom of vipers is under their lips." ¹⁴"Their mouth is full of curses and bitterness." ¹⁵Indeed, their feet are swift to shed blood:. ¹⁶Indeed, destruction and misery are in their ways:. ¹⁷Indeed, the way of peace have they not known:. ¹⁸There is no fear of God prior to their eyes. ¹⁹No w we know that whatever the law says, it speaks to those who are under the law, so that every mouth may be silenced and the whole world may be held accountable to God. ²⁰For by works of the law no human being will be justified in his sight, since through the law comes knowledge of sin. ²¹But now, apart from the law, the righteousness of God has been revealed, as attested by the Law and the Prophets — ²²Even the righteousness of God which is by way of faith of Jesus Christ to all and upon all them that trust — for there is no difference:. ²³for everyone has sinned and fallen short of God's glory. ²⁴Being justified freely by his grace by way of the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. ²⁵God presented him as the atoning sacrifice through faith in his blood. He did this to demonstrate his righteousness, because in his patience he had left earlier sins unpunished. ²⁶It was to demonstrate his righteousness at the present time, so that he might be just and the justifier of the one who has faith in Jesus. ²⁷Then what becomes of boasting? It is excluded. By what kind of law? By a law of works? No, but by the law of faith. ²⁸For we hold that a person is justified by faith apart from works of the law. ²⁹Or is God the God of Jews only? Is he not the God of Gentiles also? Yes, of Gentiles also, ³⁰Seeing it is one God, which will justify the circumcision by way of faith, and uncircumcision by way of faith. ³¹Do we then overthrow the law through faith? Absolutely not! Rather, we uphold the law.

1. The diatribe continues with the interlocutor's implied objection: if circumcision can become uncircumcision (2:25), why be Jewish at all? Paul takes this objection seriously rather than dismissing it — his answer affirms real advantage while denying automatic immunity from judgment.
2. Paul says prōton ('first'), suggesting a list, but never returns to give a second or third point — he is sidetracked by the implications of his first point. The word logia ('oracles, sayings') refers to the Scriptures, particularly God's covenant promises to Israel. The passive epistēthesan ('were entrusted') emphasizes both privilege and responsibility.
3. The wordplay on pistis is central: ēpistēsan ('were unfaithful/unbelieving'), apistia ('unfaithfulness'), and pistin tou theou ('faithfulness of God') all share the same root. 'Some' (tines) is an understatement — Paul is diplomatic. The verb katargēsei ('nullify, render ineffective') is a strong word Paul uses frequently for the cancellation of a power or reality.
4. The exclamation mē genoito ('may it never be!') is Paul's strongest negation, used ten times in Romans. We render it 'absolutely not' rather than the KJV's 'God forbid,' which imports God's name where the Greek does not. Paul quotes Psalm 51:4 (LXX 50:6), where David acknowledges God's righteousness in judging. The application is that God's faithfulness stands regardless of human failure — when the two are weighed, God is always vindicated.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalms 51:4. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. The verb synistēsēin ('demonstrates, commends, establishes') suggests that human sin inadvertently showcases God's righteousness by contrast. The parenthetical kata anthrōpon legō ('I speak according to a human perspective') is Paul's disclaimer that this objection represents flawed human reasoning, not his own theology.
6. Paul's reductio ad absurdum: if God cannot punish sin that highlights his righteousness, then God cannot judge anyone, since all sin ultimately serves to display divine attributes. But God's role as world-judge is non-negotiable in Jewish theology (Genesis 18:25).
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 18:25. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The first-person singular shifts from the corporate 'our' (v. 5) to the individual 'my' — Paul voices the objection from the sinner's own perspective. The verb eperisseusen ('abounded, overflowed') anticipates the 'where sin increased, grace overflowed' language of 5:20.
8. Paul reveals that opponents have caricatured his gospel of grace as moral license — an accusation he takes up again in 6:1 and 6:15. The phrase hōn to krima endikon estin ('their condemnation is just') delivers a sharp verdict on those who distort the gospel into antinomianism. Paul does not argue the point here but dismisses it with a judicial pronouncement.
9. The verb proechometha is debated — it can mean 'are we better?' (middle) or 'are we at a disadvantage?' (passive). The context favors 'are we better?' with the answer 'not at all.' The phrase hyph' hamartian ('under sin') presents sin as a ruling power, not just a collection of misdeeds — a personification Paul develops in chapters 5-7. This is the thesis that the following Scripture chain will support.
10. Paul begins a catena (chain) of Old Testament quotations, primarily from the Psalms, to establish universal human sinfulness. This verse echoes Psalm 14:1-3 (LXX 13:1-3) and Ecclesiastes 7:20. The emphatic double negative (ouk...oude heis) leaves no exceptions.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalms 14:1-3 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Ecclesiastes 7:20 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. Continuing from Psalm 14:2. The two deficiencies — understanding and seeking — correspond to the intellectual and volitional dimensions of the human failure described in 1:21-23. The claim is not that people never have religious impulses but that no one naturally and consistently pursues the true God.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalms 14:1-3. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.

12. The conclusion of the Psalm 14 quotation. The verb exeklinan ('turned aside, deviated') uses a road metaphor — humanity has left the right path. The verb ēchreōthēsan ('became worthless, became useless') means to become sour or rancid, like spoiled milk — a vivid image of moral corruption.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalms 14:1-3. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. Paul draws from Psalm 5:9 (LXX 5:10) and Psalm 140:3 (LXX 139:3). The anatomy of sin moves from throat to tongue to lips — speech organs become instruments of death. The 'open grave' metaphor suggests speech that brings death and corruption. The progression creates a portrait of verbal violence.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalms 5:9 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalm 140:3 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. From Psalm 10:7 (LXX 9:28). The word aras ('cursing') and pikrias ('bitterness') complete the anatomy of sinful speech — from the throat (v. 13a) through the tongue (v. 13b) and lips (v. 13c) to the mouth (v. 14).
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalms 10:7. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. From Isaiah 59:7. The quotation shifts from organs of speech to feet — from verbal violence to physical violence. The adjective oxeis ('swift, quick, sharp') suggests eagerness for bloodshed.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 59:7-8 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. Continuing Isaiah 59:7. The nouns syntrimma ('destruction, ruin, crushing') and talaipōria ('wretchedness, misery') describe the devastation that sinful humanity leaves in its wake.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 59:7-8. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. From Isaiah 59:8. The word eirēnēs ('peace') corresponds to the Hebrew shalom — the wholeness and well-being that humanity was created for but has abandoned. The path they follow produces the opposite of shalom.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 59:7-8. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. From Psalm 36:1 (LXX 35:2). This final quotation names the root cause: the absence of reverent awe before God. In the wisdom tradition, 'the fear of the LORD is the beginning of wisdom' (Proverbs 9:10). Without this fear, the moral collapse described in the preceding quotations is inevitable.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalms 36:1 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Proverbs 9:10 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. Paul draws a crucial inference: the Old Testament quotations (vv. 10-18) address Jews first ('those under the law'), so Jews cannot claim exemption from the universal indictment. The result is universal: 'every mouth silenced' — no defense can be offered. The adjective hypodikos ('accountable, liable to judgment') is a legal term meaning 'under judicial sentence.'
20. Paul echoes Psalm 143:2 (LXX 142:2). The phrase ex ergōn nomou ('by works of the law') has been debated: does it mean 'by doing what the law commands' or 'by the identity markers (circumcision, food laws, Sabbath) that define the Jewish community'? Both dimensions are likely in view. The word sarx ('flesh') here means 'human being' — no mortal creature can achieve right standing through law-keeping. The law's function is diagnostic, not curative: it identifies sin but cannot heal it.
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalm 143:2 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
21. The adverb nyini ('but now') is both temporal (the Christ-event has happened) and logical (the argument has reached its resolution). The perfect tense pephanērōtai ('has been revealed and remains revealed') emphasizes the permanence of this disclosure. The phrase chōris nomou ('apart from the law') qualifies the means, not the content: the righteousness is consistent with the law but does not come through law-keeping.
22. The phrase dia pisteōs Iēsou Christou ('through faith in/of Jesus Christ') is the center of the 'pistis Christou' debate. The objective genitive reading ('faith in Jesus Christ') makes human faith the instrument by which righteousness is received. The subjective genitive reading ('the faithfulness of Jesus Christ') makes Christ's own fidelity the ground. Both are theologically valid; we render the traditional objective genitive. The phrase ou gar estin diastolē ('there is no distinction') eliminates any Jew-Gentile differential in access to salvation.
23. The aorist hēmarton ('sinned') views humanity's sin as a historical fact, while the present tense hysterountai ('fall short, lack') describes an ongoing condition. The phrase 'glory of God' (doxēs tou theou) refers to the divine image and splendor humanity was created to reflect (cf. 1:23 and 8:29-30) — sin has caused humanity to lose its designed glory. The prefix hystero- suggests falling behind, being left wanting.

- 24. Three metaphors converge: legal (dikaoumenoi, 'being justified' — declared righteous in court), commercial (dōrean, 'freely, as a gift' — without payment), and redemptive (apolytrōseōs, 'redemption' — liberation by payment of a ransom). The word apolytrōsis originally described the purchase of a slave's freedom and echoes the Hebrew ga'al (kinsman-redemption) tradition.
- 25. The verb proetheto ('put forward, set forth publicly') indicates a deliberate, public divine act — not something hidden but something God displayed openly. The word hilastērion can be translated 'propitiation' (turning away wrath), 'expiation' (cleansing sin), or 'mercy seat' (the place of atonement). We render 'propitiation' because the context of divine wrath (1:18) demands resolution, but the mercy seat allusion is noted in the expanded rendering.
- 25. The phrase dia pisteōs ('through faith') specifies how the propitiation is received by the individual. The phrase en tō autou haimati ('by his blood') specifies the means of the atoning act — the death of Christ. The word paresin ('passing over') differs from aphesis ('forgiveness') — it means a temporary passing by, not permanent cancellation, suggesting that God's forbearance in the old covenant awaited the cross for final resolution.
- 26. The phrase dikaion kai dikaionta ('just and the justifier') is the theological climax of the passage. The same root (dik-) appears in both words, underscoring that God's justifying act is itself an expression of his justice, not a contradiction of it. The phrase en tō nyn kairō ('at the present time') contrasts with the past era of forbearance — the cross is the moment when God's righteousness is definitively displayed.
- 27. The word kauchēsis ('boasting') returns from 2:17, 23. If justification is by grace through faith, no one can claim credit. Paul uses nomos ('law') in an unusual sense here — 'principle' or 'system' rather than the Mosaic Torah. The 'law of faith' is the principle that right standing before God comes through trust, not achievement.
- 28. The verb logizometha ('we reckon, hold, conclude') is a deliberate summary statement. This verse became the watchword of the Protestant Reformation. Luther famously added 'alone' (allein) after 'faith' in his German translation — the word is not in the Greek but captures Paul's intent in this context. The phrase chōris ergōn nomou ('apart from works of the law') does not mean faith is opposed to obedience but that the ground of justification is trust in Christ, not law-keeping performance.
- 29. Paul's argument now appeals to monotheism: if there is one God (the fundamental Jewish confession, the Shema), then he must be God of all peoples, not Jews exclusively. The theological ground for Gentile inclusion is not a new revelation but the oldest confession in Israel's faith.
- 30. Paul varies the prepositions — ek pisteōs ('from/by faith') for the circumcised and dia tēs pisteōs ('through faith') for the uncircumcised — but the variation is likely stylistic rather than theologically significant. Both groups are justified by the same faith. The one God has one means of justification for all.
- 31. The verb katargoumen ('abolish, overthrow, nullify') is the same word from verse 3. Paul anticipates the charge that justification by faith makes the law irrelevant. His emphatic denial (mē genoito) is followed by the claim that faith actually 'establishes' (histanomen, 'causes to stand') the law. How faith upholds the law is not explained here but is developed through the Abraham argument in chapter 4 and the Spirit's work in chapter 8.

Summary: Romans 4 presents Abraham as the paradigmatic case of justification by faith. Paul argues from Genesis 15:6 that Abraham was reckoned righteous through faith, not works — and that this reckoning occurred before circumcision (Genesis 17), making Abraham the father of both believing Gentiles and believing Jews. David is cited as a second witness to the blessedness of being reckoned righteous apart from works. Paul concludes by showing that Abraham's faith — trusting God to bring life from the deadness of his body and Sarah's womb — is the prototype of Christian faith in the God who raised Jesus from the dead.

What Makes This Remarkable: *Paul's exegesis of Genesis 15:6 is one of the most influential readings of any Old Testament text in Christian history. The entire argument hinges on the Greek verb logizomai ('to reckon, credit') — used eleven times in this chapter. The chronological argument (vv. 9–12) is precise: Genesis 15 (faith reckoned as righteousness) precedes Genesis 17 (circumcision) by at least fourteen years, proving that Abraham's right standing predated and was independent of circumcision. The chapter redefines who Abraham's true children are.*

Translation Friction: The relationship between Paul's reading of Abraham and James 2:21–24 (which argues Abraham was justified by works) has been debated since the Reformation. Paul and James use 'justify' in different senses and address different situations. We render Paul's Greek faithfully without harmonizing with James. The phrase 'apart from works' must be understood in Paul's specific argumentative context — he is not denying that genuine faith produces obedience (cf. 1:5, 'obedience of faith').

Connections: Genesis 15:6 is the foundational text, also cited in Galatians 3:6 and James 2:23. The David quotation comes from Psalm 32:1-2. The promise to Abraham (v. 13) draws on Genesis 12:1-3 and 17:4-5. Abraham's faith in the life-giving God (v. 17) connects to 2 Corinthians 1:9 and Hebrews 11:17-19. The resurrection formula in verse 25 echoes Isaiah 53:4-5, 12.

¹What then shall we say that Abraham, our forefather according to the flesh, found? ²For if Abraham was justified by works, he has something to boast about — but not before God. ³For what does the Scripture say? "Abraham believed God, and it was credited to him as righteousness." ⁴Now to the one who works, wages are not credited as a gift but as an obligation. ⁵But to the one who does not work but trusts in him who justifies the ungodly, his faith is credited as righteousness. ⁶Just as David also speaks of the blessedness of the person to whom God credits righteousness apart from works: ⁷"Blessed are those whose lawless deeds are forgiven, and whose sins are covered; ⁸Pronounced a blessing on is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin. ⁹Is this blessedness then only for the circumcised, or also for the uncircumcised? For we say, "Faith was credited to Abraham as righteousness." ¹⁰How then was it credited — when he was circumcised or uncircumcised? It was not after but before he was circumcised. ¹¹He received the sign of circumcision as a seal of the righteousness that he had by faith while still uncircumcised. The purpose was to make him the father of all who believe without being circumcised, so that righteousness would be credited to them as well, ¹²The Parent of circumcision to them who are not of the circumcision sole, but who as well conduct your lives in the steps of that trust of our Parent Abraham, which he had being yet uncircumcised. ¹³For the promise to Abraham and his offspring that he would be heir of the world did not come through the law but through the righteousness of faith. ¹⁴For if those who are of the law are heirs, faith is emptied and the promise is nullified. ¹⁵For the law produces wrath, but where there is no law there is no transgression. ¹⁶That is why it depends on faith, in order that the promise may rest on grace and be guaranteed to all his offspring — not only to those who are of the law but also to those who share the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all, ¹⁷Indeed, as it is written, I have made you a Father of numerous nations,) prior to him whom he believed, even God, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were. ¹⁸Against all hope, Abraham in hope believed that he would become the father of many nations, just as it had been spoken to him: "So shall your offspring be." ¹⁹Without weakening in his faith, he considered his own body, which was as good as dead since he was about a hundred years old, and the deadness of Sarah's womb. ²⁰Yet he did not waver in unbelief regarding God's promise but was strengthened in his faith, giving glory to God, ²¹Being fully persuaded that, what he had sworn, he was able also to perform. ²²That is why "it was credited to him as righteousness." ²³Now the words "it was credited to him" were not written for Abraham's sake alone, ²⁴However, for us also, to whom it will be imputed, if we trust in on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead; ²⁵Who was handed over for our wrongdoings, and was brought back again for our justification.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The phrase kata sarka ('according to the flesh') most likely modifies 'forefather' — Abraham is the physical ancestor of the Jewish people. Some scholars attach it to 'found' — what did Abraham discover by human effort? The former reading is more natural syntactically. Paul begins with Abraham because he is the foundational figure of Jewish identity and the recipient of the covenant promises.
2. Paul concedes the hypothetical: if justification were by works, boasting would be warranted. The critical qualifier is 'not before God' — human achievement may impress humans, but no one can stand before God on the basis of personal merit. The word kauchēma ('ground for boasting') differs from kauchēsis ('act of boasting') in 3:27.
3. Paul quotes Genesis 15:6 (LXX), the theological foundation of the entire chapter. The verb episteusen ('believed, trusted') is the aorist of pisteuō — Abraham placed his trust in God's promise. The verb elogisthē ('was credited, reckoned') is the key term: righteousness was not earned but counted to Abraham's account by God's sovereign decision. The same quotation appears in Galatians 3:6 and James 2:23.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 15:6 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. Paul uses an employment analogy: a worker's pay (misthos) is not a gift but a debt the employer owes. If justification were earned, God would be obligated to pay — but grace, by definition, is unearned. The contrast between charin ('grace, gift') and opheilēma ('debt, obligation') is absolute.

5. The phrase ton dikaounta ton asebē ('the one who justifies the ungodly') is shocking by Old Testament standards. Proverbs 17:15 declares 'he who justifies the wicked is an abomination to the LORD.' Yet Paul claims this is exactly what God does — he declares righteous those who are not righteous in themselves. The paradox is resolved by the hilastērion of 3:25: God can justify the ungodly because the penalty has been paid.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Proverbs 17:15 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. Paul introduces a second witness (David) following the legal principle of two witnesses. The word makarismōn ('blessedness, pronouncement of blessing') is a declaration of well-being, not a description of emotion. David, like Abraham, received God's grace despite — and in the midst of — serious sin.
7. Paul quotes Psalm 32:1-2 (LXX 31:1-2), traditionally attributed to David after his sin with Bathsheba. The two parallel lines use different vocabulary: anomia ('lawless deeds') and hamartiai ('sins') are forgiven and covered respectively. The verb epekalyphthēsan ('were covered') echoes the Hebrew kippur ('to cover, atone') — the very language of atonement.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalms 32:1-2. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The double negative ou mē with the subjunctive logisētai creates the strongest possible denial: the Lord will absolutely never reckon sin to this person's account. The same verb logizomai now describes what God does not do — he refuses to enter sin into the ledger. Justification is not only the crediting of righteousness but the non-crediting of sin.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalms 32:1-2 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. Paul now poses the decisive question that will determine whether Abraham is the father of Jews only or of all believers. The argument hinges on chronology: when was faith credited as righteousness?
10. The chronological argument is simple but devastating: Genesis 15:6 (the crediting of righteousness) precedes Genesis 17 (the institution of circumcision) by at least fourteen years in the biblical narrative. Abraham was justified while still technically a Gentile. This means circumcision was not the basis of his right standing.

11. Paul redefines circumcision: it is a sēmeion ('sign') and sphragida ('seal') — a confirmation of a righteousness already received, not the means of obtaining it. Like a seal on a completed document, circumcision authenticated what faith had already accomplished. The word 'father' (pater) establishes Abraham's spiritual paternity of Gentile believers.
12. The verb stoichousin ('walk in line, follow in step') is a military metaphor — walking in formation, following the same path. Jewish believers must follow Abraham's faith-path, not merely bear his physical mark. Abraham is father of believing Gentiles (v. 11) and of believing Jews (v. 12), but not of unbelieving Jews — a radical redefinition of Abrahamic lineage.
13. The phrase klēronomon kosmon ('heir of the world') goes beyond the specific land promise of Genesis 12-15. Jewish tradition had already expanded Abraham's inheritance to cosmic scope (cf. Sirach 44:21). Paul sees this as fulfilled in the gospel's universal reach. The word spermati ('seed, offspring') is collective, pointing to all Abraham's descendants — both physical and spiritual.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 12-15 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. The verbs kekenōtai ('has been emptied, voided') and katērgētai ('has been nullified') describe devastating consequences: if law-keeping is the condition of inheritance, then faith becomes meaningless and the promise is cancelled. Paul argues that law and promise are different modes of God's relating to his people — promise is unconditional and prior.
15. Paul identifies the law's actual function: not to save but to define and expose sin, thereby activating wrath. The word parabasis ('transgression, violation') differs from hamartia ('sin') — parabasis is specifically the conscious violation of a known commandment. Sin existed before the law (5:13), but transgression (conscious law-breaking) requires a law to break.
16. Paul links faith, grace, and the certainty of the promise in a logical chain: because it is by faith, it is by grace; because it is by grace, it is guaranteed (bebaian, 'firm, secure, reliable'). If the promise depended on human performance, it would be uncertain. The phrase 'father of us all' includes Paul's Gentile readers in Abraham's family.
17. Paul quotes Genesis 17:5. The verb tethika ('I have made/appointed') is a perfect tense — God's declaration makes it an accomplished fact even before the physical fulfillment. The two divine attributes — 'giving life to the dead' and 'calling into existence what does not exist' — describe creation ex nihilo and resurrection. These are the powers Abraham trusted and the powers that raised Jesus (v. 24).
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 17:5. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.

18. The paradox par' elpida ep' elpidi ('against hope, in hope') captures the nature of faith: the circumstances offered no ground for hope (humanly speaking), yet Abraham chose to hope based on God's word. The quotation is from Genesis 15:5, where God tells Abraham to count the stars — the very context of the Genesis 15:6 quotation.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 15:5 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. Some manuscripts read ou katenōēsen ('he did not consider') while the SBLGNT reads katenōēsen without the negative — meaning Abraham did consider the obstacles but was not overcome by them. This is the harder and likely original reading: faith is not denial of reality but trust in God despite reality. The word nenekrōmenon ('made dead, deadened') uses the same root as nekrous ('dead') in verse 17, connecting Abraham's body to the God who raises the dead.
20. The verb diekrithē ('wavered, doubted, was divided') literally means 'to be divided against oneself.' Abraham was not internally torn between faith and doubt. Instead, he was enedunamōthē ('was empowered, strengthened') — the passive suggests God strengthened his faith. The participle dous doxan ('giving glory') shows that faith and worship are inseparable: trusting God's promises is the highest form of glorifying him.
21. The participle plērophorētheis ('being fully convinced, fully assured') means to be carried to full measure — Abraham's conviction was complete, not partial. The logic of faith is simple: God promised; God is able; therefore it will happen. The focus is on God's ability (dynatos), not Abraham's worthiness.
22. Paul returns to Genesis 15:6, closing the circle of the argument. The conjunction dio ('therefore, for this reason') shows that the faith described in verses 18-21 is what Genesis 15:6 was talking about — trust in God's promise against all odds.
22. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 15:6. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
23. Paul explicitly states his hermeneutical principle: Old Testament narratives are not merely historical records but have ongoing relevance for later believers. Scripture was written 'for us' (v. 24). This does not mean the original context is irrelevant but that the pattern of faith established in Abraham is paradigmatic.
24. The parallel between Abraham's faith and Christian faith is precise: Abraham believed in the God who gives life to the dead (v. 17); Christians believe in the God who raised Jesus from the dead. The object of faith is the same life-giving God; only the specific act differs. The title 'our Lord' (ton kyrion hēmōn) applies to the risen Jesus the Septuagint title for YHWH.
25. This verse is likely a pre-Pauline creedal formula that Paul quotes. The verb paredothē ('was delivered up, handed over') echoes Isaiah 53:12 (LXX) and the same verb used of God 'giving over' in 1:24, 26, 28 — but now the direction is reversed. In chapter 1, God gave humanity over to sin; here, God gives his Son over for sinners. The word dikaiōsin ('justification') appears only here and in 5:18 in Paul's letters — it is the noun form of dikaioō ('to justify'). The preposition dia with the accusative can mean 'because of' or 'for the purpose of' — Christ was raised both because our justification was accomplished and in order to secure it.

Summary: Romans 5 opens with the results of justification: peace with God, access to grace, hope of glory, and the ability to rejoice even in suffering (vv. 1-11). God's love is poured into believers' hearts through the Holy Spirit, and Christ's death for the ungodly is the supreme proof of that love. The chapter then shifts to a sweeping Adam-Christ comparison (vv. 12-21): through one man sin and death entered the world; through one man grace and life overflow. Where sin increased, grace overflowed all the more.

*What Makes This Remarkable: Verses 1-11 present the most comprehensive summary of the benefits of justification in the New Testament. The 'boasting in suffering' sequence (vv. 3-5) — suffering produces endurance, endurance produces character, character produces hope — is not Stoic endurance but eschatological hope grounded in the Holy Spirit. The Adam-Christ typology (vv. 12-21) is Paul's most ambitious theological construction, treating the entire human race as represented by two figures. The rhetorical crescendo of 'much more' (pollō mallon, vv. 9, 10, 15, 17) drives the argument: if God did the harder thing (dying for enemies), how much more will he do the easier thing (saving those now reconciled).*

Translation Friction: Verse 12 contains a famously difficult clause: eph' hō pantes hēmarton ('because all sinned'). This has been read as 'because all sinned [in Adam]' (Augustine), 'because all sinned [individually]' (Pelagius), or 'with the result that all sinned.' We render the causal sense ('because all sinned') while noting the ambiguity. The precise nature of Adam's headship over humanity — federal representation, biological inheritance, or archetypal pattern — is debated.

Connections: The peace and reconciliation themes (vv. 1, 10-11) connect to 2 Corinthians 5:18-21. The Adam-Christ typology is developed further in 1 Corinthians 15:21-22, 45-49. The Spirit's role in pouring out love (v. 5) anticipates Romans 8. The 'reign of grace through righteousness' (v. 21) prepares for the 'shall we sin that grace may abound?' question of 6:1.

¹Therefore, since we have been justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, ²By whom as well we possess access by path of trust into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in confident expectation of the glory of God. ³Not only that, but we also rejoice in our sufferings, knowing that suffering produces endurance, ⁴Indeed, patience, experience. And experience, hope:. ⁵Indeed, hope makes not ashamed. Because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit which is given to us. ⁶For while we were still weak, at the right time Christ died for the ungodly. ⁷For one would scarcely die for a righteous person — though perhaps for a good person someone might even dare to die. ⁸But God demonstrates his own love for us in this: while we were still sinners, Christ died for us. ⁹How much more then, having now been justified by his blood, will we be saved through him from the wrath. ¹⁰For if while we were enemies we were reconciled to God through the death of his Son, how much more, having been reconciled, will we be saved by his life. ¹¹Not only that, but we also rejoice in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, through whom we have now received reconciliation. ¹²Therefore, just as sin entered the world through one man, and death through sin, and in this way death spread to all people, because all sinned — ¹³For until the instruction of Moses wrongdoing was in the world — but sin is not imputed when there is no law. ¹⁴Yet death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over those whose sinning was not like Adam's transgression. Adam is a type of the one who was to come. ¹⁵But the free gift is not like the trespass. For if the many died through the one man's trespass, how much more have the grace of God and the free gift by the grace of that one man, Jesus Christ, overflowed to the many. ¹⁶And the gift is not like the result of that one man's sin. For the judgment following one trespass brought condemnation, but the free gift following many trespasses brought justification. ¹⁷For if, because of one man's trespass, death reigned through that one man, how much more will those who receive the abundance of grace and the free gift of righteousness reign in life through the one man, Jesus Christ. ¹⁸Therefore, as one trespass led to condemnation for all people, so one act of righteousness leads to justification and life for all people. ¹⁹For just as through the one man's disobedience the many were made sinners, so also through the one man's obedience the many will be made righteous. ²⁰Now the law came in alongside so that the trespass would increase. But where sin increased, grace overflowed all the more, ²¹That as sin has reigned to death, even so might grace reign by way of righteousness to eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. A significant textual variant exists: some manuscripts read echomen ('we have,' indicative) while others read echōmen ('let us have,' subjunctive). The indicative is preferred (SBLGNT) because Paul is stating the result of justification, not issuing an exhortation. The whole section (vv. 1-11) describes what is true of the justified, not what they should pursue.
2. The word prosagōgēn ('access, introduction, approach') is a court term — the prosagōgeus was the official who introduced visitors to a king. Christ is the one who ushers believers into the royal presence of grace. The perfect tense hestēkamen ('we stand') indicates a settled, secure position. The verb kauchōmetha ('we boast, rejoice, exult') resumes the boasting theme from 2:17 and 3:27 — boasting is not eliminated but redirected from self to God's glory.
3. The shift from rejoicing in hope (v. 2) to rejoicing in suffering (v. 3) is deliberate and paradoxical. The Greek thlipsis ('tribulation, suffering, pressure') refers to the afflictions that accompany faith in the present age. Paul does not say suffering is good but that it produces something good. The verb katergazetai ('produces, works out, accomplishes') describes a process with an intended outcome.
4. The word dokimēn ('proven character, tested quality') describes metal that has passed through fire and been verified as genuine. The KJV's 'experience' misses this — the idea is character that has been tested and approved. The chain of progression (suffering endurance character hope) is not automatic but describes the Spirit-empowered process of maturation.

5. The verb ekkechytai ('has been poured out') is a perfect tense — the pouring happened and the love remains. The image is of abundant, overflowing love. This is the first mention of the Holy Spirit in Romans since 1:4, and it introduces the Spirit's crucial role that will dominate chapter 8. The phrase 'love of God' (agapē tou theou) is primarily God's love for us (subjective genitive), not our love for God, as the following verses (6-10) demonstrate.
6. The word asthenōn ('weak, powerless, helpless') describes humanity's inability to save itself. The phrase kata kairon ('at the right time, at the appointed time') echoes Galatians 4:4 ('when the fullness of time had come'). Paul uses three terms to describe those for whom Christ died: 'weak' (v. 6), 'sinners' (v. 8), and 'enemies' (v. 10) — an escalating description of unworthiness.
7. Paul distinguishes between dikaioi ('righteous' — one who meets obligations) and agathos ('good' — one who goes beyond obligations, who is generous and beneficent). Even for such people, voluntary death is rare. The word tolma ('dare') suggests that dying for another requires exceptional courage. The point of the comparison: what Christ did (dying for the ungodly) exceeds what anyone would do even for the best of people.
8. The verb synistēsai ('demonstrates, proves, shows') is present tense — God's love is not a past event but an ongoing demonstration. The cross is the permanent exhibit of divine love. The phrase eti hamartōlōn ontōn hēmōn ('while we were still sinners') is the crucial qualifier: God's love is not a response to human worthiness but an initiative toward the unworthy.
9. The first of the 'much more' (pollō mallon) arguments. The logic: if God did the costly thing (justifying enemies by Christ's blood), how much more will he do the less costly thing (preserving the already-justified from final wrath). 'The wrath' (tēs orgēs) with the definite article points to the eschatological day of wrath (2:5). Justification is past; salvation from wrath is future — a reminder that salvation has a 'not yet' dimension.
10. The word echthroi ('enemies') is the strongest of the three descriptions (weak, sinners, enemies). Reconciliation (katallassō) is a relational metaphor — the restoration of a broken relationship. The two-stage argument: reconciliation comes through Christ's death; ongoing salvation comes through his life (his resurrection life and continuing intercession, cf. 8:34). This 'much more' is the second in the series.
11. The section that began with peace (v. 1) ends with rejoicing. The word katallagēn ('reconciliation') is better than the KJV's 'atonement,' which in modern English suggests the means of reconciliation rather than the reconciled state itself. The verb elabomen ('we received') is aorist — reconciliation is a completed gift, already possessed.
12. This verse begins a sentence Paul never completes — the 'just as' (hōsper) expects a 'so also' that does not arrive until verse 18. The parenthetical material (vv. 13-17) interrupts the comparison. The phrase eph' hō pantes hēmarton is one of the most debated in the New Testament. The Latin Vulgate's 'in quo' ('in whom') led to the Augustinian doctrine of original sin — all sinned 'in Adam.' The Greek more naturally reads 'because' (eph' hō as a causal conjunction). We render the causal sense while acknowledging the complexity.
12. Sin is personified as an invading power that 'entered' (eisēlthen) the world. Death came 'through' (dia) sin — death is sin's consequence and agent. Paul traces the universal human condition to a historical origin in Adam.
13. Paul addresses a logical problem: if sin is transgression of a known law, how can sin exist before the law was given? His answer: sin was present but not formally 'counted' (ellogeitai, an accounting term meaning 'charged to one's account'). The word ellogeitai is related to logizomai from chapter 4 but emphasizes formal bookkeeping.
14. The verb ebasileusen ('reigned') personifies death as a king — a monarch whose rule extends over all humanity from Adam to Moses (the pre-law period). People died even though they had not sinned by violating a specific divine command as Adam had. The word typos ('type, pattern, figure') introduces typology: Adam foreshadows Christ. Paul will now show how the type and the antitype both correspond and differ.
15. Paul insists the analogy breaks down because the gift far exceeds the trespass. The third 'much more' (pollō mallon). The word charisma ('gift of grace, free gift') shares the root of charis ('grace'). The phrase hoi polloi ('the many') in Semitic idiom means 'the totality, the great number' — not 'many but not all.' The verb eperisseusen ('overflowed, abounded') means the gift doesn't merely match the damage but far surpasses it.
16. A second contrast: the judgment (krima) came from one sin (Adam's) and resulted in condemnation (katakrima); the gift (charisma) dealt with many trespasses and resulted in justification (dikaiōma, 'righteous verdict, acquittal'). The asymmetry is staggering: one sin condemnation for all; many sins justification for all who believe. Grace is not merely proportional to sin but exponentially exceeds it.
17. The fourth 'much more.' The stunning shift: in the Adam-regime, death reigned over people; in the Christ-regime, people reign over death. Believers are not merely rescued from death's kingdom but enthroned in life's kingdom. The phrase perisseian tēs charitos ('abundance of grace') uses the language of overflow and excess. The gift is not just righteousness but the gift of righteousness — dikaiōsynē as something received, not achieved.
18. Paul finally completes the sentence begun in verse 12. The parallel is precise: one trespass (paraptōmatos) all people condemnation; one righteous act (dikaiōmatos) all people justification of life. The phrase dikaiōsin zōēs ('justification of life') ties justification to its result — not merely a legal verdict but life itself. The 'all people' (pantas anthrōpous) in the second half has been debated: universalists read it as universal salvation; most interpreters qualify it by the reception language of verse 17 ('those who receive').
19. The contrast between parakoēs ('disobedience' — literally 'hearing amiss') and hypakoēs ('obedience' — literally 'hearing under, heeding') connects to 1:5 ('obedience of faith'). Christ's obedience refers to his entire life of faithful submission to the Father's will, culminating in the cross (cf. Philippians 2:8). The verb katestathēsan/katastathēsontai ('were constituted, will be constituted') may mean 'made' or 'appointed to the category of.'
20. The verb pareisēlthen ('came in alongside, entered as a side-issue') is striking — the law is not the main storyline but a subsidiary element in the Adam-Christ drama. The purpose clause hina pleonasē ('so that the trespass would increase') is intentionally provocative: the law's purpose was not to reduce sin but to multiply it (by making sin conscious and deliberate, cf. 7:7-13). The verb hypereperisseusen ('super-abounded, overflowed exceedingly') is a double-compound superlative — Paul coins an extravagant word to express the extravagance of grace.

21. The chapter concludes with two personified monarchs: sin reigned through death (its instrument), and grace now reigns through righteousness (its instrument) leading to eternal life. The phrase dia dikaiosynēs ('through righteousness') is crucial — grace does not bypass righteousness but operates through it. God's grace and God's justice are not in competition. The chapter ends where every major section of Romans ends — with Jesus Christ our Lord.

Summary: Romans 6 answers the objection provoked by 5:20-21: if grace increases where sin increases, should believers keep sinning to get more grace? Paul's emphatic answer is no — believers have died to sin through baptism into Christ's death and have been raised to walk in newness of life. The old self was crucified so that the body of sin would be rendered powerless. Believers are now dead to sin and alive to God. The chapter then addresses a second form of the question (v. 15): since believers are under grace, not law, can they sin freely? Again no — they have changed masters, from sin leading to death to obedience leading to righteousness. They are now slaves of righteousness.

What Makes This Remarkable: Paul's baptismal theology here is the most developed in his letters. Baptism is not merely a ritual of initiation but a participation in Christ's death, burial, and resurrection. The 'old self' (palaios anthrōpos, v. 6) was co-crucified with Christ — a past, completed event. The slavery metaphor (vv. 15-23) is deliberately provocative: true freedom is not autonomy but willing submission to the right master. The chapter's logic is identity-based: believers do not avoid sin to become righteous; they avoid sin because they are righteous — their identity has changed.

Translation Friction: The relationship between the indicative ('you have died to sin') and the imperative ('do not let sin reign') is central to Pauline ethics and has been variously interpreted. We render both as Paul states them without resolving the tension. The phrase 'body of sin' (sōma tēs hamartias, v. 6) may mean 'the sinful body,' 'the body dominated by sin,' or 'sin considered as a body/corporate entity.'

Connections: The baptismal language connects to Galatians 3:27 and Colossians 2:12. The 'old self/new self' contrast develops in Ephesians 4:22-24 and Colossians 3:9-10. The slavery-to-righteousness theme echoes 1 Corinthians 7:22. The 'wages of sin is death' conclusion (v. 23) is one of the most quoted verses in Christian tradition.

¹What shall we say then? Should we continue in sin so that grace may increase? ²Absolutely not! How can we who died to sin still live in it? ³Or do you not know that all of us who were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into his death? ⁴We were therefore buried with him through baptism into death, so that just as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of the Father, we too might walk in newness of life. ⁵For if we have been united with him in a death like his, we will certainly also be united with him in a resurrection like his. ⁶We know this: that our old self was crucified with him so that the body of sin might be rendered powerless, so that we would no longer be enslaved to sin. ⁷For the one who has died has been set free from sin. ⁸Now if we died with Christ, we believe that we will also live with him. ⁹We know that Christ, having been raised from the dead, will never die again. Death no longer has mastery over him. ¹⁰For the death he died, he died to sin once for all; but the life he lives, he lives to God. ¹¹In the same way, consider yourselves dead to sin and alive to God in Christ Jesus. ¹²Therefore, do not let sin reign in your mortal body so that you obey its desires. ¹³Do not present your members to sin as instruments of unrighteousness, but present yourselves to God as those who have been brought from death to life, and your members to God as instruments of righteousness. ¹⁴For sin will not have mastery over you, since you are not under law but under grace. ¹⁵What then? Should we sin because we are not under law but under grace? Absolutely not! ¹⁶Do you not know that if you present yourselves to anyone as obedient slaves, you are slaves of the one you obey — either of sin leading to death, or of obedience leading to righteousness? ¹⁷But thanks be to God that although you were once slaves of sin, you have become obedient from the heart to the pattern of teaching to which you were entrusted, ¹⁸Having been set free from sin, you became slaves of righteousness. ¹⁹I am speaking in human terms because of the weakness of your flesh. For just as you once presented your members as slaves to impurity and to lawlessness leading to more lawlessness, so now present your members as slaves to righteousness leading to sanctification. ²⁰For when you were slaves of sin, you were free in regard to righteousness. ²¹What fruit did you reap at that time from the things of which you are now ashamed? For the outcome of those things is death. ²²But now that you have been set free from sin and have become slaves of God, the fruit you reap leads to sanctification, and the outcome is eternal life. ²³For the wages of sin is death, but the free gift of God is eternal life in Christ Jesus our Lord.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The deliberative subjunctive epimenōmen ('should we continue, shall we remain') poses a question Paul's opponents actually raised (cf. 3:8). The verb epimenō means to remain in a place or state — to persist in sin as a way of life. Paul takes the objection seriously because it follows logically from 5:20 if grace is misunderstood as mere permission.
2. The aorist apethanomen ('we died') describes a definitive past event, not an ongoing process. The dative tē hamartia ('to sin') indicates separation — death severs the relationship. Paul's argument is not moral exhortation ('you should not sin') but ontological declaration ('you have died to sin') — continuing in sin contradicts who believers now are.
3. The phrase eis Christon Iēsoun ('into Christ Jesus') indicates incorporation — baptism unites the believer to Christ's person and story. The phrase eis ton thanaton autou ('into his death') specifies the particular aspect of Christ's story that baptism enacts. Paul assumes his readers know the basic baptismal theology — the question 'do you not know?' (ē agnoeite) implies established teaching.
4. The compound verb synetaphēmen ('we were co-buried') emphasizes union with Christ — his burial became our burial. The phrase dia tēs doxēs tou patros ('through the glory of the Father') attributes resurrection power to the Father's kavod — his weighty, substantial, overwhelming power. The phrase kainotēti zōēs ('newness of life') is qualitative: not merely continued existence but a fundamentally different kind of life. The verb peripatēsōmen ('we might walk') uses the Hebrew metaphor of 'walking' for daily conduct.
5. The adjective symphytoi ('grown together, united, fused') suggests organic union, like a graft into a living tree. The word homoīōmati ('likeness, form') indicates that baptism is an enacted likeness of Christ's death, not the death itself. The future esometha ('we will be') may refer to the final bodily resurrection or to present resurrection-life — the ambiguity is likely intentional.
6. The phrase palaios anthrōpos ('old self, old person, old humanity') refers to who the believer was in Adam — the entire pre-Christ identity. The verb synestaurōthē ('was co-crucified') is an aorist passive — a completed event, not an ongoing process. The verb katargēthē ('might be rendered powerless, nullified, put out of commission') does not mean 'destroyed' (KJV) but 'made ineffective' — the body is not annihilated but freed from sin's control. The verb douleuein ('to serve as a slave') identifies the prior condition as slavery.
7. The verb dedikaiōtai ('has been justified, freed, acquitted') is the same verb used for justification in chapters 3-5, here applied to the believer's liberation from sin's mastery. A dead person has no further obligation to a former master. Paul applies a legal principle: death cancels all claims.
8. The conditional ei ('if') assumes the reality of the condition — 'since we died with Christ.' The verb syzēsomen ('we will co-live') is future, suggesting that while death with Christ is past and completed, the fullness of life with Christ awaits the resurrection. However, present resurrection-life is also implied (cf. v. 4, 'walk in newness of life').
9. The verb kyrieuei ('has mastery, lords over, dominates') treats death as a would-be lord — but Christ's resurrection broke its claim permanently. The adverb ouketi ('no longer') implies death once had a temporary hold on Christ during his passion but was decisively defeated at the resurrection.
10. The word ephapax ('once for all') is emphatic — Christ's death was a unique, unrepeatable event. The dative tē hamartia ('to sin') parallels tō theō ('to God'): Christ's death severed the connection to sin's realm; his life is directed entirely toward God. This pattern — death to sin, life to God — is the template for Christian existence (v. 11).
11. The verb logizesthe ('consider, reckon, count') is the same word used for God's reckoning in chapter 4. Here believers are told to reckon themselves what God has already declared them to be — dead to sin and alive to God. This is not self-deception but faith appropriating an accomplished reality. The phrase en Christō Iēsou ('in Christ Jesus') is Paul's most characteristic phrase, denoting the new sphere of existence in which the believer lives.
12. The shift from indicative (vv. 2-11, what is true) to imperative (vv. 12-14, what to do) is the hallmark of Pauline ethics: become what you are. The verb basileuetō ('let reign') echoes the personification of sin as king from 5:21. The phrase thnētō sōmati ('mortal body') acknowledges that the body remains subject to death and therefore vulnerable to sin's attempts to reassert control.
13. The word hopla can mean 'instruments' or 'weapons' — the military connotation fits the context of two competing kingdoms. The verb paristanete/parastēsate shifts from present imperative (stop the ongoing practice) to aorist imperative (make a decisive commitment). The phrase hōsei ek nekrōn zōntas ('as those alive from the dead') grounds the imperative in the indicative — believers can choose God because they have already been raised with Christ.
14. This is a promise, not a command: sin will not master you. The reason is surprising: not 'because you try harder' but 'because you are under grace, not under law.' Paul implies that law actually empowers sin rather than defeating it (a theme he develops in chapter 7). Grace, not moral effort, is sin's antidote. This statement provokes the next question in verse 15.
15. A second version of the opening question (v. 1), now triggered by verse 14. The verb hamartēsōmen is aorist subjunctive — 'should we commit acts of sin?' (punctiliar) rather than the present tense of verse 1 ('should we continue in sin?' — habitual). Paul addresses both the lifestyle of sin and individual sinful acts.

16. Paul introduces the slavery metaphor that dominates the rest of the chapter. The logic is straightforward: everyone serves someone. The only question is which master. The two options are mutually exclusive: sin death, or obedience righteousness. There is no neutral ground, no true autonomy. The second option ('obedience') is the opposite of sin, not a separate concept from faith (cf. 1:5, 'obedience of faith').
17. The past tense ête ('you were') marks a definitive change of status. The phrase ek kardias ('from the heart') indicates genuine, interior transformation, not mere external compliance. The phrase typon didachēs ('pattern of teaching') refers to the body of apostolic instruction about the gospel. The passive paredothēte ('you were entrusted/delivered') is unusual — normally teaching is delivered to people, but here people are delivered to teaching. The gospel is the master to whom they have been handed over.
18. The passive eleutherōthentes ('having been freed') attributes liberation to God's action. The paradox is deliberate: freedom from sin is slavery to righteousness. True freedom is not the absence of all obligation but service to the right master. The language of slavery is uncomfortable — Paul will acknowledge this in verse 19.
19. Paul apologizes for the slavery metaphor — anthrōpinon legō ('I speak in human terms') acknowledges that comparing service to God with slavery is inadequate. The phrase 'weakness of your flesh' means their limited human capacity to grasp spiritual realities. The progression anomia eis anomian ('lawlessness to lawlessness') describes sin's self-compounding nature; the parallel hagiasmon ('sanctification, holiness') describes the progressive outworking of the new identity.
20. The ironic 'freedom' — when enslaved to sin, they were 'free' from righteousness, meaning righteousness had no claim on them. This is not genuine freedom but its perverse inversion. Paul is pointing out the absurdity: no one boasts of that kind of freedom.
21. The agricultural metaphor of 'fruit' (karpos) asks about the harvest of the former life. The answer is shame and death. The verb epaischynesthe ('you are ashamed') uses the same root as 1:16 ('I am not ashamed of the gospel') — the contrast is pointed. The word telos ('end, outcome, goal') can mean both 'result' and 'destination.'
22. The 'but now' (nyni de) mirrors 3:21 — marking the decisive change from the old situation to the new. The fruit contrast is complete: sin's fruit shame and death (v. 21); God's slavery sanctification and eternal life (v. 22). The word hagiasmon ('sanctification') here denotes the progressive transformation of the believer's life.
23. The word opsōnia ('wages, soldier's pay, rations') is a military term for the compensation a soldier earns. Sin pays what it owes: death. The contrast with charisma ('free gift') is absolute: death is earned; eternal life is given. Paul deliberately avoids saying 'the wages of righteousness is eternal life' — life is never a wage earned but always a gift received. The chapter ends, as always in Romans, with the phrase 'in Christ Jesus our Lord.'

Summary: Romans 7 explores the believer's relationship to the law. Using a marriage analogy, Paul argues that death releases one from legal obligations — believers have died to the law through Christ's body to belong to the risen Christ. He then defends the law itself: the law is not sin, but sin used the law's commandment to provoke desire and bring death. The chapter's second half (vv. 14-25) contains Paul's famous description of inner conflict — wanting to do good but doing evil instead — culminating in the cry 'Wretched man that I am! Who will deliver me from this body of death?'

What Makes This Remarkable: The identity of the 'I' in verses 14-25 is one of the most debated questions in Pauline scholarship. Is Paul describing (1) his pre-conversion experience as a Jew under the law, (2) the ongoing struggle of the Christian believer, (3) Adam's fall, or (4) unregenerate humanity seen from a Christian perspective? The shift from past tense (vv. 7-13) to present tense (vv. 14-25) is the primary evidence for reading it as present Christian experience, though this is not conclusive. The passage has resonated profoundly with readers across centuries precisely because the struggle it describes is universally recognizable.

Translation Friction: We render the present tense of vv. 14-25 as present tense without resolving whether Paul describes Christian or pre-Christian experience. The marriage analogy (vv. 1-4) has been criticized as imprecise — in the analogy, the husband dies; in the application, the believer dies — but Paul's point is the legal principle (death ends obligation), not a precise one-to-one correspondence.

Connections: The marriage analogy connects to 2 Corinthians 11:2 and Ephesians 5:25-32. The 'I' passage echoes Ovid's Medea ('I see and approve the better, I follow the worse') and similar Greco-Roman moral psychology. The cry of verse 24 is answered by 8:1-2. The role of the law in provoking sin connects to Galatians 3:19-24. The 'law of sin' (v. 25) anticipates the 'law of the Spirit' (8:2).

¹Or do you not know, brothers and sisters — for I am speaking to those who know the law — that the law has authority over a person only as long as that person lives? ²For a married woman is bound by law to her husband while he lives, but if her husband dies, she is released from the law regarding the husband. ³So then, if she is joined to another man while her husband is living, she will be called an adulteress. But if her husband dies, she is free from that law, and if she is joined to another man, she is not an adulteress. ⁴Therefore, my brothers and sisters, you also have died to the law through the body of Christ, so that you may belong to another — to him who was raised from the dead — in order that we may bear fruit for God. ⁵For while we were living in the flesh, our sinful passions, aroused by the law, were at work in our members to bear fruit for death. ⁶But now we have been released from the law, having died to that which held us captive, so that we serve in the new way of the Spirit and not in the old way of the written code. ⁷What shall we say then? Is the law sin? Absolutely not! Yet I would not have known sin except through the law. For I would not have known covetousness if the law had not said, "You shall not covet." ⁸But sin, seizing an opportunity through the commandment, produced in me every kind of covetous desire. For apart from the law, sin lies dead. ⁹I was once alive apart from the law, but when the commandment came, sin sprang to life, ¹⁰I died — and the commandment, which was ordained to life, I discovered to be to death. ¹¹For sin, seizing an opportunity through the commandment, deceived me and through it killed me. ¹²So the law is holy, and the commandment is holy, righteous, and good. ¹³Did what is good, then, become death to me? Absolutely not! It was sin — in order that sin might be exposed as sin — producing death in me through what is good, so that through the commandment sin might become utterly sinful. ¹⁴For we know that the law is spiritual, but I am of the flesh, sold under sin. ¹⁵For I do not understand my own actions. For I do not do what I want, but I do the very thing I hate. ¹⁶Now if I do what I do not want, I agree with the law that it is good. ¹⁷But as it is, it is no longer I who do it, but sin that dwells in me. ¹⁸For I know that nothing good dwells in me, that is, in my flesh. For the desire to do what is right is present with me, but the ability to carry it out is not. ¹⁹For I do not do the good I want to do, but the evil I do not want — that is what I keep doing. ²⁰Now if I do what I do not want, it is no longer I who do it, but sin that dwells in me. ²¹So I find this principle at work: when I want to do good, evil lies close at hand. ²²For I delight in God's law in my inner being, ²³However, I see another law in my members, warring opposed to the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members. ²⁴Wretched man that I am! Who will rescue me from this body of death? ²⁵Thanks be to God through Jesus Christ our Lord! So then, I myself serve the law of God with my mind, but with my flesh I serve the law of sin.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The parenthetical 'those who know the law' (ginōskousin nomon) addresses hearers familiar with Torah, likely Jewish Christians or God-fearers in the Roman church. The verb kyrieuei ('has authority, exercises lordship') echoes 6:9 and 6:14 — the question is who or what has mastery. Paul's principle is basic: legal obligations bind the living, not the dead.
2. The adjective hypandros ('under a man, married') is a legal term for a woman under marital authority. The verb katērgētai ('is released, discharged, freed') is the same word used for 'rendered powerless' in 6:6. Death dissolves legal bonds. The illustration draws on the Torah's own marriage laws.
3. The verb chrēmāteisei ('will be designated, called, publicly labeled') is a formal, official designation — not mere gossip but a legal status. Paul's point is established: death changes legal relationships. The analogy is imperfect by design — Paul is illustrating a principle, not constructing an allegory.
4. In the application, it is the believer who dies (to the law), not the law itself. The phrase dia tou sōmatos tou Christou ('through the body of Christ') refers to Christ's physical death on the cross, in which believers participate (6:3-6). The word heteros ('another') is the second husband in the analogy — the risen Christ. The purpose of the new union is fruitfulness (karpophorēsōmen, 'bear fruit'), contrasting with the 'fruit of death' in verse 5.
5. The phrase en tē sarki ('in the flesh') describes the pre-conversion state dominated by the sinful nature, not merely physical existence. The explosive phrase ta dia tou nomou ('those through the law') directly states that the law aroused sinful passions — a claim Paul will develop in verses 7-13. The fruit imagery is inverted: instead of fruit for God (v. 4), the old life produced fruit for death.
6. The verb katērgēthēmen ('we have been released, discharged') echoes verses 2-3. The contrast between 'newness of Spirit' (kainotēti pneumatōs) and 'oldness of letter' (palaiotēti grammatos) parallels 2:29 and anticipates 8:2-4. The Spirit replaces the written code as the governing principle of the believer's life. This does not mean the law's content is abandoned but that the mode of obedience has changed.
7. Paul defends the law against the implication of verse 5. The law is not sinful but diagnostic — it reveals sin. The tenth commandment (ouk epithymēseis, 'you shall not covet,' Exodus 20:17) is chosen because covetousness is an internal desire, not an external act. This suggests that the law's deepest function is to expose the interior disposition of the heart, not merely to regulate behavior. The switch to first person 'I' (egō) begins here.

7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 20:17. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The word aphormēn ('opportunity, base of operations, launching point') is a military term for a beachhead from which to mount an attack. Sin is personified as a strategist who uses the commandment as a base of operations. The paradox is that the good commandment became the instrument of evil. The phrase chōris nomou hamartia nekra ('apart from the law, sin is dead') does not mean sin does not exist without law but that it lies dormant, unactivated.
9. The phrase 'I was alive apart from the law' likely alludes to Adam's pre-fall state in Eden or to Paul's pre-bar-mitzvah childhood before conscious moral accountability. The verb anezēsen ('came back to life, revived') implies sin was dormant and the commandment reawakened it. The language echoes Genesis 2-3: a command given, a prohibition, and sin exploiting the prohibition.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 2-3:. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The ironic reversal: the commandment was eis zōēn ('toward life') by design but eis thanaton ('toward death') in effect. Leviticus 18:5 promises 'the one who does these things will live by them,' but in the hands of sin, the commandment became an instrument of death. Paul is not blaming the law but the power of sin that hijacks it.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Leviticus 18:5 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The verb exēpatēsen ('deceived, thoroughly deluded') echoes Genesis 3:13, where Eve says 'the serpent deceived me.' Paul presents sin as the true serpent — the commandment is the tree, and sin is the deceiver who uses the prohibition to entice. The verb apekteinen ('killed') makes sin a murderer who uses the law as its weapon.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 3:13. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. Paul's conclusion exonerates the law completely. Three adjectives defend the commandment: hagia ('holy' — set apart by God), dikaia ('righteous' — in accord with God's character), and agathē ('good' — beneficial in purpose). The problem is not the law but sin's exploitation of it. This is Paul's most positive statement about the law in Romans.
13. The double purpose clause is important: the law exposes sin's true nature. By using something good (the commandment) to produce something evil (death), sin reveals itself as kath' hyperbolēn hamartōlos ('exceedingly sinful, sinful beyond measure'). The law functions as a diagnostic that makes the disease visible in its full severity.
14. The shift to present tense begins here and continues through verse 25. The adjective pneumatikos ('spiritual') affirms the law's divine origin. The adjective sarkinos ('made of flesh, fleshly') describes the human condition in stark contrast. The phrase pepramenos hypo tēn hamartian ('sold under sin') uses slave-market language — a person sold into slavery to a master called Sin. This echoes 1 Kings 21:20, 25 (LXX), where Ahab is said to have 'sold himself to do evil.'
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes 1 Kings 21:20. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The verb katēgazomai ('accomplish, produce, carry out') describes the actual result of one's actions. The verb ginōskō ('know, understand') here means 'comprehend, recognize as mine' — the 'I' is bewildered by its own behavior. The three-part confession — I do not do what I want; I do what I hate — describes the fragmentation of the will that sin produces. The language resonates with Ovid's Medea: 'video meliora proboque, deteriora sequor' ('I see the better and approve it; I follow the worse').
16. The verb sympḗmi ('agree, consent, concur') means that the divided will of the 'I' — wanting the good but doing the evil — proves that the law is kalos ('good, beautiful, admirable'). The desire for good, even when unfulfilled, is itself a testimony to the law's goodness.
17. Paul distinguishes the 'I' (the willing self that approves the good) from 'sin dwelling in me' (the alien power that produces the evil). This is not an evasion of responsibility but an analysis of the human predicament: sin has colonized the self. The verb oikousa ('dwelling, residing') presents sin as a resident alien occupying the territory of the self.
18. The crucial qualifier tout' estin en tē sarki mou ('that is, in my flesh') limits the claim. Paul does not say the self is entirely devoid of good — the inner self desires the good (v. 22) — but the flesh (the unredeemed human condition) is incapable of producing it. The verb parakeitai ('is present, lies at hand') means the will is available but the execution is not.
19. A restatement of verse 15 with heightened intensity. The verb prassō (present tense, 'I keep doing') emphasizes the repetitive, habitual nature of the failure. The parallel structure — 'the good I want / I do not do' and 'the evil I do not want / I practice' — creates a rhetorical cage from which the 'I' cannot escape.
20. A repetition of verse 17, reinforcing the conclusion: the true 'I' and indwelling sin are distinguishable. This is not philosophical dualism (two equal powers) but a description of the enslaved will — the self wants the good but is overpowered by sin's occupation.
21. The word nomos ('law') here means 'principle' or 'pattern' rather than the Torah — a regularity Paul has discovered through experience. The verb parakeitai ('lies close at hand, is present') from verse 18 now applies to evil rather than the desire for good. Evil is always the closer companion.

22. The verb synēdomai ('I delight in, rejoice with') expresses genuine joy in God's law — this is not reluctant compliance but heartfelt approval. The phrase esō anthrōpon ('inner person, inner self') describes the deepest part of the self, the part that aligns with God's purposes. This inner delight in the law echoes Psalm 1:2 and 119:97.
22. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalm 1:2. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
23. Three 'laws' (principles) are in play: the law of God (v. 22), the law of the mind (tō nomō tou noos, the rational self that approves God's law), and the law of sin (tō nomō tēs hamartias, sin's governing principle operating in the body). The military metaphors antistrateuomenon ('waging war against') and aichmalōtizonta ('capturing, taking prisoner') depict an internal battle the 'I' is losing. This sets up the desperate cry of verse 24.
24. The exclamation talaipōros ('wretched, miserable, pitiable') is a cry of anguish, not self-pity. The phrase sōmatos tou thanatou toutou ('this body of death') may mean 'this body doomed to death,' 'this body in which death operates,' or 'this deathly body.' The question 'who?' (tis) is the crucial word — the 'I' has exhausted all self-rescue options and can only look outside itself for deliverance.
25. The thanksgiving answers the question of verse 24: deliverance comes through Jesus Christ. The summary statement that follows describes the dual reality: the mind (nous) serves God's law, while the flesh (sarx) serves sin's law. This tension, unresolved in chapter 7, is resolved in chapter 8 through the Spirit. The phrase autos egō ('I myself') emphasizes that this divided condition describes the same person — not two people but one person in two simultaneous states.

Summary: Romans 8 is the climax of Paul's theological argument, moving from no condemnation (v. 1) to no separation (v. 39). The Spirit — mentioned only once in chapters 1-7 (apart from 1:4 and 5:5) — appears over twenty times here, replacing the law as the governing power of the believer's life. The Spirit sets free from sin and death, fulfills the law's requirement, gives life, adopts believers as God's children, and intercedes for them. Paul then discusses the groaning of creation, the groaning of believers, and the groaning of the Spirit, all awaiting final redemption. The chapter concludes with one of the most soaring passages in all of Scripture: God works all things together for good, and nothing in all creation can separate believers from God's love in Christ Jesus.

What Makes This Remarkable: *This chapter moves from cosmic theology (creation groaning) to intimate personal assurance (the Spirit crying 'Abba, Father') to majestic doxology (nothing can separate us). The 'golden chain' of verse 29-30 (foreknew, predestined, called, justified, glorified) presents salvation as an unbreakable divine sequence. The shift to 'glorified' in the past tense (edoxasen) — treating the future consummation as already accomplished — is one of the boldest grammatical choices in the New Testament. The chapter's final question-and-answer series (vv. 31-39) is structured as a courtroom drama with God as judge, Christ as advocate, and all possible accusers silenced.*

Translation Friction: The phrase 'the mind set on the flesh is death' (v. 6) and 'those who are in the flesh cannot please God' (v. 8) have been variously interpreted. We render them as describing the unregenerate state, not the ongoing struggle of believers. The 'groaning' of creation (v. 22) uses language of childbirth, not despair — the groaning is productive, anticipating new birth. The list of potential separators (vv. 35, 38-39) reflects first-century cosmological categories (angels, rulers, height, depth) that may correspond to spiritual powers.

Connections: The 'no condemnation' of v. 1 answers the condemnation of 5:16, 18. The Spirit's work fulfilling the law (v. 4) resolves 7:14-25. The adoption language (vv. 15-17, 23) connects to Galatians 4:4-7. The groaning of creation (vv. 19-22) develops Genesis 3:17-19. The 'all things work together for good' (v. 28) is one of the most quoted promises in Scripture. The Psalm 44:22 quotation (v. 36) is the only direct quotation in the chapter.

1There is therefore now no condemnation for those who are in Christ Jesus. 2For the law of the Spirit of life has set you free in Christ Jesus from the law of sin and death. 3For God has done what the law, weakened by the flesh, could not do. By sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh and as a sin offering, he condemned sin in the flesh, 4That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not following the flesh, but following the Spirit. 5For those who live according to the flesh set their minds on the things of the flesh, but those who live according to the Spirit set their minds on the things of the Spirit. 6For the mind set on the flesh is death, but the mind set on the Spirit is life and peace. 7For the mind set on the flesh is hostile to God, for it does not submit to God's law — indeed, it cannot. 8Those who are in the flesh cannot please God. ⁹You, however, are not in the flesh but in the Spirit, if in fact the Spirit of God dwells in you. Anyone who does not have the Spirit of Christ does not belong to him. ¹⁰But if Christ is in you, although the body is dead because of sin, the Spirit is life because of righteousness. ¹¹If the Spirit of him who raised Jesus from the dead dwells in you, he who raised Christ from the dead will also give life to your mortal bodies through his Spirit who dwells in you. ¹²So then, brothers and sisters, we are debtors — not to the flesh, to live according to the flesh. ¹³For if you live according to the flesh, you will die; but if by the Spirit you put to death the deeds of the body, you will live. ¹⁴For all who are led by the Spirit of God are children of God. ¹⁵For you did not receive a spirit of slavery to fall back into fear, but you received the Spirit of adoption as children, by whom we cry, "Abba! Father!" ¹⁶The Spirit himself bears witness with our spirit that we are children of God, ¹⁷If children, then heirs. Heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ. If so be that we suffer with him, that we may be as well glorified as one. ¹⁸For I consider that the sufferings of this present time are not worth comparing with the glory that is about to be revealed to us. ¹⁹For the creation waits with eager longing for the revealing of the children of God. ²⁰For the creation was subjected to futility, not by its own will, but because of him who subjected it, in hope ²¹Indeed, because the creature itself also will be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the God's children. ²²For we know that the whole creation has been groaning together in the pains of childbirth until now. ²³And not only the creation, but we ourselves, who have the firstfruits of the Spirit, groan inwardly as we eagerly await adoption as children — the redemption of our bodies. ²⁴For in this hope we were saved. Now hope that is seen is not hope. For who hopes for what they see? ²⁵But if we hope for what we do not see, we wait for it with endurance. ²⁶Likewise the Spirit also helps us in our weakness. For we do not know what to pray for as we should, but the Spirit himself intercedes for us with groanings too deep for words. ²⁷And he who searches hearts knows what the mind of the Spirit is, because the Spirit intercedes for the saints according to God's will. ²⁸And we know that for those who love God, all things work together for good, for those who are called according to his purpose. ²⁹For those whom he foreknew, he also predestined to be conformed to the image of his Son, so that he might be the firstborn among many brothers and sisters. ³⁰And those whom he predestined, he also called; and those whom he called, he also justified; and those whom he justified, he also glorified. ³¹What then shall we say to these things? If God is for us, who can be against us? ³²He who did not spare his own Son but gave him up for us all — how will he not also, along with him, graciously give us all things? ³³Who will bring a charge against God's chosen ones? It is God who justifies. ³⁴Who is to condemn? Christ Jesus is the one who died — more than that, who was raised — who is at the right hand of God, who indeed is interceding for us. ³⁵Who will separate us from the love of Christ? Will affliction, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or danger, or sword? ³⁶As it is written: "For your sake we are being put to death all day long; we are regarded as sheep to be slaughtered." ³⁷Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors by way of him that loved us. ³⁸For I am convinced that neither death nor life, neither angels nor rulers, neither things present nor things to come, nor powers, ³⁹neither height nor depth, nor anything else in all creation, will be able to separate us from the love of God that is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The SBLGNT text is shorter than the KJV, omitting 'who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit.' This longer reading appears in later manuscripts and was likely assimilated from verse 4. The word ara ('therefore') connects to the entire argument of chapters 1-7: because of justification by faith, union with Christ in death and resurrection, and release from the law, there is now no condemnation.
2. The adverb nyn ('now') is both temporal (in the present age of grace) and logical (given the preceding argument). The preposition en ('in') Christō Iēsou marks the foundational Pauline concept of incorporation into Christ.
3. Two 'laws' (governing principles) are contrasted: the law of the Spirit of life and the law of sin and death (introduced in 7:23, 25). The Spirit is the new governing power that replaces sin's regime. The SBLGNT reads se ('you,' singular) rather than me ('me'), though manuscripts vary. The aorist ēleutherōsen ('set free') points to a completed liberation.
4. The phrase to adynaton tou nomou ('the impossibility of the law') identifies the law's limitation: not a defect in the law itself but in the flesh it addressed (cf. 7:12-14). The phrase en homoiōmati sarkos hamartias ('in the likeness of sinful flesh') is carefully worded: Christ took real human flesh (not merely its appearance) but without the dominion of sin. The phrase peri hamartias ('concerning sin' / 'for sin') may be a technical term for a sin offering (cf. Leviticus 4-5 LXX, where peri hamartias translates the Hebrew chatta't). We render 'as a sin offering' to capture this allusion.

3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Leviticus 4-5 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The word dikaiōma ('righteous requirement, just demand') is singular — the law's fundamental demand. The passive plērōthē ('might be fulfilled') does not specify whether believers fulfill it actively or Christ fulfills it on their behalf — likely both are in view. The Spirit enables the obedience the law demanded but the flesh could not produce. This resolves 3:31 ('do we overthrow the law through faith? We uphold it').
5. The verb phronousin ('set their minds on, are oriented toward, give attention to') describes a fundamental orientation of the whole person, not merely intellectual focus. The two groups — kata sarka ('according to the flesh') and kata pneuma ('according to the Spirit') — represent two modes of human existence, not two parts of every person.
6. The word phronēma ('mindset, orientation, way of thinking') appears only in Romans 8 in the New Testament (vv. 6, 7, 27). It describes not individual thoughts but a settled disposition. The flesh-oriented mindset results in thanatos ('death') — not merely physical death but spiritual separation from God. The Spirit-oriented mindset results in zōē ('life') and eirēnē ('peace,' the Hebrew shalom — wholeness and reconciliation with God).
7. The word echthra ('hostility, enmity') is not mere indifference but active opposition to God. The flesh-orientation is structurally incapable of submission to God's law — oude gar dynatai ('nor is it able'). This is not about effort but capacity: the flesh-mind cannot obey God no matter how hard it tries. This explains why the law was 'weakened by the flesh' (v. 3).
8. The phrase en sarki ontes ('being in the flesh') describes an unregenerate state, not the mere fact of having a physical body. Believers still have physical bodies but are no longer 'in the flesh' in Paul's theological sense — they are 'in the Spirit' (v. 9). The verb aresai ('to please') echoes the Old Testament language of what is pleasing to God.
9. Paul uses three titles interchangeably: 'the Spirit' (to pneuma), 'the Spirit of God' (pneuma theou), and 'the Spirit of Christ' (pneuma Christou) — indicating that the Spirit proceeds from both the Father and the Son. The conditional eiper ('if indeed, assuming that') assumes the condition is true for his readers. The negative statement is defining: possession of the Spirit is the essential mark of belonging to Christ.
10. The interchange continues: verse 9 said the Spirit is in you; verse 10 says Christ is in you — the Spirit mediates Christ's indwelling. The body remains 'dead' (nekron) in the sense that it is mortal and still subject to sin's legacy of physical death. But the Spirit is 'life' (zōē) — present tense reality, not merely future promise. The phrase dia dikaiosynēn ('because of righteousness') can mean 'because of the righteousness God has granted' or 'for the purpose of righteous living.'
11. The logic is simple and powerful: the same Spirit who raised Jesus now lives in believers; therefore, that Spirit will do the same work in their mortal bodies. The verb zōpoiēsei ('will make alive, give life') points to bodily resurrection, not merely spiritual vitality. The phrase ta thnēta sōmata ('your mortal bodies') — bodies that still die — will be transformed. The Spirit's current indwelling is the guarantee of future resurrection.
12. The word opheiletai ('debtors, those under obligation') sets up a contrast Paul does not explicitly complete: we are not debtors to the flesh (the implicit completion: we are debtors to the Spirit). The believer's obligation is to the Spirit who gave life, not to the flesh that produced death.
13. The conditional presents a stark binary: flesh-living death; Spirit-empowered mortification life. The verb thanatoute ('you put to death, you kill') is violent and active — not passive resignation but active assault on sinful habits. Crucially, this is done pneumati ('by the Spirit') — not by willpower alone but by the Spirit's power. The 'deeds of the body' (praxeis tou sōmatos) are the sinful behaviors the unredeemed body habitually performs.
14. The verb agontai ('are led, guided, driven') is present passive — an ongoing experience of the Spirit's direction. The word huiōi ('sons') in the ancient world denoted legal heirs regardless of gender; we render 'children' to reflect the inclusive scope while noting that 'sons' carried specific inheritance rights in Roman law that Paul will exploit in verses 15-17.
15. The contrast between 'spirit of slavery' and 'Spirit of adoption' defines the change: the old relationship to God was fear-based; the new is family-based. The verb krazomen ('we cry out') is a strong word suggesting spontaneous, Spirit-driven exclamation — not a quiet prayer but an instinctive cry of a child to a parent. The switch from 'you' (elabete) to 'we' (krazomen) includes Paul himself in the experience.
16. The compound verb symmartyrei ('bears witness together with, co-testifies') implies two witnesses: the Holy Spirit and the believer's own spirit. Together they confirm the reality of adoption. We render 'himself' (auto) rather than the KJV's 'itself' because the Spirit is personal. The word tekna ('children') differs from huiōi ('sons') — tekna emphasizes the familial relationship, huiōi the legal status.
17. The logic: children heirs co-heirs with Christ. In Roman law, all children inherited equally. The compound syn- ('together with') appears three times: synklēronomoi ('co-heirs'), sympaschomen ('co-suffer'), and syndoxasthōmen ('co-glorified'). The path to glory passes through suffering — not as a condition to be earned but as the pattern of Christ's own journey.
18. The verb logizomai ('I reckon, consider, calculate') is the same word used for God's reckoning righteousness (4:3). Paul makes a deliberate cost-benefit calculation: present suffering versus future glory. The result is that suffering is xiā ('worthy, equivalent') — the scales are not even close. The phrase eis hēmas ('to/in us') can mean the glory will be revealed 'to us' (we will see it) or 'in us' (we will embody it). Both are true.
19. The word apokaradokia ('eager expectation, anxious longing') is a vivid compound: apo (away) + kara (head) + dokēō (to watch) — literally 'craning the neck forward to see.' Creation itself is personified as expectantly waiting. The 'revealing of the children of God' (apokalypsin tōn huiōn tou theou) refers to the final manifestation of believers' glorified identity at the return of Christ.

- 20. The word mataiotēti ('futility, emptiness, purposelessness') echoes Ecclesiastes' refrain 'vanity of vanities' (hebel in Hebrew). Creation was subjected to this futility ouch hekousa ('not willingly') — it did not choose this condition. The one who subjected it is most likely God (in response to Adam's sin, Genesis 3:17-19), though some identify Adam. The crucial qualifier is eph' helpidi ('in hope') — the subjection was not final but forward-looking.
- 20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 3:17-19 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
- 21. Creation's destiny is linked to humanity's: when God's children are glorified, creation itself will be liberated. The phrase douleias tēs phthoras ('bondage to decay/corruption') describes the second law of thermodynamics in theological terms — everything deteriorates. The phrase eleutherian tēs doxēs ('freedom of glory') is the opposite: the liberated creation will share in the glory of the redeemed.
- 22. The compound verbs systemazei ('groans together') and synōdinei ('labors in birth-pain together') use the syn- prefix to indicate that all of creation participates. The childbirth metaphor is significant: the groaning is not death-agony but labor-pain — it anticipates new birth, not extinction. The phrase achri tou nyn ('until now') indicates this is the current reality.
- 23. Three groanings: creation (v. 22), believers (v. 23), and the Spirit (v. 26). Believers groan despite having the aparchēn tou pneumatōs ('firstfruits of the Spirit') — the Spirit is the initial installment of the full harvest. The word huiōthesian ('adoption') reappears: believers already have adoption (v. 15) but await its full consummation — the redemption of the body at resurrection.
- 24. The aorist esōthēmen ('we were saved') points to the decisive moment of salvation while the context makes clear that salvation has a 'not yet' dimension — the body's redemption is still future. Hope by definition involves the unseen; visible possession would eliminate the need for hope.
- 25. The word hypomonēs ('endurance, patient steadfastness') is the same virtue produced by suffering in 5:3-4. The chain continues: hope is not passive but actively enduring, pressing through the present age toward the promised future.
- 26. The compound verb synantilambantai ('helps, comes to assist alongside') pictures the Spirit as one who takes hold of a burden together with the one carrying it. The honest admission ouk oidamen ('we do not know') is pastoral: believers often lack the words or clarity for prayer. The Spirit's stenagmois alalētois ('wordless groanings, sighs beyond speech') correspond to the groanings of creation (v. 22) and believers (v. 23). The Spirit translates human helplessness into effective intercession.
- 27. The 'one who searches hearts' is God (cf. 1 Samuel 16:7; 1 Chronicles 28:9; Jeremiah 17:10). God understands the Spirit's wordless intercession because the Spirit intercedes kata theon ('according to God,' in alignment with God's will). The prayers the Spirit offers on behalf of believers are always perfectly aligned with what God purposes.
- 27. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on 1 Samuel 16:7. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
- 27. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on 1 Chronicles 28:9. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
- 27. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Jeremiah 17:10. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
- 28. Some manuscripts read 'God works all things together for good' (ho theos panta synergei), making God the explicit subject. The SBLGNT reading (panta synergei) can mean 'all things work together' or 'he [God] works all things together.' Either way, God's sovereignty is the theological point. The promise is not that all things are good but that they are worked together (synergei) for good — even suffering, even what seems pointless. The qualifying phrase tois agapōsin ton theon ('for those who love God') and tois kata prothesin klētois ('those called according to purpose') identifies the recipients.
- 29. The 'golden chain' begins. The verb proegnō ('foreknew') in biblical usage means more than advance knowledge — it implies intimate, relational knowing and choosing (cf. Amos 3:2). The verb proōrisen ('predestined, predetermined') specifies the goal of God's knowing: conformity to Christ's image (symmorphous tēs eikōnos). The phrase 'firstborn among many brothers and sisters' (prōtotokon en pollois adelphois) makes Christ the eldest in a large family, not an only child.
- 29. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Amos 3:2. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
- 30. Five links: foreknew predestined called justified glorified. Each step leads inevitably to the next — no one is lost between links. The most stunning word is the final one: edoxasen ('glorified') is in the aorist (past) tense, treating the future glorification of believers as already accomplished. From God's perspective, the outcome is so certain it can be spoken of as a completed fact. This is called the 'proleptic aorist' — the future made present by divine certainty.
- 31. The rhetorical questions of verses 31-35 form a courtroom crescendo. The first question — 'if God is for us, who can be against us?' — is not the claim that no one opposes believers (they clearly do) but that no opposition can ultimately prevail. The preposition hyper ('for, on behalf of') means God is an active advocate, not a neutral bystander.
- 32. The verb epheisato ('spared') echoes Genesis 22:16 (LXX), where God says to Abraham 'you did not spare (ouk epheisō) your only son.' Paul presents the cross as God's own Aqedah — what Abraham was willing to do, God actually did. The verb paredōken ('gave over, handed over') is the same word used of God 'giving over' humanity in 1:24, 26, 28 — now inverted: God gives over his own Son for the sake of those he once gave over to judgment. The 'much more' argument: if God gave the greater gift (his Son), the lesser gifts (all things) are guaranteed.

32. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 22:16. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
33. The verb enkalesei ('bring a charge, accuse') is a legal term for a formal prosecution. The answer is that no accuser can stand because the Judge himself has declared the verdict: justified. The word eklektōn ('chosen ones, elect') emphasizes divine initiative in salvation.
34. Four actions of Christ silence condemnation: he died (atonement), was raised (vindication), sits at God's right hand (authority, cf. Psalm 110:1), and intercedes (ongoing advocacy). The verb entynchanei ('intercedes, intervenes on behalf of') presents the risen Christ as believers' permanent advocate before God. The phrase mallon de ('more than that, rather') corrects the first statement — the resurrection, not just the death, is the decisive factor.
34. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalm 110:1. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
35. The list of seven potential separators moves from general suffering to violent death. These are not hypothetical — Paul experienced all of them (cf. 2 Corinthians 11:23-27). The phrase 'love of Christ' (agapēs tou Christou) is primarily Christ's love for us (subjective genitive), not our love for him. The question expects the answer 'no one and nothing.'
36. Paul quotes Psalm 44:22 (LXX 43:23), a communal lament from Israel's history. The Psalm describes suffering that comes not from sin but from faithfulness to God ('for your sake'). Paul applies it to the church's present experience: suffering is the norm for God's people, not the exception. Yet even this does not separate from Christ's love.
36. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalms 44:22. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
37. The verb hypernikōmen ('we super-conquer, we overwhelmingly prevail') is another Pauline superlative compound — not merely victory but overwhelming triumph. The preposition en ('in') is significant: believers conquer not by escaping suffering but in the midst of it. The phrase dia tou agapēsantos ('through the one who loved') identifies Christ's love as the power source for this conquest.
38. The perfect tense pepeismai ('I am and remain convinced') expresses settled, unshakable certainty. Paul lists potential separators in pairs: death/life (the two modes of existence), angels/rulers (supernatural powers), present/future (all time). The word archai ('rulers, principalities') and dynameis ('powers') refer to cosmic spiritual authorities, whether benign or hostile. Paul asserts that even the most powerful spiritual beings in the universe cannot override God's love.
39. The final pair hypsōma/bathos ('height/depth') may refer to astrological terms for the highest and lowest points of a celestial body's orbit, encompassing all cosmic space. The sweeping phrase tis ktisis hetera ('any other created thing') is a catch-all: if Paul has missed anything in his list, this covers it. The conclusion lands on 'the love of God that is in Christ Jesus our Lord' — all of God's love is mediated through Christ. The chapter that began with 'no condemnation' ends with 'no separation.' The phrase en Christō Iēsou tō kyriō hēmōn closes the chapter with the same formula that ends chapters 5, 6, and 7.

Summary: Romans 9 opens a new section (chapters 9-11) addressing the most pressing theological problem raised by Paul's gospel: if righteousness comes by faith apart from the law, what about Israel? Has God's word failed? Paul expresses his deep anguish over Israel's unbelief, then argues that God's word has not failed because not all descended from Israel are truly Israel. God's purposes have always operated by sovereign election — choosing Isaac over Ishmael, Jacob over Esau. Paul defends God's right as Creator to show mercy and harden as he chooses, using the potter-and-clay metaphor. The chapter concludes by arguing that Gentiles have obtained the righteousness of faith while Israel, pursuing righteousness through the law, stumbled over Christ — the stumbling stone.

What Makes This Remarkable: Paul's anguish (vv. 1-5) is extraordinary — he wishes he could be cursed and cut off from Christ for the sake of his kinspeople. This is the same Paul who just declared nothing can separate from Christ's love. The list of Israel's privileges (v. 4-5) is one of the fullest in the New Testament: adoption, glory, covenants, law, worship, promises, patriarchs, and the Messiah. The potter-clay metaphor (vv. 19-24) is drawn from Isaiah 29:16, 45:9, and Jeremiah 18:1-10. The chapter's argument about divine sovereignty is counterbalanced by chapters 10-11, which emphasize human responsibility and God's ultimate purpose of mercy.

Translation Friction: The tension between divine sovereignty (God hardens whom he wills, v. 18) and human responsibility (Israel pursued works rather than faith, v. 32) is one of the deepest theological tensions in Scripture. We render both emphases without harmonizing them. The Pharaoh hardening (v. 17) must be read alongside Exodus, where Pharaoh also hardens his own heart. The 'vessels of wrath' and 'vessels of mercy' language

(vv. 22-23) has been debated between Calvinist and Arminian interpreters for centuries.

Connections: The Old Testament quotations are extensive: Genesis 21:12 (v. 7), Genesis 18:10 (v. 9), Genesis 25:23 (v. 12), Malachi 1:2-3 (v. 13), Exodus 33:19 (v. 15), Exodus 9:16 (v. 17), Isaiah 29:16/45:9 (v. 20), Hosea 2:23/1:10 (vv. 25-26), Isaiah 10:22-23 (vv. 27-28), Isaiah 1:9 (v. 29), Isaiah 8:14/28:16 (v. 33).

¹I am speaking the truth in Christ — I am not lying, as my conscience confirms in the Holy Spirit — ²Indeed, that I have remarkable heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart. ³For I could wish that I myself were accursed and cut off from Christ for the sake of my brothers and sisters, my kinspeople according to the flesh — ⁴They are Israelites, and to them belong the adoption, the glory, the covenants, the giving of the law, the worship, and the promises. ⁵To them belong the patriarchs, and from them, according to the flesh, is the Christ, who is God over all, blessed forever. Amen. ⁶It is not as though the word of God has failed. For not all who are descended from Israel are Israel. ⁷Indeed, neither, because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children — but, In Isaac will your seed be called. ⁸This means that it is not the children of the flesh who are children of God, but the children of the promise are counted as offspring. ⁹For this is what the promise said: "About this time I will return, and Sarah shall have a son." ¹⁰And not only that, but also when Rebekah had conceived children by one man, our ancestor Isaac — ¹¹(For the offspring while not yet brought into the world, neither possessing done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, ¹²Indeed, not of works, but of him that calleth;) it was stated to her, The elder will serve the younger. ¹³As it is written, "Jacob I loved, but Esau I hated." ¹⁴What shall we say then? Is there injustice on God's part? Absolutely not! ¹⁵And I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion, for he says to Moses, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy. ¹⁶So then it depends not on human will or effort, but on God who has mercy. ¹⁷For the Scripture says to Pharaoh, "For this very purpose I have raised you up, that I might display my power in you, and that my name might be proclaimed in all the earth." ¹⁸So then he has mercy on whomever he wills, and he hardens whomever he wills. ¹⁹You will say to me then, "Why does he still find fault? For who has resisted his will?" ²⁰But who are you, a mere human, to argue back to God? Will what is molded say to its molder, "Why have you made me like this?" ²¹Has the potter no right over the clay, to make out of the same lump one vessel for honorable use and another for common use? ²²What if God, desiring to show his wrath and to make known his power, has endured with great patience vessels of wrath prepared for destruction, ²³Indeed, that he might make known the riches of all his splendor on the vessels of mercy, which he had afore prepared to glory, ²⁴Indeed us, whom he has known as, not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles? ²⁵As indeed he says in Hosea: "Those who were not my people I will call 'my people,' and her who was not beloved I will call 'beloved.'" ²⁶"And in the very place where it was said to them, 'You are not my people,' there they will be called 'children of the living God.'" ²⁷And Isaiah cries out concerning Israel: "Though the number of the children of Israel were as the sand of the sea, only a remnant will be saved, ²⁸Indeed, since he will finish the work, and cut it short in righteousness — because a short work will the Lord make upon the world. ²⁹And as Isaiah predicted: "If the Lord of Hosts had not left us offspring, we would have become like Sodom and been made like Gomorrah." ³⁰What shall we say then? That Gentiles who did not pursue righteousness have obtained it — that is, a righteousness that is by faith; ³¹However, Israel, which followed following the law of righteousness, has not attained to the law of righteousness. ³²Why? Because they pursued it not by faith but as if it were based on works. They stumbled over the stumbling stone, ³³As it is written, take notice, I lay in Sion a stumblingstone and rock of offence — and whosoever believes on him will not be ashamed.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Paul invokes a triple oath: truth in Christ, denial of falsehood, and the witness of his Spirit-informed conscience. This unusually intense affirmation signals that what follows is deeply personal and potentially misunderstood. Paul, the apostle to the Gentiles, must demonstrate that his gospel does not represent indifference to Israel.
2. The word lypē ('grief, sorrow') is strong; odynē ('anguish, sharp pain') is stronger. The adjective adialeiptos ('unceasing, constant') — the same word used for prayer in 1:9 — means this grief never leaves Paul. His pain over Israel's unbelief is not occasional but perpetual.
3. The verb ēuchomēn (imperfect) can mean 'I was wishing' or 'I could wish' — either a past wish or a present hypothetical. The word anathema ('accursed, devoted to destruction') is the Greek equivalent of Hebrew cherem — total separation from God. Paul echoes Moses in Exodus 32:32, who asked God to blot him from the book of life for Israel's sake. The irony is stunning: Paul who just said nothing can separate from Christ's love now wishes for separation on behalf of others.

3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 32:32 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. Paul lists eight privileges of Israel: (1) huiiothesia — adoption as God's son (Exodus 4:22), (2) doxa — God's glory-presence (the Shekinah), (3) diathekai — the covenants (Abrahamic, Mosaic, Davidic), (4) nomiothesia — the giving of the Torah, (5) latreia — the temple worship system, (6) epangeliai — the covenant promises. The plural diathekai ('covenants') is notable — God made multiple covenants with Israel.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 4:22. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. The final two privileges: (7) the patriarchs (Abraham, Isaac, Jacob) and (8) the Messiah himself. The phrase to kata sarka ('according to the flesh') limits Christ's Israelite identity to his human nature. The doxological clause ho ōn epi pantōn theos eulogētos ('who is God over all, blessed forever') is one of the most debated punctuation questions in the New Testament. It can be read as (a) a statement about Christ: 'who is God over all, blessed forever' or (b) a separate doxology to God the Father: 'God who is over all be blessed forever.' We follow reading (a), which is the more natural Greek syntax.
6. This is the thesis of chapters 9-11. The verb ekpeptōken ('has fallen, has failed') means to fall to the ground, to prove empty. Paul's answer to the apparent failure of God's promise is a redefinition of Israel: physical descent does not automatically equal covenant membership. There is an 'Israel within Israel' defined by God's electing purpose.
7. Paul quotes Genesis 21:12. Abraham had two sons — Ishmael and Isaac — but only Isaac was the child of promise. Physical descent from Abraham did not automatically make Ishmael an heir. The principle of selective election operates within the family from the very beginning.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 21:12. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. Paul draws the theological conclusion: tekna tēs sarkos ('children of the flesh,' born by natural means) are distinguished from tekna tēs epangelias ('children of the promise,' born by God's word). The verb logizetai ('are counted, reckoned') is the same verb from chapter 4 — divine reckoning, not human achievement, determines who belongs to Abraham's true line.
9. Paul quotes Genesis 18:10, 14. Isaac's birth was not a natural event but a supernatural fulfillment of God's promise to a barren, elderly couple. The point: God's people are constituted by divine promise, not natural processes.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 18:10. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. Paul introduces a stronger example. With Isaac and Ishmael, one could argue the difference was due to different mothers (Sarah vs. Hagar). With Jacob and Esau, the same mother (Rebekah) and the same father (Isaac) produced two sons, eliminating any argument based on parentage. The Greek koitēn echousea ('having a bed/conception') is a euphemism for sexual intercourse and conception.
11. Paul emphasizes that God's choice was made before the twins' birth and before any action — good or bad — that could serve as a basis for merit. The phrase kat' eklogēn prothesis ('purpose according to election') places the ground of God's choice in his own purpose, not in foreseen human merit.
12. Paul quotes Genesis 25:23. The reversal of primogeniture — the elder serving the younger — is a consistent pattern in Genesis (Ishmael/Isaac, Esau/Jacob, Manasseh/Ephraim). God's choice does not follow human convention but divine freedom. The phrase ek tou kalountos ('from the one who calls') makes God's calling the sole basis of election.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 25:23. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. Paul quotes Malachi 1:2-3, written over a thousand years after the twins. 'Hated' (emisēsa) in Semitic idiom can mean 'loved less' or 'not chosen' (cf. Genesis 29:31; Luke 14:26) — it denotes non-election rather than personal animosity. Malachi's original context concerns the nations of Israel and Edom, not merely the individuals Jacob and Esau.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Malachi 1:2-3 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 29:31 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. The objection is predictable: if God chooses before birth without regard to works, is that unjust? Paul's mē genoito is emphatic. The word adikia ('injustice, unrighteousness') is the negation of dikaioσynē — the charge is that God's election violates his own righteousness.
15. Paul quotes Exodus 33:19, God's response to Moses' request to see his glory. The double statement (mercy/mercy, compassion/compassion) is a Hebrew idiom emphasizing divine freedom: God's mercy is determined by God's own will. This was spoken in a context of grace — God had just forgiven the golden calf incident.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 33:19 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.

16. The three sources are contrasted: not the willing person (tou thelontos), not the running person (tou trechontos, a metaphor for striving), but God who shows mercy (tou eleountos theou). Human desire and effort, however sincere, cannot compel divine mercy. This does not eliminate human response but grounds the possibility of response in prior divine initiative.
17. Paul quotes Exodus 9:16. The verb exēgeira ('I raised up, I brought onto the stage') does not necessarily mean God created Pharaoh for the purpose of destruction but that God elevated him to power and sustained him through the plagues to display divine power. The purpose is the proclamation of God's name throughout the earth — even Pharaoh's hardening serves a redemptive-historical purpose.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 9:16. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. Paul draws the double conclusion: God's sovereignty operates in both directions — mercy and hardening. The verb sklērynei ('hardens') echoes the Exodus narrative where God hardened Pharaoh's heart. This must be read in its full Exodus context, where Pharaoh also hardened his own heart (Exodus 8:15, 32). Divine hardening is judicial — confirming a direction already chosen — not arbitrary.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 8:15 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. The diatribe partner objects: if God's will is irresistible, how can God blame anyone? This is the logical conclusion of verse 18 pushed to its extreme. The verb antheistēken ('has resisted, has stood against') is a perfect tense — who has ever successfully opposed God's purpose? Paul takes the objection seriously but reframes it.
20. Paul's response appeals to the Creator-creature distinction. The verb antapokrinomenos ('arguing back, answering in opposition') implies presumptuous back-talk. The potter-clay metaphor draws on Isaiah 29:16, 45:9, and Jeremiah 18:1-10. The point is not that human questions are illegitimate but that the creature has no standing to put the Creator on trial.
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 29:16 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Jeremiah 18:1-10 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
21. The word exousian ('right, authority, power') establishes the potter's prerogative. The phrase ek tou autou phymatos ('out of the same lump') emphasizes that the difference between vessels is not in the material but in the potter's purpose. We render eis atimian as 'for common use' rather than 'for dishonor' — the contrast is between special and ordinary, not necessarily between good and evil. However, in context, Paul is building toward the 'vessels of wrath' in verse 22.
22. The sentence begun here continues through verse 24. The phrase skeuē orgēs ('vessels of wrath') describes those destined for judgment. The participle katērtismena ('prepared, fitted') is in the middle/passive voice and does not specify who did the preparing — God, the individuals themselves, or sin. This ambiguity may be intentional. The phrase en pollē makrothymia ('with great patience') shows that even toward vessels of wrath, God exercises long-suffering restraint.
23. The contrast with verse 22 is significant: the vessels of wrath are described with a passive participle (katērtismena, 'prepared' — agent unspecified), while the vessels of mercy are described with an active verb (proētoimasen, 'he prepared beforehand' — God is the explicit agent). This asymmetry suggests that God actively prepares the vessels of mercy but does not actively prepare the vessels of wrath in the same direct way.
24. The vessels of mercy are now identified: 'us' — both Jewish and Gentile believers. God's electing purpose, which operated within Israel (choosing Isaac over Ishmael, Jacob over Esau), now operates beyond Israel's ethnic boundaries to include Gentiles.
25. Paul quotes Hosea 2:23 (LXX). In Hosea's original context, the promise of restoration refers to Israel itself — the unfaithful northern kingdom. Paul applies it to Gentile inclusion: those who were outside the covenant ('not my people') are now called God's people. This typological reading sees the same pattern of grace operating in a new context.
25. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Hosea 2:23 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
26. Paul quotes Hosea 1:10 (LXX 2:1). The reversal is total: the location of rejection becomes the location of adoption. 'The living God' (theou zōntos) contrasts with dead idols and reinforces the theme of God's life-giving power (cf. 4:17).
26. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Hosea 1:10. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
27. Paul now turns from Gentile inclusion to the painful reality of Israel's partial rejection, quoting Isaiah 10:22-23. The word hypoleimma ('remnant') introduces a concept central to prophetic theology: God always preserves a faithful core within the nation, even when the majority falls away. The verb krazei ('cries out') suggests urgency and prophetic passion.
27. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 10:22-23. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
28. The phrase logon syntelōn kai syntemnōn ('completing and cutting short the word/sentence') describes God's decisive, swift judicial action. The LXX text Paul uses differs from the Hebrew of Isaiah 10:23. The point: God's judgment will be thorough and final.

28. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 10:22-23 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
29. Paul quotes Isaiah 1:9. The title kyrios sabaōth ('Lord of Hosts/Armies') transliterates the Hebrew YHWH Tseva'ot. The comparison with Sodom and Gomorrah — total destruction — emphasizes that even the remnant exists only by God's grace, not by human merit. The word sperma ('seed, offspring') echoes the Abrahamic promise.
29. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 1:9. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
30. The irony is sharp: Gentiles who were not even trying to achieve righteousness received it, while Israel who was intensely pursuing it missed it. The verb katelaben ('obtained, grasped, attained') suggests catching something that was not being chased. The qualifier ek pisteōs ('from faith') identifies the kind of righteousness obtained.
31. The verb diōkōn ('pursuing') is the same verb used for pursuit in a race or persecution of an enemy — Israel was zealously, energetically chasing righteousness. The tragic verb ouk ephthasen ('did not arrive, did not reach') describes failure at the finish line. The phrase nomon dikaiosynēs ('law of righteousness') is debated — it may mean 'the law that would lead to righteousness' or 'the standard of righteousness.'
32. Paul diagnoses Israel's failure: wrong method, not wrong goal. They pursued righteousness as if (hōs) it could be achieved by works rather than received by faith. The verb prosekopsan ('stumbled against, struck against') introduces the stone metaphor that the following quotation develops. Israel's very zeal for the law became the obstacle to receiving the gospel.
33. Paul combines Isaiah 28:16 and Isaiah 8:14 — one text about a cornerstone, the other about a stumbling stone. The same Christ is both: a foundation for faith and an obstacle for unbelief. The promise 'will not be put to shame' (ou kataischynthēsetai) echoes 5:5 and 10:11. The pronoun ep' autō ('in him') personalizes the stone — it is not an abstract principle but Christ himself.

Summary: Romans 10 continues Paul's argument about Israel. He affirms Israel's zeal for God while lamenting that it is not based on knowledge — they seek to establish their own righteousness rather than submitting to God's righteousness. Christ is the end (telos) of the law for righteousness to everyone who believes. Paul then presents the accessibility of the gospel through the 'word of faith' — no one needs to ascend to heaven or descend to the abyss, because the word is near, in your mouth and heart. Confession of Jesus as Lord and belief in his resurrection lead to salvation. The chapter concludes with the famous missionary logic: calling requires believing, believing requires hearing, hearing requires a preacher, preaching requires being sent. Paul ends by noting that Israel heard but did not obey.

What Makes This Remarkable: Verse 4 — 'Christ is the telos of the law' — is one of the most consequential verses for understanding Paul's theology of the law. The word telos can mean 'end' (termination), 'goal' (purpose), or 'fulfillment' (completion). Each reading has different theological implications. Verses 6-8 are a creative midrash on Deuteronomy 30:12-14, replacing the Torah with Christ. The preaching logic of verses 14-15 has been foundational to Christian missionary theology. The Isaiah 52:7 quotation ('how beautiful are the feet of those who bring good news') has become iconic.

Translation Friction: The meaning of telos in verse 4 is the primary exegetical challenge. We render 'end' (culmination/goal) and note the range. The relationship between 'the righteousness of faith' (vv. 6-8) and Moses' words in Deuteronomy 30 is a bold hermeneutical move by Paul that has been variously assessed.

Connections: The Deuteronomy 30:12-14 reinterpretation (vv. 6-8) connects to Baruch 3:29-30. The missionary sending logic (vv. 14-15) cites Isaiah 52:7 and connects to Matthew 28:19-20. The 'word of faith' (v. 8) connects to the 'obedience of faith' bookend (1:5; 16:26). Isaiah 53:1 (v. 16), Psalm 19:4 (v. 18), Deuteronomy 32:21 (v. 19), and Isaiah 65:1-2 (vv. 20-21) all contribute.

¹Brothers and sisters, my heart's desire and prayer to God for them is that they may be saved. ²For I can testify about them that they have a zeal for God, but it is not based on knowledge. ³For, being ignorant of the righteousness of God and seeking to establish their own, they did not submit to God's righteousness. ⁴For Christ is the culmination of the law so that there may be righteousness for everyone who believes. ⁵For Moses writes about the righteousness that is based on the law: "The person who does these things will live by them." ⁶But the righteousness based on faith says, "Do not say in your heart, 'Who will ascend into heaven?'" — that is, to bring Christ down — ⁷or 'Who will go down into the depths below?' (that is, to bring Christ back from the dead). ⁸But what does it say? "The word is near you, in your mouth and in your heart" — that is, the word of faith that we proclaim. ⁹That if you shalt confess with your mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt trust in your heart that God has raised him from the dead, you shalt be saved. ¹⁰For with the heart one believes and is justified, and with the mouth one confesses and is saved. ¹¹For the Scripture says, "Everyone who believes in him will not be put to shame." ¹²For there is no distinction between Jew and Greek; for the same Lord is Lord of all, richly blessing all who call on him. ¹³For "everyone who calls on the name of the Lord will be saved." ¹⁴How then will they call on him in whom they have not believed? And how are they to believe in him of whom they have never heard? And how are they to hear without someone preaching? ¹⁵And how are they to preach unless they are sent? As it is written, "How beautiful are the feet of those who bring good news!" ¹⁶But not all have obeyed the gospel. For Isaiah says, "Lord, who has believed what he has heard from us?" ¹⁷So faith comes from hearing, and hearing through the word of Christ. ¹⁸But I ask, have they not heard? Indeed they have: "Their voice has gone out to all the earth, and their words to the ends of the world." ¹⁹But I ask, did Israel not understand? First Moses says, "I will make you jealous of those who are not a nation; with a foolish nation I will make you angry." ²⁰Then Isaiah is so bold as to say, "I was found by those who did not seek me; I revealed myself to those who did not ask for me." ²¹But of Israel he says, "All day long I have held out my hands to a disobedient and contrary people."

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Paul reaffirms his personal anguish (cf. 9:1-3). The word eudokia ('desire, delight, good pleasure') expresses a deep longing of the will, not merely a wish. The fact that Paul prays for Israel's salvation implies it is still possible — they are not irreversibly rejected. Some manuscripts read 'for Israel' (hyper tou Israēl) rather than 'for them' (hyper autōn); the SBLGNT follows the shorter reading.
2. Paul speaks from personal experience — he himself had the same misdirected zeal before his conversion (Philippians 3:6; Galatians 1:14). The word zēlon ('zeal, jealousy, enthusiasm') is positive but insufficient. The word epignōsin ('full knowledge, recognition, understanding') with the epi- prefix implies accurate, deep comprehension rather than mere information.
3. The word agnoontes ('being ignorant, not recognizing') does not excuse Israel but diagnoses their error. The phrase idian dikaiosynēn ('their own righteousness') is righteousness achieved by human effort — Paul's pre-conversion pursuit (Philippians 3:9). The verb hypētagēsan ('submitted') suggests that receiving God's righteousness requires surrender of self-generated righteousness.
4. The word telos ('end, goal, culmination, fulfillment') is deliberately ambiguous: Christ is both the goal toward which the law pointed and the termination of the law as a means of achieving righteousness. We render 'culmination' to capture both dimensions. The qualifier panti tō pisteuonti ('to everyone who believes') universalizes the offer — not just Jews or just Gentiles but everyone. This verse is the theological hinge between Israel's failed pursuit (v. 3) and the accessibility of faith-righteousness (vv. 5-13).
5. Paul quotes Leviticus 18:5. The 'do and live' principle defines law-righteousness: perfect obedience yields life. But as Paul has shown (3:20; 7:7-13), no one actually achieves this. The law's righteousness is real but unattainable by sinful humanity. This sets up the contrast with faith-righteousness in the following verses.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Leviticus 18:5 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. Paul personifies faith-righteousness as a speaker and paraphrases Deuteronomy 30:12-14. In Moses' original context, the point was that the Torah was accessible — no one needed to go to heaven to find it. Paul applies the same accessibility to Christ: the gospel does not require impossible feats. The interpretive gloss 'that is, to bring Christ down' (tout' estin Christon katagagein) replaces Moses' reference to the commandment with Christ.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Deuteronomy 30:12-14. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. Deuteronomy 30:13 originally said 'who will cross the sea?' Paul substitutes 'the abyss' (abyssos), the realm of the dead, and interprets it as referring to Christ's resurrection. No human effort is needed to accomplish incarnation (v. 6) or resurrection (v. 7) — God has already done both. The gospel is near, not distant.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Deuteronomy 30:12-14. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. Paul quotes Deuteronomy 30:14. What Moses said about the Torah, Paul says about the gospel: it is near, accessible, ready to be received. The phrase rhēma tēs pisteōs ('word of faith') identifies the gospel message that demands and enables faith. The two locations — mouth and heart — correspond to the confession and belief of verse 9.

8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Deuteronomy 30:12-14 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. This is the earliest Christian confession formula. The verbal confession kyrion Iēsoun ('Jesus is Lord') was the baptismal declaration and the most concise summary of Christian faith. In the Roman world, 'Lord' (kyrios) was a title for Caesar; confessing Jesus as Lord was both a theological claim and a political act. The heart-belief specified is the resurrection — the historical event that vindicated Jesus' identity. Mouth (external confession) and heart (internal belief) together constitute saving faith.
10. Paul reverses the order of verse 9 (mouth/heart heart/mouth), creating a chiasmic structure. The two clauses are not describing two separate events but two dimensions of one reality: believing leads to righteousness (dikaiosynēn, justification), and confessing leads to salvation (sōtērian). These are not sequential steps but simultaneous aspects of faith.
11. Paul returns to Isaiah 28:16 (quoted in 9:33) but adds the crucial word pas ('everyone') — making the promise explicitly universal. No one who trusts Christ will be disappointed or disgraced. The verb kataischynthēsetai ('will be put to shame') has eschatological force: at the final judgment, those who believed will be vindicated.
12. The phrase ou diastolē ('no distinction') echoes 3:22. The universality of sin (3:22-23) corresponds to the universality of salvation (10:12-13). The participle ploutōn ('being rich, bestowing richly') describes God's generosity as inexhaustible — there is enough grace for all who call.
13. Paul quotes Joel 2:32 (LXX 3:5). In Joel's original context, 'the Lord' (kyrios) translates YHWH. Paul applies this to Jesus as Lord — those who call on Jesus' name receive the salvation promised to those who call on YHWH's name. This is one of the clearest implicit affirmations of Christ's divine status in Paul's letters.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Joel 2:32 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. Paul constructs a chain of necessary conditions working backward from calling to believing to hearing to preaching. Each link depends on the prior one. The logic establishes the necessity of gospel proclamation — faith is not a spontaneous human achievement but a response to a proclaimed message. The Greek hou ouk ēkousan can mean 'whom they have not heard' (hearing Christ himself through the preacher) or 'of whom they have not heard' (hearing about Christ).
15. The chain's final link: preaching requires sending (apostolōsin, from apostellō — the root of 'apostle'). Paul quotes Isaiah 52:7, which describes messengers bringing news of Israel's return from exile. Paul applies it to gospel preachers. The SBLGNT has a shorter quotation than the KJV, omitting 'the gospel of peace' — which appears in the fuller Isaiah text.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 52:7 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. The verb hypēkousan ('obeyed') equates believing the gospel with obeying it — consistent with the 'obedience of faith' framework (1:5; 16:26). Paul quotes Isaiah 53:1, the opening of the Suffering Servant passage. The word akoē ('what is heard, report, message') connects to the hearing-chain of verse 14. Isaiah's lament is that the message was proclaimed but not believed.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 53:1. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. Paul summarizes the chain: faith originates in hearing (ex akoēs), and hearing is mediated by the word of Christ (dia rhēmatos Christou). The SBLGNT reads 'word of Christ' (Christou) rather than the KJV's 'word of God' (theou) — the critical text attributes the gospel message specifically to Christ. The rhēma ('word, message, spoken word') is the concrete, proclaimed gospel.
18. Paul addresses a potential excuse: perhaps Israel did not hear. He refutes this with Psalm 19:4 (LXX 18:5), which originally described creation's testimony to God. Paul applies it to the gospel's proclamation — the message has reached everywhere. Israel's failure is not for lack of hearing.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalms 19:4 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. A second potential excuse: perhaps Israel did not understand. Paul quotes Deuteronomy 32:21 — God himself predicted that he would provoke Israel's jealousy through Gentile inclusion. The Gentiles, once considered 'no nation' (ouk ethnei) and 'foolish' (asyneto), now receive what Israel rejected. This theme of provoking jealousy will be central to 11:11-14.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 32:21. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
20. Paul quotes Isaiah 65:1. The verb apitolma ('dares, is bold enough') acknowledges that Isaiah's statement is provocative. God was found by those not seeking him and revealed himself to those not asking — this is the Gentile experience of unexpected grace. The verbs are passive/reflexive from God's perspective: God actively reveals himself to those who had no claim on him.
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 65:1 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.

21. Paul quotes Isaiah 65:2. The image of God stretching out his hands (exepetasa tas cheiras) is one of the most poignant in Scripture — God reaching out, arms extended, to a people who refuse to come. The two adjectives apeithonta ('disobedient, rebellious') and antilegonta ('contradicting, opposing') describe Israel's active resistance, not passive ignorance. The chapter ends with this image of divine longing and human stubbornness — but the outstretched hands suggest God has not given up. This sets up chapter 11's argument.
21. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 65:2. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.

Summary: Romans 11 resolves the Israel question. Paul asks: has God rejected his people? No — Paul himself is proof. A remnant exists by grace. The rest were hardened, but their stumbling has brought salvation to the Gentiles, which will in turn provoke Israel to jealousy. Using the olive tree metaphor, Paul warns Gentile believers not to boast against the natural branches — if God did not spare the natural branches, he will not spare the grafted ones either. Paul then reveals a mystery: a partial hardening has come upon Israel until the fullness of the Gentiles has come in, and so all Israel will be saved. The chapter concludes with a doxology praising the depth of God's wisdom and knowledge.

What Makes This Remarkable: The 'mystery' of verse 25-26 is one of the most debated passages in the New Testament. 'All Israel will be saved' has been interpreted as (1) all ethnic Israel will eventually believe, (2) the elect from Israel across all generations, or (3) the full people of God (Jew and Gentile). The olive tree metaphor (vv. 17-24) is Paul's most vivid illustration of the relationship between Israel and the church — Gentile believers are grafted into Israel's olive tree, not the reverse. The concluding doxology (vv. 33-36) is one of the most sublime passages of theological worship in all of Scripture.

Translation Friction: *The meaning of 'all Israel' (pas Israēl) in verse 26 is the central interpretive challenge. We render the Greek as given and note the range of interpretations. The olive tree metaphor involves botanically unusual grafting (wild branches onto a cultivated tree), which Paul himself acknowledges as 'contrary to nature' (v. 24).*

Connections: The Elijah narrative (vv. 2-4) draws from 1 Kings 19:10-18. The hardening motif quotes Deuteronomy 29:4, Isaiah 29:10, and Psalm 69:22-23. The olive tree may allude to Jeremiah 11:16. The 'deliverer from Zion' quotation (v. 26) combines Isaiah 59:20-21 and Isaiah 27:9. The doxology echoes Isaiah 40:13 and Job 41:11.

1I ask then, has God rejected his people? Absolutely not! For I myself am an Israelite, a descendant of Abraham, from the tribe of Benjamin. 2God has not rejected his people whom he foreknew. Or do you not know what the Scripture says about Elijah, how he appeals to God against Israel? 3"Lord, they have killed your prophets, they have torn down your altars, and I alone am left, and they seek my life." 4But what is God's reply to him? "I have kept for myself seven thousand men who have not bowed the knee to Baal." 5So too at the present time there is a remnant chosen by grace. 6But if it is by grace, it is no longer on the basis of works; otherwise grace would no longer be grace. 7What then? Israel failed to obtain what it was pursuing. The elect obtained it, but the rest were hardened, 8According as it is recorded, God has granted them the inner life of slumber, sight that they should not witness, and ears that they should not hear;) to this day. 9And David says: "Let their table become a snare and a trap, a stumbling block and a retribution for them; 10Let their eyes grow dark so they cannot see, and let their backs be bent under the burden forever. 11So I ask, did they stumble so as to fall beyond recovery? Absolutely not! Rather, through their trespass salvation has come to the Gentiles, so as to make Israel jealous. 12Now if their trespass means riches for the world, and their failure means riches for the Gentiles, how much more will their full inclusion mean! 13Now I am speaking to you Gentiles. Inasmuch as I am an apostle to the Gentiles, I magnify my ministry, 14If by any means I may provoke to emulation them which are my physical nature, and may rescue some of them. 15For if their rejection means the reconciliation of the world, what will their acceptance mean but life from the dead? 16If the dough offered as firstfruits is holy, then the whole batch is holy; and if the root is holy, so are the branches. 17But if some of the branches were broken off, and you, a wild olive shoot, were grafted in among them and now share in the nourishing root of the olive tree, 18Boast not opposed to the branches. But if you boast, you bearest not the root, but the root you. 19Then you will say, "Branches were broken off so that I might be grafted in." ²⁰True enough. They were broken off because of their unbelief, and you stand by faith. So do not be arrogant, but be afraid. ²¹For if God did not spare the natural branches, neither will he spare you. ²²Consider then the kindness and the severity of God: severity toward those who have fallen, but God's kindness toward you — provided you continue in his kindness. Otherwise you too will be cut off. ²³And even they, if they do not persist in their unbelief, will be grafted in, for God has the power to graft them in again. ²⁴For if you were cut from what is by nature a wild olive tree and grafted, contrary to nature, into a cultivated olive tree, how much more will these natural branches be grafted back into their own olive tree! ²⁵For I do not want you to be unaware, brothers and sisters, of this mystery — lest you be wise in your own sight — that a partial hardening has come upon Israel until the fullness of the Gentiles has come in, ²⁶So all Israel will be saved — as it is written, There will come out of Sion the Deliverer, and will turn away ungodliness from Jacob: ²⁷"And this will be my covenant with them, when I take away their sins." ²⁸Regarding the gospel, they are enemies for your sake; but regarding election, they are beloved for the sake of the patriarchs. ²⁹For the gifts and the calling of God are irrevocable. ³⁰For just as you were once disobedient to God but now have received mercy because of their disobedience, ³¹In deed, even so have these also now not believed, that by way of your mercy they also may obtain mercy. ³²For God has consigned all to disobedience, so that he may have mercy on all. ³³Oh, the depth of the riches and wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments and how untraceable his ways! ³⁴Since who has known what the Lord is thinking? or who has been his advisor? ³⁵"Or who has given a gift to him that he might be repaid?" ³⁶Are all things — to whom be glory for ever, for of him, and through him, and to him. Amen.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The verb apōsato ('pushed away, rejected') echoes the language of Psalm 94:14 (LXX 93:14): 'the LORD will not reject his people.' Paul offers himself as exhibit A: if God had rejected Israel, Paul — a thoroughbred Israelite — would not be an apostle. The tribe of Benjamin was significant: it remained loyal to the house of David and was the tribe of Israel's first king, Saul (Paul's namesake).
1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 94:14. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
2. The verb proegnō ('foreknew') links back to 8:29 — God's foreknowledge is not mere advance awareness but relational choosing. A people whom God foreknew cannot be ultimately rejected. The verb entynchanei ('appeals, intercedes') is the same word used for Christ's intercession in 8:34, but here Elijah intercedes against Israel.
3. Paul quotes 1 Kings 19:10, 14 (with slight modifications from the LXX). Elijah's despair is absolute — he believes he is the sole remaining faithful person in Israel. The historical parallel to Paul's time is clear: apparent wholesale rejection of God's purposes.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References 1 Kings 19:10 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The word chrēmatismos ('divine reply, oracle') is a formal, authoritative response. God corrects Elijah's perception: seven thousand remained faithful. The verb katelipōn ('I kept, I reserved for myself') is emphatic — God preserved the remnant by his own initiative. The phrase emautō ('for myself') makes the remnant God's personal possession. Paul quotes 1 Kings 19:18.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes 1 Kings 19:18. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. Paul applies the Elijah precedent to his own era: just as God preserved seven thousand in Elijah's day, so now a remnant of Jewish believers exists. The phrase kat' eklogēn charitos ('according to the election of grace') identifies grace, not merit, as the basis of remnant membership.
6. Paul states the logical incompatibility of grace and works as bases for election. The SBLGNT omits the longer reading found in the KJV ('But if it be of works, then is it no more grace: otherwise work is no more work'), which appears in later manuscripts. The principle is absolute: if the remnant is chosen by grace, works cannot be the basis — the two are mutually exclusive.
7. Paul distinguishes two groups within Israel: hē eklogē ('the elect,' the remnant that believed) and hoi loipoi ('the rest,' the majority). The verb epōrōthēsan ('were hardened, made callous') is a divine passive — God hardened them, as in 9:18. The word pōrōsis suggests the formation of a callus or the hardening of stone.
8. Paul combines Deuteronomy 29:4 (LXX) and Isaiah 29:10. The word katanyxeōs ('stupor, deep sleep, numbness') describes a spiritual insensibility — aware of God's truth yet unable to perceive it. The phrase heōs tēs sēmeron hēmeras ('until this present day') extends the condition from Moses and Isaiah's time to Paul's own.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 29:10 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.

8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Deuteronomy 29:4 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. Paul quotes Psalm 69:22-23 (LXX 68:23-24), attributed to David. The 'table' (trapeza) may symbolize the Torah or the temple sacrifices — Israel's privileges become the very instruments of their ensnaring when they cling to them as substitutes for faith in Christ.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalms 69:22-23. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The continuation of Psalm 69:23. Darkened eyes and bent backs describe a people burdened and blinded. The phrase dia pantos ('forever, continually') seems final — but Paul will argue in the following verses that this hardening is not permanent. The Psalm's imprecatory language is applied typologically, not as Paul's personal wish.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalms 69:22-23 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. Paul distinguishes between stumbling (ptaiō, a temporary misstep) and falling (piptō, a permanent collapse). Israel stumbled but did not fall permanently. The divine purpose behind Israel's trespass is twofold: (1) salvation goes to the Gentiles, and (2) Israel is provoked to jealousy by Gentile faith. This jealousy is redemptive, not destructive — it is meant to draw Israel back.
12. Another 'how much more' (posō mallon) argument: if Israel's rejection produced worldwide blessing, Israel's acceptance will produce something even greater. The word plērōma ('fullness, full number, full inclusion') is the positive counterpart to 'failure' (hēttēma) — the full restoration of Israel.
13. Paul turns to address the Gentile believers in Rome directly. The verb doxazō ('I glorify, magnify, honor') applied to his ministry means he takes his apostolic role seriously and exercises it strategically.
14. Paul reveals his strategy: by successfully evangelizing Gentiles, he hopes to provoke his fellow Jews (mou tēn sarka, 'my flesh,' i.e., his kinspeople) to jealousy. The modest 'some of them' (tinas ex autōn) is realistic — Paul does not expect all Israel to believe through his personal ministry.
15. The parallel is breathtaking: rejection (apobolē) world reconciliation; acceptance (proslēmpsis) life from the dead. The phrase zōē ek nekrōn ('life from the dead') may mean (1) the general resurrection at the end of the age, triggered by Israel's restoration, or (2) a spiritual renewal of extraordinary proportions. Either way, Israel's future restoration will produce something beyond what their rejection produced.
16. Two analogies making the same point: the part consecrates the whole. The 'firstfruits' (aparchē) and 'root' (rhiza) likely refer to the patriarchs (Abraham, Isaac, Jacob), whose consecration sanctifies their descendants (the 'lump' and 'branches'). The reference to Numbers 15:17-21, where a portion of dough was offered to consecrate the whole batch, supports this reading.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Numbers 15:17-21. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. The olive tree metaphor begins. The natural branches (Israel) were partially broken off; the wild olive shoot (Gentile believers) was grafted in. The word tines ('some') is crucial — not all branches were broken off. The Gentile believer shares in (synkoinōnos, 'co-partaker of') the root's richness. The olive tree represents the covenant people of God, rooted in the patriarchs.
18. The verb katakauchō ('boast against, exult over') is a compound suggesting boasting at the expense of others. The corrective is theologically fundamental: Gentile Christians are supported by Israel's heritage ('the root bears you'), not the reverse. The church does not replace Israel but is grafted into Israel's covenant story.
19. Paul voices the Gentile believer's triumphalist logic: Israel's rejection was for our benefit. While there is a partial truth (cf. v. 11), the tone of self-congratulation is dangerous.
20. Paul concedes the factual point (kalōs, 'true enough, granted') but redirects the conclusion. The dative pistei ('by faith') is the only basis for the Gentile believer's standing — not ethnic merit or moral superiority. The imperative phobou ('fear, be afraid') is a warning: the same God who broke off natural branches can break off grafted ones.
21. The verb epheisato ('spared') echoes 8:32, where God 'did not spare his own Son.' The argument from lesser to greater: if God did not spare the natural (kata physin) branches who had prior claim, Gentile grafts should not presume on his patience.
22. The word chrēstotēta ('kindness, goodness') and apotomia ('severity, sternness' — literally 'cutting off') describe two aspects of God's character, both equally real. The conditional ean epimenēs ('if you continue') introduces a genuine warning: standing in grace is maintained by continuing in faith. The threat ekkopēsē ('you will be cut off') is addressed to Gentile believers corporately.
23. The door remains open: Israel's unbelief is not a permanent condition but can be reversed. The phrase dynatos estin ho theos ('God is able') appeals to divine power — the same God who raised the dead (4:17) can restore broken branches.
24. Paul acknowledges the botanical oddity: grafting wild stock onto cultivated stock is para physin ('contrary to nature') — normally the reverse is done. If God performed this unnatural grafting for Gentiles, how much more easily can he regraft Israel's own natural branches into their own tree. The phrase tē idia elaiā ('their own olive tree') is poignant — Israel belongs to this tree.

25. Paul uses his disclosure formula (cf. 1:13) to reveal a mystērion ('mystery') — not something secret but something previously hidden now revealed. The mystery has three elements: (1) the hardening is partial (apo merous, 'from a part'), (2) it is temporary (achris hou, 'until'), and (3) its terminus is the entry of 'the fullness of the Gentiles' (to plērōma tōn ethnōn). The purpose of revealing this mystery is to prevent Gentile arrogance (en heautois phronimoi, 'wise in your own estimation').
26. The phrase pas Israēl ('all Israel') is the interpretive crux. The word houtōs ('in this way, thus') points to the process described: through the dynamic of Gentile fullness provoking Jewish response. Paul quotes Isaiah 59:20-21 with modifications. 'The Deliverer' (ho rhyomenos) is Christ at his return. 'All Israel' most likely refers to the ethnic nation as a whole (not every individual but the nation as an entity), consistent with the Mishnaic usage of 'all Israel' (Sanhedrin 10:1).
26. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 59:20-21. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
27. Paul quotes from Isaiah 27:9 (LXX), connecting it to the new covenant promise. The word diathēkē ('covenant') echoes Jeremiah 31:31-34 — the new covenant includes the forgiveness of sins. Israel's salvation will be a covenant act of divine grace, not human achievement.
27. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 59:20-21. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
27. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 27:9. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
27. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Jeremiah 31:31-34. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
28. Paul holds two realities in tension: in terms of their present response to the gospel, unbelieving Israel is in opposition (echthroi, 'enemies'); in terms of God's eternal purpose, they remain agapētoi ('beloved'). The ground of their belovedness is not their own merit but the patriarchs — God's covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.
29. The word ametamelēta ('irrevocable, without regret, not to be taken back') is the theological anchor: God does not revoke his gifts or calling. What was given to Israel (the privileges listed in 9:4-5) remains theirs. God's faithfulness to his covenant promises is permanent.
30. Paul traces a providential pattern: Gentile disobedience Gentile mercy (through Israel's faithfulness in preserving Scripture and producing the Messiah); Israel's disobedience Gentile mercy (through the gospel going to the nations). The verb ēpēthēsate ('were disobedient') and ēlēthēte ('received mercy') summarize the Gentile journey.
31. The pattern continues: Israel's present disobedience serves the purpose of their future mercy. The phrase tō hymeterō eleēi ('by the mercy shown to you') means that Gentile mercy provokes Jewish jealousy (v. 11), which leads to Jewish mercy. The word nyn ('now') appears twice in some manuscripts — the SBLGNT includes both, emphasizing present-tense mercy.
32. The verb synekleisen ('shut up together, imprisoned, consigned') presents God as deliberately allowing universal disobedience — not because he delights in sin but because universal disobedience is the prerequisite for universal mercy. If anyone could claim self-achieved righteousness, mercy would be unnecessary. The double tous pantas ('all...all') encompasses both Jew and Gentile. This verse is the theological conclusion of chapters 9-11 and arguably of Romans 1-11.
33. Paul erupts into doxology. The exclamation ō bathos ('O depth!') expresses wonder at the fathomless nature of God's plan. Three divine attributes are celebrated: ploutou ('riches' — abundance of resources), sophias ('wisdom' — skill in deploying resources), and gnōseōs ('knowledge' — comprehensive awareness). The adjectives anexeraunēta ('unsearchable, beyond investigation') and anexichniastoi ('untraceable, beyond tracking') mean God's ways cannot be fully mapped by human reason.
34. Paul quotes Isaiah 40:13 (LXX). The rhetorical questions expect the answer 'no one.' God does not consult advisors; his wisdom is self-generated. This is not an anti-intellectual statement but a confession that divine wisdom exceeds human capacity.
34. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 40:13. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
35. Paul alludes to Job 41:11. No one has put God in their debt. God is the ultimate source; all things flow from him. The verb proedōken ('gave first, gave in advance') implies a prior gift that creates obligation — no such gift exists. God's mercy is free because no one can establish a prior claim.
35. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Job 41:11 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
36. The threefold prepositional phrase encompasses all reality: ex autou ('from him' — origin), di' autou ('through him' — sustenance), eis auton ('to him' — destination). All things come from God, are sustained by God, and exist for God's glory. The doxology 'to him be glory forever, Amen' brings the theological argument of chapters 1-11 to a fitting conclusion before the ethical exhortations of chapters 12-16 begin.

Summary: Romans 12 marks the transition from theological argument (chapters 1-11) to ethical exhortation (chapters 12-16). Paul urges believers to present their bodies as living sacrifices and to be transformed by the renewing of their minds (vv. 1-2). He then addresses the body of Christ: each member has different gifts — prophecy, service, teaching, exhortation, giving, leadership, mercy — and all should function within their calling. The chapter concludes with a series of rapid-fire ethical instructions about genuine love, honoring one another, serving the Lord, rejoicing in hope, overcoming evil with good, and living at peace with everyone.

What Makes This Remarkable: Verses 1-2 function as the hinge of the entire letter — the 'therefore' (oun) connects all of chapters 1-11 to all of chapters 12-16. The theological indicative becomes the ethical imperative. The concept of 'living sacrifice' (thysia zōsa) is a deliberate paradox: sacrifices are normally dead. Paul redefines worship from temple ritual to total-life offering. The phrase 'be transformed by the renewing of your mind' (metamorphousthe tē anakainōsei tou noos) uses the same verb as Christ's transfiguration (Mark 9:2). The rapid ethical commands of vv. 9-21 echo the Sermon on the Mount and Proverbs.

Translation Friction: The phrase logikēn latreian (v. 1) is difficult: 'rational worship,' 'spiritual worship,' or 'reasonable service'? Each translation captures a different dimension. We render 'true and proper worship' but note the alternatives. The gifts list (vv. 6-8) is not systematic or exhaustive — it differs from 1 Corinthians 12 and Ephesians 4.

Connections: The living sacrifice language (v. 1) transforms Old Testament sacrificial theology (Leviticus 1-7). The body metaphor (vv. 4-5) parallels 1 Corinthians 12:12-27. The 'overcome evil with good' (v. 21) echoes Jesus' teaching in Matthew 5:38-48. The command to bless persecutors (v. 14) directly reflects Jesus' words (Luke 6:28).

¹Therefore I urge you, brothers and sisters, by the mercies of God, to present your bodies as a living sacrifice, holy and pleasing to God — this is your true and proper worship. ²Do not be conformed to this age, but be transformed by the renewing of your mind, so that you may discern what is the will of God — what is good, pleasing, and perfect. ³For by the grace given to me I say to everyone among you: do not think of yourself more highly than you ought to think, but think with sober judgment, each according to the measure of faith that God has assigned. ⁴For as in one body we have many members, and the members do not all have the same function, ⁵So we, being numerous, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of yet another. ⁶Having gifts that differ according to the grace given to us: if prophecy, in proportion to faith; ⁷Or ministry, let us remain on our ministering — or he that teaches, on teaching. ⁸Or he that exhorteth, on encouragement — he that gives, allow him do it with generosity. He that ruleth, with diligence. He that sheweth mercy, with cheerfulness. ⁹Let love be genuine. Abhor what is evil; hold fast to what is good. ¹⁰Be devoted to one another in brotherly love. Outdo one another in showing honor. ¹¹Do not be slothful in zeal, be fervent in spirit, serve the Lord. ¹²Rejoice in hope, be patient in affliction, be persistent in prayer. ¹³Contribute to the needs of the saints and pursue hospitality. ¹⁴Bless those who persecute you; bless and do not curse. ¹⁵Rejoice with those who rejoice; weep with those who weep. ¹⁶Live in harmony with one another. Do not be haughty, but associate with the lowly. Never be wise in your own sight. ¹⁷Repay no one evil for evil, but give thought to do what is honorable in the sight of everyone. ¹⁸If possible, so far as it depends on you, live peaceably with all people. ¹⁹Beloved, never avenge yourselves, but leave room for the wrath of God, for it is written, "Vengeance is mine; I will repay, says the Lord." ²⁰To the contrary, "if your enemy is hungry, feed him; if he is thirsty, give him something to drink; for by doing this you will heap burning coals on his head." ²¹Do not be overcome by evil, but overcome evil with good.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The verb parastēsai ('to present, offer') is the same word used for presenting sacrifices at the altar (cf. 6:13). Three adjectives describe the sacrifice: zōsan ('living' — not dead), hagian ('holy' — set apart for God), euaireston ('pleasing' — acceptable to God). The phrase logikēn latreian is notoriously difficult. We render 'true and proper worship,' capturing both the rational and the fitting dimensions.

2. Two contrasting verbs: sychēmatizesthe ('be conformed, shaped by external pressure') and metamorphousthe ('be transformed, changed from within'). The first suggests external molding; the second suggests organic, internal change. The word aïōni ('age') refers to the present world-system, not geography. The verb dokimazein ('to test, prove, discern') means evaluating and approving what is genuinely excellent. Three adjectives describe God's will: agathon ('good'), euaireston ('pleasing'), teleion ('perfect, complete, mature').
3. Paul uses four forms of the phronein ('think, have a mindset') word group in rapid succession — a wordplay impossible to reproduce in English. The compound hyperphronein ('to over-think, to think arrogantly') is contrasted with sōphronein ('to think soundly, soberly'). The 'measure of faith' (metron pisteōs) determines one's function within the body — different gifts reflect different allocations of faith.
4. Paul introduces the body metaphor he develops more extensively in 1 Corinthians 12. The word praxin ('function, activity, practice') emphasizes that different members have different roles — diversity of function is by design.
5. The phrase en Christō ('in Christ') defines the sphere in which the many become one. The phrase allēlōn melē ('members of one another') emphasizes mutual interdependence — each believer belongs not just to the body but to every other member.
6. The word charismata ('gifts of grace') shares the root of charis ('grace') — gifts are grace-given, not self-generated. The phrase analogian tēs pisteōs ('proportion of faith') means prophecy should be exercised within the bounds of sound faith, not exceeding one's measure.
7. The word diakonian ('service, ministry') is the root of 'deacon.' Paul's instruction is simple: whatever your gift, devote yourself to it. The repeated en ('in') construction emphasizes focus and dedication to one's calling.
8. Three gifts receive qualifiers: giving should be done en haplotēti ('with generosity, sincerity, simplicity'), leading en spoudē ('with diligence, eagerness, earnestness'), and mercy en hilarotēti ('with cheerfulness, gladness'). The last word gives us 'hilarity' — mercy should not be grudging but joyful. The list covers intellectual (prophecy, teaching), practical (service, giving, leadership), and relational (exhortation, mercy) gifts.
9. The adjective anypokritos ('genuine, unhypocritical, without pretense') contains the root hypokrisis ('hypocrisy, play-acting'). Love must be real, not performed. The verb apostygountes ('abhorring, detesting viscerally') is a strong word — revulsion, not mere disapproval. The verb kollōmenoi ('clinging to, being glued to') suggests adhesion — goodness should stick.
10. The word philadelphia ('brotherly love') and philostorgoi ('warmly affectionate') combine family love terms. The phrase allēlous proēgoumenoi ('outdoing one another, taking the lead in honoring') creates a competition of generosity rather than self-promotion.
11. Three rapid commands: negative (not oknēroi, 'lazy, sluggish'), positive (zeontes, 'boiling, on fire' — the Spirit is compared to boiling water), and directional (douleuontes, 'serving as a slave to the Lord'). Some manuscripts read 'serving the time' (kairō) instead of 'serving the Lord' (kyriō), but the SBLGNT reads kyriō.
12. Three more rapid commands forming a triad: hope rejoicing (looking forward), affliction patience (enduring the present), prayer persistence (sustained communion with God). The verb proskarterountes ('persisting, being devoted to, not giving up') implies consistent, unwavering prayer.
13. The verb koinōnountes ('sharing, participating in, contributing to') implies personal involvement, not distant charity. The verb diōkontes ('pursuing, chasing after') is the same verb used for pursuing righteousness (9:30) — hospitality should be actively sought out, not merely offered when convenient. The word philoxenian ('hospitality, love of strangers') was a crucial virtue in the ancient world where travelers depended on hosts.
14. This directly echoes Jesus' teaching (Matthew 5:44; Luke 6:28). The verb eulogeite ('bless, speak well of, invoke good upon') is the opposite of katarasthe ('curse, invoke evil upon'). The repetition of 'bless' (eulogeite kai mē katarasthe) emphasizes the command — the natural response to persecution is cursing; the Christ-shaped response is blessing.
15. Two infinitives of purpose expressing empathy: shared joy and shared grief. The simplicity of the command belies its difficulty — it is often harder to rejoice with others' success than to weep with their sorrow. Both require genuine emotional identification with another person.
16. Three commands about social orientation: (1) to auto phronountes ('think the same thing' — unity of mind), (2) tois tapeinois synapagomenoi ('being carried along with the humble' — identifying with those of low status), (3) mē ginesthe phronimoi par' heautois ('do not become wise in your own eyes' — quoting Proverbs 3:7). The word tapeinois can be masculine ('humble people') or neuter ('humble things').
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Proverbs 3:7. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. The prohibition against retaliation (kakon anti kakou, 'evil in exchange for evil') echoes 1 Thessalonians 5:15 and 1 Peter 3:9. The verb pronoumenoi ('giving thought to, planning for, considering in advance') suggests that honorable conduct requires deliberate planning, not merely spontaneous reaction. Paul quotes Proverbs 3:4 (LXX).
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Proverbs 3:4. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. The double qualifier — ei dynaton ('if possible') and to ex hymōn ('so far as it depends on you') — is realistic: peace is not always achievable because it requires two willing parties. The believer's responsibility is to do everything within their power to maintain peace while recognizing that others may refuse.
19. The address agapētoi ('beloved') softens the stern command. The phrase dote topon tē orgē ('give place to the wrath') means step aside and let God handle justice. Paul quotes Deuteronomy 32:35. Relinquishing vengeance is not passive acceptance of injustice but active trust that God will judge rightly.

19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 32:35. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
20. Paul quotes Proverbs 25:21-22. The 'burning coals' (anthrakas pyros) metaphor is debated: it may mean (1) causing the enemy's shame and repentance, (2) an Egyptian ritual of carrying coals on the head as a sign of contrition, or (3) intensifying divine judgment. The context (overcoming evil with good, v. 21) favors the redemptive reading — kindness produces contrition.
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Proverbs 25:21-22 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
21. The chapter's concluding command summarizes the entire ethical section's approach: the Christian response to evil is not passive acceptance or retaliatory violence but active goodness that defeats evil on its own terms. The verb nika ('conquer, overcome, prevail') uses battle language — this is spiritual warfare waged with the weapons of kindness, generosity, and love.

Summary: Romans 13 addresses three topics: the believer's relationship to governing authorities (vv. 1-7), the debt of love that fulfills the law (vv. 8-10), and the urgency of the present eschatological moment (vv. 11-14). Paul argues that governing authorities are instituted by God and serve as his agents for order; therefore believers should submit, pay taxes, and give proper respect. He then summarizes the law's commands under the single command to love one's neighbor. The chapter concludes with an appeal to wake from sleep, cast off the works of darkness, and put on the Lord Jesus Christ.

What Makes This Remarkable: The passage on governing authorities (vv. 1-7) is one of the most consequential and controversial texts in Christian political theology. Written to Christians in Rome — the seat of imperial power — it enjoins submission to the very government that would soon persecute them under Nero. The passage must be read alongside Revelation 13 (where the state is the beast), Acts 5:29 ('we must obey God rather than men'), and the broader biblical witness about unjust governments. The love-fulfills-the-law argument (vv. 8-10) is remarkably concise and anticipates the fuller treatment in Galatians 5:14.

Translation Friction: The scope of submission to governing authorities (vv. 1-7) has been extensively debated. Paul's statement appears absolute but was written in a specific context (the relatively stable early years of Nero's reign) and must be balanced with the rest of Scripture. We render the text as given without limiting or extending its application. The clause 'there is no authority except from God' (v. 1) has been used to justify tyranny; this is a misreading that ignores the purpose clause (v. 4) — authorities are God's servants for good.

Connections: The submission to authorities echoes Jesus' 'render to Caesar' teaching (Mark 12:17) and 1 Peter 2:13-17. The love-command summary (v. 9) quotes Leviticus 19:18, as does Jesus (Mark 12:31) and James (James 2:8). The 'put on Christ' language (v. 14) connects to Galatians 3:27 and the baptismal 'clothing with Christ.' The eschatological urgency (vv. 11-12) echoes 1 Thessalonians 5:1-8.

¹Let every person be subject to the governing authorities. For there is no authority except from God, and those that exist have been established by God. ²Therefore whoever resists the authority resists what God has appointed, and those who resist will incur judgment. ³For rulers are not a terror to good conduct, but to bad. Would you have no fear of the authority? Then do what is good, and you will receive its approval, ⁴Since he is the minister of God to you for good. But if you do that which is evil, be afraid. Since he beareth not the sword in vain — since he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil. ⁵Therefore one must be subject, not only because of wrath but also because of conscience. ⁶For the same reason you also pay taxes, for the authorities are ministers of God, attending to this very thing. ⁷Pay to all what is owed to them: taxes to whom taxes are owed, revenue to whom revenue is owed, respect to whom respect is owed, honor to whom honor is owed. ⁸Owe no one anything, except to love each other, for the one who loves another has fulfilled the law. ⁹For the commandments, "You shall not commit adultery, You shall not murder, You shall not steal, You shall not covet," and any other commandment, are summed up in this word: "You shall love your neighbor as yourself." ¹⁰Love does no wrong to a neighbor; therefore love is the fulfillment of the law. ¹¹Besides this, you know the time, that the hour has already come for you to wake from sleep. For salvation is nearer to us now than when we first believed. ¹²The night is far gone; the day is at hand. So then let us cast off the works of darkness and put on the armor of light. ¹³Let us walk properly as in the daytime, not in orgies and drunkenness, not in sexual immorality and sensuality, not in quarreling and jealousy. ¹⁴Instead, put on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make no provision for the flesh to gratify its desires.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The phrase pasa psychē ('every soul, every person') includes all believers without exception. The verb hypotassesthō ('be subject, be subordinate') is a military term for ranking under authority. The passive tetagmenai ('have been established, ordered, arranged') attributes the existence of governing structures to God's providential ordering. This does not mean every governmental action is divinely approved but that the institution of governance itself is God's provision for human society.
2. The verb antitassomenos ('resists, opposes, sets oneself against') uses the same root as hypotassō in verse 1 — it is the opposite of submission. The word krima ('judgment') here likely means judgment from the governing authority (cf. vv. 3-4) rather than eternal damnation — the KJV's 'damnation' is too strong.
3. Paul describes the ideal function of government: rewarding good and punishing evil. This describes how government should function and often does function, not an absolute guarantee. When government reverses these functions — punishing good and rewarding evil — other biblical principles (obedience to God above all, prophetic critique of injustice) come into play.
4. The word diakonos ('servant, minister') is used twice: the governing authority serves God's purposes. The phrase tēn machairan phorei ('bears the sword') refers to the government's authority to use coercive force, including capital punishment. The word ekdikos ('avenger, agent of justice') describes the government as executing a function that belongs ultimately to God (12:19). Paul draws a direct line between God's wrath (1:18; 2:5) and its earthly administration through government.
5. Paul gives two motivations for submission: fear of punishment (dia tēn orgēn, 'because of wrath') and moral conviction (dia tēn syneidēsin, 'because of conscience'). The higher motivation is conscience — knowing that submission to legitimate authority is right before God.
6. The word leitourgoi ('ministers, public servants') is a cultic/liturgical term (from which we get 'liturgy') — governing authorities perform a kind of divine service. The verb proskartterountes ('attending to, being devoted to') suggests diligent, sustained attention to governing duties.
7. The word opheilas ('what is owed, debts') connects to the 'debt of love' in verse 8. Paul lists four obligations: phoron ('direct taxes, tribute'), telos ('indirect taxes, customs, tolls'), phobon ('fear, respect'), and timēn ('honor'). The movement from financial to personal obligations broadens the scope of civic duty. This echoes Jesus' 'render to Caesar' teaching (Mark 12:17).
8. The transition from civic obligations (v. 7) to love's obligation (v. 8) uses the same vocabulary of 'owing' (opheilete). All debts can be discharged except one: the debt of love, which remains perpetually outstanding. The perfect tense peplērōken ('has fulfilled') indicates that love is the complete and ongoing fulfillment of the law's demands.
9. Paul lists four of the Ten Commandments (all from the 'second table' — obligations to neighbor) and subsumes them under Leviticus 19:18. The verb anakephalaioitai ('is summed up, is recapitulated, is brought under one heading') means love is not a replacement for the specific commands but their summary and fulfillment. The SBLGNT omits 'you shall not bear false witness,' which appears in some manuscripts.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 20:13-17. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Leviticus 19:18. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. Paul states love's relationship to the law in both negative (does no harm) and positive (fulfills) terms. The word plērōma ('fulfillment, completion, fullness') is the same word used for the 'fullness of the Gentiles' (11:25) and the 'fullness of Christ' (Ephesians 4:13). Love fills up the law's requirements completely.
11. The word kairon ('time, season, decisive moment') denotes not clock time (chronos) but the strategic, eschatological moment. The metaphor of sleep (hypnos) represents spiritual complacency. The word sōtēria ('salvation') here refers to the consummation — the return of Christ and final redemption — which draws closer with each passing day.
12. Two metaphors: clothing (casting off/putting on) and light/darkness. The 'night' is the present evil age; the 'day' is the coming age of Christ's return. The word hopla ('armor, weapons') — the same word from 6:13 — indicates that the Christian life is a battle requiring divine equipment. Light is not merely moral goodness but the radiance of the approaching day.
13. The adverb euschēmonōs ('properly, decently, honorably') means living as if the day has already arrived. Three pairs of vices are listed: kōmois/methais ('orgies/drunkenness' — excesses of consumption), koitais/aselgeiais ('sexual immorality/sensuality' — excesses of the body), eridi/zēlō ('quarreling/jealousy' — excesses of the ego). The word koitais (literally 'beds') is a euphemism for illicit sexual activity.
14. The metaphor of 'putting on' (endysasthe) Christ echoes the baptismal language of Galatians 3:27 — Christ is the garment that covers and transforms the believer. The phrase tēs sarkos pronoian mē poieisthe ('do not make provision for the flesh') means do not plan or prepare for sin — starve the flesh of opportunity. This verse was famously the one that Augustine read in the garden at his conversion (Confessions VIII.12.29), which immediately ended his struggle with sexual temptation.

Summary: Romans 14 addresses disputes between the 'weak' and 'strong' within the Roman church over food restrictions and the observance of special days. Paul argues that both positions are legitimate expressions of faith and that neither group should despise or judge the other, since each person stands or falls before their own Lord. The chapter establishes key principles: the kingdom of God is not about food and drink but about righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Spirit; each person will give an account to God; and no one should put a stumbling block before a brother or sister for whom Christ died.

What Makes This Remarkable: Paul's pastoral approach here is remarkable for its balance. He clearly agrees with the 'strong' that all foods are clean (v. 14, 'I know and am persuaded in the Lord Jesus that nothing is unclean in itself'), yet he devotes the entire chapter to urging the strong not to use their correct theology as a weapon against the weak. The twice-repeated 'Christ died and lived again' formula (vv. 9, 15) grounds the ethics of tolerance in Christology. The quotation of Isaiah 45:23 (v. 11) — a monotheistic confession in Isaiah — is applied to Christ as the one before whom every knee will bow.

Translation Friction: The identity of the 'weak' and 'strong' is debated. The weak may be Jewish Christians maintaining Torah food laws, Gentile Christians influenced by ascetic philosophy, or a mixed group with various scruples. Paul does not fully identify them, and the labels 'weak' and 'strong' may reflect the groups' own self-designations or Paul's assessment. The statement 'nothing is unclean in itself' (v. 14) appears to set aside Levitical food laws entirely, which raises questions about the continuity of Torah for Jewish believers.

Connections: The 'weak and strong' discussion parallels 1 Corinthians 8-10 (food offered to idols). The phrase 'we do not live to ourselves' (v. 7) echoes Galatians 2:20. The Isaiah 45:23 quotation (v. 11) is also used in Philippians 2:10-11. The 'stumbling block' language (v. 13) connects to the stumbling stone of 9:32-33. The kingdom language (v. 17) echoes Jesus' teaching on the kingdom of God.

¹As for the one who is weak in faith, welcome him, but not to quarrel over opinions. ²One person believes he may eat anything, while the weak person eats only vegetables. ³Let not the one who eats despise the one who abstains, and let not the one who abstains pass judgment on the one who eats, for God has welcomed him. ⁴Who are you to pass judgment on the servant of another? It is before his own master that he stands or falls. And he will be upheld, for the Lord is able to make him stand. ⁵One person considers one day more sacred than another, while another considers every day alike. Each one should be fully convinced in his own mind. ⁶The one who observes the day, observes it in honor of the Lord. The one who eats, eats in honor of the Lord, since he gives thanks to God, while the one who abstains, abstains in honor of the Lord and gives thanks to God. ⁷For none of us lives to himself, and none of us dies to himself. ⁸For if we live, we live to the Lord, and if we die, we die to the Lord. So then, whether we live or whether we die, we are the Lord's. ⁹For to this end Christ died and lived again, that he might be Lord both of the dead and of the living. ¹⁰Why do you pass judgment on your brother? Or you, why do you despise your brother? For we will all stand before the judgment seat of God. ¹¹And every tongue will confess to god, for it is written, As I live, says the Lord, every knee will bow to me. ¹²So then each of us will give an account of himself to God. ¹³Therefore let us not pass judgment on one another any longer, but rather decide never to put a stumbling block or hindrance in the way of a brother. ¹⁴I know and am persuaded in the Lord Jesus that nothing is unclean in itself, but it is unclean for anyone who thinks it is unclean. ¹⁵For if your brother is grieved by what you eat, you are no longer walking in love. By what you eat, do not destroy the one for whom Christ died. ¹⁶So do not let what you regard as good be spoken of as evil. ¹⁷For the kingdom of God is not a matter of eating and drinking but of righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit. ¹⁸Whoever thus serves Christ is acceptable to God and approved by others. ¹⁹So then let us pursue what makes for peace and for mutual upbuilding. ²⁰Do not, for the sake of food, destroy the work of God. Everything is indeed clean, but it is wrong for anyone to make another stumble by what he eats. ²¹It is good not to eat meat or drink wine or do anything that causes your brother to stumble. ²²The faith that you have, keep between yourself and God. Blessed is the one who has no reason to pass judgment on himself for what he approves. ²³But whoever has doubts is condemned if he eats, because the eating is not from faith. For whatever does not proceed from faith is sin.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The verb proslambanesthe ('welcome, accept, receive into fellowship') is the same word used for God's acceptance of believers (v. 3, 15:7). The phrase diakriseis dialogismon ('quarrels over opinions, disputes about doubtful matters') indicates that the issues in question are matters of conscience, not core doctrine.
2. The 'strong' believer's faith extends to all foods without restriction. The 'weak' believer restricts their diet to vegetables (lachana), likely to avoid any possibility of eating unclean meat or meat associated with idol sacrifice. The vegetarian practice appears to be a strategy of avoidance rather than a principled vegetarianism.
3. Paul identifies the characteristic sins of each group: the strong tend to exoutheneito ('despise, look down on, treat with contempt') the weak as backward, while the weak tend to krineteo ('judge, condemn') the strong as worldly. Both responses are forbidden because God has welcomed (proselabeto) both.
4. The metaphor is from household slavery: a servant (oiketen, 'household slave') answers to his own master, not to another household's slaves. The believer's 'master' (kyrio) is Christ. The promise 'he will be upheld' (stathesetai) expresses confidence that God sustains his servants even when they err on secondary matters.
5. A second issue emerges: the observance of special days, likely Sabbaths and Jewish festivals. Paul's approach is the same as with food — both positions are acceptable. The verb plerophoreitho ('be fully convinced, be fully assured') demands that each person act from genuine conviction, not from peer pressure or unexamined habit.
6. Paul's criterion is not the practice itself but the intention behind it: both the one who eats and the one who abstains do so kyrio ('to the Lord, for the Lord'). The act of thanksgiving (eucharistei to theō) is the evidence that both practices are oriented toward God. The SBLGNT omits the clause about the one who does not observe the day, found in some manuscripts.
7. This verse universalizes the principle: the Christian life in its entirety — living and dying — belongs to the Lord, not to the individual. Self-autonomy is displaced by christological ownership.
8. The threefold repetition builds to the climactic declaration tou kyriou esmen ('we belong to the Lord'). This ownership by Christ is the basis for Christian freedom from human judgment — since we belong to the Lord, only his verdict matters. The structure is liturgical, almost creedal.
9. The SBLGNT has the shorter reading: 'died and lived' (apethanen kai ezesen) rather than 'died, rose, and lived' in the Textus Receptus. The purpose of Christ's death and resurrection is lordship (kyrieuse) over all human existence, encompassing death and life. This lordship is the basis for his exclusive right to judge his servants.
10. Paul addresses both groups in turn — the judging weak and the despising strong — using the second person singular for direct challenge. The phrase bemati tou theou ('judgment seat of God') refers to the eschatological tribunal. The SBLGNT reads 'God' rather than 'Christ' (found in some manuscripts), though both refer to the same judgment.
11. Paul quotes Isaiah 45:23, prefaced with the oath formula from Isaiah 49:18 ('As I live'). In Isaiah, YHWH declares that every knee will bow to him — the ultimate monotheistic claim. Paul applies this to the final judgment, where God (through Christ, as in Philippians 2:10-11) will be the universal judge.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 45:23. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 49:18. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. The phrase logon dosei ('will give an account, will render a word') is judicial language — each person will explain their life directly to God. The emphasis on 'himself' (heautou) makes judging others irrelevant: focus on your own account, not your neighbor's.
13. Paul plays on the word krinomen ('judge'): stop judging each other and instead make a judgment (krinate) about your own behavior. The terms proskomma ('stumbling block') and skandalon ('hindrance, trap, cause of falling') refer to actions that cause a weaker believer to violate their conscience.
14. Paul reveals his own position: he sides with the strong. The double attestation 'I know and am persuaded' (oida kai pepeismai) is emphatic. The word koinon ('common, unclean') is the technical term for ritually impure food (cf. Mark 7:2, Acts 10:14). Yet Paul immediately qualifies: if someone's conscience regards a food as unclean, for that person it is unclean. Conscience has real moral authority even when objectively mistaken.
15. The verb lypeitai ('is grieved, is distressed') indicates real spiritual harm, not mere annoyance. The command 'do not destroy' (me apollye) uses a strong word — apollymi means to ruin or bring to utter loss. The climactic phrase 'for whom Christ died' (hyper hou Christos apethanen) is the ultimate argument: if Christ valued this person enough to die for them, how can you not sacrifice a food preference for them?

16. The 'good' (to agathon) refers to the strong believer's legitimate freedom. The verb blasphemeistho ('be blasphemed, be spoken evil of') indicates that misusing freedom provokes others to slander the faith. Freedom exercised without love becomes a scandal.
17. This is one of Paul's rare uses of 'the kingdom of God' (he basileia tou theou), a phrase more common in the Gospels. The triad of dikaiosyne ('righteousness'), eirene ('peace'), and chara ('joy') defines the kingdom's essence in relational rather than ritual terms. The phrase 'in the Holy Spirit' (en pneumati hagio) indicates that these qualities are Spirit-produced, not humanly achieved.
18. Serving Christ 'in this' (en touto) — in righteousness, peace, and joy — gains both divine acceptance (euairestos to theos) and human approval (dokimos tois anthropois). The word dokimos ('approved, tested and found genuine') is a technical term for metals that have passed the assayer's test.
19. The verb diokomen ('let us pursue') is the same word used for pursuing hospitality (12:13) — peace and mutual edification require active effort. The word oikodomes ('building up, edification') is an architectural metaphor: the community is a building under construction, and every member's actions either build it up or tear it down.
20. The phrase to ergon tou theou ('the work of God') refers to the believing community or the individual believer — both are God's workmanship. Paul again affirms the strong position: panta kathara ('all things are clean,' echoing Jesus' teaching in Mark 7:19). Yet clean food becomes a moral problem when it causes others to stumble.
21. Paul extends the principle beyond food to wine and 'anything' (the open-ended category) that might cause a brother to stumble. The word kalon ('good, noble, right') describes the moral quality of voluntary self-restriction for the sake of others. The SBLGNT has a shorter reading than the Textus Receptus.
22. Paul addresses the strong: your freedom is real, but it is between you and God — do not flaunt it. The macarism ('blessed is') describes the person whose conscience is clear about their choices. The verb dokimazei ('approves, tests and approves') indicates thoughtful, examined freedom rather than careless license.
23. The verb diakrinomenos ('doubting, hesitating, being divided in mind') describes an unsettled conscience. The principle is profound: acting against one's conscience, even if the action is objectively permissible, is sin because it does not proceed from faith. The closing maxim — 'whatever is not from faith is sin' — has broad application beyond food disputes: it establishes conscience informed by faith as the necessary basis for all Christian conduct.

Summary: Romans 15 concludes the 'weak and strong' discussion by pointing to Christ as the ultimate example of bearing with others rather than pleasing oneself. Paul grounds mutual acceptance in Scripture, citing a chain of Old Testament texts that promise the inclusion of the Gentiles in God's praise. He then describes his own apostolic ministry as a priestly service bringing the Gentile offering to God, recounts his missionary strategy of preaching where Christ has not been named, and outlines his travel plans — first to Jerusalem with the collection from Macedonia and Achaia, then to Rome en route to Spain. The chapter closes with an urgent request for prayer as Paul faces danger in Judea.

What Makes This Remarkable: The density of Old Testament quotations in vv. 9-12 is striking: Paul strings together Psalm 18:49, Deuteronomy 32:43, Psalm 117:1, and Isaiah 11:10 in rapid succession, all demonstrating that Gentile inclusion was always God's plan. Paul's self-description as a 'priestly minister' (leitourgon, v. 16) performing the 'priestly service' (hierourgounta) of the gospel is unique in his letters — he reimagines his apostolic mission in cultic terms, with the Gentiles themselves as the acceptable offering. The collection for Jerusalem (vv. 25-27) represents Paul's concrete attempt to bind Jewish and Gentile churches together, and his anxiety about its reception (v. 31) reveals the real tensions in the early church.

Translation Friction: Paul's claim to have 'fully proclaimed the gospel of Christ' from Jerusalem to Illyricum (v. 19) raises historical questions — did Paul personally evangelize every region, or does he mean he established representative churches? His planned trip to Spain (v. 24, 28) is mentioned nowhere else in the undisputed letters, and whether he ever reached Spain remains debated. The collection's theological logic (v. 27) — Gentiles owe material gifts because they received spiritual blessings — has been read as either a voluntary gesture of gratitude or an obligatory debt.

Connections: The 'bearing with the weak' theme (vv. 1-3) directly continues chapter 14 and parallels 1 Corinthians 9:19-23. Christ quoting Psalm 69:9 (v. 3) connects to John 2:17. The Isaiah 11:10 citation (v. 12) links to the 'root of Jesse' in Revelation 5:5 and 22:16. The collection for Jerusalem (vv. 25-28) is discussed in detail in 2 Corinthians 8-9 and referenced in 1 Corinthians 16:1-4 and Galatians 2:10. Paul's request for prayer (vv. 30-32) foreshadows the events of Acts 21:27-36.

¹Now we who are strong have an obligation to bear with the failings of the weak, and not to please ourselves. ²Let each of us please his neighbor for his good, to build him up. ³For Christ did not please himself, but as it is written, "The insults of those who insult you have fallen on me." ⁴For whatever was written in former days was written for our instruction, so that through endurance and through the encouragement of the Scriptures we might have hope. ⁵May the God of endurance and encouragement grant you to live in harmony with one another, in accord with Christ Jesus, ⁶so that together, with one voice, you may glorify the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. ⁷Therefore welcome one another, just as Christ has welcomed you, for the glory of God. ⁸For I tell you that Christ became a servant to the circumcised to show God's truthfulness, in order to confirm the promises given to the patriarchs, ⁹and in order that the Gentiles might glorify God for his mercy. As it is written, "For this reason I will praise you among the nations, and sing to your name." ¹⁰And again it says, "Rejoice, O nations, together with his people." ¹¹And again, "Praise the Lord, all nations, and let all the peoples extol him." ¹²And again Isaiah says, "The root of Jesse will come, the one who rises to rule the nations; in him the nations will hope." ¹³May the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace as you trust in him, so that you may overflow with hope by the power of the Holy Spirit. ¹⁴I myself am convinced about you, my brothers and sisters, that you yourselves are full of goodness, filled with all knowledge, and able to instruct one another. ¹⁵But on some points I have written to you rather boldly by way of reminder, because of the grace given me by God ¹⁶to be a minister of Christ Jesus to the Gentiles, serving as a priest of God's gospel, so that the offering of the Gentiles may be acceptable, sanctified by the Holy Spirit. ¹⁷In Christ Jesus, then, I have reason to boast in my work for God. ¹⁸For I will not venture to speak of anything except what Christ has accomplished through me to bring the Gentiles to obedience — by word and deed, ¹⁹by the power of signs and wonders, by the power of the Spirit of God — so that from Jerusalem and all the way around to Illyricum I have fully proclaimed the gospel of Christ. ²⁰and so I make it my ambition to preach the gospel not where Christ has already been named, so that I would not build on another person's foundation, ²¹but as it is written, "Those who have never been told of him will see, and those who have never heard will understand." ²²This is the reason why I have so often been prevented from coming to you. ²³But now, since I no longer have room for work in these regions and have longed for many years to come to you, ²⁴I hope to see you in passing as I go to Spain, and to be helped on my journey there by you, once I have enjoyed your company for a while. ²⁵But at present I am going to Jerusalem to serve the saints there. ²⁶For Macedonia and Achaia have been pleased to make a contribution for the poor among the saints in Jerusalem. ²⁷They were pleased to do it, and indeed they owe it to them. For if the Gentiles have shared in their spiritual blessings, they ought also to be of service to them in material things. ²⁸When I have completed this task and have delivered this fruit to them safely, I will set out for Spain by way of you. ²⁹I know that when I come to you I will come in the fullness of the blessing of Christ. ³⁰I appeal to you, brothers and sisters, by our Lord Jesus Christ and by the love of the Spirit, to strive together with me in your prayers to God on my behalf, ³¹that I may be rescued from the unbelievers in Judea, and that my service for Jerusalem may be acceptable to the saints, ³²so that by God's will I may come to you with joy and be refreshed in your company. ³³Now the God of wholeness remain with you all. Amen.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The verb opheilomen ('we ought, we are obligated') indicates moral duty, not mere recommendation. The word asthenēmata ('weaknesses, failings') refers to the scruples of the weak conscience, not moral failures. The word bastazein ('to bear, carry') implies active support, like carrying a burden, not passive tolerance.
2. The phrase eis to agathon ('for his good') qualifies the pleasing — not flattery or people-pleasing, but genuinely seeking the other's benefit. The word oikodomēn ('building up, edification') continues the architectural metaphor from 14:19.

3. Paul quotes Psalm 69:9 (LXX 68:10), a psalm widely used in the NT as a passion psalm (cf. John 2:17, 15:25, 19:28-29; Acts 1:20). The logic is christological: if Christ himself absorbed insults directed at God rather than pleasing himself, believers must likewise absorb inconvenience for the sake of others. Christ is both the model and the motive for self-denial.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalms 69:9 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. Paul articulates a hermeneutical principle: the entire Old Testament (hosa proographē, 'whatever was written beforehand') serves the instruction of the present community. The Scriptures produce two things: hypomonē ('endurance, steadfast patience') and paraklēsis ('encouragement, comfort'). Together these sustain elpida ('hope'), a key Pauline virtue.
5. This is a wish-prayer: Paul asks God to give what the Scriptures teach. The phrase to auto phronein ('to think the same thing, to be of one mind') does not mean uniformity of opinion but a shared disposition oriented toward Christ. The standard kata Christon Iēsoun ('according to Christ Jesus') means Christ is the model for the community's unity.
6. The adverb homothymadon ('with one mind, unanimously') is characteristic of Luke-Acts (Acts 1:14, 2:46) but rare in Paul. The phrase 'with one mouth' (en heni stomati) is a vivid image of united worship. The goal of mutual acceptance is not mere tolerance but doxological unity — praise that rises from a reconciled community.
7. This verse is the conclusion of the weak/strong argument that began at 14:1. The verb proslambanesthe ('welcome, receive') echoes 14:1 and 14:3. The SBLGNT reads hymas ('you') rather than hēmas ('us') in the Textus Receptus. The purpose clause eis doxan tou theou ('for the glory of God') gives the ultimate rationale: mutual welcome among believers glorifies God.
8. Paul describes Christ's earthly ministry as diakonon peritomēs ('servant of the circumcision') — Christ served the Jewish people first. This fulfilled two purposes: to demonstrate God's faithfulness (alētheias theou) and to confirm (bebaiōsai) the covenant promises to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Christ's Jewish ministry is the prerequisite for Gentile inclusion.
9. The Gentiles glorify God for eleous ('mercy') rather than for faithfulness to promises — mercy, because they had no covenant claim. Paul begins a catena of four OT quotations proving Gentile inclusion. The first is from Psalm 18:49 (LXX 17:50, = 2 Samuel 22:50), where David praises God 'among the nations.'
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalms 18:49. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes 2 Samuel 22:50. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The second quotation is from Deuteronomy 32:43 (LXX), the Song of Moses. The nations are summoned to rejoice with (meta) God's people — not as outsiders observing, but as participants alongside Israel. The LXX reading differs from the MT here, and Paul follows the LXX.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Deuteronomy 32:43 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The third quotation is Psalm 117:1 (LXX 116:1), the shortest psalm. It commands all nations (panta ta ethnē) and all peoples (pantes hoi laoi) to praise the Lord. Paul reads this as a prophetic summons that is now being fulfilled in the Gentile churches.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalms 117:1. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. The fourth quotation is Isaiah 11:10 (LXX), climaxing the chain with an explicitly messianic text. The 'root of Jesse' (rhiza tou Iessai) refers to the Messiah as David's descendant. The LXX's 'rising to rule' (ho anistamenos archein) may carry resurrection overtones for Paul. The word elpiousin ('will hope') connects to the theme of hope that frames this section (vv. 4, 13).
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 11:10. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. This benediction closes the theological argument of the letter (chs. 1-15:13). God is named ho theos tēs elpidos ('the God of hope'), picking up the hope theme from the preceding quotations. The prayer asks for joy and peace (echoing 14:17) that overflow (perisseuein) into hope. The source of this overflow is the Holy Spirit's power (dynamei pneumatos hagiou), not human effort.
14. Paul begins the personal section of the letter with a diplomatic affirmation of the Roman church's maturity. The triad — agathōsynēs ('goodness'), gnōseōs ('knowledge'), and the ability to nouthetein ('instruct, admonish') — indicates they do not need an apostle to resolve their disputes. This is pastoral tact: Paul has spent four chapters correcting them while affirming their competence.
15. The adverb tolmēroteron ('more boldly, rather daringly') acknowledges that writing to a church he did not found required courage. He softens this with apo merous ('on some points, in part') and epanamimnēskōn ('reminding'), framing his letter as a refresher, not a rebuke. His authority rests on charin ('grace') — his apostolic commission from God.
16. This verse contains Paul's most explicitly priestly self-description. He is a leitourgon ('minister, liturgical servant') who performs hierourgounta ('priestly service') with the gospel. The prosphora tōn ethnōn ('offering of the Gentiles') is ambiguous: it could mean the offering that the Gentiles themselves constitute (genitive of apposition) or the offering that the Gentiles bring. The former reading is more likely — the Gentile believers are the sacrificial offering Paul presents to God, sanctified by the Holy Spirit.

17. Paul's kauchēsīn ('boasting, ground for pride') is qualified: it is en Christō Iēsou ('in Christ Jesus') and concerns ta pros ton theon ('things pertaining to God'). This is not self-congratulation but a recognition of what God has accomplished through him. The 'boasting in Christ' language recalls 1 Corinthians 1:31 and 2 Corinthians 10:17.
18. Paul insists he will only report what Christ has done through him (di' emou), not claim credit for others' work. The goal is hypakoēn ethnōn ('obedience of the Gentiles'), echoing the letter's opening (1:5) and closing (16:26). The phrase logō kai ergō ('by word and deed') encompasses Paul's preaching and his practical ministry.
19. Paul claims a ministry confirmed by sēmeiōn kai teratōn ('signs and wonders'), a phrase rooted in Exodus traditions (Deut 34:11). The geographical scope — from Jerusalem to Illyricum (modern Albania/Croatia) — describes an arc through the eastern Mediterranean. The verb peplērōkenai ('I have fulfilled, completed') does not mean every person was reached but that representative churches were planted throughout this region.
20. The verb philotimoumenon ('aspiring, making it a point of honor') reveals Paul's missionary strategy: pioneer evangelism in unreached areas. He avoids building on another's themelion ('foundation'), using the same construction metaphor as 1 Corinthians 3:10-11. This explains why he has not yet visited Rome — someone else founded that church.
21. Paul quotes Isaiah 52:15 (LXX), part of the fourth Servant Song. In Isaiah, the nations are astonished by the Servant's suffering and exaltation. Paul applies this to his pioneer missionary work — he fulfills the prophetic vision by bringing the message to those who have never heard. The quotation also functions as a scriptural warrant for his strategy.
21. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 52:15. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
22. The verb enekoptomēn ('I was hindered, cut off') explains why Paul has never visited Rome — not lack of desire (1:13) but the demands of his pioneer work in the East. The passive voice may imply divine direction or simply the pressure of circumstances.
23. The remarkable claim mēketi topon echōn ('no longer having a place') indicates Paul considers his work in the eastern Mediterranean complete — not that every person is converted, but that churches are established in each region. The word epipothian ('longing, deep desire') expresses personal affection for a church he has never visited.
24. Spain (Spanian) represents the western frontier of the known world — Paul's ambition is to bring the gospel to the ends of the earth. The verb propemphthēnai ('to be sent on, to be helped on one's way') is a technical term for providing material support for a missionary journey (cf. 1 Cor 16:6, 3 John 6). Paul diplomatically signals he needs Rome's logistical support for the Spanish mission. Whether he ever reached Spain is unknown from his letters; 1 Clement 5:7 may refer to it.
25. Before Rome and Spain, Paul must first go to Jerusalem. The verb diakonōn ('serving, ministering') describes his role as bearer of the collection. The 'saints' (hagiois) refers to the Jerusalem church, which Paul consistently identifies as the mother community.
26. The collection is a major project spanning several years (cf. 1 Cor 16:1-4, 2 Cor 8-9, Gal 2:10). Macedonia and Achaia (northern and southern Greece) are the contributing regions. The word koinōnian ('sharing, participation') frames the gift as an act of fellowship, not charity. The phrase tous ptōchous tōn hagiōn ('the poor among the saints') specifies economic need in the Jerusalem church.
27. Paul establishes a theological logic of reciprocity: the Gentiles are opheiletai ('debtors') to Jerusalem because they received pneumatikois ('spiritual things') — the gospel, the Scriptures, the Messiah himself. In return, they should share sarkikois ('fleshly, material things'). The verb leitourgēsai ('to serve, to render service') has cultic overtones, elevating the financial gift to an act of worship.
28. The verb sphragisamenos ('having sealed') likely means 'having delivered securely' — as one seals a document or package to guarantee its integrity. The karpon touton ('this fruit') refers to the collection, described as the fruit of the Gentile churches' faith and love. Paul's travel plan is clear: Jerusalem first, then Rome, then Spain.
29. Paul expresses confidence (oida, 'I know') that his visit will bring plērōmati eulogias ('fullness of blessing'). The SBLGNT omits 'of the gospel' (tou euangelion) found in the Textus Receptus. The 'blessing of Christ' encompasses both Paul's teaching and the spiritual enrichment of mutual fellowship.
30. Paul's appeal is unusually urgent, invoking both Christ and the Spirit (a trinitarian formula). The verb synagōnisasthai ('to struggle alongside, to contend together') portrays prayer as combat — Paul is heading into danger and needs the Romans' active intercession, not passive well-wishes. The phrase tēs agapēs tou pneumatōs ('the love of the Spirit') is unique in Paul.
31. Paul has two fears: first, physical danger from hoi apeithountes ('the disobedient, the unbelieving') in Judea; second, the possibility that the Jerusalem church might reject the collection. Both fears proved well-founded — Acts 21:27-36 records his arrest in Jerusalem, and the acceptance of the collection is never explicitly confirmed in Acts. The verb rhysthō ('may I be rescued') is the same word used in the Lord's Prayer (Matt 6:13).
32. The ultimate goal of Paul's prayer request: to arrive in Rome en chara ('with joy'), not as a prisoner. The verb synanapausōmai ('may I be refreshed together with') is a compound expressing mutual refreshment — Paul expects to receive as well as give. The phrase dia thelēmatos theou ('by the will of God') submits all his plans to divine sovereignty. Ironically, Paul did reach Rome — but as a prisoner (Acts 28:16).
33. A brief peace benediction using the title ho theos tēs eirēnēs ('the God of peace'), which Paul also uses in 16:20, Philippians 4:9, and 1 Thessalonians 5:23. If the letter originally ended here (as some scholars propose), this would be a fitting conclusion. The 'amen' seals the benediction as a liturgical prayer.

Summary: Romans 16 opens with a commendation of Phoebe, a deacon of the church at Cenchreae, and then unfolds the longest greeting list in any Pauline letter — naming twenty-six individuals and several households. The greetings reveal a remarkably diverse community: Jews and Gentiles, men and women, slaves and free, with women prominently featured in leadership roles. After the greetings, Paul inserts a sharp warning against those who cause divisions and put obstacles before the community, urging the Romans to avoid them. The letter closes with greetings from Paul's companions in Corinth and a grand doxology praising God who is able to strengthen the believers according to the revelation of the mystery now disclosed through the prophetic Scriptures to all nations.

What Makes This Remarkable: The greeting list is a goldmine for understanding the early Roman church. Women hold prominent roles: Phoebe is a diakonos ('deacon') and prostatis ('patron/benefactor'); Prisca is named before her husband Aquila (vv. 3-4), suggesting her greater prominence; Junia (v. 7) is described as 'outstanding among the apostles'; and Mary, Tryphaena, Tryphosa, and Persis are all commended for hard labor in the Lord. The diversity of names — Latin, Greek, and Jewish — reflects Rome's cosmopolitan character. Several names are attested in Roman inscriptions for imperial slaves and freedpersons, suggesting the church drew heavily from the slave and freed population.

Translation Friction: Romans 16:7 is a famous crux: is Iounian ('Junia') a woman's name or the contracted male form 'Junias'? The overwhelming scholarly consensus now identifies Junia as a woman, and 'outstanding among the apostles' (episēmoi en tois apostolois) as indicating she was an apostle, not merely known to the apostles. The doxology (vv. 25-27) poses a textual problem: some manuscripts place it after 14:23, others after 15:33, and some omit it entirely. Its Pauline authorship has been questioned, though its theology is consistent with Paul. The warning passage (vv. 17-20) is surprisingly harsh compared to the rest of the letter and may address a specific situation Paul has learned about.

Connections: Prisca and Aquila (v. 3) appear in Acts 18:2-3, 18:18-26, 1 Corinthians 16:19, and 2 Timothy 4:19. Epäenetos as the 'first convert in Asia' (v. 5) connects to Paul's Ephesian ministry (Acts 19). The 'crushing of Satan' language (v. 20) echoes Genesis 3:15. The 'mystery now revealed' theme of the doxology (vv. 25-26) parallels Colossians 1:26-27 and Ephesians 3:4-6. The phrase 'obedience of faith' (v. 26) forms an inclusio with 1:5, bracketing the entire letter.

¹I commend to you our sister Phoebe, who is a deacon of the church at Cenchreae, ²so that you may welcome her in the Lord in a manner worthy of the saints, and help her with whatever she may need from you, for she has been a patron and benefactor of many, and of myself as well. ³Greet Prisca and Aquila, my coworkers in Christ Jesus, ⁴who risked their own necks for my life. Not only I give thanks to them, but so do all the churches of the Gentiles. ⁵Greet also the church that meets in their house. Greet my dear friend Epäenetos, who was the first convert to Christ in Asia. ⁶Greet Mary, who has worked very hard for you. ⁷Greet Andronicus and Junia, my fellow Jews and my fellow prisoners. They are outstanding among the apostles, and they were in Christ before I was. ⁸Greet Ampliatos, my dear friend in the Lord. ⁹Greet Urbanus, our coworker in Christ, and my dear friend Stachys. ¹⁰Greet Apelles, who is approved in Christ. Greet those who belong to the household of Aristobulus. ¹¹Greet my fellow Jew Herodion. Greet those in the household of Narcissus who are in the Lord. ¹²Greet Tryphaena and Tryphosa, who labor in the Lord. Greet the dear Persis, who has worked hard in the Lord. ¹³Greet Rufus, chosen in the Lord, and his mother, who has been a mother to me as well. ¹⁴Greet Asyncritus, Phlegon, Hermes, Patrobas, Hermas, and the brothers and sisters who are with them. ¹⁵Give my greetings to Philologos and Julia, to Nereus and his sister, and to Olympas, along with all the believers who gather with them. ¹⁶Greet one another with a holy kiss. All the churches of Christ send you greetings. ¹⁷I urge you, brothers and sisters, to watch out for those who cause divisions and create obstacles contrary to the teaching that you have learned. Avoid them. ¹⁸For such people do not serve our Lord Christ, but their own appetites, and by smooth talk and flattery they deceive the hearts of the unsuspecting. ¹⁹For the report of your obedience has reached everyone. I rejoice over you, but I want you to be wise about what is good and innocent about what is evil. ²⁰The God of peace will soon crush Satan under your feet. The grace of our Lord Jesus be with you. ²¹Timothy, my coworker, sends greetings to you, as do Lucius and Jason and Sosipater, my fellow Jews. ²²I, Tertius, the one who wrote this letter, greet you in the Lord. ²³Gaius, who is host to me and to the whole church, sends you greetings. Erastus, the city treasurer, and our brother Quartus greet you. ²⁴The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with all of you. Amen. ²⁵Now to the one who is able to strengthen you according to my gospel and the proclamation of Jesus Christ, according to the revelation of the mystery that was kept silent for long ages ²⁶but now disclosed and made known through the prophetic Scriptures, according to the command of the eternal God, to bring about the obedience of faith among all the nations — ²⁷to the only wise God, through Jesus Christ, be glory forever. Amen.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Paul uses the formal verb synistēmi ('I commend, I introduce officially'), a technical term for letters of recommendation in the ancient world. Phoebe is likely the bearer of the letter to Rome. She is identified with the title diakonon ('deacon, minister') — the same word used for church officers in Philippians 1:1 and 1 Timothy 3:8-13. The church at Cenchreae was the port town east of Corinth, confirming Paul writes from the Corinthian area.
2. Paul asks the Romans to welcome Phoebe axiōs tōn hagiōn ('in a manner worthy of the saints') and to assist her in whatever pragmati ('matter, business') she requires — she may be conducting personal or church business in Rome. The title prostatis ('patron, benefactor') indicates Phoebe was a woman of wealth and social standing who supported the church financially and perhaps legally. Paul himself benefited from her patronage.
3. Prisca (the formal Latin name; Priscilla is the diminutive used in Acts) is named before Aquila in four of six NT references, suggesting her greater prominence in ministry. They were Jewish Christians expelled from Rome by Claudius's edict (Acts 18:2), met Paul in Corinth, moved to Ephesus (Acts 18:18-19, 1 Cor 16:19), and have now returned to Rome. Paul calls them synergous ('coworkers'), his highest term of commendation.
4. The phrase ton heautōn trachēlon hypethēkan ('they placed their own neck under,' i.e., risked decapitation) refers to a specific life-threatening episode, possibly during the Ephesian crisis (Acts 19:23-41, cf. 1 Cor 15:32, 2 Cor 1:8-10). The gratitude extends beyond Paul to all the Gentile churches — Prisca and Aquila's service had wide impact.
5. Prisca and Aquila hosted a house church (kat' oikon ekklēsia) — as they also did in Ephesus (1 Cor 16:19). Early Christians had no dedicated buildings; worship met in private homes. Epānetus is called aparchē tēs Asias ('firstfruit of Asia'), meaning the first convert in the Roman province of Asia (western Turkey). The SBLGNT reads 'Asia' rather than 'Achaia' (found in some MSS).
6. Mary (Marian) is a Jewish name (Hebrew Miriam). The verb ekopiasen ('labored hard, toiled') is Paul's standard term for strenuous ministry work (cf. 1 Cor 15:10, Gal 4:11, Phil 2:16). The SBLGNT reads eis hymas ('for you,' i.e., for the Roman church) rather than eis hēmas ('for us').
7. This verse is among the most discussed in Pauline studies. Andronicus and Junia are syngeneis ('fellow Jews, relatives') and synaichmalōtous ('fellow prisoners') — they shared imprisonment with Paul, though when and where is unknown. The identification of Junia as a woman is supported by the unanimous testimony of patristic commentators and by the fact that the male name 'Junias' does not exist in any ancient inscription or text. They became Christians before Paul (pro emou), placing their conversion in the earliest years of the church, possibly in Jerusalem.
8. Ampliatius (Ampliaton) is a common Latin slave name, attested frequently in inscriptions from the imperial household. The name appears in the catacomb of Domitilla in Rome in an elaborately decorated tomb, suggesting this early Christian of humble origin achieved honored status in the community.
9. Urbanus (Latin for 'city person') is another common slave name in Roman inscriptions. He is called synergon ('coworker'), Paul's term for ministry partners. Stachys (Greek for 'ear of grain') is a rare name but attested among members of the imperial household in Rome.
10. Apelles is called dokimon ('approved, tested and found genuine') — the same word used in 14:18 for the believer approved by God. The phrase tous ek tōn Aristoboulou ('those from [the household] of Aristobulus') likely refers to slaves or freedpersons of an Aristobulus who may not himself be a Christian. A possible identification is the grandson of Herod the Great who lived in Rome.
11. Herodion's name suggests a connection to the Herodian dynasty, possibly a freedman. He is syngenē mou ('my fellow Jew'). The household of Narcissus — specified as those who are en kyriō ('in the Lord'), indicating not all household members were Christians — may be the household of the famous freedman Narcissus who served under Emperor Claudius. After Narcissus's death, his slaves would have passed to the emperor.
12. Three more women commended for ministry labor. Tryphaena and Tryphosa (names derived from tryphē, 'daintiness') may be sisters or even twins — the pairing of similar names was common. Both are tas kopiōsas ('those laboring'), using the standard Pauline term for strenuous ministry. Persis (a name meaning 'Persian woman') receives the intensified commendation polla ekopiasen ('labored much'), with the past tense possibly indicating advanced age or a completed phase of work.
13. Rufus is ton eklekton en kyriō ('the chosen one in the Lord') — either a general description of all believers as 'elect' or a special commendation of Rufus as an outstanding Christian. Mark 15:21 identifies Simon of Cyrene as 'the father of Alexander and Rufus,' and if Mark's gospel was written for a Roman audience, this may be the same Rufus. Paul's description of Rufus's mother as kai emou ('and mine') indicates she had cared for Paul with maternal kindness.

14. These five names are all common slave or freedman names in Roman inscriptions. They are grouped together with 'the brothers who are with them' (tous syn autois adelphous), suggesting they form a distinct house church. The two names Hermēn and Herman (both derived from the god Hermes) indicate the prevalence of pagan theophoric names among early Christians of slave origin.
15. Another cluster forming a probable second house church. Philologus and Julia may be husband and wife — both names are common among imperial slaves. Nereus is known from Roman mythology (a sea god), and the name appears in inscriptions of the imperial household. The unnamed sister of Nereus is one of several women whose contributions are acknowledged even without a name. Olympas may be a shortened form of Olympiodorus.
16. The 'holy kiss' (philēmati hagiō) was a liturgical greeting in early Christian worship (cf. 1 Cor 16:20, 2 Cor 13:12, 1 Thess 5:26, 1 Pet 5:14). The claim that 'all the churches of Christ' (hai ekklēsiai pasai tou Christou) send greetings is bold — Paul speaks as the apostle to the Gentiles with authority to represent the wider church. This is the only time the phrase 'churches of Christ' appears in Paul.
17. The warning is abrupt after the warm greetings — Paul shifts to urgent imperative. The verb skopein ('watch out for, keep your eye on') implies active vigilance. The troublemakers create dichostasias ('divisions, dissensions') and skandala ('stumbling blocks, traps') that contradict the teaching the Romans received. The identity of these opponents is debated — they may be Judaizers, libertines, or false teachers of another kind.
18. The phrase tē heautōn koilia ('their own belly') may be literal (gluttons who violate food ethics) or metaphorical (self-serving in general); cf. Philippians 3:19. The words chrēstologias ('smooth talk, fine-sounding speech') and eulogias ('flattery, pleasant words') describe persuasive rhetoric used to manipulate. The akakōn ('innocent, naive, unsuspecting') are the vulnerable members of the community who lack discernment.
19. Paul balances his warning with affirmation: the Romans' obedience (hypakoē) is widely known (cf. 1:8). His desire that they be sophous eis to agathon ('wise toward the good') and akeriaous eis to kakon ('innocent toward evil') echoes Jesus' instruction to be 'wise as serpents and innocent as doves' (Matt 10:16). The word akeraious ('unmixed, pure, innocent') means untainted by evil, not naive about its existence.
20. This verse combines a promise with a benediction. The phrase ho theos tēs eirēnēs ('the God of peace') appeared in 15:33. The crushing of Satan echoes Genesis 3:15 (LXX), where God promises that the woman's offspring will crush the serpent. The en tachei ('quickly, soon') expresses eschatological urgency. The SBLGNT omits the 'amen' found in some manuscripts after the grace benediction.
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 3:15 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
21. Timothy is Paul's most prominent coworker, co-sender of six letters. Lucius may be Lucius of Cyrene (Acts 13:1), though identification is uncertain. Jason is likely the Jason of Thessalonica who hosted Paul (Acts 17:5-9). Sosipater may be the Sopater of Beroea mentioned in Acts 20:4. All three are called syngeneis ('fellow Jews, kinsmen').
22. A rare moment where the secretary (amanuensis) identifies himself. Tertius physically wrote the letter at Paul's dictation — a common practice in antiquity (cf. Gal 6:11, where Paul notes his own handwriting). The Latin name Tertius ('third') is a common slave name. His personal greeting en kyriō ('in the Lord') identifies him as a fellow believer, not merely a hired scribe.
23. Gaius is Paul's host and host to holēs tēs ekklēsias ('the whole church'), indicating his house is the main meeting place in Corinth (likely the Gaius of 1 Cor 1:14). Erastus holds the office of oikonomos tēs poleōs ('city treasurer, city steward'), one of the highest-ranking Christians mentioned in the NT. An inscription found in Corinth reads 'Erastus in return for his aedileship laid [this pavement] at his own expense.' Quartus ('fourth') is another Latin numerical name, likely indicating slave origin.
24. This grace benediction is absent from many early manuscripts of the SBLGNT tradition and is bracketed or omitted in critical editions. Some scholars regard it as a scribal addition harmonizing with v. 20b. If original, it serves as a second closing blessing before the doxology. Its placement varies across manuscript families, reflecting the complex textual history of Romans 16.
25. The doxology (vv. 25-27) is one of the most debated textual issues in Paul's letters. Some manuscripts place it after 14:23, others here, others in both locations, and some omit it. Its vocabulary has affinities with Colossians and Ephesians, leading some scholars to question Pauline authorship, though its themes are thoroughly Pauline. The phrase to euangelion mou ('my gospel') is characteristically Pauline (2:16, 2 Tim 2:8). The mystērion ('mystery') is not esoteric knowledge but God's previously hidden plan now revealed.
26. The mystery, once hidden, is now phanerōthentos ('made manifest, disclosed'). The means of disclosure is dia graphōn prophētikōn ('through the prophetic Scriptures') — the OT writings, now read in light of Christ. The phrase eis hypakoēn pisteōs ('for the obedience of faith') forms an inclusio with 1:5, bracketing the entire letter. The goal is universal: eis panta ta ethnē ('to all the nations').
27. The doxology reaches its climax: monō sophō theō ('to the only wise God') echoes 11:33-36 and Jewish liturgical formulations. The mediation of Jesus Christ (dia Iēsou Christou) is characteristic of Paul's theology — glory reaches God through Christ. The relative pronoun hō ('to whom') creates a grammatical ambiguity: does glory go to God or to Christ? The overall structure directs it to God through Christ. The final 'amen' seals the entire letter as an act of worship, concluding Paul's most systematic theological work.

1 Corinthians

Summary: Paul opens his letter to the Corinthian church with a standard apostolic greeting, affirming his calling and the sanctified status of his readers. He gives thanks for the spiritual gifts present in Corinth, then immediately addresses the central crisis: the church has fractured into rival factions claiming allegiance to Paul, Apollos, Cephas, or Christ himself. Paul argues that Christ cannot be divided and that the cross — foolishness to the world — is the true power and wisdom of God. He reminds the Corinthians that God chose what the world considers foolish, weak, and insignificant to shame the wise and strong.

What Makes This Remarkable: Paul's opening establishes the theological framework for the entire letter: the cross inverts worldly values. The Corinthian factions reflect a culture obsessed with rhetorical skill and social status — values Paul systematically dismantles. The phrase 'the word of the cross' (ho logos tou staurou) in verse 18 is startling in its original context: crucifixion was so shameful that Roman writers avoided detailed discussion of it. Paul places this scandal at the center of God's wisdom.

Translation Friction: The Greek schismata (v. 10) literally means 'tears' or 'rips' — the same word used for tearing cloth. We render it as 'divisions' for clarity. The phrase 'Christ crucified' (Christon estauromenon, v. 23) uses the perfect passive participle, indicating a past event with ongoing significance — Christ is not merely 'one who was crucified' but remains 'the crucified one.' The relationship between sophia ('wisdom') and logos ('word/message') in this chapter is complex and resists neat English equivalents.

Connections: Paul's argument about divine wisdom overturning human wisdom draws on Isaiah 29:14 (quoted in v. 19) and Jeremiah 9:23-24 (echoed in vv. 26-31). The theme of God choosing the weak to shame the strong echoes the Old Testament pattern seen in David vs. Goliath, Gideon's reduced army, and the election of Israel itself. The baptism discussion (vv. 14-17) will be revisited in chapters 10 and 12.

¹Paul, called as an apostle of Christ Jesus by the will of God, and our brother Sosthenes, ²To the church of God that is in Corinth, to those who have been sanctified in Christ Jesus, called as saints, together with all who call on the name of our Lord Jesus Christ in every place — their Lord and ours: ³Grace to you and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. ⁴I always thank my God for you because of the grace of God that was given to you in Christ Jesus, ⁵Through him you have been made rich in every way — in all your speaking and in all your knowledge. ⁶Indeed as the testimony of Christ was confirmed in you:. ⁷As a result, you are not lacking any spiritual gift while you eagerly wait for our Lord Jesus Christ to return. ⁸He will also sustain you to the end, so that you will be blameless on the day of our Lord Jesus Christ. ⁹God is faithful, by whom you were called into fellowship with his Son, Jesus Christ our Lord. ¹⁰Now I urge you, brothers and sisters, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that all of you agree and that there be no divisions among you, but that you be united in the same mind and the same purpose. ¹¹For it has been reported to me about you, my brothers and sisters, by Chloe's people, that there are quarrels among you. ¹²What I mean is this: each of you says, "I belong to Paul," or "I belong to Apollos," or "I belong to Cephas," or "I belong to Christ." ¹³Is Christ divided? was Paul crucified for you? or were you baptized by the authority of Paul? ¹⁴I am grateful to God that I did not baptize any of you, but Crispus and Gaius; ¹⁵Lest any should say that I had immersed in mine own identity. ¹⁶I did baptize the household of Stephanas as well. Beyond that, I do not know whether I baptized anyone else. ¹⁷For Christ did not send me to baptize but to proclaim the gospel — and not with eloquent wisdom, so that the cross of Christ would not be emptied of its power. ¹⁸For the message of the cross is foolishness to those who are perishing, but to us who are being saved it is the power of God. ¹⁹For it is written: "I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and the discernment of the discerning I will set aside." ²⁰Where is the wise person? Where is the scribe? Where is the debater of this age? Has God not made the wisdom of the world foolish? ²¹For since, in the wisdom of God, the world through its wisdom did not come to know God, God was pleased through the foolishness of the proclamation to save those who believe. ²²For Jews ask for signs and Greeks seek wisdom, ²³However, we preach Christ crucified, to the Jews a stumblingblock, and to the Greeks foolishness; ²⁴And the wisdom of god, but to them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God. ²⁵For the foolishness of God is wiser than human wisdom, and the weakness of God is stronger than human strength. ²⁶For consider your calling, brothers and sisters: not many of you were wise by human standards, not many were powerful, not many were of noble birth. ²⁷But God chose the foolish things of the world to shame the wise, and God chose the weak things of the world to shame the strong, ²⁸Base matters of the age, and matters which are despised, has God chosen, yea, and matters which are not, to bring to nought things that are:. ²⁹Indeed, that no flesh should glory in his presence. ³⁰It is because of him that you are in Christ Jesus, who became for us wisdom from God — our righteousness, sanctification, and redemption — ³¹That, in keeping with as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord.

1. The Greek kletos apostolos ('called apostle') lacks the infinitive 'to be' — Paul is not 'called to become' an apostle but 'a called apostle,' one whose identity is defined by divine summons. Sosthenes may be the synagogue ruler mentioned in Acts 18:17, though this identification is uncertain.
2. The Greek hegiasmenois ('having been sanctified') is a perfect passive participle — sanctification is something God has already done to them, not something they achieved. As with kletos in verse 1, kletois hagios ('called saints') lacks the infinitive 'to be.' They are not 'called to become saints' but are 'called-saints' — their identity is established by God's call. The final phrase autōn kai hēmōn ('theirs and ours') is grammatically ambiguous: it could modify 'place' (every place, theirs and ours) or 'Lord' (their Lord and ours). We follow the latter reading as it reinforces the letter's unity theme.
3. Paul's greeting combines the Greek charis ('grace') with the Hebrew-rooted eirēnē ('peace,' corresponding to shalom). This dual greeting bridges the Greek and Jewish worlds represented in the Corinthian congregation. The pairing of God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ as co-source of grace and peace reflects early high Christology.
4. Paul's thanksgiving section (vv. 4-9) is diplomatically crafted — he thanks God for what God has done among them, not for what they have accomplished. The grace (charis) is described as 'given' (dotheisē, aorist passive) — a definite past act of divine generosity.
5. The verb eploutisthēte ('you were enriched') is aorist passive — God did the enriching. The two areas of enrichment, logos ('speech/word') and gnōsis ('knowledge'), are precisely the gifts the Corinthians valued most and would later abuse. Paul's thanksgiving subtly sets up his critique.
6. The Greek martyrion tou Christou ('testimony of/about Christ') could be an objective genitive ('testimony about Christ') or subjective genitive ('testimony from Christ'). We take it as objective — the apostolic witness about Christ was validated in their experience. The verb ebēbaiōthē ('was confirmed') is a legal term for establishing or guaranteeing something.
7. The Greek charisma ('gift of grace') will become a major topic in chapters 12-14. Paul acknowledges the Corinthians' giftedness while framing it eschatologically — gifts serve the community while they await Christ's return. The word apokalypsis ('revelation, unveiling') refers to Christ's return, not a private spiritual experience.
8. The verb ebēbaiōsei ('will confirm/sustain') echoes ebēbaiōthē in verse 6 — the same God who confirmed the testimony will confirm the believers. The word anenklētous ('blameless, without accusation') is a legal term: they will stand unindicted on judgment day. 'The day of our Lord Jesus Christ' refers to the final judgment, corresponding to the Old Testament 'day of the LORD.'

9. The declaration pistos ho theos ('faithful is God') anchors the entire thanksgiving — the Corinthians' security rests not on their performance but on God's faithfulness. The word koinōnia ('fellowship, participation, sharing') denotes a deep, mutual participation in Christ's life, not merely social association. This term will recur at 10:16 in connection with the Lord's Supper.
10. The Greek schismata ('divisions, tears') is the word from which English 'schism' derives — it literally means rips or tears in fabric. The church is being torn apart. The verb katērtismenoi ('restored, mended, made complete') is used in Mark 1:19 for mending fishing nets — Paul envisions the torn community being stitched back together. The Greek adelphoi ('brothers') is rendered 'brothers and sisters' since Paul addresses the entire congregation, as the context of the letter makes clear.
11. Chloe is named without further identification, suggesting she was well-known to both Paul and the Corinthians. The phrase tōn Chloēs ('those of Chloe') likely refers to members of her household — slaves, freedpersons, or family members who had traveled to Paul. That Paul names his source openly suggests he is not trafficking in gossip but acting on reliable intelligence. The word erides ('quarrels, strife') indicates active verbal conflict, not merely differing opinions.
12. The four slogans reveal faction lines in the Corinthian church. Apollo was an eloquent Alexandrian Jew (Acts 18:24) whose rhetorical skill likely attracted those who valued sophisticated speech. Cephas (Aramaic for 'rock,' = Peter) may represent a more Jewish-oriented faction. The 'Christ party' is the most debated — they may have claimed a direct, unmediated relationship with Christ that bypassed apostolic authority. Paul's point is that all four slogans are equally problematic.
13. Three rhetorical questions, each expecting a negative answer. The first — memeristic ho Christos ('Has Christ been divided?') — could also be read as a statement: 'Christ has been divided!' (an outraged exclamation). Either way, the implication is that factional loyalty tears apart the one body of Christ. The second and third questions establish the logic: only the one who was crucified for them and in whose name they were baptized has any claim on their allegiance.
14. Crispus was the synagogue ruler who believed (Acts 18:8). Gaius is likely the Gaius of Romans 16:23 who hosted the whole church in Corinth. Paul's relief at having baptized so few reveals how baptism was being used as a badge of factional identity — 'I was baptized by Paul' became a status claim.
15. Paul is grateful in retrospect — not that baptism is unimportant, but that the Corinthians' misuse of it to form factions was limited by the fact that he personally baptized so few of them.
16. The correction mid-thought ('I did baptize the household of Stephanas as well') adds an unpolished, authentic quality — Paul is dictating and remembering as he goes. Stephanas's household will be mentioned again at 16:15 as the 'firstfruits of Achaia.' The Greek oikos ('household') would include family members, slaves, and dependents.
17. The phrase ouk en sophia logou ('not in wisdom of speech/word') targets the Corinthian obsession with rhetorical skill. Corinth was a city that prized sophisticated oratory. Paul insists that clever rhetoric actually undermines the gospel by shifting attention from the cross to the speaker. The verb kenōō ('to empty, to make void') is striking — human eloquence can drain the cross of its power by making the message about the messenger.
18. The Greek ho logos tou staurou ('the word/message of the cross') is Paul's programmatic statement. Both participles — apollymenois ('perishing') and sōzomenois ('being saved') — are present tense, indicating ongoing processes rather than fixed states. The word mōria ('foolishness, stupidity') is blunt — the cross is not merely misunderstood by outsiders but actively regarded as idiotic.
19. Paul quotes Isaiah 29:14 (from the Septuagint). The original context is God's judgment against Jerusalem's leaders who relied on political alliances rather than trusting God. Paul applies it more broadly to all human wisdom that operates independently of God. The verb athetēsō ('I will set aside, reject, nullify') is stronger than the KJV's 'bring to nothing' — it implies active divine rejection.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 29:14. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
20. Three rhetorical questions echo Isaiah 33:18. The 'wise person' (sophos) represents Greek philosophical culture, the 'scribe' (grammateus) represents Jewish legal scholarship, and the 'debater' (syzētētēs) may represent either or both — anyone who relies on human argumentation. The phrase tou aiōnos toutou ('of this age') frames worldly wisdom as temporary and passing.
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 33:18 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
21. The phrase en tē sophia tou theou ('in the wisdom of God') suggests that the failure of human wisdom was itself part of God's design — God arranged things so that unaided human intellect would prove insufficient. The Greek kērygma ('proclamation, preaching') refers to the content proclaimed, not the act of preaching — it is 'the foolishness of what is proclaimed,' not 'the foolishness of the act of proclaiming.'
22. Paul identifies two cultural orientations: the Jewish demand for miraculous validation (sēmēia, 'signs') and the Greek pursuit of philosophical insight (sophia, 'wisdom'). Both are legitimate desires misdirected — God does give signs and does offer wisdom, but not in the forms these cultures expect.
23. The phrase Christon estaurōmenon ('Christ crucified') uses the perfect passive participle — Christ remains permanently 'the crucified one.' This is not merely a past event but an abiding identity. The word skandalon ('stumbling block, snare, offense') gives us 'scandal' — a crucified Messiah was an oxymoron in Jewish expectation, since Deuteronomy 21:23 declares anyone hung on a tree to be under God's curse. For Greeks, the idea that ultimate wisdom would manifest in an executed criminal was simply mōria ('stupidity').
23. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Deuteronomy 21:23 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.

24. The 'called' (kletois) — the same word from verses 1-2 — now transcend ethnic and cultural categories. What Jews sought in signs (power) and Greeks sought in philosophy (wisdom), both find in the crucified Christ. The sentence structure is compressed: 'Christ [is] the power of God and the wisdom of God' — no verb in the Greek, creating a declarative force.
25. Paul uses the neuter substantive adjectives to mōron ('the foolish thing') and to asthenes ('the weak thing') of God — not attributes God actually possesses, but what human beings perceive as foolish and weak in God's actions. The comparative forms (sophōteron, ischyroteron) create an understatement: God's apparent foolishness exceeds all human wisdom, and God's apparent weakness exceeds all human strength.
26. The verb blepete ('look at, consider') invites the Corinthians to examine the sociological evidence of their own congregation. Paul does not say 'none' (oudeis) but 'not many' (ou polloi) — there were some wealthy and educated members (like Erastus, the city treasurer, Romans 16:23), but the majority were from lower social strata. The phrase kata sarka ('according to the flesh') means 'by worldly standards.'
27. The verb exelegeto ('chose') is the aorist middle of eklegomai — God's deliberate, purposeful selection. The repetition of 'God chose' emphasizes divine initiative. The verb kataischynē ('to put to shame, to humiliate') is stronger than 'confound' — God's choices actively embarrass worldly power structures.
28. The Greek ta agenē ('the low-born, the insignificant') and ta exouthenēmena ('the despised, the things counted as nothing') escalate the social inversion. The climax is ta mē onta ('the things that are not') — God chose what has no existence or standing in the world's eyes. This echoes God's creation from nothing (creatio ex nihilo) and His calling of Abraham from obscurity. The verb katargēsē ('to render inoperative, to nullify, to abolish') is one of Paul's favorite words for describing how God dismantles existing power structures.
29. The Greek pasa sarx ('all flesh') is rendered 'no human being' (with the negative) for natural English. The verb kauchēsētai ('to boast, to glory') is a key term in Paul's theology — the human impulse to claim credit is the root of the problem. The entire argument from verses 26-29 builds to this single purpose clause: God's method of salvation is designed to eliminate human boasting.
30. The phrase ex autou ('from him') places the origin of the believers' union with Christ entirely in God's initiative. Christ himself is identified as sophia ('wisdom') from God, directly countering the Corinthians' pursuit of worldly wisdom. The three terms that follow — dikaiosynē ('righteousness'), hagiasmos ('sanctification'), and apolytrōsis ('redemption') — may be appositional to 'wisdom,' explaining what God's true wisdom looks like in practice.
31. Paul paraphrases Jeremiah 9:23-24 (via the Septuagint), where the prophet contrasts boasting in wisdom, strength, and riches with boasting in knowing the LORD who practices steadfast love (chesed), justice, and righteousness. The allusion perfectly caps the chapter: the only legitimate boast is in what God has done, not in human achievement, rhetorical skill, or factional loyalty.
31. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Jeremiah 9:24. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.

Summary: Paul continues his argument about the cross and wisdom, now with personal testimony. He reminds the Corinthians that he came to them not with impressive rhetoric but in weakness, choosing to know nothing among them except Christ crucified. Yet he does speak wisdom — a hidden wisdom of God, revealed by the Spirit, which the rulers of this age failed to recognize. The chapter culminates in the distinction between the 'natural person' (psychikos) who cannot receive spiritual things and the 'spiritual person' (pneumatikos) who has 'the mind of Christ.'

What Makes This Remarkable: Paul's admission of personal weakness (vv. 1-5) is remarkable for a culture that prized self-confidence in public speakers. His description of divine wisdom as 'hidden' and 'decreed before the ages' (v. 7) introduces a concept of divine mystery that will shape later Christian theology. The quotation in verse 9 ('What no eye has seen...') may draw on Isaiah 64:4 but does not match any known Old Testament text exactly — its precise source remains debated. The Spirit-searches-everything claim in verse 10 is among the most profound pneumatological statements in Paul's letters.

Translation Friction: The term psychikos (v. 14) is notoriously difficult to translate. 'Natural' (KJV, ESV) misses the Greek nuance; 'unspiritual' (NRSV) is too negative. We render it as 'natural person' and explain the Greek in the notes. The phrase 'the deep things of God' (ta bathē tou theou, v. 10) may be language the Corinthians themselves used in a proto-Gnostic way; Paul co-opts it for his own purposes.

Connections: The 'hidden wisdom' theme connects to Daniel's revelation language (Daniel 2:22, 28) and to Jewish apocalyptic literature. 'The rulers of this age' (v. 8) who crucified Christ echo the principalities and powers of Colossians 1:16 and Ephesians 6:12. The 'mind of Christ' (v. 16) will be developed further in Philippians 2:5-11.

¹When I came to you, brothers and sisters, I did not come with superior speech or wisdom as I proclaimed to you the mystery of God. ²For I decided to know nothing among you except Jesus Christ — and him crucified. ³I came to you in weakness, in fear, and in much trembling. ⁴My speech and my proclamation were not with persuasive words of wisdom but with a demonstration of the Spirit and of power, ⁵Indeed, that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the authority of God. ⁶Yet we do speak wisdom among the mature — though not the wisdom of this age or of the rulers of this age, who are being brought to nothing. ⁷Rather, we speak God's wisdom in a mystery — the wisdom that was hidden, which God predetermined before the ages for our glory. ⁸None of the rulers of this age understood it, for if they had, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. ⁹But as it is written: "What no eye has seen, and no ear has heard, and no human heart has imagined — these are the things God has prepared for those who love him." ¹⁰But God has revealed these things to us through the Spirit. For the Spirit searches everything, even the depths of God. ¹¹For who among humans knows a person's thoughts except the spirit of that person within them? In the same way, no one knows the things of God except the Spirit of God. ¹²Now we have received not the spirit of the world but the Spirit who is from God, so that we may understand the things freely given to us by God. ¹³And we speak about these things not in words taught by human wisdom but in words taught by the Spirit, interpreting spiritual realities to those who are spiritual. ¹⁴The natural person does not accept the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness to that person, and they cannot understand them because they are discerned spiritually. ¹⁵The spiritual person discerns all things but is not subject to anyone else's judgment. ¹⁶For "who has known the mind of the Lord, so as to instruct him?" But we have the mind of Christ.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The SBLGNT reads mystērion ('mystery') rather than martyrion ('testimony'), though manuscripts are divided. 'Mystery' fits the chapter's theme better — Paul is about to describe God's hidden wisdom. The phrase kath' hyperochēn logou ē sophias ('with superiority of speech or wisdom') targets the very skills Corinthian culture prized most. Paul deliberately chose not to compete on their terms.
2. The verb ekrina ('I decided, I determined') indicates a deliberate choice, not inability. Paul could have displayed rhetorical brilliance but chose instead to make Christ crucified his single message. The emphatic kai touton estaurōmenon ('and this one crucified') uses the perfect passive participle again — the crucified state is ongoing and definitive.
3. Paul's triple description of his condition — astheneia ('weakness'), phobos ('fear'), tromos ('trembling') — is a shocking self-portrait for someone claiming apostolic authority. The combination phobos kai tromos ('fear and trembling') appears elsewhere in Paul (2 Corinthians 7:15; Philippians 2:12; Ephesians 6:5) and may reflect awareness of standing before God's calling rather than mere stage fright. Paul arrived in Corinth after being beaten in Philippi and mocked in Athens (Acts 16-17).
4. The Greek peithois sophias logos ('persuasive words of wisdom') is textually uncertain — peithois is a rare word, possibly coined by Paul. The contrast is between human persuasion techniques and apodeixis pneumatos ('demonstration of the Spirit') — a term from rhetoric (apodeixis means 'proof') now applied to spiritual reality. Paul uses the rhetorician's own vocabulary to subvert rhetorical culture.
5. This purpose clause reveals why Paul chose weakness over eloquence — a faith built on impressive rhetoric would collapse when a better speaker came along. Only faith grounded in God's power endures. This is particularly pointed for the Corinthians, who were apparently swayed by Apollos's more polished speaking style (Acts 18:24-28).
6. The shift is significant: Paul is not anti-wisdom per se — he does speak sophia, but only among the teleioi ('mature, complete'). The term may ironically echo Corinthian self-descriptions; the Corinthians considered themselves advanced, but Paul will soon call them infants (3:1). The archontes tou aiōnos toutou ('rulers of this age') could refer to human political authorities, demonic powers, or both — the ambiguity may be deliberate.
7. The phrase en mystērō ('in a mystery') modifies how wisdom is spoken — it comes wrapped in divine secrecy, requiring revelation to understand. The verb proōrisen ('predetermined, foreordained') places this wisdom in eternity past — it was not an afterthought or improvisation. The phrase eis doxan hēmōn ('for our glory') is stunning: the destiny of believers is glory (doxa), the very attribute of God.
8. The title ton kyrion tēs doxēs ('the Lord of glory') is extraordinary — it applies to the crucified Jesus a title that in the Old Testament belongs to YHWH alone (Psalm 24:7-10). The irony is devastating: the rulers thought they were executing a criminal; in reality they were crucifying the cosmic Lord. Their ignorance was not exculpatory but revelatory — it exposed the bankruptcy of worldly power and wisdom.

8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalm 24:7-10 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The quotation loosely combines Isaiah 64:4 and Isaiah 65:17 but does not match any known Old Testament text exactly. Some scholars suggest Paul draws on an otherwise unknown Jewish source. The phrase epi kardian anthrōpou ouk anebē ('has not ascended upon the human heart') is a Semitic idiom meaning 'has not entered the mind' or 'has never been imagined.' The point is not about heaven but about the incomprehensibility of God's plan apart from revelation.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 64:4. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 65:17. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The verb apekalypsen ('revealed, unveiled') is the aorist of apokalypō — God has already disclosed His hidden wisdom. The agent of revelation is the Spirit (día tou pneumatos). The claim that the Spirit eraunā ('searches, explores') even ta bathē tou theou ('the deep things of God') is a remarkable statement about the Spirit's access to the inner life of God. The Corinthians may have used 'the deep things' as spiritual self-congratulation; Paul relocates the concept entirely in the Spirit's activity, not human spiritual achievement.
11. Paul uses an analogy from human self-knowledge to explain divine self-knowledge. Just as only a person's own spirit knows their inner thoughts, only God's Spirit knows God's inner reality. The argument establishes that knowledge of God requires God's own Spirit as mediator — human intellect alone cannot penetrate divine reality, no matter how brilliant.
12. The contrast between 'the spirit of the world' (to pneuma tou kosmou) and 'the Spirit from God' (to pneuma to ek tou theou) parallels the wisdom contrast of chapter 1. The verb charisthenta ('freely given, graciously bestowed') shares the root of charis ('grace') — everything believers possess is gift, not achievement. The purpose clause hina eidōmen ('so that we may know') establishes that the Spirit's role is specifically cognitive — enabling understanding of what God has given.
13. The phrase pneumatikōis pneumatika synkrinontes is highly debated. Synkrinō can mean 'to compare,' 'to combine,' or 'to interpret' (as in Genesis 40:8 LXX). Pneumatikōis could be neuter ('spiritual things with spiritual') or masculine ('spiritual realities to spiritual people'). We follow the interpretation that Paul means 'interpreting/explaining spiritual realities to spiritual people,' which best fits the context of the mature versus immature distinction.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 40:8 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. The Greek psychikos ('natural, soulish') derives from psychē ('soul/life') and describes someone operating on merely human capacities without the Spirit's illumination. It does not mean 'sinful' but 'limited to natural human faculties.' The verb anakrinetai ('are discerned, examined, judged') is a legal/judicial term — spiritual realities require a spiritual faculty of judgment that the psychikos person simply does not possess.
15. The pneumatikos ('spiritual person') possesses Spirit-given discernment that operates on a different plane than human evaluation. The claim that the spiritual person is 'judged by no one' (hyp' oudenōs anakrinetai) does not mean they are above accountability but that their Spirit-informed judgments cannot be evaluated by those lacking the Spirit. Paul will ironically undercut the Corinthians' self-identification as pneumatikoi in the next chapter (3:1).
16. Paul quotes Isaiah 40:13 (LXX) — the original context is the incomprehensibility of God's wisdom. The expected answer is 'no one can know or instruct the Lord.' But then Paul makes a stunning claim: hēmeis de noun Christou echomen ('but we have the mind of Christ'). Through the Spirit, believers have access to Christ's own way of thinking. This is not omniscience but a Spirit-given orientation toward reality that aligns with God's purposes.

Summary: Paul confronts the Corinthians directly: despite their claims to spiritual maturity, their factionalism proves they are still infants in Christ, operating by merely human standards. He reframes the relationship between himself and Apollos as fellow workers in God's field, God's building. Paul then introduces the metaphor of building on the foundation of Jesus Christ — some build with gold and silver, others with wood and straw, and the fire of judgment day will test each person's work. The chapter closes with a warning against destroying God's temple (the community itself) and a final appeal to stop boasting about human leaders.

What Makes This Remarkable: The agricultural and architectural metaphors in this chapter establish Paul's theology of ministry: ministers are servants, not celebrities. The temple imagery (vv. 16-17) is corporate, not individual — the Corinthian community as a whole is God's temple, and those who destroy the community through division are desecrating sacred space. The judgment-by-fire passage (vv. 12-15) has generated extensive debate about purgatory, rewards, and the nature of post-mortem judgment.

Translation Friction: The phrase 'as to people of the flesh' (hōs sarkinois, v. 1) is distinct from sarkikoi (v. 3) — sarkinois means 'made of flesh' (a description of human nature) while sarkikoi means 'characterized by flesh' (a moral critique). This nuance is difficult to capture in English. The 'fire' of verse 13 has been variously interpreted as literal eschatological fire, metaphorical testing, or purgatorial purification; we render the Greek straightforwardly without importing any particular tradition.

Connections: The temple imagery connects to Exodus 25-40 (tabernacle construction), 1 Kings 6-8 (Solomon's temple), and Ezekiel 40-48 (eschatological temple). The 'fire will test' language echoes Malachi 3:2-3. The agricultural metaphor draws on Jesus's parables of sowing and growth (Mark 4). The closing quotation combines Job 5:13 and Psalm 94:11.

¹And I, brothers and sisters, could not speak to you as spiritual people but as people of the flesh — as infants in Christ. ²I gave you milk to drink, not solid food, for you were not yet ready for it. And even now you are still not ready, ³For you are yet carnal — for whereas there is in the midst of you envying, and strife, and divisions, are you not carnal, and walk as men? ⁴For when someone says, "I follow Paul," and another says, "I follow Apollos," are you not merely human? ⁵What then is Apollos? And what is Paul? Servants through whom you came to believe, as the Lord assigned to each. ⁶I planted, Apollos watered, but God was causing the growth. ⁷So neither the one who plants nor the one who waters is anything, but only God who gives the growth. ⁸The one who plants and the one who waters are one, and each will receive his own reward according to his own labor. ⁹For we are God's fellow workers; you are God's field, God's building. ¹⁰According to the grace of God given to me, like a skilled master builder I laid a foundation, and someone else is building on it. But each one must be careful how he builds on it. ¹¹For no one can lay a foundation other than the one that has been laid, which is Jesus Christ. ¹²Now if anyone builds on the foundation with gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, or straw, ¹³Indeed, every man's work will be made manifest — for the day will declare it, because it will be revealed by fire. And the fire will try every man's work of what sort it is. ¹⁴If what anyone has built on the foundation survives, that person will receive a reward. ¹⁵If anyone's work is burned up, that person will suffer loss, though the person will be saved — but only as through fire. ¹⁶Do you not know that you are God's temple and that the Spirit of God dwells in you? ¹⁷If anyone destroys God's temple, God will destroy that person. For God's temple is holy, and you are that temple. ¹⁸Let no one deceive himself. If anyone among you thinks he is wise by the standards of this age, let him become a fool so that he may become truly wise. ¹⁹For the wisdom of this world is foolishness before God. For it is written: "He catches the wise in their craftiness," ²⁰And again the Scripture says, "The Lord knows that the reasoning of the wise is worthless." ²¹So let no one boast in human leaders. For all things belong to you: ²²Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the present age, or life, or death, or matters present, or things to come. All are yours; ²³You are Christ's. And Christ is God's.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The Greek sarkinois ('made of flesh, fleshly') describes their condition at the time of Paul's first visit — they were new believers, still operating from natural capacities. The word nēpiois ('infants, babies') is not pejorative in itself — newborn faith is expected — but the problem, as verse 2 will reveal, is that they have not grown. Paul had addressed them as 'saints' in 1:2; now he calls them babies. The tension is deliberate.
2. The milk/solid food metaphor appears also in Hebrews 5:12-14. Gala ('milk') represents foundational teaching, brōma ('food') represents mature doctrine. The sting is in the final clause: 'even now you are still not ready' (all' oude eti nyn dynasthe). Years have passed since Paul's initial visit, but the Corinthians remain spiritual infants.
3. Paul shifts from sarkinois (v. 1, 'made of flesh' — a description) to sarkikoi ('characterized by flesh' — a critique). The evidence of their immaturity is not theological ignorance but relational failure: zēlos ('jealousy') and eris ('strife'). The phrase kata anthrōpon peripateit ('walking according to human standards') means behaving no differently from those without the Spirit.

4. Paul reduces the four slogans of 1:12 to two — focusing on himself and Apollos, the figures he can address without causing offense. The question ouk anthrōpoi este ('are you not merely human?') equates factionalism with sub-Christian behavior. To be 'merely human' for Paul is to fall short of what the Spirit makes possible.
5. The Greek ti ('what') rather than tis ('who') is deliberate — Paul does not ask about their personal identity but their functional role. They are diakonoī ('servants, ministers') — the word from which 'deacon' derives, originally meaning table waiters. This radically deflates the Corinthians' celebrity culture around leaders. The phrase hekastō hōs ho kyrios edōken ('as the Lord gave to each') attributes all ministry effectiveness to divine assignment.
6. The agricultural metaphor assigns complementary roles: Paul as church planter and Apollos as nurturer. The imperfect tense ēuxanen ('was causing growth') for God's action — versus the aorist (punctiliar) for human actions — suggests that God's growth-giving is continuous and ongoing while human contributions are discrete, limited events.
7. The phrase oute...estin ti ('is not anything') is deliberately stark — Paul and Apollos are 'nothing' in comparison to God's agency. This is not false humility but theological precision: in agriculture, the farmer contributes labor but cannot make a seed grow. The parallel to ministry is exact.
8. The Greek hen eisin ('are one') means 'are one thing' — they share a single purpose and status. This undercuts any ranking system the Corinthians have constructed. Yet individuality is preserved: each receives misthos ('reward, wages') according to their own kopos ('labor, toil'). Unity of purpose does not erase individual accountability.
9. Three possessive genitives — theou synergoi ('God's co-workers'), theou geōrgion ('God's field'), theou oikodomē ('God's building') — all emphasize that God is the owner and ultimate agent. Synergoi does not mean Paul and Apollos are God's equals but that they work alongside each other in God's service. The shift from agricultural to architectural metaphor (geōrgion to oikodomē) transitions to the next section.
10. The Greek architekton ('master builder, architect') is the origin of the English word. Paul claims the role not by self-promotion but kata tēn charin ('according to the grace') — his skill is a gift. The warning blepetō pōs ('let him watch how') shifts responsibility to subsequent builders. The foundation is already laid (aorist ethēka); the construction continues (present epoikodomei).
11. This is a categorical statement: the foundation is non-negotiable and irreplaceable. The present participle keimenon ('the one lying, the one that has been laid') indicates a foundation already in place — Jesus Christ is not one option among many but the only possible basis for the community's life.
12. Six building materials descend in value and fire-resistance: gold, silver, and precious stones survive fire; wood (xyla), hay (chorton), and straw (kalamēn) do not. The metaphor concerns the quality of ministry work built upon the Christ-foundation, not the personal salvation of the builders. Kalamē ('straw, stubble') was used for cheap construction and burns almost instantly.
13. The definite article hē hēmera ('the Day') refers to the eschatological day of judgment without needing further specification — a concept well established in both Old Testament prophetic literature (the 'day of the LORD') and early Christian expectation. The verb dokimasei ('will test, will prove') is used for testing metals by fire — the metaphor is of assaying, not punishment. The fire reveals quality, not guilt.
14. The verb menei ('remains, survives, endures') is the test — will the work still be standing after the fire? The misthos ('reward') is distinct from salvation itself; it concerns the recognition of effective, lasting ministry. The nature of this reward is not specified.
15. This verse has been central in debates about purgatory. The Greek zēmiothēsetai ('will suffer loss') refers to the loss of the work and its reward, not the loss of salvation — as the next clause clarifies: autos de sōthēsetai ('the person will be saved'). The phrase houtōs de hōs dia pyros ('but as through fire') suggests a barely-escaped salvation, like someone fleeing a burning building with nothing but their life. The emphasis is on the waste of poor-quality ministry, not on post-mortem purification.
16. The Greek naos ('temple, sanctuary') refers specifically to the inner sanctuary where God's presence dwelt — not the broader temple complex (hierōn). The pronoun 'you' (este, oikei en hymin) is plural throughout — this is not about individual bodies (as in 6:19) but about the community as a whole being God's dwelling place. The question ouk oidate ('do you not know') implies this should be obvious.
17. The verb phtheirō means 'to corrupt, to ruin, to destroy' — Paul uses the same verb in both clauses, creating a precise retributive parallel: the one who destroys will be destroyed. In context, 'destroying the temple' means tearing apart the community through factionalism. The word hagios ('holy') echoes the Hebrew qadosh — the temple is set apart, consecrated. To violate it is to invite divine judgment.
18. The imperative mōros genesthō ('let him become a fool') demands a voluntary surrender of worldly-wisdom status. This is not anti-intellectualism but a call to abandon the specific kind of rhetorical-philosophical posturing that was fracturing the Corinthian church. True wisdom, in Paul's paradoxical theology, begins with accepting the 'foolishness' of the cross.
19. Paul quotes Job 5:13 — the only direct quotation from Job in the New Testament. The original speaker is Eliphaz, whose theology is partly refuted by the end of Job, yet Paul adopts this particular statement as valid. The verb drassomenos ('catching, seizing') pictures God grabbing the wise in the very trap of their own cunning (panourgia, 'craftiness, shrewdness').
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Job 5:13. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
20. Paul quotes Psalm 94:11 (93:11 LXX), slightly modifying it — the psalm has 'the thoughts of humans' (anthrōpōn) while Paul substitutes 'the wise' (sophōn), sharpening the application to the Corinthian situation. The word mataioi ('futile, empty, vain') denotes not just incorrectness but ultimate pointlessness.

- 20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalms 94:11 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
- 21. The conclusion mēdeis kauchasthō en anthrōpois ('let no one boast in human beings') directly addresses the faction problem. Paul's reasoning is paradoxically generous: you do not need to choose between leaders because all of them — and everything else — already belong to you in Christ. Factional loyalty actually diminishes what the Corinthians already possess.
- 22. The list expands breathtakingly from named individuals to cosmic categories. Paul, Apollos, and Cephas are placed alongside life, death, present, and future — all belong to the believers. This is not a claim to ownership but to inheritance: in Christ, believers have access to everything God has provided through every servant and every circumstance.
- 23. The chain of belonging — all things you Christ God — establishes a hierarchy that dissolves factionalism. You cannot say 'I belong to Paul' when you belong to Christ. The final link, Christos de theou ('Christ belongs to God'), is not a subordinationist statement but a declaration of the Son's perfect alignment with the Father's purposes. The entire argument circles back to 1:31: the only legitimate boast is in the Lord.

Summary: Paul defines apostles as servants of Christ and stewards of God's mysteries, accountable only to the Lord's judgment — not to human evaluation. He exposes the Corinthians' arrogance with biting irony: 'Already you are full! Already you have become rich! You have begun to reign without us!' He contrasts their self-satisfaction with the apostles' actual experience of suffering, hunger, and humiliation. The chapter closes with a fatherly appeal — Paul is their spiritual father through the gospel — and a warning that he may come with authority if they do not change.

What Makes This Remarkable: The 'spectacle' passage (vv. 9-13) is one of Paul's most vivid self-descriptions, drawing on Roman triumphal procession imagery where condemned prisoners were paraded last before execution. The ironic contrast between the Corinthians' self-perceived royalty and the apostles' degradation is devastating rhetoric. Paul's claim to spiritual fatherhood (v. 15) is unique in his letters and establishes an authority claim distinct from mere teaching.

Translation Friction: The Greek hyperphronein in verse 6 ('to think beyond what is written') has no clear referent — 'what is written' could mean Scripture, Paul's earlier letter, or a maxim. We render the phrase and note the ambiguity. The word perikatharma (v. 13, 'scum, offscouring') may be a technical term for human scapegoats in Greek purification rituals, adding a sacrificial dimension to Paul's self-description.

Connections: The stewardship language (vv. 1-2) connects to Jesus's parables about faithful and unfaithful stewards (Luke 12:42-48). The 'spectacle' imagery echoes 2 Corinthians 2:14 and anticipates the suffering catalogs of 2 Corinthians 4, 6, and 11. The father-child relationship language anticipates Galatians 4:19 and 1 Thessalonians 2:11.

¹This is how a person should regard us: as servants of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God. ²Now what is required of stewards is that they be found faithful. ³But it is a very small thing to me that I should be evaluated by you or by any human court. In fact, I do not even evaluate myself. ⁴For I am not aware of anything against myself, but I am not acquitted by this. The one who evaluates me is the Lord. ⁵Therefore do not pronounce judgment before the time, before the Lord comes. He will bring to light the things hidden in darkness and will reveal the purposes of hearts. And then each person will receive commendation from God. ⁶Now, brothers and sisters, I have applied these things to myself and Apollos for your benefit, so that through us you may learn the meaning of the saying, "Nothing beyond what is written," so that none of you will be puffed up in favor of one against another. ⁷For who regards you as superior? What do you have that you did not receive? And if you received it, why do you boast as though you did not? ⁸Already you are satisfied! Already you have become rich! You have begun to reign — and that without us! I wish you really had begun to reign, so that we could reign with you! ⁹For I think that God has exhibited us apostles last of all, as though sentenced to death, because we have become a spectacle to the world — to angels and to human beings alike. ¹⁰We are fools for Christ's sake, but you are wise in Christ! We are weak, but you are strong! You are held in honor, but we are dishonored! ¹¹To this very hour we go hungry and thirsty, we are poorly clothed, we are roughly treated, and we are homeless. ¹²We work hard with our own hands. When we are cursed, we respond with blessing. When we are persecuted, we endure it. ¹³While defamed, we intreat — we are fashioned as the filth of the age, and are the offscouring of all matters to this day. ¹⁴I am not writing these things to shame you but to admonish you as my beloved children. ¹⁵For even if you have ten thousand guardians in Christ, you do not have many fathers. For I fathered you in Christ Jesus through the gospel. ¹⁶I urge you, therefore, become imitators of me. ¹⁷For this reason I have sent Timothy to you. He is my beloved and faithful child in the Lord, and he will remind you of my ways in Christ Jesus, just as I teach them everywhere in every church. ¹⁸Some of you have become arrogant, as though I were not coming to you. ¹⁹But I will come to you soon, if the Lord wills, and I will find out not the talk of these arrogant people but their power. ²⁰For the kingdom of God is not a matter of talk but of power. ²¹What do you want? Should I come to you with a rod, or with love and a spirit of gentleness?

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The Greek hypēretas ('servant, attendant') originally referred to an under-rower in a galley — one who takes orders. The oikonomos ('steward, household manager') manages resources that belong to someone else. Both terms deflate any celebrity status. The 'mysteries of God' (mystērion theou) are the divine secrets entrusted to the apostles for proclamation, not private mystical experiences.
2. The word pistos ('faithful, trustworthy') echoes the faithfulness vocabulary (emunah in Hebrew, pistis in Greek) central to covenant theology. A steward's primary virtue is not brilliance or popularity but fidelity to the owner's instructions.
3. The verb anakrinō ('to examine, to investigate, to evaluate') is a judicial term used for preliminary investigation. The phrase anthrōpinēs hēmeras ('human day') literally means 'a human day [of judgment]' — Paul contrasts any human evaluation with the Lord's eschatological judgment day (v. 5). His refusal to evaluate even himself is not false humility but a recognition that only God has full knowledge of motives.
4. Paul's clean conscience does not equal innocence — ouden gar emautō synoida ('I am conscious of nothing against myself') is not a claim to sinlessness but an honest assessment of his ministry. The verb dedikaiōmai ('I am justified/acquitted') is passive — acquittal comes from outside, from the Lord who alone sees truly.
5. The verb phōtisei ('will bring to light, will illuminate') and phanerosei ('will reveal, will make visible') are both future — ultimate evaluation is reserved for the Lord's return. The phrase tas boulas tōn kardiōn ('the purposes/intentions of the hearts') suggests that God judges motives, not just outcomes. The word epainos ('praise, commendation') is surprisingly positive — Paul assumes that the faithful will receive divine approval, not merely avoid punishment.
6. The verb meteschēmatisa ('I have applied, I have transferred the form') means Paul has used himself and Apollos as illustrations of a principle that applies more broadly — the real targets may be unnamed local leaders. The phrase to mē hyper ha gegraptai ('not beyond what is written') remains one of the most debated phrases in the letter. It may be a slogan, a maxim, or a reference to the Scripture quotations in chapters 1-3. The verb physiousathe ('you are puffed up, inflated') pictures arrogance as hot air — inflation without substance.
7. Three questions demolish the basis for Corinthian arrogance. The first (tis se diakrinei, 'who distinguishes you?') challenges the premise of superiority. The second (ti echeis ho ouk elabes, 'what do you have that you didn't receive?') undercuts self-made accomplishment. The third draws the logical conclusion: if everything is received, boasting is absurd. This verse became foundational in Augustinian theology of grace.
8. Paul's irony is at full force. The three declarations — kekoresmenoi ('satiated'), eploutēsate ('you became rich'), ebasileusate ('you began to reign') — mock the Corinthians' spiritual self-satisfaction using the language of eschatological fulfillment. They think they have already arrived at the consummation. The final wish (ophelon ge ebasileusate) pierces through the sarcasm with genuine longing — Paul would love it if the kingdom had fully come.
9. The imagery is drawn from the Roman triumphal procession (pompa), where conquered prisoners were paraded through the streets before being executed in the arena. The word eschatous ('last') means the apostles occupy the place of the condemned at the end of the parade. Theatron ('spectacle, theater') is the origin of English 'theater' — the apostles' suffering is a public display. The audience includes the entire cosmos: angels and humans.
10. The three contrasts are dripping with irony — the terms applied to the Corinthians (phronimoi, 'prudent'; ischyroi, 'strong'; endoxoi, 'honored') are what they claim for themselves, while the terms for the apostles (mōroi, 'fools'; astheneis, 'weak'; atimoi, 'dishonored') echo the very values of the cross Paul preached in chapters 1-2. The Corinthians have embraced the world's values while their apostle lives out the cross.
11. Five present-tense verbs describe ongoing apostolic hardship: peinōmen ('we hunger'), dipsōmen ('we thirst'), gymniteuomen ('we are insufficiently clothed'), kolaphizometha ('we are struck with fists'), astatoumen ('we are unsettled/homeless'). These are not past sufferings but current reality — 'to this very hour' (achri tēs arti hōras). This catalog anticipates the more extensive hardship lists in 2 Corinthians.
12. Paul's manual labor (tais idiais chersin, 'with our own hands') was a point of contention — in Greco-Roman culture, manual work was degrading for an intellectual or teacher. Paul worked as a tentmaker (Acts 18:3) to avoid burdening the Corinthians, but some saw this as proof he was not a real apostle. The three responses to mistreatment — blessing when reviled, enduring when persecuted, responding gently when slandered — echo Jesus's teaching in Matthew 5:44 and Luke 6:27-28.

13. The words perikatharmata ('scum, off-scourings') and peripsēma ('refuse, scrapings') are among the most degrading terms Paul could choose. Perikatharma may carry sacrificial connotations — in some Greek cities, human scapegoats (peripsēmata) were expelled or killed to purify the community. If Paul intends this allusion, the apostles' suffering has a vicarious, purifying dimension.
14. The shift from biting irony to tender affection is abrupt and deliberate. The verb nouthetōn ('admonishing, counseling, warning') combines nous ('mind') and tithēmi ('to place') — it means to set someone's mind right, combining correction with care. The term tekna agapēta ('beloved children') establishes the parental relationship Paul will develop in the next verse.
15. The paidagōgos was a household slave who supervised a child's conduct and escorted them to school — not a teacher but a guardian. Paul's point: there may be many supervisors, but only one father. The verb egennēsa ('I fathered, I begot') claims a unique generative relationship — Paul brought the Corinthian church into existence through his gospel proclamation. This is the basis of his authority: not rank or office but spiritual parentage.
16. The Greek mimētai ('imitators') is the origin of English 'mimic.' Paul is not being egotistical — the call to imitate him is grounded in his fatherhood (v. 15) and will be qualified in 11:1 ('Be imitators of me, as I am of Christ'). In the ancient world, a father's character was the primary model for his children.
17. Timothy is also called teknon ('child'), extending the family metaphor — he is Paul's spiritual son, sent to Paul's spiritual children. The phrase tas en Christō ('my ways in Christ') refers to Paul's pattern of life and teaching, not merely his doctrines. The claim to teach pantachou en pasē ekklēsia ('everywhere in every church') asserts consistency — Paul's message and lifestyle are the same everywhere.
18. The verb ephysiōthēsan ('they were puffed up, they became inflated') returns from verse 6. Some Corinthians assumed Paul would not dare to return in person and grew bolder in his absence. The construction hōs mē erchomenou mou ('as though I were not coming') implies they are wrong — Paul does intend to come.
19. The qualification ean ho kyrios thelēḥ ('if the Lord wills') is not a polite formula but a genuine submission of travel plans to divine sovereignty (cf. James 4:15). The contrast between logos ('talk, speech') and dynamis ('power') echoes the chapter 1-2 argument: the Corinthians are all words and no power. Paul will test substance, not rhetoric.
20. The phrase hē basileia tou theou ('the kingdom of God') is relatively rare in Paul's letters compared to the Gospels. Here it serves as the ultimate standard of evaluation. The kingdom operates not on the level of logos ('word, talk, rhetoric') but dynamis ('power') — the transformative power of God that actually changes lives and communities.
21. The rhabdos ('rod, staff') evokes a father's right to discipline — not abuse, but the corrective authority that belongs to a parent. The choice Paul offers is genuine: the Corinthians' response to this letter will determine whether his visit is confrontational or gentle. The word prautētos ('gentleness, meekness') is not weakness but strength under control.

Summary: Paul addresses a shocking case of sexual immorality in the Corinthian church: a man is living with his father's wife, and the congregation — far from being grieved — is arrogant about it. Paul demands the man's expulsion from the community, using Passover imagery to explain why: Christ, our Passover lamb, has been sacrificed, so the community must purge the old leaven of sin. The chapter closes with a clarification about Paul's earlier letter: he did not mean they should avoid all sinners in the world, but that they must not tolerate flagrant sin within the church.

What Makes This Remarkable: The command to 'deliver this man to Satan for the destruction of the flesh, so that his spirit may be saved' (v. 5) is one of the most debated passages in Paul's letters. The Passover typology (vv. 6-8) is one of the earliest Christian interpretations of Christ's death through the lens of Exodus. Paul's distinction between judging insiders and outsiders (vv. 12-13) establishes a principle of church discipline that has shaped Christian practice for centuries.

Translation Friction: The phrase 'his father's wife' (tēn gynaika tou patros, v. 1) likely refers to a stepmother, not the man's biological mother. Whether the father was dead or still living is unclear. The phrase 'for the destruction of the flesh' (eis olethron tēs sarkos, v. 5) could mean physical suffering, physical death, or the destruction of the sinful nature. We render the Greek literally and note the interpretive options.

Connections: The Passover lamb imagery connects to Exodus 12 and John 1:29. The leaven metaphor draws on Exodus 12:15-20 and Jesus's warning about the leaven of the Pharisees (Mark 8:15). The expulsion command echoes the Deuteronomic formula 'purge the evil from among you' (Deuteronomy 17:7, 19:19, 22:21, 24:7), which Paul quotes in verse 13.

¹It is actually reported that there is sexual immorality among you — and of a kind that is not found even among the Gentiles — that a man has his father's wife. ²And you are arrogant! Should you not instead have mourned, so that the one who did this would be removed from among you? ³For though I am absent in body, I am present in spirit, and I have already pronounced judgment on the one who has done such a thing, as though I were present. ⁴When you are assembled in the name of our Lord Jesus — and my spirit is present with the power of our Lord Jesus — ⁵Hand this man over to Satan so that his sinful nature may be destroyed and his spirit may be saved on the day of the Lord Jesus. ⁶Your boasting is not good. Do you not know that a little leaven leavens the whole batch of dough? ⁷Clean out the old leaven so that you may be a new batch, as you really are unleavened. For Christ, our Passover lamb, has been sacrificed. ⁸Therefore let us celebrate the feast, not with the old leaven or with the leaven of malice and evil, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth. ⁹I wrote to you in my letter not to associate with sexually immoral people — ¹⁰Yet not altogether with the fornicators of this present age, or with the covetous, or extortioners, or with idolaters. For then must you needs go out of the present age. ¹¹But now I am writing to you not to associate with anyone who bears the name of brother or sister if that person is sexually immoral, or greedy, or an idolater, or verbally abusive, or a drunkard, or a swindler — not even to eat with such a person. ¹²For what business is it of mine to judge those outside the church? Is it not those inside that you are to judge? ¹³God judges those outside. "Purge the evil person from among you."

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The Greek porneia ('sexual immorality') is the broad term for illicit sexual conduct. The phrase gynaixa tina tou patros echein ('to have a certain woman of the father') uses echain ('to have') as a euphemism for an ongoing sexual relationship. Leviticus 18:8 prohibits sexual relations with a father's wife, and Roman law also forbade such unions. Paul's point that even pagans consider this unacceptable heightens the scandal.
1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Leviticus 18:8. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
2. The verb pephysiōmenoi ('puffed up') recurs from 4:6, 18 — the Corinthians' arrogance now manifests as tolerance of flagrant sin, possibly justified by a misunderstanding of Christian freedom. The verb epenthēsatē ('mourned, grieved') is striking — the appropriate response to sin in the community is grief, not indifference or celebration.
3. Paul's language apōn tō sōmati parōn de tō pneumatī ('absent in body, present in spirit') is not mystical out-of-body experience but an assertion of apostolic authority that operates regardless of physical location. The perfect tense kekrika ('I have already judged') indicates a settled verdict — Paul is not deliberating but announcing a decision.
4. The syntax of verses 3-5 is notoriously tangled in Greek, with multiple phrases that can attach to different clauses. The assembly 'in the name of our Lord Jesus' carries judicial authority — they act not on their own behalf but under Christ's name. Paul's spirit (tou emou pneumatos) participates in the assembly despite his physical absence.
5. The phrase paradounai ton toiouton tō satana ('to hand over such a one to Satan') likely means excommunication — removing the person from the protective sphere of the community into the domain Satan rules (the fallen world). The purpose eis olethron tēs sarkos ('for the destruction of the flesh') is debated: it may mean physical suffering, death, or the destruction of the sinful nature. The ultimate goal is redemptive: hina to pneuma sōthē ('so that the spirit may be saved'). Even this severe action aims at restoration.
6. Paul transitions to Passover imagery. The proverb about leaven (zymē) was widely known — a small amount of yeast permeates an entire batch. In Jewish Passover practice, all leaven was removed from the house before the festival (Exodus 12:15). The Corinthians' tolerance of this sin is like leaving leaven in the dough — it will spread and corrupt the whole community.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 12:15. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The imperative ekkatharate ('clean out thoroughly') echoes the Passover preparation command. The logic is paradoxical: 'become what you already are' — they are unleavened (azymoi) in their identity in Christ, so they must live out that identity by removing the leaven of sin. The declaration to pascha hēmōn etythē Christos ('Christ our Passover [lamb] was sacrificed') is one of the earliest Passover-typological interpretations of Christ's death, connecting the cross to the Exodus 12 lamb.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 12. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The verb heortazōmen ('let us celebrate the feast') suggests the entire Christian life is a perpetual Passover festival. The old leaven is identified as kakia ('malice, wickedness') and ponēria ('evil, depravity'), while the unleavened bread represents eilikrineia ('sincerity, purity' — literally, 'tested by sunlight') and alētheia ('truth'). Paul transforms a Jewish ritual calendar into a metaphor for ongoing Christian existence.

9. The phrase en tē epistolē ('in the letter') refers to a previous letter, now lost, that predates our 1 Corinthians. This means our '1 Corinthians' is actually at least the second letter Paul wrote to this church. The Corinthians apparently misunderstood his instruction, applying it to outsiders rather than insiders.
10. Paul corrects their misunderstanding with practical logic: complete separation from sinners outside the church would require leaving the world entirely, which is impossible. The four categories — pornoi ('sexually immoral'), pleonektai ('greedy'), harpaxin ('swindlers, predators'), eidōlōlatrai ('idolaters') — represent common vices in Corinthian society.
11. The key qualifier is adelphos onomazomenos ('one called/named a brother') — the issue is not outsiders but insiders who claim Christian identity while living in flagrant contradiction. The six vices expand the earlier list to include loidoros ('reviler, verbally abusive person') and methysos ('drunkard'). The prohibition mēde synesthien ('not even to eat with') would include exclusion from the Lord's Supper and from fellowship meals, effectively cutting off social bonds.
12. Paul establishes a clear jurisdictional boundary: the church judges its own members (tous esō, 'those inside') but has no authority over outsiders (tous exō, 'those outside'). This distinction was foundational for later Christian thinking about church discipline and the relationship between church and society.
13. The command exarate ton ponēron ex hymōn autōn ('remove the evil one from among you') quotes the Deuteronomic formula that appears repeatedly in Deuteronomy (17:7, 19:19, 22:21, 22:24, 24:7) as the conclusion to laws requiring capital punishment. Paul applies the formula to excommunication rather than execution, but the gravity of the language is unmistakable — this is a community-survival matter.

Summary: Paul addresses two issues: lawsuits between believers in secular courts (vv. 1-11) and sexual immorality (vv. 12-20). He is astonished that Christians who will one day judge the world and angels cannot resolve disputes among themselves. He then confronts the Corinthian slogan 'All things are lawful for me' by insisting that the body is not for sexual immorality but for the Lord. The body is a temple of the Holy Spirit, bought at a price, and must be used to glorify God.

What Makes This Remarkable: *Paul quotes and then corrects Corinthian slogans in verses 12-13, making this one of the earliest examples of a Christian leader engaging with libertine theology. The statement that the body is a 'temple of the Holy Spirit' (v. 19) shifts the temple language from corporate (3:16) to individual, establishing a theology of the body that has profoundly shaped Christian ethics. The vice list in verses 9-10 has been extensively debated, particularly the terms malakoi and arsenokoitai.*

Translation Friction: *The terms malakoi ('soft ones') and arsenokoitai ('man-bedders') in verse 9 are among the most contested words in New Testament scholarship. We render them with their most likely meaning in context while documenting the debate. The Corinthian slogans in verses 12-13 are not always clearly delineated from Paul's own words — we follow the scholarly consensus on where the quotations begin and end.*

Connections: The 'body as temple' language connects to 3:16-17 and to Jesus's statement about destroying and rebuilding the temple (John 2:19-21). The vice list echoes similar catalogs in Romans 1:29-31 and Galatians 5:19-21. The 'bought with a price' language (v. 20) connects to the redemption vocabulary of 1:30 and anticipates 7:23.

¹When one of you has a dispute with another, how dare you take it to court before the unrighteous instead of before the saints? ²Do you not know that the saints will judge the world? And if the world is to be judged by you, are you incompetent to try trivial cases? ³Do you not know that we will judge angels? How much more matters of this life! ⁴So if you have disputes about everyday matters, do you appoint as judges those who have no standing in the church? ⁵I say this to your shame. Is there really no one among you wise enough to settle a dispute between brothers and sisters? ⁶Instead, brother goes to court against brother, and this before unbelievers! ⁷The very fact that you have lawsuits against one another is already a defeat for you. Why not rather be wronged? Why not rather be cheated? ⁸But instead, you yourselves do wrong and cheat — and you do this to your own brothers and sisters! ⁹Or do you not know that the unrighteous will not inherit the kingdom of God? Do not be deceived: neither the sexually immoral, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor men who practice passive homosexual acts, nor men who practice active homosexual acts, ¹⁰Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, will receive God's kingdom. ¹¹And that is what some of you were. But you were washed, you were sanctified, you were justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ and by the Spirit of our God. ¹²"All things are lawful for me" — but not all things are beneficial. "All things are lawful for me" — but I will not be mastered by anything. ¹³"Food is for the stomach, and the stomach for food" — and God will do away with both. But the body is not for sexual immorality but for the Lord, and the Lord for the body. ¹⁴God raised the Lord and will also raise us by his power. ¹⁵Do you not know that your bodies are members of Christ? Should I then take the members of Christ and unite them with a prostitute? Absolutely not! ¹⁶Do you not know that the one who joins himself to a prostitute becomes one body with her? For it says, "The two will become one flesh." ¹⁷But the one who is joined to the Lord becomes one spirit with him. ¹⁸Flee from sexual immorality. Every other sin a person commits is outside the body, but the sexually immoral person sins against his own body. ¹⁹Or do you not know that your body is a temple of the Holy Spirit within you, whom you have from God? You are not your own, ²⁰For you are bought with a price — as a result glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The verb tolma ('dares') expresses indignation. The contrast is between tōn adikōn ('the unrighteous' — pagan judges) and tōn hagiōn ('the saints' — fellow believers). In the Roman colony of Corinth, courts were presided over by pagan magistrates. Paul's objection is not to the legal system per se but to believers airing their disputes before outsiders when the community should be capable of internal resolution.
2. The expectation that saints will judge the world draws on Daniel 7:22 and possibly Jesus's promise to the twelve in Matthew 19:28. Paul's argument moves from the greater to the lesser: if you will judge cosmic matters, surely you can handle small disputes (kritērion elachistōn, 'the most trivial courts/cases').
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Daniel 7:22. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. The claim that believers will judge angels is stated without explanation — Paul treats it as something the Corinthians should already know. The background may be Jewish traditions about the final judgment of fallen angels (cf. Jude 6; 2 Peter 2:4). The word biōtika ('matters pertaining to daily life') is dismissive — everyday disputes are trivial compared to the cosmic judgment believers will exercise.
4. This verse is grammatically ambiguous — kathizete could be indicative ('you appoint') or imperative ('appoint!'). If indicative, Paul is rebuking them for using pagan judges (who have no standing in the church). If imperative, he is sarcastically saying even the least qualified church member would be better than a pagan court. The indicative reading fits the context of rebuke better.
5. The phrase pros entropēn ('to shame') is ironic — in 4:14 Paul said he was not writing to shame them, but here the issue warrants it. The word sophos ('wise') is pointed: the Corinthians prided themselves on wisdom (1:17-2:16), yet they cannot produce a single person wise enough to arbitrate an internal dispute.
6. The phrase adelphos meta adelphou krinetai ('brother is judged with brother') emphasizes the family bond being violated. The phrase kai touto epi apistōn ('and this before unbelievers') adds the scandal of public spectacle — the church's dirty laundry is displayed before those outside the faith.
7. The word hētēma ('defeat, failure, loss') reveals Paul's perspective: even winning a lawsuit is a loss for the community. The two rhetorical questions echo Jesus's teaching about turning the other cheek (Matthew 5:39-40). Paul suggests it would be better to absorb injustice than to damage the community's witness and unity through litigation.
8. The twist is devastating: not only are they suing fellow believers, but they are the ones doing the wronging (adikeite) and cheating (apostereite). They are both the perpetrators and the prosecutors. The emphatic hymeis ('you yourselves') and the final phrase kai touto adelphous ('and this to brothers') drive home the moral failure.
9. The vice list begins with the warning mē planasthe ('do not be deceived') — some Corinthians apparently believed that grace eliminated moral consequences. The terms malakoi and arsenokoitai are heavily debated. Malakoi (literally 'soft ones') in this context most likely refers to the passive partner in male homosexual intercourse, though some scholars argue for a broader meaning of 'morally weak' or 'self-indulgent.' Arsenokoitai (a compound of arsēn 'male' + koitē 'bed') appears to be coined from the Septuagint of Leviticus 18:22 and 20:13, referring to the active partner in male homosexual intercourse. Both terms refer to specific sexual behaviors, not to orientation as a modern concept.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Leviticus 18:22. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The list concludes with five more categories: kleptai ('thieves'), pleonektai ('greedy/covetous'), methysoi ('drunkards'), loidoroi ('verbal abusers, revilers'), harpages ('swindlers, robbers'). The total of ten vices covers sexual, religious, economic, and social sins, suggesting a comprehensive moral vision rather than targeting any single group.
11. The pivotal conjunction alla ('but') marks the transition from past identity to present reality. Three aorist passive verbs — apelousasthe ('you were washed'), hēgiasthēte ('you were sanctified'), edikaiōthēte ('you were justified') — describe what God has already accomplished. The order is surprising — washing (baptism) comes first, then sanctification, then justification — which does not match later systematic theology but reflects

Paul's rhetorical emphasis. The dual agency 'in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ and by the Spirit of our God' is implicitly trinitarian.

12. The phrase panta moi exestin ('all things are lawful/permissible for me') is likely a Corinthian slogan, possibly derived from Paul's own teaching about freedom from the law. Paul quotes it twice and qualifies it twice: first with ou panta sympherei ('not all things are beneficial/profitable'), then with ouk egō exousiasthēsomai hypo tinos ('I will not be dominated by anything'). Freedom that leads to slavery is not true freedom.
13. Another Corinthian slogan: 'Food for the stomach, stomach for food.' The Corinthians apparently reasoned that just as eating is a morally neutral bodily function, so is sex. Paul agrees that food and stomach are temporary (God will destroy both) but denies the analogy for the body (sōma): the body has an eternal destiny and belongs to the Lord. The stunning reciprocal phrase 'the Lord for the body' (ho kyrios tō sōmati) declares that the Lord is devoted to the body, not indifferent to it.
14. The bodily resurrection of Jesus is the guarantee of believers' bodily resurrection. The verb exegerei ('will raise') is future — the body has a destiny beyond this life, which is why sexual conduct matters. The Corinthian dismissal of bodily ethics rested on a dualism (body temporary/spirit eternal) that Paul rejects.
15. Paul's argument rests on the reality of union with Christ — believers' bodies are melē Christou ('members/limbs of Christ'). Sexual union with a prostitute would therefore make Christ's own members part of that union. The exclamation mē genoito ('may it never be!') is Paul's strongest expression of horror and rejection — it occurs fifteen times in his letters.
16. Paul quotes Genesis 2:24 (via the Septuagint) to argue that sexual union creates a real, ontological bond — not merely a physical act but a union of persons. The verb kollōmenos ('joining, clinging, being united') is the same word used in the Septuagint for the marriage bond in Genesis 2:24. Paul's argument assumes that sexual intercourse, even with a prostitute, creates the 'one flesh' reality that Genesis describes for marriage.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 2:24. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. The parallel is precise: union with a prostitute creates one body (hen sōma); union with the Lord creates one spirit (hen pneuma). The two unions are incompatible — one cannot simultaneously be united to the Lord in spirit and to a prostitute in body, because the body belongs to the Lord.
18. The imperative pheugete ('flee!') demands immediate, decisive action — not negotiation or gradual withdrawal. The claim that porneia uniquely sins 'against one's own body' (eis to idion sōma) is debated — other sins also affect the body (drunkenness, gluttony). Paul's point may be that sexual sin uniquely involves the body as the instrument and site of the transgression, creating a union (v. 16) that violates the body's belonging to Christ.
19. Here the temple language shifts from corporate (3:16, 'you [plural] are God's temple') to individual — each believer's body is a naos ('sanctuary') of the Holy Spirit. The declaration ouk este heautōn ('you are not your own') directly challenges the Corinthian individualism and their slogan 'all things are lawful for me.' Autonomy is replaced by belonging.
20. The verb ēgorasthēte ('you were bought') is from the marketplace — specifically the slave market. The timē ('price') is not specified here but is elsewhere identified as Christ's blood (cf. Acts 20:28; 1 Peter 1:18-19). The imperative doxasate ton theon en tō sōmati hymōn ('glorify God in/with your body') makes the body the instrument of worship. The SBLGNT does not include the phrase 'and in your spirit, which are God's' found in later manuscripts and the KJV — we follow the shorter, earlier text.

Summary: Paul responds to the Corinthians' letter about marriage and singleness. He addresses multiple situations: married couples should maintain sexual relations; the unmarried and widows may stay single (Paul's preference) or marry; believers should not divorce unbelieving spouses if the unbeliever is willing to stay; each person should remain in the condition in which they were called. Paul counsels virgins and those betrothed, arguing that singleness allows undivided devotion to the Lord, though marriage is not sin. Throughout, he distinguishes between the Lord's command and his own pastoral advice, and frames everything in light of the 'present distress' and the shortness of the remaining time.

What Makes This Remarkable: This is the longest sustained discussion of marriage and singleness in the New Testament. Paul's repeated distinction between 'I, not the Lord' (v. 12) and 'the Lord, not I' (v. 10) is remarkable transparency — he clearly differentiates between direct dominical command and his own Spirit-guided counsel. The eschatological urgency ('the appointed time has grown short,' v. 29) shapes all his advice. His affirmation that both marriage and singleness are legitimate callings was countercultural in both Jewish and Greco-Roman contexts.

Translation Friction: The phrase 'it is good for a man not to touch a woman' (v. 1) may be another Corinthian slogan that Paul is quoting and then qualifying, not his own assertion. The meaning of 'virgin' (parthenos) in verses 25-38 is debated — it could refer to a man's betrothed, his unmarried daughter, or a 'spiritual marriage' partner. The 'present distress' (v. 26) is unidentified — it could be famine, persecution, or eschatological expectation.

Connections: Paul's teaching on divorce (vv. 10-11) directly references Jesus's prohibition (Mark 10:2-12). The 'remain as you are' principle (vv. 17-24) anticipates Paul's theology of contentment in Philippians 4:11-13. The slave/freedom discussion (vv. 21-23) connects to Philemon and Galatians 3:28.

¹Now concerning the matters you wrote about: "It is good for a man not to have sexual relations with a woman." ²But because of sexual immorality, each man should have his own wife and each woman her own husband. ³The husband should fulfill his obligation to his wife, and likewise the wife to her husband. ⁴The wife does not have authority over her own body, but the husband does. Likewise the husband does not have authority over his own body, but the wife does. ⁵Do not deprive each other, except perhaps by mutual consent for a set time, so that you may devote yourselves to prayer. Then come together again, so that Satan does not tempt you because of your lack of self-control. ⁶I say this as a concession, not as a command. ⁷I wish that all people were as I am. But each has a particular gift from God, one of one kind and one of another. ⁸To the unmarried and to widows I say: it is good for them to remain as I am. ⁹But if they cannot exercise self-control, let them marry. For it is better to marry than to burn with desire. ¹⁰To the married I give this charge — not I, but the Lord — that a wife should not separate from her husband ¹¹(but if she does separate, let her remain unmarried or be reconciled to her husband), and a husband should not divorce his wife. ¹²To the rest I say — I, not the Lord — if any brother has an unbelieving wife and she is willing to live with him, he should not divorce her. ¹³And if any woman has an unbelieving husband and he is willing to live with her, she should not divorce him. ¹⁴For the unbelieving husband is sanctified through his wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified through her brother in the faith. Otherwise your children would be unclean, but as it is, they are holy. ¹⁵But if the unbelieving partner separates, let that person go. The brother or sister is not bound in such cases. God has called you to peace. ¹⁶For how do you know, wife, whether you will save your husband? Or how do you know, husband, whether you will save your wife? ¹⁷Only let each person lead the life that the Lord has assigned and to which God has called that person. This is my rule in all the churches. ¹⁸Was anyone already circumcised when called? Let him not undo his circumcision. Was anyone uncircumcised when called? Let him not be circumcised. ¹⁹Circumcision is nothing and uncircumcision is nothing; what matters is keeping the commandments of God. ²⁰Each person should remain in the condition in which they were called. ²¹Were you a slave when called? Do not let it concern you. But if you can gain your freedom, take the opportunity. ²²For the one who was called in the Lord as a slave is the Lord's freedperson, and likewise the one who was free when called is Christ's slave. ²³You were bought with a price; do not become slaves of human beings. ²⁴Brothers and sisters, let each person remain with God in the condition in which they were called. ²⁵Now concerning virgins, I have no command from the Lord, but I give my opinion as one who by the Lord's mercy is trustworthy. ²⁶I think that in view of the present distress it is good for a person to remain as they are. ²⁷Are you bound to a wife? Do not seek to be released. Are you released from a wife? Do not seek a wife. ²⁸But if you do marry, you have not sinned, and if a virgin marries, she has not sinned. Yet those who marry will have worldly troubles, and I would spare you that. ²⁹This is what I mean, brothers and sisters: the appointed time has grown short. From now on, let those who have wives live as though they had none, ³⁰Those who mourn should live as though they do not grieve. Those who are happy should live as though they have no joy. Those who buy something should live as though it is not theirs to keep. ³¹They that use this age, as not abusing it — for the fashion of this age passeth off. ³²I want you to be free from anxieties. The unmarried man is concerned about the things of the Lord — how to please the Lord. ³³But the married man is concerned about worldly things — how to please his wife, ³⁴Indeed, there is difference also between a wife and a virgin. The unmarried woman careth for the things of the Lord, that she may be holy both in body and in spirit — but she that is married careth for the things of the world, how she may please her husband. ³⁵I say this for your own benefit, not to put a restraint on you, but to promote good order and undivided devotion to the Lord. ³⁶If anyone thinks he is not behaving properly toward his betrothed, and if his passions are strong and it must be so, let him do as he wishes — he does not sin. Let them marry. ³⁷But the one who stands firm in his heart, being under no compulsion but having control over his own desire, and has determined in his heart to keep her as his betrothed — he will do well. ³⁸So then, the one who marries his betrothed does well, and the one who refrains from marriage will do even better. ³⁹A wife is bound as long as her husband lives. But if her husband dies, she is free to marry anyone she wishes, only in the Lord. ⁴⁰But in my judgment she is more blessed if she remains as she is. And I think that I too have the Spirit of God.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The phrase peri de hōn egrapsate ('now concerning what you wrote') marks the first of several responses to the Corinthians' letter (cf. 7:25, 8:1, 12:1, 16:1). The statement kalon anthrōpō gynaikos mē haptesthai ('it is good for a man not to touch a woman') is likely a Corinthian slogan — some members advocated sexual asceticism, possibly even within marriage. The verb haptesthai ('to touch') is a euphemism for sexual intercourse. Paul will qualify rather than endorse this absolutist position.
2. Paul's concession dia de tas porneias ('because of the acts of sexual immorality') is pragmatic rather than idealistic — marriage provides a legitimate context for sexual expression. The reciprocity is notable: both husband and wife have equal standing in this instruction. The verb echetō ('let him/her have') is present imperative, suggesting an ongoing relationship.
3. The word opheilēn ('debt, obligation, what is owed') frames marital sexual relations as a mutual obligation, not a one-sided right. The remarkable reciprocity — homoiōs de kai hē gynē tō andri ('and likewise also the wife to the husband') — was progressive in the ancient world, where sexual obligations were typically unilateral.
4. The verb exousiazei ('has authority over, exercises power over') is used symmetrically — each spouse has authority over the other's body. This mutual surrender of bodily autonomy within marriage is extraordinary in the first-century context. While the first half alone (wife does not control her own body) would have been culturally expected, the second half (husband does not control his own body) was revolutionary.
5. The verb apostereite ('deprive, defraud') is the same word used in 6:7-8 for financial fraud — withholding sexual relations from a willing spouse is framed as a form of cheating. Any abstinence must be ek symphōnou ('from agreement, by mutual consent'), pros kairon ('for a limited time'), and for a specific purpose (prayer). Paul's realism about akrasia ('lack of self-control') is characteristically honest.
6. The word syngnōmēn ('concession, allowance, pardon') indicates Paul is granting permission rather than issuing a mandate. What exactly is the concession — marriage itself, or the temporary abstinence for prayer? Most likely the latter: Paul is saying the abstinence provision is an allowance, not a requirement.
7. Paul reveals his personal preference for singleness but immediately qualifies it: both singleness and marriage are charismata ('gifts') from God. The phrase ho men houtōs ho de houtōs ('one in this way, another in that way') treats both states as equally valid divine callings. Neither is spiritually superior.
8. The agamois ('unmarried') could include the never-married, the divorced, or widowers. Paul recommends his own state (celibacy) as kalon ('good, advantageous') but does not command it. This suggests Paul was either never married or, more likely given his Pharisaic background, was widowed or divorced.
9. The verb pyrousthai ('to burn') most likely refers to burning with sexual passion, not to eschatological fire. Paul's pragmatism is evident: singleness is his preference, but marriage is far better than uncontrolled desire. The comparison kreisson gar estin ('for it is better') does not denigrate marriage — it positions it as a positive good for those not gifted with celibacy.
10. Paul explicitly attributes this command to the Lord, referencing Jesus's prohibition of divorce (Mark 10:9-12; Matthew 19:6). The verb chōrīsthēnai ('to separate, to be separated') is the standard term for divorce in Greek legal usage. Addressing the wife first may reflect a specific situation in Corinth where wives were initiating separations, possibly motivated by the ascetic teaching of verse 1.
11. The parenthetical concession acknowledges that separation sometimes happens despite the prohibition. In such cases, two options remain: singleness (menetō agamos) or reconciliation (katallagētō). Remarriage to someone else is not offered as an option. The verb aphienai ('to release, to divorce') is the legal term for a husband divorcing his wife.
12. Paul now addresses mixed marriages — a situation Jesus's teaching did not directly cover, hence 'I, not the Lord.' This is not a lesser authority claim but an honest acknowledgment that no dominical saying exists on this topic. Paul gives his own Spirit-guided instruction. The verb syneudokei ('consents, is pleased, agrees') makes the unbelieving spouse's willingness the key factor.
13. The instruction is perfectly symmetrical: neither believing husband nor believing wife should initiate divorce if the unbelieving partner is willing to remain. Paul addresses women as autonomous agents capable of initiating divorce — a legal reality in Roman (though not traditional Jewish) law that applied in Corinth as a Roman colony.
14. The verb hēgiastai ('has been sanctified') does not mean the unbeliever is saved but that the marriage relationship is consecrated — set apart, not defiled — by the believing partner's faith. Paul argues from the children's status: if the marriage were unclean (akatharta), the children would be too; but the Corinthians accept their children as hagia ('holy, set apart'). The logic assumes the Corinthians already recognize their children's sanctified status.

15. This is the 'Pauline privilege' — if the unbeliever initiates the departure, the believer is not enslaved (ou dedoulōtai, 'is not bound as a slave') to the marriage. Whether 'not bound' means free to remarry has been debated since the early church; the language suggests genuine release from the marriage bond. The closing phrase en de eirēnē keklēken hymas ho theos ('God has called you in peace') may support either maintaining the marriage (for peace) or accepting the separation (peace from conflict).
16. This rhetorical question is ambiguous in tone: it could mean 'you might save your spouse, so stay' (optimistic) or 'you cannot be sure of saving your spouse, so do not stay in an intolerable situation for that reason alone' (realistic). Given the context of verse 15 (letting the unbeliever go), the realistic reading seems more likely — hope of conversion is not sufficient grounds to force a reluctant spouse to stay.
17. This verse introduces the 'remain as you are' principle that governs the next section (vv. 17-24). The verb emerisen ('assigned, apportioned') and keklēken ('has called') both point to God's sovereign arrangement of life circumstances. Paul claims this is not unique counsel for Corinth but his standard teaching en tais ekklesiāis pasais ('in all the churches').
18. The verb epispathō ('let him not draw over [the foreskin]') refers to epispasm, a surgical procedure some Hellenistic Jews underwent to reverse circumcision and appear Greek in the gymnasium. Paul's point is that external religious markers are irrelevant to one's standing before God — neither circumcision nor uncircumcision matters after being called.
19. This statement is theologically striking: circumcision — the foundational covenant sign of Genesis 17 — is declared 'nothing' (ouden). Paul does not mean it was never important but that in Christ it no longer defines covenant membership. What matters is tērēsis entolōn theou ('keeping God's commandments'), which for Paul means the ethical commands as fulfilled through love (cf. Romans 13:8-10; Galatians 5:14).
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 17. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
20. The word klēsis ('calling') here means not vocation in the modern sense but the life circumstance in which a person was when God called them. The imperative menetō ('let them remain') does not forbid all change but counsels against change motivated by the assumption that a different social status would be spiritually superior.
21. The phrase mallon chrēsai ('rather make use of [it]') is famously ambiguous: 'make use of' what — your slavery or your opportunity for freedom? Most scholars now read it as 'take the opportunity for freedom' rather than 'make use of your slavery,' since Paul's counsel throughout this section is pragmatic, not masochistic. The verb meletō ('let it concern') counsels against anxiety, not against seeking improvement.
22. Paul creates a paradoxical reversal: the slave is the Lord's apeleutheros ('freedperson' — a specific legal status in the Roman world), while the free person is Christ's doulos ('slave'). This does not endorse slavery but relativizes all social categories by redefining them in terms of relationship to Christ.
23. Echoing 6:20, Paul declares that believers' purchase price (Christ's death) makes them God's property. The prohibition mē ginesthe douloi anthrōpōn ('do not become slaves of people') may mean: do not voluntarily surrender your freedom to human masters or human opinions. In context, it warns against allowing social pressure or human leaders to override one's calling from God.
24. The addition of para theō ('with God, before God, in God's presence') transforms the 'remain as you are' principle from passive resignation into active trust — remaining in one's circumstances is not settling but living before God wherever one is.
25. The word parthenōn ('virgins') introduces a new topic. Paul again distinguishes between dominical command (epitagēn kyriou ouk echō, 'I do not have a command from the Lord') and his own gnōmē ('opinion, counsel, judgment'). He grounds his authority not in a direct word from Jesus but in being ēlēēmenos ('having received mercy') and pistos ('trustworthy').
26. The phrase tēn enestōsan anankēn ('the present distress/necessity') is unspecified — it could refer to persecution, famine, general eschatological tribulation, or the ordinary difficulties of living in a fallen world. Whatever the specific reference, it shapes Paul's pragmatic preference for singleness: fewer attachments mean less suffering in times of crisis.
27. The verb dedesai ('you are bound') and the perfect passive lelytai ('you have been released') use binding/loosing language that echoes Jewish divorce terminology. 'Released' could mean divorced, widowed, or never married. Paul's counsel — do not seek change — applies the 'remain as you are' principle to marital status.
28. Paul emphatically clarifies: ouch hēmartēs ('you have not sinned'). Marriage is not sin. His preference for singleness is practical, not moral. The phrase thlipsin de tē sarki ('tribulation in the flesh') refers to the inevitable difficulties of married life — especially in times of distress (v. 26). The verb pheidomai ('I spare, I am trying to protect') reveals pastoral motivation.
29. The phrase ho kairos synestalmenos estin ('the time has been compressed/shortened') expresses eschatological urgency. The perfect passive participle synestalmenos suggests the time has already been shortened — the compression is underway. The series of 'as though not' (hōs mē) clauses (vv. 29-31) describe a posture of detachment from worldly attachments, not abandonment of responsibilities.
30. The 'as though not' (hōs mē) pattern describes eschatological detachment — not emotional suppression but a refusal to let any temporal experience become ultimate. Grief, joy, and commerce are all real but relativized by the nearness of Christ's return.
31. The verb parage ('is passing away') is present tense — the passing is already in progress. The word schēma ('form, outward appearance, shape') suggests the world's current configuration is temporary, like a stage set being dismantled. This does not devalue the world but locates it within a larger eschatological framework.

32. The adjective amerimnous ('free from anxiety, without worry') introduces Paul's practical argument for singleness. The verb merimna ('is anxious about, is concerned with') is the same word Jesus used in Matthew 6:25-34. Paul is not condemning married people but observing a practical reality: the unmarried person has undivided attention for the Lord's work.
33. The concern for 'worldly things' (ta tou kosmou) is not sinful but simply the practical demands of marriage — providing for a household, maintaining a relationship. Paul describes a real tension, not a moral failing.
34. The phrase kai memeristai ('and he/she is divided') is the hinge: marriage divides one's attention. Paul applies the same analysis to women as to men, maintaining the symmetry he has shown throughout this chapter. The phrase hagia kai tō sōmati kai tō pneumati ('holy in both body and spirit') refers to undivided consecration, not to sexual purity alone.
35. Paul clarifies his intent: ouch hina brochōn hymin epibalō ('not to throw a noose on you'). The image of the brochōn ('noose, snare') suggests that Paul's advice about singleness should not become another legalistic burden. The goal is euschēmon ('seemly, proper, good order') and euparedron ('constant attendance, devotion') to the Lord aperispastōs ('without distraction').
36. The identity of 'his virgin' (tēn parthenon autou) is debated: it could be a man's fiancée/betrothed, his virgin daughter, or a partner in a 'spiritual marriage' (celibate cohabitation). The word hyperakmos could mean 'past the bloom of youth' (of the woman) or 'with strong passions' (of the man). We follow the betrothed/fiancée interpretation as most natural in context. The emphatic ouch hamartanei ('he does not sin') again underscores that marriage is not sin.
37. Three conditions for choosing not to marry: standing firm (hestēken hedraios, 'established, stable'), having no necessity (mē echōn anankēn, no external pressure), and having control over one's own will (exousian echei peri tou idiou thelēmatos). The decision must be free, settled, and sustainable.
38. The Greek gamizōn can mean 'marrying' or 'giving in marriage.' If the subject is a father giving his daughter in marriage, the interpretation shifts, but we follow the reading where the man himself is the one choosing to marry or not. Paul's conclusion is characteristically balanced: marrying is kalōs ('well'), not marrying is kreisson ('better'). Neither choice is wrong.
39. The verb dedetai ('is bound') describes the marriage bond as lasting until death. The verb koimēthē ('falls asleep') is the standard early Christian euphemism for death. The phrase monon en kyriō ('only in the Lord') is understood to mean the new husband should be a fellow believer, though some interpret it as 'in a manner consistent with the Lord's will.'
40. Paul closes with the comparative makariotēra ('more blessed, happier') — widows who remain unmarried are more blessed in his estimation. The final clause dokō de kagō pneuma theou echein ('and I think I too have the Spirit of God') is likely ironic — some Corinthians apparently claimed Spirit-authority for views contradicting Paul, and his response is understated: 'I think I too have the Spirit.' The modesty of the claim masks its force.

Summary: Paul addresses the question of eating food offered to idols. He begins by distinguishing knowledge from love: knowledge puffs up, but love builds up. He acknowledges that idols are nothing and there is only one God, so technically idol-food is harmless. But not everyone has this knowledge — some believers with a 'weak conscience' still associate the food with actual idol worship. The 'strong' who eat freely may cause the 'weak' to stumble. Paul concludes that if food causes a brother to fall, he will never eat meat again.

What Makes This Remarkable: Paul's christological monotheism in verse 6 is remarkable: he reformulates the Jewish Shema (Deuteronomy 6:4) to include Christ as the one Lord 'through whom are all things.' This is one of the highest Christological statements in Paul's letters, embedded almost casually in a discussion about dietary practices. The chapter establishes the principle that rights must yield to love — a theme that will dominate chapters 8-10.

Translation Friction: *The 'weak' and 'strong' terminology can be misleading in English — the 'weak' are not morally inferior but have a conscience shaped by their pagan past. The phrase syneidēsis ('conscience') is a key Pauline concept that does not map perfectly onto modern psychological usage. We render it consistently as 'conscience' and explain the term in notes.*

Connections: The idol-food discussion continues through chapters 9-10. The 'one God, one Lord' formula (v. 6) connects to Deuteronomy 6:4 and Philippians 2:9-11. The weak-conscience concept anticipates Romans 14-15. The willingness to limit freedom for others' sake connects to Christ's self-emptying in Philippians 2:5-8.

¹Now concerning food offered to idols: we know that "all of us possess knowledge." Knowledge puffs up, but love builds up. ²If anyone thinks they know something, they do not yet know as they ought to know. ³But if anyone loves God, that person is known by God. ⁴As concerning as a result the eating of those matters that are offered in sacrifice to idols, we know that an idol is not a thing in the world, and that there is none other God but one. ⁵For even if there are so-called gods, whether in heaven or on earth — as indeed there are many 'gods' and many 'lords' — ⁶However, to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all matters, and we in him. And one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all matters, and we by him. ⁷But not everyone possesses this knowledge. Some, through former association with idols, still eat food as if it were really offered to an idol, and their conscience, being weak, is defiled. ⁸Food will not bring us closer to God. We are no worse off if we do not eat, and no better off if we do. ⁹But be careful that this right of yours does not become a stumbling block to the weak. ¹⁰For if someone with a weak conscience sees you — the one who has knowledge — reclining at table in an idol's temple, will not that person be encouraged to eat food offered to idols? ¹¹For by your knowledge the weak person is destroyed — the brother or sister for whom Christ died. ¹²In this way, by sinning against your brothers and sisters and wounding their weak conscience, you sin against Christ. ¹³Therefore, if food causes my brother or sister to stumble, I will never eat meat again, so that I will not cause my brother or sister to stumble.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The phrase peri de ('now concerning') marks another response to the Corinthians' letter. The statement pantes gnōsin echomen ('all of us possess knowledge') is likely a Corinthian slogan — they claimed universal knowledge about idols being nothing. Paul quotes it and then immediately qualifies it: gnōsis physioi ('knowledge puffs up/inflates') uses the same verb as 4:6, 18; 5:2. Love (agapē), by contrast, oikodomei ('builds up') — the same construction metaphor from chapter 3.
2. Paul deflates intellectual pride: the person who thinks they have arrived at knowledge (dokei egnōkenai, 'thinks they have known') has not yet begun to know properly (oupō egnō kathōs dei gnōnai). True knowledge is humble, recognizing its own limitations.
3. The shift is remarkable: Paul does not complete the expected pattern ('if anyone loves God, that person truly knows'). Instead, he switches to the passive — egnōstai hyp' autou ('is known by him'). What matters is not that we know God but that God knows us. Being known by God is more foundational than knowing about God.
4. Paul agrees with the Corinthian position in principle: ouden eidōlon en kosmō ('an idol is nothing in the world') and oudeis theos ei mē heis ('there is no God except one'). These statements reflect sound Jewish-Christian monotheism. The problem is not the theology but its application — correct knowledge does not automatically produce loving behavior.
5. Paul acknowledges the cultural reality: the Greco-Roman world was full of legomenoi theoi ('so-called gods'). The phrase hōsper eisin theoi polloi ('as indeed there are many gods') does not affirm their actual divinity but acknowledges their social and spiritual reality — these entities, whether demonic powers or human constructs, function as gods in people's lives.
6. This verse reformulates the Shema (Deuteronomy 6:4, 'Hear, O Israel: the LORD our God, the LORD is one') to include Christ. The one God is the Father (ex hou ta panta, 'from whom all things' — the source) and the one Lord is Jesus Christ (di' hou ta panta, 'through whom all things' — the agent). Christ is included within the identity of the one God of Israel, not added as a second deity. This is one of the earliest and most explicit christological reformulations of Jewish monotheism.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Deuteronomy 6:4. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The Greek synētheia ('familiarity, former association, habit') — some manuscripts read syneidēsei ('conscience') — describes the ingrained habits of former pagans. Their past worship experience means they cannot separate the meat from its idol-worship context. Their syneidēsis ('conscience') is asthenes ('weak') — not morally inferior but conditioned by their history. The verb molynetai ('is defiled, stained') indicates real spiritual damage, not mere discomfort.
8. This may be another Corinthian slogan that Paul partially endorses. The verb parastēsei ('will present, will commend') is a legal term for presenting someone before a judge. Food has no bearing on one's standing before God — Paul agrees with this principle. But the application matters: the 'strong' cannot use this truth to override others' consciences.
9. The word exousia ('right, authority, freedom, power') — the same word used for power and authority elsewhere in Paul — is applied to the Corinthians' freedom to eat. Paul does not deny they have this right but warns that rights exercised without love become proskomma ('stumbling blocks, obstacles') for weaker believers.
10. Paul paints a specific scenario: a 'knowledgeable' Corinthian reclines (katakeimenon, the standard dining posture) in an eidōleion ('idol's temple'). Temple dining halls were common venues for social events, business meals, and celebrations in Corinth. The verb oikodomēthēsetai ('will be built up') is used ironically — the same word that describes love 'building up' (v. 1) is here used for building up someone toward sin.

11. The verb apollytai ('is being destroyed, is perishing') is the same word used in 1:18 for those who are 'perishing.' Paul raises the stakes dramatically: exercising knowledge without love can spiritually destroy a fellow believer. The appositional phrase ho adelphos di' hon Christos apethanen ('the brother for whom Christ died') is the theological knockout — how can you use your freedom to destroy someone Christ valued enough to die for?
12. Paul draws a direct line: sinning against a brother's conscience = sinning against Christ. The verb typtontes ('striking, beating, wounding') is physical violence language applied to spiritual harm — damaging someone's conscience is an act of assault. Because believers are members of Christ's body (6:15), wounding them wounds Christ himself.
13. Paul's personal pledge — ou mē phagō krea eis ton aiōna ('I will never ever eat meat') — uses the strongest possible negation in Greek (the double negative ou mē with the aorist subjunctive). This is not a hypothetical but a real commitment: Paul would permanently surrender his own freedom rather than damage a fellow believer. The verb skandalizō ('to cause to stumble, to cause to fall into sin') frames the issue as causing another person's spiritual ruin, not merely offending their sensibilities.

Summary: Paul uses himself as an example of voluntarily surrendering rights for the gospel's sake. He defends his apostleship and his right to financial support, citing Scripture, common practice, and the Lord's command. Yet he has not used any of these rights — he preaches the gospel free of charge. He becomes 'all things to all people' to save some. The chapter closes with athletic imagery: Paul disciplines his body like a runner training for a prize, lest after preaching to others he himself be disqualified.

What Makes This Remarkable: This chapter is Paul's most extended defense of apostolic rights, but its purpose is paradoxical — he lists his rights only to show he has waived them. The 'all things to all people' statement (v. 22) has been both celebrated and criticized throughout church history. The athletic imagery (vv. 24-27) draws on the Isthmian Games held near Corinth, making the metaphor locally resonant.

Translation Friction: *The phrase 'a sister, a wife' (adelphēn gynaika, v. 5) is debated — does Paul claim the right to bring a believing wife on his journeys, or a 'sister-wife' (celibate female companion)? The traditional reading of a believing spouse is most natural. The word adokimos (v. 27, 'disqualified') has generated debate about whether Paul feared loss of salvation or loss of reward.*

Connections: The ox quotation (v. 9) from Deuteronomy 25:4 anticipates Paul's hermeneutical method in 1 Timothy 5:18. The 'all things to all people' ethic connects to Romans 14-15 and the weak/strong discussion. The athletic imagery was common in Greco-Roman moral philosophy (Epictetus, Seneca) and connects to Philippians 3:12-14 and 2 Timothy 4:7-8.

¹Am I not free? Am I not an apostle? Have I not seen Jesus our Lord? Are you not my work in the Lord? ²If I am not an apostle to others, at least I am to you, for you are the seal of my apostleship in the Lord. ³This is my defense to those who would examine me. ⁴Do we not have the right to eat and drink? ⁵Do we not have the right to be accompanied by a believing wife, as do the other apostles and the brothers of the Lord and Cephas? ⁶Or is it only Barnabas and I who have no right to refrain from working? ⁷Who serves as a soldier at his own expense? Who plants a vineyard and does not eat its fruit? Who tends a flock and does not drink the milk? ⁸Am I saying this merely on human authority? Does not the Law say the same thing? ⁹For it is written in the Law of Moses: "You shall not muzzle an ox while it is treading out the grain." Is God concerned about oxen? ¹⁰Or does he speak entirely for our sake? It was indeed written for our sake, because the plowman should plow in hope, and the thresher should thresh in hope of sharing in the crop. ¹¹If we have sown spiritual things among you, is it too much if we reap material things from you? ¹²If others share this right over you, do we not even more? But we have not made use of this right. Instead, we endure everything so that we may not put any obstacle in the way of the gospel of Christ. ¹³Do you not know that those who serve in the temple eat food from the temple, and those who serve at the altar share in what is offered on the altar? ¹⁴In the same way, the Lord commanded that those who proclaim the gospel should get their living from the gospel. ¹⁵But I have not used any of these rights, nor am I writing this so that it may be done for me. For I would rather die than — no one will deprive me of my ground for boasting! ¹⁶For if I preach the gospel, that gives me no ground for boasting, since an obligation is laid on me. Woe to me if I do not preach the gospel! ¹⁷For if I do this willingly, I have a reward. But if unwillingly, I am still entrusted with a stewardship. ¹⁸What then is my reward? That in my preaching I may offer the gospel free of charge, so as not to make full use of my right in the gospel. ¹⁹For though I am free from all, I have made myself a slave to all, so that I might win more of them. ²⁰To the Jews I became as a Jew, in order to win Jews. To those under the law I became as one under the law — though I myself am not under the law — so that I might win those under the law. ²¹To those outside the law I became as one outside the law — not being outside God's law but under Christ's law — so that I might win those outside the law. ²²To the weak I became weak, so that I might win the weak. I have become all things to all people, so that by all possible means I might save some. ²³I do all things for the sake of the gospel, so that I may share in its blessings. ²⁴Do you not know that in a race all the runners compete, but only one receives the prize? Run in such a way that you may win it. ²⁵Every athlete exercises self-control in all things. They do it to receive a perishable wreath, but we an imperishable one. ²⁶So I do not run aimlessly; I do not box as one beating the air. ²⁷But I discipline my body and bring it under control, lest after preaching to others I myself should be disqualified.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Four rapid rhetorical questions, all expecting 'yes.' The SBLGNT order places 'free' before 'apostle,' connecting this chapter to the freedom discussion of chapter 8. The claim to have seen the Lord (heōraka Iēsoun ton kyrion hēmōn) refers to the Damascus road encounter (Acts 9; cf. 1 Corinthians 15:8) — the qualification for apostleship. The Corinthians themselves are Paul's proof: they are his ergon ('work, product') in the Lord.
2. The word sphragis ('seal') was a mark of authentication — like a wax seal on a document. The Corinthians' very existence as a church validates Paul's apostolic ministry. The concessive 'if I am not an apostle to others' suggests some questioned his credentials.
3. The word apologia ('defense') is a legal term for a courtroom defense speech. The verb anakrinousin ('examine, investigate') is the same judicial language from 2:14-15 and 4:3. Paul is under trial by some in Corinth; the following verses are his evidence.
4. The word exousia ('right, authority, power') — the same word from 8:9 — now applies to Paul himself. 'Eating and drinking' refers to being materially supported by the churches, not merely having food.
5. The phrase adelphēn gynaika ('a sister-wife,' i.e., a believing wife) indicates that the other apostles, Jesus's brothers (including James), and Cephas (Peter) all traveled with their wives at church expense. This verse is significant evidence that Peter was married and that Jesus's brothers held leadership roles. Paul mentions this right but does not exercise it — he apparently remained unmarried or traveled without a wife.
6. The mention of Barnabas suggests he, like Paul, supported himself through manual labor. This may reflect a Corinthian critique: because Paul works with his hands (an un-apostolic practice in their view), he must not be a real apostle. Paul reframes it: he works by choice, not necessity.
7. Three analogies from common life — soldier, farmer, shepherd — all make the same point: workers are entitled to benefit from their labor. The opsoinia ('wages, rations') of a soldier was expected; the karpos ('fruit') of a vineyard belonged to the farmer; the gala ('milk') of a flock belonged to the shepherd. Paul argues from universal human practice.
8. Paul escalates his argument from common sense (kata anthrōpon, 'according to human reasoning') to Scripture (ho nomos, 'the Law'). If even human practice supports the worker's right to compensation, how much more does divine revelation?
9. Paul quotes Deuteronomy 25:4. The original command protected working animals from cruel treatment. Paul's rhetorical question mē tōn boōn melei tō theō ('Is God not concerned about oxen?') does not deny God's care for animals but argues that the principle extends beyond the literal ox to human workers — a hermeneutical move common in Jewish interpretation.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 25:4. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. Paul's hermeneutical claim — di' hēmas gar egraphē ('it was written for our sake') — asserts that Scripture's deeper intention applies to apostolic workers. The principle: workers (whether plowing or threshing) should labor with a reasonable expectation of benefiting from their work. Paul applies this to gospel ministry.
11. The contrast between ta pneumatika ('spiritual things') and ta sarkika ('fleshly/material things') frames financial support as a trivially small return on the spiritual investment Paul made in founding the church. The implication: the Corinthians are getting the better deal.
12. The 'others' (alloi) who receive financial support are probably Apollos or other traveling teachers. Paul's waiver of rights — ouk echrēsametha tē exousia tautē ('we have not used this right') — is the point of the entire chapter. The verb stegomen ('we endure, we cover, we bear') and the purpose clause hina mē tina enkopēn dōmen ('so that we may not give any hindrance') reveal his motivation: nothing must obstruct the gospel.
13. Paul cites temple practice — whether the Jerusalem temple or pagan temples (both practiced priestly sustenance from offerings). The principle is universal: those who perform sacred service are sustained by it. The parallel between temple service and gospel ministry elevates the status of apostolic work.
14. Paul cites a command of the Lord (ho kyrios dietaxen) — referencing Jesus's instruction to the disciples in Luke 10:7 ('the laborer deserves his wages') and Matthew 10:10. This is the highest authority Paul can invoke: a direct dominical command. Yet even this command Paul chooses not to exercise.

15. The sentence breaks mid-thought — Paul starts to say 'I would rather die than have anyone empty my boast' but interrupts himself with the emphatic declaration to kauchēma mou oudeis kenōsei ('no one will empty/void my boast'). The anacoluthon (broken sentence) reveals raw emotion. His 'boast' is that he preaches the gospel free of charge. This is his singular distinction, and he guards it fiercely.
16. Preaching is not Paul's choice but his compulsion — anankē gar moi epikeitai ('for necessity is placed upon me'). The Damascus road call was not an invitation but a commission. The exclamation ouai gar moi estin ('for woe to me!') echoes prophetic language — Paul sees himself in the tradition of the Hebrew prophets who spoke under divine compulsion (cf. Jeremiah 20:9, Amos 3:8).
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Jeremiah 20:9. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Amos 3:8. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. The logic: if Paul chose to preach, he would deserve wages (misthos). But since he preaches under divine compulsion (akōn, 'unwillingly' in the sense of having no choice), he has been entrusted with an oikonomia ('stewardship, management') — the responsibility of a household manager (oikonomos, cf. 4:1-2). The reward he claims is not payment but the privilege of offering the gospel free of charge.
18. Paul's 'reward' (misthos) is paradoxical — it is the opportunity to give up reward. His compensation is the freedom to offer the gospel adapanon ('without cost, free of charge'). The phrase mē katachrēsasthai ('not to make full use of') echoes 7:31 — restraint in exercising rights is a mark of eschatological wisdom.
19. The paradox of freedom: Paul is eleutheros ('free') from all people, owing nothing to anyone, yet he voluntarily enslaves himself (emauton edoulōsa, 'I enslaved myself') to all. The verb kerdēsō ('I might gain, I might win') is commercial language — Paul 'profits' people for the gospel. This verse introduces the 'all things to all people' passage (vv. 19-23).
20. Paul's cultural flexibility is extraordinary for a Pharisee: he observes Jewish customs when among Jews (cf. Acts 16:3, where he circumcises Timothy; Acts 21:26, where he takes a Nazirite vow) even though he considers himself no longer 'under the law' (mē ōn autos hypo nomon). The distinction between 'Jews' and 'those under the law' may separate ethnic identity from legal observance.
21. The parenthetical qualification is crucial: mē ōn anomos theou all' ennomos Christou ('not being lawless toward God but in-lawed to Christ'). Paul's cultural flexibility is not moral relativism — he lives under 'Christ's law' (ennomos Christou), a law of love (cf. Galatians 6:2, 'the law of Christ'). His adaptability has ethical boundaries.
22. The climactic statement tois pasin gegona panta ('to all I have become all things') summarizes Paul's missionary strategy: radical cultural adaptation in service of the gospel. The word 'some' (tinas) is realistic — not all will respond, but some will. The purpose clause hina pantōs tinas sōsō ('so that by all means I might save some') reveals Paul's motivation: salvation of people, not preservation of cultural identity.
23. The word synkoinōnos ('co-sharer, fellow participant') connects to koinōnia (1:9). Paul is not merely a messenger of the gospel but a participant in its benefits. His sacrifice is not self-punishment but investment in a shared reality.
24. The Isthmian Games were held every two years near Corinth — this metaphor would have been vivid and local. The word stadion ('stadium, racecourse') and brabeion ('prize') come directly from athletic competition. Paul does not mean only one Christian will be saved but urges the kind of total commitment that an athlete brings to competition.
25. The verb agōnizomenos ('competing, striving') gives us 'agonize.' The enkrateuetai ('exercises self-control') refers to the strict training regimen athletes followed — diet, sleep, abstinence. The Isthmian Games prize was a pine wreath (stephanos), which would quickly wither. Paul contrasts this phtharton ('perishable') crown with the aphtharton ('imperishable') crown believers receive.
26. Paul switches from running to boxing (pykteuo, 'I box, I fight with fists'). The phrase ouk adēlōs ('not aimlessly, not without clear direction') and ouk aera derōn ('not beating the air') describe focused, purposeful effort — every punch lands, every step counts. This is not exercise but combat with a real opponent.
27. The verb hypōpiázō (literally 'I strike under the eye, I give a black eye') is boxing language — Paul treats his body as a sparring partner that must be subdued. The verb doulagōgō ('I make a slave of, I bring into servitude') echoes the slavery language of verse 19, now applied to his own physical desires. The word adokimos ('disqualified, failing the test, rejected') is an athletic term for failing to meet competition standards. Whether Paul fears loss of salvation or loss of reward is debated, but the severity of the warning is unmistakable.

Summary: Paul uses Israel's wilderness experience as a warning: the Israelites all enjoyed spiritual privileges (passing through the sea, eating manna, drinking from the rock) yet most were destroyed because of idolatry, sexual immorality, testing God, and grumbling. He warns the Corinthians that they cannot participate in both the Lord's table and the table of demons. The chapter concludes with practical guidelines: eat whatever is sold in the market without asking questions, accept dinner invitations freely, but if someone specifically identifies food as idol-offered, abstain for the sake of the other's conscience. Do everything for the glory of God.

What Makes This Remarkable: Paul's typological reading of the Exodus narrative (vv. 1-4) is one of his most sophisticated hermeneutical passages. The identification of the 'spiritual rock' that followed Israel with Christ (v. 4) is a stunning christological claim. The principle 'God is faithful, and he will not let you be tempted beyond your ability' (v. 13) has become one of the most quoted Pauline texts. The practical distinction between marketplace meat, dinner invitations, and explicitly identified idol-food (vv. 25-30) provides a nuanced ethical framework.

Translation Friction: The phrase 'spiritual food' and 'spiritual drink' (vv. 3-4) has been interpreted both sacramentally (as types of the Eucharist) and more broadly (as divine provision). The 'rock was Christ' identification (v. 4) draws on Jewish traditions about a mobile well that followed Israel. The command to 'flee from idolatry' (v. 14) stands in tension with the permission to eat marketplace meat (v. 25) — Paul distinguishes between direct participation in idol worship and incidental contact with idol-associated food.

Connections: The wilderness narrative draws on Exodus 13-17, Numbers 11, 14, 21, 25, and Psalm 78. The 'cup of blessing' and 'bread' language (v. 16) connects to the Last Supper traditions (11:23-26) and the Passover meal. The 'table of demons' concept (v. 21) draws on Deuteronomy 32:17. The 'do everything for the glory of God' principle (v. 31) anticipates Romans 14:6-8 and Colossians 3:17.

¹For I do not want you to be unaware, brothers and sisters, that our ancestors were all under the cloud, and all passed through the sea, ²They were all united with Moses through baptism in the cloud and in the sea. ³Did all consume the same spiritual meat. ⁴Did all partake of the same the identical supernatural drink — since they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Christ. ⁵Nevertheless, God was not pleased with most of them, and they were struck down in the wilderness. ⁶Now these things took place as examples for us, so that we might not desire evil things as they did. ⁷Do not be idolaters, as some of them were. As it is written: "The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to revel." ⁸We must not engage in sexual immorality, as some of them did, and twenty-three thousand fell in a single day. ⁹We must not put Christ to the test, as some of them did, and were destroyed by serpents. ¹⁰And do not grumble, as some of them grumbled, and were destroyed by the destroyer. ¹¹Now these things happened to them as examples, and they were written down for our instruction, upon whom the ends of the ages have come. ¹²So let the one who thinks they stand take care lest they fall. ¹³No temptation has overtaken you that is not common to humanity. God is faithful, and he will not let you be tempted beyond what you can bear, but with the temptation he will also provide the way of escape, so that you may be able to endure it. ¹⁴The refore, my beloved, flee from idolatry. ¹⁵I speak to you as sensible people; judge for yourselves what I say. ¹⁶The cup of blessing that we bless, is it not a participation in the blood of Christ? The bread that we break, is it not a participation in the body of Christ? ¹⁷Because there is one bread, we who are many are one body, for we all partake of the one bread. ¹⁸Consider the people of Israel: are not those who eat the sacrifices participants in the altar? ¹⁹What am I saying then? That food offered to idols is anything, or that an idol is anything? ²⁰No, but what they sacrifice, they sacrifice to demons and not to God. I do not want you to be participants with demons. ²¹You cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of demons. You cannot partake of the table of the Lord and the table of demons. ²²Are we trying to provoke the Lord to jealousy? Are we stronger than he? ²³"All things are lawful," but not all things are beneficial. "All things are lawful," but not all things build up. ²⁴Let no one seek their own good, but the good of the other person. ²⁵Eat whatever is sold in the meat market without raising questions of conscience, ²⁶Because the world is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof. ²⁷If an unbeliever invites you to a meal and you want to go, eat whatever is set before you without raising questions of conscience. ²⁸But if someone says to you, "This has been offered in sacrifice," then do not eat, for the sake of the one who informed you, and for the sake of conscience — ²⁹I mean the other person's conscience, not your own. For why should my freedom be judged by someone else's conscience? ³⁰If I partake with thankfulness, why am I denounced because of something for which I give thanks? ³¹So whether you eat or drink, or whatever you do, do everything for the glory of God. ³²Give no offense to Jews or to Greeks or to the church of God, ³³Indeed as I as well please all men in all things, not seeking mine own profit, but the profit of numerous, that they may be saved.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The phrase ou thelō hymas agnoein ('I do not want you to be ignorant') is a standard Pauline disclosure formula. The 'cloud' (nephēlē) is the pillar of cloud from Exodus 13:21-22. Paul says 'our ancestors' (hoi pateres hēmōn) even though most Corinthians were Gentiles — he identifies the church with Israel's story. The fivefold repetition of pantes ('all') in verses 1-4 is emphatic: everyone received the blessings, yet most fell.
1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 13:21-22. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
2. Paul reads the Red Sea crossing typologically as a 'baptism' — immersion into a new identity under Moses's leadership, just as Christian baptism brings immersion into Christ. The passive ebaptisanto ('were baptized') can also be read as middle voice ('baptized themselves'). The phrase eis ton Mōusēn ('into Moses') parallels 'into Christ' in Romans 6:3 and Galatians 3:27.
3. The 'spiritual food' (pneumatikon brōma) is the manna of Exodus 16. Paul calls it 'spiritual' not because it was immaterial but because it came from the Spirit's provision. The parallel with the Lord's Supper is likely intentional.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 16 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The claim hē petra de ēn ho Christos ('the rock was Christ') identifies the pre-incarnate Christ as the source of Israel's sustenance in the wilderness. The 'rock that followed' (akolouthousēs petras) draws on a Jewish rabbinic tradition (found in Tosefta Sukkah 3:11 and later sources) that the well of Miriam (based on Numbers 20:1-11 and 21:16-18) traveled with Israel through the desert. Paul christianizes this tradition by identifying the rock with Christ.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Numbers 20:1-11. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. The understatement ouk en tois pleiosin ('not with most of them') is darkly ironic — of the entire Exodus generation, only Joshua and Caleb entered the promised land (Numbers 14:29-30). The verb katestrōthēsan ('they were spread out, laid low') pictures corpses scattered across the desert floor (Numbers 14:29).
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Numbers 14:29-30 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The word typoi ('types, examples, patterns') establishes Paul's hermeneutical method: Old Testament events are typological patterns that prefigure and instruct the church. The reference to 'desiring evil things' (epithumētas kakōn) echoes Numbers 11:4-34, where Israel's craving for meat brought divine punishment.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Numbers 11:4-34. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. Paul quotes Exodus 32:6, the golden calf incident. The verb paizein ('to play, to revel') in context implies both feasting and sexual activity associated with the idol worship. The connection to the Corinthian situation is direct: participating in temple meals (8:10) is the same pattern of idolatrous feasting that destroyed Israel.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 32:6. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The reference is to the Baal Peor incident (Numbers 25:1-9), where Israelite men had sexual relations with Moabite women and worshiped their gods. Numbers 25:9 gives the death toll as 24,000; Paul says 23,000, possibly distinguishing those who died 'in one day' from the total, or following a different tradition.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Numbers 25:1-9 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The SBLGNT reads 'Christ' (ton Christon) rather than 'the Lord' — Paul identifies the pre-incarnate Christ as the one Israel tested in the wilderness (cf. v. 4, 'the rock was Christ'). The reference is to Numbers 21:5-6, where Israel's complaints about food and water resulted in venomous serpent attacks.

9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Numbers 21:5-6. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The verb gongyzō ('to grumble, to murmur') is onomatopoeic — it sounds like what it describes. The 'destroyer' (olothreutēs) may refer to the angel of death from Exodus 12:23 or to the plague of Numbers 16:41-50. The reference is probably to Korah's rebellion and its aftermath (Numbers 16-17), where grumbling against God's appointed leaders brought deadly consequences — directly relevant to the Corinthians' disrespect of Paul.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 12:23 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Numbers 16:41-50 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Numbers 16-17 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The phrase eis hous ta telē tōn aiōnōn katēntēken ('upon whom the ends of the ages have arrived') reveals Paul's eschatological framework: the church lives at the climax of history, the point toward which all previous ages were directed. The 'ends' (telē) is plural — multiple ages converge in the present eschatological moment.
12. A single, devastating sentence aimed at Corinthian overconfidence. The person who 'thinks they stand' (ho dokōn hestanaī) — who considers themselves spiritually secure — is precisely the one most at risk. Israel thought their spiritual privileges guaranteed safety; they were wrong.
13. The word peirasmos can mean 'temptation' (enticement to sin) or 'trial/testing' (hardship that tests faith). The declaration pistos de ho theos ('but God is faithful') echoes 1:9. God's faithfulness guarantees three things: temptation will not exceed capacity, an escape route (ekbasis, literally 'a way out') will be provided, and endurance (hypenekenin, 'to bear up under') will be possible. Note: the promise is endurance, not removal of the temptation.
14. The address agapētoi mou ('my beloved') softens the command with affection. The imperative pheugete ('flee!') — the same urgent command as 6:18 regarding sexual immorality — demands immediate, decisive separation. Paul does not say 'be careful around idolatry' but 'run from it.'
15. The phrase hōs phronimois legō ('I speak as to sensible/prudent people') may be mildly ironic — the Corinthians pride themselves on wisdom, so Paul appeals to that self-image. The imperative krinate ('judge, evaluate') invites their own assessment of his argument.
16. The phrase to potērion tēs eulogias ('the cup of blessing') is a technical term from the Jewish Passover meal — the third cup, over which a blessing was pronounced. The word koinōnia ('participation, communion, sharing') from 1:9 now describes the believers' relationship to Christ's blood and body through the Lord's Supper. This is not merely a memorial but genuine participation in Christ's sacrifice. Paul mentions the cup before the bread, which may reflect Corinthian liturgical order.
17. The logic moves from Eucharistic participation to ecclesial unity: shared bread creates shared body. The plural hoi polloi ('the many') becoming hen sōma ('one body') is the Eucharistic foundation of Paul's body-of-Christ theology (developed further in chapter 12).
18. The phrase ton Israēl kata sarka ('Israel according to the flesh') means ethnic/historical Israel. Paul draws on the principle that eating sacrificial food creates koinōnia with the altar — and by extension, with the deity worshiped there. This establishes the analogy for idol-feasts in the next verses.
19. Paul anticipates the objection: 'Are you contradicting chapter 8, where you said idols are nothing?' He is not. The idol is indeed nothing (8:4), but that does not mean idol-worship is harmless.
20. Paul draws on Deuteronomy 32:17 (LXX): 'They sacrificed to demons (daimoniois) and not to God.' While idols themselves are nothing, the spiritual reality behind pagan worship is demonic. Participation in temple feasts creates koinōnia with these demonic powers — the same kind of real participation that the Lord's Supper creates with Christ.
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Deuteronomy 32:17 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
21. The parallel structure — potērion kyriou / potērion daimoniōn, trapezēs kyriou / trapezēs daimoniōn — makes the incompatibility absolute. The 'table of the Lord' (trapezēs kyriou) echoes Malachi 1:7, 12, where it refers to the altar. Paul draws a direct equivalence between the Lord's Supper and temple meals: both create real spiritual bonds, and the two bonds are mutually exclusive.
21. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Malachi 1:7. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
22. The verb parazēlōmen ('to provoke to jealousy') echoes Deuteronomy 32:21, where Israel provoked God's jealousy through idol worship. The final question — mē ischyroteroi autou esmen ('are we stronger than he?') — is chilling: do you really want to compete with God?
22. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Deuteronomy 32:21. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
23. Paul returns to the Corinthian slogan from 6:12, now with a new second qualifier: ou panta oikodomei ('not all things build up'). The criterion shifts from personal freedom to community edification. The verb oikodomeō ('to build up') has been a key word since 3:9-17 — the question is always: does this action build the community or damage it?

24. This concise principle — mēdeis to heautou zēteitō alla to tou heterou ('let no one seek their own but that of the other') — summarizes the entire ethical argument of chapters 8-10. Rights yield to love; freedom serves the neighbor.
25. The Greek makellon (from Latin macellum) is the public meat market. Archaeological remains of the macellum have been found in Corinth. Paul's practical ruling: buy and eat marketplace meat freely — do not investigate whether it was previously offered to an idol. The phrase mēden anakrinontes ('not examining, not investigating') uses the judicial verb from 2:14-15, here meaning 'don't interrogate the meat's history.'
26. Paul quotes Psalm 24:1 (23:1 LXX). The theological principle: since everything belongs to the Lord, no food is inherently contaminated. God's ownership of all creation provides the basis for Christian freedom in dietary matters.
26. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalms 24:1. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
27. Second practical scenario: a dinner invitation from a pagan. Paul permits acceptance (kai thelete poreuesthai, 'and you wish to go' — attendance is optional, not required). The same rule applies: eat without investigating. Social meals with pagans are not forbidden — Paul does not advocate separation from the wider culture.
28. Third scenario: someone at the meal explicitly identifies the food as hierothyton ('offered in sacrifice' — a more neutral term than eidōlothyton, 'idol-offered'). The speaker might be a pagan host who thinks the religious origin adds value, or a weak believer troubled by the association. Either way, Paul says abstain — not because the food is inherently contaminated but di' ekeinon ('for the sake of that person').
29. Paul clarifies: it is the other person's conscience (tēn tou heterou) that matters in this situation, not your own. The rhetorical question about freedom being judged by another's conscience (vv. 29b-30) may voice the Corinthians' own objection, which Paul has been anticipating.
30. This continues the Corinthian objection: 'If I pray over the food and eat with gratitude, why should anyone criticize me?' Paul allows the objection to stand but redirects the conversation to the overriding principle in the next verse.
31. This verse provides the supreme criterion that resolves all the cases: panta eis doxan theou poieite ('do everything for the glory of God'). The word doxa ('glory') corresponds to the Hebrew kavod — to glorify God is to treat God as the weightiest reality in every decision. Eating, drinking, and all of life become acts of worship when oriented toward God's glory.
32. The adjective aproskopoi ('blameless, giving no offense, not causing to stumble') extends the principle to three audiences: Jews, Greeks, and the church. Paul envisions a life so shaped by love that it creates no unnecessary obstacles for anyone — the same missionary flexibility described in 9:19-23.
33. Paul's final appeal points back to his own example (chapter 9): he seeks to tou sympheron ('the advantage') of tōn pollōn ('the many') rather than his own. The purpose clause hina sōthōsin ('so that they may be saved') reveals the ultimate motivation behind all of Paul's ethical teaching on food, freedom, and rights: the salvation of people.

Summary: Paul addresses two worship-related issues. First, he discusses head coverings during prayer and prophecy (vv. 2-16), arguing from creation, nature, and church practice that women should have a covering on their heads when praying or prophesying. Second, he rebukes the Corinthians' practice of the Lord's Supper (vv. 17-34), which has degenerated into a meal that reinforces social divisions — the wealthy eat and drink to excess while the poor go hungry. Paul recites the words of institution ('This is my body... this cup is the new covenant in my blood') and warns that eating and drinking without discerning the body brings judgment.

What Makes This Remarkable: The Lord's Supper tradition (vv. 23-26) is the earliest written account of the institution, predating even the Gospels. Paul claims to have 'received from the Lord' this tradition, placing it in the chain of authoritative teaching. The phrase 'new covenant in my blood' (v. 25) explicitly connects Jesus's death to Jeremiah's new covenant prophecy (Jeremiah 31:31-34). The head covering passage assumes women are actively praying and prophesying in the assembly — Paul does not silence them but regulates how they participate.

Translation Friction: *The head covering passage (vv. 2-16) is among the most debated in Paul's letters. The Greek kephalē ('head') may mean 'authority over' or 'source/origin' — the choice dramatically affects interpretation. The word exousia ('authority') in verse 10 is also debated: is it the woman's own authority or a sign of being under authority? We render the Greek and note the options. The Lord's Supper section has fewer textual difficulties but raises profound theological questions about 'discerning the body' (v. 29).*

Connections: The creation argument (vv. 7-9) draws on Genesis 1:26-27 and 2:18-23. The Lord's Supper words connect to Exodus 24:8 (blood of the covenant), Jeremiah 31:31-34 (new covenant), and the Synoptic institution narratives (Mark 14:22-25, Matthew 26:26-29, Luke 22:14-20). The warning about judgment (vv. 29-32) anticipates the final judgment themes of chapter 15.

¹Be imitators of me, as I am of Christ. ²Now I commend you because you remember me in everything and maintain the traditions just as I delivered them to you. ³But I want you to understand that the head of every man is Christ, the head of a wife is her husband, and the head of Christ is God. ⁴Every man who prays or prophesies with his head covered dishonors his head. ⁵But every woman who prays or prophesies with her head uncovered dishonors her head, for it is the same as if her head were shaved. ⁶For if a woman will not cover her head, she should cut her hair short. But if it is disgraceful for a woman to cut off her hair or shave her head, let her cover her head. ⁷A man ought not to cover his head, since he is the image and glory of God, but the woman is the glory of the man. ⁸For man was not made from woman, but woman from man. ⁹Neither was man created for the sake of woman, but woman for the sake of man. ¹⁰For this reason a woman ought to have a symbol of authority on her head, because of the angels. ¹¹Nevertheless, in the Lord, woman is not independent of man, nor is man independent of woman. ¹²For just as woman came from man, so man comes through woman. But all things come from God. ¹³Judge for yourselves: is it proper for a woman to pray to God with her head uncovered? ¹⁴Does not nature itself teach you that if a man wears long hair, it is a disgrace to him, ¹⁵However, if a lady possess long hair, it is a glory to her — for her hair is given her for a covering. ¹⁶If anyone is inclined to be contentious, we have no such practice — nor do the churches of God. ¹⁷But in the following instructions I do not commend you, because when you come together it is not for the better but for the worse. ¹⁸For, in the first place, when you come together as a church, I hear that there are divisions among you, and I believe it in part. ¹⁹Indeed, there must be factions among you, so that those who are genuine may be recognized among you. ²⁰When you come together, it is not the Lord's Supper that you eat. ²¹For when the time comes to eat, each one goes ahead with his own meal. One goes hungry while another gets drunk. ²²Do you not have houses to eat and drink in? Or do you despise the church of God and humiliate those who have nothing? What should I say to you? Should I commend you in this? I will not commend you. ²³For I received from the Lord what I also delivered to you, that the Lord Jesus, on the night he was betrayed, took bread, ²⁴Indeed, following he had given thanks, he brake it, and stated, Take, eat — this is my body, which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of me. ²⁵In the same way he also took the cup, after supper, saying, "This cup is the new covenant in my blood. Do this, as often as you drink it, in remembrance of me." ²⁶For as often as you eat this bread and drink this cup, you proclaim the Lord's death until he comes. ²⁷Therefore, whoever eats the bread or drinks the cup of the Lord in an unworthy manner will be guilty of sinning against the body and blood of the Lord. ²⁸Let a person examine himself, and then eat of the bread and drink of the cup. ²⁹For the one who eats and drinks without discerning the body eats and drinks judgment on himself. ³⁰That is why many of you are weak and ill, and some have died. ³¹But if we judged ourselves properly, we would not be judged. ³²But when we are judged by the Lord, we are being disciplined so that we may not be condemned along with the world. ³³So then, my brothers and sisters, when you come together to eat, wait for one another. ³⁴If anyone is hungry, let him eat at home, so that when you come together it will not be for judgment. The other matters I will address when I come.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. This verse likely concludes the argument of chapter 10 (chapter divisions are later additions). Paul's call to imitation is now explicitly grounded: mimētai mou gines̄the kathōs kagō Christou ('imitate me as I imitate Christ'). The chain of imitation — Christ Paul Corinthians — prevents both hero worship (Paul is not the ultimate model) and autonomy (the Corinthians cannot claim to follow Christ while ignoring apostolic example).
2. The word paradoxeis ('traditions, teachings handed down') is technical language for authoritative tradition passed from teacher to student. Paul praises their general faithfulness before addressing the specific problems. The verb paredōka ('I delivered, I handed over') will recur in verse 23 for the Lord's Supper tradition.
3. The Greek kephalē ('head') is the crux of this passage. It can mean 'authority over' (as in most traditional readings) or 'source/origin' (as some scholars argue from its usage in Greek literature). The order — Christ/man, man/woman, God/Christ — is not hierarchical (God is mentioned last, not first) but likely traces the 'source' relationship. The Greek anēr can mean 'man' or 'husband,' and gynē can mean 'woman' or 'wife' — in this context about married couples at worship, 'husband' and 'wife' are likely.

4. The phrase kata kephalēs echōn ('having [something] down from the head') likely refers to a cloth draped over the head. Roman men of high status sometimes covered their heads during religious rituals (capite velato), so Paul may be opposing a specific Roman practice rather than giving a universal rule. The double meaning of 'head' — the man's physical head and Christ as his metaphorical head — creates deliberate ambiguity.
5. Crucially, Paul assumes women pray and prophesy in the assembly — the issue is not whether they participate but how. The word akatakalyptō ('uncovered, unveiled') describes the absence of a head covering. Paul equates an uncovered head with a shaved head (exurēmēnē) — in the ancient world, a shaved female head was associated with shame, mourning, or the punishment of adulteresses.
6. Paul uses a reductio ad absurdum: if being uncovered is acceptable, then so is being shorn (keirasthō) or shaved (xyrasthai). But since the Corinthians agree that a shaved/shorn woman is shameful (aischron), they should agree that covering is appropriate. The argument assumes shared cultural values about female appearance.
7. Paul draws on Genesis 1:26-27. The statement that man is eikōn kai doxa theou ('image and glory of God') reflects Genesis 1:27. That woman is doxa andros ('glory of man') does not deny she bears God's image (Genesis 1:27 includes both male and female) but adds a relational dimension from the Genesis 2 narrative. The word doxa ('glory') here may mean 'that which reflects the glory of' — as the moon reflects the sun's light.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 1:26-27. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. Paul references Genesis 2:21-22 (woman created from man's rib/side). The preposition ek ('from, out of') emphasizes origin. Note that Paul will qualify this in verse 12: 'as woman came from man, so man comes through woman' — the dependency is mutual.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 2:21-22 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. Paul references Genesis 2:18 ('It is not good for the man to be alone; I will make a helper suitable for him'). The phrase dia ton andra ('for the sake of the man') echoes the 'helper' (ezer) concept. In Hebrew, ezer does not imply subordination — God himself is called Israel's ezer (Psalm 33:20, 70:5).
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 2:18. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalm 33:20. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. This verse is notoriously difficult. The Greek exousian echein epi tēs kephalēs ('to have authority on the head') could mean: (1) a sign of being under authority (traditional reading, requiring 'symbol of' as an interpretive addition), (2) the woman's own authority to pray and prophesy (the covering as her authorization), or (3) authority over her own head (the right to decide about covering). The phrase dia tous angelous ('because of the angels') may reference angels as guardians of worship order, or the Genesis 6:1-4 tradition, or angelic presence in the assembly. The ambiguity is genuine.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 6:1-4 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The qualifier en kyriō ('in the Lord') is crucial — whatever hierarchical or source-relationship Paul has established, it is mutual in Christ. The double negative oute...chōris...oute...chōris ('neither without...nor without') creates complete interdependence. This verse significantly qualifies verses 7-9.
12. Paul balances his earlier creation argument: if woman originated from man (Genesis 2), every man since has been born through (dia) a woman. The final clause ta de panta ek tou theou ('but all things are from God') places both sexes under divine sovereignty, preventing either from claiming ultimacy over the other.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 2. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. Paul appeals to the Corinthians' own sense of propriety (prepon, 'fitting, proper, appropriate'). This is an argument from cultural sensibility, not from divine command — a weaker form of argumentation that suggests Paul recognizes the cultural specificity of the practice.
14. The appeal to physis ('nature') is an argument from what seems natural or customary. The claim that long hair on men is atimia ('disgrace, dishonor') reflects Greco-Roman cultural norms, not universal biology — many ancient Near Eastern men wore long hair (Nazirites, Spartans). Paul is arguing from cultural convention, which weakens the argument's universal applicability.
15. The statement that long hair is given (dedotai, divine passive — given by God) as a peribolaion ('covering, wrap') creates a potential problem for Paul's argument: if long hair is a natural covering, why require an additional artificial covering? Some scholars argue Paul is saying long hair is the only covering needed; others that the natural covering teaches the principle of covering, which should be honored with an additional veil.
16. Paul's final argument is from church practice: hēmeis toiautēn synētheian ouk echomen ('we have no such custom'). The ambiguity is whether 'no such custom' means 'no custom of women being uncovered' or 'no custom of being contentious about it.' The appeal to universal church practice (hai ekklesiāi tou theou) serves as Paul's trump card when other arguments may not persuade.
17. The shift from praise (v. 2, 'I commend you') to criticism (ouk epainō, 'I do not commend you') signals a more serious problem. The Corinthians' assemblies are actually making things worse (eis to hēsson) rather than better (eis to kreisson) — their worship is counter-productive.

- 18. The word schismata ('divisions') recurs from 1:10. The phrase meros ti pisteuō ('I partly believe') is diplomatically restrained — Paul does not dismiss the reports entirely but also does not accept every detail uncritically. The 'first of all' (prōton men) implies a list, but the second item is never explicitly stated (it may be the spiritual gifts discussion in chapters 12-14).
- 19. The word haireseis ('factions, parties, sects' — the origin of 'heresies') in this context means party divisions, not formal theological heresy. Paul's statement that factions 'must' (dei) exist is not endorsement but recognition of a divine purpose: divisions reveal who is dokimoi ('tested, approved, genuine'). The furnace of conflict refines character.
- 20. The phrase kyriakon deipnon ('the Lord's Supper') appears only here in the New Testament — Paul may have coined the term. The adjective kyriakos ('belonging to the Lord') marks this meal as distinct from ordinary dining. Paul's judgment is blunt: what they do when they gather is not the Lord's Supper at all. Their behavior has invalidated the meal.
- 21. The verb prolambanei ('takes beforehand, goes ahead with') indicates that wealthier members, who could arrive earlier and bring better food, were eating before the poorer members arrived (slaves and laborers who could not leave work early). The result: hos men peina hos de methyei ('one hungers, another is drunk'). The Lord's Supper, which was supposed to enact equality in Christ, was instead reinforcing Corinthian social stratification.
- 22. Paul's indignation builds through four questions. The key accusation: kataphroneite tēs ekklēσίας tou theou ('you despise the church of God') and kataischynete tous mē echontas ('you humiliate those who do not have'). The 'have-nots' (tous mē echontas) are poor members who arrive with little or no food. The wealthy are not merely eating their own food but humiliating the poor by creating a two-tier meal that mirrors the social hierarchy the gospel was supposed to dissolve.
- 23. The technical language parelabon...paredōka ('I received...I delivered') is the standard terminology for transmitting authoritative tradition in both Jewish and early Christian circles. Paul claims to have received this tradition apo tou kyriou ('from the Lord') — whether through a direct revelation or through a chain of tradition originating from Jesus is debated. The phrase en tē nykti hē paredideto ('on the night he was being handed over/betrayed') uses paredideto, which can mean 'betrayed' (by Judas) or 'handed over' (by God — cf. Romans 8:32). The ambiguity may be intentional.
- 24. The verb eucharistēsas ('having given thanks') is the origin of 'Eucharist.' The words touto mou estin to sōma to hyper hymōn ('this is my body which is for you') are among the most debated in Christian history — 'is' (estin) has been interpreted as literal identity, symbolic representation, spiritual presence, and more. The SBLGNT does not include 'broken' (klōmenon), which appears in later manuscripts. The command touto poieite ('do this') establishes the meal as a repeated practice, not a one-time event. The word anamnēsis ('remembrance') is more than mere memory — in Jewish Passover theology, it means making the past event present and effective.
- 25. The phrase meta to deipnēsai ('after supper') indicates the cup came after the meal, not during it — the original context was a full Passover meal. The declaration touto to potērion hē kainē diathēkē estin en tō emō haimati ('this cup is the new covenant in my blood') explicitly invokes Jeremiah 31:31-34, where God promises a new covenant to replace the Sinai covenant. Jesus's blood is the ratifying sacrifice of this new covenant, just as the blood of Exodus 24:8 ratified the old.
- 25. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Jeremiah 31:31-34 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
- 25. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 24:8 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
- 26. Paul adds his own interpretive comment to the tradition. The verb katangallete ('you proclaim, you announce publicly') means the Lord's Supper is a proclamation — every celebration is a sermon in action. The temporal marker achri hou elthē ('until he comes') gives the meal an eschatological horizon: it looks backward to the cross and forward to the return. The meal exists in the tension between 'already' (Christ has died) and 'not yet' (Christ has not yet returned).
- 27. The adverb anaxiōs ('unworthily, in an unworthy manner') modifies the manner of eating, not the worthiness of the eater. In context, 'unworthily' means eating in a way that perpetuates social divisions (vv. 21-22). The word enochos ('guilty, liable, answerable for') is a legal term — eating without regard for others makes one liable for the very body and blood the meal commemorates.
- 28. The verb dokimazatō ('let him test, let him examine') is from the metallurgical testing vocabulary — test yourself as you would test metal for quality. The self-examination is not a general inventory of sins but specifically: am I participating in a way that honors the body of Christ (both the crucified body and the community)?
- 29. The phrase mē diakrinōn to sōma ('not discerning the body') is ambiguous: 'the body' could mean Christ's body in the bread, the church as Christ's body, or both. Given the context of social divisions at the meal, 'the body' most likely refers to the community — failing to recognize the gathered church as Christ's body leads to judgment. The SBLGNT does not include 'unworthily' or 'of the Lord' in this verse, following the earliest manuscripts.
- 30. Paul attributes actual physical illness and death in the Corinthian community to their abuse of the Lord's Supper. The verb koimōntai ('sleep') is the Christian euphemism for death (cf. 7:39; 15:6, 18, 20, 51). Whether Paul means divine punishment, natural consequences of social dysfunction, or a spiritual-physical connection is debated, but the severity of the statement is unmistakable.

31. The wordplay between diekrinomen ('we were judging/discerning ourselves') and ekrinometha ('we would be judged') connects back to verse 29's diakrinōn ('discerning'). Self-examination prevents divine judgment — the discipline is restorative, not retributive.
32. The verb paideuometha ('we are disciplined, educated, trained') uses the vocabulary of parental correction — God's judgment on the community is disciplinary (corrective) not condemnatory (destructive). The purpose clause hina mē syn tō kosmō katakrithōmen ('so that we may not be condemned with the world') distinguishes between divine discipline within the family and final condemnation.
33. The practical solution is remarkably simple: allēlous ekdechesthe ('wait for one another'). The entire problem — rich eating before poor arrive, social stratification at the Lord's table — is solved by the basic act of waiting. The verb ekdechesthe means 'welcome, receive, wait for' — it implies hospitality, not mere delay.
34. Paul's second practical instruction: if you cannot wait, eat at home (en oikō esthietō). The purpose clause hina mē eis krima synerchēsthe ('so that you may not come together for judgment') reframes their gatherings as potentially judicial events — assemblies that should bring blessing can instead bring krima ('judgment'). The closing phrase ta de loipa ('the remaining matters') indicates Paul has more to say but will handle it in person.

Summary: Paul addresses 'spiritual things' (pneumatika) — the gifts of the Spirit and their proper use in the community. He establishes that the fundamental confession 'Jesus is Lord' is the Spirit's work, then describes the diversity of gifts given by the one Spirit, one Lord, and one God. Using the extended metaphor of the human body, Paul argues that every member is necessary, that no one can claim superiority or independence, and that God has specially honored the weaker members. The chapter closes with a list of roles God has appointed in the church and a series of rhetorical questions emphasizing that no one has all gifts.

What Makes This Remarkable: The body-of-Christ metaphor is Paul's most developed ecclesiological image. The emphasis on the 'weaker' and 'less honorable' members receiving greater honor (vv. 22-25) directly addresses Corinthian social stratification. The triad of 'Spirit, Lord, God' in verses 4-6 is one of the earliest trinitarian patterns in Christian literature. The nine gifts listed in verses 8-10 have shaped charismatic theology for centuries.

Translation Friction: *The distinction between pneumatika ('spiritual things') and charismata ('grace-gifts') in this chapter is debated — Paul may use them interchangeably or may distinguish them. The gift list is not exhaustive (cf. Romans 12:6-8 for a different list). The phrase 'varieties of tongues' (genē glōssōn) and 'interpretation of tongues' (hermēneia glōssōn) will be further discussed in chapter 14. Whether the 'body of Christ' is metaphor or ontological reality is a perennial theological question.*

Connections: The body metaphor was common in Greco-Roman political rhetoric (e.g., Livy's fable of the belly) but Paul transforms it christologically. The gift lists parallel Romans 12:6-8 and Ephesians 4:11. The 'weaker members' theme connects to the weak-conscience discussion of chapters 8-10. The chapter leads directly into the love hymn of chapter 13, which provides the governing principle for all gift use.

¹Now concerning spiritual gifts, brothers and sisters, I do not want you to be uninformed. ²You know that when you were pagans you were led astray to mute idols, however you were led. ³Therefore I want you to understand that no one speaking by the Spirit of God says "Jesus is cursed," and no one can say "Jesus is Lord" except by the Holy Spirit. ⁴But the same spirit, and now there are diversities of gifts. ⁵There are various kinds of administrations, but the same Lord. ⁶There are different kinds of working, but the same God is at work in all of them and in everyone. ⁷To each one is given the manifestation of the Spirit for the common good. ⁸For to one is given through the Spirit the utterance of wisdom, and to another the utterance of knowledge according to the same Spirit, ⁹to another person faith by that same Spirit, and to yet another gifts of healing by that one Spirit. ¹⁰To another performing miracles. To another prophecy. To another distinguishing between spirits. To another speaking in various languages. To another interpreting those languages:. ¹¹All these are empowered by one and the same Spirit, who distributes to each person individually as the Spirit wills. ¹²For just as the body is one and has many members, and all the members of the body, though many, are one body — so it is with Christ. ¹³For in one Spirit we were all baptized into one body — Jews or Greeks, slaves or free — and we were all given one Spirit to drink. ¹⁴For the body does not consist of one member but of many. ¹⁵If the foot should say, "Because I am not a hand, I do not belong to the body," that does not make it any less a part of the body. ¹⁶And if the ear should say, "Because I am not an eye, I do not belong to the body," that does not make it any less a part of the body. ¹⁷If the whole body were an eye, where would the sense of hearing be? If the whole body were an ear, where would the sense of smell be? ¹⁸But as it is, God arranged the members in the body, each one of them, as he chose. ¹⁹If all were a single member, where would the body be? ²⁰As it is, there are many members but one body. ²¹The eye cannot say to the hand, "I have no need of you," nor again the head to the feet, "I have no need of you." ²²On the contrary, the parts of the body that seem to be weaker are indispensable, ²³The parts of the body that seem less important we treat with special honor, and our less presentable parts receive a dignity that our more attractive parts do not need. ²⁴For our comely parts possess no need — but God has tempered the body as one, possessing granted more abundant honour to that part which lacked:. ²⁵so that there would be no division in the body, but instead every part would show equal concern for the others. ²⁶If one member suffers, all suffer together with it; if one member is honored, all rejoice together with it. ²⁷Now you are the body of Christ, and individually members of it. ²⁸And God has appointed in the church first apostles, second prophets, third teachers, then miracles, then gifts of healing, forms of assistance, forms of leadership, and various kinds of tongues. ²⁹Is everyone an apostle? Is everyone a prophet? Is everyone a teacher? Does everyone perform miracles? ³⁰Do all possess gifts of healing? Do all speak in tongues? Do all interpret? ³¹But earnestly desire the greater gifts. And I will show you a still more excellent way.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The phrase peri de ('now concerning') marks another response to the Corinthians' letter. The Greek pneumatikōn could be neuter ('spiritual things/gifts') or masculine ('spiritual people'). Most translations take it as neuter, referring to the gifts, though Paul may intentionally leave it ambiguous. The disclosure formula ou thelō hymas agnoein ('I do not want you to be ignorant') signals an important correction of misunderstanding.
2. Paul reminds the Corinthians of their pre-Christian experience with idolatry. The adjective aphōna ('mute, voiceless, speechless') contrasts the silent idols with the speaking Spirit. The phrase hōs an ēgesthe apagomenoi ('however you were being led away') describes the directionless, passive experience of pagan religion — they were dragged along by forces they did not understand.
3. Paul provides the foundational test for authentic spiritual experience: the confession kyrios Iēsous ('Jesus is Lord'). The phrase anathema Iēsous ('Jesus is cursed') may reflect actual occurrences in Corinthian worship where ecstatic speakers uttered shocking statements, or it may be a hypothetical extreme. The declaration that only the Holy Spirit enables the lordship confession establishes the Spirit as the source of all genuine Christian experience. This is the christological criterion for evaluating spiritual claims.
4. The word diakrisis ('varieties, distributions, apportionments') emphasizes diversity within unity. The charismata ('gifts of grace') — from charis ('grace') — are the Spirit's concrete manifestations in the community. The trinitarian pattern begins: one Spirit distributes diverse gifts.
5. The word diakoniōn ('services, ministries') shifts from gifts to their expression in service. The 'same Lord' (ho autos kyrios) is Christ, continuing the trinitarian pattern: Spirit gifts, Lord service.
6. The word energēmatōn ('workings, activities, effects') and the verb energōn ('working, empowering') share the root from which English 'energy' derives. The trinitarian pattern completes: Spirit/gifts, Lord/service, God/empowerment. The phrase ta panta en pasin ('all things in all') emphasizes God's comprehensive activity — every genuine spiritual manifestation in every person traces back to the one God.
7. Two crucial points: first, hekastō ('to each one') — every believer receives a manifestation, not just an elite spiritual class. Second, pros to sympheron ('for the benefit, for what is advantageous') — the purpose is corporate benefit, not individual prestige. The word phanerōsis ('manifestation, disclosure, making visible') means the Spirit becomes visible through the gifts.
8. The gift list begins with logos sophias ('word/utterance of wisdom') and logos gnōseōs ('word/utterance of knowledge'). These are not general qualities but specific Spirit-enabled capacities for speaking wisdom and knowledge in the assembly. The distinction between them is not entirely clear — wisdom may be more practical/applied while knowledge may be more revelatory/doctrinal.
9. The 'faith' (pistis) mentioned here is not saving faith (which all believers share) but a special gift of extraordinary trust — the kind that moves mountains (13:2). The plural charismata iamatōn ('gifts of healings') is doubly plural, suggesting diverse types of healing for diverse conditions, not a single blanket ability.
10. Five more gifts complete the list of nine. Energēmata dynamēōn ('workings of powers/miracles') overlaps with healing but may include non-medical supernatural acts. Prophēteia ('prophecy') is Spirit-inspired speech that builds up the community (14:3). Diakrisis pneumatōn ('discernments of spirits') is the ability to evaluate whether a spiritual manifestation is genuinely from God. Genē glōssōn ('kinds of tongues') refers to Spirit-inspired speech in languages unknown to the speaker. Hermēneia glōssōn ('interpretation of tongues') makes tongue-speech intelligible to the community. Tongues and interpretation are placed last — possibly reflecting Paul's assessment of their relative importance in the assembly.

11. The summary statement reaffirms unity in diversity: to hen kai to auto pneuma ('the one and the same Spirit') is the single source of all gifts. The phrase kathōs bouletai ('as he wills') assigns sovereignty to the Spirit — gifts are not earned, chosen, or competed for but distributed according to the Spirit's own decision. This directly undercuts any Corinthian hierarchy of gifts.
12. The body metaphor was familiar in Greco-Roman rhetoric, but Paul's conclusion is startling: instead of saying 'so it is with the church,' he says houtōs kai ho Christos ('so also is Christ'). The church does not merely resemble a body — it is Christ's body. The identification is ontological, not merely illustrative.
13. Baptism by the Spirit creates the one body, transcending the most fundamental social divisions of the ancient world: ethnic (Jews/Greeks) and status (slaves/free). The verb epotisthēmen ('we were given to drink, we were drenched') may refer to the Spirit's infilling as a baptismal experience (being immersed) or to the ongoing experience of the Spirit as spiritual drink (echoing 10:4, drinking from the spiritual rock). Both images — baptism and drinking — convey saturation in the Spirit.
14. This simple statement introduces the extended body analogy (vv. 14-26). A body that was only one part would not be a body at all. The implication: a church where everyone has the same gift or speaks in tongues is not truly functioning as Christ's body.
15. Paul personifies body parts to address those who feel excluded because their gifts seem less impressive. The foot's self-exclusion ('I am not a hand') is absurd — one's identity as a body member does not depend on having a particular function. This addresses believers who feel inferior because they do not speak in tongues or exercise more visible gifts.
16. The second example reinforces the point with a different pair: ear and eye. The logic is the same — difference of function does not diminish membership.
17. Paul uses absurdist humor: a body that was entirely an eye could see everything but hear nothing. The Corinthians' obsession with one spectacular gift (likely tongues) would produce a monstrously dysfunctional body. Diversity is not a concession to weakness but a design requirement.
18. The verb etheto ('placed, arranged, appointed') assigns the body's design to God's deliberate choice (kathōs ethelēsen, 'as he wished'). No member chose its own placement, and no member can claim its position is accidental. This parallels the Spirit's sovereignty in distributing gifts (v. 11).
19. The question is rhetorical — a body that is all one part is not a body. Uniformity destroys the very thing it claims to perfect.
20. The summary statement: polla men melē, hen de sōma ('many members, one body'). Unity and diversity are not in tension — they are the two essential characteristics of a body.
21. Paul now addresses the opposite problem: not those who feel excluded but those who exclude others. The 'eye' and 'head' — presumably the more prominent members who possess impressive gifts — cannot dismiss the 'hand' and 'feet' as unnecessary. If verses 15-16 address inferiority, verses 21-25 address superiority.
22. The word asthenestera ('weaker') echoes the 'weak' members of chapters 8-10. Paul now makes a counterintuitive claim: the ta dokounta melē ('the members that seem') weaker are actually anankaia ('necessary, indispensable'). Internal organs — invisible and seemingly fragile — are more essential to survival than external, visible parts.
23. The metaphor extends to how we treat body parts: those considered 'less honorable' (atimōtera) receive more covering and attention — we clothe them with greater honor (timēn perissoterein). The 'unpresentable parts' (ta aschēmona) are given euschēmosynēn ('presentability, propriety'). Paul implies the community should operate the same way: those with less visible gifts should receive greater honor.
24. The verb synekerasen ('composed, blended, combined') describes God as the master designer who deliberately structured the body so that the less honored receive more. This is divine social engineering against hierarchy — God's own design favors the disadvantaged.
25. The purpose of God's design: hina mē ē schisma en tō sōmati ('so that there may be no schism/division in the body'). The word schisma returns from 1:10 and 11:18 — the body metaphor is Paul's answer to the division problem that has plagued the entire letter. The positive counterpart: hyper allēlōn merimnōsin ('they may care for one another equally').
26. The body's interdependence manifests in shared experience: sympathy (sympaschei, 'suffer with') and shared joy (synchairei, 'rejoice with'). The prefix syn- ('with, together') appears in both verbs, emphasizing solidarity. A church where some celebrate while others suffer is as dysfunctional as a body where one hand is healthy while the other is paralyzed.
27. The application is direct: hymeis de este sōma Christou ('you are Christ's body'). The phrase melē ek merous ('members from a part,' i.e., 'individually members') preserves both the corporate identity (you are the body) and individual significance (each person is a member). The Corinthians are not merely like a body — they are Christ's actual body in Corinth.
28. This second list is ordered with numerical markers (prōton, deuteron, triton — 'first, second, third'), suggesting a ranking by importance. Apostles, prophets, and teachers are foundational roles. Then come miracles and healing (gifts from vv. 9-10), followed by two new items: antilēmpseis ('acts of helping, forms of assistance') and kybernēseis ('acts of guidance, forms of leadership/administration' — from the word for steering a ship). Tongues appear last — pointedly, given the Corinthians' apparent elevation of this gift.
29. Seven rhetorical questions, all introduced by mē (expecting a 'no' answer). The point is inescapable: no one has all gifts, and not everyone has the same gift. The Corinthian assumption that everyone should speak in tongues is demolished.

30. The final three questions specifically target the gifts the Corinthians most prized: healing, tongues, and interpretation. The implied answer to each is emphatically 'no.' The diversity that Paul has celebrated is not optional but divinely mandated.
31. The imperative zēloute ('earnestly desire, strive for') could also be indicative ('you are striving for') — if indicative, Paul is observing their behavior rather than commanding it. The phrase kath' hyperbolēn hodon ('a way beyond all comparison') introduces chapter 13 — the 'more excellent way' is the way of love. This is one of the most celebrated transitions in all of Paul's letters: from the gifts of the Spirit to the supremacy of love.

Summary: 1 Corinthians 13 is Paul's celebrated exposition on love (agape), set within his larger argument about spiritual gifts. After listing the gifts in chapter 12 and before returning to their regulation in chapter 14, Paul inserts this passage to demonstrate that love is the indispensable context for all spiritual gifts. Without love, even the most spectacular abilities — tongues, prophecy, mountain-moving faith — are empty. Paul personifies love with fifteen characteristics (vv. 4-7), then argues that love alone endures when all other gifts pass away. The chapter closes with the triad of faith, hope, and love, declaring love the greatest.

What Makes This Remarkable: This chapter is often read in isolation at weddings and funerals, but its original context is a rebuke. The Corinthians were using spiritual gifts competitively, and Paul's praise of love is simultaneously an indictment of their lovelessness. The fifteen attributes of love in verses 4-7 are all verbs in Greek — love is defined by what it does, not what it feels. Several of the negative descriptions ('love does not envy, does not boast, is not arrogant') directly mirror the Corinthian problems catalogued elsewhere in the letter. The 'mirror' image in verse 12 refers to the polished bronze mirrors of Corinth, famously manufactured there but yielding only dim reflections.

Translation Friction: The Greek agape is rendered 'love' throughout, not the KJV's 'charity' (which reflected Latin caritas via the Vulgate). While 'charity' in 1611 could mean 'love,' in modern English it means 'almsgiving,' which distorts Paul's meaning. The verb forms in verses 4-7 resist smooth English translation; we preserve the verbal character as much as possible.

Connections: This chapter bridges chapters 12 and 14, which together form Paul's extended treatment of spiritual gifts. The eschatological vision of 'seeing face to face' (v. 12) echoes Moses's face-to-face encounter with God (Exodus 33:11, Numbers 12:8). The triad of faith, hope, and love appears also in 1 Thessalonians 1:3, 5:8, and Colossians 1:4-5.

¹If I speak in the tongues of men and of angels but do not have love, I have become a noisy gong or a clanging cymbal. ²And if I have prophecy and understand all mysteries and all knowledge, and if I have all faith so as to move mountains, but do not have love, I am nothing. ³And if I give away all my possessions, and if I hand over my body so that I may boast, but do not have love, I gain nothing. ⁴Love is patient, love is kind, love does not envy. Love does not boast, it is not arrogant. ⁵It does not act dishonorably, it does not seek its own interests, it is not provoked, it does not keep a record of wrongs. ⁶It does not rejoice at wrongdoing but rejoices together with the truth. ⁷It bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things. ⁸Love never falls. But if there are prophecies, they will be set aside; if there are tongues, they will cease; if there is knowledge, it will be set aside. ⁹Since we know in part, and we prophesy in part. ¹⁰However, when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part will be done away. ¹¹When I was a child, I spoke like a child, I thought like a child, I reasoned like a child. When I became an adult, I set aside childish things. ¹²For now we see in a mirror, dimly, but then face to face. Now I know in part, but then I will know fully, just as I have been fully known. ¹³And now these three remain: faith, hope, and love. But the greatest of these is love.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Paul begins with an extreme case: even angelic speech without love is mere noise. The Greek chalkos echon ('sounding bronze') and kumbalon alalazon ('wailing cymbal') evoke the percussion instruments of pagan worship in Corinth — the sound is loud but meaningless. The KJV's 'tinkling' is too gentle; alalazon means 'wailing, clashing.'

2. Paul escalates: prophecy, comprehensive knowledge, and miracle-working faith — all gifts the Corinthians prized — count for nothing without love. The mountain-moving faith echoes Jesus's teaching (Mark 11:23). The blunt 'I am nothing' (outhen eimi) is a deliberate shock, deflating the Corinthian fascination with spectacular gifts.
3. The SBLGNT reads kauchesomai ('that I may boast') rather than kauthesomia ('to be burned'), which is a variant reading reflected in the KJV. The critical text suggests that even martyrdom motivated by self-glory rather than love is worthless. The verb psomiso ('I feed by hand, I dole out') emphasizes the laborious, hands-on nature of the giving — and still it profits nothing without love.
4. Paul now defines love with fifteen verbs — love is described by what it does, not by what it feels. The first two are positive (patient, kind), then a cascade of negatives follows. The Greek perpereuesthai ('to boast, brag') occurs only here in the New Testament. The word physioutai ('is puffed up') echoes 4:6, 18, 19 and 8:1, targeting the Corinthians' specific vice.
5. The phrase ou zetei ta heautēs ('does not seek its own') directly echoes 10:24 and 10:33, where Paul made the same point about himself. The verb logizetai ('reckon, calculate') is an accounting term — love does not maintain a ledger of offenses. The KJV adds 'easily' before 'provoked,' softening what in Greek is absolute: love is not provoked.
6. The prefix syn- in synchairei ('rejoices with/together') suggests communal celebration — love joins in the truth's triumph rather than savoring another's failure. The contrast between adikia ('wrongdoing, injustice') and aletheia ('truth') pairs moral and intellectual integrity.
7. The fourfold panta ('all things') creates a powerful rhetorical climax. The verb stegei can mean 'covers' (as a roof covers a house) or 'bears' (as in bearing a load) — both senses apply. The sequence moves from passive endurance (bears) through trust and hope to active persistence (endures). Love's coverage is total.
8. The verb piptei ('falls') means 'collapses, fails' — love never loses its structural integrity. Paul now contrasts love's permanence with the temporary nature of gifts the Corinthians most valued. The verb katargeo ('to abolish, set aside, render inoperative') indicates that prophecy and knowledge serve a purpose that will be completed, after which they are no longer needed. Tongues 'will cease' (pausontai) uses a different verb, but Paul is not making a theological distinction between different modes of cessation.
9. The phrase ek merous ('from a part, partially') frames all present knowledge and prophecy as incomplete. This is not false or wrong but fragmentary — we see truly but not fully.
10. The Greek to teleion ('the complete, the perfect, the mature') is neuter, referring to a state or condition rather than a person. In context, this refers to the eschatological consummation when face-to-face knowledge replaces partial knowledge (v. 12). We render it 'the complete' rather than 'the perfect' to avoid confusion with moral perfection.
11. The analogy does not demean childhood but illustrates the natural supersession of one stage by another. The three verbs — speaking, thinking, reasoning — correspond loosely to the three gifts mentioned in verse 8 (tongues, prophecy, knowledge). The word aner ('adult male, man') is rendered 'adult' here since the contrast is maturity versus immaturity, not gender.
12. The Greek esoptron ('mirror') refers to the polished bronze mirrors for which Corinth was famous — clear enough to show a reflection but never as sharp as direct sight. The phrase en ainigmati ('in a riddle, dimly') echoes Numbers 12:8 (LXX), where God speaks to Moses 'not in riddles' but face to face — the very vision Paul anticipates for all believers at the consummation. The shift from ginosko ('I know') to epiginosko ('I will fully know') marks the difference between partial and complete knowledge.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Numbers 12:8. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. The triad of faith, hope, and love is a Pauline signature (cf. 1 Thessalonians 1:3, 5:8). The verb menei ('remains, abides') contrasts with the passing away of gifts in verse 8. Why love is greatest is debated: perhaps because God himself is love (1 John 4:8), or because love alone continues unchanged into eternity while faith becomes sight and hope becomes possession. The declaration 'the greatest of these is love' is the climax of the entire three-chapter argument on spiritual gifts.

Summary: 1 Corinthians 14 applies the love principle of chapter 13 to the specific question of tongues and prophecy in corporate worship. Paul argues consistently that prophecy is superior to uninterpreted tongues because prophecy builds up the whole congregation, while unintelligible speech edifies only the speaker. He establishes practical regulations: tongues must be interpreted, prophets must speak in order, and everything must be done for building up. The chapter culminates in a call for orderly worship, grounded in the character of God, who is a God of peace, not confusion.

What Makes This Remarkable: Paul's insistence on intelligibility over ecstatic experience was counter-cultural in Corinth, where pagan worship at temples of Dionysus and Apollo featured frenzied, unintelligible utterances. His argument that uninterpreted tongues make the speaker a 'foreigner' (barbaros, v. 11) to fellow worshipers inverts the Corinthian pride in this gift. The Old Testament quotation from Isaiah 28:11-12 (v. 21) is used in a surprising way — tongues are a sign not for believers but for unbelievers, and a negative sign at that, signaling judgment rather than blessing.

Translation Friction: Verses 34-35, which command women to be silent in the churches, stand in tension with 11:5, where Paul assumes women pray and prophesy in the assembly. Proposals include: (a) Paul is quoting a Corinthian slogan he will then refute, (b) the silence concerns only the evaluation of prophecy, (c) the verses are a later interpolation (some manuscripts place them after v. 40). We render the SBLGNT text as given and note the interpretive difficulty.

Connections: This chapter completes the spiritual gifts discussion begun in chapter 12 and framed by chapter 13. The Isaiah 28 quotation connects Corinthian tongue-speaking to the prophetic tradition of judgment oracles. The worship regulations parallel those in 1 Thessalonians 5:19-22. The closing principle 'God is not a God of disorder but of peace' (v. 33) grounds liturgical practice in theology proper.

¹Pursue love, and earnestly desire the spiritual gifts, but especially that you may prophesy. ²For one who speaks in a tongue does not speak to people but to God, for no one understands, but he speaks mysteries in the Spirit. ³But the one who prophesies speaks to people for their building up, encouragement, and consolation. ⁴The one who speaks in a tongue builds up himself, but the one who prophesies builds up the church. ⁵Now I want all of you to speak in tongues, but even more that you would prophesy. The one who prophesies is greater than the one who speaks in tongues, unless he interprets, so that the church may be built up. ⁶Now, brothers and sisters, if I come to you speaking in tongues, how will I benefit you unless I bring you some revelation or knowledge or prophecy or teaching? ⁷Even lifeless instruments that produce sound, whether flute or harp — if they do not produce distinct notes, how will anyone recognize the tune being played on the flute or the harp? ⁸And if the trumpet produces an indistinct sound, who will prepare for battle? ⁹So it is with you. Unless you produce intelligible speech with your tongue, how will anyone know what is being said? For you will be speaking into the air. ¹⁰There are doubtless many different kinds of languages in the world, and none is without meaning. ¹¹So if I do not know the meaning of the language, I will be a foreigner to the speaker and the speaker will be a foreigner to me. ¹²So with you. Since you are eager for manifestations of the Spirit, strive to excel in building up the church. ¹³Therefore, let the one who speaks in a tongue pray that he may interpret. ¹⁴For if I pray in a tongue, my spirit prays but my mind is unfruitful. ¹⁵What then? I will pray with my spirit, but I will also pray with my mind. I will sing praise with my spirit, but I will also sing praise with my mind. ¹⁶Otherwise, if you give thanks with your spirit, how can the outsider say "Amen" to your thanksgiving, since he does not know what you are saying? ¹⁷For you may be giving thanks well enough, but the other person is not built up. ¹⁸I thank God that I speak in tongues more than all of you. ¹⁹But in the church I would rather speak five words with my mind in order to instruct others than ten thousand words in a tongue. ²⁰Brothers and sisters, do not be children in your thinking. In evil be infants, but in your thinking be mature. ²¹In the Law it is written: "By people of strange tongues and by the lips of foreigners I will speak to this people, and even then they will not listen to me, says the Lord." ²²So then, tongues are a sign not for believers but for unbelievers, while prophecy is a sign not for unbelievers but for believers. ²³So if the whole church comes together and everyone speaks in tongues, and outsiders or unbelievers enter, will they not say that you are out of your minds? ²⁴But if all prophecy and an unbeliever or outsider enters, he is convicted by all, he is examined by all, ²⁵Thus are the secrets of his inner self fashioned manifest. And so falling below on his face he will bow down before God, and report that God is in you of a truth. ²⁶What then, brothers and sisters? When you come together, each one has a hymn, a teaching, a revelation, a tongue, or an interpretation. Let all things be done for building up. ²⁷If anyone speaks in a tongue, let it be two or at most three, and each in turn, and let someone interpret. ²⁸But if there is no interpreter, let him be silent in the church and speak to himself and to God. ²⁹Let two or three prophets speak, and let the others evaluate what is said. ³⁰If a revelation is given to another person sitting there, let the first be silent. ³¹For you can all prophesy one by one, so that all may learn and all may be encouraged. ³²The prophets have control over their own prophetic spirits. ³³For God is not a God of disorder but of peace. As in all the churches of the saints, ³⁴Indeed, let your women keep silence in the churches — since it is not permitted to them to speak. Yet they are commanded to be under obedience, as also says the law. ³⁵If they want to learn anything, let them ask their own husbands at home, for it is shameful for a woman to speak in the church. ³⁶Or did the word of God originate with you? Or are you the only ones it has reached? ³⁷If anyone thinks he is a prophet or spiritual, he should recognize that what I am writing to you is a command of the Lord. ³⁸But if anyone does not recognize this, he is not recognized. ³⁹So, my brothers and sisters, earnestly desire to prophesy, and do not forbid speaking in tongues. ⁴⁰But let all things be done properly and in order.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The imperative diokete ('pursue, chase') is aggressive — love must be actively hunted, not passively awaited. The transition from chapter 13 is seamless: love is supreme, but gifts still matter. Paul's preference for prophecy over tongues will dominate the chapter.
2. The KJV adds 'unknown' before 'tongue,' which is not in the Greek. Paul's point is not that tongues are bad but that they are vertically directed (to God) and therefore unintelligible to the horizontal audience without interpretation. The word mysteria ('mysteries') carries positive connotation — genuine spiritual content that lacks a human audience.
3. Three purposes of prophecy are named: oikodome ('building up,' from the construction metaphor Paul favors), paraklesis ('encouragement, exhortation'), and paramythia ('consolation, comfort'). Prophecy serves the community; tongues without interpretation do not.
4. Paul concedes that tongues do edify the individual speaker — this is not dismissed. But the standard for worship is communal edification. The verb oikodomei ('builds up') is used for both, but the object shifts from 'himself' to 'the church.'
5. Paul does not forbid or denigrate tongues — he wishes all spoke in tongues. But he ranks prophecy higher because of its communal benefit. The exception clause is critical: if tongues are interpreted, they become functionally equivalent to prophecy for building up the church.
6. Paul uses himself as an example. Four forms of intelligible speech are listed as alternatives to uninterpreted tongues: revelation, knowledge, prophecy, and teaching. All four communicate understandable content to the audience.
7. Paul draws an analogy from music. The word diastole ('distinction, difference') refers to the intervals between notes that create melody. Without distinguishable intervals, music becomes noise — precisely what unintelligible tongues are in worship.
8. The military analogy intensifies the point: an unclear trumpet call is not merely unhelpful but dangerous. In the Roman military context familiar to Corinth, different trumpet calls signaled advance, retreat, and various formations. An ambiguous signal could be fatal.
9. The phrase eis aera lalountes ('speaking into the air') is vivid — the words dissipate like breath in wind, reaching no one. The Greek eusemon ('clear, intelligible') literally means 'well-signed' or 'well-marked.'
10. The word phone can mean 'voice,' 'sound,' or 'language.' Paul's point is that every language, however foreign, carries meaning to its native speakers. The problem with uninterpreted tongues is not that they lack meaning but that their meaning is inaccessible.
11. The Greek barbaros ('barbarian, foreigner') was onomatopoeic — it mimicked the 'bar-bar' sound that foreign languages seemed to make to Greek ears. Paul's use is ironic: the Corinthians prized tongues as a spiritual achievement, but the practical effect is mutual incomprehension — they become barbarians to one another.
12. Paul redirects their zeal rather than quenching it. The word pneumatōn ('of spirits') is unusual — most translations supply 'spiritual gifts,' but the word may refer to spiritual manifestations more broadly. The imperative is clear: channel your enthusiasm toward what builds the community.
13. The connection between tongue-speaking and interpretation is presented as a matter of prayer. The tongue-speaker himself should seek the gift of interpretation, ensuring that his own utterance can serve the community.
14. Paul distinguishes between pneuma ('spirit') and nous ('mind'). In tongues-prayer, the human spirit engages God but the cognitive faculty (nous) produces no intelligible fruit for others. Paul does not dismiss spirit-prayer but insists that mind-engagement is also necessary in corporate settings.
15. Paul models the balanced approach: both spirit and mind are engaged. The verb psalō ('I will sing, I will make music') originally meant 'to pluck a stringed instrument' and came to mean 'to sing psalms or hymns.' Both prayer and singing should engage the full person.
16. The Greek idiotes ('outsider, layperson, uninstructed person') does not mean 'idiot' but refers to someone who lacks the specialized knowledge to understand — in this case, the unintelligible tongue. The congregational 'Amen' was a crucial element of early Christian worship (cf. Justin Martyr, First Apology 65), requiring comprehension of what was said.
17. Again Paul affirms that tongues-prayer is genuine thanksgiving — 'well enough' (kalos) is not sarcastic. The problem is not quality but accessibility. Individual spiritual experience, however authentic, must serve the community in corporate worship.
18. Paul establishes his authority to regulate tongues by revealing that he himself exercises this gift abundantly. He cannot be accused of envying a gift he lacks. The claim 'more than all of you' is remarkable and may be hyperbolic, but it prevents the Corinthians from dismissing his instructions as sour grapes.

19. The ratio is staggering: five intelligible words outweigh ten thousand unintelligible ones. The Greek myrioi ('ten thousand') is the largest number Greek had a single word for — it represents an overwhelming quantity. The verb katecheso ('I might instruct') is the root of 'catechism' — teaching that produces understanding.
20. Paul calls the Corinthians' obsession with tongues childish. The wordplay is sharp: be babies (nepiazo) in evil but adults (teleioi, 'mature, complete') in thinking. The word phresin ('in understanding/thinking') refers to practical judgment, not abstract intellect.
21. Paul quotes Isaiah 28:11-12, calling it 'the Law' (a common Jewish usage for the entire Old Testament). In Isaiah's original context, the 'strange tongues' were the Assyrian invaders — unintelligible speech was a sign of God's judgment on disobedient Israel. Paul applies this typologically to the Corinthian situation.
21. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 28:11-12. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
22. This verse is notoriously difficult because the scenario in verses 23-25 seems to reverse the logic. If tongues are for unbelievers, why do unbelievers react negatively to tongues (v. 23)? The resolution may be that tongues are a negative sign (of judgment, as in the Isaiah passage) for unbelievers, while prophecy positively builds up believers.
23. The verb mainesthe ('you are mad, you are raving') was commonly used for the frenzied ecstasies of pagan worship. Paul warns that a worship service dominated by unintelligible tongues will look indistinguishable from pagan mania to visitors. The early church gathered in homes open to passersby, making this a real concern.
24. The verbs elenchetai ('is convicted, exposed') and anakrinetai ('is examined, investigated') describe prophetic speech penetrating to the conscience. Prophecy functions as a spiritual mirror, revealing what the visitor did not know about himself.
25. The phrase 'God is truly among you' (Ontos ho theos en hymin estin) echoes Isaiah 45:14 and Zechariah 8:23, where Gentiles recognize God's presence among Israel. The entire sequence — conviction, exposure, prostration, worship, confession — describes a conversion event triggered by intelligible prophetic speech.
25. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 45:14 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
25. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Zechariah 8:23 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
26. This verse provides a rare window into early Christian worship: it was participatory, with multiple members contributing different elements. The diversity of contributions — psalm, teaching, revelation, tongue, interpretation — suggests a dynamic, Spirit-led gathering. The governing principle is oikodome ('building up'): every contribution must serve the community.
27. Paul imposes three regulations on tongues: (1) a maximum of three speakers per gathering, (2) they must speak sequentially (ana meros, 'in turn'), not simultaneously, and (3) interpretation is mandatory. These rules balance freedom with order.
28. Without an interpreter, the tongue-speaker must be silent in the assembly — but may continue praying privately. The phrase heauto laleitō kai tō theō ('let him speak to himself and to God') dignifies private tongue-prayer while limiting its public exercise.
29. Prophecy is also regulated: two or three per gathering, with communal evaluation (diakrinetōsan, 'let them discern, judge, evaluate'). The 'others' who evaluate may be other prophets or the congregation as a whole. This prevents any individual from claiming unquestionable prophetic authority.
30. The prophetic gift is not an uncontrollable ecstatic seizure — the first prophet can and must yield to another. This implies that prophetic speech is under the speaker's control, a point Paul will make explicitly in verse 32.
31. The 'one by one' (kath' hena) reinforces orderly sequence. The dual purpose — learning and encouragement — restates the communal focus. The word 'all' (pantes) appears three times, emphasizing the universal scope of both participation and benefit.
32. This principle is foundational: the prophetic spirit does not overpower the prophet's will. Unlike pagan ecstasy, where the deity supposedly seized control of the human vessel, Christian prophecy operates within the prophet's conscious self-control. This makes the regulations of verses 27-31 enforceable.
33. The theological grounding of worship order: God's own character is peace (eirene), not confusion (akatastasia, 'instability, disorder, tumult'). The phrase 'as in all the churches of the saints' may begin the next sentence (connecting to vv. 34-35) or conclude this one. The SBLGNT punctuation connects it forward.
34. This passage is among the most debated in Paul's letters. It appears to contradict 11:5, where women pray and prophesy in the assembly. Major proposals: (1) the silence concerns only the evaluation of prophecy (v. 29), not all speech; (2) Paul is quoting a Corinthian position he will then refute in v. 36; (3) the verses are a later scribal interpolation (some manuscripts place them after v. 40). We render the SBLGNT text without resolving the tension, noting that Paul's own practice included women co-workers who prophesied and taught.
35. The word aischron ('shameful, disgraceful') is strong. If this represents Paul's own view, it must be reconciled with his practice of partnering with women like Priscilla, Phoebe, and Junia in ministry. If it is a Corinthian quotation, verse 36 becomes the rebuttal. The instruction 'ask their own husbands at home' may address a specific disruption pattern in Corinth rather than establishing a universal rule.

36. Paul's rhetorical questions deflate any claim to exclusive authority. If vv. 34-35 are a Corinthian quotation, this verse is Paul's sharp rebuttal: 'You did not invent the gospel, and you are not its sole recipients.' The questions challenge Corinthian arrogance regardless of how one reads the preceding verses.
37. Paul asserts apostolic authority as a test of prophetic genuineness: a true prophet will recognize Paul's instructions as carrying the Lord's authority. The singular 'command' (entole) rather than plural suggests Paul has a specific regulation in mind — likely the worship order guidelines of the entire chapter.
38. The wordplay on agnoei ('does not know/recognize') and agnoeitai ('is not known/recognized') is untranslatable in its full force. Some manuscripts read agnoeito ('let him be ignorant'), a dismissive imperative. The SBLGNT's passive agnoeitai is more pointed: the person who refuses to acknowledge Paul's apostolic authority forfeits recognition in the community.
39. Paul's conclusion maintains the balance he has struck throughout: prophecy is preferred but tongues are not prohibited. The imperative zelōte ('earnestly desire') for prophecy is positive; the prohibition me kōluete ('do not forbid') for tongues is protective. Both gifts have their place when properly ordered.
40. The final summary: euschemonos ('properly, with good form, decently') and kata taxin ('according to arrangement, in order'). The word taxis was used for military formation and civic procedure — worship should reflect the ordered character of the God who is worshiped (v. 33). This verse has become a foundational text for all subsequent Christian reflection on liturgical order.

Summary: 1 Corinthians 15 is Paul's most extensive treatment of resurrection. He begins by reciting the earliest Christian creed (vv. 3-8), grounding the resurrection in eyewitness testimony. He then argues that denying the future resurrection of believers logically entails denying Christ's resurrection, which would unravel the entire gospel (vv. 12-19). The chapter traces the cosmic scope of resurrection: Christ as firstfruits, then believers at his coming, culminating in the defeat of death itself and the Son's handing over the kingdom to the Father (vv. 20-28). Paul addresses the nature of the resurrection body — not a resuscitated corpse but a transformed, imperishable body suited for the age to come (vv. 35-49). The chapter climaxes with the mystery of final transformation and a triumphant declaration that death has been swallowed up in victory (vv. 50-57).

What Makes This Remarkable: Verses 3-7 constitute the earliest surviving Christian creed, likely formulated within five years of the crucifixion. The appearance list includes over five hundred witnesses, most of whom Paul says are still alive and could be consulted. The Adam-Christ typology (vv. 21-22, 45-49) establishes a framework that Paul develops further in Romans 5. The phrase 'if Christ has not been raised, your faith is futile' (v. 17) is the most direct statement in Scripture that Christianity stands or falls with the bodily resurrection. The 'mystery' of verse 51 — that not all will die but all will be changed — introduces an eschatological surprise not found in prior Jewish expectation.

Translation Friction: The phrase 'baptized on behalf of the dead' (v. 29) remains one of the most obscure statements in Paul's letters; over forty interpretations have been proposed. We render the Greek literally and note the difficulty. The meaning of 'he handed over the kingdom' (v. 24) and the Son's subjection to the Father (v. 28) raises complex Trinitarian questions we do not attempt to resolve. The 'spiritual body' (soma pneumatikon) of verse 44 is frequently misunderstood as 'immaterial body,' but Paul means a body animated and governed by the Spirit.

Connections: The creed of vv. 3-5 connects to the Gospel passion and resurrection narratives. The Adam-Christ typology links to Genesis 2-3 and Romans 5:12-21. The 'firstfruits' language echoes Leviticus 23:10-11. The defeat of death draws on Isaiah 25:8 and Hosea 13:14. The transformation imagery anticipates Philippians 3:20-21 and 2 Corinthians 5:1-5.

¹Now I make known to you, brothers and sisters, the gospel that I proclaimed to you, which you also received, in which you also stand, ²Indeed, by which also you are saved, if you keep in memory what I preached to you, unless you have believed in vain. ³For I delivered to you as of first importance what I also received: that Christ died for our sins in accordance with the Scriptures, ⁴That he was buried, and that he rose again the third day in keeping with to the scriptures:. ⁵He appeared to Peter, and then to the twelve apostles. ⁶Then he appeared to more than five hundred brothers and sisters at one time, most of whom are still alive, though some have fallen asleep. ⁷Then he appeared to James, then to all the apostles. ⁸Last of all, as to one untimely born, he appeared also to me. ⁹Because I persecuted the church of God, for I am the least of the apostles, that am not meet to be called an apostle. ¹⁰But by the grace of God I am what I am, and his grace toward me was not in vain. On the contrary, I worked harder than all of them — yet not I, but the grace of God that was with me. ¹¹Whether then it was I or they, so we proclaim and so you believed. ¹²Now if Christ is proclaimed as raised from the dead, how can some of you say that there is no resurrection of the dead? ¹³But if there is no resurrection of the dead, then not even Christ has been raised. ¹⁴And if Christ has not been raised, then our proclamation is empty and your faith is empty. ¹⁵We are even found to be false witnesses about God, because we testified about God that he raised Christ — whom he did not raise if in fact the dead are not raised. ¹⁶For if the dead are not raised, not even Christ has been raised. ¹⁷And if Christ has not been raised, your faith is futile and you are still in your sins. ¹⁸Then those also who have fallen asleep in Christ have perished. ¹⁹If in this life only we have hoped in Christ, we are of all people most to be pitied. ²⁰But in fact Christ has been raised from the dead, the firstfruits of those who have fallen asleep. ²¹For since death came through a man, the resurrection of the dead also comes through a man. ²²For just as in Adam all die, so also in Christ all will be made alive. ²³But each in his own order: Christ the firstfruits, then at his coming those who belong to Christ. ²⁴Then comes the end, when he delivers the kingdom to God the Father after he has destroyed every ruler and every authority and power. ²⁵For he must reign until he has put all his enemies under his feet. ²⁶The last enemy to be destroyed is death. ²⁷For "God has put all things in subjection under his feet." But when it says "all things are put in subjection," it is clear that the one who subjected all things to him is excepted. ²⁸When all things are subjected to him, then the Son himself will also be subjected to the one who subjected all things to him, so that God may be all in all. ²⁹Otherwise, what will those do who are baptized on behalf of the dead? If the dead are not raised at all, why are people baptized on behalf of them? ³⁰Why are we in danger every hour? ³¹I die every day! I swear it by my boasting in you, brothers and sisters, which I have in Christ Jesus our Lord. ³²If merely from a human perspective I fought with wild beasts at Ephesus, what does it profit me? If the dead are not raised, "Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die." ³³Do not be deceived: "Bad company corrupts good character." ³⁴Come to your senses as you should and stop sinning, for some have no knowledge of God. I say this to your shame. ³⁵But someone will ask, "How are the dead raised? With what kind of body do they come?" ³⁶Foolish one! What you sow does not come to life unless it dies. ³⁷And what you sow — you do not sow the body that will be, but a bare seed, perhaps of wheat or of some other grain. ³⁸But God gives it a body as he has chosen, and to each kind of seed its own body. ³⁹Not all flesh is the same flesh; rather, there is one kind for humans, another for animals, another for birds, and another for fish. ⁴⁰There are heavenly bodies and earthly bodies, but the glory of the heavenly is of one kind, and the glory of the earthly is of another kind. ⁴¹There is one glory of the sun, another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars; for star differs from star in glory. ⁴²So also is the resurrection of the dead. What is sown is perishable; what is raised is imperishable. ⁴³It is sown in dishonour. It is raised in glory — it is sown in weakness. It is raised in authority. ⁴⁴It is sown a natural body. It is raised a spiritual body. And there is a spiritual body, and there is a natural body. ⁴⁵So also it is written, "The first man Adam became a living being"; the last Adam became a life-giving spirit. ⁴⁶But the spiritual does not come first; rather, the natural comes first, then the spiritual. ⁴⁷The first man was from the earth, made of dust; the second man is from heaven. ⁴⁸As was the man of dust, so also are those who are of the dust, and as is the man of heaven, so also are those who are of heaven. ⁴⁹And just as we have borne the image of the man of dust, we will also bear the image of the man of heaven. ⁵⁰Now I say this, brothers and sisters: flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, nor does the perishable inherit the imperishable. ⁵¹Listen, I tell you a mystery: we will not all fall asleep, but we will all be changed, ⁵²Indeed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trumpet — for the trumpet will sound, and the dead will be raised incorruptible, and we will be changed. ⁵³For this perishable body must put on imperishability, and this mortal body must put on immortality. ⁵⁴When this perishable body puts on imperishability and this mortal body puts on immortality, then the saying that is written will come true: "Death has been swallowed up in victory." ⁵⁵"Where, O death, is your victory? Where, O death, is your sting?" ⁵⁶The sting of death is sin, and the power of sin is the law. ⁵⁷But thanks be to God, which gives us the victory by way of our Lord Jesus Christ. ⁵⁸Therefore, my beloved brothers and sisters, be steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, knowing that your labor in the Lord is not in vain.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Paul reintroduces the gospel he originally preached to Corinth. The three verbs trace the gospel's trajectory: proclaimed (euangelisamen), received (parelabete), and now stand firm in (hestekate). The perfect tense of hestekate indicates a settled, ongoing stance.
2. The present tense sozesthe ('you are being saved') presents salvation as an ongoing process, not merely a past event. The conditional 'if you hold fast' (ei katechete) introduces a note of warning that prepares for the chapter's argument against resurrection deniers.
3. The transmission language (paredoka/parelabon) matches 11:23 — Paul is passing on authoritative tradition, not inventing doctrine. The phrase en protois ('among the first things, as of first importance') indicates priority of content, not merely chronology. The creed that follows (vv. 3b-5) is widely recognized as pre-Pauline, likely dating to the early 30s AD.
4. Four clauses form the creed: died, buried, raised, appeared. The burial confirms the reality of death; the appearances confirm the reality of resurrection. The perfect tense egegetai ('has been raised') indicates a past event with continuing effects — Christ was raised and remains risen. 'According to the Scriptures' likely refers to Hosea 6:2 and/or Jonah 1:17 (cf. Matthew 12:40), though no single Old Testament text explicitly predicts a third-day resurrection.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Hosea 6:2. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Jonah 1:17. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. The verb ophthe ('appeared, was seen') is a divine appearance term in the Septuagint (cf. Genesis 12:7, Exodus 3:2). Cephas is the Aramaic name for Peter — Paul uses the Aramaic form, suggesting this creed originated in the Aramaic-speaking Jerusalem church. 'The Twelve' functions as a title for the apostolic group even after Judas's departure.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 12:7 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 3:2 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. Paul's note that most of the five hundred are still alive functions as an implicit challenge: these witnesses can be consulted. This is the earliest form of historical evidence appeal in Christian literature. The appearance to five hundred simultaneously is not recorded in the Gospels.
7. This James is almost certainly James the brother of Jesus (cf. Galatians 1:19), who became the leader of the Jerusalem church. He was apparently not a follower during Jesus's ministry (cf. John 7:5), making the resurrection appearance a conversion experience. 'All the apostles' appears to be a broader group than 'the Twelve' of verse 5.
8. The word ektroma ('miscarriage, abortion, untimely birth') is shockingly self-deprecating. Paul sees his apostleship as abnormal — born violently and prematurely through the Damascus road encounter rather than through the normal process of following the earthly Jesus. The phrase 'last of all' (eschaton panton) may indicate Paul believes his was the final resurrection appearance.
9. Paul's self-assessment is not false humility — he genuinely regards his persecution of the church as disqualifying. The phrase ten ekklesian tou theou ('the church of God') uses the most elevated designation for the community, heightening the gravity of his offense.
10. The phrase chariti theou eimi ho eimi ('by the grace of God I am what I am') is one of Paul's most concentrated theological statements. The self-correction 'not I, but the grace of God' prevents boasting while still claiming the reality of his labor. Grace does not eliminate human effort but transforms and empowers it.
11. Paul closes the credal section by emphasizing apostolic unity: regardless of which apostle preached, the message was the same — Christ died, was buried, was raised. This common proclamation is the foundation for the argument that follows.
12. Paul reveals the problem: some Corinthians deny the resurrection of the dead. They likely accepted Christ's resurrection as a unique divine act but denied that ordinary believers would be bodily raised. This may reflect Greek philosophical contempt for the body (cf. Acts 17:32). Paul will show that the two resurrections stand or fall together.
13. The logic is tight: if resurrection is categorically impossible, then Christ's resurrection is also impossible. Paul refuses to make Christ's resurrection an exception to a general rule — it is instead the first instance of a general resurrection.
14. The word kenon ('empty, hollow, without content') is devastating: without resurrection, the entire Christian message collapses into an empty shell. Both the apostolic proclamation and the Corinthian response to it become meaningless.
15. The phrase pseudomartyres tou theou ('false witnesses of God') is a serious charge — the apostles would not merely be mistaken but guilty of bearing false testimony about God's actions. The preposition kata ('against') suggests testifying against God by attributing to him an act he did not perform.
16. Paul restates the premise of verse 13 for emphasis before drawing the most devastating consequence in verse 17.
17. The word mataia ('futile, useless, pointless') is stronger than kenon in verse 14 — not merely empty but worthless. The consequence 'still in your sins' means that without resurrection, Christ's death accomplished nothing. Atonement and resurrection are inseparable in Paul's theology.
18. The word apolonto ('have perished, are destroyed') stands in brutal contrast to 'fallen asleep in Christ.' If there is no resurrection, the euphemism of sleep is a cruel lie — the dead are simply gone.

19. The superlative eleenoteroi ('most pitiable, most to be pitied') is the climax of the reductio ad absurdum. Christians who have suffered persecution, social ostracism, and material loss for a false hope would be the most deluded people on earth. Paul's argument assumes that following Christ involves real worldly cost.
20. The emphatic nyni de ('but now, but in fact') signals the dramatic reversal from the hypothetical despair of vv. 12-19 to the triumphant reality. The word aparche ('firstfruits') is a Levitical term (Leviticus 23:10) — the first sheaf of the harvest, offered to God as a guarantee that the full harvest will follow. Christ's resurrection guarantees the resurrection of all who belong to him.
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Leviticus 23:10 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
21. The Adam-Christ typology is introduced: the same channel through which death entered (a human being) is the channel through which resurrection comes. The parallelism demands a real, bodily human — not an angel or divine being acting apart from humanity.
22. The two 'all' (pantes) statements are symmetrical but not necessarily identical in scope. 'In Adam all die' is universal — physical death touches every human. Whether 'in Christ all will be made alive' is equally universal (all humanity) or limited to 'all who are in Christ' is debated. The context of verses 23-24 suggests the latter, as Paul specifies 'those who belong to Christ.'
23. The word tagma ('order, rank, division') is a military term for a unit in formation. The resurrection occurs in stages, not all at once: Christ first, then believers at the parousia ('coming, arrival, presence'). The parousia is the expected return of Christ.
24. The 'end' (to telos) is the consummation of all things. Christ's mediatorial reign ends when all hostile powers are defeated and the kingdom is handed over to the Father. The three terms — arche, exousia, dynamis ('ruler, authority, power') — encompass all forms of opposition to God, whether spiritual or political.
25. Paul alludes to Psalm 110:1, the most frequently quoted Old Testament text in the New Testament. The divine necessity (dei, 'it is necessary, he must') indicates this is God's predetermined plan. The reign is not yet complete — enemies remain — but the outcome is certain.
25. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalm 110:1 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
26. Death is personified as an enemy — the final enemy. The passive katargeitai ('is being destroyed, is abolished') may be a prophetic present, treating the future event as already underway because Christ's resurrection has already begun death's defeat. Death is not merely an unfortunate reality but a hostile power that will be defeated.
27. Paul quotes Psalm 8:6 and adds a logical clarification: when the psalm says 'all things,' the Father who does the subjecting is obviously not included. This prevents the absurd conclusion that the Father is subject to the Son.
27. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalms 8:6. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
28. The Son's voluntary subjection to the Father is the final cosmic act. The phrase 'God may be all in all' (ho theos ta panta en pasin) envisions a reality where God's presence and authority are fully realized in every dimension of existence. This is the telos of the entire biblical narrative — God's unmediated presence filling all things.
29. This is one of the most obscure verses in the Pauline corpus. The phrase baptizomenoi hyper ton nekron ('being baptized on behalf of the dead') has generated over forty scholarly interpretations. The most straightforward reading is that some Corinthians practiced vicarious baptism for deceased persons — Paul neither endorses nor condemns the practice but uses it as an argument: their own behavior presupposes resurrection. We render the Greek literally without resolving the interpretive question.
30. Paul shifts from the Corinthians' practice (v. 29) to his own experience. If there is no resurrection, the constant danger of apostolic ministry is pointless. The phrase pasan horan ('every hour') emphasizes the unrelenting nature of the risk.
31. The oath formula ne ('I swear by') is rare in Paul and indicates the intensity of his claim. 'I die every day' (kath' hemeran apothnesko) describes the constant mortal danger of his apostolic work. Paul's daily dying is meaningless without the hope of resurrection.
32. Whether Paul literally fought animals in the Ephesian arena or speaks metaphorically of fierce human opposition is debated. The quotation 'Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die' comes from Isaiah 22:13, where it describes fatalistic hedonism in the face of judgment. Without resurrection, this becomes the only rational philosophy.
32. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 22:13. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
33. Paul quotes a line attributed to the Greek poet Menander (Thais, fragment 218). The Greek ethē chresta ('good character/morals') and homiliai kakai ('bad company/associations') form a proverbial warning. Paul's use of a pagan poet to make a moral point parallels his quotation of Aratus in Acts 17:28.
34. The verb eknepsate ('sober up, come to your senses') suggests the Corinthians have been drunk on their own theological confusion. The phrase agnosian theou ('ignorance of God') is a stinging rebuke — despite their intellectual pride, some Corinthians lack basic knowledge of God's character and purposes.

35. Paul now addresses the 'how' question. The objection assumes that resurrection means resuscitation of the same physical body — an idea many found absurd. Paul will show that the resurrection body is real but transformed.
36. The sharp address aphron ('fool, senseless one') echoes Jesus's parable of the rich fool (Luke 12:20). The seed analogy answers the 'how' question: just as a seed must die to produce a plant, the mortal body must die to produce the resurrection body. Continuity and transformation coexist.
37. The point is crucial: the seed and the plant are continuous (it is the same organism) but radically different in form. No one mistakes a wheat kernel for a stalk of wheat. Likewise, the resurrection body will be continuous with but transformed from the present body.
38. The resurrection body is God's gift and God's design — not a natural process but a divine creative act. The phrase 'as he has chosen' (kathos ethelesen) emphasizes divine sovereignty over the form of the resurrection body.
39. Paul expands the analogy: God already creates diverse kinds of bodies in the natural world. The diversity of earthly bodies demonstrates God's creative capacity to produce bodies suited for different environments — including the environment of the age to come.
40. The word doxa ('glory, radiance, splendor') refers to the visible splendor appropriate to each type of body. Heavenly bodies (sun, moon, stars) have a different kind of glory than earthly bodies — both are real, but they differ in mode of existence and splendor.
41. Even within the category of heavenly bodies, diversity of glory exists. The point is cumulative: God's creation already displays an enormous range of bodily forms and degrees of glory. The resurrection body will be yet another form — different from anything now known but no less real.
42. Paul now applies the analogies. Four contrasts follow (vv. 42-44), each using the sown/raised pattern. The first: phthora ('decay, perishability') versus aphtharsia ('imperishability, incorruption'). The mortal body decays; the resurrection body cannot.
43. Two more contrasts: dishonor versus glory, weakness versus power. The burial of a corpse is an act involving shame and frailty; the resurrection body possesses divine radiance and supernatural vitality. Each pair moves from the negative experience of death to the positive reality of resurrection.
44. The crucial fourth contrast: soma psychikon ('natural/soul-ish body') versus soma pneumatikon ('spiritual body'). The 'spiritual body' is not immaterial — it is still a soma ('body'). The adjective pneumatikon means 'animated by/oriented to the Spirit,' just as psychikon means 'animated by/oriented to the soul.' The resurrection body is a real, physical body fully governed by the Holy Spirit.
45. Paul quotes Genesis 2:7 for the first Adam and adds his own christological counterpart. The first Adam received life (psyche zosan, 'a living soul/being'); the last Adam gives life (pneuma zoopoion, 'a life-giving spirit'). Christ is not merely alive but the source of resurrection life for all who belong to him.
45. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 2:7 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
46. Paul insists on the sequence: natural before spiritual, Adam before Christ. This may counter a Corinthian belief that they had already attained the spiritual state and had no need of future bodily resurrection.
47. The adjective choikos ('dusty, earthy, made of soil') echoes Genesis 2:7, where God forms Adam from the dust of the ground. The second man — Christ — is 'from heaven' (ex ouranou), indicating his heavenly origin. The SBLGNT omits 'the Lord' after 'second man,' which appears in some manuscripts.
47. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 2:7. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
48. The representative principle: we share the nature of our representative head. Those united to Adam share his dusty, mortal nature; those united to Christ will share his heavenly, imperishable nature.
49. The SBLGNT reads the subjunctive phoresomen ('let us bear'), but many manuscripts read the future phoresomen ('we will bear'). The meaning is similar: just as our present bodies reflect Adam's dust-nature, our resurrection bodies will reflect Christ's heavenly nature. The word eikon ('image') connects to Genesis 1:26-27 — the image of God, marred in Adam, will be fully restored in the resurrection.
49. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 1:26-27. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
50. The phrase 'flesh and blood' (sarx kai haima) refers to the present mortal human condition, not to physicality as such. The resurrection body will be physical but not 'flesh and blood' in this mortal sense. Transformation is necessary — the present body cannot enter the kingdom as-is.
51. The word mysterion ('mystery') in Paul means a truth previously hidden but now revealed by God. The 'mystery' is that not all believers will die before Christ returns — some will be alive at the parousia. But all, whether dead or living, must be transformed. This addresses a question left open by the preceding argument.
52. The Greek atomō ('indivisible instant') is the word from which 'atom' derives — the smallest possible unit of time. The 'last trumpet' (eschatē salpingi) echoes the shofar traditions of Jewish apocalyptic expectation (cf. 1 Thessalonians 4:16, Matthew 24:31). The transformation is instantaneous and universal.
53. The clothing metaphor (endysasthai, 'to put on, to clothe oneself with') suggests that the resurrection is not the discarding of the body but its being clothed with new qualities. The mortal puts on immortality as a garment — transformation, not replacement. The divine necessity (dei, 'must') indicates this is God's determined plan.

54. Paul quotes Isaiah 25:8 ('he will swallow up death forever'), adapting it to read 'Death has been swallowed up in victory' (eis nikos). The prophetic promise will be fulfilled at the moment of resurrection transformation. The passive 'has been swallowed' indicates that death is not merely defeated but consumed — it ceases to exist.
54. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 25:8. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
55. Paul taunts death with a loose quotation of Hosea 13:14. The SBLGNT reads 'death' (thanate) in both lines rather than the KJV's 'grave' (hades) in the second. The word kentron ('sting, goad') evokes a scorpion's or bee's sting — death's weapon. In the resurrection, death is disarmed and mocked.
55. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Hosea 13:14 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
56. Paul inserts a compressed theological explanation: death's weapon is sin (without sin, death would have no power), and sin's power comes through the law (which defines transgression and pronounces the curse). This compressed argument anticipates the fuller treatment in Romans 5-7.
57. The present tense didonti ('who gives, who is giving') presents the victory as an ongoing gift, not merely a future event. The victory over death is secured by Christ's resurrection and appropriated by believers through union with him. The chapter's argument culminates in doxology.
58. The chapter ends not with speculation but with exhortation to faithful action. The adjectives hedraioi ('steadfast, firmly seated') and ametakinetoι ('immovable, not to be shifted') contrast with the instability of those who deny the resurrection. The final word kenos ('empty, vain') echoes verses 10, 14, and 17 — unlike a faithless gospel, labor done 'in the Lord' is never empty.

Summary: First Corinthians 16 transitions from theological instruction to practical matters: the collection for the saints in Jerusalem, Paul's travel plans, commendations of co-workers, and final exhortations. Paul instructs the Corinthians to set aside money on the first day of each week so that no collection will be needed when he arrives. He outlines his intended route through Macedonia and expresses hope for an extended stay in Corinth. The chapter closes with commendations of Timothy, Apollos, and the household of Stephanas, and includes the Aramaic prayer-cry 'Maranatha' — 'Our Lord, come!' — embedded in a Greek letter as a witness to the earliest Aramaic-speaking church's expectation of Christ's return.

What Makes This Remarkable: The Aramaic word 'Maranatha' (v. 22) is one of the most significant linguistic fossils in the New Testament. Its preservation untranslated in a Greek letter to a Greek-speaking church demonstrates that this prayer-cry was so ancient and well-known that it needed no translation. It witnesses to the earliest post-resurrection community's worship of Jesus as Lord (maran) and their expectation of his imminent return. The conditional curse formula in verse 22 ('If anyone does not love the Lord, let him be accursed') followed immediately by 'Maranatha' creates a jarring juxtaposition of judgment and hope that reflects the eschatological tension of early Christian worship.

Translation Friction: The phrase 'anathema' (v. 22) is a strong term meaning 'devoted to destruction' or 'cursed,' borrowed from the Septuagint's rendering of the Hebrew cherem. We render it as 'accursed' to preserve its severity. The 'holy kiss' (v. 20) was a standard early Christian liturgical greeting, not a cultural peculiarity. Paul's note about writing 'with my own hand' (v. 21) indicates that an amanuensis wrote the rest of the letter and Paul added the closing personally as authentication.

Connections: The collection for Jerusalem connects to Paul's broader theology of Gentile-Jewish unity (Romans 15:25-27; 2 Corinthians 8-9). The travel plans anticipate the situation described in 2 Corinthians. The mention of Pentecost (v. 8) provides one of the few chronological anchors in Paul's correspondence. Stephanas is mentioned as the 'firstfruits of Achaia' (v. 15), connecting to the earlier reference in 1:16 where Paul baptized his household.

¹Now concerning the collection for the saints: as I directed the churches of Galatia, so you also are to do. ²On the first day of every week, each of you is to set something aside and save, in keeping with how he has prospered, so that no collections will need to be made when I come. ³And when I arrive, I will send those whom you approve with letters to carry your gift to Jerusalem. ⁴And if it seems worthwhile for me to go as well, they will travel with me. ⁵I will come to you after I pass through Macedonia, for I intend to pass through Macedonia. ⁶And perhaps I will stay with you or even spend the winter, so that you may send me on my way wherever I go. ⁷For I do not want to see you just in passing. I hope to spend some time with you, if the Lord permits. ⁸But I will stay in Ephesus until Pentecost, ⁹For a remarkable door and effectual is opened to me, and there are numerous adversaries. ¹⁰When Timothy comes, see that he has nothing to fear among you, for he is doing the work of the Lord, just as I am. ¹¹So let no one despise him. Send him on his way in peace, so that he may come to me, for I am expecting him with the brothers. ¹²Now concerning our brother Apollos, I strongly urged him to visit you with the brothers, but it was not at all his will to come now. He will come when he has the opportunity. ¹³Be watchful, stand firm in the faith, act with courage, be strong. ¹⁴Let all that you do be done in love. ¹⁵Now I urge you, brothers — you know that the household of Stephanas were the firstfruits of Achaia, and that they have devoted themselves to the service of the saints — ¹⁶That you place yourselves under the guidance of to such, and to every one that helps with us, and labors. ¹⁷I rejoice at the arrival of Stephanas, Fortunatus, and Achaicus, because they have made up for your absence. ¹⁸For they refreshed my spirit and yours. So give recognition to such people. ¹⁹The churches of Asia send you greetings. Aquila and Prisca, together with the church in their house, send you hearty greetings in the Lord. ²⁰All the brothers and sisters greet you. Greet one another with a holy kiss. ²¹This greeting is in my own hand — Paul. ²²If anyone does not love the Lord, let him be accursed. Maranatha! ²³The grace of the Lord Jesus be with you. ²⁴My love be with all of you in Christ Jesus.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The Greek logeia ('collection') is a term from the papyri associated with religious contributions. This collection for the Jerusalem church was a major project spanning several years of Paul's ministry, reflecting his commitment to unity between Gentile and Jewish believers.
2. The phrase kata mian sabbatou ('on the first day of the week') is an early witness to Christian assembly on Sunday rather than the Jewish Sabbath. The verb euodotai ('has prospered') is in the passive, implying God as the source of prosperity — the KJV makes this explicit, though it is only implied in the Greek.
3. The word charin ('gift, grace') is used here for the monetary contribution — Paul consistently elevates the collection by using theological vocabulary for it. The letters of commendation were standard practice for ensuring the integrity of financial transfers in the ancient world.
4. Paul leaves open the possibility that the collection may be large enough to warrant his personal delivery to Jerusalem — a journey that would eventually lead to his arrest (Acts 21).
5. Paul's travel plans here differ from what he later describes in 2 Corinthians 1:15-16, where he had originally planned to visit Corinth first. This change of plans became a point of contention that Paul addresses in the opening chapters of 2 Corinthians.
6. The verb propempsete ('send on my way') implies providing material support and traveling companions for the next leg of a journey — a common early Christian practice of hospitality. Winter travel by sea was considered dangerous and was generally avoided.
7. The conditional 'if the Lord permits' (ean ho kyrios epitrepsee) reflects Paul's characteristic submission of his plans to divine sovereignty, similar to James 4:15.
8. This verse provides a rare chronological anchor: Paul writes from Ephesus before the Jewish feast of Pentecost (Shavuot), placing the letter in the spring. The continued use of the Jewish calendar by Paul, even when writing to Gentile believers, shows the Jewish framework of early Christian life.
9. The metaphor of an 'open door' for ministry opportunity appears also in 2 Corinthians 2:12 and Colossians 4:3. The juxtaposition of great opportunity and many adversaries captures a characteristic Pauline tension — the advance of the gospel generates opposition.
10. The concern that Timothy might face intimidation suggests the Corinthians' contentious spirit could extend to mistreating Paul's delegates. Timothy's mission was mentioned in 4:17. The phrase 'the work of the Lord' (to ergon kyriou) elevates Timothy's ministry to the same level as Paul's own.
11. The verb exouthenēsē ('despise, treat with contempt') is strong language, suggesting a real risk that the Corinthians might dismiss Timothy due to his youth or because he lacked Paul's authority. Compare 1 Timothy 4:12, 'Let no one despise your youth.'
12. This verse is remarkable for what it reveals about the relationship between Paul and Apollos. Despite the factionalism in Corinth ('I follow Paul... I follow Apollos,' 1:12), Paul actively encourages Apollos to visit. The phrase 'it was not at all his will' (pantos ouk en thelema) is ambiguous — it could refer to Apollos's will or God's will. Most interpreters read it as Apollos's personal decision.
13. Four imperatives in rapid succession create a martial rhythm. The verb andrizesthe (literally 'act like men, be courageous') echoes the Septuagint of Joshua 1:6-9 and Psalm 31:24 (LXX 30:25). We render it 'act with courage' to capture the semantic force without the gendered idiom. The KJV's 'quit you like men' is archaic.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Joshua 1:6-9 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalm 31:24 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.

14. This single sentence summarizes the entire practical section of the letter. After the extended discussion of love in chapter 13, Paul returns to agapē as the governing principle for all community life. The placement after the martial imperatives of verse 13 is deliberate — strength and courage must be exercised in love.
15. Stephanas was mentioned in 1:16 as one whom Paul personally baptized. The term aparchē ('firstfruits') means they were the first converts in the province of Achaia (southern Greece). Their self-appointed service (etaxan heautous) to the saints demonstrates voluntary leadership in the early church.
16. The verb hypotassēthe ('submit') here describes voluntary deference to recognized leaders, not hierarchical subordination. The criteria for recognition are service and labor, not office or title — a significant window into early church leadership structures.
17. These three likely carried the Corinthians' letter to Paul (cf. 7:1, 'Now concerning the matters about which you wrote'). The phrase 'made up for your absence' (to hymeteron husterēma aneplērōsan) is diplomatic — their presence compensates for the fact that the whole church could not come.
18. The verb anepausan ('refreshed, gave rest to') suggests that the delegation brought not only the letter but also encouraging news or personal comfort to Paul. The imperative epiginōskete ('recognize, acknowledge') calls the community to honor faithful servants.
19. Paul uses the formal name 'Prisca' rather than the diminutive 'Priscilla' found in Acts. This couple had previously been in Corinth (Acts 18:2) and now hosted a house church in Ephesus. The phrase kat' oikon ekklēsia ('church in their house') is one of the earliest references to the house-church model that characterized Christianity for its first three centuries.
20. The 'holy kiss' (philēmati hagiō) was a liturgical practice in the early church (cf. Romans 16:16; 2 Corinthians 13:12; 1 Thessalonians 5:26). It expressed familial bond and unity within the believing community. The adjective 'holy' distinguishes it from an erotic or merely social greeting.
21. Paul takes the pen from his amanuensis (secretary) to write the closing personally. This practice authenticated the letter as genuinely from Paul (cf. Galatians 6:11; Colossians 4:18; 2 Thessalonians 3:17). The shift to Paul's own handwriting would have been visually obvious to the original recipients.
22. The Greek anathema translates the Hebrew cherem — something devoted to God for destruction (cf. Joshua 6:17-18). The Aramaic marana tha can be divided two ways: maran atha ('our Lord has come') or marana tha ('our Lord, come!'). The latter is more likely given the eschatological context and its parallel in Revelation 22:20. This Aramaic phrase preserved in a Greek letter is a remarkable linguistic fossil, demonstrating that the earliest Aramaic-speaking Christians worshipped Jesus as 'Lord' (maran) — a divine title.
22. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Joshua 6:17-18. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
23. The SBLGNT reads 'the Lord Jesus' without 'Christ,' a shorter reading preferred by the critical text. This grace benediction is Paul's standard letter-closing formula, though its exact wording varies across his letters.
24. This personal declaration of love is unique among Paul's letter closings and is especially striking given the severity of much of this letter. After confronting division, immorality, lawsuits, and doctrinal error, Paul closes not with a final rebuke but with an expression of genuine affection. The SBLGNT omits the 'Amen' found in some manuscripts and in the KJV.

Summary: Second Corinthians opens with Paul's standard greeting from Paul and Timothy to the church at Corinth and all the saints in Achaia. Paul then launches into a deeply personal passage about affliction and comfort, recounting severe suffering he experienced in Asia that brought him to the brink of death. He frames this suffering theologically: God comforts the afflicted so they can comfort others, and the God who raises the dead is the one who delivered Paul and will deliver him again. The chapter closes with Paul defending his change of travel plans, insisting his word is not 'yes and no' but grounded in the faithfulness of God, whose promises in Christ are always 'Yes' and 'Amen.'

What Makes This Remarkable: The theological density of verses 19-22 is extraordinary. In defending himself against the charge of fickleness, Paul articulates a profound theology of divine faithfulness: all God's promises find their 'Yes' in Christ, believers say 'Amen' through him, and God has sealed believers with the Holy Spirit as a guarantee (arrabōn). This Trinitarian passage — involving God the Father, Christ the Son, and the Holy Spirit — emerges not from systematic theology but from Paul's self-defense. The suffering passage (vv. 3-11) introduces the letter's central paradox: weakness and affliction are the means through which God's power and comfort are displayed.

Translation Friction: The exact nature of Paul's affliction in Asia (v. 8) is debated — possibilities include a severe illness, a mob attack (Acts 19:23-41), or imprisonment. We translate the Greek without specifying what Paul himself leaves unspecified. The phrase 'sentence of death' (v. 9, apokrima tou thanatou) is difficult; apokrima may mean 'sentence, verdict, response' and appears only here in the New Testament. The identity of the 'brother' co-author Timothy and his role in the letter's composition is unclear.

Connections: The comfort language (paraklēsis) connects to Jesus's Beatitude ('Blessed are those who mourn, for they will be comforted,' Matthew 5:4) and to the Holy Spirit as Paraclete in John 14-16. Paul's near-death experience in Asia connects to the hardship catalogs later in the letter (4:7-12; 6:4-10; 11:23-33). The 'Yes and Amen' passage connects to Revelation 3:14, where Christ is called 'the Amen.' The arrabōn ('guarantee') of the Spirit appears again in 5:5 and Ephesians 1:14.

¹Paul, an apostle of Christ Jesus by the will of God, and Timothy our brother, to the church of God that is in Corinth, together with all the saints throughout Achaia: ²And from the lord Jesus christ, and grace be to you and peace from God our Father. ³Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies and God of all comfort, ⁴Who comforts us in all our suffering, that we may be able to comfort them that are in any trouble, by the comfort by that we ourselves are receives comfort from God. ⁵For just as the sufferings of Christ overflow to us, so also through Christ our comfort overflows. ⁶If we are afflicted, it is for your comfort and salvation; and if we are comforted, it is for your comfort, which is effective as you patiently endure the same sufferings that we also suffer. ⁷And our hope for you is firm, because we know that as you share in the sufferings, so also you share in the comfort. ⁸For we do not want you to be unaware, brothers, of the affliction we experienced in Asia. We were burdened utterly beyond our strength, so that we despaired even of life itself. ⁹Indeed, we felt that we had received the sentence of death, so that we would not rely on ourselves but on God who raises the dead. ¹⁰He delivered us from such a deadly peril, and he will deliver us. In him we have set our hope that he will deliver us again, ¹¹You also helping together by petition for us, that for the gift bestowed upon us by the means of numerous persons thanks may be given by numerous on our behalf. ¹²For this is our boast: the testimony of our conscience that we conducted ourselves in the world with simplicity and godly sincerity, not by worldly wisdom but by the grace of God — and especially toward you. ¹³For we are not writing anything to you other than what you can read and understand, and I hope you will fully understand, ¹⁴As as well you possess acknowledged us in part, that we are your rejoicing, not even as you as well are ours in the time of the Lord Jesus. ¹⁵And because of this confidence, I wanted to come to you first, so that you might have a second experience of grace, ¹⁶I planned to visit you on my way to Macedonia, then return from Macedonia to you, and have you send me on my way to Judea. ¹⁷Was I being fickle when I intended this? Or do I make my plans according to the flesh, so that with me it is 'Yes, yes' and 'No, no' at the same time? ¹⁸But as God is faithful, our word to you has not been 'Yes' and 'No.' ¹⁹For the Son of God, Jesus Christ, whom we proclaimed among you — Silvanus, Timothy, and I — was not 'Yes' and 'No,' but in him it has always been 'Yes.' ²⁰For all the promises of God find their 'Yes' in him. That is why it is through him that we say our 'Amen' to God for his glory. ²¹And it is God who establishes us with you in Christ, and has anointed us, ²²Who has as well sealed us, and granted the earnest of the Inner life in our hearts. ²³But I call God as witness against my soul, that it was to spare you that I did not come again to Corinth. ²⁴Not that we lord it over your faith, but we work together for your joy, for you stand firm in your faith.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The SBLGNT reads 'Christ Jesus' (Christou Iēsou) rather than the KJV's 'Jesus Christ,' placing the title first. Timothy is named as co-sender but called 'the brother' (ho adelphos), not co-apostle. The address extends beyond Corinth to 'all Achaia' (the Roman province of southern Greece), suggesting a circular intent.
2. Paul's standard greeting fuses the Greek salutation (chairein, modified to charis, 'grace') with the Hebrew shalom ('peace'). The coordination of 'God our Father' and 'the Lord Jesus Christ' as joint source of grace and peace reflects the high Christology operative in Paul's earliest letters.
3. The opening eulogētos ('blessed') echoes the Jewish berakah (blessing formula) found in Psalms (e.g., Psalm 41:13; 72:18). The twin titles 'Father of mercies' (patēr tōn oiktirmōn) and 'God of all comfort' (theos pasēs paraklēseōs) establish the theological framework for the entire chapter. The noun paraklēsis and its cognates appear ten times in verses 3-7.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalm 41:13 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The cascade of paraklēsis vocabulary in this verse creates a deliberate rhetorical effect: comfort received becomes comfort given. The Greek thlipsis ('affliction, tribulation, pressure') carries the literal sense of being crushed or pressed, which Paul will develop through the letter (4:8, 'afflicted in every way but not crushed').
5. The verb perisseuei ('overflows, abounds') creates a proportional equation: suffering and comfort are both measured in terms of overflow. 'The sufferings of Christ' (ta pathēmata tou Christou) likely means sufferings endured for Christ's sake or in union with Christ, not a participation in Christ's atoning suffering.
6. Paul's suffering is not private but vicarious — it serves the Corinthians' comfort and salvation. The participle energoumenēs ('being made effective, working') suggests that comfort produces endurance as an active, dynamic process, not merely passive consolation.
7. The word koinōnoi ('partners, sharers') implies active participation, not mere sympathy. Paul's confidence (elpis bebaia, 'firm hope') rests on the theological principle that participation in suffering guarantees participation in comfort — a pattern that mirrors the death-and-resurrection logic of the gospel.

8. The phrase kath' hyperbolēn hyper dynamin ('utterly beyond our strength') piles prepositions to convey extremity. The verb exaporēthēnai ('to be utterly at a loss, to despair') is an intensified form found only in Paul. The exact nature of this affliction in the Roman province of Asia remains debated — possibilities include the Ephesian riot (Acts 19), an illness, or imprisonment.
9. The word apokrima ('sentence, verdict, response') appears only here in the New Testament. Paul interprets his brush with death teleologically — its purpose (hina, 'so that') was to redirect his trust from himself to God. The title 'God who raises the dead' (tō theō tō egeironti tous nekrous) echoes the second benediction of the Jewish Amidah prayer, connecting Paul's personal deliverance to the God of resurrection.
10. The threefold repetition of rhysetai ('he will deliver') creates a past-present-future framework of divine rescue: God delivered, delivers, and will deliver. This triple temporal structure mirrors Paul's understanding of salvation as already-accomplished, presently-experienced, and not-yet-completed.
11. The compound verb synpourgoyntōn ('joining together in helping') emphasizes communal participation in prayer. Paul envisions a theological circuit: many pray, God grants favor (charisma), and many give thanks — creating a chain of intercession and gratitude.
12. The word kauchēsis ('boast') is a key term in 2 Corinthians, appearing frequently as Paul defends his ministry. The SBLGNT reads haplotēti ('simplicity, sincerity') rather than the variant hagiotēti ('holiness'). The contrast between 'worldly wisdom' (sophia sarkikē) and 'the grace of God' echoes the argument of 1 Corinthians 1-2.
13. There is a wordplay between anaginōskete ('read') and epiginōskete ('understand, recognize') that cannot be fully captured in English. Paul is responding to accusations of hidden agendas or double-meaning in his letters. His correspondence says exactly what it means.
14. The phrase apo merous ('in part, partially') is a candid admission that the Corinthians' understanding of Paul is incomplete. 'The day of the Lord Jesus' refers to the eschatological judgment when all relationships and ministries will be evaluated. Mutual boasting at the final judgment is a remarkable expression of apostolic confidence.
15. The word charin ('grace, benefit, gift') here refers to the blessing of an apostolic visit. Paul's original plan was to visit Corinth twice — once on the way to Macedonia and once on the return. This plan changed, prompting the accusations of fickleness that Paul addresses in the following verses.
16. This double-visit plan differs from the single visit described in 1 Corinthians 16:5-7, where Paul planned to come only after passing through Macedonia. The verb propemphthēnai ('to be sent on one's way') implies material provision and accompaniment for travel.
17. Paul quotes his critics' accusation: that his changed plans reveal unreliability (elaphria, 'lightness, fickleness'). The phrase 'according to the flesh' (kata sarka) means making decisions by merely human calculation rather than divine guidance. The rhetorical questions expect negative answers.
18. Paul grounds the reliability of his word in the faithfulness of God (pistos ho theos). This is not merely an oath formula but a theological claim: Paul's integrity as an apostle derives from the God who sent him. The shift from defending travel plans to affirming divine faithfulness is characteristic of Paul's theological method.
19. Silvanus (the Latinized form of Silas) was Paul's companion on the founding mission to Corinth (Acts 18:5). The argument moves from Paul's personal reliability to Christ's cosmic reliability: if the message proclaimed is consistently 'Yes,' the messenger cannot be 'Yes and No.' Christ himself is the guarantee of Paul's truthfulness.
20. This verse is one of the most theologically compressed statements in the Pauline corpus. Every divine promise (epangelia) reaches its fulfillment ('Yes') in Christ. The Hebrew 'Amen' ('so be it, it is certain') is the believer's response to God's 'Yes' in Christ. The liturgical setting is evident: the congregation says 'Amen' through Christ, and this corporate response glorifies God.
21. There is a wordplay between Christon ('Christ, Anointed One') and chrisas ('having anointed'). God establishes believers 'into Christ' and 'anoints' them — believers participate in the anointing that defines Christ himself. This verse begins a Trinitarian sequence: God (the Father) anoints, seals, and gives the Spirit.
22. The word arrabōn ('guarantee, down payment, pledge') is a commercial term borrowed from Semitic languages (Hebrew 'eravon'), referring to a first installment that guarantees full payment to come. The Holy Spirit is God's down payment on the believer's full inheritance. The sealing (sphragisamenos) metaphor draws from the ancient practice of stamping a seal on property to mark ownership.
23. Paul now reveals the real reason for his changed plans: he wanted to spare the Corinthians a painful confrontation. The oath formula 'I call God as witness against my soul' is the most solemn form of self-imprecation available — Paul invokes divine judgment on himself if he is lying. The verb pheidomenos ('sparing') reveals pastoral concern behind what appeared to be fickleness.
24. Paul immediately qualifies his authority: sparing them was not an act of domination (kyrieuomen, 'lord it over') but of partnership (synergoi, 'co-workers, fellow laborers'). The final clause — 'for you stand firm in your faith' — affirms the Corinthians' spiritual maturity even as Paul exercises apostolic care. This balance between authority and partnership runs throughout 2 Corinthians.

Summary: Paul continues explaining his delayed visit: he chose not to come in sorrow but wrote a painful letter instead, so that when he finally arrived, his joy would not be replaced by grief. He urges the Corinthians to forgive and restore the offender who had been disciplined by the majority, lest Satan exploit the situation through excessive punishment. Paul then recounts his journey to Troas, where an open door for the gospel awaited him, but his anxiety over Titus's absence drove him onward to Macedonia. The chapter closes with a magnificent metaphor: God leads believers in a triumphal procession, and through them spreads the fragrance of the knowledge of Christ everywhere — a fragrance of life to those being saved and of death to those perishing.

What Makes This Remarkable: The triumphal procession imagery (vv. 14-16) draws from the Roman triumphus, in which a conquering general paraded through the streets with incense burning, captives in chains, and soldiers celebrating. Paul casts himself not as the general but as one led in the procession — a captive of Christ. The incense in a Roman triumph signaled life to the victors and death to the condemned captives. Paul applies this dual significance to the gospel itself: the same message that saves some condemns others. The closing rhetorical question, 'Who is sufficient for these things?' introduces the theme of apostolic sufficiency that dominates chapters 3-6.

Translation Friction: The identity of the offender (v. 5) is much debated. Earlier interpreters identified him with the incestuous man of 1 Corinthians 5, but most modern scholars believe this is a different individual who personally wronged Paul, perhaps during an unrecorded 'painful visit.' The 'letter of tears' (v. 4) is likely a lost letter, distinct from 1 Corinthians. We translate the text without imposing either identification.

Connections: The forgiveness passage connects to Jesus's teaching on forgiveness (Matthew 18:21-35) and Paul's instruction in 1 Corinthians 5. The triumphal procession imagery connects to Colossians 2:15. The 'open door' in Troas echoes 1 Corinthians 16:9. The fragrance metaphor draws on Old Testament incense offerings (Exodus 30:34-38) and anticipates the 'aroma of Christ' language in Ephesians 5:2.

¹For I made up my mind not to come to you again in sorrow. ²For if I cause you pain, who is there to make me glad but the one whom I have pained? ³And I wrote as I did so that when I came I would not be pained by those who should have made me rejoice, for I am confident about all of you that my joy is the joy of you all. ⁴For I wrote to you out of great affliction and anguish of heart, with many tears — not to cause you pain, but so that you might know the overflowing love I have for you. ⁵Now if anyone has caused pain, he has caused it not to me but in some measure — not to exaggerate — to all of you. ⁶For such a person, this punishment by the majority is sufficient, ⁷so that contrariwise you anything rather to pardon him, and comfort him, lest perhaps such a one should be swallowed up with overmuch sorrow. ⁸So I urge you to reaffirm your love for him. ⁹For this is why I wrote: to test you and to know whether you are obedient in everything. ¹⁰Anyone whom you forgive, I also forgive. Indeed, what I have forgiven — if there was anything to forgive — I have forgiven in the presence of Christ for your sake, ¹¹Indeed, lest Satan should get an advantage of us — since we are not ignorant of his devices. ¹²When I came to Troas to proclaim the gospel of Christ, even though a door was opened for me in the Lord, ¹³I had no rest in my spirit, because I discovered not Titus my brother — but taking my leave of them, I traveled from thence into Macedonia. ¹⁴But thanks be to God, who always leads us in triumphal procession in Christ and through us spreads the fragrance of the knowledge of him in every place. ¹⁵For we are the aroma of Christ to God among those who are being saved and among those who are perishing — ¹⁶To the one we are the savour of execution to execution. And to the other the savour of life to life. And who is sufficient for these things? ¹⁷For we are not, like so many, peddlers of the word of God, but as persons of sincerity, as commissioned by God, in the sight of God, we speak in Christ.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The word palin ('again') implies a previous sorrowful visit — this is the so-called 'painful visit' that is not recorded in Acts but is implied throughout 2 Corinthians. Paul's decision was deliberate (ekrina emautō, 'I judged for myself') rather than circumstantial.

2. Paul's reasoning reveals the depth of his emotional bond with the Corinthians: if he grieves them, he grieves his own source of joy. The logic is circular by design — the mutual dependence between apostle and community is the point.
3. The 'letter' Paul refers to is probably the so-called 'severe letter' or 'letter of tears' mentioned in verse 4, not 1 Corinthians itself. Paul's confidence (pepoithōs) that his joy and theirs are identical reveals his assumption of deep spiritual solidarity between apostle and church.
4. This verse gives the emotional background of the lost 'severe letter.' The phrase synochēs kardias ('anguish of heart') pairs psychological distress with the tears to emphasize that the letter was written in love, not anger. Paul's pastoral method combines confrontation with deep affection.
5. Paul deflects the personal offense away from himself and onto the community: the offender has grieved the whole church, not merely Paul. The phrase apo merous ('in part, to some degree') and hina mē epibarō ('so as not to overstate it') show Paul's reluctance to exaggerate the harm.
6. The word epitimia ('punishment, censure') appears only here in the New Testament. The phrase hypo tōn pleionōn ('by the majority') indicates that the disciplinary action was decided by a congregational vote, not unanimously — some may have dissented. Paul considers the punishment adequate and now calls for its end.
7. The verb charisasthai ('to forgive, to show grace') is related to charis ('grace'). The metaphor katapothē ('be swallowed up, overwhelmed') suggests that excessive punishment can destroy the person it was meant to correct. Paul's concern shifts from justice to pastoral care.
8. The verb kyrōsai ('to ratify, confirm, make legally valid') is a legal term — Paul asks the community to formally reinstate the offender through a public act of love, just as they had formally enacted the discipline.
9. The word dokimēn ('tested character, proof') implies that the entire episode — the offense, the letter, the discipline — served as a test of the Corinthians' willingness to follow apostolic guidance. Paul now reveals that their obedience, not just the punishment of the offender, was the goal.
10. The phrase en prosōpō Christou ('in the presence of Christ' or 'in the person of Christ') is striking — Paul's act of forgiveness is performed before Christ as witness, or as Christ's representative. The tentative 'if there was anything to forgive' downplays the personal offense to focus on the community's healing.
11. The verb pleonektēthōmen ('be taken advantage of, be outwitted, be defrauded') suggests that both excessive leniency and excessive severity can serve Satan's purposes. The noēmata ('schemes, designs, thoughts') of Satan include exploiting unforgiveness to divide the community. Paul identifies unresolved church conflict as a strategic opportunity for the adversary.
12. Troas (Alexandria Troas) was a major port city in northwest Asia Minor. The 'open door' metaphor for ministry opportunity echoes 1 Corinthians 16:9. The concessive force — 'even though a door was opened' — makes Paul's departure all the more striking: he left an open door because of his anxiety about Corinth.
13. Paul's anxiety about Titus — whom he had sent to Corinth with the severe letter — was so great that it overrode the missionary opportunity in Troas. This raw emotional disclosure is characteristic of 2 Corinthians. The resolution of this anxiety does not come until 7:5-7, creating a long narrative interruption filled with theological reflection (2:14-7:4).
14. The verb thriambeuonti ('leads in triumphal procession') does not mean 'causes us to triumph' (as the KJV implies) but 'leads us as captives in a victory parade.' In a Roman triumphus, the general led conquered enemies and his own soldiers through the streets while incense burned. Paul is the captive, not the conqueror — Christ is the triumphant general. The fragrance (osmē) of incense in the procession carried different implications for the victors (life, celebration) and the condemned (death).
15. The phrase euōdia Christou ('aroma of Christ') evokes the Old Testament burnt offering that produced a 'pleasing aroma to the LORD' (Genesis 8:21; Leviticus 1:9). The present participles sōzomenois ('being saved') and apollymenois ('perishing') indicate ongoing processes, not settled states — salvation and destruction are presented as present realities being worked out.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 8:21 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Leviticus 1:9 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. The doubling — 'from death to death' and 'from life to life' — intensifies the effect: the gospel does not merely describe death and life but produces them. The rhetorical question 'who is sufficient?' (tis hikanos) is not defeatist but prepares for the answer in 3:5-6: 'our sufficiency is from God.' The word hikanos ('sufficient, adequate, competent') becomes a key term in the following chapters.
17. The verb kapēleuontes ('peddling, hawking, adulterating for profit') is a marketplace term for merchants who diluted wine for extra profit. Paul contrasts himself with traveling teachers who commercialized their message. The triple qualification — 'of sincerity,' 'from God,' 'in the sight of God' — establishes the integrity of his ministry against implicit charges of self-serving rhetoric.

Summary: Paul contrasts the ministry of the old covenant with the ministry of the new covenant. He begins by declaring that the Corinthians themselves are his letter of recommendation, written not with ink but with the Spirit of the living God, not on stone tablets but on human hearts. Paul then develops an extended midrash on Exodus 34, where Moses veiled his face after encountering God's glory. The ministry of the old covenant, though glorious, was a ministry of death and condemnation written in letters on stone; the ministry of the new covenant, written by the Spirit, is a ministry of righteousness and life with surpassing glory. The veil that covered Moses's face now covers the hearts of those who read the old covenant without Christ, but when anyone turns to the Lord, the veil is removed. The chapter culminates in the declaration that all believers, with unveiled faces, are being transformed into the Lord's image from one degree of glory to another.

What Makes This Remarkable: Paul's reading of Exodus 34 is one of the most creative and theologically consequential interpretive moves in the New Testament. He transforms Moses's veil from a concealment of fading glory into a metaphor for spiritual blindness that persists wherever the old covenant is read apart from Christ. The statement 'the Lord is the Spirit' (v. 17) is one of the most debated phrases in Pauline theology — it does not collapse the persons of the Trinity but identifies the risen Lord as the one who operates through the Spirit in the new covenant. The final verse (v. 18) presents the Christian life as ongoing transformation (metamorphoumetha, the same word used for the Transfiguration) into Christ's image.

Translation Friction: The phrase 'the Lord is the Spirit' (v. 17) is theologically complex and we render the Greek without systematic-theological paraphrase. Paul's contrast between old and new covenants has historically been used to denigrate Judaism; the text itself contrasts the modes of covenant administration (letter vs. Spirit, stone vs. heart), not the God who stands behind both. The 'fading glory' interpretation of Moses's face (vv. 7, 13) goes beyond the Exodus narrative, which does not say the glory faded — this is Paul's interpretive addition.

Connections: The 'tablets of the heart' language echoes Jeremiah 31:31-34 and Ezekiel 36:26-27 (the new covenant and heart-of-flesh promises). The veil imagery connects to Isaiah 25:7 (the shroud over all peoples). The transformation 'from glory to glory' anticipates Romans 8:29 (conformed to the image of the Son) and 1 Corinthians 15:49 (bearing the image of the heavenly man). The Spirit-letter contrast echoes Romans 2:29 and 7:6.

¹Are we beginning to commend ourselves again? Or do we need, as some do, letters of recommendation to you, or from you? ²You yourselves are our letter, written on our hearts, known and read by everyone, ³Forasmuch as you are manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ ministered by us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God. Not in tables of stone, but in fleshy tables of the heart. ⁴Such is the confidence we have through Christ before God. ⁵Not that we are sufficient in ourselves to claim anything as coming from us, but our sufficiency is from God, ⁶Who as well has fashioned us able ministers of the new testament. Not of the letter, but of the inner life — for the letter killeth, but the inner life gives life. ⁷Now if the ministry of death, carved in letters on stone, came with such glory that the Israelites could not gaze at Moses's face because of its glory, which was being set aside, ⁸How will not the ministration of the spirit be instead glorious? ⁹For if the ministry of condemnation had glory, how much more does the ministry of righteousness overflow with glory! ¹⁰Indeed, in this case, what once had glory has come to have no glory at all, because of the glory that surpasses it. ¹¹For if what was being set aside came through glory, how much more does what remains come in glory! ¹²Since we have such a hope, we act with great boldness, ¹³Not as Moses, which placed a vail over his face, that genuine offspring of Israel could not steadfastly pay attention to the end of that which is abolished. ¹⁴But their minds were hardened. For to this day, when they read the old covenant, the same veil remains unlifted, because only through Christ is it removed. ¹⁵Indeed, to this day whenever Moses is read, a veil lies over their hearts. ¹⁶But when one turns to the Lord, the veil is removed. ¹⁷Now the Lord is the Spirit, and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is freedom. ¹⁸And we all, with unveiled faces, beholding the glory of the Lord, are being transformed into the same image from one degree of glory to another. For this comes from the Lord who is the Spirit.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Letters of recommendation (systatikōn epistolōn) were standard practice in the ancient world for traveling teachers and missionaries. Paul's opponents in Corinth apparently carried such letters; Paul's rhetorical question implies that his relationship with the Corinthians makes such documentation unnecessary.
2. Paul transforms the metaphor: the Corinthian believers themselves are his letter of recommendation, and they are written not on paper but on the apostle's heart. The wordplay between ginōskomenē ('known') and anaginōskomenē ('read') creates an elegant pairing in Greek.
3. The contrast between stone tablets and hearts of flesh directly evokes Ezekiel 36:26 ('I will remove the heart of stone and give you a heart of flesh') and Jeremiah 31:33 ('I will write my law on their hearts'). Paul fuses the new covenant prophecies of Jeremiah and Ezekiel with the Sinai narrative to distinguish his ministry from that of Moses. The phrase 'letter of Christ' (epistolē Christou) makes Christ the author and the Corinthians the document.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Ezekiel 36:26 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Jeremiah 31:33 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The word pepoithēsis ('confidence, trust') is directed 'through Christ toward God' — Paul's confidence in his ministry is not self-generated but mediated by Christ and directed toward God as its ultimate ground.
5. This answers the question of 2:16, 'Who is sufficient for these things?' The word hikanotēs ('sufficiency, competence, adequacy') is emphatically sourced in God (ek tou theou), not in the apostle's own ability. Paul's ministry operates by divine enablement, not human qualification.
6. The phrase kainēs diathēkēs ('new covenant') directly echoes Jeremiah 31:31 (LXX 38:31). The contrast between gramma ('letter') and pneuma ('Spirit') is not between literal and allegorical interpretation, nor between Old Testament and New, but between the mode of the old covenant (external law that exposes sin and condemns) and the mode of the new (the Spirit who transforms from within). The verb zōopoiei ('gives life, makes alive') is the same used for resurrection in 1 Corinthians 15:22.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Jeremiah 31:31. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. Paul calls the Sinai covenant the 'ministry of death' (diakonia tou thanatou) — not because the law is evil, but because when the law encounters human sin, it can only condemn (cf. Romans 7:10). The participle katargoumenēn ('being set aside, being brought to nothing') indicates that the glory of the old covenant was transitory by design, not that it was invalid. Paul is interpreting, not denigrating, the Mosaic ministry.
8. Paul argues from the lesser to the greater (qal vahomer in rabbinic terminology): if the ministry that brought death was glorious, how much more glorious is the ministry that brings the Spirit? The logic assumes that both ministries are genuinely glorious — the new does not negate the old but surpasses it.
9. A second qal vahomer argument, now using different terms: 'condemnation' (katakrisis) versus 'righteousness' (dikaioynē). The verb perisseuei ('overflows, abounds') indicates not merely a comparative but a qualitative superiority of the new covenant's glory.
10. Paul uses a startling paradox: the old covenant's glory is so outshone by the new that it appears gloryless by comparison — like stars that are invisible at sunrise, not because they have ceased to exist, but because a greater light overwhelms them.
11. The contrast is between to katargoumenon ('what is being set aside') and to menon ('what remains, what endures'). The old covenant was temporary by divine design; the new covenant is permanent. Both come in glory, but permanence confers greater glory.
12. The word parrēsia ('boldness, openness, confidence, freedom of speech') is a key political and philosophical term in the Greek world, denoting the citizen's right to speak freely. Paul contrasts his parrēsia with Moses's veil: the new covenant minister speaks openly because the glory he mediates does not fade.
13. Paul's interpretation goes beyond Exodus 34:33-35, where Moses veils his face after speaking with Israel, apparently to shield them from the residual glory. Paul reinterprets the veil's purpose: it prevented Israel from seeing the telos ('end, outcome, goal') of the fading glory. The word telos can mean both 'end' (cessation) and 'goal' (fulfillment), and Paul may intend both — the old covenant's glory was pointing toward Christ as its fulfillment.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 34:33-35 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. The verb epōrōthē ('were hardened, were made dull') shifts the veil from Moses's face to the minds of his hearers. Paul transfers the image across time: what happened at Sinai continues 'to this day' whenever the old covenant is read without recognizing Christ as its fulfillment. The phrase palaia diathēkē ('old covenant') is the earliest use of this term for the Hebrew Scriptures, though Paul means the Sinai covenant specifically, not the entire Old Testament.

15. The shift from 'minds' (v. 14) to 'hearts' (kardia) deepens the diagnosis: the problem is not merely intellectual but affects the core of the person. 'Moses' is used by metonymy for the Torah or the entire old covenant scripture read in synagogue.
16. Paul alludes to Exodus 34:34, where Moses removed the veil when he entered the LORD's presence. Paul universalizes this: whenever anyone (not just Moses) turns to the Lord, the veil is taken away. The verb periaireitai ('is removed') is in the present tense — this is not a future eschatological event but a present reality available to any who turn to Christ.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 34:34. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. This is one of the most debated sentences in Paul. 'The Lord is the Spirit' does not mean that the second and third persons of the Trinity are identical, but that in the experience of the new covenant, the risen Lord encounters believers through the Spirit. The 'Lord' whom Moses approached (Exodus 34:34) is now encountered as 'the Spirit' who transforms. The freedom (eleutheria) is freedom from the veil, from the letter that kills, and from condemnation.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 34:34. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. The verb katoptrizomenoi can mean 'beholding as in a mirror' or 'reflecting.' Either sense works: believers see Christ's glory and, in seeing it, are transformed. The verb metamorphoumetha ('are being transformed') is the same word used for the Transfiguration (Matthew 17:2; Mark 9:2) and for Romans 12:2. The present tense indicates an ongoing process. The phrase apo doxēs eis doxan ('from glory to glory') describes progressive transformation, and the source is identified as kyriou pneumatos ('the Lord who is the Spirit').

Summary: Paul continues defending his ministry by insisting on transparency and rejecting shameful, underhanded methods. The gospel is veiled only to those who are perishing, whose minds the god of this age has blinded. Paul proclaims not himself but Christ Jesus as Lord, for the same God who said 'Let light shine out of darkness' has shone in the hearts of believers to give the light of the knowledge of God's glory in the face of Christ. This treasure, however, is held in 'jars of clay,' so that the surpassing power belongs to God, not to the apostles. Paul catalogs his afflictions — pressed but not crushed, struck down but not destroyed — always carrying the death of Jesus in his body so that the life of Jesus may also be revealed. The chapter closes with the contrast between the outer self wasting away and the inner self being renewed daily, and between the momentary lightness of affliction and the eternal weight of glory.

What Makes This Remarkable: *The 'jars of clay' metaphor (v. 7) is one of Paul's most enduring images. Clay pots were the cheapest, most fragile, most disposable containers in the ancient world — they held oil for lamps, stored provisions, and were easily shattered. Paul insists that the fragility of the human vessel is not a liability but the very means by which God's power is displayed. The paradoxes of verses 8-9 ('afflicted but not crushed, perplexed but not despairing, persecuted but not forsaken, struck down but not destroyed') form one of the great catalogs of apostolic endurance. The closing contrast between momentary affliction and eternal glory (v. 17) uses the language of weight: the 'light' burden of suffering is contrasted with the 'weight' (baros) of glory — the Hebrew word for glory (kavod) derives from the root meaning 'heavy.'*

Translation Friction: The phrase 'the god of this age' (v. 4) is the only place in the New Testament where Satan is given this title, though the concept appears elsewhere (John 12:31; Ephesians 2:2). Some patristic interpreters took 'god' as a reference to the true God who blinded unbelievers in judgment, but the context strongly favors Satan as the referent. The phrase 'always carrying in the body the death of Jesus' (v. 10) is distinct from Paul's usual 'dying with Christ' language and may refer to the physical toll of apostolic ministry.

Connections: *The creation-light imagery (v. 6) echoes Genesis 1:3 and Isaiah 9:2. The 'jars of clay' connects to the potter-clay imagery of Isaiah 29:16, 45:9, and Jeremiah 18. The death-life paradox anticipates the extended treatment in chapter 5. The 'eternal weight of glory' echoes the Hebrew kavod theology of the Old Testament. The catalog of sufferings connects to the longer lists in 6:4-10 and 11:23-33.*

¹Therefore, having this ministry by the mercy we received, we do not lose heart. ²But we have renounced shameful, hidden things, not walking in craftiness or adulterating the word of God, but by the open display of the truth commending ourselves to everyone's conscience in the sight of God. ³And even if our gospel is veiled, it is veiled to those who are perishing. ⁴In their case, the god of this age has blinded the minds of the unbelievers, to keep them from seeing the light of the gospel of the glory of Christ, who is the image of God. ⁵For what we proclaim is not ourselves but Jesus Christ as Lord, with ourselves as your servants for Jesus's sake. ⁶To give the light of the knowledge of the glory of god in the face of jesus christ, for God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, has shined in our hearts. ⁷But we have this treasure in jars of clay, so that the surpassing power may be of God and not from us. ⁸We are afflicted in every way but not crushed, perplexed but not driven to despair, ⁹We are hunted down but never abandoned by God. We get knocked down but never destroyed. ¹⁰At all times bearing concerning in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our body. ¹¹For we who are alive are always being given over to death for Jesus's sake, so that the life of Jesus may also be revealed in our mortal flesh. ¹²So death is at work in us, but life in you. ¹³Since we have the same spirit of faith according to what has been written — "I believed, and so I spoke" — we also believe, and so we also speak, ¹⁴Being aware that he which raised up the Lord Jesus will raise up us also by Jesus, and will present us with you. ¹⁵For it is all for your sake, so that as grace extends to more and more people, it may increase thanksgiving, to the glory of God. ¹⁶So we do not lose heart. Though our outer self is wasting away, our inner self is being renewed day by day. ¹⁷For this momentary, light affliction is producing for us an eternal weight of glory beyond all comparison, ¹⁸While we pay attention not at the matters which are seen, but at the matters which are not seen — for the matters which are seen are temporal. But the matters which are not seen are eternal.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The verb engkakoumen ('lose heart, become discouraged, grow weary') is the letter's refrain (also in v. 16). Paul's perseverance is grounded not in personal resilience but in divine mercy (eleēthēmen, 'we were shown mercy' — a divine passive).
2. The verb dolountes ('adulterating, falsifying, corrupting') recalls the 'peddlers' of 2:17 and the wine-merchant metaphor. Paul contrasts hidden deception with open manifestation (phanērōsis) — the transparency theme of chapter 3 continues. The phrase 'in the sight of God' (enōpion tou theou) places all ministry under divine scrutiny.
3. Paul takes up the veil imagery from chapter 3 and applies it to the gospel itself. The perfect participle kekalymmenon ('having been veiled') indicates a settled state. The present participle apollymenois ('perishing') echoes 2:15 and indicates an ongoing condition, not a final verdict.
4. The title 'the god of this age' (ho theos tou aiōnos toutou) refers to Satan, who exercises a usurped authority over the present evil age. Christ is called 'the image of God' (eikōn tou theou), a title with profound theological implications — it echoes Genesis 1:26-27 (humanity made in God's image) and anticipates Colossians 1:15. What was lost in Adam is perfectly realized in Christ.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 1:26-27. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. The double self-reference creates a deliberate contrast: Paul does not preach himself (as subject of the message) but presents himself as a servant (doulos, 'slave') of the Corinthians. The confession 'Jesus Christ as Lord' (Iēsou Christon kyriōn) is the earliest Christian creed (cf. Romans 10:9; Philippians 2:11).
6. Paul connects creation (Genesis 1:3) to conversion: the same God who spoke light into being at creation has illuminated the believer's heart. The phrase 'in the face of Jesus Christ' (en prosōpō Iēsou Christou) circles back to Moses's veiled face (3:7, 13) — what was hidden behind Moses's veil is now openly revealed in Christ's face. The chain of genitives ('the light of the knowledge of the glory of God') is theologically dense: God's glory is known and that knowledge illuminates.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 1:3. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The 'treasure' (thēsauros) is the gospel, the light of verse 6. The 'jars of clay' (ostrakinois skeuesin) were the cheapest containers in the ancient world — fragile, disposable, and utterly ordinary. The purpose clause (hina) reveals that human fragility is by divine design: the weakness of the vessel makes the power of God unmistakable. This is the thesis statement of 2 Corinthians' theology of weakness.
8. The first pair of paradoxes begins the catalog. The verbs thlibomenoi ('pressed, afflicted') and stenochoroumenoi ('crushed, hemmed in, confined') share a physical-pressure metaphor — squeezed but not compressed to the breaking point. The second pair uses aporoumenoi ('at a loss, perplexed') and exaporoumenoi ('utterly at a loss, in despair') — the same root intensified with the prefix ex-.
9. The third pair — 'persecuted but not forsaken' (diōkomenoi all' ouk engkataleipomenoi) — echoes Psalm 22:1 (LXX 21:2), where the psalmist cries out to a God who has not forsaken him. The fourth — 'struck down but not destroyed' — uses military imagery. Each pair insists on the same point: suffering is real but never final.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalm 22:1. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.

10. The word nekrōsin ('death, dying, putting to death') is stronger than 'dying' — it denotes the state of death itself. Paul's physical body bears the marks of Jesus's death (through persecution and suffering), and this very participation in Christ's death becomes the means through which Christ's resurrection life is manifested. The logic is profoundly incarnational: the gospel is displayed through the apostle's body.
11. Paul restates verse 10 with greater specificity: 'we who are alive' (hēmeis hoi zōntes) emphasizes the paradox — they are living people constantly handed over to death. The phrase 'mortal flesh' (thnētē sarki) emphasizes the vulnerability of the body through which divine life is displayed.
12. This compressed sentence captures the vicarious logic of apostolic ministry: Paul's dying produces the Corinthians' living. The verb energeitai ('is at work, is operative') treats death as an active force, not a passive condition. The exchange — death in the apostle, life in the church — mirrors the pattern of Christ's own death-for-others.
13. Paul quotes Psalm 116:10 (LXX 115:1), a psalm of thanksgiving for deliverance from death. The 'spirit of faith' connects the psalmist's experience to Paul's own: both believed in the midst of suffering and therefore spoke. Faith compels proclamation, not silence.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalms 116:10 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. The resurrection of Jesus is the ground of Paul's confidence: the same God who raised Jesus will raise his servants. The verb parastēsei ('will present, will bring before') suggests a formal presentation before God — the eschatological counterpart to the present suffering. The phrase 'with you' (syn hūmin) includes the Corinthians in this future hope.
15. Paul envisions a cascade: grace reaches more people, who give more thanks, which increases God's glory. The verb pleonasasa ('having increased, having extended') and perisseuē ('may overflow, may abound') are both words of surplus and abundance, characteristic of Paul's theology of grace.
16. The refrain 'we do not lose heart' (ouk engkakoumen) echoes verse 1, forming an inclusio. The contrast between the 'outer person' (exō anthrōpos) and the 'inner person' (esō anthrōpos) is not a Platonic body-soul dualism but a distinction between the visible, mortal dimension of existence and the Spirit-renewed core that is being transformed (3:18). The phrase 'day by day' (hēmera kai hēmera) emphasizes the dailiness of renewal.
17. The phrase kath' hyperbolēn eis hyperbolēn ('beyond all measure to beyond all measure') piles superlatives to describe the incomparability of future glory. The word baros ('weight, heaviness') is deliberately contrasted with elaphron ('light') — affliction is light, but glory is heavy. This is a theological wordplay rooted in the Hebrew kavod ('glory'), which derives from the root kaved ('heavy'). The verb katergazetai ('is producing, is working out') indicates that present suffering actively generates future glory.
18. The paradox of 'looking at what is unseen' is intentional: Paul inverts normal epistemology. The verb skopountōn ('looking at, fixing attention on, aiming at') implies deliberate focus, not passive sight. The visible world (suffering, decay, death) is proskaira ('temporary, for a season'), while the invisible world (glory, resurrection, God's presence) is aiōnia ('eternal'). This is not Platonic idealism but eschatological realism — the unseen things are more real because they endure.

Summary: Paul extends his meditation on mortality and resurrection. He compares the earthly body to a tent that is being dismantled, and the resurrection body to a building from God, eternal in the heavens. While in this body, believers groan — not to be stripped naked (disembodied) but to be clothed with the heavenly dwelling so that mortality is swallowed up by life. God has given the Spirit as a guarantee of this future. Therefore, believers walk by faith, not by sight, and whether at home in the body or away from the body, they aim to please the Lord. Paul then declares that all must appear before the judgment seat of Christ. The chapter reaches its theological climax with the proclamation that if anyone is in Christ, there is a new creation; the old has passed away, the new has come. God was in Christ reconciling the world to himself, not counting their trespasses against them, and has entrusted to the apostles the ministry and message of reconciliation. Paul closes with the stunning exchange formula: God made Christ, who knew no sin, to be sin for us, so that in him we might become the righteousness of God.

What Makes This Remarkable: *This chapter contains two of the most quoted verses in the Pauline corpus. 'If anyone is in Christ — new creation!' (v. 17) is a declaration so compressed that its syntax is virtually exclamatory; the Greek has no verb, just the predicate 'new creation' (kainē ktisis). The reconciliation passage (vv. 18-21) is the fullest statement of atonement theology in Paul's letters, culminating in the 'great exchange' of verse 21 — a verse that has shaped atonement doctrine across every major Christian tradition. The phrase 'God was in Christ reconciling the world to himself' (v. 19) can be parsed in multiple ways, each with different theological implications, and we render the Greek without forcing a single reading.*

Translation Friction: The tent-and-building metaphor (vv. 1-5) is debated: does the 'building from God' refer to the resurrection body, to an intermediate heavenly state, or to Christ's body (the church)? Paul's language about preferring to be 'away from the body and at home with the Lord' (v. 8) suggests some form of conscious intermediate state, though Paul does not systematize this. The 'judgment seat of Christ' (v. 10) refers to the bēma, the Roman magistrate's tribunal, applied here to Christ as eschatological judge. Verse 21 ('made him to be sin') is among the most theologically dense statements in Scripture; we render the Greek without interpretive paraphrase.

Connections: The tent metaphor connects to the tabernacle language of the Old Testament and to 2 Peter 1:13-14. The 'new creation' declaration echoes Isaiah 43:18-19 and 65:17. The reconciliation theology connects to Romans 5:10-11. The judgment seat of Christ connects to Romans 14:10. The 'great exchange' of verse 21 connects to Isaiah 53 (the suffering servant who bears iniquity) and to Galatians 3:13 (Christ became a curse for us).

¹For we know that if the earthly tent we live in is destroyed, we have a building from God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. ²For in this tent we groan, longing to put on our heavenly dwelling. ³If so be that being clothed we will not be discovered naked. ⁴For while we are still in this tent, we groan, being burdened — not that we want to be unclothed, but to be further clothed, so that what is mortal may be swallowed up by life. ⁵He who has prepared us for this very thing is God, who has given us the Spirit as a guarantee. ⁶So we are always of good courage. We know that while we are at home in the body we are away from the Lord, ⁷Since we walk through faith, not by sight. ⁸Yes, we are of good courage, and we would rather be away from the body and at home with the Lord. ⁹So whether we are at home or away, we make it our aim to please him. ¹⁰For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, so that each one may receive what is due for what he has done in the body, whether good or evil. ¹¹Therefore, knowing the fear of the Lord, we persuade others. But what we are is known to God, and I hope it is also known to your conscience. ¹²We are not commending ourselves to you again but giving you an opportunity to boast about us, so that you may have an answer for those who boast about outward appearance and not about what is in the heart. ¹³For if we are out of our mind, it is for God; if we are in our right mind, it is for you. ¹⁴For the love of Christ compels us, because we have concluded this: that one has died for all, therefore all have died. ¹⁵And he died for all, so that those who live might no longer live for themselves but for him who died and was raised for them. ¹⁶From now on, therefore, we regard no one according to the flesh. Even though we once regarded Christ according to the flesh, we regard him thus no longer. ¹⁷Therefore, if anyone is in Christ — new creation! The old has passed away; look, the new has come! ¹⁸All this is from God, who reconciled us to himself through Christ and gave us the ministry of reconciliation — ¹⁹The point is this: God was in Christ, reconciling the world to himself. He did not count people's sins against them, and he entrusted to us the message of reconciliation. ²⁰Therefore, we are ambassadors for Christ, God making his appeal through us. We implore you on behalf of Christ: be reconciled to God. ²¹For our sake he made him who knew no sin to be sin, so that in him we might become the righteousness of God.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The word skēnos ('tent') is used in Greek literature for the body as a temporary dwelling. The contrast is between the fragile tent (earthly body) and the permanent building (oikodomē, 'construction, edifice') from God. The adjective acheiropoiēton ('not made with hands') is used elsewhere for the resurrected Christ's body as the new temple (Mark 14:58) and for the heavenly reality behind the earthly tabernacle (Hebrews 9:11, 24).
2. The verb stenazomen ('we groan') is not complaint but the deep yearning of creation itself (Romans 8:22-23). The verb endysasthai ('to put on over, to be clothed upon') suggests putting on the heavenly body over the earthly one — not exchange but overlay, so that mortality is absorbed rather than merely discarded.
3. The fear of being found 'naked' (gymnoi) likely reflects the Jewish hope for bodily resurrection rather than Greek-style disembodied immortality. Paul does not want to be a bodiless soul but to be re-clothed with a resurrection body. Some manuscripts read ekdysamenoi ('having taken off') instead of endysamenoi ('having put on'), which would mean 'even though we have taken off the body, we will not be found naked' — the SBLGNT reads endysamenoi.
4. The phrase katapothē to thnēton hypo tēs zōēs ('mortality may be swallowed up by life') echoes Isaiah 25:8 ('he will swallow up death forever') and anticipates 1 Corinthians 15:54. Paul's hope is not escape from the body but the transformation of the mortal into the immortal — not subtraction but addition.

4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 25:8. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. The verb katergasamenos ('having prepared, having fashioned, having worked out') indicates that God has been actively shaping believers for resurrection. The arrabōn ('guarantee, down payment') of the Spirit repeats from 1:22 — the Holy Spirit is the first installment of the resurrection life, already operative in the present.
6. The verbs endēmounes ('being at home, residing') and ekdēmoumen ('being away from home, abroad') create a spatial metaphor for the believer's present condition: physically present in the body but not yet in the Lord's immediate presence. This implies a distinction between the present experience of Christ through faith and the future experience of Christ face to face.
7. The word eidos ('sight, appearance, visible form') contrasts with pistis ('faith, trust'). The present tense peripatoumen ('we walk, we conduct our lives') indicates that faith-based living is the ongoing mode of Christian existence in the present age. This is not a deficiency but the divinely appointed mode of the 'already-not yet.'
8. Paul expresses a preference (eudokoumen mallon, 'we prefer rather') for departure from the body and presence with the Lord, similar to Philippians 1:23 ('to depart and be with Christ, which is far better'). This verse has been taken as evidence for a conscious intermediate state between death and resurrection, though Paul does not elaborate on its nature.
9. The verb philotimoumetha ('we aspire, we make it our ambition, we strive eagerly') carries connotations of honor-seeking — Paul redirects the competitive Corinthian culture toward the goal of pleasing Christ. The either-or construction (eite... eite) covers both present earthly life and the post-mortem state: the goal remains constant regardless of location.
10. The bēma ('judgment seat, tribunal') was the raised platform where a Roman magistrate sat to render verdicts. Paul applies this image to Christ as eschatological judge. The verb phanerōthēnai ('to be made manifest, to be revealed') suggests not merely appearance but exposure — all will be laid bare. The evaluation covers deeds done 'through the body' (dia tou sōmatos), emphasizing that embodied life has eternal consequences.
11. The 'fear of the Lord' (ton phobon tou kyriou) here is not generalized piety but specific awareness of standing before Christ's judgment seat. The verb peithomen ('we persuade') indicates that apostolic ministry is persuasion, not coercion. Paul's transparency before God (pephanerōmetha, 'we have been made manifest') and his hope for transparency before the Corinthians' consciences continue the openness theme of 2:17 and 4:2.
12. Paul distinguishes between self-commendation and providing ammunition for the Corinthians' defense of his ministry. The opponents boast 'in face' (en prosōpō) — that is, in externals like credentials, eloquence, and physical presence — rather than 'in heart' (en kardia). This contrast anticipates the 'fool's boast' of chapters 10-12.
13. The verb exestēmen ('we were beside ourselves, we were out of our mind') likely refers to Paul's ecstatic spiritual experiences (cf. 12:1-4), which his opponents may have criticized or questioned. Paul's response is that both his ecstatic moments (directed toward God) and his sober teaching (directed toward the Corinthians) serve legitimate purposes.
14. The verb synechei ('constrains, compels, controls, holds together') can mean either 'urges forward' or 'holds in check.' Both senses may be intended: Christ's love both drives Paul forward and prevents him from self-serving ministry. The logic of the atonement statement is participatory: because Christ died for all, all have died in him — his death is their death.
15. The purpose (hina) of Christ's death is not merely forgiveness but transformation of the direction of life: from self-oriented to Christ-oriented. The pairing of 'died and was raised' (apothanōnti kai egerthenti) is the irreducible core of the gospel — death without resurrection would be tragedy, not salvation.
16. The phrase kata sarka ('according to the flesh') does not mean 'in a physical body' but 'by worldly standards.' Paul is not denying the historical, incarnate Jesus but saying that the categories by which people (including Christ) are evaluated have been transformed by the cross and resurrection. The old criteria — social status, ethnicity, power — are obsolete in the new creation.
17. The Greek has no verb and no article: the exclamatory kainē ktisis ('new creation!') is a declaration, not a description. The phrase echoes Isaiah 43:18-19 ('I am doing a new thing') and Isaiah 65:17 ('new heavens and a new earth'). Paul applies cosmic-renewal language to the individual believer 'in Christ' — each conversion is an act of new creation. The perfect tense parēlthen ('has passed away') and gegonen ('has come into being') indicate that the new creation is an accomplished reality, not merely a future hope.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 43:18-19. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 65:17. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. The verb katallaxantos ('having reconciled') is an aorist participle indicating a completed action: reconciliation is something God has already accomplished through Christ. The 'ministry of reconciliation' (diakonia tēs katallagēs) is both the content of Paul's message and the nature of his vocation. God is consistently the subject — he reconciles; humanity is the object that is reconciled.
19. The Greek word order allows multiple readings: 'God was in Christ, reconciling the world' or 'God was reconciling the world to himself in Christ.' Both are theologically valid; the first emphasizes the incarnation, the second emphasizes the instrumental role of Christ. The phrase mē logizomenos ('not counting, not reckoning') uses accounting language — God refuses to enter the world's sins on the ledger. The logos tēs katallagēs ('message of reconciliation') is both the gospel content and the apostolic commission.

- 20. The word presbeuomen ('we serve as ambassadors') is a diplomatic term — an ambassador represents the sovereign who sent him and speaks with the sovereign's authority. The appeal 'be reconciled to God' (katallagēte tō theō) is in the passive voice: 'let yourselves be reconciled,' 'accept the reconciliation God offers.' God has done the reconciling; the human response is to receive it.
- 21. This verse is among the most theologically consequential sentences Paul ever wrote. The 'great exchange' operates on a double identification: Christ is made sin (hamartian epoiēsen — not 'a sinner' but 'sin' itself), and believers become 'the righteousness of God' (dikaiosynē theou) in him. The phrase 'knew no sin' (mē gnōnta hamartian) affirms Christ's sinlessness. How Christ was 'made sin' has been interpreted as bearing the penalty of sin, becoming a sin offering (the Hebrew chatta't means both 'sin' and 'sin offering'), or being identified with sinful humanity. We render the Greek without choosing among these interpretations.

Summary: Paul continues his appeal as God's ambassador, urging the Corinthians not to receive the grace of God in vain. He quotes Isaiah 49:8 about the 'acceptable time' and 'day of salvation,' declaring that now is the favorable time. He then catalogs the marks of his authentic ministry: endurance through afflictions, hardships, sleepless nights, and beatings, as well as the weapons of righteousness. In a series of paradoxes, Paul describes himself as unknown yet well known, dying yet alive, sorrowful yet always rejoicing, poor yet making many rich, having nothing yet possessing everything. He then appeals with open heart for the Corinthians to open their hearts in return. The chapter concludes with a call to separate from unbelievers, citing a catena of Old Testament texts about God's dwelling with his people and the call to holiness.

What Makes This Remarkable: The hardship catalog (vv. 4-10) is one of the most powerful passages in the Pauline corpus. It moves through three registers: circumstances of suffering (vv. 4-5), qualities of character (vv. 6-7), and paradoxes of existence (vv. 8-10). The final series of antitheses — 'as dying and look, we live; as sorrowful yet always rejoicing; as poor yet making many rich; as having nothing yet possessing everything' — is not rhetorical flourish but a theological claim: the cross-shaped life is the pattern of authentic ministry. The Old Testament catena in verses 16-18 weaves together texts from Leviticus, Isaiah, Ezekiel, and 2 Samuel to construct a theology of holy separation grounded in God's covenant presence.

Translation Friction: The separation passage (vv. 14-18) has been much debated regarding its context. Many scholars consider it an interpolation from a separate Pauline letter (the 'previous letter' of 1 Corinthians 5:9), since it interrupts the emotional appeal of 6:11-13 that resumes in 7:2. We render the text as it stands in the SBLGNT without rearrangement. The call to 'not be unequally yoked with unbelievers' has been applied to various situations (marriage, business partnerships, religious syncretism); the original context likely addresses participation in pagan temple worship.

Connections: The Isaiah 49:8 quotation connects to the Servant Songs and Paul's self-understanding as fulfilling an Isaianic vocation. The hardship catalog connects to the lists in 4:8-9 and 11:23-33. The separation passage echoes Leviticus 26:11-12 (God dwelling among his people), Isaiah 52:11 (departing from uncleanness), Ezekiel 37:27 (the new covenant temple), and 2 Samuel 7:14 (the father-son relationship).

¹Working together with him, then, we also appeal to you not to receive the grace of God in vain. ²For he says, "In a favorable time I listened to you, and in a day of salvation I helped you." Look, now is the favorable time; look, now is the day of salvation! ³We put no obstacle in anyone's way, so that no fault may be found with our ministry, ⁴However, in all matters approving ourselves as the ministers of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, ⁵Through beatings, imprisonments, riots, hard work, sleepless nights, and times of fasting; ⁶Indeed, by pureness, by knowledge, by longsuffering, by kindness, by the Holy Spirit, by love unfeigned, ⁷By the message of truth, by the authority of God, by the armour of righteousness on the right hand and on the departed, ⁸By honour and dishonour, by wickedness report and good report — as deceivers, and yet true. ⁹As unknown, and yet well known. As dying, and, take notice, we live. As chastened, and not killed; ¹⁰Indeed, as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing. As poor, yet making numerous rich. As having nothing, and yet possessing all things. ¹¹We have spoken freely to you, Corinthians; our heart is wide open. ¹²You are not restricted by us, but you are restricted in your own affections. ¹³In return — I speak as to children — widen your hearts also. ¹⁴Do not be unequally yoked with unbelievers. For what partnership is there between righteousness and lawlessness? Or what fellowship has light with darkness? ¹⁵What harmony is there between Christ and Beliar? Or what portion does a believer share with an unbeliever? ¹⁶What agreement has the temple of God with idols? For we are the temple of the living God; as God said, "I will make my dwelling among them and walk among them, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people." ¹⁷"Therefore go out from their midst, and be separate from them," says the Lord, "and touch nothing unclean; then I will welcome you, ¹⁸Will I be a Father to you, and you will be my sons and daughters, says the Lord Almighty.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The participle synergountes ('working together') most naturally takes God as the implied partner: Paul is God's co-worker (cf. 1 Corinthians 3:9). To receive grace 'in vain' (eis kenon, 'into emptiness') means to receive it without allowing it to transform one's life. The appeal is urgent: grace demands response.
2. Paul quotes Isaiah 49:8, a passage addressed to the Servant of the LORD. By applying it to the present moment, Paul declares that the prophesied day of salvation has arrived in the gospel era. The emphatic nyn ('now') repeated twice transforms prophetic future into realized present.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 49:8. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. The word proskopēn ('stumbling block, cause of offense, obstacle') indicates Paul's concern that personal conduct could undermine the credibility of the gospel message. The passive mōmēthē ('be blamed, be found fault with') indicates that it is the ministry itself, not merely Paul, that is at stake.
4. The hardship catalog begins with three general terms for suffering: thlipseis ('afflictions, pressures'), anangkais ('hardships, necessities, compulsions'), and stenochōriais ('distresses, tight places'). The word hypomonē ('endurance, patient steadfastness') heads the list as the governing virtue — not mere passive endurance but active perseverance under pressure.
5. The list moves from externally imposed sufferings (beatings, imprisonments, riots) to self-imposed disciplines (labors, sleepless nights, hunger). The word akatastasiais ('riots, disorders, tumults') refers to the social upheaval that followed Paul's preaching. The nēsteiais ('fastings, hunger') may refer to involuntary hunger from poverty rather than voluntary fasting.
6. The list shifts from circumstances of suffering to qualities of character. The inclusion of 'the Holy Spirit' (pneumatī hagiō) among personal virtues is striking — the Spirit is not merely a quality Paul exercises but the divine source empowering all the other qualities. The phrase agapē anypokritos ('genuine love, love without hypocrisy') echoes Romans 12:9.
8. The paradoxes begin. Each pair contrasts how the world perceives the apostle with the deeper reality. 'Impostors' (planoi, 'deceivers, wanderers, misleaders') is the charge leveled against Paul by his opponents; 'true' (alētheis) is the divine verdict. The series moves between external reputation and internal reality.
9. The exclamatory 'and look, we live!' (kai idou zōmen) breaks the rhythmic pattern to express astonishment at survival. The paradox of being 'unknown yet well known' describes Paul's marginal social status (unknown by worldly standards) contrasted with his recognition by God and the churches. 'Punished' (paideuomenoi, 'disciplined, chastened') carries the connotation of parental correction, not merely punitive suffering.
10. The climactic triad reaches its peak: 'having nothing yet possessing everything.' Paul's poverty is real (he worked with his hands, 1 Corinthians 4:12), but his spiritual wealth enriches others. The paradox echoes the Beatitudes and anticipates the description of Christ in 8:9 ('though he was rich, yet for your sake he became poor'). The word katechontes ('possessing, holding fast') is stronger than merely 'having' — it implies firm, permanent possession.
11. Paul addresses the Corinthians by name — a rare and emotionally charged gesture in his letters (cf. Galatians 3:1; Philippians 4:15). The 'wide open heart' (peplatyntai, 'has been enlarged, expanded') is a Hebrew idiom for generosity and emotional openness (cf. Psalm 119:32). Paul has held nothing back.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 119:32. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. The verb stenochōreisthe ('you are restricted, confined, cramped') creates a spatial metaphor: Paul's heart is wide open (v. 11), but the Corinthians' hearts are cramped. The 'bowels' (splachnois, 'viscera, gut, deepest affections') was the ancient locus of emotion, roughly equivalent to the modern 'heart.' The problem is not Paul's lack of openness but the Corinthians' withholding of affection.
13. The word antimisthian ('return, recompense, fair exchange') frames the request as reciprocity: Paul has opened his heart; now he asks the Corinthians to open theirs. The parenthetical 'as to children' (hōs teknois) reveals the paternal affection underlying the appeal and explains Paul's boldness.

14. The verb heterozygountes ('being yoked with a different kind') alludes to Deuteronomy 22:10, which prohibits yoking an ox and a donkey together. The five rhetorical questions (vv. 14-16) each expect the answer 'none' and establish absolute incompatibility between opposing principles. The context most likely addresses participation in pagan temple practices rather than all social contact with non-believers (cf. 1 Corinthians 5:9-10).
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 22:10. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. Beliar (or Belial) is a name for Satan found in Jewish intertestamental literature (especially Jubilees and the Testament of the Twelve Patriarchs). The Hebrew beliya'al ('worthlessness') was used in the Old Testament for wickedness and eventually became a personal name for the chief adversary. The pairing of Christ and Beliar personalizes the cosmic conflict between light and darkness.
16. The declaration 'we are the temple of the living God' (naos theou esmen zōntos) parallels 1 Corinthians 3:16 and 6:19, where the church and the individual body are called God's temple. The quotation combines Leviticus 26:11-12 and Ezekiel 37:27, both covenant-presence texts. The verb emperipatēsō ('I will walk among them') is extraordinarily intimate — God does not merely dwell in the temple but walks about among his people.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Leviticus 26:12. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Ezekiel 37:27. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. Paul quotes Isaiah 52:11, originally addressed to the exiles leaving Babylon. The call to 'go out' and 'be separate' is reapplied to the Corinthian situation: the new exodus is separation from pagan worship and idolatrous practices. The promise 'I will welcome you' (eisdexomai hymas) adds a positive dimension — separation from uncleanness leads to reception by God.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 52:11. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. This quotation adapts 2 Samuel 7:14 (the Davidic covenant promise, 'I will be his father, and he shall be my son') and universalizes it: the father-child relationship promised to David's heir is now extended to all believers, including 'daughters' (thygateras) — an expansion not in the original text. The title pantokrator ('Almighty, ruler of all') translates the Hebrew Shaddai or Tsevaot and appears primarily in the Septuagint and Revelation.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References 2 Samuel 7:14 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.

Summary: Paul resumes the personal appeal interrupted by 6:14-7:1, urging the Corinthians to make room for him in their hearts. He assures them he speaks not to condemn but out of deep affection. Paul then recounts his arrival in Macedonia, where he found no rest until Titus arrived with the good news that the Corinthians had responded to his severe letter with sorrow, longing, and zeal. Paul distinguishes between godly sorrow that produces repentance leading to salvation and worldly sorrow that produces death. The Corinthians' response demonstrated genuine repentance through their earnestness, eagerness, indignation, fear, longing, zeal, and justice. Paul concludes by expressing his complete confidence in the Corinthians and his overflowing joy.

What Makes This Remarkable: Paul's distinction between godly sorrow and worldly sorrow (vv. 9-11) is one of the most pastorally significant passages in his letters. Godly sorrow (kata theon lypē) produces metanoia — a genuine change of mind and direction — that leads to salvation without regret. Worldly sorrow produces death: it is the remorse that spirals into despair rather than transformation. The seven marks of genuine repentance listed in verse 11 (earnestness, eagerness to clear themselves, indignation, fear, longing, zeal, punishment of wrong) form a comprehensive portrait of what true repentance looks like in a community. The resolution of the Titus narrative (begun in 2:13) in verses 5-7 reveals the emotional vulnerability of the apostle in a way that is unmatched in ancient literature.

Translation Friction: The relationship between 7:2 ('Make room for us in your hearts') and 6:13 ('Widen your hearts also') suggests that 6:14-7:1 may interrupt an originally continuous appeal. We render the text as it stands without rearrangement. The identity of the offender (v. 12) remains debated, as in chapter 2.

Connections: The Titus narrative resumes from 2:13 and completes the suspense created there. The godly sorrow passage connects to Jesus's teaching on repentance and Paul's theology of transformation. Paul's comfort in the midst of affliction echoes the comfort theology of 1:3-7. The expression of confidence anticipates the collection appeal in chapters 8-9.

¹Since we have these promises, beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from every defilement of body and spirit, bringing holiness to completion in the fear of God. ²Make room for us in your hearts. We have wronged no one, we have ruined no one, we have taken advantage of no one. ³I do not say this to condemn you, for I said before that you are in our hearts, to die together and to live together. ⁴I have great confidence in you; I have great pride in you. I am filled with comfort; I am overflowing with joy in all our affliction. ⁵For even when we came into Macedonia, our bodies had no rest, but we were afflicted at every turn — conflicts without, fears within. ⁶But God, who comforts the downcast, comforted us by the arrival of Titus, ⁷Not by his coming only, but by the encouragement by which he was comforted in you, when he informed us your earnest desire, your mourning, your passionate concern toward me. So that I rejoiced the more. ⁸For even if I grieved you with my letter, I do not regret it — though I did regret it, for I see that that letter grieved you, though only for a while. ⁹As it is, I rejoice, not because you were grieved, but because your grief led to repentance. For you felt a godly grief, so that you suffered no loss through us. ¹⁰For godly grief produces a repentance that leads to salvation without regret, but worldly grief produces death. ¹¹For see what earnestness this godly grief has produced in you — what eagerness to clear yourselves, what indignation, what fear, what longing, what zeal, what punishment of wrong! At every point you have proved yourselves innocent in this matter. ¹²So although I wrote to you, it was not for the sake of the one who did the wrong, nor for the sake of the one who suffered the wrong, but in order that your earnestness for us might be revealed to you in the sight of God. ¹³Therefore we are comforted. And besides our own comfort, we rejoiced still more at the joy of Titus, because his spirit has been refreshed by all of you. ¹⁴For if I made any boast to him about you, I was not put to shame. But just as everything we said to you was true, so also our boasting before Titus has proved to be true. ¹⁵And his affection for you is even greater, as he remembers the obedience of you all, how you received him with fear and trembling. ¹⁶I rejoice, because I have complete confidence in you.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. This verse concludes the separation appeal of 6:14-18. The promises (epangelias) are those quoted in 6:16-18 — God's dwelling, fatherhood, and welcome. Holiness is not merely negative (cleansing from defilement) but positive (epitelountes, 'completing, perfecting'). The phrase 'fear of God' (phobō theou) provides the motivational context for holy living.
2. The imperative chōrēsate ('make room, receive, open up') resumes the appeal of 6:11-13. The triple denial — 'wronged no one, ruined no one, taken advantage of no one' — responds to accusations apparently leveled against Paul, perhaps related to the collection for Jerusalem or his exercise of authority.
3. The infinitives synapothanein ('to die together') and syzēn ('to live together') express the totality of Paul's bond with the Corinthians — a bond that encompasses both death and life. This echoes the death-and-life theme that pervades the letter (4:10-12; 5:14-15).
4. Four declarations of abundance: great confidence, great pride, filled with comfort, overflowing with joy. The verb hyperperisseuomai ('I overflow beyond measure') is an intensified form found only here and in Romans 5:20 in the New Testament. The paradox of overflowing joy 'in all our affliction' (epi pasē tē thlipsei) captures the letter's central paradox.
5. This resumes the narrative from 2:13, where Paul left Troas for Macedonia in search of Titus. The phrase 'our flesh had no rest' (oudēman eschēken anesin hē sarx hēmōn) echoes 2:13 ('my spirit had no rest'). The pair 'conflicts without, fears within' (exōthen machai, esōthen phoboi) reveals both external opposition and internal anxiety.
6. The title 'God who comforts the downcast' (ho parakalōn tous tapeinous) echoes the comfort theology of 1:3-4 and draws on Isaiah 49:13. The word tapeinous ('lowly, humble, downcast') describes Paul's emotional state without shame — vulnerability before God is the posture that receives comfort.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 49:13. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The comfort cascades: God comforts Paul through Titus, who was comforted by the Corinthians. Three responses characterize the Corinthians: longing (epithēsis — deep desire to see Paul), mourning (odymos — grief over the breach), and zeal (zēlos — passionate commitment). This triad demonstrates genuine repentance through relational action.

8. Paul's candor is remarkable: he admits to having initially regretted sending the severe letter (metemelomin, 'I was regretting'), but the Corinthians' positive response has resolved his regret. The temporal qualifier 'for a while' (pros hōran, 'for an hour') indicates that the grief was temporary, not permanent.
9. Paul carefully distinguishes: his joy is not sadistic pleasure in their grief but joy that the grief accomplished its purpose — metanoia ('repentance, change of mind'). The phrase kata theon ('according to God, in a godly manner') qualifies the grief as divinely directed, not merely psychologically painful.
10. This verse presents one of the most important pastoral distinctions in the New Testament. Godly grief (kata theon lypē) is grief aligned with God's purposes that produces genuine transformation. Worldly grief (tou kosmou lypē) is self-focused remorse that leads to despair and death — Judas being the paradigmatic example (Matthew 27:3-5). The adjective ametamelēton ('without regret, not to be regretted') can modify either 'repentance' or 'salvation'; grammatically it most naturally modifies 'repentance.'
11. Seven responses demonstrate genuine repentance: (1) spoudēn ('earnestness, diligence'), (2) apologian ('defense, eagerness to clear themselves'), (3) aganaktēsīn ('indignation' at the wrong), (4) phobon ('fear' of God's judgment or Paul's authority), (5) epipothēsīn ('longing' for Paul), (6) zēlon ('zeal' for righteousness), (7) ekdikēsīn ('punishment, vindication'). The repeated alla ('but also, indeed') creates an escalating rhetorical effect.
12. Paul reveals that the severe letter had a deeper purpose than dealing with the specific offense: it was a test of the Corinthians' loyalty and love. The phrase 'in the sight of God' (enōpion tou theou) raises the relational dynamic to a theological level — the community's response to Paul is ultimately a response to God.
13. The joy multiplies through relational connection: the Corinthians' response comforted Paul, and Titus's joy at their response added even more to Paul's comfort. The verb anapepautai ('has been refreshed, has been given rest') echoes 1 Corinthians 16:18 and indicates that Titus found genuine rest of spirit among the Corinthians.
14. Paul had staked his credibility with Titus by boasting about the Corinthians' character. The Corinthians' positive response vindicated Paul's confidence and proved that his boast was not empty but truthful (alētheia egenēthē, 'proved to be truth').
15. The phrase 'fear and trembling' (meta phobou kai tromou) echoes Philippians 2:12 and indicates reverent seriousness in their reception of Titus as Paul's representative. Titus's deep affection (splanchna, 'gut-level compassion') for the Corinthians grew through the experience of their obedience.
16. The chapter ends on a note of unqualified confidence (tharrō, 'I am confident, I take courage') — remarkable given the tensions evident throughout the letter. This positive conclusion prepares the ground for the collection appeal in chapters 8-9, where Paul will leverage this restored relationship for a concrete act of generosity.

Summary: Paul turns to the collection for the Jerusalem saints, using the Macedonian churches as a model of extraordinary generosity. Despite their severe affliction and extreme poverty, the Macedonians gave beyond their means, begging earnestly for the privilege of participating. Paul urges the Corinthians to excel in this grace as well, reminding them of Jesus Christ's supreme example: though he was rich, for their sake he became poor, so that by his poverty they might become rich. Paul counsels that giving should be proportional — from what one has, not what one does not have — and appeals to the principle of equality, quoting the manna story from Exodus. He commends Titus and two unnamed brothers who will administer the collection with full accountability and transparency.

What Makes This Remarkable: Verse 9 is one of the most theologically loaded single verses in the Pauline corpus: 'For you know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sake he became poor, so that you by his poverty might become rich.' This is not merely an appeal to follow Christ's example but a statement about the incarnation itself — Christ's pre-existent divine wealth, his voluntary impoverishment in becoming human, and the spiritual enrichment that results. Paul's fundraising theology is remarkable: he never simply asks for money but always grounds the request in Christology, ecclesiology, and eschatology. The principle of 'equality' (isotēs, v. 14) is not communism but reciprocal sharing among communities — those with surplus supply those in need, and the roles may reverse.

Translation Friction: The identity of the 'brother famous among all the churches for his preaching of the gospel' (v. 18) is unknown — Luke, Barnabas, and others have been suggested, but Paul's deliberate anonymity prevents identification. The relationship between chapters 8-9 is debated: some scholars see chapter 9 as a separate letter, others as a continuation. We render the text as continuous.

Connections: The collection for Jerusalem connects to 1 Corinthians 16:1-4, Romans 15:25-28, and Acts 24:17. The Christ-hymn in verse 9 parallels Philippians 2:6-8 (the self-emptying of Christ). The manna quotation (v. 15) connects to Exodus 16:18. The theme of abundance from poverty echoes 6:10 ('poor yet making many rich').

¹We want you to know, brothers, about the grace of God that has been given among the churches of Macedonia, ²In the midst of a severe trial, their overflowing joy and extreme poverty welled up into rich generosity. ³For they gave according to their means, as I can testify, and beyond their means, of their own accord, ⁴They urgently pleaded with us for the privilege of sharing in this service to God's people. ⁵This they did, not as we hoped, but foremost offered their own selves to the Lord, and to us, by the will of God. ⁶So we urged Titus that, as he had already made a beginning, he should also complete among you this act of grace. ⁷But as you excel in everything — in faith, in speech, in knowledge, in all earnestness, and in our love for you — see that you excel in this act of grace also. ⁸I say this not as a command, but through the earnestness of others I am testing the genuineness of your love. ⁹That you through his poverty might be rich, for you know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet because your sakes he became poor. ¹⁰And in this matter I give my judgment: this benefits you, who a year ago started not only to do this work but also to desire it. ¹¹Now finish doing it as well, so that your readiness in desiring it may be matched by your completing it out of what you have. ¹²For if the readiness is there, it is acceptable according to what a person has, not according to what he does not have. ¹³For I do not mean that others should be eased and you burdened, but that as a matter of fairness ¹⁴However, by an equality, that now at this time your abundance may be a supply for their want, that their abundance as well may be a supply since your want — that there may be equality:. ¹⁵As it is written, "Whoever gathered much had nothing left over, and whoever gathered little had no lack." ¹⁶But thanks be to God, who put into the heart of Titus the same earnest care for you. ¹⁷For he not only accepted our appeal but, being very earnest, he is going to you of his own accord. ¹⁸With him we are sending the brother who is famous among all the churches for his preaching of the gospel. ¹⁹And not only that, but he has been appointed by the churches to travel with us as we carry out this act of grace that is being administered by us for the glory of the Lord himself and to show our good will. ²⁰We take this course so that no one should blame us about this generous gift that is being administered by us, ²¹Providing for honest matters, not only in the sight of the Lord, but as well in the sight of men. ²²And with them we are sending our brother whom we have often tested and found earnest in many matters, but who is now more earnest than ever because of his great confidence in you. ²³As for Titus, he is my partner and fellow worker for your benefit. As for our brothers, they are messengers of the churches, a glory to Christ. ²⁴So give proof of your love and of our boasting about you to these men, before all the churches.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Paul frames the Macedonians' generosity as 'the grace of God' (tēn charin tou theou) — their giving is not merely a human achievement but a divine gift. The Macedonian churches include Philippi, Thessalonica, and Berea.
2. The paradox is striking: severe affliction + extreme poverty = overflowing generosity. The phrase kata bathous ptōcheia ('rock-bottom poverty') indicates not relative but absolute deprivation. Yet this poverty, combined with 'abundance of joy' (perisseia tēs charas), produced rich generosity (haplotētos, 'generosity, simplicity, single-mindedness').
3. Paul testifies (martyrō) that the Macedonians gave not only up to their capacity (kata dynamin) but beyond it (para dynamin). The key word is authairetoi ('of their own accord, voluntarily') — this was not coerced giving but spontaneous generosity.
4. The Macedonians actually begged to be allowed to give — an inversion of the expected dynamic. The word koinōnian ('partnership, participation, fellowship') indicates that the collection was not mere charity but an act of communion between churches. Paul uses charin ('grace, favor') again for the collection, maintaining its theological dignity.
5. The phrase 'they gave themselves first to the Lord' (heautous edōkan prōton tō kyriō) reveals the theological priority: self-surrender to Christ preceded and motivated their financial generosity. Money follows the person; giving flows from self-giving.
6. Titus had apparently begun organizing the Corinthian collection during a previous visit. Paul now urges him to complete (epitelessē) what was started. Again, the collection is called charin ('grace, act of grace'), not merely a financial transaction.
7. Paul lists five areas where the Corinthians already excel (partly echoing the gifts listed in 1 Corinthians 1:5), then adds generosity as a sixth. The SBLGNT reads 'our love for you' (tē ex hēmōn en hymin agapē) rather than 'your love for us.' By framing generosity as excelling (perisseuēte) in grace, Paul makes it a spiritual discipline, not merely a financial obligation.

8. Paul explicitly refuses to command (ou kat' epitagēn) generosity — it must be voluntary or it is not grace. The Macedonians' example serves as the test: will the Corinthians' love prove equally genuine (gnēsion, 'authentic, legitimate, true-born')?
9. This verse is a compressed incarnation-and-atonement Christology. Christ's 'riches' (plousios ōn) refer to his pre-existent divine glory; his 'poverty' (eptōcheusen, 'became a beggar') refers to the incarnation and its culmination in the cross. The 'riches' believers receive are the spiritual blessings of salvation. The entire verse functions as the ultimate paradigm for generosity: if Christ gave up infinite wealth for others' sake, how can his followers withhold their finite resources?
10. Paul distinguishes between gnōmēn ('judgment, opinion, counsel') and epitagēn ('command') from verse 8. He notes that the Corinthians began both the willing (to thelein) and the doing (to poiēsai) a year ago. The fact that willingness preceded action reflects the priority of heart disposition in Paul's theology of giving.
11. The principle is practical: eagerness must be followed through with action. The phrase ek tou echein ('out of what you have') establishes proportionality — Paul asks for completion based on actual means, not impossible standards.
12. This verse establishes a crucial principle of Christian giving: God evaluates the gift by the giver's willingness and means, not by the absolute amount. The word euprosdektos ('acceptable, welcome') indicates divine acceptance. The principle echoes the widow's mite (Mark 12:41-44) and protects the poor from guilt.
13. Paul's principle is not that one group should be impoverished to enrich another. The word isotētos ('equality, fairness, equity') introduces a reciprocal principle that he develops in verse 14.
14. The principle of reciprocity: the Corinthians' material surplus meets Jerusalem's material deficit now; Jerusalem's spiritual riches (cf. Romans 15:27) or future material surplus may meet a Corinthian need later. The isotēs ('fairness, equality') is not mathematical equality but mutual provision within the body of Christ.
15. Paul quotes Exodus 16:18, describing the miraculous equalization of the manna: regardless of how much each Israelite gathered, everyone ended up with exactly what they needed. Paul applies this wilderness provision narrative to the church's economic life — God's people are meant to share so that no one has too much and no one too little.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 16:18 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. Paul attributes Titus's concern for the Corinthians to divine action — God 'put' (donti, 'having given') this earnestness into Titus's heart. Even the delegate's motivation is a work of grace.
17. Titus's willingness exceeds the mere acceptance of Paul's request — he goes authairetos ('of his own accord, voluntarily'), the same word used of the Macedonians in verse 3. Genuine generosity is always voluntary.
18. This unnamed brother has been traditionally identified with Luke, Barnabas, Mark, or others — but Paul's deliberate anonymity prevents certainty. The phrase 'whose praise is in the gospel' (hou ho epainos en tō euangeliō) means he is praised for his gospel work throughout all the churches.
19. The verb cheirotoneō (appointed, elected, chosen by raising hands) indicates that this brother was selected by the churches through a formal process, not merely by Paul's personal preference. Multiple oversight of the collection funds demonstrates accountability — Paul is scrupulous about financial transparency.
20. The word hadrotēti ('generous gift, lavish amount, abundance') indicates the collection was substantial. Paul's caution about blame (mōmēsētai) reflects practical wisdom: handling large sums of money invites suspicion, so Paul ensures multiple trusted delegates are involved.
21. Paul echoes Proverbs 3:4 (LXX), establishing a dual standard of integrity: accountability before God and before people. Financial transparency in ministry is not optional but essential. The verb pronoumen ('we take thought in advance, we aim at, we provide for') indicates deliberate, proactive measures.
21. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Proverbs 3:4. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
22. A second unnamed brother accompanies Titus — also proven through testing (edokimasamen, 'we tested and approved'). The three-person delegation provides full accountability for what was apparently a significant sum.
23. Titus is called koinōnos ('partner') and synergos ('fellow worker'). The brothers are called apostoloi ekklesiōn ('messengers of the churches, apostles of the churches') — the word apostolos here means 'delegate, envoy' rather than carrying the technical sense of the Twelve. The title doxa Christou ('glory of Christ') is remarkable: these brothers are a visible display of Christ's glory.
24. Paul closes the chapter by placing the Corinthians' generosity on a public stage: their response will be visible to all the churches (eis prosōpon tōn ekklesiōn, 'in the face of the churches'). The collection is not a private transaction but a public demonstration of love that validates Paul's boasting about the Corinthians.

Summary: Paul continues his appeal regarding the collection, explaining that he is sending the brothers ahead to Corinth to ensure the gift is ready before Paul arrives with the Macedonians, so that neither Paul nor the Corinthians will be embarrassed. He then develops a theology of generous giving through the agricultural metaphor of sowing and reaping: whoever sows sparingly will reap sparingly, and whoever sows bountifully will reap bountifully. Each person should give as they have decided in their heart, not reluctantly or under compulsion, for God loves a cheerful giver. God is able to make all grace abound so that believers always have enough of everything and can abound in every good work. The chapter climaxes with doxology: the collection will produce thanksgiving to God, demonstrate the Corinthians' obedience to the gospel, and bind the churches together in mutual prayer and love. Paul closes with the exclamation, 'Thanks be to God for his indescribable gift!'

What Makes This Remarkable: The phrase 'God loves a cheerful giver' (v. 7) is one of the most widely quoted verses in the Bible, drawn from Proverbs 22:8 (LXX). The Greek hilaros ('cheerful, glad, joyful') is the root of the English 'hilarious' — the giver God delights in is not merely willing but genuinely joyful. Paul's theology of giving is remarkably non-coercive: each person gives 'as they have decided in their heart' (v. 7), and God's grace is the source of both the ability and the willingness to give. The closing exclamation about God's 'indescribable gift' (v. 15) brings the entire collection discourse to a Christological climax — the ultimate gift behind all giving is Christ himself.

Translation Friction: Some scholars regard chapter 9 as a separate letter from chapter 8, noting the apparent fresh beginning in 9:1 ('Now it is superfluous for me to write to you'). We render the text as continuous. The phrase 'indescribable gift' (v. 15) is grammatically ambiguous — it could refer to Christ, to the grace of giving, or to the whole economy of salvation. We render the Greek without specifying.

Connections: The sowing-reaping imagery connects to Proverbs 11:24-25, Hosea 10:12, and Galatians 6:7-9. The 'cheerful giver' alludes to Proverbs 22:8 (LXX). The abundant provision of God connects to Psalm 112:9 (quoted in v. 9). The collection's role in producing thanksgiving connects to 1:11 and 4:15. The 'indescribable gift' forms an inclusio with 8:9 (the grace of Christ).

¹Now it is superfluous for me to write to you about the ministry for the saints, ²I know how eager you are to help, and I have been boasting about it to the Macedonians. I told them that Achaia was ready a year ago, and your enthusiasm has stirred most of them to action. ³But I am sending the brothers so that our boasting about you may not prove empty in this matter, so that you may be ready, as I said you would be. ⁴Otherwise, if some Macedonians come with me and find you unprepared, we would be humiliated — to say nothing of you — in this undertaking. ⁵So I thought it necessary to urge the brothers to go on ahead to you and arrange in advance the generous gift you have promised, so that it may be ready as a willing gift, not as an extortion. ⁶The point is this: whoever sows sparingly will also reap sparingly, and whoever sows bountifully will also reap bountifully. ⁷Each one must give as he has decided in his heart, not reluctantly or under compulsion, for God loves a cheerful giver. ⁸And God is able to make all grace abound to you, so that having all sufficiency in all things at all times, you may abound in every good work. ⁹As it is written, "He has distributed freely, he has given to the poor; his righteousness endures forever." ¹⁰He who supplies seed to the sower and bread for food will supply and multiply your seed for sowing and increase the harvest of your righteousness. ¹¹You will be enriched in every way to be generous in every way, which through us will produce thanksgiving to God. ¹²For the ministry of this service is not only supplying the needs of the saints but is also overflowing in many thanksgivings to God. ¹³By their approval of this service, they will glorify God because of your submission that comes from your confession of the gospel of Christ, and the generosity of your sharing with them and with all, ¹⁴By their petition for you, which long following you for the exceeding grace of God in you. ¹⁵Thanks be to God for his indescribable gift!

1. The phrase perisson moi estin ('it is superfluous, unnecessary, excessive for me') is a rhetorical device (praeteritio) — by saying he does not need to write about it, Paul proceeds to write about it at length. The word diakonia ('ministry, service') elevates the collection from a mere financial transfer to an act of Christian service.
2. Paul reveals that he used the Corinthians' eagerness to motivate the Macedonians (just as he now uses the Macedonians' generosity to motivate the Corinthians). The verb ērethisen ('stirred up, provoked, stimulated') indicates healthy mutual encouragement between churches.
3. Paul is candid about his concern: if the Corinthians are not ready when the Macedonians arrive, his boasting will be exposed as hollow (kenōthē, 'be emptied, be made vain'). The advance delegation of Titus and the brothers (8:16-24) serves a practical purpose: to ensure the collection is complete before Paul arrives.
4. The parenthetical 'to say nothing of you' (hina mē legō hymeis) is wryly diplomatic — Paul acknowledges that the Corinthians' embarrassment would be even greater than his own. The word hypostasei ('undertaking, confidence, substance') can mean 'confident boasting' or 'project/enterprise.'
5. Paul uses eulogia ('blessing, generous gift, bounty') for the collection — a word that frames giving as blessing rather than obligation. The contrast between eulogia ('blessing, gift') and pleonexia ('greed, covetousness, extortion') reveals Paul's concern that the collection not appear coerced. The giving must be a blessing from the heart, not an extraction.
6. The agricultural metaphor of sowing and reaping was proverbial in the ancient world (cf. Proverbs 11:24; Galatians 6:7). The phrase ep' eulogiais ('upon blessings, bountifully') literally means 'sowing on the basis of blessings' — generosity produces abundance. The symmetry of the sentence makes the principle self-evident.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Proverbs 11:24. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The verb proērētai ('has decided beforehand, has chosen freely') emphasizes deliberate, premeditated generosity. Two negatives frame the motive: not ek lypēs ('from grief, reluctantly') and not ex anangkēs ('from compulsion, under necessity'). The quotation 'God loves a cheerful giver' draws from Proverbs 22:8 (LXX). The word hilaros ('cheerful, glad, joyful') is the root of 'hilarious' — God delights in giving that flows from joy, not obligation.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Proverbs 22:8. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The fourfold use of 'all/every' (pasan... panti... pantote... pasan... pan) emphasizes the comprehensiveness of God's provision. The word autarkeia ('sufficiency, self-sufficiency, contentment') was a Stoic virtue — having enough and needing no more. Paul transforms it: believers have autarkeia not through detachment but through God's abundant grace, which frees them for generosity.
9. Paul quotes Psalm 112:9 (LXX 111:9), which describes the righteous person's generosity. The verb eskorpiō ('scattered, distributed freely') suggests lavish, widespread giving. The 'righteousness' (dikaïosynē) that 'endures forever' is expressed through generous action — in the Psalm's logic, generosity is righteousness made visible.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalms 112:9. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. Paul draws on Isaiah 55:10 and Hosea 10:12, combining the image of God as the one who supplies seed with the promise that he will multiply the harvest. The 'harvest of your righteousness' (ta genēmata tēs dikaïosynēs hymōn) connects generosity to righteousness as in the Psalm 112 quotation — giving produces a crop of righteous fruit.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 55:10 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Hosea 10:12 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalm 112 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The theological circuit completes: God enriches believers so they can be generous, and their generosity produces thanksgiving to God. The word haplotēta ('generosity, simplicity, single-mindedness') indicates that enrichment is not for hoarding but for giving. The whole economy runs on grace and returns to God as praise.
12. Paul uses two words for the collection: diakonia ('ministry, service') and leitourgia ('liturgical service, public duty'). The latter is a cultic term — the collection is an act of worship, not merely philanthropy. It has a double effect: it meets physical needs and produces spiritual thanksgiving.
13. The collection proves the sincerity of the Corinthians' confession (homologias). Paul links financial generosity to gospel fidelity: sharing material resources with fellow believers demonstrates that one's confession of Christ is not mere words but lived reality. The phrase eis autous kai eis pantas ('toward them and toward all') extends the scope of generosity beyond Jerusalem.
14. The collection creates mutual affection: the Jerusalem saints will pray for the Corinthians and long for them. The relationship is no longer merely donor-to-recipient but sibling-to-sibling, bound together by the 'surpassing grace of God' (hyperballousan charin tou theou) that is visible in the Corinthians' generosity.
15. The chapter and the entire collection discourse close with this doxological exclamation. The word anekdiēgētō ('indescribable, inexpressible, beyond words') appears only here in the New Testament. The 'gift' (dōrea) most likely refers to Christ himself — the gift behind all gifts, the grace that enables all generosity. Paul began the collection appeal with the grace of Christ (8:9) and ends with it here, framing the entire discussion as a response to the supreme gift of God in the gospel.

Summary: The tone of the letter shifts sharply as Paul addresses his opponents directly. He appeals 'by the meekness and gentleness of Christ' but warns that he is prepared to wage spiritual warfare against every pretension that sets itself up against the knowledge of God. Paul's weapons are not worldly but divinely powerful for demolishing strongholds. He responds to the accusation that his letters are weighty but his physical presence is unimpressive and his speech contemptible. Paul warns that when he comes in person, his actions will match his letters. He refuses to compare himself with those who commend themselves by their own standards, instead claiming only the territory God has assigned him — which includes Corinth. He closes with the principle that the one who boasts should boast in the Lord, for it is not self-commendation but the Lord's commendation that counts.

What Makes This Remarkable: The military imagery of verses 3-6 is among the most vivid in Paul's letters. The 'strongholds' (ochyrōmata) he demolishes are not physical fortifications but patterns of thought — arguments, speculations, and 'every lofty opinion raised against the knowledge of God.' This is intellectual and spiritual warfare, not physical combat, and Paul's weapons are truth and the power of God. The accusation quoted in verse 10 ('his letters are weighty and strong, but his bodily presence is weak, and his speech of no account') provides a rare glimpse of how Paul's opponents perceived him — and perhaps of Paul's actual physical appearance and rhetorical style.

Translation Friction: The relationship of chapters 10-13 to chapters 1-9 is one of the most debated questions in Pauline scholarship. The sharp change in tone has led many scholars to identify chapters 10-13 as part of the 'severe letter' or a separate letter fragment. We render the text as it stands in the SBLGNT. The identity of Paul's opponents (the 'super-apostles' of 11:5) remains debated — they appear to be Jewish-Christian missionaries who valued eloquence, visions, and physical impressiveness.

Connections: The spiritual warfare imagery anticipates Ephesians 6:10-17. The 'meekness and gentleness of Christ' echoes Matthew 11:29. The principle of boasting in the Lord quotes Jeremiah 9:24 (cf. 1 Corinthians 1:31). The territorial language ('the territory God has assigned to us') connects to Paul's apostolic commission in Galatians 2:7-9.

¹I, Paul, myself appeal to you by the meekness and gentleness of Christ — I who am humble when face to face with you, but bold toward you when I am away! — ²I ask that when I am present I may not have to show boldness with such confidence as I intend to show against some who regard us as walking according to the flesh. ³For though we walk in the flesh, we do not wage war according to the flesh. ⁴For the weapons of our warfare are not of the flesh but have divine power to destroy strongholds. ⁵We destroy arguments and every lofty opinion raised against the knowledge of God, and take every thought captive to obey Christ, ⁶We are ready to punish every act of disobedience once your own obedience is complete. ⁷Look at what is before your eyes. If anyone is confident that he belongs to Christ, let him remind himself that just as he belongs to Christ, so also do we. ⁸For even if I boast a little too much of our authority, which the Lord gave for building you up and not for destroying you, I will not be ashamed. ⁹I do not want to seem as if I am trying to frighten you with my letters. ¹⁰For they say, "His letters are weighty and strong, but his bodily presence is weak, and his speech of no account." ¹¹Let such a person understand that what we say by letter when absent, we will do when present. ¹²Not that we dare to classify or compare ourselves with some of those who are commending themselves. But when they measure themselves by one another and compare themselves with one another, they are without understanding. ¹³But we will not boast beyond limits, but will boast only with regard to the area of influence God assigned to us, to reach even to you. ¹⁴For we are not overextending ourselves, as though we did not reach you. We were the first to come all the way to you with the gospel of Christ. ¹⁵We do not boast beyond limit in the labors of others. But our hope is that as your faith increases, our area of influence among you may be greatly enlarged, ¹⁶To preach the good news in the regions beyond you, and not to boast in another man's line of matters fashioned ready to our possession. ¹⁷"Let the one who boasts, boast in the Lord." ¹⁸For it is not the one who commends himself who is approved, but the one whom the Lord commends.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The emphatic autos de egō Paulos ('I myself, Paul') signals a major shift in tone. Paul quotes his opponents' criticism ironically: they say he is tapeinos ('humble, lowly, servile') in person but bold only from a distance. By appealing through 'the meekness and gentleness of Christ' (prautētōs kai epieikeias tou Christou), Paul transforms the accusation: his humility in person mirrors Christ's own self-lowering.
2. Paul issues a veiled warning: he prefers not to exercise the bold authority in person that he is willing to use. The charge that Paul walks 'according to the flesh' (kata sarka) implies that his opponents see his ministry as driven by human calculation rather than spiritual power.
3. Paul makes a crucial distinction: 'in the flesh' (en sarki, the sphere of ordinary human existence) versus 'according to the flesh' (kata sarka, by merely human means and standards). Living as a human does not mean fighting as one. The military metaphor strateuometha ('we wage war, we serve as soldiers') introduces the extended warfare imagery.
4. The phrase dynata tō theō ('powerful for God, divinely powerful, empowered by God') identifies the source of the weapons' effectiveness. The ochyrōmata ('strongholds, fortified places') are not physical fortresses but intellectual and spiritual constructions that oppose God's truth. The military language is metaphorical throughout.
5. The military imagery continues: logismous ('arguments, reasonings, calculations') and hypsōma ('lofty thing, high rampart, pretension') are demolished, and every noēma ('thought, scheme, mind') is taken prisoner (aichmalōtizōntes, 'taking captive as a prisoner of war'). The warfare is explicitly intellectual and spiritual — the enemy is wrong thinking about God, and the goal is the obedience (hypakoē) of every thought to Christ.
6. Paul holds back disciplinary action (ekdikēsai, 'to punish, to avenge, to execute justice') until the Corinthians' obedience (hypakoē) is complete. This shows pastoral restraint: he gives the community time to self-correct before intervening with apostolic authority.
7. The opening can be read as an imperative ('Look at what is in front of you!') or an indicative ('You look only at the surface'). Either way, Paul challenges the Corinthians' superficial evaluation. His opponents claim special connection to Christ; Paul asserts that his claim is equally valid.
8. Paul defines the purpose of apostolic authority: eis oikodomēn ('for building up, for edification') and ouk eis kathairesin ('not for tearing down, not for destruction'). The verb kathairesin uses the same root as the 'destruction of strongholds' in verse 4 — Paul destroys arguments, not people.
9. Paul acknowledges the perception problem: his forceful letters could be read as mere intimidation (ekphobein, 'to terrify, to frighten thoroughly'). He wants his words to be taken seriously but not as bullying.
10. Paul quotes his opponents directly (phēsin, 'he/she/one says'). The criticism reveals that Paul's letters were powerful (bareiai kai ischyrai, 'heavy and strong'), but his in-person ministry was perceived as physically unimpressive (asthenēs, 'weak') and rhetorically poor (exouthenēmenos, 'despised, of no account'). This provides a rare window into how Paul appeared to his contemporaries.
11. Paul warns that his in-person actions will match his written words. The dichotomy his opponents exploit (strong in writing, weak in person) will collapse when he arrives. The warning is direct and unqualified.
12. Paul's irony is sharp: his opponents form a closed system of mutual admiration, measuring themselves only against each other. The repeated reflexive pronouns (heautous... heautois... heautous) emphasize the circularity. Those who commend themselves (synistanontōn) have no external standard — they are 'without understanding' (ou syniasin).
13. Paul introduces the concept of a divinely assigned kanōn ('rule, measuring rod, standard, territory'). His boasting is not unlimited but bounded by the territory God has apportioned. Corinth falls within that territory — Paul reached them first with the gospel, and his apostolic claim over them is legitimate.
14. The verb efthasamen ('we arrived first, we reached') implies chronological priority: Paul was the first to bring the gospel to Corinth (Acts 18). His opponents are latecomers who are building on Paul's foundation — a point he made in 1 Corinthians 3:10.
15. Paul implicitly accuses his opponents of boasting 'in the labors of others' (en allotriois kopois) — taking credit for churches they did not found. Paul's own hope is that the Corinthians' growing faith will expand his ability to carry the gospel further, using Corinth as a base.
16. Paul's missionary ambition extends westward — 'the lands beyond you' (ta hyperekeina hymōn) likely refers to Spain (cf. Romans 15:24, 28). He refuses to claim credit for territory someone else has evangelized, a principle of missionary ethics that his opponents apparently violate.
17. Paul quotes Jeremiah 9:24 (LXX 9:23), as he did in 1 Corinthians 1:31. The principle reframes all boasting: the only legitimate ground for boasting is what the Lord has done, not personal achievement. This sets the standard against which Paul's 'fool's boast' in chapters 11-12 will be measured.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Jeremiah 9:24. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. The chapter ends with the fundamental criterion of apostolic legitimacy: dokimos ('approved, tested, genuine') comes from the Lord's commendation (synistēsīn), not from self-promotion. This single sentence demolishes the opponents' entire project of self-commendation and returns the discussion to its proper ground: divine evaluation.

Summary: Paul begins his 'fool's speech' — a sustained, ironic piece of self-defense in which he adopts the persona of a boasting fool to expose the absurdity of his opponents' credentials. He expresses jealousy for the Corinthians with a divine jealousy, fearing they will be led astray from sincere devotion to Christ. He sarcastically acknowledges the 'super-apostles' and defends his right to financial support while explaining why he chose to preach free of charge. He warns against false apostles who disguise themselves as servants of righteousness, just as Satan disguises himself as an angel of light. The chapter climaxes with an extraordinary catalog of sufferings: five times receiving thirty-nine lashes, three times beaten with rods, once stoned, three shipwrecks, a night and a day adrift at sea, danger from rivers, bandits, his own people, Gentiles, the city, the wilderness, the sea, and false brothers — along with sleeplessness, hunger, cold, and exposure. Beyond all these, Paul bears the daily pressure of his anxiety for all the churches.

What Makes This Remarkable: The suffering catalog (vv. 23-28) is unparalleled in ancient literature for its combination of scope, specificity, and theological purpose. Paul lists sufferings that go far beyond the Acts narrative — only one of his five floggings and one of his three beatings can be correlated with Acts, meaning most of these events are otherwise unrecorded. The catalog functions as an anti-resume: where his opponents boast of impressive credentials, Paul boasts of the very things that prove his weakness. The ironic framework ('I am speaking as a fool,' v. 23) maintains the paradox throughout — the boast of suffering is simultaneously a refusal to boast in the conventional sense. The Damascus escape (vv. 32-33) is chosen as the climactic story not because it is the most dramatic but because it is the most humiliating: the great apostle fled like a smuggled package.

Translation Friction: The 'super-apostles' (hyperlian apostoloi, v. 5) are debated — some identify them with the Jerusalem apostles (Peter, James, John), others with Paul's opponents in Corinth. The context favors the Corinthian opponents. Paul's self-identification as 'unskilled in speech' (v. 6) may be genuine modesty, rhetorical strategy, or sarcastic understatement. The phrase 'another Jesus... a different spirit... a different gospel' (v. 4) suggests the opponents' theology differed significantly from Paul's, though the exact differences are unclear.

Connections: The 'divine jealousy' echoes Hosea and the prophetic tradition. Satan disguised as an angel of light connects to Jewish traditions about the fall of Satan. The suffering catalog connects to the shorter lists in 4:8-9 and 6:4-10, and to the imprisonments recorded in Acts. The Damascus escape connects to Acts 9:23-25. The 'anxiety for all the churches' (v. 28) encapsulates Paul's pastoral theology.

¹I wish you would bear with me in a little foolishness. Do bear with me! ²For I feel a divine jealousy for you, since I betrothed you to one husband, to present you as a pure virgin to Christ. ³But I am afraid that as the serpent deceived Eve by his cunning, your thoughts will be led astray from a sincere and pure devotion to Christ. ⁴For if someone comes and proclaims another Jesus than the one we proclaimed, or if you receive a different spirit from the one you received, or if you accept a different gospel from the one you accepted, you put up with it readily enough. ⁵Indeed, I consider that I am not in the least inferior to these super-apostles. ⁶Even if I am unskilled in speaking, I am not so in knowledge; indeed, in every way we have made this plain to you in all things. ⁷Or did I commit a sin in humbling myself so that you might be exalted, because I preached God's gospel to you free of charge? ⁸I robbed other churches by accepting support from them in order to serve you. ⁹And when I was with you and was in need, I did not burden anyone, for the brothers who came from Macedonia supplied my need. So I refrained and will refrain from burdening you in any way. ¹⁰As the truth of Christ is in me, this boasting of mine will not be silenced in the regions of Achaia. ¹¹And why? Because I do not love you? God knows I do! ¹²And what I am doing I will continue to do, in order to undermine the claim of those who would like to claim that in their boasted mission they work on the same terms as we do. ¹³For such men are false apostles, deceitful workers, disguising themselves as apostles of Christ. ¹⁴And no wonder, for even Satan disguises himself as an angel of light. ¹⁵So it is no surprise if his servants also disguise themselves as servants of righteousness. Their end will correspond to their deeds. ¹⁶I repeat, let no one think me foolish. But even if you do, accept me as a fool, so that I too may boast a little. ¹⁷What I am saying with this boastful confidence, I say not as the Lord would but as a fool. ¹⁸Since many boast according to the flesh, I too will boast. ¹⁹For you gladly bear with fools, being wise yourselves! ²⁰For you bear it if someone makes you a slave, or devours you, or takes advantage of you, or puts on airs, or strikes you in the face. ²¹To my shame, I must say, we were too weak for that! But whatever anyone else dares to boast of — I am speaking as a fool — I also dare to boast of that. ²²They are Hebrews? I am too. They are Israelites? So am I. They descend from Abraham? I do as well. ²³Are they servants of Christ? I am talking like a madman — I am a better one: with far greater labors, far more imprisonments, with countless beatings, and often near death. ²⁴Five times I received at the hands of the Jews the forty lashes less one. ²⁵Three times I was beaten with rods. Once I was stoned. Three times I was shipwrecked; a night and a day I was adrift at sea. ²⁶In journeyings frequently, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the desert, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brothers and sisters;. ²⁷In exhaustion and hardship, in many sleepless nights, going hungry and thirsty, frequently going without food, exposed to cold and lacking adequate clothing. ²⁸And, apart from other things, there is the daily pressure on me of my anxiety for all the churches. ²⁹Who is weak, and I am not weak? Who is made to stumble, and I am not indignant? ³⁰If I must boast, I will boast of the things that show my weakness. ³¹The God and Father of the Lord Jesus, he who is blessed forever, knows that I am not lying. ³²At Damascus, the governor under King Aretas was guarding the city of Damascus in order to seize me, ³³By way of a window in a basket was I let down by the wall, and escaped his hands.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The word aphrosynēs ('foolishness, senselessness') signals the beginning of the 'fool's speech' that runs through chapter 12. Paul adopts the rhetorical convention of the fool's speech (known in the Greco-Roman world) but transforms it: his 'boasting' will consist entirely of weaknesses and sufferings.
2. Paul casts himself as the father who arranged the betrothal between the Corinthian church (the bride) and Christ (the husband). The 'divine jealousy' (theou zelō) echoes the LORD's jealousy for Israel in the Old Testament (Exodus 20:5; Deuteronomy 4:24). Paul's concern is that the bride remain faithful to her betrothed until the wedding day.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 20:5. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Deuteronomy 4:24. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. The allusion to Genesis 3 casts Paul's opponents as serpent-figures who lead the bride astray through deceptive cunning (panourgia). The word haplotēs ('sincerity, simplicity, single-mindedness') describes the undivided devotion that characterizes faithfulness to one husband.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 3 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The irony is biting: the Corinthians tolerate false teachers but are impatient with Paul. The threefold 'another/different' (allon Iēsoun... pneuma heteron... euangelion heteron) suggests the opponents' teaching differed substantially from Paul's, though the exact nature of 'another Jesus' is debated.
5. The term hyperlian apostolōn ('super-apostles, supreme apostles') is Paul's sarcastic coinage — the prefix hyper- ('super, excessive') mocks their inflated self-estimation. Whether these are the Corinthian opponents or the Jerusalem apostles is debated; the context favors the opponents in Corinth.
6. The word idiōtēs ('layperson, amateur, unskilled person') was used for someone without professional training. Paul may concede lack of formal rhetorical training while insisting that his knowledge (gnōsis) — his grasp of the gospel — is not lacking. The irony is that Paul's letters demonstrate extraordinary rhetorical skill.
7. The rhetorical question drips with irony: Paul's 'sin' was preaching without payment. In the Greco-Roman world, traveling teachers who charged fees were considered more credible; by refusing payment, Paul lowered his social status (tapeinōn, 'humbling himself'). His opponents apparently used this against him, suggesting that his free preaching proved he was not a real apostle.
8. The verb esylēsa ('I robbed, I plundered') is deliberately provocative military language — Paul 'plundered' other churches (particularly the Macedonians, Philippians 4:15-16) by accepting their financial support while serving Corinth for free. The exaggeration highlights the absurdity of criticizing his free ministry.
9. The verb katenarkēsa ('I was a burden, I was a deadweight') is a vivid word, possibly meaning 'I numbed no one' or 'I was a parasite to no one.' Paul's policy of financial independence from Corinth was deliberate and permanent (tērēsō, 'I will continue to keep').

10. Paul swears by the truth of Christ that he will never accept payment from Corinth. The verb phragēsetai ('will be blocked, will be silenced, will be stopped up') treats his boast about free ministry as a river that cannot be dammed.
11. The short, punchy question and answer reveal the emotional core beneath the theological argument. Paul's opponents had apparently suggested that his refusal of payment proved he did not love the Corinthians. Paul appeals to God as witness of his love.
12. Paul's free ministry removes his opponents' ability to claim equivalence with him. If they charge fees and Paul does not, they cannot say they work 'on the same terms' (kathōs kai hēmeis). Paul's financial policy is a strategic weapon against false apostles.
13. Paul drops the irony and speaks bluntly: his opponents are pseudapostoloi ('false apostles') and ergatai dolioi ('deceitful workers'). The verb metaschēmatisomenoi ('disguising themselves, masquerading') suggests deliberate deception, not mere error. They put on the appearance (schēma) of Christ's apostles while serving a different agenda.
14. Paul grounds the opponents' deception in a cosmic pattern: Satan himself practices disguise (metaschēmatizetai). The 'angel of light' image may draw on Jewish traditions about Satan's fall from angelic glory (cf. Life of Adam and Eve 9:1). If the master deceiver operates through attractive disguise, his servants will do the same.
15. Paul calls his opponents 'servants of Satan' (diakonoι autou) disguised as 'servants of righteousness.' The warning about their end (telos) corresponding to their deeds recalls the judgment seat of Christ (5:10) and places the opponents under eschatological judgment.
16. Paul re-establishes the ironic framework: he is about to boast 'as a fool' (hōs aphrona). The rhetorical device allows him to engage in self-promotion while simultaneously signaling that such behavior is foolish. The audience is put on notice that what follows is not Paul's normal mode of discourse.
17. The disclaimer ou kata kyrion ('not according to the Lord') is remarkable — Paul admits that self-boasting is not Christ's way. Yet the situation requires it: the Corinthians have been so impressed by his opponents' boasting that they need to hear Paul's credentials, even if presenting them feels foolish.
18. Paul matches his opponents' game — they boast 'according to the flesh' (kata sarka), by worldly credentials, so Paul will enter the same arena. But his boast, as it unfolds, will consist entirely of weaknesses and sufferings, inverting the entire convention.
19. Sharp irony: if the 'wise' Corinthians can tolerate the foolish boasting of his opponents, surely they can tolerate Paul's. The phrase phronimoi ontes ('being wise') echoes 1 Corinthians 4:10, where Paul called the Corinthians 'wise in Christ' with similar sarcasm.
20. Five abuses the Corinthians tolerate from Paul's opponents: enslavement (katadouloi), exploitation (katesthiei, 'devours, eats up'), theft (lambanei, 'takes'), arrogance (epairetai, 'exalts himself'), and physical abuse (derei, 'strikes, beats'). Whether the face-striking is literal or metaphorical is debated, but the rhetorical effect is clear: the Corinthians tolerate terrible treatment from impressive-looking leaders while rejecting Paul's genuine care.
21. More irony: Paul's 'shame' is that he was 'too weak' to abuse the Corinthians as his opponents do. The verb ēsthenēkamen ('we were weak') is the letter's central self-description, used both sarcastically here and sincerely elsewhere. Paul now turns to credentials that he shares with his opponents.
22. The three parallel claims establish ethnic and religious parity with his opponents, who apparently emphasized their Jewish credentials. 'Hebrews' (Hebrew-speaking Jews), 'Israelites' (members of the covenant people), and 'offspring of Abraham' (heirs of the promise) form an ascending scale of theological significance. Paul matches them at every level — but immediately surpasses them in the next verse.
23. Paul escalates from parity ('so am I') to superiority ('I am more,' hyper egō) — but his superiority consists entirely of suffering. The word paraphronōn ('talking like a madman, out of my mind') intensifies the foolishness motif. The catalog that follows is Paul's anti-resume: more labors, more prisons, more beatings, more brushes with death.
24. The 'forty lashes less one' (tessarakonta para mian) was the Jewish punishment prescribed in Deuteronomy 25:3, which set forty as the maximum. Jewish practice stopped at thirty-nine as a safeguard against exceeding the limit. None of these five floggings is recorded in Acts. The punishment indicates that Paul continued to submit to synagogue discipline, maintaining his identity within the Jewish community.
24. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 25:3. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
25. Beating with rods was a Roman punishment (Acts 16:22 records one instance at Philippi). The stoning likely refers to the event at Lystra (Acts 14:19). The three shipwrecks predate the one in Acts 27, which occurred after this letter was written. The 'night and a day adrift at sea' (nychthēmeron en tō bythō, literally 'in the deep') is otherwise unrecorded.
26. Eight instances of kindynois ('dangers') create a relentless catalog of peril. The dangers come from every direction: natural (rivers, sea), human (bandits, kinsmen, Gentiles), environmental (city, wilderness), and ecclesiastical (false brothers). The inclusion of 'false brothers' (pseudadelphois) at the climax of the list suggests that betrayal from within the church was the most painful danger of all.
27. The shift from dramatic dangers to grinding daily deprivation — sleeplessness, hunger, thirst, cold, nakedness (gymnotēti, 'inadequate clothing, exposure') — completes the picture. Paul's suffering was not only spectacular but mundane, not only episodic but chronic.
28. The phrase choris tōn parektos ('apart from the external things, besides what I have not mentioned') suggests the catalog is not even complete. The epistasis ('pressure, attack, concern, crowding upon') and merimna ('anxiety, care, worry') describe the weight of pastoral responsibility for multiple churches simultaneously. This verse reveals what Paul considered the heaviest burden: not physical suffering but spiritual care.

- 29. Two rhetorical questions express Paul's empathetic identification with every member of his churches. When anyone is weak (asthenei), Paul feels their weakness. When anyone stumbles (skandalizetai), Paul burns with indignation (pyroumai — 'I am set on fire') on their behalf. This is not detached pastoral administration but visceral participation in others' suffering.
- 30. This verse is the thesis statement of Paul's entire fool's speech: his boast consists not of strengths but of weaknesses (astheneia). The paradox that governs 2 Corinthians — power made perfect in weakness — finds its definitive expression here.
- 31. Paul inserts a solemn oath, calling God as witness to the truth of his suffering catalog. The doxological phrase 'blessed forever' (eulogētos eis tous aiōnas) resembles the Jewish berakah formula and solemnizes the oath. The catalog of sufferings is so extraordinary that it requires divine attestation.
- 32. King Aretas IV was the Nabataean king (reigned 9 BC - AD 40). The ethnarchēs ('governor, ethnarch') was his representative in Damascus. This episode (also in Acts 9:23-25) comes from the very beginning of Paul's ministry. Its placement here, after the grand catalog, seems anticlimactic — which is precisely the point.
- 33. Paul closes the suffering catalog not with a triumphant deliverance but with an undignified escape — lowered through a window in a sarganē ('woven basket, hamper'). The great apostle to the Gentiles began his career being smuggled out of a city like a bundle of goods. This story is the perfect capstone for the fool's boast: Paul's signature moment of escape was simultaneously a moment of humiliation.

Summary: Paul continues his fool's speech with an account of extraordinary visions and revelations, speaking of himself in the third person as 'a man in Christ' who was caught up to the third heaven and heard inexpressible things. To keep him from becoming conceited, a 'thorn in the flesh' was given to him — a messenger of Satan to torment him. Three times Paul pleaded with the Lord for its removal, and the Lord answered: 'My grace is sufficient for you, for my power is made perfect in weakness.' Paul embraces this paradox, declaring that he will boast all the more gladly in his weaknesses, for when he is weak, then he is strong. He then defends his apostleship by pointing to the signs, wonders, and mighty works performed among the Corinthians, while reiterating his refusal to burden them financially. He expresses his concern that when he comes, he will find quarreling, jealousy, and unrepentant sin, and that God will humble him before them.

What Makes This Remarkable: *The Lord's response to Paul's prayer — 'My grace is sufficient for you, for my power is made perfect in weakness' (v. 9) — is the theological heart of 2 Corinthians and arguably of Paul's entire ministry theology. It is one of only a few direct quotations of the risen Christ in the Pauline letters. The paradox that divine power reaches its full expression (teleitai, 'is completed, is perfected') specifically through human weakness is not merely a silver lining to suffering but a fundamental principle of how God operates in the world. Paul's response — 'when I am weak, then I am strong' (v. 10) — is the letter's thesis in a single sentence. The vision account (vv. 2-4) is remarkable for its reticence: Paul distances himself from the experience by using the third person, claims not to know whether it was bodily or spiritual, and says nothing about what he heard except that it was 'inexpressible.'*

Translation Friction: *The identity of the 'thorn in the flesh' (v. 7) has been endlessly debated: chronic illness (eye disease, epilepsy, malaria), a spiritual trial, persecution, or a particular opponent. Paul's language is deliberately vague, using the metaphor skolops ('thorn, stake, splinter') and the phrase 'messenger of Satan' (angelos satana). We render the Greek without specifying. The 'third heaven' and 'paradise' (vv. 2, 4) reflect Jewish cosmological categories in which multiple heavens exist; Paul uses these terms without explaining them.*

Connections: The vision of paradise connects to Jewish apocalyptic literature (1 Enoch, Testament of Levi, 2 Baruch). The 'thorn in the flesh' connects to Numbers 33:55 and Ezekiel 28:24 (thorns as instruments of divine testing). The threefold prayer echoes Jesus's threefold prayer in Gethsemane (Matthew 26:39-44). The 'signs of an apostle' (v. 12) connect to Romans 15:18-19 and Hebrews 2:4. The power-in-weakness theme reaches back to 1:8-9, 4:7, and 6:4-10.

¹I must go on boasting. Though there is nothing to be gained by it, I will go on to visions and revelations of the Lord. ²I know a man in Christ who fourteen years ago was caught up to the third heaven — whether in the body or out of the body I do not know, God knows. ³And I know that this man was caught up — whether in the body or out of the body I do not know, God knows — ⁴How that he was caught up into paradise, and listened to unspeakable words, which it is not permitted for a man to utter. ⁵On behalf of this man I will boast, but on my own behalf I will not boast, except of my weaknesses. ⁶Though if I should wish to boast, I would not be a fool, for I would be speaking the truth; but I refrain from it, so that no one may think more of me than he sees in me or hears from me. ⁷So to keep me from becoming conceited because of the surpassing greatness of the revelations, a thorn was given me in the flesh, a messenger of Satan to harass me, to keep me from becoming conceited. ⁸Three times I pleaded with the Lord about this, that it should leave me. ⁹But he said to me, "My grace is sufficient for you, for my power is made perfect in weakness." Therefore I will boast all the more gladly of my weaknesses, so that the power of Christ may rest upon me. ¹⁰For the sake of Christ, then, I am content with weaknesses, insults, hardships, persecutions, and calamities. For when I am weak, then I am strong. ¹¹I have been a fool! You forced me to it, for I ought to have been commended by you. For I was not at all inferior to these super-apostles, even though I am nothing. ¹²The signs of a true apostle were performed among you with utmost patience, with signs and wonders and mighty works. ¹³For in what were you less favored than the rest of the churches, except that I myself did not burden you? Forgive me this wrong! ¹⁴Here for the third time I am ready to come to you. And I will not be a burden, for I seek not what is yours but you. For children are not obligated to save up for their parents, but parents for their children. ¹⁵I will most gladly spend and be spent for your souls. If I love you more, am I to be loved less? ¹⁶But granting that I myself did not burden you, I was crafty, you say, and got the better of you by deceit. ¹⁷Did I take advantage of you through any of those I sent to you? ¹⁸I urged Titus to go, and sent the brother with him. Did Titus take advantage of you? Did we not act in the same spirit? Did we not take the same steps? ¹⁹Have you been thinking all along that we have been defending ourselves to you? It is in the sight of God that we have been speaking in Christ, and all for your upbuilding, beloved. ²⁰For I fear that perhaps when I come I may find you not as I wish, and that you may find me not as you wish — that perhaps there will be quarreling, jealousy, anger, hostility, slander, gossip, conceit, and disorder. ²¹I fear that when I come again my God may humble me before you, and I may have to mourn over many of those who sinned earlier and have not repented of the impurity, sexual immorality, and sensuality that they have practiced.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Paul acknowledges the unprofitability of boasting (ou sympheron, 'not beneficial') yet continues, driven by the rhetorical necessity of the fool's speech. The transition from suffering (ch. 11) to visions reveals another arena where Paul can match his opponents — but he will handle even this credential with characteristic self-deprecation.
2. Paul speaks of himself in the third person ('a man in Christ'), creating distance from the experience. The verb harpagenta ('caught up, snatched away') is passive — Paul did not achieve this experience through technique or merit; he was seized by divine power. The 'third heaven' in Jewish cosmology was the highest heaven, the dwelling place of God. The repeated disclaimer 'I do not know... God knows' reflects genuine uncertainty about the nature of the experience and a refusal to claim more than he can verify.
3. The repetition of the disclaimer emphasizes Paul's epistemological humility. Unlike his opponents who presumably boasted about their visions with elaborate detail, Paul refuses to claim knowledge he does not have about the mechanics of the experience.
4. The word paradeisos ('paradise') is a Persian loanword (pairidaeza, 'enclosed garden') used in the LXX for the Garden of Eden (Genesis 2:8) and in Jewish apocalyptic for the heavenly dwelling of the righteous. The arrēta rēmata ('inexpressible words, unspeakable utterances') are doubly inaccessible: they cannot be expressed (arrēta) and they are not permitted to be spoken (ouk exon). Paul's vision account is remarkable for what it withholds rather than what it reveals.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 2:8. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. Paul maintains the third-person fiction: he will boast about 'that man' (the one who received the vision) but not about himself — except concerning his weaknesses. The distinction is theologically precise: the vision was God's doing and cannot be claimed as Paul's achievement; only his weaknesses are truly 'his own.'
6. Paul could legitimately boast about his visions — it would be truth, not foolishness. But he deliberately restrains himself (pheidomai, 'I spare, I refrain') so that people evaluate him only by what they can observe: his words and actions. He refuses to trade on secret spiritual experiences.
7. The skolops ('thorn, stake, splinter') is one of the most debated words in the Pauline corpus. Its identity has been suggested as a chronic illness, a spiritual affliction, an opponent, or persecution. Paul describes it with two phrases: 'in the flesh' (tē sarki, locating it in his bodily or human experience) and 'a messenger of Satan' (angelos satana, attributing it to demonic agency while recognizing it serves divine purpose). The purpose clause is repeated: 'to keep me from becoming conceited' (hina mē hyperairōmai) — God uses even Satan's torment to accomplish sanctification.

8. The threefold prayer echoes Jesus's threefold prayer in Gethsemane (Matthew 26:39, 42, 44). In both cases, the answer is not removal of the suffering but grace to endure it. 'The Lord' (ton kyrion) to whom Paul prays is Christ, as the following verse makes clear — an early witness to prayer directed to the risen Jesus.
9. The perfect tense eirēken ('he has said and it still stands') indicates that Christ's answer is permanently valid, not a one-time response. The verb teleitai ('is made perfect, is completed, reaches its goal') means that divine power achieves its full expression specifically through human weakness — not despite it, not alongside it, but through it. Paul's response transforms suffering into opportunity: he will 'boast all the more gladly' (hēdista mallon) in weakness because weakness is the condition for experiencing Christ's power. The verb episkēnōsē ('may rest upon, may tabernacle upon, may spread a tent over') echoes the shekinah glory — God's dwelling presence — resting on the tabernacle (Exodus 40:34-35).
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 40:34-35. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The verb eudokō ('I am content, I delight, I take pleasure') does not describe masochism but the settled conviction that weakness is the arena of divine power. The final sentence — hotan gar asthenō, tote dynatos eimi ('for when I am weak, then I am strong') — is the thesis of the entire letter compressed into eight Greek words. It is the definitive Pauline paradox.
11. Paul closes the fool's speech by blaming the Corinthians for making it necessary — they should have been defending him instead of requiring him to defend himself. The phrase 'even though I am nothing' (ei kai ouden eimi) is both genuine humility and ironic understatement: Paul has just demonstrated superiority to the 'super-apostles' in every relevant category.
12. Paul mentions 'signs of an apostle' (sēmeia tou apostolou) as a recognized category — the Corinthians knew what authenticated an apostle. The triad sēmeiois te kai terasin kai dynamisin ('signs and wonders and mighty works') is a standard biblical formula for miracles (cf. Acts 2:22; Romans 15:19). Yet Paul places 'utmost patience' (pasē hypomonē) first, suggesting that endurance under suffering is the primary apostolic credential, not miraculous power.
13. Devastating irony: the only way the Corinthians were 'less favored' than other churches was that Paul did not take their money. 'Forgive me this wrong!' (charisasthe moi tēn adikian tautēn) is sarcasm at its most cutting — Paul's refusal to be a financial burden is cast as an 'injustice' requiring forgiveness.
14. The phrase 'I seek not what is yours but you' (ou zētō ta hymōn alla hymas) is one of the most beautiful expressions of pastoral love in the New Testament. Paul wants the Corinthians themselves, not their money. The parent-child analogy is apt: as their spiritual father (1 Corinthians 4:15), Paul provides for his children, not the reverse.
15. The verbs dapanēsō ('I will spend') and ekdapanēthēsomai ('I will be utterly spent, I will be completely exhausted') move from active to passive, from spending resources to being spent as a resource. Paul offers himself as an expendable commodity for the Corinthians' benefit. The closing question is poignant: greater love receives less love in return — the disproportionate economy of pastoral care.
16. Paul quotes another accusation: even if he did not accept payment directly, he was 'crafty' (panourgōs) and got money through deception — perhaps through the collection for Jerusalem. Paul's sarcastic tone indicates he is repeating slander, not confessing to it.
17. Paul challenges the accusation with a specific question: can the Corinthians name a single delegate of Paul's who exploited them? The verb epleonektēsa ('took advantage of, defrauded') is the same used in 7:2.
18. Paul cites Titus as a specific test case: the Corinthians can verify that Titus conducted himself with the same integrity as Paul. The rhetorical questions expect the answer 'No, he did not take advantage' and 'Yes, you acted the same way.' Paul's delegates replicate his character.
19. Paul corrects a misperception: his fool's speech was not self-defense (apologia) but was spoken 'in the sight of God' (katenanti theou) for the Corinthians' edification (oikodomēs, 'building up'). Everything Paul has said serves not his reputation but their spiritual growth. The address 'beloved' (agapētoi) reminds them of the relational warmth beneath the sharp rhetoric.
20. Paul lists eight vices he fears finding in Corinth — a catalog of relational sins that destroy community. The fear is mutual: Paul may not find the Corinthians as he wishes, and they may encounter a Paul they do not want (i.e., a disciplinarian). Many of these vices echo the problems already addressed in 1 Corinthians.
21. Paul's deepest fear is that unrepentant sin will force a painful confrontation. The triad akatharsia ('impurity'), porneia ('sexual immorality'), and aselgeia ('sensuality, debauchery') describes the sexual sins that were endemic in Corinthian culture and had apparently persisted in the church. The verb penthēsō ('I will mourn, I will grieve') shows that Paul's response to sin in the community is grief, not anger — the pastoral heart behind the apostolic authority.

Summary: Paul prepares for his third visit to Corinth, warning that he will not spare the unrepentant. He cites the Old Testament requirement of two or three witnesses and warns those who have sinned that when he comes he will not be lenient. He challenges the Corinthians to examine themselves to see whether they are in the faith, pointing out that Christ speaks through him — the same Christ who was crucified in weakness but lives by the power of God. Paul prays that they will do what is right so that he will not need to use his authority severely. The letter closes with final exhortations to restore relationships, agree with one another, and live in peace. The benediction that concludes the letter — 'The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Spirit be with you all' — is the fullest Trinitarian formula in the Pauline corpus and has become the most widely used blessing in Christian worship.

What Makes This Remarkable: The closing benediction (v. 14) is one of the most theologically significant sentences in the New Testament. It names all three persons of the Trinity in a single blessing formula: the grace of Christ, the love of God (the Father), and the fellowship (koinōnia) of the Holy Spirit. This is not a later credal formulation imposed on Paul but an early, pre-systematic expression of the church's experience of the triune God. The order — Christ first, then the Father, then the Spirit — reflects Paul's experiential starting point: believers encounter God's love through Christ's grace, and this encounter is made real by the Spirit's fellowship. The earlier paradox in verse 4 ('crucified in weakness... lives by the power of God') encapsulates the entire letter's theology in a single sentence about Christ.

Translation Friction: The 'two or three witnesses' citation (v. 1) from Deuteronomy 19:15 may refer to Paul's three visits (each visit being a 'witness' against the offenders) or to the standard legal requirement for church discipline. The phrase 'Christ is not weak in dealing with you but is powerful among you' (v. 3) could be heard as a threat of disciplinary action through apostolic authority, or as a statement about Christ's ongoing presence and power in the community. We render the Greek without privileging either reading.

Connections: The two-or-three-witnesses principle connects to Deuteronomy 19:15, Matthew 18:16, and 1 Timothy 5:19. The 'crucified in weakness / lives by the power of God' formulation connects to Romans 1:4, 1 Corinthians 1:23-25, and Philippians 2:7-8. The self-examination call echoes 1 Corinthians 11:28. The Trinitarian benediction connects to Matthew 28:19 and the later development of Trinitarian theology in the early councils.

¹This is the third time I am coming to you. "Every charge must be established by the evidence of two or three witnesses." ²I warned those who sinned before and all the others, and I warn them now while absent, as I did when present on my second visit, that if I come again I will not spare them — ³since you are demanding proof that Christ is speaking through me. He is not weak in dealing with you but is powerful among you. ⁴For he was crucified in weakness, but lives by the power of God. For we also are weak in him, but in dealing with you we will live with him by the power of God. ⁵Examine yourselves, to see whether you are in the faith. Test yourselves. Or do you not realize this about yourselves, that Jesus Christ is in you? — unless indeed you fail to meet the test! ⁶I hope you will find out that we have not failed the test. ⁷But we pray to God that you may not do wrong — not that we may appear to have met the test, but that you may do what is right, even though we may seem to have failed. ⁸For we cannot do anything against the truth, but only for the truth. ⁹For we are glad when we are weak and you are strong. Your restoration is what we pray for. ¹⁰For this reason I write these things while I am away from you, so that when I come I may not have to be severe in my use of the authority that the Lord has given me for building up and not for tearing down. ¹¹Finally, brothers, rejoice. Aim for restoration, comfort one another, agree with one another, live in peace; and the God of love and peace will be with you. ¹²Welcome one another with a sacred embrace. ¹³All the saints greet you. ¹⁴The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Spirit be with all of you.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Paul quotes Deuteronomy 19:15, the legal requirement for establishing a charge. The application may be that each of Paul's three visits constitutes a 'witness' against the unrepentant — the first visit founded the church, the second ('painful visit') confronted the offense, and the third will bring judgment if necessary.

1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Deuteronomy 19:15. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
2. The phrase ou pheisomai ('I will not spare') is the same verb used in 1:23, where Paul explained his delayed visit was 'to spare' the Corinthians. The time for sparing is ending; if repentance has not occurred by the time he arrives, Paul will exercise apostolic discipline.
3. The Corinthians demanded proof (dokimēn) that Christ speaks through Paul. Paul's response is that Christ's power among them — seen in the gospel that transformed their lives and the signs that accompanied Paul's ministry — is that proof. The contrast between 'not weak' (ouk asthenei) and 'powerful' (dynatei) anticipates the next verse's paradox.
4. This verse is the Christological key to the entire letter. Christ's crucifixion was an act of weakness (ex astheneias) — the most helpless, degrading death imaginable. Yet from that weakness, he lives by the power of God (ek dynamēōs theou). Paul applies the same pattern to himself: his weakness mirrors Christ's crucifixion, and the power he exercises mirrors Christ's resurrection life. The cross-resurrection pattern is the template for apostolic ministry.
5. Paul redirects the demand for proof: instead of testing Paul, the Corinthians should test themselves (heautous peirazete... heautous dokimazete). The test is whether Christ is 'in' them — a statement of the mystical union that defines Christian existence. The word adokimoi ('failing the test, disapproved, disqualified') is the negative of dokimos ('approved, tested'), used in verse 3 for the proof they sought from Paul.
6. Paul expresses confidence (elpizō, 'I hope') that the Corinthians will recognize that he is not adokimos ('disqualified'). The logic is circular by design: if Christ is in the Corinthians (v. 5), and Paul brought them Christ, then Paul cannot be a fraud.
7. Paul's prayer reveals his deepest pastoral priority: he wants the Corinthians to do right, even if it means Paul looks bad. If they repent before he arrives, he will not need to exercise discipline — which means he will not get the chance to 'prove' his authority. He is willing to appear adokimos ('failed, disqualified') as long as the Corinthians are doing kalon ('what is good, what is right').
8. This deceptively simple sentence contains a profound claim about apostolic authority: it operates within boundaries set by truth itself. Paul's power is not arbitrary but bound to the truth of the gospel. He cannot act against the truth even if he wanted to — apostolic authority serves truth, not the reverse.
9. The final occurrence of the weakness-strength paradox in the letter: Paul rejoices when he is weak and the Corinthians are strong. The word katartisin ('restoration, mending, making complete') is related to the verb katartizō used for mending fishing nets (Matthew 4:21) and for setting a broken bone. Paul wants the Corinthian community healed and whole.
10. The purpose of this entire severe section (chs. 10-13) is restated: Paul writes firmly now so that he will not have to act firmly later. His authority (exousia) is for oikodomēn ('building up, edification'), not kathairesin ('tearing down, destruction') — the same distinction made in 10:8. The letter is an instrument of pastoral care, not punitive power.
11. Five imperatives close the letter: chairete ('rejoice' or 'farewell'), katartizesthe ('restore yourselves, be mended'), parakaleisthe ('comfort one another, encourage one another'), to auto phroneite ('think the same thing, be of one mind'), eirēneuete ('live in peace'). The promise attached is conditional in form: do these things, and 'the God of love and peace will be with you.' The title 'God of love and peace' is unique to this verse.
12. The 'holy kiss' (hagiō philēmati) is the standard early Christian liturgical greeting (cf. Romans 16:16; 1 Corinthians 16:20; 1 Thessalonians 5:26). It expressed familial bond and spiritual unity within the believing community, distinguishing itself from merely social or erotic greetings by the qualifier 'holy.'
13. The greeting from 'all the saints' (hoi hagioi pantes) encompasses the entire believing community from which Paul writes, connecting the Corinthians to the wider body of Christ. The universal scope ('all') emphasizes that the Corinthians are not isolated but part of a network of churches united in faith.
14. This is the fullest Trinitarian benediction in the New Testament and has become the most widely used liturgical blessing in Christian worship. Three divine persons are named with three distinct gifts: grace (charis) from Christ, love (agapē) from God the Father, and fellowship (koinōnia) from the Holy Spirit. The order — Christ, Father, Spirit — is unusual (Matthew 28:19 has Father, Son, Spirit) and reflects Paul's experiential starting point: believers first encounter Christ's grace, through which they know the Father's love, and this becomes real in the Spirit's fellowship. The SBLGNT omits the 'Amen' found in the KJV and some manuscripts.

Galatians

Summary: Galatians 1 opens with Paul's apostolic greeting, immediately asserting that his commission comes from Jesus Christ and God the Father, not from any human authority. After a brief doxology, Paul expresses astonishment that the Galatian churches are so quickly abandoning the gospel he preached to them in favor of a distorted version. He pronounces a double curse on anyone — even an angel from heaven — who preaches a different gospel. Paul then defends his apostolic authority by narrating his personal history: his former life as a persecutor of the church, his dramatic call through divine revelation, his years in Arabia and Damascus, and his eventual brief visit to Jerusalem where he met only Peter and James.

What Makes This Remarkable: *The letter lacks Paul's customary thanksgiving section — he moves directly from greeting to rebuke, signaling the urgency of the crisis. The double anathema formula (vv. 8-9) is the strongest language Paul uses in any letter. His autobiographical defense establishes a pattern that dominates the first two chapters: the gospel he preaches was not received from humans but through a direct revelation of Jesus Christ. The Greek apokalypsis ('revelation, unveiling') in verse 12 is the same word used for apocalyptic disclosure — Paul's encounter with Christ was not instruction but unveiling.*

Translation Friction: The identity of the 'agitators' promoting a different gospel is debated — they likely advocated circumcision and Torah observance for Gentile believers (as clarified in later chapters). Paul's claim to have received his gospel independently of the Jerusalem apostles creates tension with Acts' account of his conversion and early ministry. We render the Greek as given without harmonizing. The phrase 'the churches of Galatia' leaves unresolved whether these are in north or south Galatia — the so-called North Galatian and South Galatian hypotheses.

Connections: Paul's call narrative echoes the prophetic call patterns of Jeremiah 1:5 ('before I formed you in the womb') and Isaiah 49:1 ('called me from my mother's womb'). The curse formula connects to Deuteronomy 27:15-26. The revelation of the Son 'in me' (en emoi, v. 16) connects to Paul's 'Christ in me' theology developed fully in 2:20.

¹Paul, an apostle — not sent from human authority nor commissioned by any human being, but through Jesus Christ and God the Father who raised him from the dead — ²All the brothers and sisters which are with me, to the churches of Galatia:. ³Grace to you and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ, ⁴Who offered himself for our wrongdoings, that he may deliver us from this present wicked age, according to the will of God and our Father:. ⁵To him be glory through all the ages. Amen. ⁶I am astonished that you are so quickly deserting the one who called you by the grace of Christ and turning to a different gospel — ⁷Not that there really is another gospel — it is simply that certain people are troubling you and trying to distort the good news about Christ. ⁸But even if we or an angel from heaven should proclaim to you a gospel contrary to what we proclaimed to you, let that one be cursed. ⁹As we have said before, so now I say again: if anyone is proclaiming to you a gospel contrary to what you received, let that one be cursed. ¹⁰Am I now seeking human approval, or God's? Am I trying to please people? If I were still trying to please people, I would not be a servant of Christ. ¹¹For I want you to know, brothers and sisters, that the gospel I proclaimed is not of human origin. ¹²For I did not receive it from any human source, nor was I taught it, but it came through a revelation of Jesus Christ. ¹³For you have heard about my former way of life in Judaism — how I persecuted the church of God violently and tried to destroy it. ¹⁴I was advancing in Judaism beyond many of my contemporaries among my people, being far more zealous for the traditions of my ancestors. ¹⁵But when God, who set me apart from my mother's womb and called me through his grace, was pleased ¹⁶To reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him in the midst of the heathen. Immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood: ¹⁷Neither traveled I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles prior to me. But I traveled into Arabia, and returned again to Damascus. ¹⁸Then after three years I went up to Jerusalem to get acquainted with Cephas and stayed with him fifteen days. ¹⁹I did not see any other of the apostles except James, the Lord's brother. ²⁰Now regarding what I am writing to you — before God, I am not lying. ²¹Then I went into the regions of Syria and Cilicia. ²²I was still personally unknown to the churches of Judea that are in Christ. ²³They only kept hearing, "The one who once persecuted us is now proclaiming the faith he once tried to destroy." ²⁴And they glorified God because of me.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Paul's double negation (ouk ap' anthropon oude di' anthropou) distinguishes both the source and the agent of his apostleship. The preposition apo ('from') denies human origin; dia ('through') denies human mediation. This opening salvo establishes the letter's central argument: Paul's gospel and authority derive directly from God, not from Jerusalem or any human chain of authorization.
1. The participial clause 'who raised him from the dead' (tou egeirantos auton ek nekron) is not incidental — it anchors Paul's apostleship in the resurrection, the same event that commissioned him on the Damascus road.
2. The Greek adelphoi is grammatically masculine plural but functioned as an inclusive term for the community of believers. We render 'brothers and sisters' to reflect the inclusive reference. The plural 'churches' (ekklēsiai) indicates this is a circular letter addressed to multiple congregations in the region of Galatia.
3. Paul's standard greeting combines the Greek charis ('grace') with the Hebrew-rooted eirēnē ('peace,' translating shalom). The single preposition apo ('from') governs both 'God our Father' and 'the Lord Jesus Christ,' placing them in a coordinate relationship as the joint source of grace and peace.
4. The Greek aionos tou enestotos ponerou ('the present evil age') reflects Jewish apocalyptic theology that divides history into 'this age' and 'the age to come.' Paul's word is aiōn ('age'), not kosmos ('world') — the emphasis is temporal, not spatial. The rescue is from a corrupt era, not escape from the physical world.
4. The verb exelētai ('rescue, deliver') is in the middle voice, suggesting Christ's active, personal involvement in the deliverance. The phrase 'according to the will of God' grounds the entire saving act in divine initiative.
5. The doxology eis tous aiōnas tōn aiōnōn ('unto the ages of the ages') is a Hebraism intensifying the concept of eternity — literally 'to the ages of ages.' This formula is standard in Pauline doxologies but unusual this early in a letter. Paul typically places his doxology later; its early placement here may reflect the gravity of the situation — he pauses to anchor his rebuke in worship before proceeding.
6. The verb metatitheske ('you are turning, deserting') is present tense, indicating the defection is in progress, not yet complete. The same verb was used for political or military defection — switching allegiance. Paul frames the Galatians' shift not as a theological adjustment but as treason against the one who called them.
6. The absence of a thanksgiving section (standard in Paul's other letters) is itself a rhetorical statement — Paul is too alarmed for pleasantries.
7. Paul plays on two Greek words for 'other': heteron ('different in kind,' v. 6) and allo ('another of the same kind,' v. 7). The so-called 'other gospel' is not actually a gospel at all — it is a distortion (metastrepsai, 'to turn around, reverse, pervert'). The verb tarassontes ('disturbing, agitating') was used for stirring up sedition; these unnamed opponents are creating upheaval in the community.
8. The Greek anathema ('cursed, devoted to destruction') corresponds to the Hebrew cherem — something placed under a ban, devoted to God for destruction. This is not mere disapproval but a solemn invocation of divine judgment. Paul includes himself ('we') in the hypothetical, establishing that the gospel's authority transcends even apostolic persons. The conditional ean with the subjunctive presents this as a real possibility, not an absurd hypothetical.

9. The repetition transforms the conditional warning into a direct verdict. The shift from 'we' to 'I' (legō) makes the pronouncement personal and authoritative. The verb parelabete ('you received') is a technical term for receiving tradition — the Galatians received a specific, defined gospel, and deviation from it is not progress but apostasy.
10. The rhetorical questions respond to an apparent accusation that Paul was a people-pleaser who tailored his message to gain approval. The word doulos ('servant, slave') carries its full force — Paul is Christ's slave, not a freelance diplomat. The adverb eti ('still') implies Paul once did seek human approval (in his former life as a Pharisee, perhaps), but that era is over.
11. The phrase kata anthrōpon ('according to a human standard') denies that Paul's gospel conforms to any human pattern or was generated by human reasoning. This verse introduces the autobiographical defense that runs through 2:14 — Paul will demonstrate the divine origin of his gospel by tracing his own story.
12. The genitive Iēsou Christou ('of Jesus Christ') is ambiguous — it could be objective ('a revelation about Jesus Christ') or subjective ('a revelation given by Jesus Christ'). Both senses may be intended: Christ was both the content and the agent of the revelation. The Greek apokalypsis ('unveiling, disclosure') denotes a direct divine disclosure, not gradual learning or instruction.
13. The Greek anastrophē ('way of life, conduct') is rendered 'conversation' in the KJV using the word's older English meaning. The phrase kath' hyperbolēn ('beyond measure, to an extraordinary degree') intensifies the verb — Paul's persecution was not casual but extreme. The imperfect tenses (ediōkon, eporthoun) indicate sustained, repeated action: 'I kept persecuting... I kept trying to destroy.'
14. The verb proekopton ('was advancing, making progress') was used for cutting a path forward — Paul was outpacing his peers. The word zēlōtēs ('zealot, one burning with zeal') echoes the Maccabean tradition of violent zeal for the Torah. Paul's pre-conversion identity was defined by aggressive devotion to ancestral tradition (patrikōn paradoseōn), which he now reinterprets through the lens of divine call.
15. The language directly echoes prophetic call narratives: 'set apart from my mother's womb' parallels Jeremiah 1:5 ('Before I formed you in the womb I knew you') and Isaiah 49:1 ('The LORD called me from the womb'). Paul interprets his entire life — including the persecution years — as part of a divine plan that predated his birth. The verb aphorisas ('having set apart') is related to Pharisaios ('Pharisee,' meaning 'separated one'), creating an ironic wordplay: God's separation of Paul preceded and superseded his self-separation as a Pharisee.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Jeremiah 1:5 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 49:1 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. The phrase en emoi ('in me') rather than the expected 'to me' (moi) is striking — the revelation was not merely informational but internal and transformative. The Greek ethnesin ('nations, Gentiles') indicates that Paul's commission to the Gentiles was simultaneous with his call, not a later development. The idiom sarki kai haimati ('flesh and blood') means mortal humans — Paul did not seek human validation of his divine encounter.
17. The verb anēlthon ('went up') reflects Jerusalem's geographic and theological elevation — one always 'goes up' to Jerusalem. Paul's point is that he deliberately avoided the apostolic headquarters. 'Arabia' likely refers to the Nabatean kingdom east of Damascus, not necessarily the Arabian Peninsula. Paul's time in Arabia is unrecorded in Acts and its purpose is debated — possibly for reflection, possibly for early mission work.
18. The verb historēsai is significant — it means 'to inquire of, to get to know, to visit for the purpose of learning about someone.' It implies a purposeful visit to learn from Peter, but not to receive authorization. Paul uses the Aramaic name Kēphas (Cephas) rather than the Greek Petros (Peter), possibly reflecting the name's original use in the Jerusalem community. The fifteen-day visit is too brief for systematic instruction — Paul is arguing for independence, not dependence.
19. James (Iakōbos) is identified as 'the brother of the Lord' (ton adelphon tou kyriou), distinguishing him from James the son of Zebedee. Whether adelphos here means full brother, half-brother, or kinsman is debated across Christian traditions. Paul's limited contact — only Peter and James — reinforces his independence from the Jerusalem leadership. The phrase may also imply that James held apostolic status, though he was not one of the Twelve.
20. The solemn oath formula enōpion tou theou ('before God') invokes God as witness. That Paul feels compelled to swear he is telling the truth suggests the Galatians have heard a conflicting account of his early history — perhaps from the agitators who claimed Paul was dependent on Jerusalem and was now teaching a watered-down version of their gospel.
21. Syria and Cilicia were the provinces surrounding Paul's hometown of Tarsus (in Cilicia) and the base church of Antioch (in Syria). Paul's point is geographic distance from Jerusalem — he was active in ministry far from the apostolic center, further demonstrating his independence.
22. The phrase agnoumenos tō prosōpō ('unknown by face') means the Judean believers had not met Paul in person. The participle reinforces that Paul had no extended contact with the broader Jerusalem-area church. The phrase en Christō ('in Christ') marks these as specifically Christian assemblies, distinguished from the synagogues.
23. The article ho diōkōn ('the one persecuting') functions almost as a title — Paul was known as 'the Persecutor.' The irony is powerful: the faith (tēn pistin) he tried to destroy (eporthēi, the same verb as 1:13) is now the message he proclaims. Paul's conversion is framed as the most compelling evidence for the gospel's divine power.
24. The phrase en emoi ('in me' or 'because of me') echoes the same phrase in verse 16 where God revealed his Son 'in me.' The chapter closes with a striking reversal: the Judean churches — who never met Paul — praised God for the very transformation that his Galatian opponents now question. Paul's former enemies became his unwitting character witnesses.

Summary: Galatians 2 continues Paul's autobiographical defense of his apostolic authority and gospel. He recounts his visit to Jerusalem fourteen years later, where he presented his gospel to the recognized leaders — James, Cephas, and John — who added nothing to his message and affirmed his mission to the Gentiles. Paul then narrates his public confrontation with Peter at Antioch, where Peter's withdrawal from table fellowship with Gentile believers exposed a contradiction between gospel truth and social pressure. The chapter culminates in Paul's most concentrated statement of justification theology: a person is made right with God not through works of the law but through the faithfulness of Jesus Christ. The chapter closes with the iconic declaration that Paul has been crucified with Christ and now lives by faith in the Son of God.

What Makes This Remarkable: This chapter contains one of the most theologically dense passages in all of Paul's writings (vv. 15-21). The Antioch incident (vv. 11-14) reveals that even Peter could compromise gospel integrity under social pressure. The phrase 'crucified with Christ' (v. 20) introduces participatory atonement language — believers do not merely benefit from Christ's death but are incorporated into it. The pistis Christou debate (v. 16) — whether the Greek means 'faith in Christ' or 'the faithfulness of Christ' — is one of the most consequential translation decisions in Pauline studies.

Translation Friction: The relationship between Paul's Jerusalem visits in Galatians 2 and Acts 15 (the Jerusalem Council) is debated — they may describe the same event or different ones. The pistis Iēsou Christou construction in verse 16 is grammatically ambiguous (objective or subjective genitive), and we note both options. Paul's rebuke of Peter raises questions about early church unity that the text does not resolve.

Connections: The 'right hand of fellowship' (v. 9) echoes covenant-making gestures in the Old Testament. Paul's 'crucified with Christ' language connects to Romans 6:1-11 (baptismal death with Christ). The justification-by-faith argument is the compressed version of what Paul expands in Romans 3-4. The Antioch incident foreshadows the broader Jew-Gentile tension addressed in Ephesians 2.

¹Then after fourteen years I went up again to Jerusalem with Barnabas, taking Titus along as well. ²I went up because of a revelation, and I laid before them the gospel that I proclaim among the Gentiles — but privately to those who were recognized as leaders — to make sure I was not running or had not run in vain. ³But not even Titus, who was with me, was compelled to be circumcised, though he was a Greek. ⁴Now this matter arose because of false brothers secretly brought in, who slipped in to spy on the freedom we have in Christ Jesus, so that they might enslave us. ⁵To them we did not yield in submission even for a moment, so that the truth of the gospel might be preserved for you. ⁶And from those recognized as important — whatever they once were makes no difference to me; God shows no favoritism — those leaders added nothing to my message. ⁷On the contrary, when they saw that I had been entrusted with the gospel for the uncircumcised, just as Peter had been entrusted with the gospel for the circumcised — ⁸For the same God who worked through Peter as an apostle to the Jewish people also worked powerfully through me as an apostle to the Gentiles. ⁹When James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be pillars, perceived the grace that was given to me, they gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship. That we should go to the heathen, and they to the circumcision. ¹⁰They asked only that we remember the poor — the very thing I was eager to do. ¹¹But when Cephas came to Antioch, I opposed him to his face, because he stood condemned. ¹²For before certain people came from James, he used to eat with the Gentiles. But when they arrived, he began to draw back and separate himself, fearing those of the circumcision party. ¹³And the rest of the Jewish believers joined him in this hypocrisy, so that even Barnabas was led astray by their hypocrisy. ¹⁴But when I saw that they were not walking in line with the truth of the gospel, I said to Cephas in front of everyone: "If you, though a Jew, live like a Gentile and not like a Jew, how can you compel the Gentiles to live like Jews?" ¹⁵We ourselves are Jews by birth and not Gentile sinners, ¹⁶Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law — for by the works of the law will no flesh be justified. ¹⁷But if, in seeking to be justified in Christ, we ourselves have also been found to be sinners, does that make Christ an agent of sin? Absolutely not! ¹⁸For if I rebuild what I tore down, I demonstrate that I am a lawbreaker. ¹⁹For through the law I died to the law, so that I might live for God. ²⁰I have been crucified with Christ. It is no longer I who live, but Christ lives in me. And the life I now live in the body, I live by faith in the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me. ²¹I do not set aside the grace of God, for if righteousness could be gained through the law, then Christ died for nothing.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Whether the fourteen years are counted from Paul's conversion or from the previous Jerusalem visit (1:18) is debated. Titus, a Gentile believer, serves as a living test case for the circumcision question — his presence in Jerusalem is itself an argument. Barnabas's inclusion signals that Paul is not a lone actor but represents the Antioch church.
2. The phrase kata apokalypsin ('according to a revelation') indicates divine direction, not human summons — Paul went because God sent him, not because Jerusalem called him. The verb anethēmēn ('laid before, set forth') means to present for consideration, not to submit for approval. The athletic metaphor trechō ('run') pictures ministry as a race that could be wasted if the Jerusalem leaders rejected Paul's gospel. The phrase tois dokousin ('those who seemed, those of reputation') carries a slight edge — Paul uses this somewhat ironic phrase three times in this passage.
3. The Titus test case is Paul's strongest evidence: in the very heart of Jerusalem, with the apostolic leadership present, an uncircumcised Greek believer was accepted without being required to undergo circumcision. The passive ēnagkasthē ('was compelled') leaves open whether there was pressure to circumcise him — only that the pressure did not succeed.
4. The vocabulary is militant: pareisaktos ('smuggled in'), pareisēlthon ('infiltrated'), kataskopēsai ('to spy out, reconnoiter' — a military intelligence term), katadoulōsousin ('to enslave completely'). Paul portrays the false brothers as enemy agents conducting covert operations against the community's freedom. The kata- prefix on katadoulōsousin intensifies the enslavement — they aimed to reduce believers to total bondage under the law.
5. The phrase pros hōran ('for an hour') is idiomatic for 'even momentarily.' Paul's resistance was absolute and immediate. The purpose clause hina hē alētheia tou euangeliiou diamenē ('so that the truth of the gospel might remain') frames the confrontation not as personal stubbornness but as gospel preservation. The Galatians' freedom is at stake in Paul's past decision.
6. Paul's parenthetical interruption is characteristically abrupt. The phrase prosōpon ou lambanei ('does not receive face') is a Hebraism (Hebrew: nasa panim, 'lift the face') meaning God does not show partiality based on status. The verb prosanethento ('added to, contributed to') means the Jerusalem leaders had nothing to supplement or correct in Paul's gospel — their authority did not enhance or alter it.
7. The passive pepisteumai ('I have been entrusted') indicates divine commissioning — God entrusted Paul with this work. The gospel itself is one; it is the audiences that differ. 'The uncircumcision' (akrobystia) and 'the circumcision' (peritomē) are metonyms for Gentiles and Jews respectively. Paul uses 'Peter' (Petros) here rather than 'Cephas' as in surrounding verses — possibly because Peter was the more widely recognized form.
8. The verb energeō ('to work in, to empower, to be active in') attributes the effectiveness of both apostolates to God's power working through each apostle. The parallel structure (ho energēsas Petrō... enērgēsēn kai emoi) places Paul's commission on precisely the same divine footing as Peter's — the same God, the same empowerment, different audiences.
9. James is listed first, suggesting his prominence in the Jerusalem church by this time. The 'pillars' (styloi) metaphor likely draws on the temple imagery — these leaders are foundational supports of the community. The 'right hand of fellowship' (dexias koinōnias) is a formal covenant gesture recognizing mutual partnership. The agreement is geographic and ethnic, not doctrinal — one gospel, two mission fields.
10. The 'poor' (ptōchōn) likely refers specifically to the Jerusalem church, which faced economic hardship. Paul's collection for Jerusalem (Romans 15:25-27; 1 Corinthians 16:1-4; 2 Corinthians 8-9) fulfills this request. The verb espoudasa ('I was eager, I made haste') indicates Paul's wholehearted agreement — care for the poor was not an imposed obligation but a shared commitment.
11. The shift from the Jerusalem accord to the Antioch confrontation is abrupt and dramatic. The phrase kata prosōpon ('to the face') means publicly, openly — not behind his back. The perfect participle kategnōsmenos ('having been condemned, standing condemned') indicates that Peter's actions had already self-evidently condemned him before Paul spoke. Paul's willingness to publicly confront the leading apostle demonstrates that gospel truth outranks apostolic hierarchy.
12. The imperfect synēsthien ('he was eating, he used to eat') indicates habitual practice — Peter had been regularly sharing meals with Gentile believers. The imperfections hypostellen ('was drawing back') and aphōrizen ('was separating') picture a gradual withdrawal, not a single dramatic exit. Table fellowship in the ancient world implied full social and religious acceptance; Peter's withdrawal communicated that Gentile believers were second-class. The 'certain people from James' may or may not have represented James's actual position.
13. The compound verb synpekrithēsan ('acted hypocritically together with') uses the theatrical term hypokrisis ('playing a role, wearing a mask'). Paul's charge is devastating: Peter and the others were not acting according to their actual convictions but performing for an audience. The word 'even' (kai) before Barnabas registers Paul's shock — his own ministry partner was swept up in the pretense. The verb synapēchthē ('was carried away, swept along') suggests Barnabas was pulled by the current rather than acting deliberately.
14. The verb orthopodousin ('walk straight, walk uprightly') occurs only here in the New Testament — literally 'to walk with straight feet.' Paul's accusation is that Peter's conduct is crooked relative to the gospel's straight line. The logic of Paul's rebuke is devastating: Peter himself had been living like a Gentile (eating non-kosher food with Gentile believers), which proves he knew the law's food restrictions were not binding. His withdrawal now implicitly demands that Gentiles adopt Jewish practices — a requirement Peter himself had abandoned. The verb ioudaizein ('to judaize, to live as a Jew') appears only here in the New Testament.

15. It is debated where Paul's direct speech to Peter ends and his reflection for the Galatians begins — the transition may be gradual. The phrase 'Gentile sinners' (ex ethnōn hamartōloi) reflects standard Jewish categorization of Gentiles as outside the law and therefore sinners by definition. Paul adopts this language only to subvert it in the following verses.
16. This is the most theologically concentrated verse in Galatians. The phrase pistis Iēsou Christou (and pistis Christou) is the center of a major scholarly debate. The genitive can be objective ('faith in Jesus Christ') or subjective ('the faithfulness of Jesus Christ'). The subjective reading sees Christ's own faithfulness — his covenant loyalty unto death — as the ground of justification, with human faith as the response. The objective reading sees human faith directed toward Christ as the means of justification. The threefold denial of works of the law (ex ergōn nomou) echoes Psalm 143:2 LXX.
16. The verb dikaioutai ('is justified, is declared righteous') carries both forensic (legal declaration) and relational (right relationship) dimensions. Paul does not separate these.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 143:2. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. Paul anticipates an objection: if Jewish believers abandon the law to be justified in Christ and are then found to be 'sinners' (by the law's standard), does that mean Christ promotes sin? The emphatic mē genoito ('may it never be!' — rendered 'absolutely not!') is Paul's strongest formula of denial, appearing fifteen times in his letters. The word diakonos ('servant, agent, minister') applied to Christ sarcastically — would Christ serve sin's interests? The very idea is absurd.
18. The building metaphor (katalyō, 'tear down'; oikodomeō, 'build up') pictures the law as a wall that Paul demolished. Rebuilding it — returning to law observance as the basis for acceptance — would prove Paul wrong to have torn it down in the first place. The word parabatēs ('transgressor, lawbreaker') turns the accusation around: the real transgression is not abandoning the law but returning to it after receiving grace.
19. The paradox is sharp: the law itself brought about Paul's death to the law. How the law accomplished this is debated — possibly through the law's curse that fell on Christ (3:13), or through the law's inability to produce life (3:21), which drove Paul to the end of himself. The purpose clause 'so that I might live for God' (hina theō zēsō) reframes death as liberation: death to the law is the prerequisite for life with God.
20. The perfect tense synestaurōmai ('I have been crucified with') indicates a past event with ongoing results — the crucifixion with Christ happened and remains in effect. This is Paul's most concentrated statement of participatory soteriology: the believer's identity is relocated from the old self to Christ. The phrase en pistei zō tē tou huiou tou theou could be rendered 'by the faithfulness of the Son of God' (subjective genitive) — maintaining consistency with verse 16. However, the deeply personal tone of this verse ('who loved me and gave himself for me') suits the objective genitive reading ('by faith in the Son of God') — the believer's personal trust responding to Christ's personal love. We render as objective genitive here while noting the ambiguity.
20. The verb paradontos ('having given over, having handed over') is the same verb used for Judas's betrayal — Christ's self-giving transforms the language of betrayal into the language of salvation.
21. The verb athetēō ('to set aside, to nullify, to treat as invalid') was used for annulling a treaty or breaking a covenant. To return to the law for justification would be to declare God's grace null and void. The final statement is devastating in its simplicity: dōrean apethanen ('he died gratuitously, for nothing, without cause'). If the law could produce righteousness, the cross was pointless — the most wasteful death in history. Paul leaves the Galatians with this stark either/or: grace or law, not both.

Summary: Galatians 3 shifts from autobiography to theological argument. Paul begins with a sharp rebuke — 'You foolish Galatians!' — and asks whether they received the Spirit through law-keeping or through believing the gospel. He then builds a sustained case from Scripture that Abraham was justified by faith, that the law brings a curse from which Christ redeemed humanity by becoming a curse himself, that the Abrahamic promise operates through faith rather than law, and that the law served as a temporary guardian until Christ came. The chapter culminates in the declaration that in Christ there is neither Jew nor Greek, slave nor free, male nor female — all are Abraham's offspring and heirs according to the promise.

What Makes This Remarkable: *Paul's argument moves through five distinct scriptural proofs: Abraham's faith (Genesis 15:6), the blessing of the nations (Genesis 12:3), the curse of the law (Deuteronomy 27:26), justification by faith (Habakkuk 2:4), and redemption from the curse (Deuteronomy 21:23). The 'seed' argument in verse 16 turns on the singular form of the Greek sperma — a striking piece of exegesis. The law as paidagogos (vv. 24-25) draws on the Greco-Roman institution of the slave-tutor who supervised a child until maturity. Verse 28 is one of the most radical equality* statements in ancient literature.

Translation Friction: Paul's claim that the law was given 'through angels by a mediator' (v. 19) draws on Jewish tradition not explicit in the Torah itself. His singular 'seed' argument (v. 16) has been criticized as grammatically forced, since collective nouns are regularly singular in both Hebrew and Greek. We render the text faithfully and note the exegetical complexity. The phrase 'baptized into Christ' (v. 27) raises questions about the relationship between faith and baptism that Paul does not resolve here.

Connections: Abraham's justification by faith (v. 6) is the same text Paul expounds in Romans 4. The 'curse of the law' argument (vv. 10-14) builds on Deuteronomy 27-28. The law as guardian until Christ anticipates the fuller development in Galatians 4:1-7. The baptismal formula of verse 28 likely reflects an early Christian confession used at baptism. The 'clothing' metaphor (v. 27) connects to the new-creation imagery Paul develops elsewhere (2 Corinthians 5:17; Colossians 3:9-10).

¹You foolish Galatians! Who has bewitched you? Before your very eyes Jesus Christ was publicly portrayed as crucified! ²I want to learn only one thing from you: Did you receive the Spirit by works of the law, or by hearing with faith? ³Are you so foolish? Having begun by the Spirit, are you now trying to reach completion by the flesh? ⁴Did you experience so much for nothing? — if indeed it was for nothing. ⁵So then, does God supply the Spirit to you and work miracles among you because of works of the law, or because of hearing with faith? ⁶Just as Abraham "believed God, and it was credited to him as righteousness." ⁷Understand, then, that those who are of faith — these are the children of Abraham. ⁸And the Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the Gentiles by faith, proclaimed the gospel in advance to Abraham: "In you all the nations will be blessed." ⁹So then, those who are of faith are blessed along with Abraham, the man of faith. ¹⁰For all who rely on works of the law are under a curse. For it is written: "Cursed is everyone who does not continue in all the things written in the book of the law, to do them." ¹¹Now it is clear that no one is justified before God by the law, because "The righteous one will live by faith." ¹²But the law is not based on faith; rather, "The one who does them will live by them." ¹³Christ redeemed us from the curse of the law by becoming a curse for us — for it is written: "Cursed is everyone who hangs on a tree" — ¹⁴That the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles by way of Jesus Christ. That we might accept the promise of the Spirit by way of faith. ¹⁵Brothers and sisters, I speak in human terms: even a human covenant, once it has been ratified, no one annuls or adds conditions to it. ¹⁶Now the promises were spoken to Abraham and to his offspring. It does not say, "And to offsprings," as referring to many, but as referring to one: "And to your offspring," who is Christ. ¹⁷This is what I am saying: the law, which came four hundred and thirty years later, does not invalidate a covenant previously ratified by God, so as to nullify the promise. ¹⁸For if the inheritance comes from the law, it no longer comes from the promise. But God granted it to Abraham through a promise. ¹⁹Why then the law? It was added because of transgressions, until the offspring should come to whom the promise had been made, and it was arranged through angels by the hand of a mediator. ²⁰Now a mediator implies more than one party, but God is one. ²¹Is the law then opposed to the promises of God? Absolutely not! For if a law had been given that could give life, then righteousness would indeed have come through the law. ²²But the Scripture imprisoned everything under sin, so that the promise might be given through the faithfulness of Jesus Christ to those who believe. ²³Now before faith came, we were held in custody under the law, confined until the coming faith would be revealed. ²⁴So then, the law was our guardian until Christ came, so that we might be justified by faith. ²⁵But now that faith has come, we are no longer under a guardian. ²⁶For you are all children of God through faith in Christ Jesus. ²⁷For all of you who were baptized into Christ have clothed yourselves with Christ. ²⁸There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither slave nor free, there is no male and female — for you are all one in Christ Jesus. ²⁹And if you belong to Christ, then you are Abraham's offspring, heirs according to the promise.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The Greek anoētoi ('foolish, senseless, unthinking') is not an insult to intelligence but a charge of irrationality — they are failing to think through the implications of what they already know. The verb ebaskanen ('bewitched') evokes the 'evil eye' of ancient Mediterranean culture — someone has cast a spell over them. The verb prographē ('was publicly displayed, was placarded') was used for official public notices or proclamations posted in the marketplace. Paul's preaching was so vivid that it was as if Christ crucified had been posted on a billboard before their eyes.

2. Paul appeals to the Galatians' own experience as evidence. The phrase ex akoēs pisteōs ('from hearing of faith') is ambiguous: it could mean 'by hearing the message that calls for faith,' 'by hearing that comes from faith,' or 'by a faithful hearing.' The contrast with 'works of the law' suggests the emphasis is on receptive trust versus active effort. The Galatians' reception of the Spirit — presumably visible in charismatic experience — occurred without any law observance.
3. The contrast between pneumati ('by the Spirit') and sarki ('by the flesh') is not spirit versus body but divine power versus human effort. The verb epiteleisthe ('being completed, being perfected') in the middle voice suggests the Galatians are attempting to complete by their own effort what God started by his Spirit. The irony is sharp: moving from Spirit to flesh is not progress but regression.
4. The verb epathete can mean either 'suffered' or 'experienced' — both senses may be in play. The Galatians may have faced persecution as a result of their faith. The trailing phrase ei ge kai eikē ('if indeed even for nothing') leaves a sliver of hope — Paul has not yet given up on them.
5. The present participles epichorēgōn ('supplying, lavishly providing') and energōn ('working, being active in') indicate ongoing divine activity, not a one-time event. God is currently supplying the Spirit and currently working miracles — and this is happening without law observance. The verb epichorēgeō was used for a wealthy patron generously underwriting a public performance — God supplies abundantly, not grudgingly.
6. Paul quotes Genesis 15:6 (LXX), the foundational text for his justification theology (cf. Romans 4). The verb elogisthē ('was credited, was reckoned, was counted') is an accounting term — righteousness was deposited to Abraham's account on the basis of his trust, not his performance. This precedes the institution of circumcision (Genesis 17) by at least fourteen years, which becomes Paul's key chronological argument.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 15:6. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 17. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The imperative ginōskete ('know, understand, recognize') could also be indicative ('you know'). The phrase hoi ek pisteōs ('those out of faith, those whose identity is defined by faith') establishes faith, not ethnicity or law observance, as the marker of Abrahamic descent. This is the theological foundation for Gentile inclusion: Abraham's real children are identified by sharing Abraham's faith.
8. Paul personifies Scripture (hē graphē) as an agent that 'foresaw' and 'proclaimed the gospel in advance' (proeuēngelisato — a remarkable compound verb meaning 'pre-evangelized'). The quotation combines Genesis 12:3 and 18:18. Paul reads the Abrahamic promise to bless 'all nations' (panta ta ethnē) as a prophetic announcement of Gentile justification by faith — the gospel was already embedded in the Abrahamic covenant.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 12:3 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The adjective pistō ('faithful, believing') applied to Abraham emphasizes his defining characteristic: trust in God's promise. The preposition syn ('together with') establishes solidarity — those who share Abraham's faith share Abraham's blessing. Paul has redrawn the boundaries of the Abrahamic family: faith, not circumcision, is the membership marker.
10. Paul quotes Deuteronomy 27:26 to argue that the law's own terms condemn those who depend on it — since the law demands total, unbroken obedience (pasin tois gegrammenois, 'all the things written'), any failure brings the covenant curse. The word katara ('curse') is the opposite of eulogia ('blessing') from verse 9. Paul's logic: law-reliance leads to curse; faith leads to blessing. The assumption is that no one achieves perfect obedience.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Deuteronomy 27:26 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. Paul quotes Habakkuk 2:4, a text also central to Romans 1:17. The Hebrew of Habakkuk reads be'emunato ('by his faithfulness/faith'), and the ambiguity of ek pisteōs ('by faith/faithfulness') carries over into the Greek. The quotation establishes that the life of the righteous person is grounded in faith, not in law — and since this is Scripture's own testimony, the law itself witnesses against law-righteousness.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Habakkuk 2:4. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. Paul quotes Leviticus 18:5, which promises life through doing the commandments. His point is that law and faith operate on fundamentally different principles: law demands doing, faith demands trusting. The two systems are incompatible as bases for justification. This does not mean the law is evil (Paul addresses that in 3:19-22), but that its operating principle differs from faith's.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Leviticus 18:5. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. The verb exēgorasen ('redeemed, bought out of') is a marketplace term for purchasing a slave's freedom. Christ's redemption is presented as a commercial transaction: he paid the price to buy believers out of the law's curse. The mechanism is substitutionary: genomenos hyper hēmōn katara ('having become a curse on our behalf'). Paul quotes Deuteronomy 21:23, which pronounces a curse on anyone hung on a tree (xylon). The crucifixion fulfills this: Christ on the cross bore the covenant curse that rested on law-breakers.

- 13. The word xylon means 'wood, tree, stake' — Paul uses it rather than stauros ('cross') to align with the Deuteronomy text. The early church read this passage as a divine explanation of why the Messiah had to die by crucifixion specifically.
- 13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Deuteronomy 21:23 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
- 14. Two purpose clauses (hina... hina...) spell out the twin results of Christ's redemptive act: (1) the Abrahamic blessing extends to the Gentiles, and (2) the promised Spirit is received through faith. The 'promise of the Spirit' (tēn epangelian tou pneumatos) links the Abrahamic promise to the Pentecost experience — the Spirit is the concrete fulfillment of what God promised to Abraham. The 'in Christ Jesus' (en Christō Iēsou) is the instrument through which the ancient promise reaches its intended recipients.
- 15. Paul uses an everyday legal analogy (kata anthrōpon legō, 'I speak in human terms'). The word diathēkē means both 'covenant' and 'will/testament' in Greek — the legal force of the analogy depends on the irrevocability of a ratified agreement. The verb kekyrōmenēn ('having been ratified, confirmed') is a legal term for a document that has been officially validated. The verbs athetei ('annuls') and epidiatassetai ('adds additional stipulations') describe two ways a ratified covenant cannot be altered.
- 16. Paul's argument turns on the singular sperma ('seed, offspring') versus the hypothetical plural spermasin ('seeds'). Grammatically, sperma is a collective noun regularly used in the singular for a group of descendants, so Paul's argument has been debated since antiquity. However, Paul may be making a typological rather than strictly grammatical point: the singular 'seed' finds its ultimate fulfillment in one person, Christ, through whom all the other 'seeds' (believers) are incorporated. The quotation draws from Genesis 13:15, 17:8, and 22:18.
- 16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 12:7. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
- 16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 13:15. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
- 17. The 430-year figure comes from Exodus 12:40 (LXX). Paul's argument is chronological: the Abrahamic covenant was established and ratified by God centuries before Sinai. A later addition (the law) cannot override an earlier divine covenant (the promise). The verb akyroī ('invalidate, make void') is the legal term for overturning a valid agreement — the law simply does not have that power over God's prior commitment.
- 17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 12:40. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
- 18. The verb kecharistai ('has graciously given') is from charizomai, related to charis ('grace'). The inheritance was a gift of grace through promise, not a wage earned through law-keeping. Paul presents law and promise as mutually exclusive bases for inheritance — if one applies, the other is voided. Since God chose promise, law cannot be the operating principle.
- 19. Paul anticipates the obvious question: if the law cannot justify, what purpose does it serve? His answer: it was 'added' (prosetethē) — supplementary, not foundational — 'because of transgressions' (tōn parabaseōn charin). This phrase is ambiguous: the law was added to define transgressions, to restrain them, or to provoke them (cf. Romans 5:20). The temporal limit 'until the offspring should come' makes the law a temporary measure, not a permanent arrangement. The reference to angelic mediation draws on Jewish tradition (cf. Acts 7:53; Hebrews 2:2) and Deuteronomy 33:2 LXX. The 'mediator' is Moses.
- 19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 33:2. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
- 20. This is one of the most cryptic verses in Paul's letters, generating hundreds of interpretations. The basic logic appears to be: a mediator (mesitēs) requires two parties, meaning the law involved a bilateral arrangement (God and Israel, mediated by Moses). But God's promise to Abraham was unilateral — God alone committed himself (Genesis 15, where only God passes between the animal pieces). The promise is therefore more secure than the law because it rests on God alone, not on two parties' faithfulness.
- 20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 15 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
- 21. Paul again uses mē genoito ('absolutely not!') to reject a false inference. The law is not the enemy of promise — it simply cannot do what promise does. The key verb is zōopoīēsai ('to make alive, to give life'). The law can diagnose sin but cannot resurrect; it can define the problem but cannot supply the remedy. The contrary-to-fact conditional (ei... edothē... an ēn) makes clear that no such life-giving law exists.
- 22. The verb synekleisen ('shut up together, imprisoned, confined') pictures sin as a prison. Scripture — and by extension the law — functions as a jailer that locks up all humanity (ta panta, 'all things, everything') under sin's power. The purpose (hina) is redemptive: the imprisonment prepares for the promise's release. The phrase ek pisteōs Iēsou Christou again raises the subjective/objective genitive question. We render 'through the faithfulness of Jesus Christ' consistently with 2:16, while noting that tois pisteuousin ('to those who believe') again distinguishes Christ's faithfulness from the believers' response of faith.
- 23. The verb ephrourometha ('we were being guarded, held in custody') is a military term for being under armed guard. The companion participle synekleiomenoi ('being confined, locked up') reinforces the imprisonment metaphor from verse 22. Paul speaks of 'faith' (tēn pistin) with the article — not faith as a general concept but the specific faith-era inaugurated by Christ. Before Christ, the law served as a holding cell; with Christ's coming, the cell doors opened.

- 24. The Greek paidagōgos is not a 'schoolmaster' (KJV) but a household slave who supervised a child's daily conduct — walking the child to school, enforcing discipline, and overseeing behavior until the child reached maturity. The paidagōgos was neither the father nor the teacher but a temporary custodian whose authority ended when the child came of age. Paul's analogy: the law supervised Israel during its minority, but its supervisory role terminated when Christ (the age of maturity) arrived. The phrase eis Christon ('until Christ' or 'toward Christ') indicates both temporal limit and directional purpose.
- 25. The genitive absolute elthousēs tēs pisteōs ('faith having come') treats faith as a historical event, not merely a personal experience. The coming of Christ inaugurated the age of faith. The adverb ouketi ('no longer') is emphatic: the guardian's role is finished. Returning to the law's supervision after Christ has come would be like a grown adult returning to the care of a childhood custodian.
- 26. The shift from 'we' to 'you' (este, second person plural) directly addresses the Galatian believers. The term huioi theou ('sons of God') in its cultural context designated full legal heirs with the rights of mature adults, as opposed to minors under a guardian. We render 'children' to capture the inclusive sense, though the legal-heir implication is important: the Galatians are no longer minors under the law's custody but full heirs of God.
- 27. The clothing metaphor (enedysasthe, 'you clothed yourselves with, you put on') may reflect the early Christian practice of new clothing at baptism, but the theological meaning goes deeper: to 'put on Christ' is to take on his identity. The phrase eis Christon ('into Christ') indicates that baptism effects a transfer of identity — the baptized person is now 'in Christ,' bearing Christ's identity rather than their former social markers. This prepares for the radical equality statement of verse 28.
- 28. This verse likely preserves an early baptismal confession. The three pairs dismantle the three fundamental divisions of the ancient world: ethnic (Jew/Greek), social (slave/free), and gender (male/female). The shift from oude ('nor') to kai ('and') in the third pair echoes Genesis 1:27 LXX ('male and female he created them'), suggesting that in Christ even the creation-order distinction is transcended in terms of covenant status. The word heis ('one') is masculine singular — the Galatians are not merely united but constitute one entity in Christ. Paul's immediate context is covenant membership (who belongs to Abraham's family), though the implications extend further.
- 28. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 1:27 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
- 29. Paul's argument comes full circle: Christ is Abraham's singular 'seed' (v. 16); those who are 'in Christ' (v. 28) share his identity; therefore those in Christ are Abraham's seed and heirs of the Abrahamic promise. The chain is Abraham promise Christ believers. Circumcision, Torah observance, and ethnic identity play no role in this chain of inheritance. The word klēronomoi ('heirs') carries full legal weight — these are not honorary members but rightful inheritors of everything God promised Abraham.

Summary: Galatians 4 develops the heir/guardian analogy from chapter 3, arguing that before Christ came, God's people were like minor children under guardianship, subject to the 'elemental principles' of the world. But when the fullness of time arrived, God sent his Son, born of a woman, born under the law, to redeem those under the law and grant them adoption as children. Paul then appeals personally to the Galatians, reminding them of their initial warm reception of him despite his physical ailment. He warns that the agitators' attention is self-serving. The chapter culminates in an allegorical reading of Abraham's two sons — Ishmael (born of the slave Hagar, representing the Sinai covenant) and Isaac (born of the free woman Sarah, representing the promise) — concluding that believers are children of the free woman.

What Makes This Remarkable: The 'fullness of time' passage (vv. 4-7) is one of the most important christological and soteriological texts in the New Testament, compressed into four verses. The Abba cry (v. 6) preserves the Aramaic word Jesus himself used in prayer (Mark 14:36). The Hagar-Sarah allegory (vv. 21-31) is Paul's most sustained use of allegorical interpretation and has been enormously influential — and controversial — in Jewish-Christian relations. Paul's identification of 'the present Jerusalem' with Hagar/slavery and 'the Jerusalem above' with Sarah/freedom inverts the expected categories.

Translation Friction: Paul's use of stoicheia tou kosmou ('elemental principles of the world,' vv. 3, 9) is debated — it could refer to basic religious principles, cosmic spiritual powers, or the physical elements. The Hagar-Sarah allegory (vv. 21-31) has been criticized for anti-Jewish implications, though Paul's target is not Judaism per se but the specific demand that Gentile believers submit to circumcision. The textual tradition varies between 'God sent the Spirit of his Son' and 'God sent the Spirit of the Son' in verse 6.

Connections: The adoption (huiiothesia) language connects to Romans 8:14-17, 23. The 'Abba, Father' cry appears also in Romans 8:15 and Mark 14:36. The Hagar-Sarah typology draws on Genesis 16-21 and anticipates the 'Jerusalem above' concept developed in Hebrews 12:22 and Revelation 21. The 'born of a woman' phrase (v. 4) echoes Job 14:1 and the 'born under the law' connects to the circumcision of Jesus (Luke 2:21).

¹What I am saying is this: as long as the heir is a minor, he is no different from a slave, even though he is owner of everything. ²Instead, he is under guardians and trustees until the date set by the father. ³In the same way, when we were minors, we were enslaved under the elemental principles of the world. ⁴But when the fullness of time had come, God sent forth his Son, born of a woman, born under the law, ⁵Indeed, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might accept the adoption of sons. ⁶And because you are children, God sent the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying, "Abba! Father!" ⁷So you are no longer a slave but a child, and if a child, then an heir through God. ⁸Formerly, when you did not know God, you were enslaved to things that by nature are not gods. ⁹But now that you have come to know God — or rather, to be known by God — how can you turn back again to the weak and worthless elemental principles? Do you want to be enslaved to them all over again? ¹⁰You are observing special days and months and seasons and years! ¹¹I am afraid for you, that perhaps I have labored over you in vain. ¹²I beg you, brothers and sisters, become as I am, for I also became as you are. You have done me no wrong. ¹³You know that it was because of a physical ailment that I first proclaimed the gospel to you. ¹⁴And though my physical condition was a trial to you, you did not despise or scorn me. Instead, you received me as an angel of God, as Christ Jesus himself. ¹⁵What then has become of your joy? For I testify that, if possible, you would have torn out your own eyes and given them to me. ¹⁶So have I become your enemy by telling you the truth? ¹⁷Those people are zealous to win you over, but not with good intentions. They want to shut you out so that you will be zealous for them. ¹⁸It is always good to be courted for a good purpose, and not only when I am present with you. ¹⁹My children, for whom I am again in the anguish of childbirth until Christ is formed in you! ²⁰I wish I could be present with you now and change my tone, because I am perplexed about you. ²¹Tell me, you who want to be under the law: do you not listen to the law? ²²For it is written that Abraham had two sons, one by the slave woman and one by the free woman. ²³But the son of the slave woman was born according to the flesh, while the son of the free woman was born through the promise. ²⁴Now these things are to be understood allegorically: the women represent two covenants. One is from Mount Sinai, bearing children into slavery — this is Hagar. ²⁵Now Hagar stands for Mount Sinai in Arabia, and she corresponds to the present Jerusalem, for she is in slavery with her children. ²⁶But the Jerusalem above is free, and she is our mother. ²⁷For it is written: "Rejoice, barren woman who does not bear! Break forth and shout, you who are not in labor! For the children of the desolate woman are more than those of the woman who has a husband." ²⁸Now you, brothers and sisters, like Isaac, are children of the promise. ²⁹But just as at that time the one born according to the flesh persecuted the one born according to the Spirit, so also it is now. ³⁰But what does the Scripture say? "Drive out the slave woman and her son, for the son of the slave woman will certainly not inherit with the son of the free woman." ³¹Therefore, brothers and sisters, we are not children of the slave woman but of the free woman.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Paul extends the guardian analogy from 3:23-25 into Roman inheritance law. The Greek nēpios ('infant, minor, one who cannot yet speak for himself') describes a legal minor who possesses the title of heir but cannot exercise any rights. The paradox is striking: the heir owns everything (kyrios pantōn) yet experiences the life of a slave (doulos). This is Paul's picture of Israel under the law — rightful heirs living under restriction.
2. The epitropoi ('guardians') and oikonomoi ('trustees, estate managers') are legal terms from Roman law for those who managed a minor's person and property respectively. The prothesmia ('appointed date, deadline') is a specific legal term for the date fixed by the father's will when the child would come into his inheritance. Paul's point: the period of law-supervision had a divinely predetermined expiration date.
3. The phrase stoicheia tou kosmou ('elements/principles of the world') is one of the most debated expressions in Paul. Stoicheia can mean: (1) the physical elements (earth, water, air, fire); (2) basic or elementary principles (the ABCs); (3) cosmic or spiritual powers (astral deities or angelic forces); (4) the basic regulatory principles of pre-Christian religion (both Jewish and pagan). Paul may intend a deliberate overlap between these senses — any system of religious obligation that enslaves, whether Jewish Torah or pagan worship, functions as stoicheia. The perfect participle dedoulōmenoi ('having been enslaved') emphasizes the completed state of bondage.

4. The phrase to plērōma tou chronou ('the fullness of time') means the moment when God's appointed time reached its completion — the prothesmia of verse 2 arrived. The verb exapesteilen ('sent forth') implies prior existence: God sent the Son from his own presence. Two participial phrases define the Son's entry into human existence: genomenon ek gynaikos ('born of a woman') affirms full humanity, and genomenon hypo nomon ('born under the law') places him within the system he came to dismantle. The Son submitted to the very bondage he came to end.
5. Two purpose clauses (hina... hina...) state the double goal of the incarnation: (1) redemption (exagorasē, the same marketplace term from 3:13) of those enslaved under the law, and (2) adoption (huiiothesian) as children. The word huiiothesia ('adoption, placement as sons') is a Roman legal term for the formal adoption of an heir — the adopted child received all the rights, privileges, and inheritance of a natural-born son. Paul's theology: believers are not merely forgiven slaves but adopted heirs.
6. The structure parallels verse 4: God 'sent forth' (exapesteilen) the Son (v. 4) and 'sent forth' the Spirit of the Son (v. 6). The Spirit's cry is not the believer's prayer but the Spirit praying through the believer — the Spirit himself cries (krazon, a strong verb suggesting an involuntary shout). The Aramaic Abba is the intimate family address for 'father' — the same word Jesus used in Gethsemane (Mark 14:36). Its preservation in a Greek letter to Gentile believers suggests it was a recognized liturgical formula. The shift from 'you are sons' (este huiioi) to 'our hearts' (hēmōn) unites Paul with the Galatians in shared experience.
7. Paul shifts to the singular 'you' (ei, second person singular), making the declaration personal to each believer. The progression is slave child heir. The phrase dia theou ('through God') is unusual — most manuscripts and translations expect 'through Christ' or 'of God,' but the SBLGNT reading attributes the entire transaction to God's agency. Some manuscripts read 'heir of God through Christ' (klēronomos theou dia Christou), but we follow the SBLGNT text.
8. Paul addresses the Galatians' pre-conversion pagan past. The phrase tois physei mē ousin theois ('to those which by nature are not gods') echoes Old Testament polemic against idols (Isaiah 37:19; Jeremiah 2:11). The dative tois... theois could indicate service to or slavery under these false gods. Paul will argue in verse 9 that returning to Torah observance would be equivalent to returning to this pagan servitude — a provocative equation.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 37:19 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Jeremiah 2:11 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. Paul's self-correction is theologically significant: 'you have come to know God — or rather, to be known by God.' Divine initiative precedes human knowledge. The adjectives asthenē ('weak, powerless') and ptōcha ('poor, destitute, beggarly') are devastating descriptors for either the Torah or pagan religion — both are impoverished systems compared to the riches of knowing God. Paul's equation of Torah observance with stoicheia places it in the same category as the Galatians' former paganism — a shocking rhetorical move.
10. The calendar observances likely include Sabbaths (days), new moons (months), Jewish festivals (seasons/kairos), and sabbatical or jubilee years. Paul views these calendar regulations as part of the stoicheia system. The present tense paratēreisthe ('you are observing') indicates this practice has already begun among the Galatians — the defection is not hypothetical.
11. The verb phohoumai ('I fear') with mē pōs ('lest perhaps') expresses anxious concern. The perfect kekopiaka ('I have labored') indicates sustained effort with ongoing results now threatened. Paul's missionary labor may be wasted if the Galatians complete their defection to law observance.
12. Paul shifts from theological argument to personal appeal. 'Become as I am' (ginesthe hōs egō) — Paul, a Jew, lives free from the law; the Galatians, Gentiles, should not take up the law's yoke. 'I also became as you are' (kagō hōs hymeis) — when Paul came to them, he lived as a Gentile among Gentiles (cf. 1 Corinthians 9:21). The assurance 'you have done me no wrong' prepares for the warm reminiscence that follows.
13. The phrase di' astheneian tēs sarkos ('because of a weakness of the flesh') indicates that Paul's initial visit to Galatia was occasioned or prolonged by some physical condition — illness, injury, or chronic ailment. The nature of this ailment is unknown; proposals include malaria, eye disease (suggested by v. 15), or epilepsy. The phrase to proteron ('the first time, formerly') may imply more than one visit.
14. The verb exeptysate ('you did not spit out, you did not scorn') is vivid — spitting was an ancient gesture of contempt and also a magical act to ward off evil or disease. Paul's condition could have provoked revulsion, but the Galatians received him with extraordinary honor. The ascending comparison — 'as an angel of God, as Christ Jesus' — recalls 1:8, where even an angel's gospel could be false. Here the Galatians treated Paul as bearing divine authority.
15. The word makarismos ('blessing, happiness, congratulating oneself') recalls their initial joy at receiving the gospel. The reference to tearing out eyes (tous ophthalmous hymōn exoryxantes) has fueled speculation that Paul suffered from an eye condition. Whether literal or proverbial (an expression of extreme devotion), it highlights the dramatic contrast between their former warmth and their current coolness.
16. The participial phrase alētheuōn hymin ('telling you the truth, being truthful with you') contrasts with the flattery of the agitators (v. 17). Paul's truth-telling has earned him suspicion, while the agitators' flattery has gained them admiration. The irony is bitter: the one who speaks plainly is treated as an enemy.
17. The verb zēlousin ('they are zealous for, they court') describes the agitators' energetic pursuit of the Galatians' loyalty. The verb ekkleisai ('to shut out, to exclude') reveals the agitators' strategy: by making circumcision a requirement, they create a new boundary that excludes the Galatians unless they comply — generating dependence on the agitators as gatekeepers.

18. Paul acknowledges that zeal and attention are not inherently wrong — what matters is the motive (en kalō, 'in a good thing, for a good purpose'). The phrase 'not only when I am present' gently chides the Galatians for their fickleness: they were devoted when Paul was there but wavered when the agitators arrived.
19. Paul adopts maternal imagery: he is a mother in labor (ōdinō, 'to suffer birth pangs'). The word palin ('again') is striking — Paul already labored to birth them once; their defection has thrown him back into labor pains. The goal is morphōthē Christos en hymin ('Christ be formed in you') — not mere belief about Christ but Christ's character taking shape within them. The verb morphoō ('to form, to shape') suggests an organic, developmental process.
20. The verb aporoumai ('I am perplexed, I am at a loss') expresses genuine bewilderment — Paul cannot understand how the Galatians could abandon the gospel. The desire to 'change my tone' (allaxai tēn phōnēn mou) may mean he wishes he could speak more gently in person, or that he wants to adapt his approach to their specific situation. A letter is a blunt instrument; Paul would prefer the nuance of face-to-face conversation.
21. Paul's rhetorical question is pointed: the Galatians want to submit to the Torah, but have they actually read it? The verb akouete ('hear, listen to') implies not just hearing but understanding. Paul will now show that the Torah itself, properly read, argues against law-submission for Gentile believers. He uses the law against the law — a brilliant forensic strategy.
22. Paul draws on Genesis 16 and 21. The paidiskē ('slave girl, female servant') is Hagar, the Egyptian slave. The eleuthera ('free woman') is Sarah, though Paul does not name her until verse 31. The legal status of the mothers — slave versus free — determines the legal status of the children, which becomes the foundation for Paul's allegory.
22. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 16. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
23. The contrast is between kata sarka ('according to the flesh' — natural human effort) and di' epangelias ('through a promise' — divine intervention). Ishmael was conceived through normal means when Abraham and Sarah tried to fulfill God's promise by their own strategy (Genesis 16). Isaac was conceived through divine promise when both parents were beyond natural capacity for childbearing (Genesis 18:11-14; 21:1-2). The pattern maps onto law (human effort) versus grace (divine promise).
23. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 16 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
23. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 18:11-14 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
24. The verb allēgoroumena ('being allegorized, being spoken allegorically') is the only use of this term in the New Testament. Paul signals he is reading the Genesis narrative typologically — the historical events carry a deeper, prophetic meaning. His identification of Hagar with the Sinai covenant is startling: the law given at Sinai produces slavery, just as Hagar's children are born into her slave status. The word diathēkai ('covenants') here distinguishes two divine arrangements — the Sinai covenant of law and the Abrahamic covenant of promise.
25. The verb systoichei ('corresponds to, stands in the same column as') is a mathematical term for items in the same column — Hagar, Sinai, and the present Jerusalem all line up on the 'slavery' side. Paul's identification of present-day Jerusalem with Hagar/slavery would have been deeply provocative — the holy city, the temple, the center of Jewish identity, aligned with the slave woman. Paul's target is not Jerusalem itself but the Jerusalem-based insistence on law observance for Gentile believers.
26. The 'Jerusalem above' (hē anō Ierousalēm) draws on Jewish apocalyptic tradition of a heavenly Jerusalem that exists as the archetype of the earthly city (cf. Hebrews 12:22; Revelation 21:2). This heavenly city corresponds to Sarah/freedom/promise on the allegory's other column. Paul's 'our mother' includes all believers — both Jewish and Gentile Christians are children of the free woman, citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem.
27. Paul quotes Isaiah 54:1, a promise of restoration after exile. In its original context, the 'barren woman' is Zion, temporarily desolate but destined for abundant offspring. Paul applies it to Sarah — barren, then miraculously fruitful — and by extension to the free woman's covenant community. The promise-children (Gentile believers born through faith) now outnumber the law-children. The connection between Paul's labor pains (v. 19) and this text about labor is not coincidental.
27. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 54:1. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
28. Paul draws the application: the Galatian believers correspond to Isaac, not Ishmael. They are children kata Isaak ('according to the pattern of Isaac') — born through divine promise, not human effort. This identification carries immense implications: the Galatians, as Gentiles, occupy the position of the promised heir, while those insisting on law observance occupy the position of the slave woman's child.
29. Paul refers to the conflict between Ishmael and Isaac (Genesis 21:9, where Ishmael 'laughed' or 'mocked' — the Hebrew tsachaq is ambiguous). Paul reads this as persecution and applies it to the present: the agitators' pressure on Gentile believers mirrors Ishmael's harassment of Isaac. The pattern is structural: flesh persecutes spirit, law-children harass promise-children.
29. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 21:9. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
30. Paul quotes Genesis 21:10, originally Sarah's demand to Abraham. By attributing it to 'Scripture' rather than Sarah, Paul elevates it to divine command. The double negative ou mē ('certainly not, by no means') with the future klēronomēsei makes the exclusion emphatic and final. The implied application is that the agitators and their law-based system must be expelled from the community — the slave-woman covenant has no share in the inheritance.

30. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 21:10 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
31. The chapter's conclusion reaffirms the believers' identity: they belong to Sarah's line, not Hagar's — to promise, not law; to freedom, not slavery. The word dio ('therefore, for this reason') draws the final inference from the allegory. This declaration sets up the exhortation to freedom that opens chapter 5.

Summary: Galatians 5 transitions from theological argument to ethical exhortation. Paul begins with a ringing declaration of Christian freedom and warns that accepting circumcision obligates one to the entire law, separating them from Christ and grace. He contrasts the law-based approach with faith working through love. After warning about the agitators' corrupting influence, Paul describes the life of freedom: not as license for the flesh, but as love-driven service to one another. He then presents his famous contrast between the works of the flesh and the fruit of the Spirit — a catalog of vices followed by a ninefold list of virtues produced by the Spirit's transforming work.

What Makes This Remarkable: The fruit of the Spirit (vv. 22-23) is one of the most memorized and beloved passages in Paul's letters. Notably, 'fruit' is singular (karpos), not plural — the nine qualities form a unified whole, not a menu of options. The declaration 'against such things there is no law' (v. 23) is both a legal observation and a profound theological statement: the Spirit produces what the law demanded but could never generate. Paul's ethics are pneumatological — moral transformation comes not from rule-keeping but from the Spirit's presence.

Translation Friction: The 'works of the flesh' catalog (vv. 19-21) reflects first-century moral categories. The Greek term pharmakeia (v. 20) is rendered 'sorcery' — its connection to modern 'pharmacy' is etymological, not semantic. The phrase 'will not inherit the kingdom of God' (v. 21) raises questions about the security of believers that Paul does not resolve here. The relationship between human effort ('walk by the Spirit,' v. 16) and divine agency ('the Spirit produces fruit,' v. 22) is held in tension.

Connections: The freedom declaration (v. 1) echoes the allegory conclusion of 4:31. The law fulfilled in love (v. 14) connects to Romans 13:8-10 and Jesus's teaching in Matthew 22:39. The flesh/Spirit contrast parallels Romans 8:5-13. The fruit of the Spirit echoes the qualities of love in 1 Corinthians 13. The 'crucified the flesh' language (v. 24) connects to 2:20 and 6:14.

¹For freedom Christ has set us free. Stand firm, then, and do not submit again to a yoke of slavery. ²Look — I, Paul, tell you that if you let yourselves be circumcised, Christ will be of no benefit to you at all. ³I testify again to every person who lets himself be circumcised that he is obligated to keep the entire law. ⁴You who are trying to be justified by the law have been severed from Christ; you have fallen away from grace. ⁵For through the Spirit, by faith, we eagerly await the hope of righteousness. ⁶For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision nor uncircumcision counts for anything, but only faith working through love. ⁷You were running well. Who cut in on you and kept you from obeying the truth? ⁸This persuasion is not from the one who calls you. ⁹A little yeast leavens the whole batch of dough. ¹⁰I am confident in the Lord that you will take no other view. But the one who is disturbing you will bear the judgment, whoever he is. ¹¹But brothers and sisters, if I am still preaching circumcision, why am I still being persecuted? In that case the offense of the cross has been removed. ¹²I wish those who are unsettling you would go all the way and castrate themselves! ¹³For you were called to freedom, brothers and sisters. Only do not use your freedom as an opportunity for the flesh; rather, serve one another through love. ¹⁴For the entire law is fulfilled in a single statement: "You shall love your neighbor as yourself." ¹⁵But if you bite and devour one another, watch out that you are not consumed by one another. ¹⁶But I say, walk by the Spirit, and you will not gratify the desire of the flesh. ¹⁷For the flesh desires what is opposed to the Spirit, and the Spirit what is opposed to the flesh. They are in conflict with each other, so that you do not do whatever you want. ¹⁸But if you are led by the Spirit, you are not under the law. ¹⁹Now the works of the flesh are obvious: sexual immorality, impurity, sensuality, ²⁰Idol worship, sorcery, hostility, quarreling, jealousy, outbursts of anger, rivalry, division, false teaching,. ²¹Envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like — of the which I tell you prior to, as I have also informed you in time past, that they which do such things will not inherit God's kingdom. ²²But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, ²³Meekness, temperance — opposed to such there is no law. ²⁴And those who belong to Christ Jesus have crucified the flesh with its passions and desires. ²⁵If we live by the Spirit, let us also keep in step with the Spirit. ²⁶Let us not become conceited, provoking one another, envying one another.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The dative tē eleutheria ('for freedom') is emphatic by position — freedom is both the means and the goal of Christ's liberation. The verb ēleutherōsen ('set free') is aorist, pointing to a definitive past act (the cross). The imperative stēkete ('stand firm') demands active resistance: freedom must be maintained, not passively enjoyed. The 'yoke of slavery' (zygō douleias) pictures the law as an animal yoke — the very metaphor used for Torah in Acts 15:10 and by the rabbis themselves, though they viewed it positively ('the yoke of the kingdom of heaven').
2. Paul speaks with full apostolic weight: 'I, Paul' (egō Paulos) puts his personal authority behind the warning. The conditional ean peritemnēsthe ('if you are circumcised') uses the present subjunctive, indicating a real and imminent possibility. The verb ōphelēsei ('will benefit, will profit') with ouden ('nothing') makes the stakes absolute: accepting circumcision as a requirement for covenant membership empties Christ of all saving value. Paul is not opposing circumcision as a cultural practice but as a soteriological requirement.
3. The verb martyromai ('I solemnly testify, I declare under oath') is a legal term. Paul's logic: circumcision is not a standalone act but an entry point into the entire Torah system. You cannot adopt one requirement in isolation — accepting circumcision means accepting the whole package (holon ton nomon, 'the whole law'). The word opheiletēs ('debtor, one under obligation') frames law-keeping as a debt that can never be fully paid.
4. The verb katērgēthēte ('you have been severed, you have been cut off, you have been rendered ineffective') is devastatingly ironic — those who seek circumcision (cutting) end up being cut off from Christ. The verb exepesate ('you have fallen out of') gives us the theological concept of 'falling from grace' — not losing salvation through moral failure, but abandoning the grace principle in favor of the law principle. The two systems are mutually exclusive: grace or law, not both.
5. Paul contrasts the law-based approach (v. 4) with the Spirit-faith approach. The verb apekdechometha ('we eagerly await, we look forward to') indicates patient, expectant hope. The 'hope of righteousness' (elpida dikaiosynēs) looks forward to final vindication — the full realization of right standing with God. Paul's ethics are eschatological: believers live between the 'already' of justification and the 'not yet' of final righteousness.
6. This verse is the hinge of Galatians' theology. The phrase pistis di' agapēs energoumenē ('faith working through love') prevents faith from becoming mere intellectual assent. Faith is not passive but active — and its activity is love. The verb energoumenē can be middle ('expressing itself, working') or passive ('being energized, being activated'). If middle: faith naturally expresses itself through love. If passive: faith is activated by love, or by the Spirit's power. Either way, faith and love are inseparable. This verse has been central to Protestant-Catholic dialogue on faith and works.
7. The athletic metaphor returns (cf. 2:2). The verb enekopsen ('cut in on, hindered, impeded') was used for cutting into a road to block an army's advance or for breaking into a runner's lane. The question is rhetorical — Paul knows who the agitators are — but the athletic imagery emphasizes that the Galatians were making progress until someone illegally interfered.
8. The word peismonē ('persuasion') occurs only here in the New Testament. The 'one who calls' (tou kalountos) is God (cf. 1:6, 15). Whatever arguments the agitators are using, they do not originate from God. The verse is terse and devastating — a one-sentence verdict on the agitators' theology.
9. A proverbial saying Paul also uses in 1 Corinthians 5:6. Yeast (zymē) works invisibly but transforms everything it touches. The agitators' teaching — even a 'small' requirement like circumcision — will eventually corrupt the entire gospel. The metaphor warns against compromising on what seems minor: in theology, small concessions produce total transformation.
10. Paul expresses confidence (pepoitha, 'I have come to trust') qualified by 'in the Lord' — his confidence is in God's work in them, not in their character. The singular ho tarassōn ('the one disturbing') may point to a specific ringleader among the agitators. The phrase hostis ean ē ('whoever he may be') suggests the person has some status or authority — Paul dismisses it as irrelevant before divine judgment (krima).
11. Paul apparently faced the accusation that he still preached circumcision (perhaps based on his circumcision of Timothy, Acts 16:3). His response: if he were preaching circumcision, no one would persecute him — the persecution itself proves he is not. The word skandalon ('stumbling block, offense, trap') applied to the cross: a crucified Messiah is inherently offensive because it eliminates human achievement as the basis for standing with God. Adding circumcision would remove this offense — and gut the gospel.
12. The verb apokopsontai ('cut off, mutilate') is a shocking escalation of the circumcision vocabulary. Paul's caustic wit: if cutting a little flesh is so beneficial, why not cut off the whole thing? The reference to castration also connects to pagan practices — the priests of Cybele, a goddess worshipped in Galatia, practiced ritual castration. Paul suggests the agitators' obsession with genital cutting has more in common with paganism than with the gospel. The verb anastatountes ('unsettling, stirring up, disturbing') is stronger than tarassontes (1:7) — these people are turning the community upside down.

13. Paul pivots from defending freedom to defining it. Freedom is not autonomy (doing whatever the flesh desires) but is redirected into voluntary service (douleuete, 'serve as slaves' — deliberately using the slavery vocabulary). The paradox of Christian freedom: truly free people choose to serve. The word aphormē ('base of operations, launching point, opportunity') is a military term — the flesh looks for any foothold to exploit. Freedom from the law does not mean freedom from love's obligations.
14. Paul quotes Leviticus 19:18. The verb peplērōtai ('has been fulfilled, has been brought to completion') is perfect passive — the law finds its full expression in love, not through rule-by-rule obedience but through the love that animates every genuine command. This does not abolish the law but reveals its true purpose. The same argument appears in Romans 13:8-10. Paul the opponent of law-righteousness affirms that love accomplishes what the law intended.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Leviticus 19:18. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The verbs escalate: daknete ('bite'), katesthiēte ('devour, eat up'), analōthēte ('be consumed, be destroyed'). The imagery is of animals tearing each other apart. This suggests the circumcision controversy has already caused serious community conflict in Galatia. Paul's warning: the agitators' teaching is not only theologically wrong but practically destructive — it is tearing the community apart.
16. The imperative peripateite ('walk') is Paul's standard term for daily conduct — the ongoing pattern of life, not a single decision. Walking 'by the Spirit' (pneumati, dative of means or sphere) means allowing the Spirit to direct one's steps. The double negative ou mē with the aorist subjunctive telesēte is the strongest negation in Greek: 'you will certainly not, you will by no means.' The promise is emphatic: Spirit-directed living is genuinely effective against the flesh's desires.
17. The verb epithumei ('desires, longs for') is used for both flesh and Spirit — both exert active desire. The preposition kata ('against') indicates direct opposition. The verb antikeitai ('stands opposed, is set against') describes a permanent state of war. The purpose clause hina mē... poiēte ('so that you may not do') can be read two ways: (1) the flesh prevents you from doing what the Spirit wants, or (2) the Spirit prevents you from doing what the flesh wants. Paul may intend both — the believer lives in the tension of conflicting desires.
18. The passive agesthe ('you are being led') indicates the Spirit's active guidance — believers follow, the Spirit leads. Being Spirit-led and being under law are mutually exclusive conditions. This verse answers the practical question: if not the law, then what guides behavior? Answer: the Spirit. The law was the guardian for minors (3:24-25); the Spirit is the guide for mature heirs.
19. The adjective phanera ('visible, obvious, evident') contrasts with the hidden work of the Spirit (v. 22, 'fruit'). The flesh produces visible, identifiable behaviors. The first cluster is sexual: porneia ('sexual immorality' — a broad term covering all sexual conduct outside marriage), akatharsia ('impurity' — ritual and moral uncleanness), aselgeia ('sensuality, debauchery, lack of self-restraint'). Note: the SBLGNT does not include 'adultery' (moicheia), which appears in some later manuscripts.
20. The second cluster covers religious deviance: eidōlōlatia ('idolatry') and pharmakeia ('sorcery, the use of drugs/potions in magical arts'). The third and largest cluster addresses social-communal sins: echthra ('hostilities, enmity'), eris ('strife, contention'), zēlos ('jealousy, envious rivalry'), thymoi ('outbursts of rage'), eritheiai ('selfish ambition, political manipulation' — originally meant 'working for hire'), dichostasiai ('dissensions, divisions'), haireseis ('factions, sects' — later 'heresies'). Many of these social sins were likely manifesting in the Galatian congregations as a direct result of the circumcision controversy.
21. The final cluster: phthonoi ('envy'), methai ('episodes of drunkenness'), kōmoi ('carousing, drinking parties'). The phrase kai ta homoia toutois ('and things similar to these') makes the list representative, not exhaustive. The verb prassontes ('practicing, habitually doing') is present participle indicating a lifestyle pattern, not isolated incidents. The verb prolegō ('I warn in advance') with the aorist proeipon ('I already warned') indicates Paul gave this warning during his original visit — this is not new teaching. The warning about not inheriting the kingdom (basileian theou ou klēronomēsousin) is the most severe: the inheritance language connects to the heir/adoption theme of chapters 3-4.
22. The singular karpos ('fruit') — not 'fruits' — indicates these nine qualities form an organic unity, not a list of separate items. Unlike the 'works' (erga) of the flesh, which are produced by human effort, 'fruit' grows naturally from the Spirit's life within the believer. The first triad (love, joy, peace) describes the believer's relationship with God. The second triad (patience, kindness, goodness) describes the believer's posture toward others. The third triad (faithfulness, gentleness, self-control) describes the believer's inner character. Makrothymia ('patience, long-suffering') is literally 'long-fused' — slow to anger. Chrēstotēs ('kindness') is grace expressed in action. Agathōsynē ('goodness') is moral excellence that benefits others.
23. Prautēs ('gentleness, meekness') is not weakness but strength under control — the quality Aristotle described as the mean between excessive anger and the inability to be angry at all. Enkrateia ('self-control, mastery over one's desires') was a central Greek philosophical virtue. The concluding statement kata tōn toioutōn ouk estin nomos ('against such things there is no law') operates on multiple levels: (1) obviously, no law prohibits love, joy, or peace; (2) more profoundly, where the Spirit produces these qualities, the law's regulatory function becomes unnecessary; (3) most pointedly for the Galatian context, the Spirit achieves what the law aimed for but could not produce.
24. The verb estaurōsan ('crucified') is aorist active — believers are the agents who crucified the flesh, yet this act is possible only because they participate in Christ's crucifixion (2:20). The flesh is not merely restrained but executed — crucifixion is lethal, not temporary. The 'passions' (pathēmasin) and 'desires' (epithymiais) are the flesh's driving forces. Paul's ethic requires the decisive death of the flesh's power, not its gradual improvement.
25. Paul uses a different word for 'walk' here: stoichōmen ('let us keep in step, let us walk in line, let us march in formation') rather than the general peripateō of verse 16. Stoicheō means to walk in a line, to keep rank — the military metaphor suggests disciplined, orderly following of the Spirit's lead. The conditional ei zōmen ('if we live') is a first-class condition assumed to be true: since we do live by the Spirit, we should therefore walk in step with the Spirit.

- 26. The adjective kenodoxoi ('vainglorious, conceited, empty of glory') literally means 'having empty glory.' The two participles describe the twin expressions of conceit: prokalomenoi ('provoking, challenging' — used for challenging someone to a contest) directed at those perceived as lower, and phthonountes ('envying') directed at those perceived as higher. Both attitudes destroy community. This verse likely reflects actual dynamics in the Galatian churches, where the circumcision debate had produced competitive factions.

Summary: Galatians 6 concludes the letter with practical instructions for community life: restoring those caught in sin with gentleness, bearing one another's burdens (thus fulfilling 'the law of Christ'), avoiding self-deception, and the principle of sowing and reaping. Paul then takes the pen himself for a final, emphatic summary — the agitators want circumcision for their own glory, but Paul boasts only in the cross, through which the world has been crucified to him. He closes with a blessing of peace and mercy on 'the Israel of God.'

What Makes This Remarkable: The phrase 'the law of Christ' (v. 2) is striking from the apostle who has spent five chapters arguing against the law. Paul distinguishes between the Torah as a system of justification and Christ's own 'law' of love and burden-bearing. The 'large letters' (v. 11) indicate Paul is writing the conclusion in his own hand, possibly due to the eye condition hinted at in 4:15. The 'marks of Jesus' (v. 17) — the stigmata — refers to the physical scars from Paul's persecution, which he contrasts with the circumcision mark the agitators prize. The closing phrase 'the Israel of God' (v. 16) is one of the most debated in the letter.

Translation Friction: The phrase 'Israel of God' (v. 16) is debated: does it refer to ethnic Israel, to the church as the new Israel, or specifically to Jewish believers? The grammar (kai epi) allows multiple readings. Paul's instruction about supporting teachers financially (v. 6) seems abruptly placed. The 'new creation' language (v. 15) compressed here is developed more fully in 2 Corinthians 5:17.

Connections: The 'law of Christ' (v. 2) connects to 1 Corinthians 9:21 and the love command of 5:14. The sowing/reaping principle (vv. 7-8) echoes Proverbs 22:8 and Hosea 8:7. The 'new creation' (v. 15) connects to 2 Corinthians 5:17 and Isaiah 65:17. The 'marks of Jesus' (v. 17) connect to 2 Corinthians 4:10 and 11:23-27. Paul's autograph (v. 11) parallels 1 Corinthians 16:21 and Colossians 4:18.

¹Brothers and sisters, if anyone is caught in a transgression, you who are spiritual should restore that person in a spirit of gentleness — but watch yourself, so that you too are not tempted. ²Bear one another's burdens, and in this way you will fulfill the law of Christ. ³For if anyone thinks they are something when they are nothing, they deceive themselves. ⁴Let each person examine their own work, and then their reason to boast will be in themselves alone, and not in comparison with someone else. ⁵For each one will carry their own load. ⁶Let the one who is taught the word share all good things with the one who teaches. ⁷Do not be deceived: God is not mocked. Whatever a person sows, that they will also reap. ⁸The one who sows to their own flesh will reap destruction from the flesh, but the one who sows to the Spirit will reap eternal life from the Spirit. ⁹Let us not grow weary of doing good, for at the proper time we will reap, if we do not give up. ¹⁰So then, as we have opportunity, let us do good to everyone, and especially to those who belong to the household of faith. ¹¹See what large letters I am writing to you with my own hand! ¹²Those who want to make a good impression outwardly are trying to compel you to be circumcised — only so that they will not be persecuted for the cross of Christ. ¹³For not even those who are circumcised keep the law themselves, but they want you to be circumcised so that they may boast in your flesh. ¹⁴But as for me, may I never boast except in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, through which the world has been crucified to me, and I to the world. ¹⁵For neither circumcision counts for anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creation. ¹⁶And as for all who will walk by this rule, peace and mercy be upon them, and upon the Israel of God. ¹⁷From now on, let no one cause me trouble, for I bear on my body the marks of Jesus. ¹⁸The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit, brothers and sisters. Amen.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The verb prolēmphthē ('be caught, be overtaken, be surprised by') suggests the person was caught off guard by the sin rather than deliberately pursuing it. The verb katartizete ('restore, mend, put in order') was used for setting a broken bone or mending a torn net — the goal is repair, not punishment. The phrase hoi pneumatikoi ('you who are spiritual') is not an elite class but describes all who walk by the Spirit (5:25). The shift from plural 'you' to singular 'yourself' (seauton) makes the warning intensely personal.
2. The word barē ('burdens, heavy loads') includes moral failures (v. 1), suffering, and any weight that crushes a person. The phrase ton nomon tou Christou ('the law of Christ') is remarkable — Paul who has argued against the law now speaks of Christ's law. This is not a new legal code but the love command (5:14) embodied in Christ's own life of self-giving (2:20). The verb anaplērōsete ('you will fulfill, you will fill up completely') intensifies the simple plērōō — the law of Christ is super-abundantly fulfilled through mutual burden-bearing.
3. The verb phrenapatā ('deceive one's own mind') is a compound: phrēn ('mind') + apataō ('deceive'). Self-deception is the flesh's most effective strategy. The phrase einai ti ('to be something') echoes Paul's ironic use of dokountes ('those who seem to be something') for the Jerusalem leaders in 2:6. Conceit — thinking oneself too important to serve — prevents the burden-bearing of verse 2.
4. The verb dokimazetō ('let him examine, let him test') was used for assaying metals — testing for genuineness. Paul redirects the Galatians from comparing themselves with others (which feeds conceit or envy) to honest self-examination. The kauchēma ('ground for boasting, reason for pride') when properly directed is not competitive but based on one's own work before God.
5. The word phortion ('load, pack') is different from barē ('burdens') in verse 2. Barē suggests crushing weights that require communal support; phortion is a soldier's personal pack or a ship's individual cargo — the normal responsibilities each person must carry. There is no contradiction: we share each other's crushing burdens (v. 2) while each carrying our own personal responsibilities (v. 5).
6. The verb katēchoumenos ('being instructed, being catechized') gives us the English word 'catechism.' It implies systematic teaching of the faith. The verb koinōneitō ('let him share, let him have fellowship in') indicates material support — the student should share financial resources with the teacher. The phrase en pasin agathois ('in all good things') likely means material goods. This instruction about supporting teachers is a practical application of burden-bearing.
7. The verb myktērizetai ('is mocked, is treated with contempt') literally means 'to turn up the nose at.' The agricultural metaphor of sowing and reaping is a universal wisdom principle (cf. Proverbs 22:8; Hosea 8:7; Job 4:8). Paul applies it specifically to the flesh/Spirit contrast that follows in verse 8. The warning mē planasthe ('do not be deceived, do not wander astray') suggests the Galatians may think they can adopt the flesh's system without consequences.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Proverbs 22:8. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Hosea 8:7. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Job 4:8. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The preposition eis ('into, toward') with 'sowing' indicates the field in which one invests: sowing into the flesh means investing one's life in the flesh's priorities. The harvest (therizo) corresponds to the field: flesh produces phthora ('decay, corruption, destruction') and Spirit produces zōēn aiōnion ('life of the age to come, eternal life'). In the Galatian context, 'sowing to the flesh' includes the circumcision party's investment in external religious performance.
9. The verb enkakōmen ('grow weary, become discouraged, lose heart') acknowledges the real difficulty of persevering in good works when the harvest is delayed. The phrase kairō idiō ('at the proper time, in its own season') assures that God's timing, though often frustrating, is precise. The participial condition mē eklyomenoi ('not giving up, not becoming exhausted') uses a word that means 'to become slack, to faint' — the image is of a runner whose muscles give out before the finish line.
10. The phrase hōs kairon echomen ('as we have opportunity/time') treats the present moment as a limited window for action. The exhortation extends 'to everyone' (pros pantas) — not just fellow believers — but prioritizes 'the household of faith' (tous oikeious tēs pisteōs). The word oikeios ('belonging to the household, family member') pictures the believing community as a family or household. The priority is not exclusion of outsiders but special care for the faith family.
11. The phrase pēlikois grammasin ('with what large letters') refers to the size of the handwriting, not the length of the letter. Paul typically dictated his letters to a secretary (amanuensis) and added a personal note in his own handwriting at the end (cf. 1 Corinthians 16:21; 2 Thessalonians 3:17). The large letters may indicate Paul's poor eyesight (4:15), his emphasis (writing large for rhetorical effect), or simply unfamiliarity with writing (he was a speaker, not a scribe). From this point to the end of the letter, Paul writes personally.
12. The verb euprosōpēsai ('to make a good face, to put on a good appearance') occurs only here in the New Testament. The agitators' motive is exposed: they push circumcision not from theological conviction but to avoid persecution. If they can show Jewish authorities that their Gentile converts are being circumcised, they can present their movement as a Torah-observant sect rather than a law-free community — and escape the hostility that the cross provokes.

- 13. Paul's charge is hypocrisy: the agitators demand circumcision but do not themselves observe the whole law (cf. 5:3). Their true motive is kauchēsōntai ('that they may boast') — they want to collect Gentile foreskins as trophies. The phrase en tē hymetera sarki ('in your flesh') is bitterly literal: the circumcised flesh of the Galatians would become the agitators' badge of missionary success.
- 14. Paul's mē genoīto ('may it never be!') here is not a response to an objection but a vow. The cross is the only legitimate ground for boasting — the very thing that is an offense (5:11) and foolishness (1 Corinthians 1:23) to the world. The double crucifixion — 'the world to me, and I to the world' — indicates mutual death: Paul is dead to the world's value system, and the world's attractions have lost their power over him. The pronoun hou ('through which/whom') is ambiguous — it could refer to the cross or to Christ. The meaning converges either way.
- 15. The phrase kainē ktisis ('new creation') is Paul's most radical category. Circumcision versus uncircumcision — the issue tearing the Galatian churches apart — is rendered utterly irrelevant by the new creation that Christ inaugurates. The word kainē means 'new in quality' (not neos, 'new in time'). This is not renovation but transformation — a new order of existence. The concept draws on Isaiah 65:17 ('new heavens and new earth') and is developed more fully in 2 Corinthians 5:17.
- 15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 65:17 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
- 16. The word kanōn ('rule, standard, measuring rod') refers to the new-creation principle of verse 15. The verb stochēsousin ('will walk in line with') echoes 5:25. The blessing eirēnē... kai eleos ('peace... and mercy') echoes Jewish synagogue blessings. The phrase kai epi ton Israēl tou theou ('and upon the Israel of God') is heavily debated: (1) kai is exegetical ('that is, the Israel of God'), making 'Israel of God' synonymous with 'all who walk by this rule'; (2) kai is additive ('and also upon the Israel of God'), adding a separate blessing on ethnic Israel or on Jewish Christians. The grammar supports both readings. Given Paul's argument throughout Galatians, reading (1) seems contextually stronger, but we preserve the ambiguity.
- 17. The word stigmata ('marks, brands, tattoos') refers to the scars Paul carries from beatings, stonings, and other persecutions (cf. 2 Corinthians 11:23-27). In the ancient world, stigmata were brands placed on slaves, soldiers, or devotees of a deity to indicate ownership. Paul's scars are his brand of belonging to Jesus — far more significant than the circumcision mark the agitators promote. The irony: they boast in a mark on others' flesh; Paul boasts in marks on his own flesh, received in service to Christ.
- 18. Paul closes with grace — the letter that opened with astonishment (1:6) ends with benediction. The word adelphoi ('brothers and sisters') — placed at the end for emphasis — is a final act of reconciliation: despite the sharp rebukes, Paul still considers the Galatians family. The phrase meta tou pneumatou hymōn ('with your spirit') is more intimate than the standard 'with you' — Paul prays that grace will penetrate to the deepest level of their being.

Ephesians

Summary: Ephesians 1 opens with Paul's greeting and immediately launches into one of the most expansive theological statements in the New Testament — a single sentence in Greek (vv. 3-14) that sweeps from eternity past (predestination before the foundation of the world) through the present (redemption, forgiveness, the revelation of God's mystery) to eternity future (the summing up of all things in Christ). The chapter then transitions to a prayer of thanksgiving for the Ephesians' faith and a petition that they would know the hope of God's calling, the riches of his inheritance, and the surpassing greatness of his power — the same power that raised Christ from the dead and seated him at God's right hand, far above every authority, with all things under his feet.

What Makes This Remarkable: Verses 3-14 constitute the longest sentence in the Greek New Testament — a cascading doxology with three movements: the Father's election (vv. 3-6), the Son's redemption (vv. 7-12), and the Spirit's sealing (vv. 13-14). Each section concludes with a refrain about God's glory. The cosmic scope is breathtaking: God's plan encompasses the reconciliation of 'all things in heaven and on earth' (v. 10). The prayer section (vv. 15-23) reaches its climax in a vision of Christ's authority over all cosmic powers and his headship over the church, which is his body.

Translation Friction: The words 'in Ephesus' (en Ephesō, v. 1) are absent from important early manuscripts (P46, Sinaiticus, Vaticanus), suggesting this may have been a circular letter. Paul's predestination language (vv. 4-5, 11) has generated centuries of theological debate between Calvinist and Arminian traditions. We render the Greek faithfully without resolving these disputes. The cosmic language of 'rulers and authorities' (v. 21) reflects first-century Jewish angelology.

Connections: The blessing formula (v. 3) echoes Jewish berakah prayers. The predestination language connects to Romans 8:28-30. The 'mystery' (v. 9) is developed throughout Ephesians (3:3-6, 5:32, 6:19). The 'all things under his feet' (v. 22) quotes Psalm 8:6, also used in 1 Corinthians 15:27. The church as Christ's body (v. 23) develops the theme of 1 Corinthians 12 and Colossians 1:18.

¹Paul, an apostle of Christ Jesus by the will of God, to the saints who are in Ephesus, the faithful in Christ Jesus: ²And from the lord jesus christ, grace be to you, and peace, from God our Father. ³Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who has blessed us in Christ with every spiritual blessing in the heavenly places, ⁴According as he has chosen us in him prior to the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame prior to him in love:. ⁵After predestinated us to the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, in keeping with to the good pleasure of his will,. ⁶Indeed, to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he has made us accepted in the dear. ⁷In him we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of our trespasses, according to the riches of his grace, ⁸In which he has abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence. ⁹After appointed known to us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he has purposed in himself:. ¹⁰That in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather as one in one all matters in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth. Indeed in him:. ¹¹In him we have also been claimed as God's own, having been predestined according to the purpose of the one who accomplishes all things according to the counsel of his will, ¹²Indeed, that we should be to the praise of all his splendor, who first trusted in Christ. ¹³In him you also, when you heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation, and believed in him, were sealed with the promised Holy Spirit, ¹⁴Indeed, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, to the praise of all his splendor. ¹⁵For this reason, ever since I heard about your faith in the Lord Jesus and your love for all the saints, ¹⁶I have not stopped giving thanks for you, remembering you in my prayers, ¹⁷That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Parent of splendor, may provide to you the inner life of insight and revelation in the knowledge of him:. ¹⁸The sight of your understanding while enlightened. That you may recognize what is the confident expectation of his calling, and what the riches of the splendor of his inheritance in the saints,. ¹⁹What is the exceeding greatness of his authority to us-ward who trust, according to the working of his mighty authority,. ²⁰Indeed, which he wrought in Christ, when he brought him back to life, and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places,. ²¹Far beyond all principality, power, might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this present age, but also in that which is to come:. ²²And he put all things under his feet and gave him as head over all things to the church, ²³The church is his body, the full expression of him who fills everything in every way.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The phrase 'in Ephesus' (en Ephesō) is absent from several of the earliest and best manuscripts, suggesting this may have been a circular letter with a blank space for the destination. The SBLGNT includes it. The word hagiois ('saints, holy ones') does not mean morally perfect people but those 'set apart' — consecrated to God's purposes. The qualifier pistois ('faithful, believing') further identifies them as the believing community.
2. Paul's standard greeting combining charis ('grace') and eirēnē ('peace'). The single preposition apo ('from') governs both God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ, presenting them as coordinate sources of grace and peace.
3. The opening eulogētos ('blessed') begins a Jewish-style berakah (blessing formula) that extends through verse 14 in a single Greek sentence. The phrase en tois epouraniois ('in the heavenly places') is distinctive to Ephesians (1:20; 2:6; 3:10; 6:12) — it designates the spiritual dimension where believers already exist 'in Christ.' The triple use of eulog- words (blessed, blessed, blessing) creates emphasis: God is blessed because he has blessed us with blessings. The phrase en Christō ('in Christ') is the letter's keynote — appearing about thirty-five times in Ephesians.
4. The verb exelexato ('chose, elected') is aorist middle — God chose for himself. The temporal marker pro katabolēs kosmou ('before the foundation of the world') places the election in eternity past, before creation itself. The purpose of election is holiness: einai hēmas hagious kai amōmous ('that we should be holy and blameless'). The word amōmos ('without blemish') is sacrificial language — a sacrificial animal had to be without defect. The phrase en agapē ('in love') is grammatically ambiguous — it could modify 'blameless before him in love' (describing the believer's character) or 'in love he predestined us' (describing God's motive). We punctuate it with verse 5 (God's love as the motive for predestination), though noting the ambiguity.
5. The verb proorisas ('having predestined, having determined beforehand') is from pro ('before') + horizō ('to set a boundary, to determine'). God established the boundary of his people before time. The goal of predestination is huiōthesia ('adoption') — the same Roman legal concept Paul used in Galatians 4:5. The phrase kata tēn eudokian tou thelēmatos autou ('according to the good pleasure of his will') grounds predestination in God's sovereign delight, not in human merit or foreseen faith.
6. The first refrain: eis epainon doxēs tēs charitos autou ('to the praise of the glory of his grace'). The chain of genitives piles glory upon glory. The verb echarītōsen ('graced, favored, freely bestowed grace') is from the same root as charis ('grace') — God 'graced us with grace.' The title ho ēgapēmenos ('the Beloved') for Christ echoes the baptismal voice: 'This is my beloved Son' (Matthew 3:17). This refrain closes the first movement (the Father's election).
7. The second movement begins: the Son's redemption. The word apolytrōsis ('redemption, release through ransom') echoes the Old Testament go'el concept — ransom of a kinsman from bondage. The phrase dia tou haimatos autou ('through his blood') specifies the ransom price. The appositive tēn aphesin tōn paraptōmatōn ('the forgiveness of trespasses') defines redemption's content: release from guilt. The phrase to ploutos tēs charitos ('the riches of grace') — grace is not meager but lavish.
8. The verb eperisseusen ('caused to abound, lavished, poured out in excess') indicates overflowing abundance — God does not meter grace but floods it. The phrase en pasē sophia kai phronēsei ('with all wisdom and understanding') can modify either God (he lavished grace wisely) or the believers (he gave us wisdom and insight along with grace). Both readings are theologically sound; the latter connects to the revelation in verse 9.

9. The word mystērion ('mystery') in Paul does not mean 'mysterious' or 'unknowable' but refers to a divine plan once hidden but now revealed. The content of this mystery is disclosed in verse 10. The verb proetheto ('set forth, planned beforehand, purposed') indicates a deliberate, prior decision. The phrase en autō could refer to God himself ('in himself') or to Christ ('in him'). Given Ephesians' persistent en Christō theme, the christological reading is preferred.
10. The word oikonomia ('administration, plan, management of a household') pictures God as a master steward implementing his cosmic household plan. The phrase tou plērōmatos tōn kairōn ('of the fullness of the times') echoes Galatians 4:4 but extends it cosmically. The verb anakephalaiōsasthai ('to sum up, to bring together under one head, to recapitulate') is the theological center of Ephesians. It combines ana ('again') + kephalē ('head') — literally 'to re-head,' to bring everything back under its proper headship. God's plan is the reunification of a fractured cosmos under Christ's authority. The scope is total: ta panta ('all things'), ta epi tois ouranois kai ta epi tēs gēs ('things in heaven and things on earth').
11. The verb eklērōthēmen is debated: it could mean 'we obtained an inheritance' (active sense) or 'we were made an inheritance' (passive sense — God claimed us as his possession). The passive reading aligns with Deuteronomy 32:9 ('the LORD's portion is his people') and is preferred here. The phrase tou ta panta energountos ('the one who works all things') asserts God's comprehensive sovereignty. The phrase kata tēn boulēn tou thelēmatos autou ('according to the counsel of his will') layers purpose upon purpose — God's actions are deliberate, not arbitrary.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Deuteronomy 32:9. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. The second refrain: eis epainon doxēs autou ('for the praise of his glory'). The participle proēlpikotas ('having hoped beforehand, having been the first to hope') likely distinguishes Jewish believers (who hoped in the Messiah before his coming) from Gentile believers (addressed in v. 13). This closes the second movement (the Son's redemption).
13. The third movement begins: the Spirit's sealing. The sequence is hear believe be sealed. The 'word of truth' is defined as 'the gospel of your salvation' — two phrases in apposition. The verb esphragisthēte ('you were sealed') uses the image of a seal (sphragis) pressed into wax — marking ownership, authenticity, and security. In the ancient world, a seal guaranteed that a document or container had not been tampered with. The Spirit is the seal that marks believers as God's property. The phrase tō pneumati tēs epangelias tō hagiō ('with the Holy Spirit of the promise') identifies the Spirit as the fulfillment of God's promise (cf. Joel 2:28-29; Acts 2:33).
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Joel 2:28-29 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. The word arrabōn ('down payment, deposit, guarantee') is a commercial term — a first installment that guarantees the full payment to come. The Spirit is not the complete inheritance but the preview that guarantees the rest. The phrase eis apolytrōsin tēs peripoiēseōs ('until the redemption of the possession') likely means 'until God fully redeems those he has acquired as his own.' The third refrain closes the doxology: eis epainon tēs doxēs autou ('to the praise of his glory'). The Trinitarian structure is complete: Father (vv. 3-6), Son (vv. 7-12), Spirit (vv. 13-14), each section ending in praise.
15. The phrase dia touto ('for this reason') links the prayer to the doxology: because of everything God has done (vv. 3-14), Paul prays. The mention of 'hearing about' their faith (akousas) may support the circular letter theory — Paul would not need to hear about the faith of a church he founded. Some manuscripts omit 'love' (agapēn), but the SBLGNT includes it.
16. The present tense ou pauomai ('I do not cease') indicates continuous, habitual prayer. The phrase mneian poioumenos ('making mention, remembering') is a standard epistolary convention, but Paul's extended prayer (vv. 17-23) shows it is more than formula.
17. The title ho patēr tēs doxēs ('the Father of glory') is unique — God is the source and origin of all glory. The phrase pneuma sophias kai apokalypseōs ('a spirit of wisdom and revelation') could refer to the Holy Spirit or to a disposition of wisdom — the lowercase 'spirit' is deliberately ambiguous. The word epignōsis ('full knowledge, deep recognition') is stronger than gnōsis ('knowledge') — it implies experiential, relational knowledge, not merely intellectual.
18. The phrase tous ophthalmous tēs kardias ('the eyes of the heart') combines seeing and feeling — the heart in Hebrew/biblical thought is the center of understanding and will, not merely emotion. Paul prays for illumination of their deepest perception. Three 'what' (tis) clauses follow, each more expansive: (1) the hope of his calling, (2) the riches of his inheritance, (3) the greatness of his power (v. 19). The phrase 'his inheritance among the saints' is ambiguous: either the inheritance God gives to the saints or God's own inheritance in the saints (i.e., the saints themselves are God's treasured possession).
19. Paul piles four power-words: dynamis ('power, ability'), energeia ('working, effective operation'), kratos ('might, dominion, ruling power'), ischys ('strength, force'). The accumulation is deliberate — no single word can capture the magnitude of God's power directed toward believers. The participle hyperballon ('surpassing, exceeding, going beyond') suggests that this power overflows every container. This is not theoretical power but power 'toward us who believe' (eis hēmas tous pisteuontas).
20. The power Paul prays about is not abstract — it has a specific historical demonstration: the resurrection and exaltation of Christ. The verb enērgēsēn ('exerted, worked, put into operation') is the verbal form of the noun energeia from verse 19. The phrase kathisas en dexia autou ('having seated at his right hand') echoes Psalm 110:1, the most quoted Old Testament verse in the New Testament. The right hand is the position of authority, honor, and power.

- 20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalm 110:1 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
- 21. The four terms — archē ('ruler, principality'), exousia ('authority'), dynamis ('power'), kyriotēs ('dominion, lordship') — likely refer to ranks of spiritual beings in first-century Jewish angelology. Christ is exalted hyperanō ('far above') all of them. The phrase pantos onomatos onomazomenou ('every name that is named') extends the scope beyond known categories — whatever power exists, named or unnamed, in any era, Christ is above it. The temporal extension 'not only in this age but also in the one to come' closes every loophole: Christ's supremacy is permanent.
- 22. The phrase panta hypetaxen hypo tous podas autou ('put all things under his feet') quotes Psalm 8:6, applied to Christ as the true human who fulfills humanity's intended dominion over creation. The phrase kephalēn hyper panta ('head over all things') establishes Christ's universal lordship. But this cosmic head is 'given to the church' (edōken tē ekklēsia) — the church receives Christ as its head. The implication: the church is the community under Christ's direct authority, benefiting from his cosmic rule.
- 22. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalm 8:6. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
- 23. The church is identified as Christ's sōma ('body') — not merely an organization but an organic extension of Christ's presence. The word plērōma ('fullness, completeness') is a dense theological term: the church is the plērōma of Christ. This could mean the church fills up Christ (the church is what completes Christ's presence in the world) or Christ fills the church (the church is full of Christ). The participle plēroumenou can be middle ('who fills') or passive ('who is being filled'). The active sense — Christ fills all things in every way — best fits the context's emphasis on Christ's cosmic authority. The church is where the cosmos-filling Christ is most fully present.

Summary: Ephesians 2 moves from the cosmic heights of chapter 1 to the personal and corporate experience of salvation. The first section (vv. 1-10) describes humanity's condition — dead in trespasses, enslaved to the world, the flesh, and the devil — and God's response: making them alive with Christ, raising them with him, and seating them with him in the heavenly places. The pivot comes in verses 8-9, the definitive statement of grace-based salvation through faith. Verse 10 grounds the believer's new identity as God's 'workmanship, created for good works.' The second section (vv. 11-22) addresses the Jew-Gentile divide: Gentiles who were once excluded from the covenants of promise have been brought near through Christ's blood. Christ himself is their peace, breaking down the dividing wall of hostility, creating one new humanity, and reconciling both groups to God through the cross. The chapter climaxes with the image of the church as a holy temple, built on the foundation of apostles and prophets, with Christ as the cornerstone.

What Makes This Remarkable: Verses 8-9 are among the most quoted verses in all of Scripture and the cornerstone of Reformation soteriology. The 'dividing wall of hostility' (v. 14) may allude to the physical barrier in the Jerusalem temple that separated the Court of the Gentiles from the inner courts — a wall with inscriptions threatening death to any Gentile who crossed it. The 'one new humanity' (v. 15) is a radical concept: God does not assimilate Gentiles into Israel or Jews into a Gentile church, but creates something entirely new. The temple imagery (vv. 19-22) presents the church as the new dwelling place of God — replacing the Jerusalem temple with a living structure.

Translation Friction: The phrase 'the law of commandments in ordinances' (v. 15) is debated: does Christ abolish the Mosaic law itself, or only the law as a barrier between Jews and Gentiles? The relationship between this text and Romans 3:31 ('we uphold the law') requires careful reading. The 'dividing wall' reference is historically specific — the temple barrier — but its theological application is broader.

Connections: The death-to-life movement (vv. 1-6) parallels Romans 6:1-11 and Colossians 2:13. Grace through faith (vv. 8-9) condenses the argument of Romans 3:21-28. The 'brought near' language (v. 13) echoes Isaiah 57:19. The temple imagery (vv. 19-22) connects to 1 Corinthians 3:16-17 and 1 Peter 2:4-5. The 'cornerstone' (v. 20) draws on Isaiah 28:16 and Psalm 118:22.

¹And you were dead in your trespasses and sins, ²Wherein in moment past you walked according to the course of this age, according to the prince of the authority of the air, the inner life that now worketh in genuine offspring of disobedience:. ³Among them we all also once lived in the passions of our flesh, carrying out the desires of the body and the mind, and we were by nature children of wrath, just like the rest of humanity. ⁴But God, being rich in mercy, because of the great love with which he loved us, ⁵Not even when we were no longer alive in wrongdoings, has quickened us together with Christ, (by grace you are saved;). ⁶Has raised us up as one, and fashioned us take a seat together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus:. ⁷Indeed, that in the ages to come he might shew the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us by way of Christ Jesus. ⁸For or by grace you have been saved through faith. And this is not from yourselves; it is the gift of God, ⁹Indeed, not of works, lest any man should boast. ¹⁰For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God prepared in advance so that we would walk in them. ¹¹Therefore remember that at one time you Gentiles in the flesh — called "the uncircumcision" by what is called "the circumcision," which is performed in the flesh by human hands — ¹²That at that occasion you were apart from Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and apart from God in the world. ¹³But now in Christ Jesus, you who once were far away have been brought near by the blood of Christ. ¹⁴For he himself is our peace, who has made the two groups one and has destroyed the dividing wall of hostility, in his flesh, ¹⁵By his sacrifice he set aside the law with its commandments and regulations. His purpose was to create one new humanity out of two groups, making peace. ¹⁶That he might reconcile both to God in one body by the cross, after slain the enmity thereby:. ¹⁷And he came and proclaimed peace to you who were far away and peace to those who were near. ¹⁸For by way of him we both have access by one Spirit to the Father. ¹⁹So then, you are no longer strangers and aliens, but fellow citizens with the saints and members of God's household, ²⁰Are built upon the foundation of the messengers and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone. ²¹In whom every one of the building fitly framed together groweth to an holy temple in the Lord:. ²²In whom you also are builded together for an habitation of God by way of the Spirit.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The sentence that begins here does not reach its main verb until verse 5 ('made us alive'). The accusative hymas ('you') is the object held in suspension — 'you who were dead.' The word nekrous ('dead') is not metaphorical softening but a real theological claim: apart from God's intervention, the human condition is spiritual death. The plural paraptōmasin ('trespasses, false steps') and hamartiais ('sins, failures to hit the mark') describe two aspects of the same reality.
2. Three powers controlled the pre-Christian life: (1) ton aiōna tou kosmou toutou ('the age/course of this world') — the present evil age's value system; (2) ton archonta tēs exousias tou aeris ('the ruler of the power of the air') — a personal spiritual adversary; (3) the spirit (pneuma) at work in 'the children of disobedience' (tois huiōis tēs apeitheias — a Hebraism meaning 'those characterized by disobedience'). The 'air' (aeros) was believed in ancient cosmology to be the domain of spiritual beings between earth and heaven.
3. The shift from 'you' (Gentiles, vv. 1-2) to 'we all' (hēmeis pantes, including Jewish believers) universalizes the indictment — everyone, Jew and Gentile alike, was in the same condition. The phrase tekna physei orgēs ('children by nature of wrath') means that this condition was not incidental but inherent — humanity's default state. The word orgēs ('wrath') refers to God's settled opposition to sin, not emotional anger. The universality ('just like the rest') prevents any Jewish claim to exemption.
4. The two-word pivot ho de theos ('but God') is among the most dramatic transitions in Scripture. After the comprehensive indictment of verses 1-3, the subject changes from human failure to divine initiative. God's mercy is not scarce but plousios ('rich, abundant, overflowing'). The motive is agapē — not human merit or potential but God's own love. The verb ēgapēsen ('he loved') is aorist, pointing to the definitive act of love in Christ.
5. The main verb finally arrives: synezōopoiēsen ('made alive together with'). The syn- prefix ('together with') is the first of three 'co-' verbs (made alive with, raised with, seated with) that define the believer's participation in Christ's experience. The parenthetical chariti este sesōsmenoi ('by grace you have been saved') is a compressed version of verses 8-9, inserted as if Paul cannot wait to state the principle. The perfect participle sesōsmenoi ('having been saved and remaining saved') indicates a completed action with permanent results.
6. The second and third 'co-' verbs: synēgeiren ('raised together with') and synekathisen ('seated together with'). What happened to Christ (1:20) has happened to believers 'in Christ.' The present tense of the believer's existence is described in past tenses — they have already been raised and seated. This is 'realized eschatology': the believer's spiritual position is already in the heavenly places, even while they live on earth. The en Christō Iēsou ('in Christ Jesus') is the key — apart from Christ, none of this is real.
7. The purpose of salvation extends into eternity: God saved us to put his grace on permanent display. The phrase en tois aiōsin tois eperchomenois ('in the ages that are coming upon us') indicates endless future ages — an infinite gallery in which redeemed humanity is the exhibit of divine grace. The verb endeixētai ('might display, might demonstrate, might prove') was used for putting evidence on display in a courtroom. The saved are God's evidence of grace.
8. This verse is the compressed theological center of Ephesians and one of the most important soteriological statements in the New Testament. The dative tē chariti ('by grace') indicates the ground or basis. The prepositional phrase dia pisteōs ('through faith') indicates the means or channel. The phrase kai touto ouk ex hymōn ('and this not from yourselves') has been debated: what does 'this' (touto, neuter) refer to? Since both charis and pistis are feminine, touto likely refers to the entire salvific event — the grace-faith-salvation complex — rather than to faith alone. Theou to dōron ('God's gift') is emphatic by position: the gift belongs to God, not to human effort.

9. The negative ouk ex ergōn ('not from works') excludes human effort as the basis for salvation. The purpose clause hina mē tis kauchēsetai ('so that no one might boast') reveals the reason for the exclusion: salvation by works would create grounds for human pride. Grace eliminates boasting by making salvation entirely God's initiative. This echoes Romans 3:27 ('Where then is boasting? It is excluded.').
10. The word poiēma ('workmanship, thing made, masterpiece') is from poieō ('to make') — we get 'poem' from this word. Believers are God's crafted work, his artistic creation. The verb ktisthentes ('having been created') is creation language — salvation is new creation, not self-improvement. Good works are the purpose (epi ergois agathois, 'for good works') but not the cause of salvation. The verb proētoimasen ('prepared beforehand, pre-arranged') indicates that even the good works were divinely planned — believers walk a path God laid out before they existed.
11. The section shifts from the individual experience of salvation (vv. 1-10) to its corporate, ethnic dimension: Jew-Gentile reconciliation. The verb mnēmoneuete ('remember') is an imperative — they must not forget where they came from. The labels 'uncircumcision' and 'circumcision' are introduced with double irony: both are 'called' (legomenoi) these names — they are conventional labels. The modifier cheiropoiētou ('made by hands') subtly relativizes physical circumcision — it is a human-made distinction (cf. 'not made by hands' in Colossians 2:11).
12. Five deprivations are listed: (1) chōris Christou ('without Christ, separated from the Messiah'); (2) apellotriōmenoi tēs politeias tou Israēl ('alienated from Israel's citizenship' — excluded from the covenant community); (3) xenoi tōn diathēkōn tēs epangelias ('strangers to the covenants of promise' — the plural 'covenants' likely includes the Abrahamic, Mosaic, and Davidic); (4) elpida mē echontes ('having no hope'); (5) atheoi en tō kosmō ('without God in the world' — atheoi means 'godless,' the only use of this word in the New Testament). The catalog moves from the theological (no Messiah) to the existential (no hope, no God).
13. The pivot nyni de ('but now') parallels the 'but God' of verse 4. The far/near language (makran/engys) echoes Isaiah 57:19 ('Peace, peace, to the far and to the near'). In Jewish usage, 'those who are far' referred to Gentiles, 'those who are near' to Israel. The instrument of this approach is en tō haimati tou Christou ('by the blood of Christ') — Christ's sacrificial death removes the barrier. The verb egenēthēte ('you were made, you became') indicates a definitive change of status.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 57:19 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. Christ is not merely the peacemaker but is himself hē eirēnē hēmōn ('our peace'). The phrase ta amphotera hen ('the two things one') refers to Jew and Gentile made into a single entity. The mesotoichon tou phragmou ('the middle wall of the partition/fence') likely alludes to the physical barrier in the Jerusalem temple — the soreg, a stone wall with inscriptions in Greek and Latin warning Gentiles that crossing it meant death. Archaeologists have recovered two of these inscriptions. Christ's body (en tē sarki autou) is the instrument of demolition. The word echthran ('hostility, enmity') is in apposition to 'the wall' — the wall is the hostility.
15. The phrase ton nomon tōn entolōn en dogmasin ('the law of the commandments in/consisting of ordinances') specifies what was abolished: the law in its function as a barrier between Jew and Gentile — the specific regulations (dogmasin, 'decrees, ordinances') that separated the two communities. The verb katargēsas ('having rendered inoperative, having abolished') is strong. The purpose is creation: ktisē ('might create') — the same verb used for divine creation. The 'one new humanity' (hena kainon anthrōpon) is not Jews becoming Gentiles or Gentiles becoming Jews, but a new category entirely. The word kainos ('new in kind') indicates something unprecedented.
16. The verb apokatallaxē ('might fully reconcile') has the double prefix apo-kata- intensifying the reconciliation — thorough, complete restoration. The reconciliation is double: horizontal (Jew with Gentile, 'both') and vertical (both groups with God, tō theō). The instrument is the cross (dia tou staurou). The phrase apokteiras tēn echthran en autō ('having killed the enmity in/by it') is brilliantly paradoxical: on the cross, Christ was killed, but the enmity was the real casualty. The hostility died with Christ.
17. Paul echoes Isaiah 57:19 ('Peace, peace, to the far and to the near'). The repetition of eirēnēn ('peace') — once for each group — emphasizes that the same peace is offered to both. Christ's 'coming' (elthōn) may refer to his earthly ministry, his post-resurrection appearances, or his coming through the apostolic proclamation. The far/near categories of verse 13 return: Gentiles (far) and Jews (near) both receive the same gospel of peace.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 57:19. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. The verse is implicitly Trinitarian: through Christ (di' autou), in the Spirit (en heni pneumatī), to the Father (pros ton patera). The word prosagōgē ('access, introduction, approach') was used for being formally introduced into the presence of a king. Both Jew and Gentile now have royal audience with the Father — through the same Christ, by the same Spirit. The word amphoteroi ('both') is emphatic: neither group has privileged access.
19. The status change reverses verse 12: xenoi ('strangers') becomes sympolitai ('fellow citizens'); paroikoi ('resident aliens, sojourners without full rights') becomes oikeioi tou theou ('members of God's household, family members'). The movement is from outsider to insider, from excluded to integrated. The two images — citizenship and household — combine political and familial belonging.
20. The building metaphor begins. The themelion ('foundation') is 'of the apostles and prophets' — likely meaning the foundation that the apostles and prophets laid (their teaching), though some read it as the foundation consisting of the apostles and prophets themselves. The akrogōniaios ('cornerstone' or 'capstone') is the stone that determines the alignment of the entire structure. Whether this is a foundation cornerstone (setting the building's angle) or a capstone (crowning the arch) is debated; either way, Christ is the structurally decisive element.

- 21. The verb synarmologoumenē ('being fitted together, being joined together') is an architectural term for precisely joining stones without mortar — each piece is cut to fit. The present tense indicates ongoing construction. The verb auxei ('grows') is striking — buildings do not normally grow. The mixture of architectural and organic metaphors (fitted structure that grows) suggests a living building. The goal is naon hagion ('a holy temple') — the church replaces the Jerusalem temple as God's dwelling place. The word naos (inner sanctuary) rather than hieron (whole temple complex) specifies the most sacred space.
- 22. The verb synoikodomeisthe ('you are being built together') has the syn- prefix again — Gentile believers are co-built with Jewish believers into a single structure. The word katoikētērion ('dwelling place, permanent residence') is stronger than paroikia ('temporary lodging'). God does not visit this temple — he lives there. The phrase en pneumati ('by/in the Spirit') identifies the Spirit as the agent or atmosphere of this construction. The chapter ends where it began — with God's initiative — but the focus has shifted from individual salvation (vv. 1-10) to corporate, cosmic reconciliation (vv. 11-22).

Summary: Ephesians 3 reveals the content of the 'mystery' introduced in 1:9 — that Gentiles are fellow heirs with Israel, members of the same body, and sharers in the promise through the gospel. Paul describes his unique commission to proclaim this mystery and marvels that God's wisdom is now made known through the church even to cosmic powers. The chapter concludes with one of Paul's most majestic prayers: that believers would be strengthened by the Spirit in their inner being, that Christ would dwell in their hearts through faith, that they would comprehend the incomprehensible dimensions of Christ's love, and that they would be filled with all the fullness of God. A doxology closes the prayer.

What Makes This Remarkable: *The mystery of Gentile inclusion (vv. 5-6) is the theological heart of Ephesians. The church's role as God's classroom for cosmic powers (v. 10) is one of the most extraordinary ecclesiological claims in the New Testament. The prayer (vv. 14-21) is among the most theologically rich passages Paul ever wrote, with its four-dimensional love (breadth, length, height, depth) and the paradox of knowing what surpasses knowledge. The doxology (vv. 20-21) employs a double comparative: God can do 'exceedingly abundantly beyond' (hyperekekperissou) what we ask or imagine.*

Translation Friction: Paul begins a sentence in verse 1 that he does not complete until verse 14 — the digression in verses 2-13 is one of the longest parenthetical passages in the New Testament. The phrase 'holy apostles and prophets' (v. 5) is sometimes cited as evidence against Pauline authorship, since Paul elsewhere does not call the apostles 'holy.' The cosmic powers in verse 10 are debated — angelic beings, demonic forces, or both.

Connections: The mystery revealed connects to Colossians 1:26-27. Paul's imprisonment (v. 1) links to Philippians 1:12-14 and Colossians 4:3. The prayer for inner strengthening parallels Colossians 1:9-12. The 'fullness of God' (v. 19) echoes 1:23. The doxology's 'in the church and in Christ Jesus' (v. 21) binds ecclesiology and Christology together.

¹For this reason I, Paul, the prisoner of Christ Jesus on behalf of you Gentiles — ²If you have listened to of the dispensation of the grace of God which is given me to you-ward:. ³He made the mystery known to me by direct revelation, as I briefly described earlier. ⁴When you read this, you can perceive my insight into the mystery of Christ, ⁵Which in other ages was not made known to the sons of men, as it is now revealed to his sacred messengers and prophets by the Spirit. ⁶Here is the mystery: through the gospel, the Gentiles are fellow heirs with Israel, members of one body, and sharers together in the promise that comes through Christ Jesus. ⁷Of this gospel I was made a servant according to the gift of God's grace that was given to me by the working of his power. ⁸To me — the very least of all the saints — this grace was given: to proclaim to the Gentiles the unfathomable riches of Christ, ⁹To make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the present age has been hid in God, who created all matters by Jesus Christ:. ¹⁰God's intent was that now, through the church, the rulers and authorities in the heavenly realms would come to know his wisdom in all its rich variety. ¹¹This was according to the eternal purpose that he carried out in Christ Jesus our Lord, ¹²In him, and through faith in him, we may approach God with freedom and confidence. ¹³So I ask you not to lose heart over my sufferings for you, which are your glory. ¹⁴For this reason I kneel before the Father, ¹⁵Of whom the entire family in the heavens above and earth is named,.

¹⁶That he would grant you, in keeping with to the riches of all his splendor, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man;. ¹⁷Indeed, that Christ may dwell in your hearts by way of faith. That you, being rooted and grounded in love,. ¹⁸May be able to grasp together with all of God's people what is the breadth, length, depth, and height;. ¹⁹To know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that you might be overflowing with every one of the fulness of God. ²⁰Now to the one who is able to do immeasurably more than all we ask or imagine, according to his power that is at work within us, ²¹To him be splendor in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, present age without end. Amen.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Paul begins a prayer ('for this reason... I bow my knees') but interrupts himself with a lengthy digression about his ministry (vv. 2-13) before resuming the prayer in verse 14. The title desmios tou Christou Iēsou ('prisoner of Christ Jesus') reframes his Roman imprisonment as Christ's assignment: he is Christ's prisoner, not Rome's. The phrase hyper hymōn tōn ethnōn ('on behalf of you Gentiles') identifies the cause of his imprisonment — his Gentile mission provoked the hostility that led to his arrest.
2. The conditional ei ge ēkousate ('if indeed you have heard') is not expressing doubt but invoking known information — 'as you surely have heard.' The word oikonomia ('stewardship, administration, management') pictures Paul as a household manager entrusted with distributing God's grace to the Gentiles. Grace is not just Paul's personal possession but a trust to be administered.
3. The phrase kata apokalypsin ('by revelation') echoes Galatians 1:12 — the mystery came through direct divine disclosure, not human instruction. The phrase kathōs proegrapsa en oligō ('as I wrote briefly before') likely refers to the earlier section of this same letter (1:9-10; 2:11-22) rather than to a separate earlier letter.
4. The phrase tēn synesin mou ('my understanding, my insight') is not self-congratulation but a claim to genuine comprehension of the mystery through revelation. The phrase en tō mystērīō tou Christou ('in/regarding the mystery of Christ') specifies the content: this is Christ's mystery — it belongs to him and concerns him.
5. The comparison hōs nyn ('as it has now') does not say the mystery was completely unknown before, but that it was not known with the clarity it now possesses. The phrase hagiois apostolois kai prophētais ('holy apostles and prophets') has been debated — some find 'holy' applied to apostles to be un-Pauline. The 'prophets' are likely New Testament prophets (cf. 2:20; 4:11) rather than Old Testament figures. The means of revelation is the Spirit (en pneumati).
6. The mystery's content is finally stated in three syn- compounds: synklēronoma ('co-heirs'), syssōma ('co-bodied, members of the same body'), and symmetocha ('co-sharers'). Each prefix syn- ('together with') emphasizes full participation alongside Jewish believers. The word syssōma appears only here in Greek literature — Paul likely coined it. Gentiles are not second-class members or honorary additions but fully integrated into the one body. The instrument is the gospel (dia tou euangeliou); the sphere is Christ (en Christō Iēsou).
7. The verb egenēthēn ('I was made, I became') is passive — Paul did not choose this ministry; he was appointed. The word diakonos ('servant, minister') carries no hierarchical weight here — Paul is a servant of the gospel. The phrase kata tēn energeian tēs dynamēōs autou ('according to the working of his power') attributes Paul's entire ministry to divine empowerment, not personal ability.
8. The word elachistoterō is a grammatical impossibility — a comparative form of a superlative ('leastest than the least'). Paul intensifies 'least' beyond normal grammar to express how undeserving he feels, likely in view of his persecution of the church (cf. 1 Corinthians 15:9). The adjective anexichniaston ('untraceable, unfathomable, inscrutable') was used for footprints that cannot be followed — Christ's riches are too vast to track to their source.
9. The verb phōtīσαι ('to illuminate, to bring to light') continues the light/darkness theme. The mystery was apokekrymmenou ('having been hidden') — perfect participle indicating long concealment — apo tōn aiōnōn ('from the ages, since eternity'). The mystery's hiding place was en tō theō ('in God') — only God knew the plan. The participial phrase tō ta panta ktisanti ('who created all things') connects the mystery of redemption to creation — the same God who made everything now reveals his plan for reuniting everything.
10. This is one of the most remarkable verses in Ephesians: the church is God's instrument for instructing cosmic powers. The adjective polypoikilos ('many-colored, multi-faceted, richly varied') is extremely rare — used for elaborately embroidered fabric. God's wisdom is not monochrome but endlessly complex and beautiful. The 'rulers and authorities in the heavenly places' (tais archais kai tais exousiais en tois epouraniois) are spiritual beings who learn about God's wisdom by observing what he does in the church. The reconciliation of Jew and Gentile into one body is the curriculum.
11. The phrase prothesin tōn aiōnōn ('purpose of the ages, eternal purpose') frames God's plan as spanning all of history. The verb epoiēsen ('he made, he carried out') indicates that this eternal purpose has been realized — it is accomplished fact, not merely intention. Christ Jesus is both the sphere and the agent of this accomplishment.
12. The word parrēsia ('boldness, freedom of speech, confidence') was used for the right of a citizen to speak openly in the assembly. The word prostagōgē ('access, introduction') repeats from 2:18. The phrase en pepoiēthēsei ('with confidence, in trust') intensifies the access — believers approach God not with cringing fear but with bold assurance. The phrase dia tēs pisteōs autou ('through his faithfulness/through faith in him') again raises the subjective/objective genitive question.

13. The verb aitoumai ('I ask, I request') closes the digression and prepares for the return to prayer. Paul's concern is not his own suffering but the Galatians' potential discouragement at it. The phrase hētis estin doxa hymōn ('which is your glory') reframes Paul's imprisonment: his suffering for their sake is their badge of honor — proof that God considers them worth suffering for.
14. Paul resumes the prayer interrupted at verse 1. The phrase kamptō ta gonata mou ('I bend my knees') is notable because Jews typically stood to pray; kneeling indicated extraordinary intensity or urgency. The preposition pros ('toward, before') indicates movement toward the Father in prayer.
15. There is a wordplay between patēr ('father') and patria ('family, clan, lineage'). Every family — heavenly and earthly, angelic and human — takes its identity from the one Father. The phrase en ouranois kai epi gēs ('in heaven and on earth') encompasses the entire created order.
16. The first petition: inner strengthening. The phrase kata to ploutos tēs doxēs autou ('according to the riches of his glory') sets the scale of God's giving — he gives according to the measure of his infinite glory, not according to human capacity. The phrase eis ton esō anthrōpon ('in the inner person') refers to the deepest level of human identity — the self that is being renewed by the Spirit (cf. 2 Corinthians 4:16; Romans 7:22).
17. The second petition: Christ's indwelling. The verb katoikēsai ('to dwell, to take up permanent residence') is stronger than paroikeō ('to sojourn temporarily'). Christ does not visit the heart — he moves in permanently. The perfect participles errizōmenoi ('having been rooted') and tethemeliōmenoi ('having been established on a foundation') mix botanical and architectural metaphors: love is both the soil and the foundation of the Christian life.
18. The third petition: comprehension of Christ's love. The verb exischysēte ('may have full strength, may be empowered') suggests this comprehension requires supernatural enablement. The four dimensions — platos ('breadth'), mēkos ('length'), hypsos ('height'), bathos ('depth') — describe something immeasurable. The object is unstated — what is four-dimensional? Most likely Christ's love (specified in v. 19), though some suggest the mystery, God's plan, or Christ himself. The phrase syn pasin tois hagiois ('with all the saints') indicates this is not private mysticism but communal knowledge.
19. The deliberate paradox: gnōnai ('to know') the love that hyperballousan tēs gnōseōs ('surpasses knowledge'). Paul prays for experiential knowledge of something that transcends intellectual comprehension. The final petition reaches the summit: hina plērōthēte eis pan to plērōma tou theou ('that you may be filled unto all the fullness of God'). The preposition eis ('unto, toward') indicates a goal that is never fully reached — believers are being filled toward God's own fullness. The scope of this prayer is staggering: nothing less than God's own fullness as the measure of human transformation.
20. The doxology opens with one of Paul's most exuberant expressions: hyperekerisrou ('super-abundantly beyond, immeasurably more'). This compound adverb piles prefix upon prefix: hyper ('beyond') + ek ('out of') + perissou ('abundance'). God's ability exceeds both our requests (aitoumetha, 'we ask') and our imagination (nooumen, 'we conceive, we think'). The power standard is not theoretical but experiential: kata tēn dynamin tēn energoumenēn en hēmin ('according to the power working in us'). The same power that raised Christ (1:19-20) is presently at work in believers.
21. The doxology's unique feature: glory is ascribed en tē ekklēsia kai en Christō Iēsou ('in the church and in Christ Jesus'). The church and Christ are paired as the dual venue of God's glory — an extraordinary elevation of the church's significance. The temporal phrase eis pasas tas geneas tou aiōnos tōn aiōnōn ('unto all the generations of the age of the ages') extends the doxology through all human history and beyond into eternity.

Summary: Ephesians 4 marks the transition from theology (chapters 1-3) to ethics (chapters 4-6), opened by Paul's appeal to 'walk worthy of the calling.' The chapter addresses church unity through a sevenfold confession (one body, one Spirit, one hope, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God), the diversity of spiritual gifts given by the ascended Christ, and the purpose of those gifts — building up the body until it reaches maturity. The second half contrasts the old way of life ('the old self') with the new ('the new self'), calling believers to put off falsehood, anger, stealing, corrupt speech, and bitterness, and to put on truth, generosity, edifying speech, kindness, and forgiveness.

What Makes This Remarkable: The sevenfold unity formula (vv. 4-6) may preserve an early baptismal confession. The quotation from Psalm 68:18 in verse 8 is modified from the original ('received gifts from people' becomes 'gave gifts to people'), a reading that follows an interpretive tradition also found in the Aramaic Targum. The 'descending/ascending' passage (vv. 9-10) is one of the most debated christological texts — does Christ descend to earth (incarnation), to Hades (descent to the dead), or is this the Spirit's descent at Pentecost? The 'speaking the truth in love' phrase (v. 15) has become proverbial.

Translation Friction: The modification of Psalm 68:18 raises questions about Paul's exegetical method. The phrase 'lower parts of the earth' (v. 9) is ambiguous. The list of ministry gifts (v. 11) is debated in terms of whether these are permanent offices or temporary functions. The relationship between 'apostles' here and modern claims to apostleship is contested across traditions.

Connections: The 'worthy walk' echoes Colossians 1:10 and Philippians 1:27. The gift lists connect to Romans 12:6-8 and 1 Corinthians 12:4-11. The old self/new self language parallels Colossians 3:9-10. The ethical instructions share material with the vice/virtue catalogs of Galatians 5:19-23. The 'sealed with the Holy Spirit' (v. 30) echoes 1:13.

¹I therefore, the prisoner in the Lord, urge you to walk in a manner worthy of the calling to which you have been called, ²With all lowliness and meekness, with patience, forbearing one another in love; ³Endeavouring to observe the unity of the Inner life in the bond of wholeness. ⁴There is one body and one Spirit — just as you were called to the one hope that belongs to your call — ⁵One baptism,, one Lord, one faith. ⁶And in you all, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all. ⁷But grace was given to each one of us according to the measure of Christ's gift. ⁸Therefore it says, "When he ascended on high he led a host of captives, and he gave gifts to people." ⁹(Now the phrase "he ascended" — what does it mean except that he also descended to the lower regions, namely the earth? ¹⁰The one who descended is the same one who also ascended far above all the heavens, so that he might fill all things.) ¹¹And he himself gave some as apostles, some as prophets, some as evangelists, and some as pastors and teachers, ¹²to equip God's people for the work of ministry, so that the body of Christ would be built up, ¹³until we all reach unity in the faith and in the knowledge of the Son of God, becoming mature and growing to the full measure of Christ himself. ¹⁴Then we will no longer be like infants, tossed back and forth by waves, and blown around by every new teaching and by the cunning trickery of people who scheme to deceive. ¹⁵Rather, speaking the truth in love, we are to grow up in every way into him who is the head, into Christ, ¹⁶Indeed, from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, makes increase of the body to the edifying of itself in love. ¹⁷So this I say and insist on in the Lord: you must no longer walk as the Gentiles do, in the futility of their thinking. ¹⁸They are darkened in their understanding, alienated from the life of God because of the ignorance that is in them, due to the hardness of their hearts. ¹⁹Having lost all sensitivity, they have given themselves over to sensuality so as to indulge in every kind of impurity with a continual craving for more. ²⁰But that is not how you learned Christ! ²¹If so be that you have listened to him, and have been taught by him, as the truth is in Jesus:. ²²That you put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt in keeping with to the deceitful lusts;. ²³Let your thinking be made completely new;. ²⁴That you put on the new man, which following God is created in righteousness and true holiness. ²⁵Therefore, having put away falsehood, let each of you speak truth with your neighbor, for we are members of one another. ²⁶Be angry but do not sin; do not let the sun go down on your anger, ²⁷Neither give location to the devil. ²⁸Let the thief no longer steal, but rather let him labor, doing honest work with his own hands, so that he may have something to share with anyone in need. ²⁹Let no unwholesome talk come out of your mouths, but only what is good for building up, as the need arises, so that it may give grace to those who hear. ³⁰And do not grieve the Holy Spirit of God, by whom you were sealed for the day of redemption. ³¹Let all bitterness and wrath and anger and clamor and slander be put away from you, along with all malice. ³²Be kind to one another, tenderhearted, forgiving each other, just as God in Christ forgave you.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The word oun ('therefore') connects the ethical exhortation to the theological foundation of chapters 1-3. The verb parakaleō ('I urge, I appeal, I exhort') is not a command but a pastoral appeal. Paul again identifies himself as desmios ('prisoner'), lending moral authority to his exhortation. The phrase axiōs peripatēsai ('to walk worthily') uses the standard Pauline metaphor for daily conduct. The calling (klēseōs) refers to God's call described in chapters 1-3.
2. Four qualities define the worthy walk: tapeinophrosynē ('humility' — a virtue despised in Greco-Roman culture but prized in Christianity), praūtēs ('gentleness, meekness' — strength under control), makrothymia ('patience, long-suffering' — a slow fuse), and anechomenoi allēlōn en agapē ('bearing with one another in love' — tolerating others' weaknesses because love absorbs offense). These are the same qualities that characterize the fruit of the Spirit (Galatians 5:22-23).

3. The verb spoudazontes ('making every effort, being diligent, being zealous') indicates that unity requires active work, not passive agreement. The 'unity of the Spirit' (tēn henotēta tou pneumatos) is unity created by the Spirit — it already exists and must be maintained (tērein, 'to keep, to guard'), not manufactured. The 'bond of peace' (syndesmō tēs eirēnēs) is the ligament that holds the community together — peace is the binding agent.
4. The sevenfold confession begins. The first triad relates to the Spirit's work: one body (the church), one Spirit (the Holy Spirit who animates it), one hope (the eschatological expectation the Spirit generates). The number seven — the biblical number of completeness — may be deliberate: the unity is total.
5. The second triad relates to the Son's work: one Lord (Jesus Christ), one faith (the faith response to the one Lord), one baptism (the rite of initiation into the one body). 'One baptism' may be stated to counter the idea that different types of baptism produce different levels of membership. The creedal rhythm suggests this may be a pre-Pauline confessional formula.
6. The confession climaxes with the Father: one God who is epi pantōn ('over all' — sovereign), dia pantōn ('through all' — pervasive), en pasin ('in all' — immanent). The three prepositions describe God's relationship to creation and to the community from three angles: transcendence, pervasion, and indwelling. The Trinitarian structure of the confession is clear: Spirit (v. 4), Son (v. 5), Father (v. 6).
7. Paul pivots from unity to diversity: heni de hekastō ('but to each one'). Unity does not mean uniformity. The passive edothē ('was given') attributes the gift to divine initiative. The phrase kata to metron tēs dōreas tou Christou ('according to the measure of Christ's gift') indicates Christ determines the distribution — each person receives a measured portion appropriate to their role.
8. Paul quotes Psalm 68:18, but with a significant change: the Hebrew and Greek OT read 'received gifts from/among people,' while Paul writes 'gave gifts to people.' This may follow an interpretive tradition preserved in the Aramaic Targum of Psalm 68, which also reads 'gave.' Paul applies the psalm to Christ's ascension: as a conquering king who distributes spoils to his people, Christ ascended and distributed gifts (the ministry roles of v. 11) to the church.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalms 68:18 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The phrase ta katōtera merē tēs gēs ('the lower parts of the earth') is debated: (1) the earth as the lower region compared to heaven — 'the lower regions, namely the earth' (genitive of apposition), referring to the incarnation; (2) the regions beneath the earth — Hades/Sheol, referring to a descent to the dead between crucifixion and resurrection. Reading (1) is preferred by most modern commentators because the context focuses on incarnation and ascension, not a descent to the dead. We render with the appositional reading while noting the alternative.
10. The identity statement is emphatic: ho katabas autos estin kai ho anabas ('the one who descended is himself also the one who ascended'). One person encompasses the full trajectory from highest heaven to lowest earth and back again. The purpose clause hina plērōsē ta panta ('so that he might fill all things') connects to 1:23 — Christ fills the entire cosmos with his presence and authority.
11. Christ's gifts to the church are not things but people — he gave persons to serve in specific roles. Five roles (or four, if 'pastors and teachers' is one combined role — the Greek structure tous de poimenas kai didaskalous shares a single article, suggesting one role with two functions) are listed. These are not exhaustive (cf. Romans 12; 1 Corinthians 12) but emphasize leadership gifts for the church's growth. The word euangelistas ('evangelists') appears only here, in Acts 21:8, and in 2 Timothy 4:5.
12. The noun katartismos ('equipping, preparing, training') was used for setting a broken bone or outfitting a ship for a voyage. The leaders' purpose is not to do all the ministry themselves but to equip the saints (tous hagious) to do the work (ergon diakonias). Ministry belongs to the entire community; leaders prepare the community for it. The goal is oikodomēn tou sōmatos tou Christou ('building up the body of Christ') — growth and maturation of the church.
13. Three goals define the church's maturity: (1) unity in faith and knowledge, (2) mature personhood (andra teleion — teleios means 'complete, having reached the goal, mature'), (3) the measure of Christ's fullness (metron hēlikias tou plērōmatos tou Christou). The third standard is breathtaking: the church's growth target is nothing less than Christ's own fullness. The word hēlikia can mean 'stature' or 'maturity/age' — both senses apply.
14. The negative purpose: growth prevents childishness (nēpioi, 'infants' — the same word as 'minors' in Galatians 4:1). Two nautical metaphors describe doctrinal instability: klydōnizomenoi ('tossed by waves') and peripheromenoi ('carried about, driven off course'). The source of the instability is false teachers characterized by kybeia ('dice-playing, trickery' — loaded dice), panourgia ('craftiness, unscrupulousness'), and methodeia ('scheming, stratagems' — from methodos, 'a pursuing after, a method of attack').
15. The participle alētheuontes ('truthing, being truthful') is broader than just speech — it means living authentically, dealing honestly, being genuine in all things. The qualifier en agapē ('in love') prevents truth from becoming a weapon. Growth is directional: eis auton ('into him') — the church grows toward and into Christ, its head. The word kephalē ('head') carries both authority ('the one in charge') and origin ('the source of life').
16. An anatomical description of the church as Christ's body. The verb synarmologoumenon ('being fitted together') repeats from 2:21. The verb symbibazsomenon ('being held together, being knit together') adds the idea of organic connection. The phrase dia pasēs haphēs tēs epichorēgias ('through every joint/ligament of supply') pictures the body's connective tissue — each joint or ligament supplies what the neighboring parts need. The phrase kat' energeian en metrō henos hekastou merous ('according to the working in the measure of each individual part') means every single member contributes according to their proportion. The result: growth and self-building in love.

17. The verb martyromai ('I insist, I testify, I solemnly declare') intensifies the exhortation. The phrase en mataiotēti tou noos autōn ('in the futility/emptiness of their mind') diagnoses the root problem: pagan life is characterized by disordered thinking. The word mataiotēs ('futility, emptiness, pointlessness') echoes Romans 1:21 ('they became futile in their thinking'). The ethical collapse Paul describes in verses 17-19 is rooted in intellectual and spiritual dysfunction.
18. A chain of spiritual dysfunction: darkened understanding (eskotōmenoi tē dianoia) alienation from God's life (apēllotriōmenoi tēs zōēs tou theou) ignorance (agnoian) hardness of heart (pōrosin tēs kardias). The word pōrosis ('hardening, callousness') was a medical term for the calcification of bone around a fracture — the heart has become calcified, unable to feel or respond. The chain moves from symptom (darkness) to root cause (hardness).
19. The verb apēlgēkotes ('having become callous, having ceased to feel pain') describes moral numbness — the conscience no longer registers wrongdoing. The verb paredōkan ('they handed themselves over') echoes Romans 1:24, 26, 28 where God 'hands them over' — here the Gentiles actively surrender themselves. The triad of aselgeia ('sensuality'), akatharsia ('impurity'), and pleonexia ('greed, insatiable desire for more') describes a moral spiral: sensuality leads to impurity, driven by a craving that is never satisfied.
20. The phrase emathete ton Christon ('you learned Christ') is unusual — one normally learns about someone or from someone, not learns a person. Christ himself is the content of Christian education, not merely its subject. The emphatic hymeis de ouch houtōs ('but you — not in this way!') draws a sharp line between the Gentile lifestyle just described and the believers' new reality.
21. The conditional ei ge ('if indeed, assuming that') presumes the condition is met. The phrase auton ēkousate ('you heard him') suggests they heard Christ himself through the apostolic proclamation. The phrase en autō edidachthēte ('you were taught in him') means their instruction took place within the sphere of Christ's reality. The phrase kathōs estin alētheia en tō Iēsou ('just as truth is in Jesus') is striking — Paul rarely uses the bare name 'Jesus' without 'Christ' or 'Lord.' Here the human name may emphasize the concrete, historical reality of Jesus's life and teaching as the standard of truth.
22. The infinitive apothesthai ('to put off, to lay aside') uses the clothing metaphor — the old self is a garment to be removed. The ton palaion anthrōpon ('the old person, the old self') is not merely old habits but the entire pre-Christian identity. The present participle phtheiromenon ('being corrupted, being destroyed') indicates the old self was in a process of active decay — it was not merely flawed but disintegrating. The desires are tēs apatēs ('of deception') — they promise satisfaction but deliver destruction.
23. The infinitive ananeousthai ('to be renewed') is present tense — renewal is an ongoing process, not a one-time event. The passive voice indicates God's agency in the renewal. The phrase tō pneumati tou noos hymōn ('in the spirit of your mind') targets the deepest level of mental and spiritual orientation — the mindset, the inner disposition, the controlling attitudes that shape all thinking and behavior.
24. The clothing metaphor continues: endysasthai ('to put on, to clothe yourself with') the ton kainon anthrōpon ('the new self'). This new self is not self-generated but kτισθenta ('created') — the same creation language as 2:10. The phrase kata theon ('according to God, in God's likeness') echoes Genesis 1:26-27 — the new creation restores the divine image. The qualities are dikaïosynē ('righteousness' — right relationship) and hosiōtēs ('holiness, devout integrity') tēs alētheias ('of truth' — genuine, not counterfeit).
24. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 1:26-27. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
25. Paul applies the old self/new self principle to specific behaviors. The first: replace to pseudos ('falsehood, the lie') with alētheia ('truth'). Paul quotes Zechariah 8:16. The motivation is body-theology: esmen allēlōn melē ('we are members of one another'). Lying to a fellow believer is like one body part deceiving another — it is self-destructive absurdity.
25. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Zechariah 8:16 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
26. Paul quotes Psalm 4:4 (LXX). The imperative orgizesthe ('be angry') may be permissive ('if you become angry') or genuine ('anger is appropriate in some circumstances'). The qualifier mē hamartanete ('do not sin') separates anger from sin — anger itself is not inherently sinful, but it easily becomes so. The sun-going-down image imposes a time limit: anger must be resolved daily, not allowed to fester overnight. The word parorgismō ('anger, provocation, irritation') suggests the simmering variety.
26. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalms 4:4. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
27. The word topon ('place, room, opportunity') pictures unresolved anger as a beachhead — a foothold from which the devil (tō diabolō, 'the slanderer, the accuser') can expand his influence in the community. The connection between anger and the devil suggests that prolonged anger opens the door to evil's work in relationships.
28. The transformation is threefold: from stealing to honest labor to generous sharing. The ethic does not merely stop a negative behavior but redirects the energy toward a positive purpose. The motivation for work is not self-enrichment but hina echē metadidonai ('so that he may have something to share'). The entire economic orientation shifts from taking to giving.
29. The adjective sapros ('rotten, putrid, unwholesome') was used for rotten fruit or spoiled fish. The replacement is speech that is agathos pros oikodomēn ('good for building up') — constructive, timely, grace-giving. The phrase hina dō charin tois akouousin ('so that it may give grace to those who hear') makes speech a vehicle of grace — words are not neutral but carry either corruption or grace to their hearers.

30. The verb lypeite ('grieve, cause sorrow') attributes personal emotion to the Holy Spirit — the Spirit can be grieved by believers' conduct. This presupposes the Spirit's personhood. The reference to sealing (esphragisthēte) recalls 1:13. The phrase eis hēmeran apolytrōseōs ('for/until the day of redemption') indicates the seal holds until the final day — the Spirit's presence is the guarantee of complete, future redemption. The ethical implications are profound: the Spirit who guarantees salvation is wounded by the very sins Paul has been cataloging.
31. Six vices are expelled: pikria ('bitterness' — resentment that poisons), thymos ('wrath' — explosive fury), orgē ('anger' — settled hostility), kraugē ('clamor' — loud quarreling, shouting), blasphēmia ('slander, abusive speech' — not only against God but against people), and kakia ('malice' — the general disposition of ill will). The imperative arthētō ('let it be removed') is passive — these are to be taken away, eliminated from the community.
32. Three replacement virtues: chrēstōi ('kind, good, generous' — related to Christos by sound, a connection early Christians noticed), eusplanchnoi ('tenderhearted, compassionate' — literally 'good bowels,' since the intestines were considered the seat of deep emotion), and charizomenoi heautois ('forgiving one another' — from charizomai, 'to give freely, to grace'). The standard for forgiveness is divine: kathōs kai ho theos en Christō echarisato hymin ('just as God in Christ forgave you'). God's forgiveness is both the model and the motivation for human forgiveness.

Summary: Ephesians 5 continues the ethical exhortation, calling believers to imitate God and walk in love as Christ loved them. Paul warns against sexual immorality, impurity, greed, and coarse talk — behaviors that have no place among 'children of light.' He contrasts the darkness of the old life with the fruit of light. The chapter then addresses wise living: making the most of every opportunity, understanding the Lord's will, being filled with the Spirit (expressed through psalms, hymns, thanksgiving, and mutual submission). The final section introduces the household code, beginning with the husband-wife relationship, which Paul elevates to a profound mystery about Christ and the church.

What Makes This Remarkable: The command to 'be filled with the Spirit' (v. 18) is followed not by charismatic manifestations but by worship, thanksgiving, and mutual submission — the Spirit's fullness is expressed communally. The husband-wife passage (vv. 22-33) contains Paul's deepest reflection on marriage as an image of Christ's relationship with the church. The quotation of Genesis 2:24 ('the two shall become one flesh') is called a 'profound mystery' (v. 32) that Paul applies to Christ and the church. The 'Awake, O sleeper' fragment (v. 14) may preserve an early Christian hymn or baptismal formula.

Translation Friction: The household code (vv. 22-33) reflects patriarchal assumptions of the first-century Greco-Roman world. Paul both works within and subverts these structures: the call for wives to submit is framed by mutual submission (v. 21) and matched by the radical demand that husbands love their wives as Christ loved the church — sacrificially unto death. We render the text faithfully without either flattening or amplifying its cultural context. The verb 'submit' in verse 22 is not actually present in the Greek — it is carried over from verse 21.

Connections: Walking in love (v. 2) echoes 1 John 4:7-12. The light/darkness contrast parallels Romans 13:11-14 and 1 Thessalonians 5:4-8. The Spirit-filling connects to Acts 2 and Galatians 5:16-25. The household code parallels Colossians 3:18-4:1 and 1 Peter 3:1-7. The Christ-church marriage typology draws on Old Testament imagery of God as Israel's husband (Hosea 2; Isaiah 54; Ezekiel 16).

¹Therefore be imitators of God, as beloved children. ²Conduct your lives in devotion, as Christ as well has loved us, and has granted himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweetsmelling savour. ³But sexual immorality and any kind of impurity or greed must not even be mentioned among you, as is fitting for saints. ⁴Obscene language, foolish talk, and crude joking have no place among you. Instead, let there be thanksgiving. ⁵For you can be sure of this: no sexually immoral or impure or greedy person — such a person is an idolater — has any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God. ⁶Let no one deceive you with empty words, for because of these things the wrath of God comes upon the children of disobedience. ⁷Therefore do not become partners with them. ⁸For at one time you were darkness, but now you are light in the Lord. Walk as children of light, ⁹(For the fruit of the Inner life is in all goodness and moral integrity and truth;). ¹⁰Indeed, proving what is acceptable to the Lord. ¹¹Take no part in the fruitless works of darkness, but instead expose them. ¹²For it is shameful even to speak of the things they do in secret. ¹³But everything exposed by the light becomes visible, ¹⁴For this reason he says, Awake you that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ will give you light. ¹⁵Look carefully then how you walk, not as unwise people but as wise, ¹⁶Indeed, redeeming the time, because the days are evil. ¹⁷Therefore do not be foolish, but understand what the will of the Lord is. ¹⁸And do not get drunk with wine, for that leads to reckless living. Instead, be filled with the Spirit, ¹⁹Speak to one another with psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs. Sing and make music from your heart to the Lord. ²⁰Giving thanks always for all things to God and the Father by the authority of our Lord Jesus Christ;. ²¹Submit to one another out of reverence for God. ²²Wives, submit to your own husbands as to the Lord, ²³For the husband is the skull of the wife, indeed as Christ is the head of the church — then he is the saviour of the body. ²⁴Now as the church submits to Christ, so also wives should submit to their husbands in everything. ²⁵Husbands, love your wives, just as Christ loved the church and gave himself up for her, ²⁶Indeed, that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the message,. ²⁷That he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any these people thing. But that it should be sacred and without blemish. ²⁸In the same way husbands should love their wives as their own bodies. He who loves his wife loves himself. ²⁹For no one ever hated his own flesh, but nourishes and cherishes it, just as Christ does the church, ³⁰Indeed, since we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones. ³¹"For this reason a man will leave his father and mother and be joined to his wife, and the two will become one flesh." ³²This mystery is profound, and I am saying that it refers to Christ and the church. ³³However, let each one of you love his wife as himself, and let the wife respect her husband.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The word mimētai ('imitators') gives us the English word 'mimic.' Children naturally imitate their parents — believers imitate their Father. The standard is breathtaking: imitate God. The phrase hōs tekna agapēta ('as beloved children') provides the relational basis: imitation flows from the security of being loved, not from the anxiety of earning approval.
2. Christ's self-giving love defines the content of the 'walk in love' command. The verb paredōken heauton ('gave himself over') echoes Galatians 2:20. Christ is both priest and offering. The phrase prosphoran kai thysian ('offering and sacrifice') uses Old Testament sacrificial terminology. The phrase eis osmēn euōdias ('for a fragrant aroma') quotes the language of acceptable sacrifice from Leviticus 1:9, 13, 17 — Christ's self-offering is the sacrifice God receives with pleasure.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Leviticus 1:9. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. The triad porneia ('sexual immorality'), akatharsia ('impurity'), and pleonexia ('greed') groups sexual and economic sin together — both involve taking what belongs to another. The phrase mēde onomazesthō ('must not even be named') indicates these behaviors should be so absent from the community that they are not even a topic of conversation. The standard is kathōs prepei hagiois ('as is fitting for holy ones') — the believers' identity as 'saints' defines what is appropriate.
4. Three speech vices: aischrotēs ('obscenity, shameful speech'), mōrologia ('foolish talk, silly speech'), and eutrapelia ('coarse wit, crude joking'). The last word (eutrapelia) was considered a virtue in Greek rhetoric — 'ready wit' — but Paul regards it as inappropriate when it crosses into sexual or degrading humor. The replacement is eucharistia ('thanksgiving') — speech directed upward rather than downward.
5. The equation pleonektēs, ho estin eidōlōlatrēs ('the greedy person, who is an idolater') identifies greed as a form of idolatry — the worship of material acquisition (cf. Colossians 3:5). The phrase tē basileia tou Christou kai theou ('the kingdom of Christ and of God') uses a single article governing both nouns, closely associating Christ and God as joint rulers of the kingdom. This is one of the strongest christological statements in Ephesians.
6. The 'empty words' (kenois logois) may refer to those who argued that grace covers all behavior — a libertine distortion of Paul's own teaching. The phrase tous huiōus tēs apeitheias ('the children of disobedience') repeats from 2:2, forming an inclusion: the lifestyle described in 2:1-3 brings divine wrath, and believers must not return to it.
7. The word symmetochoi ('co-partners, co-sharers') warns against participation in the behaviors of verse 3-5, not against all contact with unbelievers. The command is about shared practice, not social isolation.
8. Paul does not say they were 'in darkness' but that they were darkness (ēte skotos) — darkness was their identity, not merely their environment. Similarly, they do not merely have light — they are light (phōs en kyriō). The transformation is ontological, not merely behavioral. The qualifier en kyriō ('in the Lord') prevents this from becoming self-congratulation: they are light only in connection with the Lord.
9. The SBLGNT reads 'fruit of the light' (phōtos) rather than 'fruit of the Spirit' (pneumatōs) found in some manuscripts. The triad agathōsynē ('goodness'), dikaioōsynē ('righteousness'), and alētheia ('truth') describes the harvest produced by a life lived in the light.
10. The verb dokimazontes ('testing, discerning, approving after testing') indicates active moral discernment — not following rules mechanically but testing what genuinely pleases the Lord in each situation. This is mature Christian ethics: not a codebook but a relationship with the Lord that develops discernment.

11. The command has two parts: non-participation (mē synkoinōneite, 'do not co-participate') and active exposure (elenchete, 'reprove, expose, bring to light'). The adjective akarpōis ('fruitless, unproductive') contrasts with the 'fruit of the light' in verse 9. Darkness produces nothing of lasting value. The verb elenchō means both verbal rebuke and the act of exposing something to the light.
12. The phrase ta krypte ginomena ('the things done in secret') suggests practices too degrading to describe publicly. Paul's reticence stands in contrast to the Greco-Roman cultural tolerance — or celebration — of such behavior. The verb legein ('to speak of') indicates that detailed description would itself be a form of participation.
13. Light's function is revelation: elenchomena hypo tou phōtos phaneroutai ('things exposed by the light are made visible'). The light does not destroy but reveals — making the hidden visible. This is both a statement about moral truth (sin cannot hide from light) and about the community's prophetic function (believers' lives expose darkness).
14. The quotation is not from any known Old Testament text. It may be: (1) a free adaptation of Isaiah 60:1 ('Arise, shine, for your light has come'), (2) an early Christian hymn, or (3) a baptismal formula sung when candidates emerged from the water. The imagery of waking from sleep and rising from the dead suggests baptism as a transition from death/darkness to life/light. The promise epiphausei soi ho Christos ('Christ will shine on you') makes Christ the source of the light.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 60:1. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The adverb akribōs ('carefully, precisely, accurately') modifies either blepete ('look carefully') or peripatite ('walk carefully'). Either way, the point is deliberate attention to one's conduct. The wisdom/foolishness contrast echoes Old Testament wisdom literature (Proverbs, Ecclesiastes) and connects to the earlier warning about being 'tossed about' (4:14).
16. The participle exagorazomenoi ('buying up, redeeming, making the most of') uses marketplace language: snapping up a bargain before it disappears. The word kairos ('opportunity, critical moment') denotes not clock-time (chronos) but moments of significance. The reason for urgency: hai hēmerai ponērai eisin ('the days are evil'). The present era is hostile territory; opportunities for good must be seized.
17. The contrast between aphrones ('senseless, foolish') and syniete ('understand, put together') frames Christian living as an exercise in discernment. The goal is understanding to thelēma tou kyriou ('the will of the Lord') — not abstract theological knowledge but practical perception of what God wants in each situation.
18. The contrast between wine-intoxication and Spirit-filling is not merely illustrative but substitutionary: where pagans sought ecstasy through wine (particularly in Dionysian worship), believers find genuine fullness through the Spirit. The word asōtia ('reckless living, dissipation, debauchery' — literally 'unsaved-ness') describes the waste that drunkenness produces. The imperative plērousthe ('be filled') is present tense (continuous: 'keep on being filled'), passive (the Spirit does the filling, not the believer), and plural (this is a community experience). The four participles that follow (vv. 19-21) describe how Spirit-filling manifests.
19. The first expression of Spirit-filling is communal worship. The three categories — psalmois ('psalms' — possibly the Old Testament Psalter), hymnois ('hymns' — compositions praising God), and ōdais pneumatikais ('spiritual songs' — Spirit-inspired compositions) — may overlap. The phrase tē kardia hymnōn ('with your heart') indicates that external singing must be accompanied by internal reality. Worship is directed tō kyriō ('to the Lord').
20. The second expression: thanksgiving. The scope is pantote ('always') and hyper pantōn ('for everything'). The phrase en onomati ('in the name of') indicates that thanksgiving is offered through Christ's mediation and on his authority. Thanksgiving is directed tō theō kai patri ('to God the Father').
21. The third expression of Spirit-filling: mutual submission. The participle hypotassomenoi ('submitting, placing yourselves under') is reciprocal — allēlois ('to one another'). This verse functions as both the conclusion of the Spirit-filling section and the heading for the household code that follows (5:22-6:9). The phrase en phobō Christou ('in the fear/reverence of Christ') provides the motive: submission to others flows from reverence for Christ, not from inferiority.
22. The verb 'submit' does not appear in the Greek of this verse — it is carried over from the participle hypotassomenoi in verse 21. This grammatical link means the wife's submission to her husband is a specific instance of the mutual submission all believers owe one another. The phrase hōs tō kyriō ('as to the Lord') sets the analogy: the husband-wife relationship is patterned on the Christ-church relationship. The word idiois ('own') distinguishes this from a general submission of all women to all men.
23. The word kephalē ('head') is debated: it can mean 'authority over' or 'source of.' In context, the Christ-church analogy emphasizes sacrificial care more than hierarchical authority (see vv. 25-27). The additional phrase autos sōtēr tou sōmatos ('he himself is Savior of the body') applies uniquely to Christ — the husband is not the wife's savior. The analogy has limits, and Paul here acknowledges one.
24. The comparison is drawn: the church's submission to Christ provides the pattern for the wife's submission to her husband. The phrase en panti ('in everything') is comprehensive but must be read in light of the analogy's controlling context — submission to Christ is never dehumanizing, and submission 'as to the Lord' (v. 22) sets Christ, not the husband's will, as the ultimate authority.
25. The husband's obligation is staggering: agapate tas gynaikas ('love your wives') with the standard kathōs kai ho Christos ēgapēsen tēn ekklēsia ('just as Christ loved the church'). Christ's love for the church was expressed in total self-sacrifice (heauton paredōken hyper autēs, 'he gave himself up for her'). The husband is called not to command but to die — to sacrifice his own interests for his wife's well-being. In the patriarchal context, this demand was revolutionary.

- 26. The purpose of Christ's self-giving: hagiasē ('to make holy, to sanctify'). The means: tō loutrō tou hydatos ('by the washing of water') — almost certainly a reference to baptism — en rhēmati ('with the word, in connection with the word'). The word (rhēma) may refer to a spoken baptismal confession, to the gospel proclaimed, or to Christ's authoritative word. Christ's sanctifying work combines water (the physical act) and word (the verbal/spiritual reality).
- 27. The image shifts to a bridal presentation: Christ prepares the church like a bride being prepared for her wedding day. The verb parastēsē ('present, place alongside') was used for presenting a bride to the groom. The adjectives describe bridal perfection: endoxon ('glorious, splendid'), without spilon ('spot, stain'), rhytida ('wrinkle'), or any blemish. The goal is hagia kai amōmos ('holy and blameless') — the same words used of believers in 1:4. Christ's sanctifying work completes what election purposed.
- 28. Paul shifts from the Christ-church analogy to a body-analogy: since husband and wife are 'one flesh' (v. 31), loving one's wife is loving oneself. The verb opheilousin ('ought, owe, are obligated') frames love not as optional generosity but as marital duty. The logic is profoundly practical: self-interest and spousal love converge in the one-flesh union.
- 29. The verbs ektrephei ('nourishes, feeds, raises to maturity') and thalpei ('cherishes, warms, tenderly cares for') describe intimate, nurturing care. The argument from nature: since everyone naturally cares for their own body, and since husband and wife share one body, spousal care is an extension of self-care. The Christ-church analogy returns: Christ nourishes and cherishes the church as his own body.
- 30. The simple statement melē esmen tou sōmatos autou ('we are members of his body') grounds the entire discussion: believers' union with Christ is bodily, intimate, and real. Some manuscripts add 'of his flesh and of his bones' — echoing Genesis 2:23 (Eve from Adam's body) and strengthening the marriage typology. The SBLGNT does not include this addition.
- 30. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 2:23 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
- 31. Paul quotes Genesis 2:24 (LXX). The verb proskollēthēsetai ('will be joined, will be glued, will cleave') indicates permanent, inseparable attachment. The phrase eis sarka mian ('into one flesh') describes a new unity that transcends the original family bond. Paul quotes this not primarily to teach about marriage (though it does) but to reveal the deeper reality to which marriage points — as he explains in verse 32.
- 31. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 2:24. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
- 32. The word mystērion ('mystery') here does not mean 'puzzling' but 'a hidden reality now revealed.' The Genesis text about husband and wife becoming one flesh contains a deeper meaning (a 'mystery'): it prophetically describes the union of Christ and the church. Marriage is a living parable of the gospel. The Vulgate translated mystērion as sacramentum, which led to marriage being classified as a sacrament in Western Christianity. Paul's point is christological: marriage's deepest meaning is found in Christ's union with his people.
- 33. Paul returns from the cosmic typology to practical application. The verb agapatō ('let him love') reiterates the husband's primary obligation. The word phobētai ('respect, revere') for the wife is debated — phobos can mean 'fear' or 'deep respect.' In context (where the controlling image is reverence for Christ, v. 21), 'respect' captures the sense. The summary is asymmetric: husbands are told to love; wives to respect. This may reflect different temptations in first-century marriage, not a permanent hierarchy of duties.

Summary: Ephesians 6 completes the household code with instructions for children and parents, then slaves and masters. The chapter's climax is the armor of God passage (vv. 10-20), one of the most vivid and beloved sections in Paul's letters. Paul identifies the true battle — not against flesh and blood but against cosmic spiritual forces — and equips believers with divine armor: the belt of truth, the breastplate of righteousness, the shoes of the gospel of peace, the shield of faith, the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit. The chapter closes with personal notes about Tychicus and a final benediction.

What Makes This Remarkable: The armor of God passage draws on Isaiah's description of God's own armor (Isaiah 59:17; 11:5) — believers wear God's equipment, not their own. The list of spiritual enemies (v. 12) is the fullest taxonomy of evil powers in the New Testament. The only offensive weapon in the armor is 'the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God' (v. 17). Prayer (vv. 18-20) is not a separate piece of armor but the atmosphere in which all the armor functions. Paul's request for prayer that he might speak boldly 'in chains' (v. 20) is poignant — the ambassador is in prison.

Translation Friction: The slave-master instructions (vv. 5-9) operate within the institution of slavery without explicitly condemning it. Paul subverts slavery from within (masters and slaves have the same Master in heaven, v. 9) but does not call for abolition. The spiritual warfare language (vv. 10-20) raises questions about how literally to read the cosmic powers. We render the text as given without either literalizing or demythologizing.

Connections: The children/parents instruction parallels Colossians 3:20-21. The slave/master code parallels Colossians 3:22-4:1 and Philemon. The armor imagery draws on Isaiah 59:17 and 11:5, and parallels 1 Thessalonians 5:8 and Romans 13:12. Tychicus also appears in Colossians 4:7-8, Acts 20:4, 2 Timothy 4:12, and Titus 3:12.

¹Because this was right, children, obey your parents in the Lord:. ²"Honor your father and mother" — this is the first commandment with a promise — ³so that it may go well with you and that you may live long on the earth." ⁴Fathers, do not provoke your children to anger, but bring them up in the discipline and instruction of the Lord. ⁵Slaves, obey your earthly masters with fear and trembling, with a sincere heart, as you would obey Christ, ⁶Do not work only when they are watching, just to win their approval. Instead, work as servants of Christ, carrying out God's will wholeheartedly. ⁷With upright will doing service, as to the Lord, and not to men. ⁸Indeed, knowing that whatsoever good thing any man doeth, the same will he accept of the Lord, whether he be bond or free. ⁹And masters, treat them the same way. Stop threatening, knowing that both their Master and yours is in heaven, and there is no favoritism with him. ¹⁰Finally, be strong in the Lord and in the strength of his might. ¹¹Put on the full armor of God, so that you may be able to stand against the schemes of the devil. ¹²For our struggle is not against flesh and blood, but against the rulers, against the authorities, against the cosmic powers of this present darkness, against the spiritual forces of evil in the heavenly places. ¹³Therefore take up the full armor of God, so that you may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done everything, to stand firm. ¹⁴Stand therefore, having fastened the belt of truth around your waist and having put on the breastplate of righteousness, ¹⁵Your ankles shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. ¹⁶In all circumstances take up the shield of faith, with which you will be able to extinguish all the flaming arrows of the evil one. ¹⁷Take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the message of God:. ¹⁸Praying always with all prayer and earnest prayer in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and earnest prayer for all saints;. ¹⁹For me, that utterance may be granted to me, that I may unlock my lips boldly, to render known the mystery of the gospel,. ²⁰For which I am an ambassador in bonds — that in it I may speak boldly, as I anything to speak. ²¹So that you also may know how I am and what I am doing, Tychicus the beloved brother and faithful servant in the Lord will tell you everything. ²²I am sending him to you for this very purpose, so that you may know how we are and that he may encourage your hearts. ²³Peace to the brothers and sisters, and love with faith, from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. ²⁴Grace be with all who love our Lord Jesus Christ with an undying love.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The verb hypakouete ('obey, listen to, respond to') is stronger than hypotassō ('submit'): children are to obey, not merely defer. The phrase en kyriō ('in the Lord') qualifies the obedience — it is rendered within the context of the Lord's authority, not unconditionally. The word dikaion ('right, just') appeals to a universal moral principle recognized across cultures.
2. Paul quotes the fifth commandment (Exodus 20:12; Deuteronomy 5:16). The designation 'first commandment with a promise' (entolē prōtē en epangelia) is debated — the second commandment also contains a promise of sorts. Paul may mean 'first' in sequence among the commandments that regulate human relationships, or 'first in importance.' The verb tima ('honor') encompasses more than obedience — it includes respect, care, and financial support in old age.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 20:12. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Deuteronomy 5:16. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. The promise is twofold: eu soi genētai ('it may go well with you') and esē makrochronios epi tēs gēs ('you may be long-lived on the earth'). The original Deuteronomy text refers to 'the land' (the promised land of Israel). Paul universalizes it to 'the earth' (tēs gēs), applying the promise to all believers regardless of geography.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 20:12 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The counter-instruction to fathers (pateres, which could include both parents) limits parental authority: mē parorgizete ('do not provoke to anger, do not exasperate'). Harsh, arbitrary, or demeaning treatment drives children to frustration and resentment. The positive instruction: ektrephete ('bring up, nourish, raise to maturity') en paideia kai nouthesia kyriou ('in the discipline and instruction of the Lord'). Paideia ('discipline, training, education') and nouthesia ('instruction, admonition, correction') together cover the full range of child-rearing — the Lord's standards, not the parents' whims, set the curriculum.

5. The word douloi ('slaves') refers to actual enslaved persons, not employees. The qualifying phrase kata sarka ('according to the flesh') relativizes the master's authority — they are masters only in the physical realm, not spiritually. The phrase meta phobou kai tromou ('with fear and trembling') is the same phrase Paul uses for approaching God's work (Philippians 2:12) — it suggests conscientious seriousness, not cringing terror. The phrase en haplotēti tēs kardias ('in sincerity of heart') means without duplicity.
6. The compound ophthalmodouleian ('eye-service, working only when watched') may be a Pauline coinage. The contrast: anthrōpareskoi ('people-pleasers') versus douloi Christou ('slaves of Christ'). The true master is Christ, and his 'eye' is always present. The phrase ek psychēs ('from the soul, from the heart') demands interior motivation, not merely external compliance.
7. The phrase met' eunoias ('with good will, with genuine enthusiasm') transforms compulsory labor into willing service. The phrase hōs tō kyriō kai ouk anthrōpois ('as to the Lord and not to people') reframes the entire master-slave relationship: every act of service, however menial, is rendered to Christ. This does not endorse slavery but radically transforms the slave's experience of it.
8. The verb komisetai ('will receive back, will be repaid') promises divine recompense for all good work. The equalizer eite doulos eite eleutheros ('whether slave or free') demolishes the social distinction before the Lord's judgment seat: at the final accounting, social status is irrelevant. The Lord evaluates and rewards the substance of the work, not the status of the worker.
9. The command to masters is revolutionary for its context: ta auta poieite pros autous ('do the same things toward them') — treat slaves with the same good will and sincerity required of slaves. The imperative anientes tēn apeilēn ('stop the threatening') uses the present participle suggesting an ongoing practice that must cease. The theological grounding is devastating to the institution: kai autōn kai hymōn ho kyrios estin en ouranois ('both their Lord and yours is in heaven'). Master and slave share the same Master. The word prosōpolēmpsia ('favoritism, partiality, respect of persons') literally means 'face-taking' — the heavenly Master does not judge by social face.
10. The phrase tou loipou ('finally, henceforth') signals the letter's closing section. The passive imperative endynamousthe ('be empowered, be made strong') indicates that the strength is not the believer's own but is received from outside — en kyriō ('in the Lord'). The phrase en tō krati tēs ischyos autou ('in the strength of his might') reuses two of the four power-words from 1:19, connecting the armor passage to the resurrection-power prayer. The same divine power that raised Christ is now the believer's equipment for spiritual battle.
11. The word panoplian ('full armor, complete equipment') is a military term for the complete outfit of a heavily armed soldier — not piecemeal protection but comprehensive equipment. It is tou theou ('of God') — God's own armor, not human manufacture. The purpose is stēnai ('to stand, to hold your ground'). The enemy's strategy is methodeias ('schemes, stratagems, cunning tactics') — the devil attacks through deception, not merely through force. The word methodeias (from methodos, 'a following after, a pursuit') suggests systematic, calculated attack plans.
12. The word palē ('wrestling, struggle') denotes hand-to-hand combat. The fourfold repetition of pros ('against') identifies the real enemies: (1) archas ('rulers, principalities'), (2) exousias ('authorities'), (3) kosmokratoras tou skotous toutou ('world-rulers of this darkness' — kosmokratōr is a title used for powerful gods and emperors), (4) pneumatika tēs ponērias en tois epouraniois ('spiritual forces of wickedness in the heavenly places'). The phrase 'flesh and blood' (haima kai sarka — note the reversed order) means other human beings. The real enemy is never the person in front of you but the spiritual forces behind them.
13. The imperative analabete ('take up, pick up') pictures a soldier reaching for weapons laid out before him. The phrase en tē hēmera tē ponēra ('in the evil day') could mean the final eschatological battle, a particularly intense season of testing, or any day of spiritual conflict. The goal is twice stated: antistēnai ('to resist, to withstand') and stēnai ('to stand'). The phrase hapanta katergasamenoi ('having accomplished everything, having done all') means after exhausting every effort — when the battle is over, still standing.
14. The first two pieces: (1) The belt (perizōsamenoi tēn osphyn, 'having girded the waist') of truth (en alētheia). The Roman soldier's belt held the tunic in place for movement and supported the scabbard — everything depended on it. Truth (both doctrinal integrity and personal honesty) is the foundation that holds all else together. (2) The breastplate (thōraka) of righteousness (tēs dikaiosynēs). The breastplate protected vital organs. Righteousness — both the imputed righteousness of Christ and the lived righteousness of the believer — protects the heart. This draws on Isaiah 59:17 where God puts on righteousness as a breastplate.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 59:17. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The third piece: military sandals (caligae) that gave soldiers sure footing on any terrain. The word hetoimasia ('readiness, preparation, firm footing') suggests either readiness to proclaim the gospel or the firm footing that the gospel provides. The phrase tou euangeliou tēs eirēnēs ('of the gospel of peace') is striking in a military context — the soldier's weapon is a message of peace. This echoes Isaiah 52:7 ('How beautiful are the feet of those who bring good news of peace').
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 52:7 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. The fourth piece: the thyreon ('large shield, door-shaped shield') — the Roman scutum, a full-body shield that could be interlocked with others to form a wall. Faith as shield provides comprehensive protection. The phrase ta belē tou ponērou ta pepyromēna ('the flaming arrows/missiles of the evil one') refers to arrows dipped in pitch and ignited — designed to set targets on fire. The verb sbesai ('to extinguish, to quench') suggests the shield soaks the fire-arrows, absorbing their destructive power.

17. The fifth piece: the helmet (perikephalaian) of salvation (tou sōtēriou). The helmet protects the head — salvation guards the mind. This echoes Isaiah 59:17 and 1 Thessalonians 5:8. The sixth piece: the sword (machairan) of the Spirit (tou pneumatos) — the only offensive weapon. It is identified as rhēma theou ('the word of God'). The word rhēma (a specific spoken word) rather than logos (the broader concept of word/message) may emphasize the specific, situational application of Scripture — the right word at the right moment, wielded by the Spirit's guidance.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 59:17. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. Prayer is not a seventh piece of armor but the atmosphere in which the armor functions — the breath of the warrior. Four 'all' words emphasize comprehensiveness: dia pasēs proseuchēs ('with every prayer'), en panti kairō ('at every opportunity'), en pasē proskarterēsei ('with all perseverance'), peri pantōn tōn hagiōn ('for all the saints'). The phrase en pneumatī ('in the Spirit') indicates Spirit-empowered prayer. The verb agrypnoūtes ('staying alert, keeping watch') is a military term for sentinel duty — spiritual warfare demands constant vigilance.
19. Paul requests prayer for himself — not for release from prison but for effective proclamation. The passive dothē logos ('words may be given') attributes effective speech to divine gift. The phrase en parrēsia ('with boldness, with freedom of speech') echoes 3:12. The content is to mystērion tou euangeliou ('the mystery of the gospel') — the full truth about Christ's universal reconciliation, the letter's central theme.
20. The phrase presbeuō en halysei ('I am an ambassador in chains') is magnificently ironic. An ambassador (presbeuō) carries the authority and dignity of the sovereign who sent him; a prisoner (en halysei, 'in a chain') has no authority or dignity. Paul is both — a royal envoy in shackles. The phrase hōs dei me lalēsai ('as it is necessary for me to speak, as I ought to speak') indicates that bold proclamation is not optional but obligatory.
21. Tychicus is described as agapētos adelphos ('beloved brother') and pistos diakonos ('faithful servant/minister'). He serves as the letter carrier and Paul's personal representative. The nearly identical wording in Colossians 4:7 suggests these letters were sent together. Tychicus would supplement the letter with firsthand reports about Paul's situation.
22. The dual purpose: (1) information about Paul (hina gnōte ta peri hēmōn, 'so that you may know about us'), and (2) encouragement (parakalesē tas kardias hymōn, 'that he may encourage your hearts'). The verb parakaleō here carries its comforting, encouraging sense — the Ephesians may have been anxious about Paul's imprisonment.
23. The benediction is unusual in its third-person form ('peace to the brothers') rather than the typical second-person ('peace to you'). This may support the circular-letter theory — the blessing addresses a wider audience. The triad eirēnē ('peace'), agapē ('love'), and pistis ('faith') summarizes the letter's major themes. The source is double: apo theou patros kai kyriou Iēsou Christou ('from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ').
24. The final word is en aphtharsia ('in incorruptibility, with an imperishable love'). The word aphtharia is typically used for immortality or imperishability (1 Corinthians 15:42, 50, 53-54). Applied to love for Christ, it describes a love that does not decay, fade, or end. The letter that began with grace (1:2) ends with grace — the alpha and omega of the Christian life.

Philippians

Summary: Paul and Timothy write to the believers in Philippi, expressing gratitude for their partnership in the gospel from the first day until now. Paul describes his imprisonment as having advanced the gospel rather than hindered it, reports that Christ is being proclaimed even by rivals, and declares his famous conviction: 'to live is Christ and to die is gain.' He urges the Philippians to conduct themselves in a manner worthy of the gospel, standing firm in one spirit.

What Makes This Remarkable: Philippians is the warmest of Paul's letters, written from prison yet saturated with joy. The word 'joy' and its cognates appear sixteen times across four chapters. Paul's relationship with Philippi was uniquely close — they were the only church from whom he accepted financial support (4:15). The theological climax of chapter 1 is the 'to live is Christ' declaration (v. 21), which frames existence itself as participation in Christ. Paul's candid reflection on preferring death yet choosing to remain for the Philippians' sake reveals a pastoral theology shaped by self-giving love.

Translation Friction: The identity of Paul's opponents in verses 15-17 is debated. Some preached Christ from envy and rivalry, hoping to afflict Paul in his imprisonment. Whether these are rival missionaries, Judaizers, or local preachers is unclear from the text alone. We render the Greek without resolving this ambiguity. The location of Paul's imprisonment — Rome, Ephesus, or Caesarea — is likewise debated; the text itself does not specify, though the mention of the praetorium (v. 13) suggests Rome.

Connections: The letter connects to Acts 16, which narrates the founding of the Philippian church through Lydia's conversion and the jailer's baptism. Paul's language of 'partnership in the gospel' (koinonia tou euangelion) echoes the covenant fellowship vocabulary of the Old Testament. The citizenship language in verse 27 anticipates the explicit heavenly citizenship declaration of 3:20.

¹Paul and Timothy, servants of Christ Jesus, to all the saints in Christ Jesus who are in Philippi, together with the overseers and deacons: ²Grace to you and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. ³I thank my God in all my remembrance of you, ⁴Always in every petition of mine for you all making request with joy, ⁵Since your fellowship in the gospel from the foremost day until now. ⁶I am confident of this very thing, that the one who began a good work in you will carry it on to completion until the day of Christ Jesus. ⁷It is right for me to feel this way about all of you, because I hold you in my heart, since both in my imprisonment and in the defense and confirmation of the gospel, all of you are partners with me in grace. ⁸For God is my witness, how I long for all of you with the affection of Christ Jesus. ⁹And this is my prayer: that your love may overflow more and more with knowledge and all discernment, ¹⁰That you may approve things that are excellent. So you can become sincere and without offence till the day of Christ; ¹¹Indeed, being overflowing with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ, to the glory and praise of God. ¹²Now I want you to know, brothers and sisters, that what has happened to me has actually served to advance the gospel, ¹³As a result, it has become widely known throughout the whole imperial guard — and to everyone else — that I am in chains for the sake of Christ. ¹⁴Numerous of the brothers and sisters in the Lord, waxing confident by my bonds, are much more bold to speak the message without fear. ¹⁵Some indeed proclaim Christ out of envy and rivalry, but others out of good will. ¹⁶The latter do it out of love, knowing that I am put here for the defense of the gospel. ¹⁷The former proclaim Christ out of selfish ambition, not sincerely, thinking to afflict me in my imprisonment. ¹⁸What then? Only this: that in every way, whether from false motives or true, Christ is proclaimed, and in that I rejoice. Yes, and I will continue to rejoice, ¹⁹For I know that this will turn to my salvation by way of your petition, and the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ, ²⁰According to my earnest expectation and my confident expectation, that in nothing I will be ashamed, but that with all boldness, as always, so now also Christ will be magnified in my body, whether it be by life, or by death. ²¹And to die is gain, and for to me to live is Christ. ²²If I am to go on living in the body, that means fruitful labor for me. Yet which I will choose I cannot tell. ²³I am hard-pressed between the two. My desire is to depart and be with Christ, for that is far better. ²⁴But to remain in the body is more necessary for your sake. ²⁵Convinced of this, I know that I will remain and continue with all of you for your progress and joy in the faith, ²⁶Then when I come to you again, you will have even more reason to be proud in Christ Jesus because of me. ²⁷Only this: live as citizens worthy of the gospel of Christ, so that whether I come and see you or am absent, I may hear that you are standing firm in one spirit, contending side by side with one mind for the faith of the gospel, ²⁸In nothing intimidated by those who oppose you — which is to them a clear sign of their destruction, but to you of salvation, and that of God. ²⁹For it has been granted to you that for the sake of Christ you should not only believe in him but also suffer for his sake, ³⁰Having the same conflict which you noticed in me, and now hear to be in me.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The Greek douloi ('slaves, servants') denotes total allegiance. Paul identifies himself not by apostolic title but as a slave of Christ — unusual for his letter openings and perhaps reflecting the intimate tone of this letter. The term episkopoi ('overseers') is rendered 'overseers' rather than the KJV's 'bishops,' which carries later ecclesiastical connotations absent from the first-century context. Diakonoi ('deacons, servants') refers to recognized servants of the congregation.
2. Paul's standard greeting fuses the Greek charis ('grace') with the Hebrew shalom-equivalent eirene ('peace'). The pairing of God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ as co-source of grace and peace is a high christological claim embedded in an ordinary salutation.
3. The phrase epi pase tee mneia hymōn can mean either 'upon every remembrance of you' (each time Paul thinks of them) or 'for all your remembrance of me' (their remembering him through gifts). The former reading is more natural in context and is followed here.
4. The repetition of pas ('all, every') is characteristic of Philippians — Paul uses the word more frequently here than in any other letter relative to length. Joy (chara) appears for the first time, establishing the letter's dominant theme.
5. The Greek koinōnia ('partnership, fellowship, sharing') is richer than the English 'fellowship' suggests. It denotes active participation and mutual sharing — the Philippians were not passive recipients of the gospel but active partners in its advancement, including through their financial support of Paul's mission.
6. The verb enarchomai ('to begin') and epiteleo ('to bring to completion') form a deliberate pair — what God initiated, God will finish. The 'day of Christ Jesus' (hemeras Christou Iesou) is an eschatological reference to Christ's return, adapted from the Old Testament 'day of the LORD' (yom YHWH).
7. The phrase echein me en tee kardia hymas is ambiguous — it could mean 'I hold you in my heart' or 'you hold me in your heart.' Both are grammatically possible; we follow the former as the more natural subject-object order. The compound synkoinōnos ('co-partners, fellow-sharers') intensifies the koinōnia theme of verse 5.
8. The Greek splanchna ('intestines, inner organs') was the ancient seat of deep emotion, equivalent to the modern 'heart.' The KJV's literal 'bowels' is misleading in modern English. Paul claims that his longing for the Philippians originates not from natural affection but from Christ's own love working through him.

9. Paul prays not merely for love but for love informed by epignōsis ('full knowledge, deep understanding') and aisthēsis ('perception, discernment, moral insight'). This is not sentimentality but a love that sees clearly and acts wisely.
10. The verb dokimazein ('to test, examine, approve') means to distinguish what truly matters from what merely appears important. The adjective eilikrineis ('pure, sincere') may derive from heilē ('sunlight') and krinō ('to judge') — that which is judged genuine when examined in full light.
11. The singular 'fruit' (karpon) follows the SBLGNT against the KJV's plural 'fruits.' Righteousness here is both status and conduct — the right standing before God that produces right living, all mediated through Christ. The phrase 'to the glory and praise of God' marks the goal of all Christian ethics in Paul's thought.
12. The Greek adelphoi ('brothers') is used inclusively here for the entire congregation, hence 'brothers and sisters.' The word prokopē ('advancement, progress') was a Stoic term for moral progress; Paul repurposes it for the spread of the gospel. His imprisonment, which might seem a setback, has paradoxically furthered the mission.
13. The praitōrion ('praetorium') could refer to the praetorian guard in Rome, the governor's residence in Caesarea, or a provincial headquarters in Ephesus. If Rome, Paul's chains have become a witness to the imperial guard itself. The phrase en Christō ('in Christ') modifies the imprisonment — his bonds are recognized as being 'for Christ' rather than for criminal activity.
14. Paul's suffering has had the opposite of its intended effect: rather than silencing the movement, his imprisonment has emboldened other believers. The verb tolmaō ('to dare, to be bold') suggests courage in the face of real danger — these believers preach knowing that imprisonment is a real possibility.
15. Paul acknowledges a painful reality: not all who preach Christ do so with pure motives. The pair phthonon ('envy') and erin ('rivalry, strife') suggests personal antagonism toward Paul rather than doctrinal error — these preachers proclaim the true Christ but from corrupt motives.
16. The SBLGNT reverses the order found in the KJV's underlying text (Textus Receptus), placing the love-motivated group in verse 16 and the rivalry-motivated group in verse 17. We follow the SBLGNT order. The verb keimai ('I am placed, I am appointed') suggests Paul views his imprisonment as a divine assignment rather than a misfortune.
17. The Greek eritheia ('selfish ambition, self-seeking') originally referred to working for hire and came to mean partisan, self-interested maneuvering. These preachers aim to increase Paul's suffering by highlighting his confinement while they enjoy freedom. Despite their malice, Paul will rejoice that Christ is preached (v. 18).
18. Paul's response to rivalrous preachers is astonishing generosity: as long as Christ is proclaimed, he rejoices regardless of the preacher's motives. The Greek prophasei ('pretext, false motive') contrasts with aletheia ('truth'). The shift from present chairō ('I rejoice') to future charēsomai ('I will rejoice') extends his joy from the present crisis into the future.
19. Paul echoes Job 13:16 (LXX: touto moi apobēsetai eis sōtērian). The word sōtēria here may mean spiritual salvation, physical release from prison, or vindication at trial. The 'supply' (epichorēgia, 'generous provision') of the Spirit is not a meager trickle but an abundant provision.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Job 13:16. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
20. The rare compound apokaradokia ('eager expectation') literally suggests craning the neck forward in anticipation. Paul's singular concern is not his own survival but that Christ be 'magnified' (megalynthēsetai) in his body — whether that body lives or dies. The phrase 'whether by life or by death' sets up the extraordinary meditation in verses 21-26.
21. This is one of the most compressed and profound statements in the Pauline corpus. The Greek lacks a verb — literally 'to me the living Christ and the dying gain.' Life is not merely lived for Christ or with Christ but is Christ — existence itself is absorbed into Christ's person. If living is already Christ, then death can only bring more of him, hence 'gain' (kerdos). The logic is airtight: Paul cannot lose.
22. The syntax is notoriously difficult. Paul seems to say: if continued life in the body means productive ministry ('fruit of labor'), then he genuinely does not know which to prefer — death with Christ or fruitful service. The verb hairēsomai ('I will choose') is striking, as if the choice were actually his to make.
23. The verb synechomai ('I am pressed, constrained') conveys being squeezed from both sides. The verb analysai ('to depart, to break camp, to set sail') is a metaphor for death — either striking a tent (a soldier's image) or loosing a ship from its moorings. Paul's conviction that death means being 'with Christ' (syn Christō) reflects a personal eschatology of immediate presence with Christ after death.
24. Paul resolves the tension of verses 21-23 in favor of continued life — not because life is better for him, but because it is more necessary (anangkaioteron) for the Philippians. His pastoral love overrides his personal preference. The shift from 'flesh' (sarx) to 'body' in our rendering avoids the negative connotations 'flesh' carries elsewhere in Paul.
25. The verbs menō ('remain') and paramenō ('continue alongside') are nearly synonymous, creating emphasis through repetition. Paul expresses confidence in his release, though this is pastoral assurance rather than prophetic certainty. The pair prokopē ('progress') and chara ('joy') captures Paul's dual goal for the Philippians — growth and gladness.
26. The Greek kauchēma ('boast, ground of boasting') is not sinful pride but legitimate exultation — and it is 'in Christ Jesus,' not in human achievement. Paul envisions his return to Philippi as occasion for the church to celebrate God's faithfulness in preserving his life.

27. The verb politeuesthe ('live as citizens, conduct yourselves as citizens') is loaded with meaning for the Philippians, who held Roman citizenship as residents of a Roman colony. Paul calls them to a higher citizenship — one defined by the gospel rather than by Rome. The athletic metaphor synathlēō ('to contend together, to compete as teammates') pictures the church as a team striving in unified effort.
28. The verb ptyromai ('to be frightened, startled') is used of horses shying at danger. The Philippians' fearless stand serves as a double sign: it signals the opponents' destruction (apōleia) and the believers' salvation (sōtēria). The final phrase 'and that from God' (kai touto apo theou) means that both the sign and the salvation originate from God.
29. The verb echaristhē ('it has been graciously given') shares the root of charis ('grace'). Suffering, like faith, is presented as a gift — a startling claim that reframes persecution as divine privilege rather than misfortune. This theology of suffering as gift is distinctly Pauline.
30. The Greek agōn ('struggle, contest, fight') is an athletic term for a competitive event. The Philippians witnessed Paul's struggle firsthand when he was beaten and imprisoned in their city (Acts 16:19-40), and now they hear of his continued imprisonment. Their own suffering mirrors his — they share the same contest.

Summary: Paul appeals for unity and humility in the Philippian church, grounding his appeal in the supreme example of Christ's self-emptying. The Christ Hymn (2:5-11) traces the arc from pre-existent divine equality through incarnation, servanthood, and crucifixion to exaltation and universal lordship. Paul then urges the Philippians to work out their salvation with fear and trembling, commends Timothy and Epaphroditus as models of self-giving service, and prepares to send both to Philippi.

What Makes This Remarkable: The Christ Hymn (2:5-11) is one of the highest christological passages in the New Testament. Whether Paul composed it, adapted an existing hymn, or quoted early liturgy is debated, but its theology is clear: Christ possessed equality with God, voluntarily emptied himself, took the form of a slave, became human, died on a cross, and was exalted to the highest place with the name above every name. The kenosis ('emptying') of verse 7 has generated centuries of theological reflection on how divinity and humanity relate in Christ. The hymn's climax — 'every tongue will confess that Jesus Christ is Lord' — echoes Isaiah 45:23, where every knee bows to YHWH alone, making an implicit identification of Jesus with the God of Israel.

Translation Friction: *The precise meaning of kenosis ('he emptied himself,' v. 7) is a perennial theological question. The text does not say of what Christ emptied himself — it says he emptied himself by taking the form of a servant. We render the Greek without resolving the systematic theology. The phrase harpagmon ('something to be grasped/exploited,' v. 6) is one of the most debated words in Pauline studies; we render it as 'something to be exploited' following the majority consensus that Christ did not cling to his divine prerogatives.*

Connections: The hymn's language echoes Isaiah's Servant Songs (especially Isaiah 52:13-53:12), where the Servant is exalted after humiliation. The universal confession of verse 11 quotes Isaiah 45:23. The 'form of God' / 'form of a servant' contrast recalls the Adam-Christ typology of Romans 5:12-21 — where Adam grasped at being like God, Christ did the opposite. Epaphroditus's near-death illness connects to 2 Corinthians 1:8-10 and Paul's theology of shared suffering.

¹So if there is any encouragement in Christ, any comfort from love, any partnership in the Spirit, any affection and compassion, ²Fulfil you my delight, that you be likeminded, possessing the same devotion, being of one accord, of one mind. ³Do nothing from selfish ambition or empty conceit, but in humility regard others as more significant than yourselves. ⁴Let each of you look not only to your own interests, but also to the interests of others. ⁵Have this mind among yourselves, which is yours in Christ Jesus, ⁶Though he existed in the very form of God, he did not consider equality with God something to be grasped for his own advantage. ⁷However, made himself of no reputation, and picked up upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: ⁸And being found in human form, he humbled himself by becoming obedient to the point of death — even death on a cross. ⁹Therefore God has highly exalted him and granted him the name that is above every name, ¹⁰That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of matters in heaven, and matters in earth, and things under the world; ¹¹To the glory of god the father, and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord. ¹²Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling, therefore, my dear, as you have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence. ¹³Indeed, since it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure. ¹⁴Do all things without grumbling or arguing, ¹⁵So you can become blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom you shine as lights in the present age;. ¹⁶as you hold firmly to the word of life. Then on the day of Christ I will be able to rejoice, knowing that my effort and hard work were not wasted. ¹⁷But even if I am being poured out as a drink offering upon the sacrificial offering of your faith, I am glad and rejoice with all of you. ¹⁸In the same way you also should be glad and rejoice with me. ¹⁹I hope in the Lord Jesus to send Timothy to you soon, so that I too may be encouraged by learning how you are. ²⁰For I have no one like-minded who will genuinely care about your welfare. ²¹For they all seek their own interests, not those of Jesus Christ. ²²But you know Timothy's proven character, that as a child with a father he has served with me in the gospel. ²³I hope therefore to send him just as soon as I see how things will go with me, ²⁴However, I trust in the Lord that I also myself will come shortly. ²⁵But I thought it necessary to send to you Epaphroditus — my brother and fellow worker and fellow soldier, and your messenger and minister to my need — ²⁶Since he longed following you all, and was full of heaviness, because that you had listened to that he had been sick. ²⁷Indeed he was ill, near to death. But God had mercy on him, and not only on him but on me also, so that I would not have sorrow upon sorrow. ²⁸I am the more eager to send him, therefore, so that when you see him again you may rejoice, and I may be less anxious. ²⁹So receive him in the Lord with all joy, and hold people like him in honor, ³⁰On account of the fact that for the labor of Christ he was nigh to passing, not regarding his life, to supply your lack of service toward me.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The fourfold 'if' (ei tis) is not expressing doubt but stating conditions Paul knows to be true — 'since there is encouragement, since there is comfort...' The rhetorical force is: given all that you have experienced in Christ, act accordingly. The word paraklēsis ('encouragement, exhortation, comfort') is the noun form of the verb from which 'Paraclete' derives.
2. The verb phroneō ('to think, to set one's mind on') appears twice here and is the key verb of Philippians, occurring ten times in the letter. Unity is not uniformity of opinion but a shared orientation of mind and purpose. The compound sympsychoi ('united in soul, of one spirit') appears only here in the New Testament.
3. The word kenodoxia ('empty glory, vain conceit') appears only here in the New Testament. The noun tapeinophrosynē ('humility, lowliness of mind') was generally a negative quality in Greco-Roman culture — it meant 'servile-mindedness.' Paul and the early Christians transformed it into a virtue, modeled on Christ's own self-lowering (vv. 5-8).
4. The verb skopeō ('to look at, to pay attention to, to consider') does not prohibit self-care but redirects primary attention outward. The word 'also' (kai) is important — Paul does not forbid attention to one's own affairs but insists that concern for others must accompany it. This verse provides the ethical principle that the Christ Hymn will illustrate christologically.
5. This verse introduces the Christ Hymn (vv. 5-11). The verb phroneite ('think, have this mindset') connects back to the call for unity in verse 2. The phrase en hymin can mean 'in you' (individually) or 'among you' (corporately) — both senses are likely intended. Christ's mindset is not merely an external example to imitate but an internal reality for those who are 'in Christ Jesus.'
6. The Greek morphē theou ('form of God') does not mean mere appearance but essential character — the outward expression that corresponds to inner reality. Christ's pre-existence in the 'form of God' is an assertion of genuine divinity. The word harpagmon ('something seized, something exploited') is extremely rare and debated. The rendering 'something to be exploited' follows the res rapta interpretation: Christ possessed equality with God but refused to exploit it for his own advantage. The KJV's 'robbery' follows a different interpretation.
7. The verb ekenōsen ('he emptied') is the source of the theological term 'kenosis.' Crucially, the emptying is described not as subtraction (losing divine attributes) but as addition — 'by taking (labōn) the form of a servant.' Christ emptied himself of his prerogatives by adding servanthood to his identity. The 'form of a servant' (morphēn doulou) deliberately contrasts with 'form of God' (morphē theou) in verse 6. The word homoiōma ('likeness') affirms genuine humanity while preserving the distinction that Christ was not merely human.
8. The word schēma ('outward form, appearance, fashion') differs from morphē in verse 7 — schēma refers to the observable, external presentation. The descent continues: from divine form, to servant form, to human likeness, to humiliation, to obedience, to death, and finally to the most degrading form of death — crucifixion. The phrase 'death on a cross' (thanatou de staurou) is added as a shocking afterthought — the em-dash captures the Greek particle de, which introduces an unexpected intensification. Crucifixion was reserved for slaves and the worst criminals; it was so shameful that Roman citizens were exempt from it.
9. The conjunction dio ('therefore, for this reason') marks the turning point of the hymn — the exaltation is God's response to Christ's self-humiliation. The verb hyperypsoō ('to super-exalt, to raise to the highest position') is a compound intensification found only here in the New Testament. The verb echarisato ('graciously gave, granted as a gift') shares the root of charis ('grace'). The 'name above every name' is almost certainly 'Lord' (kyrios) as specified in verse 11, which in the Septuagint translates the divine name YHWH.

10. Paul quotes Isaiah 45:23, where YHWH declares: 'To me every knee shall bow.' By applying this text to Jesus, Paul makes an extraordinary claim: the homage owed to the God of Israel is now rendered to the crucified and exalted Jesus. The threefold cosmos — heaven, earth, and under the earth (epouraniōn, epigeiōn, katachthoniōn) — encompasses every realm of existence. Nothing is excluded from Christ's lordship.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 45:23 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The confession kyrios Iesous Christos ('Jesus Christ is Lord') is the earliest Christian creed. In the Roman Empire, the declaration kyrios Kaisar ('Caesar is Lord') was an oath of political allegiance; the Christian confession was therefore both theological and politically subversive. The title kyrios ('Lord'), when applied to Jesus in a context quoting Isaiah 45:23, carries the full weight of the divine name YHWH. Yet this exaltation of Jesus is not competitive with the Father — it is 'to the glory of God the Father,' maintaining the unity of divine purpose.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 45:23. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. The command katargazesthe ('work out, bring to completion') does not mean 'earn' but 'bring to full expression' — salvation is a reality already given (by God, v. 13) that must be actively lived out in community. The phrase 'fear and trembling' (phobou kai tromou) echoes the Old Testament posture before God's holiness (Psalm 2:11; Isaiah 66:2). Paul's absence makes their obedience more significant — they must mature beyond dependence on his physical presence.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalm 2:11. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 66:2. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. This verse completes the paradox of verse 12: work out your salvation because God is the one working in you. Human effort and divine agency are not competitors but partners — God produces both the willing (to thelein) and the doing (to energein). The word eudokia ('good pleasure, delight, purpose') indicates that God's work in believers flows from his own joyful purpose, not reluctant obligation.
14. The word gongysmōn ('grumbling, murmuring') echoes Israel's wilderness complaints (Exodus 16:7-12; Numbers 14:27). Paul warns the Philippian church not to repeat Israel's pattern of dissatisfaction with God's provision and leadership. The word dialogismōn ('arguments, disputes, questionings') refers to divisive internal debates.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 16:7-12. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Numbers 14:27. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The phrase 'crooked and twisted generation' (geneas skolas kai diestrammenēs) quotes Deuteronomy 32:5 from the Song of Moses, where it describes faithless Israel. Paul applies it to the surrounding pagan culture. The word phōstēres ('lights, luminaries, stars') is used in the Septuagint of Genesis 1:14-16 for the celestial bodies — believers are like stars set against the darkness of a corrupt world.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Deuteronomy 32:5 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 1:14-16 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. The verb epechō can mean either 'hold fast' (retain) or 'hold forth' (offer). Both senses may be intended — the Philippians cling to the gospel and display it to the world. Paul's running and laboring metaphors draw from athletics and manual work. His boast (kauchēma) on the day of Christ will be the Philippians themselves — their faithfulness will validate his ministry.
17. The verb spendomai ('I am being poured out as a libation') is a sacrificial term — Paul pictures his life (or death) as a drink offering poured over the Philippians' faith, which is itself the main sacrifice. The imagery is drawn from Old Testament sacrificial practice where wine was poured as a libation alongside the primary offering (Numbers 15:5-10). Even contemplating martyrdom, Paul rejoices.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Numbers 15:5-10. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. Paul commands mutual rejoicing — even in the face of his possible death. The imperative chairete ('rejoice!') is a command, not merely a wish. Joy in Philippians is not dependent on circumstances but on the shared reality of being in Christ.
19. The rare verb eupsycheō ('to be encouraged, to be heartened') appears only here in the New Testament. Paul's concern for the Philippians is not one-directional — he needs news of them as much as they need Timothy's visit. The phrase 'in the Lord Jesus' frames even travel plans within the sphere of Christ's lordship.
20. The adjective isopsychon ('like-souled, kindred in spirit') appears only here in the New Testament. Timothy is uniquely aligned with Paul's pastoral heart. The adverb gnēsiōs ('genuinely, sincerely') comes from gnēsios ('legitimate, born in wedlock') — Timothy's care for the Philippians is not performative but authentic.

21. This stark assessment — 'all seek their own' — echoes the warning of verse 4 and contrasts with the Christ of the hymn who sought others' interests above his own. The 'all' is likely hyperbolic, referring to those currently available as potential envoys rather than every believer everywhere.
22. The word dokimē ('proven character, tested quality') means worth demonstrated through testing — Timothy is not untried. Paul starts to say 'as a son serves a father' but corrects the image to 'as a child with a father he served with me' — changing the hierarchical metaphor to one of partnership. Timothy is not Paul's subordinate but his co-laborer.
23. Paul will send Timothy once his own situation becomes clearer — presumably the outcome of his trial. The verb aphidō ('to see from a distance, to perceive clearly') suggests Paul is waiting for clarity about his case before sending his most trusted associate away.
24. Paul's confidence in his own visit is grounded 'in the Lord' — not in legal optimism but in trust in Christ's sovereign purposes. This hope of release aligns with his expectation in 1:25 that he will remain for the Philippians' benefit.
25. Paul introduces Epaphroditus with five titles arranged in two groups: three from Paul's perspective (brother, fellow worker, fellow soldier) and two from the Philippians' perspective (their apostolon — 'sent one, messenger' — and minister to Paul's need). The military metaphor systratiotēs ('fellow soldier') frames gospel ministry as warfare.
26. The verb adēmoneō ('to be distressed, troubled, anxious') is the same word used of Jesus in Gethsemane (Matthew 26:37). Epaphroditus's distress is not about his own illness but about the Philippians' worry — he is upset that they are upset. This other-centered concern exemplifies the mindset Paul commended in verses 3-4.
27. The phrase paraplēsion thanatō ('near to death, close to dying') indicates a life-threatening illness. Paul's candor is striking — he does not attribute the healing to his own prayers or apostolic power but simply to God's mercy (eleēsen). The phrase 'sorrow upon sorrow' (lypēn epi lypēn) suggests Paul already carries grief (perhaps from imprisonment) and would have been overwhelmed by Epaphroditus's death.
28. The comparative spoudaioterōs ('more eagerly, with greater urgency') and alypoteros ('less sorrowful, less anxious') show Paul's pastoral sensitivity — he acts swiftly to relieve both the Philippians' worry and his own. The so-called 'epistolary aorist' (epempsa, 'I sent') refers to the sending that will take place when the letter arrives.
29. The imperative prosdecheste ('receive, welcome') suggests that Epaphroditus might need an advocate — perhaps some in Philippi questioned why he returned without completing his mission to Paul. Paul preemptively defends him and commands the church to honor him.
30. The verb paraboleusamenos ('having risked, having gambled') is a gambling term — Epaphroditus wagered his life on Christ's work. The phrase 'what was lacking in your service' (to hymōn hystērēma tēs leitourgias) is not a criticism of the Philippians but acknowledges that their physical distance prevented personal service to Paul; Epaphroditus bridged that gap at the cost of his own health.

Summary: Paul warns the Philippians against Judaizing opponents whom he calls 'dogs' and 'mutilators of the flesh,' then offers his own credentials as a model of what he now considers worthless compared to knowing Christ. He describes his pursuit of Christ in athletic terms — pressing on toward the goal, forgetting what lies behind, straining toward what lies ahead. He contrasts those whose 'god is their belly' with believers whose citizenship is in heaven, from where they await a Savior who will transform their lowly bodies.

What Makes This Remarkable: Paul's autobiographical section (vv. 4-14) is the most detailed account of his Jewish credentials anywhere in his letters: circumcised on the eighth day, of the tribe of Benjamin, a Hebrew of Hebrews, a Pharisee, blameless under the law. His sweeping renunciation of these credentials as 'rubbish' (skybalon, v. 8) is not self-hatred but a radical revaluation — everything is loss compared to the surpassing worth of knowing Christ Jesus. The athletic metaphor of pressing toward the goal (vv. 12-14) has become one of the most quoted Pauline images, expressing the Christian life as disciplined forward movement rather than passive arrival.

Translation Friction: The sharp warning in verse 2 ('beware of the dogs') represents Paul's most aggressive anti-opponent language outside of Galatians. The identity of these opponents is debated — they may be the same Judaizers addressed in Galatians, or a different group. The term skybalon (v. 8) is deliberately vulgar, ranging from 'refuse' to 'excrement'; we render it as 'rubbish' to preserve the force without gratuitous shock. The phrase 'enemies of the cross' (v. 18) may refer to the same opponents or to a different group focused on libertine behavior.

Connections: Paul's list of Jewish credentials parallels 2 Corinthians 11:22 and Galatians 1:13-14. The athletic imagery of pressing toward the goal connects to 1 Corinthians 9:24-27 and 2 Timothy 4:7-8. The heavenly citizenship (politeuma) in verse 20 picks up the citizenship language of 1:27. The transformation of the body (v. 21) anticipates the resurrection theology of 1 Corinthians 15:42-54.

¹Finally, my brothers and sisters, rejoice in the Lord. To write the same things to you is no trouble to me and is a safeguard for you. ²Watch out for the dogs, watch out for the evildoers, watch out for those who mutilate the flesh. ³For we are the circumcision — we who worship by the Spirit of God and boast in Christ Jesus and put no confidence in the flesh — ⁴Though I may as well possess confidence in the physical nature. If any other man thinketh that he has whereof he might trust in the flesh, I more:. ⁵I was circumcised on the eighth day, born into the people of Israel from the tribe of Benjamin — a Hebrew descended from Hebrews. In regard to the law, I was a Pharisee. ⁶Concerning zeal, persecuting the church. Touching the moral integrity which is in the instruction of Moses, blameless. ⁷But whatever gain I had, I counted as loss for the sake of Christ. ⁸Indeed, I count everything as loss because of the surpassing worth of knowing Christ Jesus my Lord. For his sake I have suffered the loss of all things and count them as rubbish, in order that I may gain Christ ⁹Be discovered in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is by way of the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by way of faith:. ¹⁰I want to know Christ — to experience the power of his resurrection, to share in his sufferings, and to become like him in his death. ¹¹If by any means I may attain to the resurrection of the no longer alive. ¹²Not that I have already obtained this or have already been made perfect, but I press on to make it my own, because Christ Jesus has made me his own. ¹³Brothers and sisters, I do not consider that I have made it my own. But one thing I do: forgetting what lies behind and straining forward to what lies ahead, ¹⁴I press on toward the goal for the prize of the upward call of God in Christ Jesus. ¹⁵Let those of us then who are mature think this way, and if in anything you think otherwise, God will reveal that also to you. ¹⁶Only let us hold true to what we have attained. ¹⁷Brothers and sisters, join in imitating me, and keep your eyes on those who walk according to the example you have in us. ¹⁸For many, of whom I have often told you and now tell you even with tears, walk as enemies of the cross of Christ. ¹⁹Their end is destruction, their god is their belly, and they glory in their shame, with minds set on earthly things. ²⁰But our citizenship is in heaven, and from it we eagerly await a Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, ²¹Who will change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like to his glorious body, in keeping with to the working whereby he is able indeed to subdue all things to himself.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The phrase to loipon ('finally, as for the rest') does not necessarily signal the end of the letter — Paul has two more chapters to go. It functions as a transition marker. The reference to 'the same things' suggests Paul has warned them before, either in person or in a previous letter now lost. The word asphales ('safe, secure, a safeguard') implies that repetition protects against error.
2. The threefold blepete ('watch out, beware') is urgent and aggressive. 'Dogs' (kynas) was a term Jews used for Gentiles; Paul turns it against the Judaizers themselves. The word katatomē ('mutilation, cutting') is a biting pun on peritomē ('circumcision') — Paul reduces their prized covenant sign to mere flesh-cutting. This is among the harshest language in Paul's letters.
3. Paul claims the title 'the circumcision' (hē peritomē) for believers in Christ, redefining the covenant marker from physical surgery to spiritual reality. Three characteristics define true circumcision: worship by God's Spirit, boasting in Christ Jesus (not in credentials), and refusal to trust in the flesh. This echoes the prophetic tradition of 'circumcision of the heart' (Deuteronomy 30:6; Jeremiah 4:4).
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Deuteronomy 30:6 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Jeremiah 4:4 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. Paul pivots from theological principle to personal testimony. His argument is not that flesh-credentials are unattainable but that he possessed them in abundance — and chose to abandon them. This makes his renunciation in verses 7-8 all the more powerful: he is not sour grapes but a man who walked away from genuine wealth.
5. Paul lists seven credentials in ascending order of personal achievement. The first four are inherited: circumcision on the proper day (not a proselyte), Israelite descent, Benjaminite tribal identity (the tribe that gave Israel its first king, Saul — Paul's namesake), and 'Hebrew of Hebrews' (likely meaning Hebrew-speaking from Hebrew-speaking parents, not Hellenized). The last three (vv. 5b-6) are chosen: Pharisee, persecutor, and blameless under law.

6. Paul's zeal (zēlos) manifested as violence against the church — he considers this a credential, not a confession, within the value system he is about to reject. His claim to be 'blameless' (amemptos) under the law does not mean sinless perfection but that he fulfilled the law's external requirements without fault. The rhetorical force is devastating: even flawless Torah observance is 'loss' compared to Christ (v. 7).
7. The commercial metaphor shifts: what was once in the 'profit' column (kerdē, plural 'gains') Paul has transferred to the 'loss' column (zēmian). The perfect tense hēgēmai ('I have counted and still count') indicates a past decision with continuing force. This is not a momentary emotion but a settled conviction.
8. Paul intensifies: not just his Jewish credentials but 'everything' (panta) is loss compared to knowing Christ. The rare word skybala ('refuse, rubbish, excrement, scraps thrown to dogs') is deliberately crude — Paul uses the coarsest available term to express how worthless his former advantages now seem. The phrase 'knowing Christ Jesus my Lord' (tēs gnōseōs Christou Iesou tou kyriou mou) is deeply personal — 'my Lord' is intimate, not merely doctrinal.
9. Paul contrasts two kinds of righteousness: his 'own' (emēn) righteousness based on law-keeping versus the righteousness 'from God' (ek theou) received through faith. The genitive pisteōs Christou ('faith of/in Christ') can be read as 'faith in Christ' (objective genitive) or 'the faithfulness of Christ' (subjective genitive). We follow the objective genitive reading, which is more consistent with Paul's argument here about human response to God's gift.
10. Paul's supreme goal is not theological knowledge about Christ but relational knowledge of Christ — the Greek gnōnai ('to know') carries the Old Testament sense of intimate, experiential knowing. The order is striking: resurrection power first, then suffering. Paul does not romanticize suffering but sees it as inseparable from genuine knowledge of the risen Christ. The verb symmorphizomenos ('being conformed to, being shaped into the pattern of') means taking on the very form (morphē) of Christ's death — echoing the hymn's language of Christ taking the 'form' of a servant (2:7).
11. The rare compound exanastasin ('out-resurrection, resurrection out from among') is more specific than the common anastasis — it may emphasize resurrection out from among the dead, distinguishing the believer's resurrection from a general raising. The conditional 'if by any means' (ei pōs) does not express doubt about salvation but humility before a goal not yet achieved, consistent with the 'not yet perfected' language of verse 12.
12. The verb diōkō ('I press on, I pursue, I chase') is the same verb translated 'persecute' in verse 6 — Paul the former persecutor of the church is now a pursuer of Christ. The verb katalambanō ('to seize, to take hold of, to make one's own') appears twice: Paul pursues in order to grasp what Christ has already grasped in him. The logic is: because Christ seized me, I press on to fully realize what he seized me for.
13. The verb epekteinomenos ('straining forward, stretching out toward') is an athletic term picturing a runner leaning forward with every muscle extended toward the finish line. The 'forgetting' (epilanthanomenos) of what lies behind includes both Paul's former Jewish achievements and his past failures — neither past glory nor past shame determines his forward movement.
14. The skopos ('goal, target, mark') is the finish line toward which the runner strains. The brabeion ('prize') is the victor's wreath awarded at Greek athletic games (cf. 1 Corinthians 9:24). The 'upward call' (anō klēseōs) may mean the call that comes from above (God's heavenly summons) or the call to go upward (the final resurrection). Both senses converge in Paul's thought.
15. The word teleioi ('mature, perfect, complete') is deliberately paradoxical after verse 12, where Paul said he has not been 'made perfect' (teteleiōmai). The mature person is precisely the one who knows they are not yet perfected. Paul trusts God to correct any remaining disagreement — a remarkably patient approach to theological differences within the community.
16. The verb stoichein ('to walk in line, to keep in step, to conform to') is a military term for marching in formation. Whatever level of understanding they have reached, they must live consistently with it. The SBLGNT has a shorter text than the Textus Receptus behind the KJV, which adds 'let us mind the same thing.'
17. The compound symmimētai ('co-imitators, joint imitators') means 'imitate me together' — the imitation is communal, not individual. Paul does not hesitate to offer himself as a model (cf. 1 Corinthians 11:1), not from arrogance but because the Christian life is learned through embodied example. The verb skopeite ('observe, watch closely') is related to skopos ('goal') in verse 14.
18. Paul's tears (klaiōn, 'weeping') reveal that his harsh language in verse 2 is not cold fury but grieved love. These 'enemies of the cross' are not outsiders but people within or near the Christian movement who reject the cross's implications — that God's power works through weakness and self-giving rather than through triumphalism.
19. Four damning descriptions: (1) their destination is destruction (apōleia), (2) their god is appetite (koilia, 'belly, stomach'), (3) their boast is in what should shame them, (4) their thinking is earthbound. Whether 'belly' refers to food laws, gluttony, or physical indulgence generally is debated. The verb phroneō ('to set one's mind on') appears again — their fundamental orientation is toward earthly things rather than heavenly realities.
20. The Greek politeuma ('citizenship, commonwealth, colony') is loaded for Philippian readers. Philippi was a Roman colony whose citizens held Roman citizenship and governed themselves by Roman law even while living far from Rome. Paul says believers are a colony of heaven — they live on earth but their governing allegiance, legal identity, and ultimate homeland are heavenly. The verb apekdechometha ('we eagerly await') is used exclusively for Christ's return in Paul's letters.
21. The verb metaschēmatisei ('will transform, will refashion') uses the schēma root from 2:8 — the outward form of our humble bodies will be remade. The compound symmorphōn ('conformed to, sharing the same form') uses the morphē root from 2:6-7 — our bodies will share the essential form of Christ's glorified body. The chapter that began with warnings against flesh-confidence ends with the promise that even the physical body will be glorified. The cosmic scope — 'subject all things to himself' — echoes Psalm 8:6 and 1 Corinthians 15:27-28.

21. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 8:6. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.

Summary: Paul closes Philippians with pastoral exhortations, beloved promises, and gratitude. He urges Euodia and Syntyche to agree in the Lord, commands the church to rejoice always, and delivers the famous promise that 'the peace of God, which surpasses all understanding, will guard your hearts and minds in Christ Jesus' (4:7). He provides a catalogue of virtues worthy of contemplation, declares his contentment in all circumstances through the strength of Christ (4:13), and thanks the Philippians for their generous financial support — the occasion that prompted this letter.

What Makes This Remarkable: This chapter contains two of the most quoted verses in the Pauline corpus: 'the peace of God, which surpasses all understanding' (v. 7) and 'I can do all things through him who strengthens me' (v. 13). The latter is frequently decontextualized as a promise of unlimited ability; in context, Paul is describing his learned capacity for contentment in both poverty and abundance. The virtue catalogue of verse 8 is remarkable for its overlap with Greco-Roman moral philosophy — Paul affirms pagan ethical vocabulary while grounding it in the gospel. The financial section (vv. 14-20) is a masterclass in gratitude without dependence, expressing deep appreciation while insisting that Paul's true sufficiency comes from God.

Translation Friction: The identity of the 'true companion' (gnēsie syzge, v. 3) is unknown — proposals include Luke, Silas, Epaphroditus, or even a proper name ('Syzygus'). We transliterate the options in the notes without resolving the question. The phrase 'I can do all things' (v. 13) must be read in its immediate context of financial contentment, not as a blank check for any endeavor; our notes address this common misapplication.

Connections: The peace of God (v. 7) connects to the 'God of peace' (v. 9) and to Christ's peace discourse in John 14:27. The virtue catalogue (v. 8) parallels Wisdom of Solomon 8:7 and broader Stoic lists. Paul's financial language of 'giving and receiving' (v. 15) uses Greco-Roman accounting terminology. The 'fragrant offering' (v. 18) echoes Genesis 8:21 and Leviticus 1:9 — the Philippians' gift is described in sacrificial terms.

¹Therefore, my brothers and sisters, whom I love and long for, my joy and crown, stand firm in this way in the Lord, my beloved. ²I urge Euodia and I urge Syntyche to agree in the Lord. ³Yes, I ask you also, true companion, help these women, for they have labored side by side with me in the gospel together with Clement and the rest of my co-workers, whose names are in the book of life. ⁴Rejoice in the Lord always; again I will say, rejoice. ⁵Let your gentleness be known to everyone. The Lord is near. ⁶Do not be anxious about anything, but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known to God. ⁷And the peace of God, which surpasses all understanding, will guard your hearts and your minds in Christ Jesus. ⁸Finally, brothers and sisters, whatever is true, whatever is honorable, whatever is just, whatever is pure, whatever is lovely, whatever is commendable — if there is any excellence, if there is anything worthy of praise — think about these things. ⁹What you have learned and received and heard and seen in me — practice these things, and the God of peace will be with you. ¹⁰I rejoiced in the Lord greatly that now at last you have revived your concern for me. You were indeed concerned for me, but you had no opportunity. ¹¹Not that I am speaking of being in need, for I have learned in whatever situation I am to be content. ¹²I know how to be brought low, and I know how to abound. In any and every circumstance, I have learned the secret of facing plenty and hunger, abundance and need. ¹³I can do all things through him who strengthens me. ¹⁴Yet you did well to share with me in my affliction. ¹⁵And you Philippians yourselves know that in the beginning of the gospel, when I left Macedonia, no church entered into partnership with me in giving and receiving, except you only. ¹⁶For even in Thessalonica you dispatched once and again to my necessity. ¹⁷Not that I seek the gift, but I seek the profit that accumulates to your account. ¹⁸I have received full payment and more. I am well supplied, having received from Epaphroditus the gifts you sent — a fragrant offering, a sacrifice acceptable and pleasing to God. ¹⁹And my God will supply every need of yours according to his riches in glory in Christ Jesus. ²⁰To our God and Father be glory forever and ever.

Amen. ²¹Greet every saint in Christ Jesus. The brothers and sisters who are with me greet you. ²²All the saints greet you, especially those of Caesar's household. ²³The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The warmth of Paul's language is extraordinary — five affectionate terms in one verse: beloved, longed for, joy, crown, beloved again. The stephanos ('crown, wreath') is the victor's garland, not a royal crown (diadēma) — the Philippians themselves are Paul's prize at the finish line of his apostolic race (cf. 1 Thessalonians 2:19).
2. Both names are feminine — these are women leaders in the Philippian church. The repetition of parakalō ('I urge') with each name gives equal weight to both, refusing to take sides. The verb phroneō ('to think, to have a mindset') appears again — the letter's key verb. Their disagreement apparently affected the whole congregation, warranting a public appeal.
3. The Greek syzge ('yokefellow, companion') may be a proper name (Syzygus) or a description of an unnamed colleague. The adjective gnēsie ('true, genuine, legitimate') would be a pun if Syzygus is a name ('truly named Yokefellow'). The women 'labored side by side' (synēthlēsan, 'contended together as athletes') with Paul — the same athletic verb used in 1:27, indicating full co-laborer status. The 'book of life' (biblos zōēs) is an image drawn from Exodus 32:32-33 and Daniel 12:1.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 32:32-33 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Daniel 12:1 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The double imperative chairete ('rejoice!') from a man in prison is the letter's climactic command. The word pantote ('always') makes joy a non-negotiable posture, not dependent on favorable circumstances. The deliberate repetition — 'again I will say' — emphasizes that this is not casual advice but an apostolic command.
5. The Greek epieikes ('gentleness, forbearance, graciousness, reasonableness') is a quality Aristotle defined as 'justice that goes beyond the letter of the law' — a willingness to yield one's strict rights for the sake of others. The brief declaration ho kyrios engys ('the Lord is near') can mean temporal proximity (Christ's return is imminent) or spatial proximity (the Lord is present with you). Both readings are likely intended.
6. The verb merimnate ('be anxious, worry') is the same word Jesus used in the Sermon on the Mount (Matthew 6:25-34). The antidote to anxiety is not suppression but redirection — prayer, petition, and thanksgiving. The triad of proseuche ('prayer,' general worship), deēsis ('supplication,' specific requests), and eucharistia ('thanksgiving') forms a complete pattern of communication with God.
7. The verb phrouresei ('will guard, will garrison') is a military term — God's peace stands sentry over the believer's inner life like a soldier guarding a city. For Philippians living in a Roman garrison city, this image was vivid. The peace 'surpasses all understanding' (hyperechousa panta noun) not because it is irrational but because it exceeds what the human mind can produce or comprehend on its own. It guards both 'hearts' (kardias, the seat of will and emotion) and 'minds' (noēmata, thoughts and purposes).
8. This virtue catalogue is remarkable for its overlap with Greek moral philosophy. The words aretē ('excellence, virtue') and epainos ('praise') are rare in Paul but common in Hellenistic ethics. Paul does not reject pagan moral insight but baptizes it — whatever is genuinely excellent in human culture is worth a Christian's contemplation. The sixfold 'whatever' (hosa) creates a sweeping inclusiveness: truth, honor, justice, purity, loveliness, and good repute are valued wherever they are found.
9. Four verbs of transmission — 'learned' (emathete), 'received' (parelabete, a technical term for receiving tradition), 'heard' (ēkousate), and 'seen' (eidete) — cover every mode of instruction. Paul again offers himself as a living example (cf. 3:17). The promise shifts from 'the peace of God' (v. 7) to 'the God of peace' — not merely God's gift but God's presence.
10. The verb anethalete ('you have revived, you have blossomed again') is a botanical term for a plant putting forth new growth after winter. Paul immediately softens any hint of reproach — they always cared but lacked opportunity (ēkaireisthe, 'you had no favorable occasion'). The delay in sending support was circumstantial, not attitudinal.
11. The word autarkēs ('content, self-sufficient') was the supreme Stoic virtue — the wise person who needs nothing external. Paul adopts the term but radically redefines it: his sufficiency comes not from inner philosophical detachment but from Christ's empowering (v. 13). The verb emathon ('I have learned') indicates this contentment was not innate but acquired through experience.
12. The verb memyēmai ('I have been initiated, I have learned the secret') comes from the mystery religions — it means to be inducted into hidden knowledge through experience. Paul borrows the language of pagan initiation to describe his education in contentment. The four pairs — brought low/about, full/hungry, abundance/need — cover the full spectrum of material circumstances.
13. The Greek panta ischyō ('I am strong for all things, I have strength for everything') in context refers to Paul's ability to endure any circumstance — poverty or abundance, hunger or plenty — not a promise of unlimited capability for any endeavor. The SBLGNT does not include 'Christ' (Christō), reading simply 'the one who empowers me' (tō endynamounti me), though Christ is clearly implied. The verb endynamoō ('to empower, to strengthen within') indicates that the power source is internal — Christ working within Paul — yet external in origin.

14. After declaring his self-sufficiency through Christ, Paul immediately affirms the Philippians' gift — his contentment does not make their generosity unnecessary or unappreciated. The compound synkoinōnēsantes ('having shared in, having partnered with') extends the koinōnia theme: their gift was not mere charity but co-participation in Paul's suffering.
15. Paul addresses them by name — 'Philippians' (Philippēsiōi) — the only letter where he does this except Galatians. The phrase logon doseōs kai lēmψεōs ('an account of giving and receiving') uses Greco-Roman commercial bookkeeping language. The Philippians were the sole church to establish a mutual account with Paul — they gave financial support, he gave spiritual ministry. This unique relationship sets Philippi apart from all other churches.
16. Thessalonica was Paul's next stop after Philippi (Acts 17:1). The Philippians supported him even while he was in a neighboring city — their generosity was not a one-time gesture but repeated ('once and again,' hapax kai dis). This is remarkable given that Philippi was likely not a wealthy congregation.
17. Paul maintains his careful balance: he values their gift not for his material benefit but for the spiritual 'profit' (karpon, 'fruit') it produces in their account (logon, 'ledger'). The commercial metaphor continues — the Philippians are building up credit in a heavenly account through their generosity.
18. The verb apechō ('I have received in full') was the standard commercial term for acknowledging full payment — it appeared on receipts. Paul then shifts abruptly from accounting to altar: the Philippians' gift is a fragrant offering (osmēn euōdias), a sacrifice (thysian) acceptable and pleasing to God. The phrase 'fragrant offering' echoes the Hebrew reiaḥ nichoach used for offerings that please God (Genesis 8:21; Leviticus 1:9). Money sent to a prisoner becomes worship offered to God.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 8:21 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Leviticus 1:9 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. Paul responds to their generosity with a promise: the God who received their sacrifice will supply (plērōsei, 'fill to the full') their every need. The measure of God's supply is 'according to his riches in glory' — not out of his riches (as if taking a portion) but according to the full standard of his wealth. The phrase 'my God' (ho theos mou) is warmly personal.
20. The doxology eis tous aiōnas tōn aiōnōn ('to the ages of the ages') is the strongest Greek expression for eternity — ages multiplied by ages. The letter that began with grace (1:2) ends with glory — the proper destination of all that God gives and all that believers offer back.
21. The greeting is to 'every saint' (panta hagion) — individually and without exception. Paul's companions send their own greetings, indicating a community around him even in imprisonment.
22. The phrase hoi ek tēs Kaisaros oikias ('those of Caesar's household') does not mean members of the imperial family but slaves and freedmen in the vast network of the emperor's administrative staff. That the gospel has penetrated even Caesar's household is a stunning demonstration of 1:12-13 — Paul's imprisonment has advanced the gospel into the heart of Roman power.
23. The SBLGNT reads 'with your spirit' (meta tou pneumatōs hymōn) rather than the Textus Receptus 'with you all.' The letter closes as it opened — with grace (charis). The singular 'spirit' (pneumatōs) may address the congregation as one body. The SBLGNT does not include 'Amen' at the end.

Colossians

Summary: Paul writes to the Colossian church, which he has never visited, expressing gratitude for their faith and love and praying for their spiritual growth. The chapter builds to the magnificent Christ Hymn (1:15-20), which declares Christ as the image of the invisible God, firstborn over all creation, the agent and goal of creation, the head of the church, and the one through whom God reconciles all things. Paul then describes his own suffering as completing what is lacking in Christ's afflictions for the sake of the church, and his commission to make known the mystery hidden for ages — 'Christ in you, the hope of glory.'

What Makes This Remarkable: The Christ Hymn (1:15-20) is among the highest christological statements in Scripture. It makes claims about Christ that the Old Testament reserves for God alone: creating all things, sustaining all things, being before all things. The phrase 'image of the invisible God' (eikōn tou theou tou aoratou) does not mean a mere representation but the visible manifestation of the invisible deity — Christ makes God seeable. The dual declaration that 'all things were created through him and for him' (v. 16) and 'in him all things hold together' (v. 17) gives Christ a cosmic role that extends far beyond salvation history. The reconciliation of 'all things' through the blood of the cross (v. 20) is one of the broadest soteriological claims in the New Testament.

Translation Friction: The phrase 'firstborn of all creation' (prōtotokos pasēs ktiseōs, v. 15) has been debated since the Arian controversy. It does not mean Christ was created first but designates his supremacy and preeminence over creation, as the following verses make clear ('all things were created through him'). Paul's statement about 'completing what is lacking in Christ's afflictions' (v. 24) is notoriously difficult — it cannot mean Christ's atoning work was insufficient. We render the Greek without resolving the systematic theology, noting the options in the translator notes.

Connections: The Christ Hymn echoes Proverbs 8:22-31 (Wisdom as agent of creation), Genesis 1:1 (the beginning), and John 1:1-18 (the Logos hymn). The 'image of God' language connects to Genesis 1:26-27 and 2 Corinthians 4:4. The 'mystery' (mystērion) language anticipates Ephesians 3:3-9. The reconciliation theme extends Romans 5:10-11 and 2 Corinthians 5:18-20 to cosmic scope.

¹Paul, an apostle of Christ Jesus by the will of God, and Timothy our brother, ²To the saints and faithful brothers and sisters in Christ at Colossae: Grace to you and peace from God our Father. ³We always thank God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, when we pray for you, ⁴And of the love which you have to all the saints,, and since we heard of your faith in Christ

Jesus. ⁵For the hope which is placed up for you in heaven, whereof you listened to before in the word of the truth of the gospel. ⁶Which is come to you, as it is in every one of the world. And brings forth fruit, as it does also in you, since the day you listened to of it, and recognized the grace of God in truth:. ⁷You learned the gospel from Epaphras, our dear fellow servant. He is a faithful minister of Christ on your behalf. ⁸Indeed, who also declared to us your love in the Spirit. ⁹And so, from the day we heard, we have not ceased to pray for you, asking that you may be filled with the knowledge of his will in all spiritual wisdom and understanding, ¹⁰so that you may live in a way that is worthy of the Lord and pleasing to him in every respect: producing fruit through every kind of good work and growing in the knowledge of God. ¹¹Strengthened with all might, according to his glorious power, to all patience and patience with joyfulness;. ¹²Give thanks with joy to the Father, who has qualified you to share in the inheritance of the saints who live in the light. ¹³He has rescued us from the domain of darkness and transferred us into the kingdom of his beloved Son, ¹⁴In whom we have redemption by way of his blood, even the forgiveness of sins:. ¹⁵He is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of all creation. ¹⁶For by him all things were created, in heaven and on earth, visible and invisible, whether thrones or dominions or rulers or authorities — all things were created through him and for him. ¹⁷And he is before all things, and in him all things hold together. ¹⁸And he is the head of the body, the church. He is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead, that in everything he might be preeminent. ¹⁹For in him all the fullness was pleased to dwell, ²⁰And, possessing fashioned wholeness by way of the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things to himself. By him, I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven. ²¹And you, who once were alienated and hostile in mind, doing evil deeds, ²²Indeed, in the body of his flesh by way of death, to present you holy and unblameable and unproveable in his sight:. ²³If you continue in the faith grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel, which you have listened to, and which was preached to every creature which is under heaven. Whereof I Paul am made a minister;. ²⁴Now I rejoice in my sufferings for your sake, and in my flesh I am filling up what is lacking in Christ's afflictions for the sake of his body, that is, the church, ²⁵Whereof I am appointed a minister, in keeping with to the dispensation of God which is given to me for you, to fulfil the word of God;. ²⁶Indeed the mystery which has been hid from ages and from generations, but now is appointed manifest to his saints:. ²⁷To them God chose to make known how great among the Gentiles are the riches of the glory of this mystery, which is Christ in you, the hope of glory. ²⁸Him we proclaim, warning everyone and teaching everyone with all wisdom, that we may present everyone mature in Christ. ²⁹For this I toil, struggling with all his energy that he powerfully works within me.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Unlike Philippians, Paul leads with his apostolic title — necessary when writing to a church he has not personally founded or visited. The phrase 'by the will of God' (dia thelēmatos theou) grounds Paul's authority not in personal ambition but in divine appointment.
2. Colossae was a small city in the Lycus Valley of Phrygia (modern Turkey), overshadowed by neighboring Laodicea and Hierapolis. The church was likely founded by Epaphras (v. 7), not Paul. The SBLGNT omits 'and the Lord Jesus Christ' found in the KJV's Textus Receptus, ending the greeting with 'from God our Father' alone.
3. The plural 'we' includes Timothy (v. 1). Paul identifies God specifically as 'the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ' — God's identity is defined in relation to Christ. The adverb pantote ('always') modifies their thanksgiving, indicating habitual prayer for a church they have never visited.
4. Paul has 'heard' about them — confirming he has not visited Colossae. The twin report of faith and love forms the classic Pauline triad when combined with hope in verse 5. Their love extends to 'all the saints' — not a clique but the entire body of believers.
5. Hope here is not a feeling but an objective reality — something 'laid up' (apokeimenēn, 'stored, reserved') in heaven, waiting to be received. The Colossians first heard about this hope through 'the word of the truth of the gospel' — a threefold description emphasizing the reliability and saving content of the message.
6. The gospel is described as a living, growing organism — 'bearing fruit and increasing' (karpophoroumenon kai auxanomenon) echoes the creation mandate of Genesis 1:28 and the parable of the sower (Mark 4). The phrase 'understood the grace of God in truth' (epegnōte tēn charin tou theou en alētheia) implies genuine, deep knowledge (epignōsis) as opposed to the false 'knowledge' the Colossian heresy may have been promoting.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 1:28. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. Epaphras is the likely founder of the Colossian church (cf. 4:12-13). Paul calls him syndoulos ('fellow slave') — placing Epaphras on equal footing with himself under Christ's lordship. The SBLGNT reads 'on your behalf' (hyper hēmōn has the variant hyper hymōn, 'on your behalf'), indicating Epaphras served the Colossians as Christ's representative.

8. Epaphras serves as the communication bridge between Paul and the Colossians. Their 'love in the Spirit' (agapēn en pneumati) is love produced by the Holy Spirit — the fruit of the Spirit that Paul describes in Galatians 5:22. This is the only explicit reference to the Holy Spirit in Colossians.
9. Paul's prayer is for epignōsis ('full knowledge, deep understanding') of God's will — a pointed term in a letter that will combat a rival 'knowledge' system (the Colossian heresy). The adjective pneumatikē ('spiritual') modifies both wisdom (sophia) and understanding (synesis), indicating that this knowledge comes from the Spirit, not from human speculation or esoteric tradition.
10. The verb peripatēsai ('to walk') is the standard Pauline metaphor for daily conduct (Hebrew halakh). The purpose of knowledge is ethical living, not intellectual attainment alone. 'Bearing fruit and increasing' (karpophorountes kai auxanomenoi) echoes verse 6, creating a parallel: as the gospel bears fruit in the world, so believers bear fruit in good works.
11. The accumulation of power language — dymamei, dynamoumenoi, kratos — emphasizes divine empowerment. But the goal of this power is surprising: not miraculous feats but 'endurance' (hypomonē, 'steadfast perseverance') and 'patience' (makrothymia, 'long-temperedness'). God's power enables believers to hold firm under pressure rather than escape it.
12. The verb hikanōsanti ('who qualified, who made sufficient') emphasizes that believers' share in the inheritance is God's doing, not their achievement. The 'inheritance' (klērou, 'lot, portion, allotment') echoes the land inheritance of Israel in Joshua — believers receive a spiritual allotment in the realm of light. The contrast between light and the 'domain of darkness' in verse 13 reflects the dualistic language common in Second Temple Judaism (cf. the Dead Sea Scrolls' 'sons of light' vs. 'sons of darkness').
13. The verb errysato ('he rescued, he delivered') is the language of military liberation — God has extracted believers from enemy territory. The verb metestēsen ('he transferred, he removed') was used for the deportation of conquered populations; here God 'deports' believers out of darkness and into Christ's kingdom. The phrase 'the Son of his love' (tou huiou tēs agapēs autou) is an unusual construction meaning 'his beloved Son' — the Son who is the object of the Father's love.
14. The word apolytrōsis ('redemption, release through ransom payment') is a slave-market term — the price paid to free a captive. Paul defines this redemption as 'the forgiveness of sins' (tēn aphesin tōn hamartiōn). The SBLGNT omits 'through his blood' (dia tou haimatos autou) found in the parallel passage in Ephesians 1:7 and in some Colossians manuscripts. This verse serves as the transition into the Christ Hymn.
15. The Christ Hymn begins. The word eikōn ('image') in Greek means not a mere picture but a manifestation that participates in the reality it represents — Christ is the visible expression of the invisible God. The term prōtotokos ('firstborn') does not mean 'first created' but denotes supremacy and rank — the firstborn son held preeminence and the right of inheritance. Psalm 89:27 uses 'firstborn' for David's royal status: 'I will make him the firstborn, the highest of the kings of the earth.' Christ holds that rank over all creation.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 1:1 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalm 89:27 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. Three prepositions define Christ's relation to creation: en autō ('in him,' the sphere), di' autou ('through him,' the agent), eis auton ('for him,' the goal). Creation exists in Christ, was made through Christ, and aims toward Christ. The four terms for spiritual powers — thrones, dominions, rulers, authorities — may address the Colossian heresy's preoccupation with angelic hierarchies. Whatever powers exist, Christ created them and outranks them all.
17. The phrase pro pantōn ('before all things') asserts both temporal priority (he existed before creation) and positional supremacy (he ranks above all things). The verb synestēken ('hold together, cohere, are sustained') is a perfect tense indicating ongoing reality — the universe's coherence at this moment depends on Christ's sustaining power. Without him, creation would disintegrate. This is one of the strongest statements of Christ's cosmic significance in the New Testament.
18. The hymn pivots from creation (vv. 15-17) to new creation (vv. 18-20). Christ's headship (kephalē, 'head') of the church parallels his supremacy over creation. The word archē ('beginning, origin, first principle') echoes Genesis 1:1. As 'firstborn from the dead' (prōtotokos ek tōn nekrōn), Christ holds the same rank over the new creation that he holds over the original creation. The purpose clause — 'that in everything he might be preeminent' (prōteuōn) — states the hymn's thesis: Christ holds first place in absolutely everything.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 1:1 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. The word plērōma ('fullness, completeness') is a key term in Colossians. It may have been a term used by the false teachers to describe the totality of divine powers; Paul claims it entirely for Christ. 'All the fullness' of God — not a fraction, not a partial manifestation, but the complete divine reality — permanently resides in Christ. The verb katoikēsai ('to dwell, to take up permanent residence') indicates not a temporary visit but an abiding presence.
20. The verb apokatallaxai ('to reconcile fully') is an intensified form found only in Colossians and Ephesians. The scope is staggering: 'all things' (ta panta) — the same phrase used for creation in verse 16 — are reconciled through Christ. The means is specified: 'the blood of his cross' (tou haimatos tou staurou autou), anchoring this cosmic vision in a brutal historical event. The hymn that began with creation's origin in Christ ends with creation's restoration through Christ.

21. Paul applies the cosmic reconciliation of verse 20 to the Colossians' personal experience. They were 'alienated' (apēllotriōmenous, 'estranged, made foreign') and 'hostile' (echthrous) — their minds were actively opposed to God, expressed through evil deeds. The transition from 'once' (pote) to 'now' (nyni, v. 22) marks the before-and-after of redemption.
22. The phrase 'in his body of flesh through death' (en tō sōmati tēs sarkos autou dia tou thanatou) emphasizes the physicality of Christ's atoning work — against any tendency to spiritualize or mythologize the cross. Three adjectives describe the intended result: 'holy' (hagious), 'blameless' (amōmous, a sacrificial term for animals without defect), and 'above reproach' (anengklētous, a legal term meaning no charge can be brought). The language spans temple, courtroom, and daily life.
23. The conditional 'if indeed' (ei ge) is not expressing doubt but emphasizing the necessity of perseverance. Three architectural metaphors reinforce stability: 'grounded' (tethemeliōmenoi, 'having a foundation laid'), 'steadfast' (hedraioi, 'firmly seated, immovable'), and 'not shifting' (mē metakinoumenoi). The claim that the gospel 'has been proclaimed in all creation under heaven' is hyperbolic, expressing the gospel's universal scope and unstoppable advance.
24. This is one of Paul's most debated statements. The verb antanaplēroō ('I fill up in turn, I complete in response') is found only here in the New Testament. Paul does not mean Christ's atoning death was insufficient — that would contradict verse 20. Rather, the Messianic afflictions that must precede the end times (a Jewish eschatological concept) still have a 'quota' to be filled, and Paul's sufferings contribute to completing that quota. His suffering is vicarious ('for your sake') and ecclesial ('for the sake of his body').
25. The word oikonomia ('stewardship, administration, management of a household') frames Paul's apostleship as a trust — he has been given responsibility for God's household, specifically to bring the gospel to the Gentiles (including the Colossians). The verb plērōsai ('to fulfill, to make fully known') means Paul's task is to ensure the complete proclamation of God's word.
26. The word mystērion ('mystery') in Paul does not mean something mysterious or unknowable but a divine secret that was hidden and has now been disclosed. The temporal contrast is dramatic: 'hidden from ages and generations' versus 'now revealed' (nyn ephanerōthē). The long concealment heightens the significance of the revelation — what God planned from eternity is now made known.
27. The mystery is now named: 'Christ in you, the hope of glory' (Christos en hymin, hē elpis tēs doxēs). The pronoun 'you' (hymin) is plural and addressed to Gentiles — the shocking content of the mystery is that Christ now dwells among and within Gentile believers, making them heirs of eschatological glory. This was the great scandal of Paul's gospel — that God's Messiah would take up residence in non-Jewish communities.
28. The threefold repetition of panta anthrōpon ('every person') emphasizes the universal scope of the gospel against any elitist tendency in the Colossian heresy that offered 'advanced' knowledge to a select few. Paul's goal — presenting everyone 'mature' (teleion) in Christ — is available to all, not a spiritual aristocracy. The word teleion means 'mature, complete, fully developed,' not sinlessly perfect.
29. The verb kopiaō ('I toil, I labor to exhaustion') and agōnizomai ('I struggle, I contend') describe intense effort — Paul does not coast on grace. Yet the energy (energeia) behind his effort is not his own but God's, 'powerfully working' (energoumenēn en dýnamei) within him. The paradox of divine empowerment and human exertion — identical to Philippians 2:12-13 — closes the chapter.

Summary: Paul describes his struggle for the Colossians and Laodiceans, urging them to find all treasures of wisdom and knowledge in Christ. He warns against being deceived by persuasive but empty philosophy, declares that 'in Christ the whole fullness of deity dwells bodily' and that believers have been filled in him. He describes baptism as spiritual circumcision and co-burial with Christ, proclaims that God has canceled the record of debt that stood against them by nailing it to the cross, and warns against submitting to regulations about food, festivals, or angel worship that are merely shadows of the substance found in Christ.

What Makes This Remarkable: This chapter contains Paul's most direct engagement with the 'Colossian heresy' — a syncretistic system combining Jewish regulations (food laws, sabbath observance), mystical practices (angel worship, visionary experiences), and ascetic disciplines. Rather than refuting each element individually, Paul makes one devastating argument: Christ is the fullness of God, believers are complete in Christ, therefore nothing needs to be added. The image of God nailing the 'record of debt' (cheirographon) to the cross (v. 14) is one of Paul's most vivid atonement metaphors. The disarming and public shaming of cosmic powers (v. 15) portrays the cross as a Roman triumph in reverse — the crucified one is the conquering general.

Translation Friction: The exact nature of the Colossian heresy is reconstructed from Paul's polemics, since we have no independent description of it. Scholars debate whether it was Jewish mysticism, proto-gnostic speculation, syncretistic philosophy, or local Phrygian religious practice. We render Paul's warnings without committing to a single reconstruction. The phrase 'worship of angels' (thrēskeia tōn angelōn, v.

18) could mean 'worship directed to angels' or 'worship performed by angels (which humans try to join)' — both readings are noted.

Connections: The 'fullness' (plērōma) language continues from 1:19. The circumcision/baptism connection (vv. 11-12) parallels Romans 6:3-4. The 'record of debt' (cheirographon) echoes the cancelled debt imagery of Matthew 18:23-35. The shadow/substance contrast (v. 17) resonates with Hebrews 8:5 and 10:1. The triumph over powers (v. 15) connects to the principalities and authorities of 1:16 and Ephesians 6:12.

1For I want you to know how great a struggle I have for you and for those at Laodicea and for all who have not seen me face to face, 2My goal is that their hearts would be encouraged, being joined together in love, so that they may have the full riches of complete understanding and may know the mystery of God, namely Christ. 3In whom are hid every one of the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. 4I say this so that no one may deceive you with persuasive arguments. 5For though I am absent in body, yet I am with you in spirit, rejoicing to see your good order and the firmness of your faith in Christ. 6Therefore, as you received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk in him, 7Let your roots grow deep in him. Build your lives on him. Grow stronger in the faith you were taught, and overflow with thankfulness. 8See to it that no one takes you captive by philosophy and empty deceit, according to human tradition, according to the elemental spirits of the world, and not according to Christ. 9For in him the whole fullness of deity dwells bodily, 10You are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and authority:. 11In him also you were circumcised with a circumcision made without hands, by putting off the body of the flesh, in the circumcision of Christ, 12Buried with him in baptism, wherein also you are risen with him by way of the faith of the operation of God, who has brought him back to life. 13And you, who were dead in your trespasses and the uncircumcision of your flesh, God made alive together with him, having forgiven us all our trespasses, 14He erased the record of charges that stood against us with its legal demands. He set it aside by nailing it to the cross. 15He disarmed the rulers and authorities and put them to open shame, by triumphing over them in him. 16Therefore let no one pass judgment on you in questions of food and drink, or with regard to a festival or a new moon or a Sabbath. 17These are a shadow of the things to come, but the substance belongs to Christ. 18Let no one disqualify you, insisting on asceticism and worship of angels, going on in detail about visions, puffed up without reason by his sensuous mind, 19Not holding the Skull, from which all the physical body by joints and bands having nourishment ministered, and knit as one, increaseth with the increase of God. 20If with Christ you died to the elemental spirits of the world, why, as if you were still living in the world, do you submit to regulations — 21"Do not handle, Do not taste, Do not touch" — 22Indeed, which all are to perish with the using;) following the commandments and doctrines of men? 23These have indeed an appearance of wisdom in promoting self-made religion and asceticism and severity to the body, but they are of no value in stopping the indulgence of the flesh.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The word agōna ('struggle, contest') echoes 1:29 and the athletic imagery found throughout Paul's letters. The mention of Laodicea (a neighboring city about 10 miles west of Colossae) confirms that Paul's concerns extend to the broader Lycus Valley. The phrase 'have not seen my face in the flesh' confirms Paul has never visited these churches.
2. The verb symbibasthentes ('being knit together, being united') pictures the community being woven into a unified fabric through love. The goal is epignōsis ('deep knowledge') of God's mystery — and that mystery is identified simply as 'Christ' (Christou). The SBLGNT text is shorter than the Textus Receptus, which reads 'of God, and of the Father, and of Christ.' The critical text identifies the mystery directly as Christ himself.
3. The adjective apokryphoi ('hidden, stored away') may be a deliberate counter to proto-gnostic claims of secret knowledge. Paul does not deny hidden wisdom — he locates it entirely in Christ. All (pantes) the treasures are in Christ, leaving no wisdom to be sought elsewhere. This verse undercuts any supplementary 'philosophy' (v. 8) that claims to offer what Christ lacks.
4. The verb paralagizetai ('to deceive, to reason falsely, to delude') literally means 'to reason alongside' — to lead astray through plausible but ultimately false reasoning. The noun pithanologia ('persuasive speech, plausible argument') appears only here in the New Testament. The danger is not crude error but sophisticated-sounding teaching that draws people away from the sufficiency of Christ.
5. The military metaphors taxis ('order, battle formation, rank') and stereōma ('firmness, solid front, fortification') picture the Colossian church as a well-ordered army holding its defensive position. Paul commends them before warning them — the church is currently standing firm, but threats are approaching.

6. The verb parelabete ('you received') is a technical term for receiving authoritative tradition (cf. 1 Corinthians 15:3). What they received was not merely teaching about Christ but Christ himself — 'Christ Jesus the Lord.' The imperative peripateite ('walk!') commands them to continue in the same Christ they originally received, not to supplement him with additional spiritual systems.
7. Three metaphors describe spiritual stability: agricultural ('rooted,' errizōmenoi — a perfect participle indicating a past rooting with continuing effect), architectural ('built up,' epoikodomoumenoi — a present participle indicating ongoing construction), and legal ('established, confirmed,' bebaioumenoi). The foundation is Christ; the standard is the original teaching; the overflow is thanksgiving (eucharistia).
8. The verb sylogōgōn ('taking captive, carrying off as plunder') pictures the false teaching as a raiding party that captures believers and carries them away. The 'philosophy' (philosophia) is not Greek philosophy in general but the specific Colossian syncretism. The stoicheia tou kosmou ('elemental spirits/principles of the world') is debated: it may mean basic cosmic elements (earth, air, fire, water), elemental spiritual beings, or rudimentary religious principles. The final phrase — 'and not according to Christ' (ou kata Christon) — is Paul's decisive criterion: any system not grounded in Christ is empty deceit.
9. This verse intensifies 1:19. The word theotētos ('deity, divine nature, Godhead') is stronger than theiotētos ('divinity, divine quality') — it denotes the full essence of God, not merely divine characteristics. The adverb sōmatikōs ('bodily, in bodily form') insists that this divine fullness has taken permanent physical form in the incarnate Christ. The present tense katoikei ('dwells') indicates an ongoing reality — the risen Christ still possesses a body in which deity fully resides.
10. The verb peplērōmenoi ('you have been filled, you are complete') uses the same plērōō root as plērōma in verse 9. Because all divine fullness dwells in Christ, and believers are 'in him,' they share in that fullness. Nothing needs to be added — no angelic mediation, no dietary regulations, no ascetic practices. Christ is the 'head' (kephalē) of every cosmic power, making these powers subordinate rather than supplementary to him.
11. Paul redefines circumcision as an act accomplished 'in Christ' — not by human hands (acheiropoiētō) but by divine action. The 'putting off' (apekdysai, 'stripping away') of 'the body of the flesh' means the removal of the old sinful nature, not physical circumcision. The 'circumcision of Christ' may mean the circumcision Christ accomplished (through his death) or the circumcision that belongs to the Christian community. The SBLGNT omits 'of the sins' (tōn hamartiōn) found in some manuscripts.
12. Baptism is the visible enactment of the believer's union with Christ in death and resurrection. The syn- prefix ('with') appears in both verbs: syntaphentes ('co-buried') and synēgerthēte ('co-raised'). Unlike Romans 6:4-5, where the resurrection dimension is future, Colossians affirms that believers have already been raised with Christ — the emphasis is on present reality, not only future hope. Faith is directed toward God's energeia ('powerful working, operative power') — the same power that raised Christ is the basis of the believer's new life.
13. The Colossians' pre-conversion state was spiritual death — 'dead in trespasses' (nekrous ontas en tois paraptōmasin). The 'uncircumcision of your flesh' marks them as Gentiles, formerly outside the covenant community. The verb synezōopoiēsen ('he made alive together with') is another *syn-*compound — their new life is inseparable from Christ's resurrection. The shift from 'you' to 'us' (hēmin, 'having forgiven us') broadens the scope to include all believers.
14. The cheirographon ('handwritten document, certificate of debt, IOU') was a signed acknowledgment of debt in the ancient world. The metaphor is vivid: humanity's debt before God — the accumulated record of our violations of his righteous requirements (dogmasin, 'decrees, ordinances') — has been cancelled (exaleipsas, 'wiped away, erased'). The image of nailing the debt certificate to the cross may reflect the Roman practice of posting the charges against a crucified criminal above his head (cf. John 19:19-20). Christ's cross is the display of our cancelled debt.
15. The verb apekdysamenos ('having stripped, having disarmed') pictures Christ stripping the cosmic powers of their weapons and authority. The verb edeigmatisen ('he made a public spectacle, he exposed to shame') and thriambeusas ('having triumphed over') are drawn from the Roman triumphal procession (triumphus), where a victorious general paraded defeated enemies through the streets. The supreme irony: the cross, Rome's instrument of shame, becomes God's vehicle of cosmic victory. The phrase en autō ('in him' or 'in it') could refer to Christ or to the cross.
16. Paul now applies the theological argument of verses 9-15 to specific practices. The three categories — festivals (annual), new moons (monthly), Sabbaths (weekly) — cover the full cycle of Jewish calendar observance (cf. 1 Chronicles 23:31; Hosea 2:11). Paul does not condemn these practices in themselves but forbids anyone from using them as standards by which to judge believers in Christ.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes 1 Chronicles 23:31. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Hosea 2:11. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. The shadow-substance contrast (skia / sōma) is a powerful image: a shadow proves something real is casting it, but no one mistakes the shadow for the object itself. The Jewish regulations were real — they pointed forward to Christ — but now that Christ has come, clinging to the shadows while ignoring the substance is a fundamental confusion. The word sōma ('body, substance, reality') contrasts pointedly with skia ('shadow').
18. The verb katababeuetō ('let no one disqualify you, let no one act as umpire against you') is an athletic term — an unfair judge ruling against a competitor. The 'worship of angels' (thrēskeia tōn angelōn) could mean worship directed to angels or participation in angelic worship. The phrase ha heōraken embateuōn ('entering into what he has seen' or 'going on about visions') may describe mystical experiences claimed by the false teachers. The SBLGNT reads 'what he has seen' (heōraken) against the negation 'has not seen' in some manuscripts. Despite claims of deep spiritual insight, this person is 'puffed up by the mind of the flesh' — their supposed humility is actually arrogance.

19. The fundamental problem with the false teaching is disconnection from Christ, the Head (kephalēn). The body imagery uses medical terminology: haphōn ('joints, connections'), syndesmōn ('ligaments, sinews'), and epichorēgoumenon ('being supplied, being nourished'). A body severed from its head cannot grow, no matter how impressive its spiritual practices appear. The growth is tēn auxēsīn tou theou — growth that comes from God, not from human religious effort.
20. Paul's argument is from baptismal reality: you died with Christ (apethanete syn Christō). Death severs all obligations — a dead person owes nothing. If the Colossians died to the stoicheia ('elemental spirits/principles'), why do they let these defeated powers dictate rules for daily life? The verb dogmatizesthe ('you submit to decrees, you let yourselves be regulated') suggests voluntary submission to a system they have been freed from.
21. Paul quotes the slogans of the false teachers in descending order of contact: handle (hapsē, 'grasp, take hold of'), taste (geusē, 'eat, experience by tasting'), touch (thigēs, 'touch lightly'). The progression from major to minor contact underscores the ever-increasing restrictiveness of the legalistic system. These rules treat physical contact with certain substances as spiritually defiling.
22. Paul's argument echoes Jesus's teaching that what enters the body cannot defile a person (Mark 7:14-23). Food and drink are consumed and destroyed (phthoran, 'decay, destruction, perishing') — they have no lasting spiritual significance. The phrase 'commandments and teachings of humans' (entalmata kai didaskalias tōn anthrōpōn) directly quotes Isaiah 29:13 (LXX), which Jesus also cited against the Pharisees (Matthew 15:9).
22. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 29:13. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
23. Paul's devastating conclusion: the entire system of regulations has a 'reputation for wisdom' (logon sophia) — it looks impressive — but it fails at the one thing it claims to accomplish. The rare word ethelothrēskia ('self-imposed worship, voluntary religion, self-made piety') describes religion invented by human will rather than revealed by God. Ascetic severity to the body (apheidia sōmatos, 'unsparing treatment of the body') may look holy but has no actual power against fleshly indulgence (plēsmōnē tēs sarkos). External regulations cannot transform the inner person — only union with Christ can.

Summary: Paul pivots from theological argument to ethical exhortation, grounding the moral life in the believer's union with the risen Christ. He commands the Colossians to 'set your minds on things above, not on earthly things,' because they have died and their life is hidden with Christ in God. He lists vices to put to death and virtues to put on, climaxing with love as the bond of perfection. He instructs them to let the word of Christ dwell richly, to sing psalms and hymns, and to do everything in the name of the Lord Jesus. The chapter closes with a household code addressing wives and husbands, children and parents, and slaves and masters.

What Makes This Remarkable: The 'put off / put on' metaphor (vv. 8-14) pictures moral transformation as changing garments — the old self is stripped away like soiled clothing and the new self is donned like a fresh outfit. This imagery may reflect the early Christian baptismal practice of removing garments before immersion and putting on new white robes afterward. The declaration that 'there is no Greek and Jew, circumcised and uncircumcised, barbarian, Scythian, slave, free; but Christ is all, and in all' (v. 11) is one of Paul's most radical equality statements. The household code (vv. 18-25) addresses relationships within the Greco-Roman family structure while subtly transforming them through the repeated phrase 'in the Lord.'

Translation Friction: The household code has generated significant debate. Paul appears to accept the existing social structures (including slavery) while introducing Christian modifications. Some scholars see this as accommodation to the surrounding culture; others see it as subversive transformation from within. We render the Greek without resolving this interpretive tension. The instruction to wives to 'submit' (v. 18) uses the middle voice hypotassethe ('arrange yourselves under'), which carries different nuances than a simple command to obey.

Connections: The 'set your minds above' command (v. 2) echoes Philippians 3:20 (heavenly citizenship). The put off/put on language parallels Ephesians 4:22-24 and Romans 13:12-14. The 'image of the creator' (v. 10) echoes Genesis 1:26-27 and Colossians 1:15. The household code parallels Ephesians 5:22-6:9 and 1 Peter 2:18-3:7. The 'whatever you do' principle (v. 17, 23) anticipates 1 Corinthians 10:31.

1If then you have been raised with Christ, seek the things that are above, where Christ is, seated at the right hand of God. 2Set your minds on things that are above, not on things that are on earth. 3For you have died, and your life is hidden with Christ in God. 4When Christ who is your life appears, then you also will appear with him in glory. 5Put to death therefore what is earthly in you: sexual immorality, impurity, passion, evil desire, and covetousness, which is idolatry. ⁶On account of these the wrath of God is coming. ⁷In these you too once walked, when you were living in them. ⁸But now you must put them all away: anger, wrath, malice, slander, and obscene talk from your mouth. ⁹Do not lie to one another, seeing that you have stripped off the old self with its practices ¹⁰Have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge following the image of him that created him: ¹¹Here there is not Greek and Jew, circumcised and uncircumcised, barbarian, Scythian, slave, free; but Christ is all, and in all. ¹²Put on then, as God's chosen ones, holy and beloved, compassionate hearts, kindness, humility, gentleness, and patience, ¹³Indeed, forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel opposed to any — even as Christ forgave you, so also do you. ¹⁴And above all these put on love, which binds everything together in perfect harmony. ¹⁵And let the peace of Christ rule in your hearts, to which indeed you were called in one body. And be thankful. ¹⁶Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly, teaching and admonishing one another in all wisdom, singing psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, with thankfulness in your hearts to God. ¹⁷And whatever you do, in word or deed, do everything in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God the Father through him. ¹⁸Wives, submit to your husbands, as is fitting in the Lord. ¹⁹Husbands, love your wives, and do not be harsh with them. ²⁰Children, obey your parents in everything, for this pleases the Lord. ²¹Fathers, do not provoke your children, lest they become discouraged. ²²Slaves, obey your earthly masters in everything, not by way of eye-service, as people-pleasers, but with sincerity of heart, fearing the Lord. ²³Whatever you do, work heartily, as for the Lord and not for people, ²⁴Knowing that of the Lord you will accept the reward of the inheritance — for you serve the Lord Christ. ²⁵For the wrongdoer will be paid back for the wrong he has done, and there is no partiality.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The conditional 'if' (ei) assumes the reality: 'since you have been raised with Christ.' The verb synēgerthēte ('you were co-raised') picks up from 2:12. Because believers have already been raised with Christ, their orientation must shift upward. 'The right hand of God' (en dexia tou theou) is the position of supreme authority and honor, quoting Psalm 110:1 — the most frequently cited Old Testament text in the New Testament.
1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 110:1. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
2. The verb phroneite ('set your minds on, think about, be oriented toward') is the same key verb from Philippians. This is not escapism or indifference to earthly life — the practical instructions that follow (vv. 5-25) are thoroughly engaged with daily existence. Rather, it means that the believer's fundamental orientation, values, and loyalties are determined by heavenly realities rather than by the world's value system.
3. The perfect tense kekryptai ('is hidden and remains hidden') describes an ongoing state of concealment. The believer's true life is not visible to the world — it is tucked away 'with Christ in God,' doubly secure. The phrase carries both protection (hidden from harm) and mystery (not yet fully manifested). What the world sees is not the whole story.
4. The hidden life of verse 3 will be revealed (phanerōthēsēte, 'you will be made visible, you will be manifested') when Christ himself is revealed at his return. The astounding identification — Christ is 'your life' (hē zōē hymōn) — echoes Philippians 1:21 ('to live is Christ'). The SBLGNT reads 'your life' (hymōn) rather than 'our life' (hēmōn) found in some manuscripts.
5. The imperative nekrōsate ('put to death, kill, make dead') is violent and decisive — not 'manage' or 'minimize' but kill. The list of five vices moves from external act to internal desire: sexual immorality (porneia), impurity (akatharsia), passion (pathos, 'uncontrolled desire'), evil desire (epithymia kakē), and covetousness (pleonexia). The final identification of covetousness as idolatry (eidōlōlatria) reveals that greed is fundamentally a worship disorder — it gives to things the devotion owed to God alone.
6. The SBLGNT omits 'upon the sons of disobedience' (epi tous huiōus tēs apeitheias) found in the Textus Receptus and in the Ephesians parallel (Ephesians 5:6). God's wrath (orgē) is not capricious anger but his settled opposition to everything that destroys human flourishing and dishonors his name.
7. The past tenses — 'walked' (periepatēsate), 'were living' (ezēte) — firmly locate these behaviors in the Colossians' pre-Christian past. They once lived in these sins; they no longer do. The 'once... but now' pattern is central to Paul's understanding of conversion.
8. The verb apothēsate ('put off, strip off, lay aside') is the clothing metaphor — strip off these behaviors like dirty garments. This second vice list focuses on sins of speech and relational hostility: anger (orgēn), wrath (thymon, 'explosive fury'), malice (kakian, 'ill will'), slander (blasphēmian, 'abusive speech'), and obscene talk (aischrologian, 'shameful language'). The progression moves from internal attitude to verbal expression.
9. The prohibition against lying targets community-destroying speech. The participle apekdysamenoi ('having stripped off') uses the same verb applied to Christ's stripping of the cosmic powers in 2:15. The 'old self' (ton palaion anthrōpon) is not merely bad habits but the entire pre-conversion identity — the person shaped by the world's values and the flesh's desires.

10. The 'new self' (ton neon) is not merely improved behavior but a new creation being progressively renewed (anakainoumenon, present passive — ongoing renewal) in deep knowledge (epignōsin). The phrase 'according to the image of its creator' (kat' eikona tou ktisantos) echoes Genesis 1:27 — the new creation restores the divine image marred by the fall. The same word eikōn ('image') was applied to Christ in 1:15; believers are being renewed into the image that Christ perfectly embodies.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 1:27 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. In the new humanity, the fundamental divisions of the ancient world are abolished: ethnic (Greek/Jew), religious (circumcised/uncircumcised), cultural (barbarian/Scythian — the Scythians were considered the most uncivilized of all peoples), and social (slave/free). This does not mean differences disappear but that they no longer determine identity or status. The concluding declaration — 'Christ is all and in all' (ta panta kai en pasin Christos) — is breathtaking: Christ occupies every position and permeates every person in the new community.
12. The imperative endysasthe ('put on, clothe yourselves') completes the clothing metaphor. The motivation comes from identity: they are 'God's chosen ones, holy and beloved' (eklektōi tou theou hagioi kai ēgapēmenoi) — these are Old Testament titles for Israel now applied to the church. Five virtues are listed: compassion (splanchna oiktirmou, literally 'intestines of mercy'), kindness (chrēstotēta), humility (tapeinophrosynē), gentleness (prautēta), and patience (makrothymian). Each virtue is relational, oriented toward others.
13. The verb anechomenoi ('bearing with, putting up with') acknowledges that community life involves friction. The verb charizomenoi ('forgiving, granting grace') shares the root of charis ('grace'). The standard for forgiveness is not human capacity but divine precedent: 'as the Lord has forgiven you' (kathōs kai ho kyrios echarisato hymin). The SBLGNT reads 'the Lord' (ho kyrios) where some manuscripts have 'Christ' (ho Christos).
14. Love (agapē) is the outer garment that holds all other virtues together. The phrase syndesmos tēs teleiōtētōs ('the bond of perfection/completeness') pictures love as the belt or clasp that unifies the entire outfit. Without love, the other virtues are disconnected pieces; with love, they form a coherent whole. This echoes 1 Corinthians 13's declaration that without love, all other gifts are nothing.
15. The verb brabeuētō ('let it rule, let it act as umpire, let it arbitrate') is an athletic term — the same root as katabrabeuētō ('disqualify') in 2:18. Christ's peace serves as the internal umpire that adjudicates disputes and determines the proper course of action. The SBLGNT reads 'the peace of Christ' (tou Christou) rather than 'the peace of God' (tou theou). The call to thankfulness (eucharistoi ginesthe) is a constant refrain in Colossians.
16. The 'word of Christ' (ho logos tou Christou) — the gospel message — is to 'take up rich residence' (enoikeitō plousiōs) in the community. The three types of song — psalmois ('psalms,' likely Old Testament psalms), hymnois ('hymns,' compositions praising God or Christ), and ōdais pneumatikais ('spiritual songs,' Spirit-inspired singing) — suggest a rich variety in early Christian worship. Teaching and worship are intertwined; singing is a form of mutual instruction.
17. This verse serves as the comprehensive principle governing all Christian conduct: every word and every action is to be performed 'in the name of the Lord Jesus' — under his authority, as his representative, for his honor. The phrase covers the totality of life, leaving no secular realm untouched by Christ's lordship. Thanksgiving (eucharistountes) flows through Christ back to the Father — Christ is the mediator of both prayer and praise.
18. The household code begins. The verb hypotassasthe ('submit, arrange yourselves under') is in the middle voice, indicating voluntary self-ordering rather than forced subjugation. The qualifier 'as is fitting in the Lord' (hōs anēken en kyriō) places the instruction within the sphere of Christ's lordship — the submission is 'in the Lord,' not absolute or unconditional. This is notably shorter than the parallel in Ephesians 5:22-24.
19. The command to husbands is love (agapate), not authority. The verb pikrainesthe ('be bitter, be harsh, be embittered') prohibits the kind of resentful domination that characterized many ancient marriages. In a culture where husbands had virtually unlimited legal authority over wives, the command not to be harsh was a significant constraint on patriarchal power.
20. The verb hypakouete ('obey, listen to and comply with') is stronger than the 'submit' (hypotassasthe) used for wives — children are commanded to obey, not merely to arrange themselves under authority. The qualifier 'in everything' (kata panta) is broad, though 'in the Lord' provides the governing framework. That children are addressed directly indicates their presence in the worship gathering where this letter was read.
21. The verb erethizete ('provoke, irritate, stir up') addresses the abuse of paternal authority. The Roman paterfamilias had absolute legal authority (patria potestas) over children, including the right to punish severely. Paul limits this power: parental authority that crushes a child's spirit defeats its own purpose. The verb athymōsin ('become discouraged, lose heart, become spiritless') describes a child broken by harsh treatment.
22. The phrase 'earthly masters' (kata sarka kyrioi, literally 'masters according to the flesh') subtly relativizes their authority — they are masters in the fleshly realm only, not in the ultimate sense. The compound ophthalmoudoulia ('eye-service,' working only when watched) appears only in Paul. The contrast is between external performance (working to impress humans) and internal sincerity (haplotēti kardias, 'singleness of heart') motivated by reverence for the true Lord.
23. The phrase ek psychēs ('from the soul, heartily, with your whole being') demands wholehearted effort. The transformation is in perspective: the same task performed for a human master is reconceived as service to the Lord Christ. This does not legitimize the institution of slavery but transforms the slave's inner experience and ultimate allegiance.
24. The promise of an 'inheritance' (klēronomias) to slaves is revolutionary — in Roman law, slaves could not inherit property. Paul declares that these disinherited people will receive the ultimate inheritance from Christ himself. The phrase 'You are serving the Lord Christ' (tō kyriō Christō douleuete) can be read as indicative ('you are serving') or imperative ('serve!'). Either way, the slave's true master is Christ, not the human owner.

25. The warning against wrongdoing (adikōn, 'acting unjustly') applies to both slaves and masters — the lack of partiality (prosōpolēmpsia, literally 'face-receiving,' showing favoritism) means God judges everyone by the same standard regardless of social status. This is a veiled warning to masters that their position will not protect them from divine judgment, preparing for the explicit command to masters in 4:1.

Summary: Paul concludes the household code with a command to masters, urges the Colossians to devote themselves to prayer and wise conduct toward outsiders, and sends a series of personal greetings that reveal the network of co-workers surrounding him. He names Tychicus and Onesimus as letter-bearers, sends greetings from Aristarchus, Mark, Justus, Epaphras, Luke, and Demas, gives instructions about sharing this letter with Laodicea (and vice versa), charges Archippus to complete his ministry, and closes with a handwritten greeting from prison.

What Makes This Remarkable: The closing greetings of Colossians provide a remarkable snapshot of the early Christian network. The list includes Jews (Aristarchus, Mark, Justus — described as the only Jewish co-workers), Gentiles (Epaphras, Luke, Demas), a former slave (Onesimus, identified as 'one of you'), and a physician (Luke). The mention of Mark's potential visit is significant given his earlier falling out with Paul (Acts 15:37-39) — reconciliation has occurred. The instruction to exchange letters with Laodicea (v. 16) reveals that Paul's letters circulated among churches from the beginning, a practice that would eventually lead to their collection as Scripture.

Translation Friction: The 'letter from Laodicea' (v. 16) is lost — or may be the letter we know as Ephesians, which some scholars regard as a circular letter. The identity of Nympha (v. 15) and the gender of the name is debated; the SBLGNT reading supports a feminine name with 'her house' (autēs). The charge to Archippus (v. 17) is enigmatic — we do not know what ministry he received or why he needed encouragement to complete it.

Connections: Onesimus connects this letter to Philemon, where he is the central figure. Tychicus appears also in Ephesians 6:21 as letter-bearer. The house-church of Nympha (v. 15) reflects the standard meeting pattern of early Christianity before dedicated buildings existed. Paul's handwritten closing (v. 18) parallels Galatians 6:11, 2 Thessalonians 3:17, and 1 Corinthians 16:21.

¹Masters, treat your slaves justly and fairly, knowing that you also have a Master in heaven. ²Continue steadfastly in prayer, being watchful in it with thanksgiving. ³At the same time, pray also for us, that God may open to us a door for the word, to declare the mystery of Christ, on account of which I am in prison, ⁴That I may make it manifest, as I anything to speak. ⁵Walk in wisdom toward outsiders, making the best use of the time. ⁶Let your speech always be gracious, seasoned with salt, so that you may know how you ought to answer each person. ⁷Tychicus will tell you all about my activities. He is a beloved brother and faithful minister and fellow servant in the Lord. ⁸I have sent him to you for this very purpose, that you may know how we are and that he may encourage your hearts, ⁹Indeed, with Onesimus, a faithful and dear brother, who is one of you. They will make known to you all things which are done here. ¹⁰Aristarchus my fellow prisoner greets you, and Mark the cousin of Barnabas (concerning whom you have received instructions — if he comes to you, welcome him), ¹¹Indeed, Jesus, which is called Justus, who are of the circumcision. These only are my fellowworkers to God's reign, which have been a comfort to me. ¹²Epaphras, who is one of you, a servant of Christ Jesus, greets you, always struggling on your behalf in his prayers, that you may stand mature and fully assured in all the will of God. ¹³For I bear him witness that he has worked hard for you and for those in Laodicea and in Hierapolis. ¹⁴Luke the beloved physician greets you, as does Demas. ¹⁵Give my greetings to the brothers and sisters at Laodicea, and to Nympha and the church in her house. ¹⁶And when this letter has been read among you, have it also read in the church of the Laodiceans; and see that you also read the letter from Laodicea. ¹⁷And say to Archippus, "See that you fulfill the ministry that you have received in the Lord." ¹⁸I, Paul, write this greeting with my own hand. Remember my chains. Grace be with you.

1. The command to masters uses two significant words: dikaion ('what is just, what is right') and isotēta ('equality, fairness'). The word isotēta is striking — it pushes toward equitable treatment even within an institution built on inequality. The theological leverage is powerful: masters have a Master (kyrion en ouranō), and that heavenly Master will hold them accountable for how they treat those under their authority.
2. The verb proskartereite ('continue steadfastly, persist, devote yourselves') implies sustained effort against the tendency to neglect prayer. The participle grēgorountes ('being watchful, being alert') adds urgency — prayer is not passive but vigilant, attentive to both spiritual realities and the present moment. Thanksgiving (eucharistia) appears yet again as the characteristic posture of the praying community.
3. Paul asks for prayer not for release from prison but for opportunity to proclaim the gospel — the 'open door' (thyran tou logou) metaphor pictures gospel advance, not personal comfort. The 'mystery of Christ' (to mystērion tou Christou) echoes 1:26-27. Paul's imprisonment is directly connected to his proclamation: he is in chains 'on account of' (di' ho) the mystery he preaches.
4. The verb phanerōsō ('I may make clear, I may manifest, I may reveal') uses the same root as 'revealed' in 1:26. Paul's prayer request is not for eloquence but for clarity — that the mystery of Christ would be made transparent and accessible. The phrase 'as I ought to speak' (hōs dei me lalēsai) indicates a sense of divine obligation.
5. The phrase 'those outside' (tous exō) is the standard early Christian term for non-believers (cf. 1 Corinthians 5:12; 1 Thessalonians 4:12). The verb exagorazomenoi ('buying up, redeeming, making the most of') pictures time or opportunity as a commodity in a marketplace — believers must seize every moment for wise witness. The same phrase appears in Ephesians 5:16.
6. Gracious speech (en chariti, 'with grace') and salt-seasoned speech are complementary: grace makes words kind, salt makes them interesting, preserving, and penetrating. Salt in the ancient world prevented decay and enhanced flavor. The phrase 'each person' (heni hekastō) emphasizes that wise speech is not formulaic but adapted to the individual — each person deserves a thoughtful, tailored response.
7. Tychicus is the letter-bearer, entrusted with both delivering the written letter and providing oral updates about Paul's situation. He is described with three titles: beloved brother (agapētos adelphos), faithful minister (pistos diakonos), and fellow servant (syndoulos) in the Lord. Tychicus also carried the letter to the Ephesians (Ephesians 6:21-22) and appears in Acts 20:4, 2 Timothy 4:12, and Titus 3:12.
8. The dual purpose of Tychicus's visit: to inform ('that you may know how we are') and to encourage ('that he may encourage your hearts'). The SBLGNT reads 'that you may know how we are' (hina gnōte ta peri hēmōn) rather than 'that he may know how you are' found in some manuscripts — the information flows from Paul to the Colossians, not the reverse.
9. This Onesimus is almost certainly the runaway slave of the letter to Philemon. Paul introduces him to the wider Colossian church as a 'faithful and beloved brother' (tō pistō kai agapētō adelphō) — the same elevated language used for Tychicus. The phrase 'who is one of you' (hos estin ex hymōn) identifies Onesimus as a Colossian, connecting this letter to the personal appeal of Philemon.
10. Aristarchus is called synaichmalōtos ('fellow prisoner of war, co-captive'), suggesting he shares Paul's imprisonment. Mark (Markos) is identified as Barnabas's cousin (anepsios, not 'nephew' as KJV). This is likely John Mark, who had deserted Paul and Barnabas on the first missionary journey (Acts 13:13, 15:37-39). Paul's instruction to 'welcome him' indicates the breach has been healed — a quiet testimony to reconciliation.
11. Jesus (Iesous, the Greek form of Joshua) called Justus bears the same name as the Lord — a common Jewish name in the first century. The note that only these three (Aristarchus, Mark, Justus) are Jewish co-workers (ek peritomēs, 'of the circumcision') reveals Paul's isolation from the broader Jewish-Christian community. The word parēgoria ('comfort, consolation') appears only here in the New Testament.
12. Epaphras, the probable founder of the Colossian church (1:7), is described as 'always struggling' (pantote agōnizomenos) in prayer — the athletic agōn metaphor applied to intercessory prayer. His prayer goal mirrors Paul's prayer in 1:9-10: maturity (teleioi) and full conviction (peplērophōrēmenoi, 'fully assured, completely convinced') in God's will. Prayer is depicted as strenuous spiritual labor, not passive meditation.
13. Paul personally vouches for Epaphras's labor. The word ponon ('toil, hard work, pain') emphasizes the costliness of his efforts. The three cities — Colossae, Laodicea, and Hierapolis — are all in the Lycus Valley, within about 12 miles of each other. Epaphras appears to have been the evangelist for the entire region.
14. Luke (Loukas) is identified as a physician (iatros) — the only mention of his profession in the New Testament. He is traditionally identified as the author of Luke-Acts. That he is not listed among the Jewish co-workers (v. 11) confirms he was a Gentile. Demas is mentioned without any commendation — a silence that becomes significant in light of 2 Timothy 4:10, where Paul writes that 'Demas, in love with this present world, has deserted me.'
15. The SBLGNT reads autēs ('her'), identifying Nympha (Nymphan) as a woman who hosts a house church. Other manuscripts read autou ('his'), making the name masculine (Nymphas). The house church was the standard meeting place for early Christian communities — purpose-built church buildings did not appear until the third century. Nympha's role as host of a church suggests significant social standing and leadership.
16. This verse reveals the circulation of Paul's letters among churches — a practice that contributed to their eventual collection and canonization. The 'letter from Laodicea' (tēn ek Laodikeia) is unknown. It may be a lost letter, or it may be the letter we know as Ephesians (which some scholars view as a circular letter). The verb anagnōsthē ('be read aloud') indicates that Paul's letters were read publicly in the worship assembly.
17. Archippus is mentioned also in Philemon 2 as a 'fellow soldier.' His ministry (diakonian) was received 'in the Lord' — a divine commission, not a human appointment. The fact that Paul delivers this charge through the congregation rather than privately suggests it is a matter of communal accountability. The nature of his ministry is unspecified.

- 18. Paul takes the pen from his amanuensis (secretary) to write the final greeting in his own handwriting — a practice that authenticated the letter (cf. 2 Thessalonians 3:17). The brief imperative 'Remember my chains' (mnēmoneuete mou tōn desmōn) is both a prayer request and a reminder of the cost of the gospel he has proclaimed throughout this letter. The closing — 'Grace be with you' (hē charis meth' hymōn) — is characteristically brief. The SBLGNT omits the final 'Amen' found in the Textus Receptus.

1 Thessalonians

Summary: Paul, Silvanus, and Timothy greet the church in Thessalonica, giving thanks for their faith, love, and hope. Paul recalls how the gospel came to them not merely in words but in power and the Holy Spirit, and how the Thessalonians became imitators of the apostles and of the Lord, receiving the word in the midst of affliction with joy from the Holy Spirit. Their faith became an example to believers throughout Macedonia and Achaia.

What Makes This Remarkable: This is widely considered the earliest surviving letter of Paul, and possibly the earliest document in the New Testament (c. AD 49-51). The triad of faith, love, and hope (v. 3) appears here in what may be its earliest formulation, predating 1 Corinthians 13:13. The description of conversion in verses 9-10 provides one of the clearest summaries of early Christian proclamation: turning from idols, serving the living God, and awaiting the risen Son from heaven.

Translation Friction: The phrase 'election' (eklogē, v. 4) is rendered without imposing later Calvinist-Arminian frameworks. Paul's language about the gospel coming 'in power and in the Holy Spirit' (v. 5) describes experiential reality, not abstract doctrine. The reference to 'wrath that is coming' (v. 10) is eschatological, pointing to final judgment rather than a specific historical event.

Connections: The faith-love-hope triad reappears in 1 Corinthians 13:13 and Colossians 1:4-5. The description of turning from idols echoes Old Testament prophetic calls (Ezekiel 14:6, Isaiah 44:9-20). The expectation of Jesus's return from heaven connects to the fuller parousia teaching in chapters 4-5. Paul's self-description of his manner among them is expanded in chapter 2.
