¹Paul, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, to the church of the Thessalonians which is in God the Father and in the Lord Jesus Christ — Grace be to you, and peace, from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ. ²We give thanks to God always for all of you, constantly mentioning you in our prayers, ³We continually remember before our God and Father your faithful work, your loving effort, and your patient hope in our Lord Jesus Christ. ⁴Knowing, brothers and sisters beloved, your election of God,. ⁵For our gospel arrived not to you in message only, but also in authority, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance. As you know what manner of men we were in the midst of you since your sake. ⁶And you became imitators of us and of the Lord, for you received the word in great affliction with joy from the Holy Spirit, ⁷So that you were ensamples to all that trust in Macedonia and Achaia. ⁸For the word of the Lord has sounded out from you not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but in every place your faith toward God has gone out, so that we have no need to say anything. ⁹For they themselves report about us what kind of reception we had among you, and how you turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God, ¹

^oTo wait for his Descendant from the heavens above, whom he raised from the no longer alive, not even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The SBLGNT has the shorter greeting 'Grace to you and peace' without the additional 'from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ' found in some manuscripts and reflected in the KJV. We follow the critical text. The Greek charis ('grace') and eirēnē ('peace') combine a Greek greeting with the Hebrew shalom, bridging the two cultural worlds of Paul's audience.
1. Silvanus is the Latin form of Silas, Paul's companion from Acts 15-18. The letter is co-authored, though Paul is the primary voice.
2. The adverb adialeiptōs ('constantly, without ceasing') modifies the thanksgiving and prayer, indicating habitual practice rather than unbroken activity. Paul's thanksgivings are not mere formality — they typically preview the letter's main themes.
3. The three genitives — 'of faith,' 'of love,' 'of hope' — are best understood as subjective genitives: faith produces the work, love motivates the labor, hope sustains the endurance. This is possibly the earliest written occurrence of the faith-love-hope triad that Paul develops more fully in 1 Corinthians 13:13.
3. The Greek kopos ('labor') implies toil to the point of exhaustion, stronger than simple 'work' (ergon). Paul distinguishes the two: faith produces activity (ergon), but love drives costly effort (kopos).
4. The Greek adelphoi ('brothers') is used inclusively throughout Paul's letters to address the entire congregation, including women. We render it 'brothers and sisters' to reflect the inclusive scope. The noun eklogē ('election, choosing') denotes God's initiative in calling the Thessalonians — Paul grounds their identity in divine action, not human achievement.
5. The Greek plērophoria ('full conviction, complete certainty') could refer to the apostles' conviction in preaching or the Thessalonians' conviction in receiving. The ambiguity may be intentional — both the proclaimers and the hearers experienced deep assurance. The phrase 'our gospel' does not mean Paul invented it but that he was entrusted with proclaiming it.
6. The Greek mimētai ('imitators') is stronger than the KJV's 'followers' — it implies deliberate imitation of a pattern of life. The paradox of receiving the word 'in great affliction with joy' defines the distinctive Christian experience: suffering and joy coexist through the Holy Spirit's work. The affliction (thlipsis) likely refers to persecution from both Jewish and Gentile opponents in Thessalonica (cf. Acts 17:5-9).
7. The singular typon ('pattern, model') is used collectively — the entire church is one pattern. Macedonia and Achaia together comprise most of Roman Greece, indicating the rapid and wide spread of the Thessalonians' reputation.
8. The verb exēchētai ('has sounded out, has rung out') is onomatopoeic, suggesting a trumpet blast or the reverberation of thunder. It occurs only here in the New Testament. Paul portrays the Thessalonians' faith as an audible proclamation that reverberates outward from their city.
9. The phrase 'turned to God from idols' confirms the congregation was predominantly Gentile, since Jews would not be described as turning from idols. The two-part description — turning from (idols) and turning to (God) — mirrors the Old Testament prophetic call to repentance. 'Living and true God' (theō zōnti kai alēthinō) contrasts with the dead and false nature of idols, echoing Jeremiah 10:10.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Jeremiah 10:10. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The present participle rhyomenon ('the one rescuing') portrays deliverance as ongoing, not merely a past event. 'The coming wrath' (tēs orgēs tēs erchomenēs) refers to eschatological judgment. This verse contains a compact early Christian creed: resurrection, heavenly exaltation, expected return, and deliverance from judgment. The three infinitives — serve (v. 9), wait (v. 10), and the implied rescue — summarize the Christian life as present service, future hope, and divine deliverance.

Summary: Paul defends the integrity of his ministry in Thessalonica, recalling how he and his companions came with boldness despite prior suffering in Philippi. He emphasizes their motives were pure — not from error, impurity, or deceit — and describes their gentle conduct, comparing themselves to a nursing mother caring for her children and a father encouraging his own. Paul then thanks God that the Thessalonians received his message as the word of God, not merely human speech. The chapter closes with Paul expressing his intense desire to revisit them, calling them his glory and joy.

What Makes This Remarkable: Paul's extended self-defense in verses 1-12 likely responds to accusations from opponents in Thessalonica. The double parental metaphor — mother (v. 7) and father (v. 11) — is unusual in ancient rhetoric and reveals Paul's pastoral warmth. Verses 14-16 contain some of Paul's sharpest language about opposition, which has generated significant scholarly debate about its scope and intent.

Translation Friction: Verses 14-16 have been historically misused for anti-Jewish purposes. Paul's criticism is directed at specific opponents who hindered the gospel mission, not at the Jewish people as a whole — Paul himself remained proudly Jewish (cf. Romans 9:1-5, 11:1). We render the Greek as written while noting this critical context. The textual variant in verse 7 (ēpioi 'gentle' vs. nēpioi 'infants') affects the metaphor significantly; we follow the SBLGNT reading.

Connections: The suffering in Philippi is narrated in Acts 16:19-40. The description of opposition parallels Jesus's lament over Jerusalem (Matthew 23:37). Paul's longing to return anticipates the sending of Timothy in chapter 3. The 'crown of boasting' language (v. 19) connects to athletic and civic honor imagery Paul uses elsewhere (Philippians 4:1, 2 Timothy 4:8).

¹For you yourselves know, brothers and sisters, that our coming to you was not without result. ²But though we had already suffered and been mistreated in Philippi, as you know, we had the boldness in our God to speak the gospel of God to you in the midst of great opposition. ³For our appeal does not come from error or from impurity or with deceit, ⁴However, as we were allowed of God to be placed in trust with the good news, not even so we talk. Not as pleasing people, but God, which trieth our hearts. ⁵For we never came with flattering speech, as you know, nor with a pretext for greed — God is our witness. ⁶Nor did we seek glory from people, whether from you or from others, ⁷But we were gentle in the midst of you, even as a nurse cherisheth her children:. ⁸So, being deeply fond of you, we were delighted to share with you not only the gospel of God but also our own selves, because you had become dear to us. ⁹For you remember, brothers and sisters, our labor and toil: working night and day so as not to burden any of you, we proclaimed the gospel of God to you. ¹⁰You are witnesses, and so is God, of how devoutly and justly and blamelessly we conducted ourselves toward you who believe, ¹¹As you recognize how we exhorted and comforted and charged every one of you, as a Parent does his offspring,. ¹²Indeed, that you would walk worthy of God, who has called you to his reign and glory. ¹³And for this reason we also thank God continually, because when you received the word of God that you heard from us, you accepted it not as a human message but as what it truly is — the word of God, which is also at work in you who believe. ¹⁴For you, brothers and sisters, became imitators of the churches of God in Judea that are in Christ Jesus, because you suffered the same things from your own countrymen as they did from the Judeans — ¹⁵Who both killed the Lord Jesus, and their own God's spokespersons, and possess persecuted us. Then they please not God, and are contrary to all people:. ¹⁶They try to keep us from speaking to the Gentiles so that they may be saved. In this way they keep piling up their sins to the limit. God's wrath has come upon them at last. ¹⁷But as for us, brothers and sisters, after being torn away from you for a short time — in person, not in heart — we made every effort with great longing to see you face to face. ¹⁸For we wanted to come to you — I, Paul, again and again — but Satan hindered us. ¹⁹For what is our hope or joy or crown of boasting? Is it not you, before our Lord Jesus at his coming? ²⁰For you are what we take pride in and joy.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The adjective kenē ('empty, vain, without result') can mean either 'empty of content' (the visit was not pointless) or 'empty of result' (the visit was not fruitless). The context favors the latter — Paul appeals to the visible fruit of his ministry among them.
2. The verb hybristhentes ('mistreated, shamefully treated') refers to the illegal beating and imprisonment described in Acts 16:22-24. The noun agōni ('struggle, opposition') carries athletic connotations — a contest or fight. Paul frames gospel proclamation as a struggle that requires divine boldness (parrēsia).
3. Paul denies three possible charges: planē ('error, delusion') — that his message is false; akatharsia ('impurity') — that his motives are impure, possibly with sexual overtones given the reputation of some itinerant teachers; and dolos ('deceit, trickery') — that he uses manipulative methods. This three-part denial suggests actual accusations were circulating.

4. The verb dokimazō ('to test, examine, approve') appears twice: God has tested and approved Paul (dedokimasmetha), and God continues to test (dokimazonti) their hearts. The same God who qualified them also holds them accountable. 'Hearts' (kardias) in biblical usage refers to the center of thought, will, and intention — not merely emotion.
5. The Greek kolakeia ('flattery') occurs only here in the New Testament. It was a standard accusation against sophists and traveling philosophers who told audiences what they wanted to hear for profit. Prophasis ('pretext, excuse') implies a hidden motive concealed behind a respectable front. Paul invokes God as witness precisely because hidden motives cannot be seen by humans.
6. The Greek doxa here means 'glory' in the sense of honor, recognition, or reputation from human sources. Paul's point is that apostolic ministry is not motivated by the desire for public acclaim.
7. The SBLGNT reads ēpioi ('gentle') rather than the variant nēpioi ('infants'), which would create the odd image of Paul being an infant in their midst. The metaphor of the trophos ('nursing mother') is remarkably intimate — Paul compares himself not to a hired nurse but to a mother with her own (heautēs) children. The phrase en barei einai ('to be burdensome' or 'to carry weight') likely refers to financial demands or the weight of apostolic authority.
8. The verb homeiromenoi ('being deeply fond of, yearning for') is rare and occurs only here in the New Testament. Its etymology is debated, but it expresses strong emotional attachment. The phrase tas heautōn psychas ('our own souls/selves') means Paul gave not just a message but his entire person — the gospel was embodied, not merely proclaimed.
9. The paired nouns kopos kai mochthos ('labor and toil') emphasize exhausting physical work — Paul supported himself through manual labor (tent-making, Acts 18:3) while simultaneously preaching. 'Night and day' is a Semitic idiom emphasizing totality of effort. Paul's refusal to accept financial support from the Thessalonians was a deliberate pastoral strategy, not mere preference.
10. Paul invokes both human witnesses (the Thessalonians) and the divine witness (God) — a legal formula establishing credibility. The three adverbs — hosiōs ('devoutly, in a holy manner'), dikaiōs ('justly, uprightly'), and amemptōs ('blamelessly') — cover duty toward God, duty toward others, and overall integrity.
11. Paul shifts from the mother metaphor (v. 7) to a father metaphor. The phrase 'each one of you' (hena hekaston hymōn) in verse 12 emphasizes individual pastoral attention — Paul did not merely address crowds but engaged persons one by one.
12. Three participles describe Paul's fatherly role: parakalountes ('urging, exhorting'), paramythoumenoi ('encouraging, consoling'), and martyromenoi ('charging, insisting'). The progression moves from encouragement to solemn appeal. The present participle kalountos ('who calls') indicates God's call is ongoing, not merely a past event. 'Kingdom and glory' is Paul's shorthand for the full eschatological reality.
13. Paul distinguishes between paralambanō ('received' — the act of receiving a tradition) and dechomai ('accepted' — the act of welcoming and embracing it). The Thessalonians both received the message as transmitted and accepted it as divine in origin. The verb energeitai ('is at work, is active') is middle voice, indicating the word of God is self-acting — it accomplishes its own purpose in believers.
14. The Greek symphyletōn ('fellow countrymen, compatriots') indicates the Thessalonians were persecuted by their own Gentile neighbors, paralleling the Jewish believers' experience in Judea. We render Ioudaiōn as 'Judeans' here because the context is geographical and sociopolitical — it refers to the local population in Judea who opposed the early church, not to the Jewish people globally.
15. Paul's language here echoes the Old Testament tradition of Israel's persecution of prophets (cf. Nehemiah 9:26, Jeremiah 26:20-23, 2 Chronicles 36:15-16). Jesus himself invoked this tradition (Matthew 23:31-37, Luke 13:34). Paul — himself Jewish — speaks as a prophetic voice within the tradition of intra-Jewish critique, not as an outsider condemning another religion. The verb ekdiōxantōn ('drove out, persecuted') may refer to the specific events in Thessalonica (Acts 17:5-10) and Berea (Acts 17:13).
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Nehemiah 9:26 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Jeremiah 26:20-23 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes 2 Chronicles 36:15-16 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. The phrase 'fill up the measure of their sins' (anaplērōsai autōn tas hamartias) echoes Genesis 15:16 where the Amorites' sins must reach their full measure before judgment comes. The final clause ephthasen de ep' autous hē orgē eis telos is debated: 'at last' (eis telos) could mean 'to the end, completely, finally.' The aorist ephthasen ('has overtaken') could be prophetic aorist (viewing a future event as already accomplished) or could refer to a recent event. Paul sees the obstruction of the Gentile mission as the culminating sin that triggers divine response.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 15:16. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. The verb aporphanisthentes ('having been orphaned from') is deeply emotional — Paul uses the language of an orphan separated from family. This is the only occurrence of this word in the New Testament. Combined with the mother (v. 7) and father (v. 11) metaphors, it creates a sustained family-relationship framework for understanding the apostolic bond.

- 18. Paul shifts to the singular 'I, Paul' (egō men Paulos) to emphasize his personal desire. The phrase hapax kai dis ('once and twice') means 'repeatedly.' The verb enekopsen ('cut in, hindered, blocked') is a military term for breaking up a road to prevent an army's advance. Paul does not specify how Satan hindered him — it could be opposition, illness, or circumstances.
- 19. The noun stephanos ('crown, wreath') refers to the victory wreath given to athletic victors, not the royal diadēma. Paul's 'crown of boasting' (kauchēseōs) is the Thessalonian church itself — his evidence of faithful labor when he stands before Christ. The word parousia ('coming, arrival, presence') here takes on its technical eschatological meaning — the future return of Christ. This is one of the earliest uses of parousia as a theological term in Christian literature.
- 20. This brief declaration serves as an emphatic conclusion to the chapter's argument. The word doxa ('glory') when applied to the Thessalonians means the visible evidence of God's work through Paul's ministry — they are the tangible proof that his labor was not in vain (cf. v. 1).

Summary: Unable to return to Thessalonica himself, Paul sent Timothy to strengthen and encourage the believers in their faith amid persecution. Timothy has now returned with the good news that the Thessalonians' faith and love remain strong and that they remember Paul fondly. Paul expresses overwhelming relief and joy, describing Timothy's report as life-giving. The chapter closes with a prayer that God would direct Paul's path back to them and that the Lord would cause their love to increase and overflow toward one another and toward all people.

What Makes This Remarkable: This chapter reveals the anxiety Paul felt during the separation — the language is remarkably candid about emotional vulnerability. The phrase 'we really live now' (v. 8) shows that Paul's emotional and spiritual vitality was bound up with the health of his churches. The closing prayer (vv. 11-13) transitions from personal concerns to eschatological hope, ending with another reference to the parousia.

Translation Friction: The identity of 'the tempter' (v. 5) parallels 'Satan' in 2:18. Paul's statement that afflictions are 'destined' (v. 3) raises theological questions about suffering and divine will that we render without resolving. The phrase 'night and day' (v. 10) in Paul's prayer vocabulary indicates intensity, not literal continuous prayer.

Connections: Timothy's mission is briefly noted in Acts 18:5. The concern about being 'shaken' by afflictions (v. 3) connects to Jesus's parable of foundations (Matthew 7:24-27). The prayer for increasing love (v. 12) anticipates the ethical instructions of chapters 4-5. The parousia reference (v. 13) prepares for the extended teaching in 4:13-5:11.

¹Therefore, when we could bear it no longer, we decided to be left behind in Athens alone, ²We sent Timothy, our brother and God's coworker in the gospel of Christ, to strengthen and encourage you in your faith, ³so that none of you would be shaken by these hardships. You know very well that we are destined for them. ⁴For even when we were with you, we kept telling you in advance that we were going to suffer affliction — and so it happened, as you know. ⁵For this reason, when I could bear it no longer, I sent to learn about your faith, fearing that the tempter had somehow tempted you and that our labor would be in vain. ⁶But Timothy has just now come to us from you and has brought us the good news of your faith and love, and that you always remember us kindly, longing to see us just as we long to see you. ⁷For this reason, brothers and sisters, in all our distress and affliction we have been encouraged about you through your faith. ⁸For we really live now, since you are standing firm in the Lord. ⁹For what thanksgiving can we return to God for you, in exchange for all the joy that we feel on your account before our God, ¹⁰After dark and time praying exceedingly that we may witness your face, and may perfect that which is lacking in your faith? ¹¹Now may our God and Father himself, and our Lord Jesus, direct our way to you. ¹²And may the Lord cause you to increase and overflow in love for one another and for all people, just as we do for you, ¹³May he strengthen your hearts so that you will be blameless and holy before our God and Father when our Lord Jesus returns with all his holy ones.

- 1. The verb stegontes ('bearing, enduring, containing') conveys the image of a container that can no longer hold its contents — Paul's anxiety about the Thessalonians overflowed. 'Left behind alone' (kataleiphthēnai monoī) emphasizes the cost of sending Timothy — Paul chose isolation in Athens rather than continued uncertainty about the church.

2. The SBLGNT reads synergon tou theou ('God's coworker'), which is the more difficult reading — some manuscripts soften it to diakonon ('servant'). The bold claim that Timothy is God's coworker follows Paul's theology that human ministry participates in divine action. The two infinitives stērixai ('to strengthen, establish') and parakalesai ('to encourage, comfort') define Timothy's mission.
3. The verb sainesthai is rare and its meaning debated — it may mean 'to be shaken, disturbed' or possibly 'to be deceived, beguiled.' The context of afflictions (thlipseis) favors 'shaken.' The verb keimetha ('we are appointed, destined, set') indicates that suffering is not accidental but part of the expected Christian experience — Paul had warned them of this in advance (v. 4).
4. The imperfect proelegomen ('we kept telling') indicates repeated warning, not a single prediction. Paul had prepared the Thessalonians for persecution as a regular part of discipleship instruction, not an afterthought.
5. Paul shifts to the first person singular (kagō, 'I also') — the decision to send Timothy was personally his. The title ho peirazōn ('the tempter') identifies Satan by function rather than name (cf. 2:18). The concern that labor might be 'in vain' (eis kenon, 'into emptiness') echoes the same word (kenē) from 2:1 — Paul's deepest fear was that the Thessalonians' faith had not survived persecution.
6. Remarkably, Paul uses the verb euangelisamenou ('having brought good news') — the same word used for preaching the gospel — to describe Timothy's report about the Thessalonians. For Paul, news of their persevering faith is itself 'gospel.' The report covers three things: their faith (vertical relationship), their love (horizontal relationships), and their affection for Paul (the apostolic bond).
7. The noun anankē ('distress, necessity, hardship') combined with thlipsis ('affliction') reveals that Paul himself was under significant pressure — not just concerned for them but suffering in his own circumstances. Their faith became a source of encouragement (paraklēsis) for Paul in his own trials.
8. The emphatic nyn zōmen ('now we live') is one of Paul's most emotionally transparent statements — the news of their faithfulness was literally life-giving to him. The verb stēkete ('you stand firm') is present tense, describing their current state as reported by Timothy.
9. The verb antapodounai ('to give back in return, to repay') frames thanksgiving as a reciprocal act — God gave the joy; Paul wants to return adequate thanks. The rhetorical question implies that no thanksgiving is sufficient. The phrase emprosthen tou theou ('before our God') places Paul's joy in the context of worship.
10. The adverb hyperēkperissou ('beyond all measure, most earnestly') is a Pauline superlative found only in his letters — he piles up prefixes (hyper + ek + perissou) to intensify the expression. The verb katartisai ('to mend, complete, supply') was used for mending fishing nets (Mark 1:19) — Paul sees faith not as defective but as needing completion. The 'lacking' (hysterēmata) refers to areas where further instruction is needed, which chapters 4-5 will address.
11. The optative kateuthynai ('may he direct') introduces a wish-prayer. The singular verb with a compound subject ('God and Father... and our Lord Jesus') is grammatically notable — Paul treats the two as a unified source of action. The prayer for a directed path (hodon, 'road, way') reflects Paul's conviction that his travel plans are subject to divine sovereignty (cf. 2:18 where Satan blocked the way).
12. Two verbs intensify the prayer: pleonasai ('to increase, multiply') and perisseusai ('to overflow, abound'). The love Paul prays for has two directions: eis allēlous ('toward one another' — within the community) and eis pantas ('toward all' — beyond the community). Christian love is not exclusive but expansive.
13. The goal of increasing love (v. 12) is established holiness (v. 13) — Paul connects ethics and eschatology. 'Holy ones' (hagiōn) could refer to angels (as in Zechariah 14:5, which Paul may be echoing), to deceased believers, or to both. The ambiguity is preserved in 'holy ones.' Each major section of 1 Thessalonians ends with a reference to the parousia (2:19, 3:13, 4:15-17, 5:23), making Christ's return the structural center of the letter.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Zechariah 14:5 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.

Summary: Paul turns from personal narrative to instruction, addressing the 'what is lacking' in their faith (3:10). He begins with ethical exhortation: God's will is their sanctification, particularly in sexual purity and brotherly love. He then addresses the question that most concerned the Thessalonians: the fate of believers who have died before Christ's return. Paul provides the earliest written Christian teaching on the parousia — the Lord will descend from heaven with a shout, the dead in Christ will rise first, and then the living will be caught up together with them to meet the Lord in the air.

*What Makes This Remarkable: Verses 13-18 constitute the earliest surviving Christian text about the resurrection of the dead at Christ's return. This passage predates 1 Corinthians 15 and was written to address a specific pastoral crisis — grief over fellow believers who had died. The imagery of the 'meeting' (apantēsis, v. 17) is a technical term from Hellenistic civic life: when a dignitary approached a* city, citizens would go out to meet him and escort him back in. Paul's eschatology is pastoral, not speculative — it ends with 'encourage one another with these words.'

Translation Friction: The phrase 'caught up' (harpagēsometha, v. 17) is the basis for the theological concept of 'the rapture,' though Paul himself does not use that term and the passage's imagery is debated. We render the Greek without imposing any particular eschatological framework. The phrase 'possess his own vessel' (v. 4) is ambiguous — it may refer to one's body or to one's wife. We note the ambiguity.

Connections: The parousia teaching connects to Jesus's Olivet Discourse (Matthew 24, Mark 13). The 'word of the Lord' (v. 15) may refer to an otherwise unrecorded saying of Jesus or to prophetic revelation. The trumpet imagery echoes Isaiah 27:13 and Exodus 19:16. The 'meeting the Lord in the air' language uses the civic apantēsis pattern found in Acts 28:15.

¹Finally then, brothers and sisters, we ask and urge you in the Lord Jesus, that as you received from us how you ought to walk and please God — as you are in fact doing — that you do so more and more. ²For you know what instructions we gave you through the Lord Jesus. ³For this is the will of God: your sanctification — that you abstain from sexual immorality, ⁴Each of you should learn to control your own body in a way that is holy and honorable, ⁵Not in the lust of sinful desire, even as the Gentiles which know not God:. ⁶That no person depart beyond and defraud his brother in any matter — on account of the fact that that the Lord is the avenger of all such, as we as well have forewarned you and testified. ⁷For God has not called us to impurity but to holiness. ⁸Therefore, whoever rejects this is not rejecting a human authority but God, who gives his Holy Spirit to you. ⁹Now concerning brotherly love, you have no need for anyone to write to you, for you yourselves are taught by God to love one another. ¹⁰For indeed you are practicing it toward all the brothers and sisters throughout Macedonia. But we urge you, brothers and sisters, to do so more and more, ¹¹Make it your goal to live a quiet life, to mind your own affairs, and to work with your hands, as we instructed you. ¹²That you may conduct your lives honestly toward them that are without, and that you may possess lack of nothing. ¹³But we do not want you to be uninformed, brothers and sisters, about those who have fallen asleep, so that you may not grieve as the rest do, who have no hope. ¹⁴For since we believe that Jesus died and rose again, so also God will bring with him those who have fallen asleep through Jesus. ¹⁵For this we declare to you by a word of the Lord: we who are alive, who are left until the coming of the Lord, will by no means precede those who have fallen asleep. ¹⁶For the Lord himself will descend from heaven with a commanding shout, with the voice of an archangel, and with the trumpet of God, and the dead in Christ will rise first. ¹⁷Then we who are alive, who are left, will be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so we will always be with the Lord. ¹⁸Therefore encourage one another with these words.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The transition loipon oun ('finally then') marks the shift from personal narrative (chs. 1-3) to ethical instruction (chs. 4-5). The verb peripatein ('to walk') is a Semitism for conduct or way of life, adopted from the Hebrew halak. Paul both affirms their current practice and calls for growth — they are already walking rightly but should abound (perisseuēte) increasingly.
2. The noun parangelias ('instructions, commands, charges') is a military term for orders passed down a chain of command. Paul's ethical instructions carry the authority of the Lord Jesus — they are not mere suggestions but authoritative directives mediated through apostolic teaching.
3. The noun hagioσmos ('sanctification, being made holy') is the practical outworking of holiness in daily life. The first concrete application is sexual ethics. The Greek porneia ('sexual immorality') is broader than 'fornication' (KJV) — it covers all sexual activity outside the covenant of marriage. Paul begins with this topic because Thessalonica's Greco-Roman culture was highly permissive sexually, and new converts needed clear guidance.
4. The phrase to heautou skeuos ktasthai is debated: skeuos ('vessel') could mean 'body' (as we render) or 'wife' (as in 1 Peter 3:7's 'weaker vessel'). The verb ktasthai means 'to acquire' or 'to possess/control.' If 'body,' the instruction is about self-mastery; if 'wife,' about honorable marriage. The context of sexual ethics supports either reading. We follow 'body' as more likely given the parallel with verse 5.
5. The phrase pathei epithymias ('passion of desire') denotes uncontrolled sexual craving. Paul distinguishes believers from ta ethnē ('the nations, Gentiles') — ironic given that most Thessalonian believers were themselves formerly Gentile pagans (1:9). The distinguishing factor is knowing God (eidota ton theon), which transforms sexual ethics from cultural convention into covenantal faithfulness.
6. The verbs hyperbainein ('to overstep, transgress') and pleonektein ('to take advantage of, exploit') combined with en tō pragmati ('in this matter') likely refer to sexual violation of another person's marriage or family — not general business ethics. The Lord as ekdikos ('avenger') draws on Old Testament language of God as the defender of the wronged (Psalm 94:1, Deuteronomy 32:35).

6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 94:1. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Deuteronomy 32:35. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. Paul grounds sexual ethics in vocation — the call of God defines the standard. The prepositions shift meaningfully: epi akatharsia ('upon/toward impurity') versus en hagioismo ('in holiness') — impurity is a destination God rejects; holiness is the sphere God intends believers to inhabit.
8. The verb athetōn ('rejecting, setting aside, nullifying') was used for annulling a treaty or covenant — to reject Paul's instruction is to violate the covenant relationship with God. The present participle didonta ('the one giving') indicates the ongoing gift of the Spirit. Some manuscripts read 'us' (hēmas) instead of 'you' (hymas); the SBLGNT reads 'you,' making the point more direct.
9. The compound theodidaktōi ('God-taught') is found only here in the New Testament and may be a Pauline coinage. It echoes the prophetic promise of direct divine instruction (Isaiah 54:13, Jeremiah 31:33-34). Paul's compliment is genuine but also serves as encouragement to continue.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 54:13. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Jeremiah 31:33-34. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The love of the Thessalonians extends beyond their local congregation to believers throughout the province — evidence of inter-church relationships and mutual support in the earliest Christian movement. Paul's pattern is consistent: affirm what is already happening, then call for growth (cf. v. 1).
11. The phrase philotimeisthai hēsychazein ('to make it your ambition to be quiet') is a deliberate paradox — 'ambitiously pursue non-ambition.' Some Thessalonians may have abandoned daily work in light of the expected parousia. Paul counters this with a call to ordinary, productive life. The three infinitives — live quietly, mind your own affairs, work with your hands — form a practical ethic for eschatological living.
12. The phrase tous exō ('those outside') refers to non-believers — Paul is concerned about the church's public witness. The practical goals are reputation (euschēmōnōs, 'properly, respectably') and self-sufficiency (mēdenos chreian echēte, 'having need of no one'). A church financially dependent on outsiders loses credibility.
13. The formula ou thelomen hymas agnoein ('we do not want you to be ignorant') introduces a new and important teaching section. 'Fallen asleep' (koimōmenōn) is a common early Christian metaphor for death — it implies the expectation of waking. The Thessalonians' grief was not about death in general but about the specific fear that deceased believers would miss the parousia. Paul does not forbid grief but grief 'as those who have no hope' — Christian grief is real but bounded by resurrection hope.
14. Paul's logic: Jesus's death and resurrection is the pattern for believers' death and resurrection. The phrase dia tou Iēsou ('through Jesus') could modify 'fallen asleep' (those who died as Christians) or 'will bring' (God will bring them through Jesus). The ambiguity may be intentional — Jesus is the means of both their death-experience and their resurrection. Note Paul uses apethanen ('died') for Jesus but koimēthentas ('fallen asleep') for believers — Jesus's death was the raw reality; believers' death is softened by his victory over it.
15. The phrase en logō kyriou ('by a word of the Lord') may cite an unrecorded saying of Jesus, a prophetic revelation given to Paul, or an interpretation of Jesus's known teaching (cf. Matthew 24:30-31). The double negative ou mē ('by no means, definitely not') is the strongest negation in Greek — the living will absolutely not have an advantage over the dead. Paul includes himself among 'we who are alive' (hēmeis hoi zōntes), suggesting he expected the parousia in his lifetime, though he later moderated this (cf. 2 Corinthians 5:1-10).
16. Three auditory images accompany the descent: keleusma ('a command, a shout of authority' — used for a military officer's command or a charioteer's cry), phōnē archangelou ('voice of an archangel'), and salpingi theou ('trumpet of God,' echoing the Sinai theophany of Exodus 19:16 and the eschatological trumpet of Isaiah 27:13). The phrase 'the Lord himself' (autos ho kyrios) emphasizes personal presence — this is not delegated to angels. 'Dead in Christ' (nekroi en Christō) defines the scope: those who died in union with Christ.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 19:16. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 27:13. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. The verb harpagēsometha ('we will be caught up, snatched away') is the basis for the later theological term 'rapture' (from the Latin rapturo in the Vulgate). The Greek conveys sudden, forceful action. The noun apantēsis ('meeting') is a technical term from Hellenistic civic life: when an important dignitary approached a city, the citizens would go out to meet (apantēsis) him and escort him back into the city. This imagery suggests the believers go out to meet the descending Lord and accompany him — the destination is not specified as heaven but as permanent presence 'with the Lord.' The clouds echo Daniel 7:13 and the ascension narrative (Acts 1:9-11).
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Daniel 7:13. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. The verb parakaleite ('encourage, comfort, exhort') frames the entire parousia teaching as pastoral, not speculative. Paul's purpose in describing the Lord's return is not to construct a detailed eschatological timeline but to provide comfort for the grieving. The instruction is communal — 'one another' (allēlous) — making this teaching a shared possession of the church, not private knowledge.

Summary: Paul continues the eschatological teaching from chapter 4, now addressing the timing of the Lord's return. The 'day of the Lord' will come like a thief in the night — sudden and unexpected for the unprepared, but not for believers who are children of light. Paul calls them to remain sober and watchful, putting on the armor of faith, love, and hope. The chapter then delivers a rapid series of community instructions: respect your leaders, live at peace, admonish the disorderly, encourage the fainthearted, help the weak, be patient, pursue good, rejoice always, pray without ceasing, give thanks in everything, do not quench the Spirit, test everything, hold fast to what is good, abstain from every form of evil. The letter closes with a prayer for complete sanctification and a request for mutual prayer, greeting, and public reading.

What Makes This Remarkable: The rapid-fire instructions in verses 12-22 form one of the densest collections of ethical imperatives in Paul's letters. The triad of 'rejoice always, pray without ceasing, give thanks in everything' (vv. 16-18) has become one of the most memorized passages in the New Testament. The closing prayer (v. 23) uses the tripartite 'spirit and soul and body,' the only place Paul uses all three terms together. The final verse's insistence that the letter be read to 'all the brothers and sisters' suggests awareness of its authoritative status.

Translation Friction: The phrase 'spirit and soul and body' (v. 23) should not be pressed into a systematic anthropological framework — Paul is using comprehensive language for the whole person, not teaching trichotomism. The 'thief in the night' imagery (v. 2) echoes Jesus's own teaching (Matthew 24:43, Luke 12:39) and was clearly part of early Christian tradition. We render without imposing a specific millennial framework.

Connections: The 'day of the Lord' language derives from Old Testament prophetic tradition (Amos 5:18-20, Joel 2:1-11, Zephaniah 1:14-18). The thief imagery appears in Matthew 24:43, Luke 12:39, 2 Peter 3:10, and Revelation 3:3, 16:15. The armor metaphor anticipates the fuller treatment in Ephesians 6:10-17. 'Do not quench the Spirit' connects to Paul's broader pneumatology in 1 Corinthians 12-14.

¹Now concerning the times and the seasons, brothers and sisters, you have no need for anything to be written to you, ²For yourselves recognize perfectly that the time of the Lord so comes as a thief in the after dark. ³When they say, "Peace and security," then sudden destruction will come upon them, like labor pains on a pregnant woman, and they will not escape. ⁴But you, brothers and sisters, are not in darkness, so that the day would overtake you like a thief, ⁵You are every one of the children of light, and the children of the day — we are not of the night, nor of darkness. ⁶So then, let us not sleep as the rest do, but let us stay awake and be sober, ⁷Since they that sleep sleep in the night. Then they that be drunken are drunken in the night. ⁸But since we belong to the day, let us be sober, having put on the breastplate of faith and love, and as a helmet the hope of salvation. ⁹For God has not destined us for wrath but for obtaining salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ, ¹⁰Christ died for us so that whether we are awake or asleep, we will live together with him. ¹¹Therefore encourage one another and build each other up, just as you are in fact doing. ¹²Now we ask you, brothers and sisters, to recognize those who labor among you, who lead you in the Lord and admonish you, ¹³To esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake. And be at peace in the midst of yourselves. ¹⁴And we urge you, brothers and sisters: admonish the disorderly, encourage the fainthearted, help the weak, be patient with everyone. ¹⁵See that no one repays evil for evil to anyone, but always pursue what is good for one another and for all people. ¹⁶Rejoice always, ¹⁷Never stop praying. ¹⁸Give thanks in every situation, for this is what God wants for you in Christ Jesus. ¹⁹Do not quench the Spirit. ²⁰Do not despise prophecies, ²¹Indeed, prove all things. Hold fast that which is good. ²²Abstain from every form of evil. ²³Now may the God of peace himself sanctify you completely, and may your whole spirit and soul and body be kept blameless at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. ²⁴The one who calls you is faithful, and he will do it. ²⁵Brothers and sisters, pray for us also. ²⁶Greet all the brothers and sisters with a holy kiss. ²⁷I put you under oath before the Lord to have this letter read to all the brothers and sisters. ²⁸May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ remain with you. Amen.

1. Paul distinguishes chronōn ('times' — chronological duration) from kairōn ('seasons' — significant or decisive moments). The combination covers both 'when' and 'what kind of time.' The phrase echoes Acts 1:7 where Jesus uses the same pair to deflect timeline questions. Paul's point is not that timing is knowable but that it is irrelevant to readiness.
2. The phrase hēmera kyriou ('day of the Lord') is drawn directly from Old Testament prophetic vocabulary (Hebrew: yom YHWH). In the prophets it refers to God's decisive intervention in judgment and salvation. Paul applies it to the return of Christ. The thief simile emphasizes unexpectedness, not stealth or evil intent — a thief comes when you do not expect him (cf. Jesus's use in Matthew 24:43).
3. The phrase eirēnē kai asphaleia ('peace and security') may echo Roman imperial propaganda — the Pax Romana promised exactly this. Paul subverts the claim: true security is not found in empire but in Christ. The labor pain metaphor (ōdin) emphasizes inevitability and suddenness, not gradual process. The double negative ou mē ('they will absolutely not') stresses the impossibility of escape for the unprepared.
4. Paul shifts from 'they' (v. 3) to 'you' — the believers are in a fundamentally different position. The metaphor of darkness represents moral and spiritual ignorance, not merely the absence of chronological information. Those who live in the light will not be surprised because they are already prepared.
5. The Semitic idiom 'sons/children of' (huiōi) expresses essential character — 'children of light' means people whose nature is defined by light. The phrase echoes language found in the Dead Sea Scrolls (War Scroll: 'sons of light vs. sons of darkness'). Paul shifts from 'you' to 'we' (esmen), including himself in the community of light.
6. The metaphors operate on two levels: literal sleep/waking (extending the night/day imagery) and moral alertness/negligence. The verb grēgorōmen ('let us stay awake, be watchful') becomes a key eschatological term in early Christianity (cf. Mark 13:35, 37). The verb nēphōmen ('let us be sober') refers to mental clarity and self-control, the opposite of spiritual intoxication.
7. Paul extends the night/day metaphor with commonsense observation — sleep and drunkenness are naturally associated with nighttime. The implication is that if believers belong to the day, they should exhibit daytime behavior: alertness and sobriety.
8. Paul introduces military armor imagery drawn from Isaiah 59:17 where God puts on righteousness as a breastplate and salvation as a helmet. Paul adapts the imagery: the breastplate protects the heart with faith and love, and the helmet guards the mind with hope. The faith-love-hope triad from 1:3 returns here in eschatological armor form. This is a condensed version of the fuller armor passage in Ephesians 6:10-17.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 59:17 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The verb etheto ('placed, appointed, destined') with eis ('toward, for') indicates divine purpose. The contrast is between orgē ('wrath' — eschatological judgment) and peripoiēsis sōtērias ('obtaining of salvation'). The noun peripoiēsis can mean 'possession' or 'obtaining/acquiring' — salvation is both God's gift and something believers receive.
10. The 'awake or asleep' language now carries double meaning: it refers to physical death and life (the concern from 4:13-18) as well as the moral alertness imagery of this chapter. Paul's answer to both questions — what about the dead? what about readiness? — is the same: Christ's death ensures that our state (alive or dead, alert or not) does not determine our destiny. Union with Christ does.
11. The verb oikodomeite ('build up, edify') uses construction imagery — the community is a building under construction, and each member contributes to the structure. The phrase eis ton hena ('one the one,' i.e., 'each other individually') emphasizes personal, one-on-one encouragement. Paul again affirms their current practice (cf. 4:1, 10).
12. Three participles describe church leaders: kopiōntas ('those laboring' — the same word for exhausting toil used in 1:3), proistamenous ('those who lead, stand before, care for'), and nouthetountas ('those who admonish, counsel, correct'). The verb eidēnai ('to know, recognize') means more than mere awareness — it implies respect and acknowledgment of their role. The leadership structure in Thessalonica was not yet formalized into offices (no 'elders' or 'deacons' are named).
13. The adverb hyperekperissou ('beyond all measure') recurs from 3:10 — Paul characteristically piles up intensifiers. Esteem for leaders is to be 'in love' (en agapē), not in fear or obligation. The abrupt imperative eirēneuete en heautois ('be at peace among yourselves') suggests tensions within the community, possibly related to the disorderly behavior addressed in verse 14.
14. Four imperatives addressed to the whole community, not just leaders: noutheteite tous ataktous ('admonish the disorderly' — ataktos is a military term for soldiers who break rank, referring to those who refuse to work per 4:11-12); paramytheisthe tous oligopsychous ('encourage the fainthearted' — oligopsychos means 'small-souled,' those crushed by grief or fear); antechesthe tōn asthenōn ('help the weak' — whether physically, economically, or spiritually); makrothymete pros pantas ('be patient with everyone' — including all three problem groups). The differentiated response is crucial: the disorderly need correction, the fainthearted need comfort, the weak need support. One-size-fits-all pastoral care fails.
15. The prohibition of retaliation (kakon anti kakou, 'evil in return for evil') parallels Romans 12:17 and 1 Peter 3:9, and ultimately echoes Jesus's teaching (Matthew 5:38-48). The verb diōkete ('pursue, chase after') implies active effort — doing good requires intentional action, not passive goodwill. The scope extends beyond the community (eis allēlous) to everyone (eis pantas).

16. The first of three brief imperatives (vv. 16-18) that form a well-known triad. Pantote ('always, at all times') is unqualified — Paul does not say 'rejoice when things go well.' Joy in Paul's theology is not dependent on circumstances but rooted in relationship with God (cf. Philippians 4:4, written from prison).
17. The adverb adialeiptōs ('without ceasing, constantly') appeared in 1:3 and 2:13 for Paul's own prayer practice. This does not mean unbroken verbal prayer but a persistent orientation of life toward God — prayer as habitual conversation with God woven into daily existence.
18. The phrase en panti ('in everything, in every circumstance') does not mean 'for everything' — Paul calls for thanksgiving in all situations, not necessarily for all situations. The phrase 'this is the will of God' (touto gar thelēma theou) may refer to all three imperatives (vv. 16-18) together, not just thanksgiving. God's will is the triad: joy, prayer, gratitude.
19. The verb sbennyte ('quench, extinguish') treats the Spirit's work as fire — a metaphor consistent with Pentecost imagery (Acts 2:3). 'Quenching' implies suppressing or stifling the Spirit's manifestations, likely prophetic gifts given the next verse. The present imperative with mē suggests 'stop quenching' — this may have already been happening.
20. The verb exoutheneite ('despise, treat as nothing, hold in contempt') suggests some Thessalonians were dismissive of prophetic speech. Prophecy in the Pauline churches was Spirit-inspired speech for edification, not fortune-telling (cf. 1 Corinthians 14:3). The next verse provides the corrective: test, don't dismiss.
21. The verb dokimazete ('test, examine, assess') is the same word used for testing metals to determine their purity. Applied to prophecy, it means evaluate rather than accept uncritically or reject reflexively. The imperative katēchete ('hold fast, retain') balances openness with discernment — accept what proves genuine, release what does not.
22. The Greek eidous can mean 'form, kind, type' or 'appearance.' The KJV's 'appearance of evil' has been misapplied to mean 'anything that looks bad.' The Greek more likely means 'every kind of evil' — each type or manifestation of evil should be avoided. This provides the negative counterpart to verse 21's positive imperative.
23. The title 'God of peace' (theos tēs eirēnēs) is a standard Pauline benediction formula. The adjective holoteleis ('completely, entirely') and the adjective holoklēron ('whole, complete, intact') create emphatic completeness — every part of the person is included. The threefold 'spirit and soul and body' (pneuma kai psychē kai sōma) is comprehensive language for the whole person, not a systematic anthropological division. This is the only place Paul lists all three together. The parousia serves once again as the horizon toward which sanctification is directed.
24. The brevity is powerful: pistos ho kalōn ('faithful is the one calling'). The present participle kalōn indicates God's call is ongoing. The assurance that 'he will do it' (hos kai poiēsei) grounds the prayer of verse 23 in God's faithfulness — sanctification will be completed because God's character guarantees it.
25. The request for prayer is brief and mutual — Paul who prays constantly for them (1:2, 3:10) asks for the same in return. The kai ('also') emphasizes reciprocity.
26. The 'holy kiss' (philēmati hagiō) was a standard greeting in early Christian worship (cf. Romans 16:16, 1 Corinthians 16:20, 2 Corinthians 13:12). The adjective 'holy' distinguishes it from romantic or familial kisses — it was a sign of spiritual kinship and mutual peace.
27. The verb enorkizō ('I put under oath, I adjure') is strikingly solemn for a letter closing — Paul uses oath language to ensure the letter is read publicly to the entire congregation, not just leaders. This suggests both the letter's authoritative status and the possibility that some might try to restrict its circulation. Paul shifts to the first person singular (enorkizō, 'I'), lending personal weight to the charge.
28. The closing benediction follows Paul's standard formula. The SBLGNT does not include 'Amen,' which appears in some later manuscripts. 'Grace' (charis) forms an inclusio with the opening greeting (1:1), framing the entire letter in the reality of divine favor.

2 Thessalonians

Summary: Paul, Silvanus, and Timothy greet the Thessalonian church again, thanking God for their growing faith and increasing love amid ongoing persecution. Paul assures them that their suffering is evidence of God's righteous judgment — God will repay affliction to their oppressors and grant relief to the afflicted when the Lord Jesus is revealed from heaven with his mighty angels in flaming fire. Those who do not know God and do not obey the gospel will face eternal destruction away from the Lord's presence, while Christ will be glorified among his saints on that day.

What Makes This Remarkable: This chapter contains one of the most vivid descriptions of Christ's return in judgment in the Pauline corpus. The language draws heavily on Old Testament theophany traditions — flaming fire (Exodus 3:2, Isaiah 66:15), angels as divine attendants (Deuteronomy 33:2), and divine vengeance (Isaiah 66:4, 15). The phrase 'eternal destruction away from the presence of the Lord' (v. 9) is Paul's most explicit statement about the nature of final judgment.

Translation Friction: The severity of the judgment language in verses 6-9 stands in tension with modern sensibilities but is consistent with Old Testament prophetic tradition and Jesus's own warnings. We render the Greek faithfully without softening. The authorship of 2 Thessalonians is debated among scholars; we render the text as it stands without adjudicating authorship questions.

Connections: The 'revelation' (apokalypsis) of the Lord Jesus (v. 7) parallels 1 Thessalonians 4:16-17 but emphasizes judgment rather than reunion. The flaming fire imagery echoes Exodus 3:2, Isaiah 66:15, and Daniel 7:9-10. The prayer for God to 'fulfill every resolve for good' (v. 11) anticipates the pastoral concerns of chapter 3.

¹Paul, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, to the church of the Thessalonians in God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. ²From god our father and the lord jesus christ, grace to you, and peace. ³We are obligated to give thanks to God always for you, brothers and sisters, as is fitting, because your faith is growing abundantly and the love of every one of you for one another is increasing. ⁴Because of this, we ourselves boast about you among the churches of God for your endurance and faith through all the persecutions and hardships you are facing. ⁵This is evidence of the righteous judgment of God, that you may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which you are also suffering. ⁶Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense suffering to them that trouble you; ⁷and to give relief to you who are suffering along with us. This will happen when the Lord Jesus appears from heaven with his mighty angels. ⁸He will come in blazing fire, bringing judgment on those who do not know God and on those who refuse to obey the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. ⁹They will suffer the penalty of eternal destruction, away from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his might, ¹⁰When he will come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that trust (because our testimony in the midst of you was believed) in that day. ¹¹To this end we always pray for you, that our God may count you worthy of his calling and may fulfill every resolve for good and every work of faith by his power, ¹²According to the grace of our god and the lord Jesus Christ, that the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in you, and you in him.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The greeting nearly mirrors 1 Thessalonians 1:1 with one addition: 'our' (hēmōn) modifies 'Father,' which the shorter first letter lacked in the SBLGNT. This subtle addition emphasizes the relational bond between the writers and God.
2. The fuller greeting includes the source — 'from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ' — which the SBLGNT text of 1 Thessalonians 1:1 omitted. Grace (charis) and peace (eirēnē) again bridge Greek and Hebrew blessing traditions.
3. The phrase opheilomen ('we are obligated, we ought') replaces the spontaneous thanksgiving of 1 Thessalonians — Paul frames gratitude as a moral duty given the evidence of their growth. The verb hyperauxanei ('is growing beyond measure') is found only here in the New Testament and may be another Pauline coinage. The growth in faith and love answers the prayer of 1 Thessalonians 3:10-12.
4. The compound verb enkauchasthai ('to boast in, to glory in') intensifies the boasting — Paul takes personal pride in the Thessalonians' faithfulness. He boasts 'among the churches' (en tais ekklesiāis), using the Thessalonians as an example to other congregations. The present tense anechesthe ('you are bearing') indicates ongoing, current suffering.
5. The noun endeigma ('evidence, proof, sign') indicates that their faithful endurance under persecution serves as evidence — not that suffering earns the kingdom, but that their perseverance demonstrates the genuineness of their faith and thus God's righteous judgment in counting them worthy. The phrase 'kingdom of God' (basileia tou theou) is relatively rare in Paul (cf. 1 Thessalonians 2:12, 1 Corinthians 6:9-10, Galatians 5:21).
6. The phrase eiper dikaion ('since indeed it is righteous') appeals to the principle of divine justice: those who inflict suffering will receive suffering. The verb antapodounai ('to repay, recompense') echoes the lex talionis principle but placed in divine hands — God repays, not the believers (cf. Romans 12:19, Deuteronomy 32:35).
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Deuteronomy 32:35. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The noun anesin ('relief, rest, release') is the opposite of thlipsis ('affliction') — the present pressure will be replaced by release. The word apokalypsis ('revelation, unveiling') describes Christ's return as the removal of a veil — what is now hidden (Christ's glory and authority) will become visible. 'Angels of his power' (angelōn dynamēōs autou) portrays the angels as instruments of divine power.
8. The phrase en pyri phlogos ('in flaming fire') draws on theophany language — God's presence is associated with fire from the burning bush (Exodus 3:2) to Sinai (Exodus 19:18) to Isaiah's vision (Isaiah 66:15). 'Vengeance' (ekdikēsis) is not emotional retaliation but judicial retribution — the enactment of justice. The two groups — 'those who do not know God' (likely Gentiles) and 'those who do not obey the gospel' (possibly those who heard but rejected) — may be two descriptions of the same group or two distinct groups.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 3:2 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 19:18 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 66:15 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The phrase olethron aiōnion ('eternal destruction') describes not annihilation but permanent ruin — separation from God's presence. The preposition apo ('away from') defines the destruction as exclusion from God's presence (prosōpou, 'face') and glory. This echoes Isaiah 2:10, 19 where people flee from 'the splendor of his majesty.' The penalty is defined relationally — loss of God's presence — rather than as physical torment.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 2:10. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. Christ's glory will be visible 'in' or 'among' (en) his saints — believers become the medium through which Christ's glory is displayed. The verb thaumasthenai ('to be marveled at, to be admired') suggests awe and wonder. The parenthetical 'because our testimony to you was believed' assures the Thessalonians they are included among those who will marvel. 'That day' (en tē hēmera ekeinē) is the eschatological 'day of the Lord.'
11. The phrase pasan eudokian agathōsynēs could mean 'every good resolve' (the Thessalonians' desire for goodness) or 'every desire of goodness' (God's good pleasure). The former fits better: Paul prays that God would empower their good intentions. 'Work of faith' (ergon pisteōs) echoes 1 Thessalonians 1:3, forming a thematic link between the two letters.

12. The mutual glorification — Christ glorified 'in you' and you glorified 'in him' — creates a remarkable reciprocity. Believers reflect Christ's glory, and Christ's glory elevates believers. The phrase kata tēn charin ('according to the grace') grounds everything in unmerited favor — neither the worthiness (v. 11) nor the glorification (v. 12) is earned. The single article before 'our God and the Lord Jesus Christ' (tou theou hēmōn kai kyriou Iēsou Christou) has been debated — some read it as equating God and Christ, though most scholars see two distinct referents sharing one governing article.

Summary: Paul corrects a misunderstanding that the day of the Lord has already come. He insists that two events must occur first: a great rebellion (apostasia) and the revelation of the 'man of lawlessness' who will exalt himself above every so-called god, even seating himself in the temple of God and claiming to be God. Something — or someone — is currently restraining this figure, and once the restrainer is removed, the lawless one will be revealed, whom the Lord Jesus will destroy with the breath of his mouth. Those who follow the lawless one do so because they refused to love the truth. Paul then thanks God for the Thessalonians' election and urges them to stand firm in the traditions they were taught.

What Makes This Remarkable: *This passage is one of the most debated in the Pauline corpus. The identity of the 'man of lawlessness' (ho anthrōpos tēs anomias), the 'restrainer' (to katechon / ho katechōn), and the 'mystery of lawlessness' (to mystērion tēs anomias) have generated centuries of interpretation without scholarly consensus. Paul assumes the Thessalonians already know what he means ('Do you not remember?' v. 5), leaving modern readers without the key to his allusions.*

Translation Friction: *We render the Greek without identifying the man of lawlessness with any specific historical or future figure. The 'restrainer' is rendered with deliberate ambiguity matching Paul's own shift between neuter (to katechon, v. 6) and masculine (ho katechōn, v. 7). The phrase 'God sends them a strong delusion' (v. 11) raises difficult theological questions about divine agency in deception, which we note without resolving.*

Connections: The man of lawlessness draws on Daniel 11:36 (the king who exalts himself), Ezekiel 28:2 (the prince of Tyre who claims to be God), and Isaiah 14:13-14. Jesus's warning about false messiahs and signs (Matthew 24:24, Mark 13:22) parallels the deceptive signs of the lawless one. The 'breath of his mouth' destruction echoes Isaiah 11:4. The 'mystery of lawlessness' contrasts with the 'mystery' revealed in Christ (Colossians 1:26-27, Ephesians 3:3-6).

1Now concerning the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ and our being gathered together to him, we ask you, brothers and sisters, 2That you be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by message, nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is drawing near. 3Let no one deceive you in any way, for that day will not come unless the rebellion comes first and the man of lawlessness is revealed, the son of destruction, 4He will oppose and exalt himself above every so-called god or object of worship. He will even seat himself in God's temple, claiming to be God. 5Do you not remember that when I was still with you I kept telling you these things? 6And you know what is restraining him now, so that he may be revealed at the proper time. 7For the mystery of lawlessness is already at work; only the one who now restrains will do so until he is taken out of the way. 8And then the lawless one will be revealed, whom the Lord Jesus will destroy with the breath of his mouth and bring to nothing by the appearance of his coming. 9The coming of the lawless one is by the activity of Satan, with all power and false signs and wonders, 10With all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish. On account of the fact that they received not the devotion of the what is genuine, that they might be saved. 11For this reason God sends them a powerful delusion so that they will believe the lie, 12so that all who refused to believe the truth and took pleasure in wickedness will be condemned. 13But we are obligated to give thanks to God always for you, brothers and sisters beloved by the Lord, because God chose you as firstfruits for salvation through sanctification by the Spirit and belief in the truth. 14He called you to this through our gospel, so that you may obtain the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ. 15So then, brothers and sisters, stand firm and hold to the traditions that you were taught, whether by our spoken word or by our letter. 16Now may our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God our Father, who loved us and gave us eternal comfort and good hope through grace, 17Comfort your hearts, and stablish you in every good message and work.

1. The noun episynagōgēs ('gathering together, assembling') is related to the synagōgē ('synagogue, assembly') and refers to the believers' reunion with Christ at the parousia, described in 1 Thessalonians 4:17. The preposition epi ('to, upon') indicates movement toward Christ as the gathering point.
2. Three possible sources of the false teaching are identified: dia pneumatos ('through a spirit' — a prophetic utterance), dia logou ('through a word' — oral teaching), or di' epistolēs ('through a letter' — a written communication). The phrase hōs di' hēmōn ('as if from us') suggests someone may have forged or misrepresented a Pauline letter. The verb enestēken ('has come, is present, has arrived') is perfect tense, indicating a claim that the day of the Lord had already arrived — not merely that it was near.
3. The noun apostasia ('rebellion, revolt, apostasy') denotes a decisive falling away — from what is debated (from God, from faith, from political order). In the Septuagint it describes political rebellion and religious unfaithfulness. The SBLGNT reads 'man of lawlessness' (anomias) rather than 'man of sin' (hamartias) found in some manuscripts. The title 'son of destruction' (ho huios tēs apōleias) is the same title applied to Judas in John 17:12 — a person defined by and destined for ruin.
4. The language closely parallels Daniel 11:36 ('the king shall exalt himself and magnify himself above every god'). The phrase eis ton naon tou theou ('in the temple of God') could refer to the Jerusalem temple (either the historical one or a rebuilt future temple), to the church as God's temple (1 Corinthians 3:16), or to a metaphorical enthronement in the sphere of divine authority. The verb apodeiknynta ('declaring, proclaiming, showing') implies an official claim — a public self-deification.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Daniel 11:36. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. This verse is both informative and frustrating for modern interpreters — Paul had taught them orally about these matters, and the Thessalonians knew what he meant. We do not have that oral teaching. The imperfect elegon ('I kept telling') indicates repeated instruction, not a single conversation. Paul's rhetorical question implies mild rebuke: they should not have been shaken by false claims about the day of the Lord.
6. The neuter participle to katechon ('the thing that restrains') is one of the great mysteries of Pauline interpretation. Proposed identifications include the Roman Empire, the rule of law, the Holy Spirit, the preaching of the gospel, an angelic power, or God's providential timing. Paul's 'you know' (oidate) assumes shared knowledge we no longer possess. The phrase en tō heautou kairō ('at his own time') indicates the lawless one has an appointed moment of revelation, which is currently being held back.
7. Paul shifts from the neuter 'what restrains' (v. 6) to the masculine 'the one who restrains' (ho katechōn) — possibly indicating both a force and a person behind it. The 'mystery of lawlessness' (to mystērion tēs anomias) means lawlessness is already operative but in hidden form — it has not yet been publicly revealed. The KJV's 'letteth' meant 'restrains' in 1611 English but now means the opposite, making the KJV misleading here. The phrase ek mesou genētai ('removed from the midst') does not specify who removes the restrainer.
8. The verb anelei ('will destroy, will slay') combined with tō pneumati tou stomatos autou ('with the breath of his mouth') echoes Isaiah 11:4: 'He shall strike the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips he shall kill the wicked.' The lawless one's destruction is effortless — a mere breath from Jesus suffices. The phrase tē epiphaneia tēs parousias ('the appearance of his coming') combines two technical terms for Christ's return: epiphaneia ('manifestation, appearing') and parousia ('coming, presence'). The combination emphasizes visible, overwhelming presence.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 11:4: — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The lawless one has his own parousia — a satanic parody of Christ's coming. The triad dynamei kai sēmeiois kai terasin ('power and signs and wonders') mirrors the language used for apostolic authentication (Romans 15:19, 2 Corinthians 12:12), but qualified by pseudous ('of falsehood, false'). The deception is not in the supernatural character of the events but in the source and purpose — they serve to deceive, not to reveal truth.
10. The phrase tēn agapēn tēs alētheias ('the love of the truth') is distinctive — Paul does not say they rejected the truth but that they rejected the love of truth. The disposition toward truth matters as much as intellectual assent. The present participle apolymenoi ('those who are perishing') describes a current state and trajectory, not a fixed category. The deception succeeds only against those who have already refused truth.
11. The statement that God sends (pempei) the delusion is theologically difficult. The logic follows the Old Testament pattern of judicial hardening: when people persistently refuse truth, God confirms their choice by giving them over to it (cf. Romans 1:24-28, 'God gave them over'). The 'lie' (tō pseudei) has the definite article — 'the lie,' a specific falsehood, perhaps the claim of the lawless one to be God (v. 4). This is not arbitrary divine cruelty but the consequence of refusing truth: one is left with what one chose.
12. The verb eudokēsantes ('took pleasure in, delighted in') is the same word used for God's good pleasure (eudokia) — but here directed toward unrighteousness. The contrast is stark: they found delight in adikia ('unrighteousness') rather than in alētheia ('truth'). Condemnation follows not just intellectual rejection but moral complicity — they enjoyed what was wrong.
13. The SBLGNT reads aparchēn ('firstfruits') rather than ap' archēs ('from the beginning') found in some manuscripts. 'Firstfruits' portrays the Thessalonians as the initial harvest of a greater ingathering. Two means of salvation are named: hagiasmos pneumatos ('sanctification by/of the Spirit') — the Spirit's transforming work — and pistei alētheias ('faith in the truth') — the human response. Together they describe God's initiative and human reception.

14. The noun peripoiēsis ('obtaining, possession') appeared in 1 Thessalonians 5:9 for 'obtaining salvation.' Here the object is even grander: the glory of Christ himself. The chain is: God chose (v. 13), God called (v. 14), and the instrument of the call was 'our gospel' (dia tou euangeliou hēmōn). The human proclamation is the means of the divine call.
15. The noun paradoxeis ('traditions, things handed down') is a technical term for authoritative teaching transmitted from teacher to student. Paul uses the same word that Jesus criticizes when applied to human traditions that override God's word (Mark 7:8), but here the traditions are apostolic and Spirit-guided. The two channels — dia logou ('through spoken word') and di' epistolēs ('through letter') — validate both oral and written apostolic teaching as authoritative.
16. Unusually, Paul names Christ before the Father in the prayer, perhaps because the eschatological teaching has focused on Christ's parousia. The singular participles ('who loved... and gave') with a compound subject again suggests a unity of action between Christ and the Father (cf. 1 Thessalonians 3:11). 'Eternal comfort' (paraklēsin aiōnian) and 'good hope' (elpida agathēn) are the gifts that sustain believers through present affliction and eschatological uncertainty.
17. The two optative verbs — parakalesai ('comfort, encourage') and stērixai ('establish, strengthen') — complete the prayer begun in verse 16. Paul reverses the expected order to 'work and word' (ergō kai logō) rather than 'word and work,' possibly emphasizing that action accompanies and sometimes precedes verbal expression. The prayer is for inner strengthening ('hearts') manifested in outward conduct ('every good work and word').

Summary: Paul requests prayer for the spread of the word and for deliverance from wicked people, expresses confidence in the Lord's faithfulness, and then addresses the problem of those living in idleness. He commands the community to keep away from every brother or sister living irresponsibly, pointing to his own example of working night and day so as not to be a burden. Those who will not work should not eat. Paul instructs the community not to associate with the idle in order to shame them into correction, but also not to treat them as enemies. The letter closes with a prayer for peace and a handwritten greeting that serves as an authentication mark.

*What Makes This Remarkable: The 'no work, no eat' principle (v. 10) is one of the most frequently quoted Pauline sayings in secular discourse, though it is often lifted from its pastoral context. Paul is not articulating a general economic philosophy but addressing a specific problem: some Thessalonians had apparently stopped working, possibly because they believed the parousia was imminent. The closing authentication (v. 17) suggests Paul was aware that letters were being circulated under his name (cf. 2:2).*

Translation Friction: The severity of the disciplinary measures (vv. 6, 14-15) reflects Paul's concern that idleness was disrupting the entire community. The balance between 'do not associate' and 'do not regard as an enemy' defines the tension of redemptive discipline. We render without softening the sharpness of Paul's instruction.

Connections: The idle/disorderly problem was already flagged in 1 Thessalonians 4:11-12 and 5:14. Paul's appeal to his own manual labor (v. 8) parallels 1 Thessalonians 2:9 and 1 Corinthians 9:3-18. The authentication in verse 17 connects to Galatians 6:11 and Colossians 4:18.

¹Finally, brothers and sisters, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may spread rapidly and be honored, just as it was among you, ²That we may be delivered from unreasonable and corrupt people — for all people have not faith. ³But the Lord is faithful; he will strengthen you and guard you from the evil one. ⁴And we have confidence in the Lord about you, that you are doing and will continue to do what we command. ⁵May the Lord direct your hearts to the love of God and to the steadfastness of Christ. ⁶Now we command you, brothers and sisters, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, to keep away from every brother or sister who lives irresponsibly and not according to the tradition that they received from us. ⁷For you yourselves know how you ought to imitate us, because we were not idle among you, ⁸We did not eat anyone's food without paying for it. Instead, we labored and toiled day and night so we would not be a burden to any of you. ⁹Not that we do not have the right, but to give you ourselves as an example to imitate. ¹⁰For even when we were with you, we used to give you this command: if anyone is not willing to work, let that person not eat. ¹¹For we hear that some among you are living irresponsibly, not busy at work but busybodies. ¹²Now such people we command and encourage in the Lord Jesus Christ to work quietly and eat their own bread. ¹³As for you, brothers and sisters, do not grow weary of doing good. ¹⁴If anyone does not obey what we say in this letter, take note of that person and do not associate with him, so that he may be put to shame. ¹⁵

Yet do not regard him as an enemy, but warn him as a brother. ¹⁶Now may the Lord of peace himself give you peace at all times in every way. The Lord be with you all. ¹⁷This greeting is in my own hand — Paul's. This is the mark in every letter of mine; this is how I write. ¹⁸May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ remain with all of you. Amen.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The verb trechē ('may run') is athletic imagery — the word of the Lord is personified as a runner in a race (cf. Psalm 147:15, 'His word runs swiftly'). The verb doxazētai ('may be glorified, honored') indicates that the word achieves its purpose and is received with respect. Paul asks for prayer not for his personal safety but for the mission's success.
1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 147:15. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
2. The adjective atopōn ('out of place, improper, wicked') literally means 'having no place' — people who are morally displaced. Combined with ponērōn ('evil, malicious'), it describes active opposition to the gospel. The understated conclusion — 'not everyone has faith' (ou gar pantōn hē pistis) — is almost ironic in its simplicity, acknowledging that the gospel will be resisted.
3. The wordplay between pistis ('faith,' v. 2) and pistos ('faithful,' v. 3) is deliberate: not all people have faith, but the Lord is faithful. The phrase apo tou ponērou could mean 'from evil' (abstract) or 'from the evil one' (personal — Satan). Given the eschatological context of the letter and the reference to the 'lawless one' in chapter 2, 'the evil one' is more likely.
4. Paul's confidence is 'in the Lord' (en kyriō), not merely in the Thessalonians' character — divine faithfulness undergirds human obedience. The verb parangellogen ('we command') is the same military-order language used in 1 Thessalonians 4:2, emphasizing apostolic authority.
5. The optative kateuthynai ('may he direct') is a prayer-wish (cf. 1 Thessalonians 3:11). The two goals are: tēn agapēn tou theou ('the love of God') — possibly God's love for them or their love for God — and tēn hypomonēn tou Christou ('the steadfastness/endurance of Christ') — possibly Christ's own endurance as an example or the endurance that comes from Christ. The genitives are deliberately ambiguous, encompassing both divine gift and human response.
6. The adverb ataktōs ('disorderly, irresponsibly') is a military term for a soldier who abandons his post or breaks formation (cf. 1 Thessalonians 5:14). In this context it refers specifically to refusing to work (vv. 10-11). The verb stellesthai ('to keep away from, to withdraw from') prescribes social distancing as a disciplinary measure. The 'tradition' (paradosis) they violate is Paul's example and instruction regarding manual labor.
7. The verb ētaktēsamen ('we were disorderly, we were idle') is the verbal form of the same root as ataktōs in verse 6. Paul presents his own conduct as the pattern (cf. 1 Thessalonians 2:9-10). The obligation to imitate (mimeisthai) implies that apostolic behavior, not just apostolic teaching, carries normative authority.
8. The phrase dōrean arton ('bread for free') is an idiom for receiving support without contributing. Paul's language nearly verbatim repeats 1 Thessalonians 2:9 (kopon kai mokhthon, 'toil and hardship'), reinforcing consistency between the two letters. The right to financial support was legitimate (v. 9), but Paul chose to forgo it for pedagogical purposes.
9. Paul explicitly acknowledges his exousia ('right, authority') to receive financial support — he develops this argument at length in 1 Corinthians 9:3-14. His voluntary renunciation was strategic: he wanted to establish a visible pattern (typon, 'example, model') of self-supporting labor that the congregation could follow.
10. The conditional ei tis ou thelei ergazesthai ('if anyone is not willing to work') specifies unwillingness, not inability — Paul is addressing those who refuse to work, not those who cannot. The imperfect parēngellomen ('we used to command') indicates this was repeated instruction during Paul's visit. The principle may draw on a Jewish proverbial tradition (cf. Genesis Rabbah 2:2: 'If I do not work, I do not eat'). The command is pastoral, not economic theory — it addresses a specific community problem.
11. Paul employs a pointed wordplay: mēden ergazomenous alla periergazomenous — literally 'not working but over-working,' meaning 'not doing their own work but meddling in others' work.' The English 'not busy but busybodies' captures the pun. The problem is not just laziness but its byproduct: idle people who meddle in others' affairs, disrupting the community.
12. Paul combines authority (parangellogen, 'we command') with pastoral warmth (parakaloumen, 'we encourage'). The phrase meta hēsychias ('with quietness') echoes 1 Thessalonians 4:11 — living quietly means minding one's own affairs. 'Eat their own bread' (ton heautōn arton esthiōsin) means earn their own livelihood rather than depending on the community's resources.
13. The verb enkakēsēte ('grow weary, lose heart, give up') acknowledges the real temptation: when some members exploit communal generosity, the generous may become disillusioned. Paul addresses this directly — the irresponsibility of some must not extinguish the generosity of others.
14. The verb sēmeiousthe ('take note of, mark, identify') suggests a formal process of community recognition — the person is publicly identified. The verb synanamiggysthai ('to associate with, to mingle with') denotes social interaction, particularly shared meals. The purpose clause hina entrapē ('so that he may be ashamed') reveals the goal is redemptive, not punitive — shame is meant to produce change, not permanent exclusion.
15. This verse provides the critical guardrail for the discipline of verse 14. The person under discipline remains adelphos ('brother') — a family member in need of correction, not an outsider to be rejected. The verb noutheteite ('warn, admonish, counsel') implies instruction aimed at change of behavior, not condemnation. The tension between social exclusion (v. 14) and fraternal correction (v. 15) defines the narrow path of redemptive discipline.

- 16. The title 'Lord of peace' (ho kyrios tēs eirēnēs) parallels 'God of peace' (1 Thessalonians 5:23), applying a divine title to Christ. The double emphasis — dia pantos ('at all times') and en panti tropō ('in every way') — asks for peace that is both continuous and comprehensive. After a letter dealing with eschatological anxiety and community conflict, the prayer for total peace is especially apt.
- 17. Paul typically dictated his letters through a secretary (amanuensis; cf. Romans 16:22) and then added a greeting in his own handwriting as authentication. Given the concern about forged letters in 2:2, this authentication takes on special urgency. The phrase sēmeion en pasē epistolē ('a sign in every letter') establishes Paul's handwriting as a security feature for all his correspondence.
- 18. The closing benediction matches the standard Pauline formula. The SBLGNT does not include 'Amen,' which appears in later manuscripts. The word pantōn ('all') may carry special weight after a letter about community discipline — grace extends to the entire congregation, including those under correction.

Summary: Paul writes to Timothy, his 'true child in the faith,' who has been left in Ephesus to confront false teachers promoting myths, endless genealogies, and speculative teachings that produce controversy rather than God's plan of faith. Paul clarifies the proper use of the law — it is for the lawless, not the righteous — and then offers his own testimony as the foremost of sinners who received mercy so that Christ's perfect patience might be displayed. The chapter closes with a charge to Timothy to fight the good fight, holding to faith and a good conscience, and warns about Hymenaeus and Alexander who have shipwrecked their faith.

What Makes This Remarkable: Paul's self-description as 'the foremost of sinners' (v. 15) is one of the most quoted passages in Christian devotional tradition. The 'faithful saying' formula (pistos ho logos, v. 15) appears five times in the Pastoral Epistles and nowhere else in Paul, marking distinctive material. The vice list in verses 9-10 is unusual in following the structure of the Ten Commandments, connecting the law's proper use to its specific prohibitions.

Translation Friction: The authorship of the Pastoral Epistles is debated among scholars — some attribute them to Paul, others to a later Pauline disciple. We render the text as it stands without adjudicating authorship. The vice list in verses 9-10 includes arsenokoitais ('men who have sex with men'), a compound word whose precise scope and meaning are debated. We render the Greek term and note the interpretive issues.

Connections: The charge to Timothy anticipates the military language of 2 Timothy 2:3-4 and 4:7. The 'faithful saying' formula recurs at 3:1, 4:9, 2 Timothy 2:11, and Titus 3:8. The reference to Paul's conversion echoes Acts 9, 22, and 26. Hymenaeus appears again in 2 Timothy 2:17.

¹Paul, an apostle of Christ Jesus by the command of God our Savior and of Christ Jesus our hope, ²To Timothy, my true child in the faith: Grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord. ³As I urged you when I was leaving for Macedonia, remain in Ephesus so that you may instruct certain people not to teach different doctrine ⁴and not to occupy themselves with myths and endless genealogies. These promote speculation rather than the advancement of God's work, which is by faith. ⁵The goal of this instruction is love that comes from a pure heart, a good conscience, and a sincere faith. ⁶Some have strayed from these and turned to meaningless talk, ⁷They want to be teachers of the law, but they do not understand what they are saying or what they so confidently assert. ⁸Now we know that the law is good, if one uses it legitimately, ⁹Knowing this, that the instruction of Moses is not fashioned for a upright man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for the ungodly and for sinners, for unholy and profane, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for manslayers,. ¹⁰For the sexually immoral, for those who practice homosexuality, for slave traders, for liars, for those who swear falsely, and if there be any other thing that is contrary to healthy teaching;. ¹¹In keeping with to the glorious gospel of the blessed God, which was committed to my trust. ¹²I am grateful to Christ Jesus our Lord, who has strengthened me, because he considered me faithful, appointing me to his service, ¹³Indeed, who was prior to a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious — but I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief;. ¹⁴The grace of our Lord poured out on me abundantly, along with the faith and love that come through Christ Jesus. ¹⁵The saying is trustworthy and deserving of full acceptance: Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am the foremost. ¹⁶But I received mercy for this reason: so that in me, as the foremost, Christ Jesus might display his perfect patience as an example to those who would come to believe in him for eternal life. ¹⁷To the King of the ages, immortal, invisible, the only God, be honor and glory forever and ever. Amen. ¹⁸This charge I entrust to you, Timothy my child, in accordance with the prophecies previously made about you, so that by them you may fight the good fight, ¹⁹Holding trust, and a righteous conscience. Which some possessing placed away concerning faith have made shipwreck;. ²⁰Among them are Hymenaeus and Alexander, whom I have handed over to Satan so they would learn not to blaspheme.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The title 'God our Savior' (theou sōtēros hēmōn) is distinctive to the Pastoral Epistles (cf. Titus 1:3, 2:10, 3:4) and draws on Old Testament language for God as Israel's savior (Isaiah 43:3, 11). Christ is called 'our hope' (tēs elpidos hēmōn) — not merely the object of hope but hope itself personified. The phrase kat' epitagēn ('by command') frames Paul's apostleship as military commission, not personal choice.
1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 43:3. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
2. The adjective gnēsio ('genuine, true, legitimate') indicates a deep spiritual bond — Timothy is Paul's authentic spiritual offspring. The greeting adds 'mercy' (eleos) to the usual 'grace and peace,' a distinctive feature of the Pastoral Epistles' greetings to individuals (cf. 2 Timothy 1:2). Mercy may be added because Timothy faces a difficult pastoral situation requiring divine compassion.
3. The verb heterodidaskalein ('to teach different doctrine, to teach otherwise') is a compound found only in the Pastoral Epistles (here and 6:3). It implies deviation from the established apostolic teaching rather than mere theological innovation. The vague 'certain people' (tisin) avoids naming them initially, though Paul names two in verse 20.
4. The 'myths' (mythois) and 'genealogies' (genealogiais) likely refer to speculative elaborations on Old Testament narratives — possibly Jewish-Gnostic or proto-Gnostic traditions. The noun oikonomia ('stewardship, plan, administration') has a rich theological range — here it refers to God's redemptive plan or strategy, which operates through faith (en pistei), not through speculative knowledge.
5. The telos ('goal, aim, end') of the paraggelia ('instruction, command') is not theological knowledge but love (agapē). Three sources of genuine love are named: a pure heart (inner motivation), a good conscience (moral integrity), and sincere faith (anypokritos — literally 'unhypocritical,' without pretense). The false teachers have missed all three.
6. The verb astochēsantes ('having missed the mark, having strayed') uses archery imagery — they aimed at love but missed. The noun mataiologian ('meaningless talk, empty discussion') characterizes the false teaching as vacuous — it produces noise without substance.
7. The compound nomodidaskaloi ('teachers of the law') is used only here and in Luke 5:17 and Acts 5:34. The irony is sharp: they aspire to teach the law but comprehend neither their own words nor the subjects they pronounce upon. The verb diabebaiountai ('make confident assertions, insist strongly') makes their ignorance more damaging — they speak with unwarranted authority.
8. The wordplay on nomos ('law') and nomimōs ('lawfully, legitimately') is deliberate — the law must be used in accordance with its own purpose. Paul affirms the goodness of the law (cf. Romans 7:12, 16) while qualifying its proper application.
9. The vice list follows the order of the Ten Commandments: the first pairs (lawless, rebellious, ungodly, sinful, unholy, irreverent) correspond to the first table (duties toward God); the next items follow the second table (duties toward others). Patrolōais kai mētrōlōais ('those who strike fathers and mothers') corresponds to the fifth commandment, and androphonois ('murderers') to the sixth.
10. The list continues through the Decalogue: pornois (sexually immoral, seventh commandment), arsenokoitais (a compound of arsēn 'male' + koitē 'bed,' appearing in the Septuagint language of Leviticus 18:22 and 20:13 — the precise scope of this term is debated among scholars), andrapodistais ('slave traders, kidnappers,' eighth commandment — enslaving people), pseustais ('liars') and epiorkois ('perjurers,' ninth commandment — false witness). The phrase hygiainousē didaskalia ('sound/healthy teaching') is a distinctive Pastoral Epistles expression, using medical imagery — true doctrine promotes health.

- 10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Leviticus 18:22 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
- 11. The phrase to euangelion tēs doxēs tou makariou theou ('the gospel of the glory of the blessed God') is a remarkably dense genitive chain. The gospel is characterized by God's glory, and God is described as makarios ('blessed, happy') — a term usually reserved for humans in Paul but here applied to God (cf. 6:15), a distinctive feature of the Pastoral Epistles.
- 12. The verb endynamōsanti ('having empowered, having strengthened') is the same root Paul uses in Philippians 4:13 ('I can do all things through him who strengthens me'). The appointment to diakonia ('service, ministry') flows from Christ's assessment of Paul's faithfulness — yet the next verse reveals that Paul's 'faithfulness' was preceded by blasphemy and persecution.
- 13. The three self-descriptions intensify: blasphemōn ('blasphemer' — against God), diōktēn ('persecutor' — against the church), and hybristēn ('violent, insolent aggressor' — the same word used in Romans 1:30). Paul's ignorance (agnoōn) does not excuse his actions but explains why mercy was possible — he was not sinning against known truth (cf. Numbers 15:27-31 on inadvertent vs. deliberate sin).
- 13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Numbers 15:27-31 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
- 14. The verb hypereplenasen ('overflowed, super-abounded') is a Pauline intensive — where sin abounded, grace hyper-abounded (cf. Romans 5:20). Grace did not merely match Paul's sin but overwhelmed it. The paired nouns 'faith and love' (pisteōs kai agapēs) describe what grace produced in Paul — the very qualities the false teachers lack (v. 5).
- 15. The formula pistos ho logos ('faithful is the saying, the saying is trustworthy') introduces what may be an early Christian confession or hymnic fragment. The core proclamation — Christos Iēsous ēlthen eis ton kosmon hamartōlous sōsai ('Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners') — is a compact statement of incarnational soteriology. Paul's claim to be prōtos ('foremost, first, chief') is present tense (eimi, 'I am'), not past — he does not merely recall his former persecution but maintains a present consciousness of unworthiness.
- 16. Paul's conversion becomes a paradigm — a hypotypōsis ('pattern, model, outline') for all future believers. If the 'foremost of sinners' could receive mercy, no one is beyond reach. The noun makrothymia ('patience, longsuffering') describes Christ's restraint in the face of Paul's active persecution — a patience that endured until Paul's transformation. 'Eternal life' (zōēn aiōnion) is the ultimate goal of belief.
- 17. Paul breaks into a doxology — the overflow of gratitude from his testimony. Four attributes describe God: basilei tōn aiōnōn ('King of the ages' — sovereign over all time), aphthartō ('imperishable, immortal'), aoratō ('invisible'), and monō theō ('the only God'). The SBLGNT does not include 'wise' (sophō), which appears in some manuscripts. The phrase eis tous aiōnas tōn aiōnōn ('to the ages of the ages') is the strongest expression of unending duration in Greek.
- 18. The military imagery — strateuē ('fight, serve as a soldier') and strateian ('campaign, warfare') — frames Timothy's ministry as a battle. The 'prophecies previously made about you' (proagousas epi se prophēteias) likely refer to prophetic words spoken over Timothy at his commissioning (cf. 4:14). These prophecies are not mere encouragement but equipment for spiritual combat.
- 19. The verb enauagēsan ('shipwrecked') is vivid — faith is a vessel that can be wrecked on the rocks of a rejected conscience. The 'good conscience' (agathēn syneidēsin) from verse 5 returns: it is not optional equipment but essential to the integrity of faith. Those who pushed away (apōsamenoi, middle voice — 'pushed away from themselves') their conscience destroyed their own faith.
- 20. Paul names the offenders — Hymenaeus reappears in 2 Timothy 2:17. 'Handed over to Satan' (paredōka tō satana) parallels 1 Corinthians 5:5 and likely refers to expulsion from the community — outside the protective sphere of the church, they are in Satan's domain. The purpose is remedial: hina paideutōsin ('so that they may be disciplined/educated') — the verb paideuō means to train as a child, to educate through correction. Even this severe action aims at restoration, not destruction.

Summary: Paul instructs that prayers be offered for all people, especially for kings and those in authority, so that believers may live peaceful and godly lives. He grounds this universal concern in the nature of God, who desires all people to be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth. A christological statement declares one God and one mediator between God and humanity — the man Christ Jesus, who gave himself as a ransom for all. Paul then gives instructions about how men should pray and how women should conduct themselves in the assembly, including a controversial instruction about women not teaching or exercising authority over men.

What Makes This Remarkable: Verses 5-6 contain what many scholars consider an early Christian hymn or creedal formula: 'one God, one mediator... who gave himself as a ransom for all.' The phrase 'ransom for all' (antilytron hyper pantōn) is unique to this passage and represents one of the clearest universal atonement statements in the New Testament. The instructions about women (vv. 9-15) have generated more interpretive debate than almost any other passage in Paul.

Translation Friction: Verses 11-15 regarding women's roles in the assembly are among the most debated texts in the New Testament. We render the Greek as written without imposing either complementarian or egalitarian interpretive frameworks. The reference to Eve's deception (v. 14) and salvation 'through childbearing' (v. 15) are notoriously difficult and we note the major interpretive options without choosing among them.

Connections: The prayer for authorities parallels Romans 13:1-7 and 1 Peter 2:13-17. The mediator language connects to Hebrews 8:6, 9:15, 12:24. The ransom statement echoes Mark 10:45. The discussion of women's roles relates to 1 Corinthians 11:2-16 and 14:34-35, though the relationship among these passages is debated.

¹First of all, then, I urge that supplications, prayers, intercessions, and thanksgivings be made for all people, ²Pray for kings and all those in authority, so that we may live peaceful and quiet lives in complete godliness and dignity. ³This is good and pleasing in the sight of God our Savior, ⁴Who will possess all people to be saved, and to arrive to the knowledge of the truth. ⁵For there is one God, and there is one mediator between God and humanity — the man Christ Jesus, ⁶Indeed, who offered himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time. ⁷For this I was appointed a herald and an apostle — I am telling the truth, I am not lying — a teacher of the Gentiles in faith and truth. ⁸Therefore I want the men in every place to pray, lifting up holy hands, without anger or quarreling. ⁹Likewise, I want women to adorn themselves with proper clothing, modestly and with self-control, not with braided hair or gold or pearls or expensive clothing, ¹⁰However, (which becometh women professing godliness) with good deeds. ¹¹Let a woman learn quietly with all submissiveness. ¹²I do not permit a woman to teach or to exercise authority over a man; rather, she is to remain quiet. ¹³For Adam was formed first, then Eve, ¹⁴Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the sin. ¹⁵Yet she will be saved through childbearing, if they continue in faith and love and holiness with self-control.

1. Four types of prayer are listed: deēseis ('supplications' — specific requests arising from need), proseuchas ('prayers' — the general term), enteuxeis ('intercessions' — approaching God on behalf of others, literally 'petitions'), and eucharistias ('thanksgivings'). The phrase hyper pantōn anthrōpōn ('for all people') establishes the universal scope that the entire chapter develops.
2. The prayer for political rulers is pragmatic rather than political — stable governance allows peaceful Christian life. The noun eusebeia ('godliness, piety') is a key term in the Pastoral Epistles (appearing 10 times in 1-2 Timothy and Titus) and describes the outward manifestation of reverence for God. The noun semmotēs ('dignity, seriousness, respectability') describes conduct that commands respect.
3. The adjective apodekton ('acceptable, pleasing, welcome') indicates that universal prayer aligns with God's own character and desire. The title 'God our Savior' (toū sōtēros hēmōn theou) recurs from 1:1, connecting God's saving character to his desire that all be saved (v. 4).
4. The verb thelei ('desires, wills, wants') has been debated for centuries: does God's desire necessarily produce its result? We render the Greek without imposing either universalist or particularist frameworks. The phrase epignōsis alētheias ('full knowledge of the truth') implies not mere information but deep, experiential understanding. Salvation and knowledge are paired — being saved involves knowing truth.
5. This verse may preserve an early creedal formula. The numerical emphasis — heis ('one') repeated — stresses exclusivity: one God (echoing the Shema of Deuteronomy 6:4) and one mediator. The term mesitēs ('mediator, go-between') implies someone who stands in the middle, connecting two parties. Christ's humanity is emphasized — anthrōpos Christos Iēsous ('the man Christ Jesus') — because a mediator between God and humans must share in both natures.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Deuteronomy 6:4 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The noun antilytron ('ransom, substitute payment') is unique to this verse in the New Testament. It intensifies the related word lytron (Mark 10:45) with the prefix anti- ('in exchange for, in place of'), emphasizing substitutionary exchange. The phrase hyper pantōn ('for all') completes the universal scope established in verses 1 and 4. The 'testimony at the proper time' (to martyriōn kairos idiois) indicates that this redemptive act has been publicly declared at the divinely appointed moment.
7. Three roles describe Paul's commission: kēryx ('herald, proclaimer' — one who announces a king's message), apostolos ('apostle, sent one'), and didaskalos ethnōn ('teacher of the Gentiles'). The parenthetical oath — alētheian legō, ou pseudomai ('I tell the truth, I do not lie') — is striking (cf. Romans 9:1, 2 Corinthians 11:31) and may respond to challenges to Paul's authority in Ephesus.
8. The verb boulomai ('I want, I desire, I intend') expresses authoritative will. The noun andras ('men, males') is gender-specific here (not the generic anthrōpoi), establishing a parallel with the instructions to women in verse 9. Lifting hands in prayer was standard Jewish and early Christian practice (cf. Psalm 134:2). The qualifications — 'without anger' (chōris orgēs) and 'without quarreling' (dialogismou — 'dispute, argument') — suggest the Ephesian church had conflict-ridden worship.

8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalm 134:2 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The adverb hōsautōs ('likewise, in the same way') connects women's instructions to the men's in verse 8. The noun kataistolē ('clothing, deportment, demeanor') refers to the overall presentation. The virtues aidous ('modesty, reverence') and sōphrosynēs ('self-control, sound judgment') contrast with extravagant adornment. The specifics — braided hair (plegmasin), gold (chrysiō), pearls (margaritais), expensive clothing (himatismō polytelei) — were markers of wealth and social status in Roman society that could create division in worship.
10. The noun theosebeian ('reverence for God, godliness') is the feminine counterpart to the eusebeia that characterizes the entire letter's moral vision. The true adornment of a godly woman is not external display but ergōn agathōn ('good works') — conduct that reflects character.
11. The verb manthanetō ('let her learn') is actually a positive command — women are to learn, which was not universally accepted in the ancient world. The noun hēsychia ('quietness, stillness') does not necessarily mean total silence but a receptive, non-disruptive posture (the same word is used in verse 2 for the 'quiet life' of all believers). The noun hypotagē ('submissiveness, proper order') describes alignment with established authority structures.
12. The verb epitrepō ('I permit') is present tense — some scholars read this as a universal principle, others as a situational directive addressing the Ephesian context. The verb authentein ('to exercise authority, to domineer') occurs only here in the New Testament, and its precise meaning is debated: it may mean 'to exercise authority' (neutral) or 'to domineer, to usurp authority' (negative). The range of meaning affects whether the prohibition targets all authority or only improper authority. We render with the standard translation while noting the interpretive complexity.
13. Paul appeals to the creation narrative (Genesis 2:7, 21-22) as the basis for his instruction. The verb eplasthē ('was formed, was molded') echoes the Septuagint of Genesis 2:7, 8. Whether the temporal priority of Adam's creation establishes a permanent hierarchical principle or describes a culturally mediated application is debated among interpreters.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 2:7 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. Paul adds a second argument from Genesis 3: Eve was exapatētheisa ('thoroughly deceived') while Adam was not (ouk ēpatēthē). This does not absolve Adam — Romans 5:12-21 makes Adam fully responsible for the fall. Paul's point may be about susceptibility to deception in a context where false teachers were specifically targeting women (cf. 2 Timothy 3:6), rather than a universal statement about women's intellectual capacity. The relationship between this argument and the broader Pauline corpus remains debated.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 3:. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. This is among the most difficult verses in the Pastoral Epistles. The phrase sōthēsetai dia tēs teknogonias ('she will be saved through the childbearing') has been interpreted as: (1) women will be preserved safely through the physical process of childbirth; (2) women will be saved through the Childbirth — the birth of Christ (the definite article tēs may point to a specific birth); (3) women will find their salvation expressed through faithful motherhood; (4) the curse of Genesis 3:16 will not have the final word. The shift from singular 'she' to plural 'they' (meinōsin) broadens the application. We render the Greek directly and note the complexity without selecting one interpretation.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 3:16 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.

Summary: Paul outlines the qualifications for overseers (episkopoi) and deacons (diakonoi) in the church. An overseer must be above reproach, the husband of one wife, sober-minded, self-controlled, hospitable, able to teach, not a drunkard, not violent, gentle, peaceable, not a lover of money, and must manage his own household well. He must not be a recent convert and must be well regarded by outsiders. Deacons similarly must be dignified, not double-tongued, not addicted to much wine, not greedy, holding the mystery of the faith with a clear conscience. Women (whether deacons' wives or female deacons) must likewise be dignified and faithful. The chapter concludes with a christological hymn: 'Great indeed is the mystery of godliness.'

What Makes This Remarkable: The qualifications for church officers focus overwhelmingly on character rather than competence or charisma. The only skill-based requirement is 'able to teach' (v. 2). The christological hymn in verse 16 — six clauses in three couplets — is widely regarded as a pre-Pauline hymn fragment that Paul quotes. Its structure moves from incarnation to exaltation in rhythmic parallels.

Translation Friction: The phrase 'husband of one wife' (mias gynaikos andra, v. 2) is debated: does it prohibit polygamy, remarriage after divorce, remarriage after a spouse's death, or require marital faithfulness? We render literally and note the debate. The 'women' (gynaikas) in verse 11 could be deacons' wives or female deacons — the Greek is ambiguous, and we preserve that ambiguity.

Connections: The overseer qualifications parallel Titus 1:5-9. The deacon qualifications have no exact parallel but relate to Acts 6:1-6. The christological hymn echoes Philippians 2:6-11 and Colossians 1:15-20 in its hymnic structure. The 'pillar and foundation of truth' (v. 15) imagery connects to Ephesians 2:20-22.

¹The saying is trustworthy: if anyone aspires to the office of overseer, he desires a noble task. ²Therefore an overseer must be above reproach, the husband of one wife, sober-minded, self-controlled, respectable, hospitable, able to teach, ³Not given to wine, no striker, not greedy of dishonest profit. But patient, not a brawler, not covetous. ⁴He must manage his own household well, with all dignity keeping his children submissive. ⁵Because if a man know not how to rule his own home, how will he take care of the church of God? ⁶He must not be a recent convert, or he may become puffed up with conceit and fall into the condemnation of the devil. ⁷Moreover, he must be well thought of by outsiders, so that he may not fall into disgrace and into a snare of the devil. ⁸Deacons likewise must be dignified, not double-tongued, not addicted to much wine, not greedy for dishonest gain. ⁹They must hold the mystery of the faith with a clear conscience. ¹⁰And let them also be tested first; then let them serve as deacons if they prove blameless. ¹¹Women likewise must be dignified, not slanderers, sober-minded, faithful in all things. ¹²Let deacons each be the husband of one wife, managing their children and their own households well. ¹³For those who serve well as deacons gain a good standing for themselves and great confidence in the faith that is in Christ Jesus. ¹⁴I am writing these things to you, hoping to come to you soon, ¹⁵But if I am delayed, you will know how people should conduct themselves in God's household, which is the church of the living God — the pillar and foundation of the truth. ¹⁶Great indeed, we confess, is the mystery of godliness: He was manifested in the flesh, vindicated by the Spirit, seen by angels, proclaimed among the nations, believed in throughout the world, taken up in glory.

1. The 'faithful saying' formula (pistos ho logos) introduces the second such statement in the letter (cf. 1:15). The noun episkopē ('office of overseer, oversight') gives us the later English word 'bishop,' but in this period the role was local church leadership, not the hierarchical office that developed later. The verb oregetai ('aspires to, reaches for') is positive — desiring leadership is commendable when the character qualifications are met.
2. The overarching qualification is anepilēmpton ('above reproach, without anything to take hold of against him'). The phrase mias gynaikos andra ('a one-woman man') literally means 'a man of one woman.' Interpretations include: (1) prohibition of polygamy; (2) prohibition of remarriage after divorce; (3) prohibition of remarriage after widowhood; (4) requirement of marital faithfulness ('a faithful husband'). The last reading has the strongest contextual support. The list moves from personal character to social skills to a specific ability (didaktikon, 'able to teach').
3. The qualifications shift to negatives — what an overseer must not be. Mē paroinon ('not given to much wine, not a drunkard') does not necessarily prohibit all wine consumption but excessive drinking. Mē plēktēn ('not a striker, not violent') prohibits physical aggression. The positive counterpart is epikeikē ('gentle, yielding, forbearing') — a word Aristotle described as justice tempered by mercy.
4. The verb proistamenon ('managing, leading, caring for') is the same word used for church leadership in 1 Thessalonians 5:12 and Romans 12:8. Paul treats household management as a proving ground for church leadership. The noun semnotētos ('dignity, seriousness') may modify the father's manner of leadership rather than the children's behavior.
5. The verb epimelēsetai ('will care for, will take charge of') is the same word used for the Good Samaritan's care (Luke 10:34-35) — leadership is a form of caregiving, not dominion. The logic is from lesser to greater: the household is a microcosm of the church.
6. The noun neophyton ('newly planted') gives us the English 'neophyte.' The verb typhōtheis ('puffed up, conceited, clouded') literally refers to smoke — pride clouds the mind. The phrase krima tou diabolou ('condemnation of the devil') could mean: (1) the same condemnation the devil received for his pride, or (2) the condemnation that the devil brings upon the prideful. Both readings fit the context.
7. The phrase tōn exōthen ('those outside') refers to non-Christians — the overseer's reputation in the wider community matters. The 'snare of the devil' (pagida tou diabolou) adds to the devil's activity from verse 6: pride leads to condemnation, bad reputation leads to entrapment. A leader with a compromised public reputation becomes vulnerable to Satan's exploitation.
8. The noun diakonous ('deacons, servants, ministers') denotes those who serve — the role is defined by service rather than authority. The qualifications parallel the overseer's but with some differences: no teaching requirement, more emphasis on integrity in speech (mē dilogous, 'not double-tongued' — saying different things to different people). The term aischrokerdeis ('greedy for dishonest gain') suggests deacons may have handled community funds.
9. The phrase mystērion tēs pisteōs ('the mystery of the faith') refers to the revealed content of Christian belief — the truth previously hidden but now made known through the gospel (cf. v. 16). A 'clear conscience' (kathara syneidēsei) means their inner life matches their outward profession — the same concern Paul raised in 1:5, 19.

10. The verb dokimazesthōsan ('let them be tested, examined') is the same word used for testing metals (cf. 1 Thessalonians 5:21). A period of evaluation precedes service — deacons are not self-appointed but community-assessed. The adjective anegklētoi ('blameless, without accusation') sets a high bar: no credible charge can be brought against them.
11. The Greek gynaikas ('women') could mean: (1) wives of deacons, (2) female deacons (deaconesses), or (3) women in general. The parallel structure hōsautōs ('likewise') — used for deacons in verse 8 — suggests a third category of church workers rather than merely deacons' wives. Romans 16:1 identifies Phoebe as a diakonos, supporting the existence of female deacons. The adjective diabolous ('slandorous') is literally 'devil-like' — the devil (diabolos) is the slanderer par excellence.
12. The household management requirement repeats from the overseer qualifications (v. 4) but in condensed form. If verse 11 refers to female deacons, then verse 12 resumes the male deacon qualifications. The phrase mias gynaikos andres ('men of one woman') mirrors verse 2.
13. The noun bathmon ('step, standing, rank') may refer to social standing in the community, spiritual advancement, or both. The parrēsian ('boldness, confidence, freedom of speech') indicates that faithful service produces inner assurance and outward courage in the faith. Service is not merely duty but a means of spiritual growth.
14. Paul signals that the letter is a temporary substitute for his personal presence. The phrase en tachei ('soon, quickly') expresses hope rather than certainty — Paul does not know when he will arrive.
15. Three metaphors describe the church: oikos theou ('household of God' — a family), ekklēsia theou zōntos ('assembly of the living God'), and stylos kai hedraiōma tēs alētheias ('pillar and foundation of the truth'). The architectural imagery is powerful: the church supports and displays truth as a pillar holds up and displays a building. The phrase 'living God' (theou zōntos) distinguishes the true God from the dead idols of Ephesus (cf. Acts 19).
16. The SBLGNT reads hos ('who, he who') rather than theos ('God'), which appears in later manuscripts — the difference in uncial script is minimal (OC vs. ΘC) and the original reading was likely the relative pronoun. The six clauses form three antithetical pairs: flesh/Spirit, angels/nations, world/glory — moving between earthly and heavenly spheres. This is widely regarded as a pre-existing hymn that Paul quotes. The verb edikaiōthē ('was vindicated, was justified') in reference to Christ means his claims were confirmed, not that he needed moral justification. 'Taken up in glory' (anelēmphthē en doxē) refers to the ascension.

Summary: Paul warns that the Spirit explicitly predicts that some will depart from the faith in later times, following deceiving spirits and teachings of demons. These false teachers forbid marriage and require abstinence from certain foods — practices Paul refutes by affirming that everything God created is good and is sanctified through the word of God and prayer. Paul then gives Timothy personal pastoral directives: train yourself in godliness (which has value both for the present and the coming life), do not let anyone look down on your youth, set an example in speech, conduct, love, faith, and purity. He is to devote himself to the public reading of Scripture, to exhortation, and to teaching, and not to neglect the gift given through prophecy and the laying on of hands.

What Makes This Remarkable: The ascetic practices condemned here (forbidding marriage, requiring food abstinence) suggest a proto-Gnostic or Jewish-ascetic influence in Ephesus that viewed the material world as inherently evil. Paul's response affirms the goodness of creation — a fundamental Jewish-Christian conviction. The statement 'godliness is of value in every way' (v. 8) and the 'faithful saying' of verse 9 provide one of the Pastoral Epistles' most positive theological affirmations. The charge to Timothy not to neglect his gift (v. 14) reveals that even Spirit-given gifts require active cultivation.

Translation Friction: The phrase 'in later times' (en hysterois kairois, v. 1) is debated — Paul may view these times as already present or as still future. We render the Greek temporal reference without imposing a specific eschatological timeline. The 'faithful saying' formula in verse 9 is unusual because what precedes and what follows could each be the saying referred to.

Connections: The food laws discussion connects to Romans 14:1-4, 14:14-23 and Colossians 2:16-23. The training metaphor anticipates 2 Timothy 2:5 and 4:7-8. The laying on of hands (v. 14) parallels Acts 6:6, 13:3 and 2 Timothy 1:6. The 'public reading of Scripture' (v. 13) reflects synagogue practice adopted by the early church.

1Now the Spirit expressly says that in later times some will depart from the faith, devoting themselves to deceitful spirits and teachings of demons, 2Speaking lies in hypocrisy. After their conscience seared with a hot iron;. 3They forbid people to marry and order them to avoid certain foods. But God created those foods to be received with thanksgiving by those who believe and know the truth. ⁴For everything created by God is good, and nothing is to be rejected if it is received with thanksgiving, ⁵ Since it is sanctified by the message of God and prayer. ⁶If you put these things before the brothers and sisters, you will be a good servant of Christ Jesus, trained in the words of the faith and of the good teaching that you have followed. ⁷Have nothing to do with irreverent, silly myths. Rather, train yourself for godliness, ⁸Physical training has some value, but godliness has value in every way, since it holds promise for both the present life and the life to come. ⁹The saying is trustworthy and deserving of full acceptance. ¹⁰For to this end we toil and strive, because we have set our hope on the living God, who is the Savior of all people, especially of those who believe. ¹¹Command and teach these things. ¹²Let no one despise you for your youth, but set the believers an example in speech, in conduct, in love, in faith, in purity. ¹³Until I come, devote yourself to the public reading of Scripture, to exhortation, and to teaching. ¹⁴Do not neglect the gift that is in you, which was given to you through prophecy with the laying on of hands by the council of elders. ¹⁵Practice these things, immerse yourself in them, so that your progress may be evident to all. ¹⁶Keep a close watch on yourself and on the teaching. Persist in this, for by doing so you will save both yourself and your hearers.

1. The adverb rhētōs ('expressly, explicitly, in so many words') indicates a clear prophetic utterance, not vague prediction. The phrase en hysterois kairois ('in later times') is less urgent than the 'last days' (eschatais hēmerais) of 2 Timothy 3:1 — it describes a future period without specifying when. The 'spirits' (pneumasin planois) are not human false teachers but spiritual entities whose deceptive influence produces false teaching.
2. The verb kekautēriasmenōn ('having been seared, having been branded') uses medical/branding imagery — their consciences have been cauterized, rendered insensitive like burned flesh. The passive voice may suggest the searing was done to them by the 'deceitful spirits' of verse 1, not merely by their own choices.
3. The two prohibitions — forbidding marriage and requiring food abstinence — reflect an asceticism that views the material world as corrupting. Paul counters with a creation-affirming theology: these things were 'created' (ektisen) by God 'for receiving with thanksgiving' (eis metalēmpsin meta eucharistias). The qualifier 'those who believe and know the truth' does not restrict enjoyment but identifies those who understand creation's goodness.
4. Paul echoes Genesis 1 where God declares each element of creation 'good' (kalon). The phrase pan ktisma theou kalon ('every creature/creation of God is good') is a direct theological rebuttal of any dualism that considers the material world evil. The qualifying condition is eucharistia ('thanksgiving') — gratitude sanctifies the reception of God's gifts.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 1. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. The verb hagizetai ('is made holy, is sanctified') does not mean the food was previously unholy but that it is consecrated for use through two means: logos theou ('word of God' — possibly a prayer of blessing, a scriptural declaration like Genesis 1's 'it was good,' or the gospel itself) and enteuxeōs ('prayer, intercession'). The meal prayer sanctifies ordinary food by acknowledging God as its source.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 1 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The verb entrophomenos ('being nourished, being trained') is a passive participle — Timothy is simultaneously nourishing the church and being nourished by sound doctrine. The phrase kalēs didaskalias ('good teaching') contrasts with the 'teachings of demons' in verse 1. The verb parēkolouthēkas ('you have followed, you have closely traced') implies not just intellectual understanding but personal adherence to the teaching.
7. The adjective graōdeis ('old-womanish, silly') was a common ancient rhetorical dismissal — the characterization is cultural, not gender-based. The verb gymnaze ('train, exercise') is from the athletic gymnasium — godliness requires the same deliberate, disciplined effort as physical fitness. This sets up the comparison in verse 8.
8. Paul does not dismiss physical training (pros oligon estin ōphelimos, 'is of some value') but relativizes it. Godliness (eusebeia) surpasses it because its benefits extend beyond the present life (tēs nyn) into the coming life (tēs mellousēs). The 'promise' (epangelian) attaches both temporal and eternal rewards to godliness — it is not merely heavenly insurance but transforms present existence.
9. The third 'faithful saying' formula in the letter (cf. 1:15, 3:1). Whether this refers back to verse 8 or forward to verse 10 is debated. The content of verse 8 — godliness is universally profitable — fits the formula well and is the more likely referent.
10. The SBLGNT reads agōnizometha ('we strive, we struggle') rather than oneidizometha ('we suffer reproach') found in some manuscripts. The phrase sōtēr pantōn anthrōpōn ('Savior of all people') has been debated: some read it as affirming universal salvation, others as affirming God's universal saving intent which is actualized especially (malista) in believers. The word malista ('especially, most of all') does not negate the universal statement but qualifies it — God's saving work extends to all but is fully realized in those who believe.
11. The two imperatives — parangelle ('command') and didaske ('teach') — combine authority with instruction. Timothy is both to require obedience and to educate understanding.

12. Timothy's 'youth' (neotētos) in ancient terms likely means he was under 40 — not necessarily what moderns would call young. The antidote to age-related dismissal is not assertion of authority but exemplary character. Five areas of example are named: logos ('speech'), anastrophē ('conduct, way of life'), agapē ('love'), pistis ('faith'), and hagneia ('purity'). The SBLGNT does not include en pneumati ('in spirit'), which appears in some manuscripts.
13. The noun anagnōsei ('reading') with the definite article refers to the formal, public reading of Scripture in the assembly — a practice inherited from the synagogue (cf. Luke 4:16-21, Acts 13:15). The three activities — reading, exhortation (paraklēsei), and teaching (didaskalia) — form the core of early Christian worship. Timothy is to ensure these continue in Paul's absence.
14. The charismatos ('gift, grace-gift') is a specific endowment for ministry, given at a definable moment through two means: prophētiās ('prophecy' — inspired speech identifying Timothy's calling) and epitheseōs tōn cheirōn tou presbyteriou ('laying on of hands by the elder council'). The command mē amelei ('do not neglect') implies that spiritual gifts can atrophy without active cultivation. The 'council of elders' (presbyterion) suggests a collective commissioning body. Second Timothy 1:6 adds that Paul himself participated in this laying on of hands.
15. The verb meleta ('practice, cultivate, meditate on') implies active engagement, not passive contemplation. The phrase en toutois isthi ('be in these things, immerse yourself in them') calls for total absorption — Timothy's ministry should be his consuming focus. The noun prokopē ('progress, advancement') was a Stoic term for moral growth, here applied to visible pastoral development.
16. The dual focus — seautō ('yourself') and tē didaskalia ('the teaching') — insists that personal character and doctrinal fidelity cannot be separated. The verb epimene ('persist, continue, remain') demands sustained commitment. The promise that Timothy will 'save' (sōseis) both himself and his hearers does not mean Timothy replaces Christ as savior but that faithful ministry is the instrument through which Christ's saving work reaches people.

Summary: Paul instructs Timothy on relating to different groups within the church: older and younger men and women. He then provides extensive guidance on caring for widows, distinguishing between those who qualify for church support (truly desolate, over sixty, with a record of good works) and those whose families should provide for them. Younger widows are encouraged to remarry rather than enroll on the widow list. Paul addresses the compensation and discipline of elders, warns against partiality, and offers personal health advice about wine. The chapter closes with observations about the visibility of sins and good works.

What Makes This Remarkable: This chapter provides the most detailed early church organizational material in the New Testament. The widow enrollment list (vv. 9-16) reveals a formal structure for benevolence that included criteria for eligibility. The instruction to give elders 'double honor' (v. 17) and the scriptural argument for compensating church workers (v. 18) represent early Christian thinking about ministerial support. The personal note about wine (v. 23) offers a rare glimpse into Timothy's health and Paul's pastoral concern for his protege.

Translation Friction: The restrictions on younger widows (vv. 11-15) and the language about their potential behavior ('they grow wanton,' 'learn to be idlers,' 'gossips and busybodies') reflects ancient patriarchal assumptions about women's vulnerabilities. We render the Greek faithfully and note the cultural context without sanitizing or editorializing. The command to 'drink a little wine' (v. 23) has been variously interpreted regarding total abstinence debates.

Connections: The care of widows connects to Acts 6:1-6, James 1:27. The 'laborer deserves his wages' saying (v. 18) quotes Deuteronomy 25:4 and Luke 10:7 (or a common tradition). The requirement for two or three witnesses (v. 19) follows Deuteronomy 19:15. The laying on of hands (v. 22) connects to 4:14 and 2 Timothy 1:6.

¹Do not rebuke an older man harshly, but appeal to him as a father, to younger men as brothers, ²Treat older women as mothers, and younger women as sisters, with complete purity. ³Honor widows who are truly widows. ⁴But if a widow has children or grandchildren, let them first learn to show godliness to their own household and to make some repayment to their parents, for this is pleasing in the sight of God. ⁵She who is truly a widow, left all alone, has set her hope on God and continues in supplications and prayers night and day, ⁶However, she that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth. ⁷Command these things as well, so that they may be above reproach. ⁸But if anyone does not provide for his own relatives, and especially for members of his household, he has denied the faith and is worse than an unbeliever. ⁹Let a widow be enrolled if she is not less than sixty years old, having been the wife of one husband, ¹⁰Well reported of for righteous deeds. If she possess carried up offspring, if she have lodged strangers, if she have washed the saints' feet, if she have relieved the afflicted, if she have diligently followed every good work. ¹¹But refuse to enroll younger widows, for when their desires draw them away from Christ, they want to marry, ¹²They bring judgment on themselves because they have broken their original commitment. ¹³Besides that, they also learn to be idle, going from house to house, and not only idle but also gossips and busybodies, saying things they should not. ¹⁴So I would have younger widows marry, bear children, manage their households, and give the adversary no occasion for slander. ¹⁵For some have already strayed after Satan. ¹⁶If any believing woman has relatives who are widows, let her care for them. Let the church not be burdened, so that it may care for those who are truly widows. ¹⁷Let the elders who lead well be considered worthy of double honor, especially those who labor in preaching and teaching. ¹⁸For the Scripture says, "You shall not muzzle an ox while it treads out the grain," and, "The laborer deserves his wages." ¹⁹Do not accept an accusation against an elder except on the evidence of two or three witnesses. ²⁰As for those who persist in sin, rebuke them in the presence of all, so that the rest may stand in fear. ²¹In the presence of God and of Christ Jesus and of the elect angels, I charge you to keep these rules without prejudging, doing nothing out of partiality. ²²Do not be hasty in the laying on of hands, and do not share in the sins of others. Keep yourself pure. ²³No longer drink only water, but use a little wine for the sake of your stomach and your frequent ailments. ²⁴The sins of some people are conspicuous, going ahead of them to judgment, but the sins of others only follow later. ²⁵So also good works are conspicuous, and even those that are not cannot remain hidden.

1. The noun presbyterō here likely means 'older man' rather than the office of 'elder' (that topic begins at v. 17). The verb epiplēxēs ('rebuke sharply, strike at') is strong — Timothy should correct with family-appropriate respect, not public confrontation. The church is envisioned as a family with generational dynamics.
2. The addition of en pasē hagneia ('in all purity') specifically in reference to younger women is practical: a young pastor relating to younger women must maintain absolute propriety. The four-part schema (older men, younger men, older women, younger women) covers the entire congregation through family metaphors.
3. The verb tima ('honor') likely includes both respect and material support — 'honor' in this context has financial implications (cf. v. 17 where 'double honor' clearly includes payment). The phrase ontōs chēras ('truly widows, widows indeed') establishes a category: not all women who have lost husbands qualify for church support.
4. The verb manthanetōsan ('let them learn') — the subject is the children or grandchildren, not the widow. Family responsibility takes priority over church benevolence. The noun amoibas ('repayments, returns') frames the care of parents as reciprocal — children are repaying what they received. The KJV's 'nephews' reflects 17th-century English meaning 'grandchildren' (ekgona).
5. The qualifying portrait: a 'true widow' is memonōmenē ('left alone, isolated') with no family support, ēlpiken epi theon ('has set her hope on God' — perfect tense indicating settled trust), and devotes herself to continual prayer. This describes both her need (desolate) and her character (devoted).
6. The verb spatalōsa ('living in self-indulgence, living for pleasure') describes a widow who uses her status to pursue luxury rather than godliness. The paradox zōsa tethnēken ('living, she has died') is a spiritual death that coexists with physical life — a sharp rebuke that distinguishes genuine need from entitlement.
7. The adjective anepilēmptoi ('above reproach, not open to accusation') applies to both the widows and the families — the entire system of care must be conducted blamelessly.
8. The harshness of Paul's verdict — 'worse than an unbeliever' (apistou cheirōn) — underscores the seriousness of family responsibility. Even pagans care for their own; a Christian who fails to do so has contradicted the faith at its most basic level. The verb ērñētai ('has denied') is the same word used for denying Christ (2 Timothy 2:12).
9. The verb katalegestho ('let her be enrolled, let her be put on the list') indicates a formal register — the 'widow list' was an official church institution. The age requirement of sixty and the phrase henos andros gynē ('a one-man woman' — the feminine parallel to the overseer requirement in 3:2) establish formal criteria. This is not merely charity but an organized role.
10. Five examples of 'good works' illustrate the character required: child-rearing (eteknotropēsen), hospitality (exenodochēsen), foot-washing (hagiōn podas enipsen — indicating both humility and practical service), caring for the afflicted (thlibomenois epērkesen), and general devotion to good works. Foot-washing was a menial task usually performed by slaves or the lowest-ranking household member (cf. John 13:1-17).
11. The verb katastrēniasōsin ('to grow wanton against, to be drawn away by desire against') is rare and implies sensual desire that conflicts with a commitment — in this case, the enrollment may have involved a pledge of dedication to the church. The concern is not that remarriage itself is sinful (v. 14 encourages it) but that breaking a formal commitment constitutes unfaithfulness.

12. The noun krima ('judgment, condemnation') and the phrase tēn prōtēn pistin ('the first faith/pledge') are debated: pistin could mean 'faith' (they have abandoned their Christian faith) or 'pledge' (they have broken their enrollment vow). The enrollment context favors 'pledge' — they made a commitment they are now breaking. The KJV's 'damnation' is too strong for krima, which can mean 'censure' or 'adverse judgment.'
13. The verb periechomenai ('going around, visiting') describes house-to-house movement that becomes an occasion for phylaroi ('gossips, chatterers') and periergoi ('busybodies, meddlers' — the same word root as in 2 Thessalonians 3:11). The 'things they should not say' (ta mē deonta) may include spreading false teaching, which ties this passage to the broader concern about heterodox influence.
14. Paul's preference (boulomai, 'I want, I desire') for younger widows to remarry is not a prohibition of celibacy but practical pastoral counsel in context. The verb oikodespotein ('to manage a household, to be master of a house') assigns significant domestic authority to women. The 'adversary' (tō antikeimenō) could be Satan, human opponents of the church, or both.
15. The verb exetrapēsan ('have turned aside, have strayed') recurs from 1:6 — the same word for the false teachers. Paul implies that some younger widows have already followed the path he warns about, making this not hypothetical but pastoral response to actual situations.
16. The SBLGNT reads pistē ('believing woman') rather than pistos ē pistē ('believing man or woman') found in some manuscripts. The economic logic is clear: private family support frees the church's limited resources for those who have no other support. The verb eparkeitō ('let her care for, let her assist') is the same used for the enrolled widow's good works in verse 10.
17. The noun presbyteroi now clearly refers to the office of elder (not merely older men as in v. 1). The 'double honor' (diplēs timēs) likely includes both respect and financial remuneration — verse 18 confirms the financial dimension. The phrase malista hoi kopiōntes en logō kai didaskalia ('especially those laboring in preaching and teaching') distinguishes a subset of elders whose primary ministry is verbal — suggesting that not all elders preached or taught.
18. Two quotations support financial compensation for elders: Deuteronomy 25:4 (the working ox must be fed) and a saying attributed to Jesus in Luke 10:7 (the laborer deserves wages). The remarkable fact is that Paul introduces both with the formula legei hē graphē ('the Scripture says'), placing a saying of Jesus on equal authority with Old Testament Scripture — one of the earliest indications of written gospel traditions being treated as authoritative.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Deuteronomy 25:4 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. The protection of elders from false accusations follows the Mosaic requirement of multiple witnesses (Deuteronomy 19:15, which Jesus also cited in Matthew 18:16). The higher standard protects leaders from manipulation while still allowing legitimate charges. The verb paradechou ('accept, receive, entertain') means not that accusations cannot be heard but that they should not be acted upon without corroboration.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 19:15. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
20. The present participle hamartanontas ('those sinning, those who persist in sin') indicates ongoing sin, not a single lapse. Public rebuke follows the failure of private processes (v. 19). The phrase enōpion pantōn ('in the presence of all') makes the correction communal — the entire congregation witnesses it. The purpose is deterrent: hina kai hoi loipoi phobon echōsin ('so that the rest may fear').
21. The solemn adjuration — invoking God, Christ, and the elect angels as witnesses — gives this charge the gravity of a courtroom oath. The warnings against prokrimatos ('prejudging, prejudice') and prosklisin ('partiality, favoritism') address the two great temptations of church discipline: deciding before hearing evidence and playing favorites. The 'elect angels' (eklektōn angelōn) are the holy angels who serve as witnesses of human conduct.
22. The 'laying on of hands' (cheiras epititheis) likely refers to ordination (cf. 4:14) rather than restoration of the fallen, though both interpretations have support. The warning against haste means: do not ordain without adequate evaluation (cf. 3:10). 'Sharing in others' sins' (koinōnei hamartiais allotriais) means that premature ordination of an unqualified person makes the ordainer complicit in the subsequent failures.
23. This personal aside reveals that Timothy had been drinking only water (mēketi hydropōtei — 'no longer be a water-drinker'), possibly as an ascetic practice or to avoid any appearance of impropriety. Paul overrides this with practical medical advice: oinō oligō ('a little wine') as a digestive aid. In the ancient world, wine was commonly used medicinally and was often safer than water. The verse interrupts the flow of instructions, suggesting it was a parenthetical pastoral concern.
24. Paul returns to the theme of evaluating people for leadership. The point is practical: some people's disqualifying sins are immediately visible (prodēloi, 'evident, conspicuous'), while others' sins are hidden and only emerge later (epakolouthousin, 'follow after'). This is why hasty ordination is dangerous (v. 22) — time reveals what is hidden.
25. The parallel is encouraging: just as hidden sins eventually surface (v. 24), hidden good works will also become visible. The phrase krybēnai ou dynantai ('cannot remain hidden') assures Timothy that genuine godliness, even when unrecognized initially, will eventually be revealed. This gives both warning and encouragement for the evaluation process.

Summary: Paul instructs enslaved people to honor their masters so that God's name is not blasphemed, and specifically addresses those with believing masters. He then returns to the problem of false teachers who use godliness as a means of financial gain, contrasting their mindset with the principle that godliness with contentment is great gain. The famous warning about the love of money follows: those who desire to be rich fall into temptation and a snare. Paul charges Timothy to flee these things and pursue righteousness, godliness, faith, love, endurance, and gentleness. The letter closes with a magnificent doxology to God as 'the blessed and only Sovereign, the King of kings and Lord of lords, who alone has immortality.'

What Makes This Remarkable: The statement 'the love of money is a root of all kinds of evil' (v. 10) is one of the most frequently quoted and misquoted verses in the Bible — Paul says love of money, not money itself. The closing doxology (vv. 15-16) is among the most exalted descriptions of God in the New Testament, drawing on Jewish liturgical traditions about God's transcendence. The 'good confession' Timothy is charged to maintain (v. 12) connects to Jesus's testimony before Pontius Pilate (v. 13), linking Timothy's pastoral courage to Christ's ultimate witness.

Translation Friction: The instructions to enslaved people (vv. 1-2) must be read in the context of ancient slavery, which was pervasive and varied in form. Paul does not endorse slavery but addresses the reality of enslaved believers within existing social structures. The 'deposit' (parathēkē, v. 20) that Timothy must guard has been interpreted as the body of apostolic teaching, anticipating 2 Timothy 1:12, 14.

Connections: The slavery instructions parallel Ephesians 6:5-9, Colossians 3:22-4:1, Titus 2:9-10, and Philemon. The love-of-money warning echoes Ecclesiastes 5:10 and Jesus's teaching in Matthew 6:19-24. The 'good confession' connects to Matthew 27:11 and John 18:36-37. The doxology echoes Deuteronomy 10:17, Daniel 2:47, and Revelation 17:14, 19:16.

¹Let all who are under the yoke as slaves regard their own masters as worthy of all honor, so that the name of God and the teaching may not be blasphemed. ²Those who have believing masters must not be disrespectful on the ground that they are brothers; rather, they must serve all the more, since those who benefit from their good service are believers and beloved. Teach and urge these things. ³If anyone teaches a different doctrine and does not agree with the sound words of our Lord Jesus Christ and the teaching that accords with godliness, ⁴Indeed, he is proud, knowing nothing, but doting concerning questions and strifes of words, whereof comes envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings,. ⁵and constant friction between people whose minds are corrupted and who have lost hold of the truth. They think that godliness is a way to make money. Stay away from them. ⁶But godliness with contentment is remarkable gain. ⁷Indeed, since we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. ⁸But if we have food and clothing, with these we will be content. ⁹But those who desire to be rich fall into temptation, into a snare, into many senseless and harmful desires that plunge people into ruin and destruction. ¹⁰For the love of money is a root of all kinds of evil. It is through this craving that some have wandered away from the faith and pierced themselves with many sorrows. ¹¹But as for you, O man of God, flee these things. Pursue righteousness, godliness, faith, love, endurance, gentleness. ¹²Fight the good fight of the faith. Take hold of the eternal life to which you were called and about which you made the good confession in the presence of many witnesses. ¹³I charge you in the presence of God, who gives life to all things, and of Christ Jesus, who in his testimony before Pontius Pilate made the good confession, ¹⁴That you keep this commandment apart from spot, unrebukeable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ. ¹⁵At the proper time, God will reveal Christ — God, the blessed and only Ruler, the King of kings and Lord of lords. ¹⁶Indeed, who only has immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach to. Whom no man has seen, nor can see — to whom be honour and authority everlasting. Amen. ¹⁷As for the rich in this present age, charge them not to be haughty or to set their hopes on the uncertainty of riches, but on God, who richly provides us with everything to enjoy. ¹⁸They are to do good, to be rich in good works, to be generous and ready to share, ¹⁹Indeed, laying up in store for themselves a good foundation opposed to the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life. ²⁰O Timothy, guard the deposit entrusted to you. Avoid the irreverent babble and contradictions of what is falsely called 'knowledge,' ²¹Indeed, which some professing have erred concerning the faith. Grace remain with you. Amen.

1. The phrase hypo zygon douloi ('slaves under the yoke') acknowledges the burden of slavery without endorsing it. The motivation for honorable conduct is the reputation of God — hina mē to onoma tou theou kai hē didaskalia blasphemētai ('so that God's name and the teaching may not be blasphemed'). Disobedient Christian slaves would give outsiders reason to malign both God and the gospel.
2. A specific problem: some enslaved Christians with Christian masters were using their shared faith as grounds for insubordination — 'we are brothers, so why should I serve you?' Paul argues the opposite: shared faith should increase rather than decrease the quality of service. The phrase hoi tēs euergeias antilambanomenoi ('those who receive the benefit') likely refers to the masters benefiting from the slaves' service, though it could also mean both parties benefit from the relationship. The tension between spiritual equality and social hierarchy was a real challenge for early Christian communities.
3. The verb heterodidaskalei ('teaches differently') returns from 1:3, forming an inclusio for the letter's central concern. 'Sound words' (hygiainousin logois, 'healthy words') uses the medical metaphor characteristic of the Pastoral Epistles. The phrase tois tou kyriou hēmōn Iēsou Christou ('those of our Lord Jesus Christ') may refer to Jesus's own teachings or to the apostolic tradition about Christ.
4. The verb tetyphōtai ('is puffed up, is clouded with conceit') recurs from 3:6. The verb nosōn ('being sick, having an unhealthy craving') extends the medical metaphor — while sound teaching is 'healthy,' the false teacher is diseased, craving (nosōn) controversies (zētēseis) and word-fights (logomachias). The five fruit of false teaching — envy (phthonos), dissension (eris), slander (blasphēmiai), evil suspicions (hyponoiai ponērai), and the constant friction of verse 5 — describe a community being destroyed from within.
5. The noun diaparatribai ('constant friction, mutual irritation') occurs only here in the New Testament. The false teachers' fundamental corruption is described at three levels: corrupted minds (diephtharmenōn ton noun), deprived of truth (apesterēmenōn tēs alētheias), and mercenary motivation (nomizontōn porismon einai tēn eusebeian — 'thinking godliness is a means of profit'). The mercenary motive is the climactic accusation.
6. Paul redefines 'gain' (porisimos): true profit is not financial enrichment through religion but eusebeia meta autarkeias ('godliness with contentment'). The noun autarkeia ('contentment, self-sufficiency') was a key Stoic virtue meaning independence from external circumstances (cf. Philippians 4:11-12). Paul Christianizes it: contentment comes not from self-mastery but from trust in God's provision.
7. This proverbial wisdom echoes Job 1:21 ('Naked I came from my mother's womb, and naked I shall return') and Ecclesiastes 5:15. The logic is simple: material wealth has no eternal portability. The textual variant hoti ('because') or dēlon hoti ('it is clear that') does not affect the meaning significantly.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Job 1:21. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Ecclesiastes 5:15. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The two essentials — diatrophas ('food, sustenance') and skepasata ('coverings' — which could include clothing and shelter) — define the baseline for contentment. The verb arkesthēsometha ('we will be content, we will be satisfied') is a future of resolution — 'we will consider these sufficient.' This is not asceticism but a rejection of acquisitiveness.
9. Paul targets not wealth itself but boulomenoi ploutein ('those who desire to be rich') — the craving for wealth. The sequence is a downward spiral: temptation (peirasmon), snare (pagida), many foolish and harmful desires (epithymias pollas anoētous kai blaberas), and finally ruin (olethron) and destruction (apōleian). The verb bythizousin ('plunge, drown') is nautical — those pursuing wealth are pulled under like a sinking ship.
10. The Greek rhiza pantōn tōn kakōn ('a root of all evils') lacks the definite article before rhiza, so 'a root' is more accurate than the KJV's 'the root.' The noun philargyria ('love of money, avarice') is the specific vice — not money itself but the love of it. The verb perieperian ('pierced through') is violent imagery — they have impaled themselves on their own desires, and the result is odynais pollais ('many sorrows, many pains'). The wandering (apeplanēthesan) from faith completes the pattern: doctrinal error, moral compromise, and financial corruption are interconnected.
11. The address anthrōpe theou ('man of God') is an Old Testament title for prophets (1 Samuel 9:6, 1 Kings 17:18, 2 Kings 1:9) — Paul identifies Timothy with the prophetic tradition. The six virtues to 'pursue' (diōke) are: righteousness (dikaiosynēn), godliness (eusebeian), faith (pistin), love (agapēn), endurance (hypomonēn), and gentleness (praypathian). The pattern is twofold: flee (pheuge) the dangers and pursue (diōke) the virtues — the Christian life involves active movement in both directions.

11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes 1 Kings 17:18. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes 2 Kings 1:9. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.

12. The verb agōnizōu ('fight, compete, struggle') is athletic/military — the same word family used throughout both letters to Timothy. The noun agōna ('fight, contest, struggle') is the struggle itself. The 'good confession' (kalēn homologian) likely refers to Timothy's baptismal confession or ordination vow, made publicly (enōpion pollōn martyron, 'before many witnesses'). 'Take hold of' (epilabou) the eternal life suggests grasping what has already been given — eternal life is both present possession and future hope.
13. God is described as zōgonountos ta panta ('giving life to all things') — a title that grounds the charge in God's sovereign power over life. Christ's 'good confession' before Pilate (martyrēsantos epi Pontiou Pilatou) parallels Timothy's confession in verse 12 — Timothy's courage is modeled on Christ's courage. This is one of the few places in the Epistles that names Pontius Pilate, rooting the gospel in historical specificity.
14. The 'commandment' (entolēn) refers to the entire charge entrusted to Timothy — his apostolic commission. The adjectives aspilon ('unstained, spotless') and anepilēmpton ('above reproach') apply to Timothy's faithfulness in keeping it. The time horizon is mechri tēs epiphaneias ('until the appearing') of Christ — Timothy's duty extends to the parousia.
15. The doxology begins. God is described as makarios ('blessed, supremely happy'), monos dynastēs ('only Sovereign, sole Ruler'), basileus tōn basileuontōn ('King of those who reign'), and kyrios tōn kyrieuontōn ('Lord of those who exercise lordship'). These titles directly challenge imperial claims — in a Roman world where Caesar claimed supreme sovereignty, Paul declares that only God holds true power. The phrase kairois idiois ('at the proper time') places the timing of Christ's return under God's sovereign control.
16. Three divine attributes complete the doxology: athanasian ('immortality' — God alone inherently possesses deathlessness; all other immortality is derivative and gifted), phōs aprositon ('unapproachable light' — God's essential nature is so radiant that no creature can draw near), and invisibility (hon eiden oudeis anthrōpōn — 'whom no human has seen or is able to see,' echoing Exodus 33:20). The doxology closes with timē kai kratos aiōnion ('honor and eternal dominion') and the solemn Amēn.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 33:20. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. After the doxology about God's transcendence, Paul returns to practical instruction for wealthy believers. Two prohibitions: mē hypselophronein ('not to be arrogant') and mēde ēlpikenai epi ploutou adēlotēti ('not to have set their hope on the uncertainty of wealth'). The positive alternative — hope in God who provides plousios ('richly') eis apolausin ('for enjoyment') — is remarkable: God is not stingy but generous, and his gifts are meant to be enjoyed, not hoarded.
18. The verb agathoergein ('to do good') and the phrase ploutein en ergois kalois ('to be rich in good works') redefine 'wealth' — true riches are generosity, not accumulation. The adjectives eumetadotous ('generous, ready to give') and koinōnikous ('ready to share, sociable in giving') describe open-handed living. The progression from 'do good' to 'be rich in good works' to 'generous' to 'ready to share' intensifies the call to active generosity.
19. The verb apothēsaurizontas ('storing up treasure') echoes Jesus's teaching in Matthew 6:19-20 — generosity in the present stores treasure for the future. The phrase tēs ontōs zōēs ('the real life, the life that is truly life') distinguishes genuine life from mere existence — what passes for life among the wealthy may not be life at all. The verb epilabōntai ('take hold of') echoes verse 12, creating a thematic ring around the closing section.
20. The noun parathēkēn ('deposit, what has been entrusted') is a banking term for something placed in trust for safekeeping. Timothy must protect the body of apostolic teaching — not innovate upon it or allow it to be corrupted. The 'falsely called knowledge' (pseudōnymou gnōseōs) may anticipate the later Gnostic movement or refer to proto-Gnostic claims already present. The word gnōsis ('knowledge') with the prefix pseudo- ('false') brands the opponents' intellectual claims as counterfeit.
21. The verb ēstochēsān ('have missed the mark, have swerved') returns from 1:6, forming a final inclusio. Those who claimed superior 'knowledge' actually missed the target of faith. The closing 'Grace be with you' (hē charis meth' hymōn) uses the plural hymōn ('you all'), suggesting the letter was intended for the wider community, not Timothy alone. The SBLGNT does not include 'Amen.'

Summary: Paul writes to Timothy from prison, expressing longing to see him and recalling Timothy's sincere faith, which first lived in his grandmother Lois and his mother Eunice. He urges Timothy to fan into flame the gift of God, reminding him that God gave a spirit not of fear but of power, love, and self-discipline. Paul calls Timothy not to be ashamed of the testimony about the Lord or of Paul as his prisoner, but to share in suffering for the gospel by the power of God, who saved us and called us according to his own purpose and grace given in Christ Jesus before the ages began. This grace has now been manifested through the appearing of Christ Jesus, who abolished death and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.

What Makes This Remarkable: This letter is widely considered Paul's last — written from a Roman prison as he anticipates death (cf. 4:6-8). The emotional texture is unique in the Pauline corpus: deeply personal, retrospective, and urgent. The reference to Timothy's grandmother and mother (v. 5) is the only place in the New Testament where a believer's spiritual heritage is traced through female family members. The christological statement in verses 9-10 is one of Paul's most compact summaries of the gospel: pre-temporal grace, historical appearing, and the abolition of death.

Translation Friction: The phrase 'before the ages began' (pro chronōn aiōniōn, v. 9) describes God's purpose in eternity past — we render without imposing specific predestination frameworks. The reference to Paul's 'deposit' (parathēkē, vv. 12, 14) echoes 1 Timothy 6:20 and raises questions about the relationship between divine preservation and human guarding of the gospel.

Connections: Timothy's family faith connects to Acts 16:1. The 'fan into flame' metaphor for spiritual gifts connects to 1 Thessalonians 5:19 ('do not quench the Spirit'). The gospel summary in vv. 9-10 parallels Titus 1:2-3 and 3:4-7. Onesiphorus's loyalty (vv. 16-18) contrasts with the Asian believers' desertion (v. 15).

¹Paul, an apostle of Christ Jesus by the will of God according to the promise of the life that is in Christ Jesus, ²From god the father and christ jesus our lord, to Timothy, my dearly dear son — Grace, mercy, and peace. ³I am grateful to God, whom I serve with a clear conscience as my ancestors did, when I remember you constantly in my prayers night and day. ⁴As I remember your tears, I long to see you, that I may be filled with joy. ⁵I am reminded of your sincere faith, a faith that lived first in your grandmother Lois and your mother Eunice, and now, I am persuaded, lives in you as well. ⁶For this reason I remind you to fan into flame the gift of God, which is in you through the laying on of my hands. ⁷Because God has not given us the spirit of fear. But of authority, and of love, and of a sound mind. ⁸Therefore do not be ashamed of the testimony about our Lord, nor of me his prisoner, but share in suffering for the gospel by the power of God, ⁹Who has saved us, and known as us with an holy calling, not in keeping with to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began,. ¹⁰However, is now made manifest by the appearing of our Saviour Jesus Christ, who has abolished death, and has brought life and immortality to light by way of the gospel:. ¹¹For which purpose I am appointed as a herald, and an emissary, and an instructor to the non-Jewish peoples. ¹²For the which cause I also suffer these things — nevertheless I am not ashamed: for I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed to him against that day. ¹³Follow the pattern of the sound words that you have heard from me, in the faith and love that are in Christ Jesus. ¹⁴Guard the good deposit entrusted to you by the Holy Spirit who dwells in us. ¹⁵You are aware that all who are in Asia turned away from me, among whom are Phygelus and Hermogenes. ¹⁶May the Lord grant mercy to the household of Onesiphorus, for he often refreshed me and was not ashamed of my chains. ¹⁷Instead, when he arrived in Rome, he searched for me earnestly and found me — ¹⁸Indeed, the Lord grant to him that he may find mercy of the Lord in that day — and in how numerous things he ministered to me at Ephesus, you knowest very well.

1. Paul's apostleship is grounded in dia thelēmatos theou ('by the will of God') — divine calling, not personal ambition. The prepositional phrase kat' epangelian zōēs ('according to the promise of life') defines his apostolic mission: he proclaims the life promised in Christ Jesus. This opening sets the letter's dominant theme: life in Christ versus the death Paul faces.
2. The adjective agapētō ('beloved') replaces gnēsio ('true, genuine') from 1 Timothy 1:2, reflecting the deeper emotional register of this final letter. The threefold greeting — charis, eleos, eirēnē ('grace, mercy, peace') — matches 1 Timothy's greeting.
3. Paul connects his service to God with his ancestral faith (apo progenōn, 'from ancestors') — his Christian faith is the fulfillment of Jewish faith, not a departure from it. The 'clear conscience' (kathara syneidēsei) assures Timothy that Paul's imprisonment is unjust, not the result of wrongdoing. The constant remembrance (adialeipton... mnēian) echoes 1 Thessalonians 1:2-3.
4. Timothy's tears (dakryōn) may refer to their last parting — a detail that reveals the depth of their relationship. The verb epipothōn ('longing, yearning') expresses intense desire. Paul's joy would be 'filled' (plērōthō) — made complete — by seeing Timothy again. From prison, facing death, Paul's greatest desire is personal reunion.
5. The adjective anypokritos ('sincere, unhypocritical, genuine') describes faith without pretense (cf. 1 Timothy 1:5). Paul traces this faith through three generations of women: grandmother (mammē) Lois and mother Eunice. This is the only New Testament passage that names a believer's grandmother in the context of faith transmission. Timothy's father was Greek (Acts 16:1), making his maternal line the source of his Jewish-Christian faith. The verb enōkēsen ('dwelt in, took up residence in') personifies faith as a living presence that inhabits successive generations.
6. The verb anazōpyrein ('to fan into flame, to rekindle') implies the gift is a fire that may have diminished — not extinguished but needing renewed attention. First Timothy 4:14 mentions the laying on of hands by the council of elders; here Paul mentions his own hands (tōn cheirōn mou) — both likely occurred at the same commissioning event. The gift (charisma) is specific to Timothy's calling and requires active cultivation.
7. The noun deilias ('cowardice, timidity, fear') is the only occurrence in the New Testament. Paul addresses what may be Timothy's temperamental tendency toward timidity. The three replacements for fear are: dynamis ('power' — the capacity to act), agapē ('love' — the motivation to act), and sōphronismos ('self-discipline, sound judgment' — the wisdom to act well). This triad equips Timothy for courageous ministry.
8. Two potential sources of shame: the testimony (martyrion) about Christ and Paul himself as a prisoner (desmion). In Roman culture, association with a convicted prisoner brought social stigma. The compound verb synkakopathēson ('share in suffering, join in hardship') calls Timothy to voluntary participation in the cost of the gospel. The enabling power for this is not Timothy's courage but dynamis theou ('the power of God').
9. This verse contains a compact gospel summary. Two divine actions — 'saved' (sōsantos) and 'called' (kalesantos) — are grounded not in human works (ou kata ta erga hēmōn) but in God's own 'purpose and grace' (idian prothesin kai charin). The stunning claim: this grace was given (dotheisan) in Christ Jesus pro chronōn aiōniōn ('before eternal ages, before time began'). God's saving purpose preceded creation itself.
10. The pre-temporal grace (v. 9) has been phanerōtheisan ('manifested, made visible') through Christ's epiphaneia ('appearing' — his incarnation and ministry). Two achievements of Christ are stated: katargēsantos ton thanaton ('having abolished/rendered powerless death') and phōtisantos zōēn kai aphtharsian ('having brought to light life and immortality'). The verb katargeō means not that death no longer occurs but that its power and finality have been broken. Light imagery pervades: death is darkness; life and imperishability (aphtharsia) are illuminated through the gospel.
11. The three roles mirror 1 Timothy 2:7 but without 'of the Gentiles' and without the oath formula. Paul's imprisonment is the direct result of his appointment — he suffers because of what he was commissioned to proclaim.

12. Paul's personal confession: ouk epaischynomai ('I am not ashamed') answers the call of verse 8. The ground of his confidence is relational — oida gar hō pepisteuka ('I know whom I have believed') — not abstract theology but personal trust in a known Person. The 'deposit' (parathēkēn mou) could mean 'what I have entrusted to him' (my life, my ministry) or 'what he has entrusted to me' (the gospel). Both readings are theologically rich. 'That day' (ekeinēn tēn hēmeran) is the day of Christ's return and final judgment.
13. The noun hypotypōsin ('pattern, model, outline') appeared in 1 Timothy 1:16 for Paul as a 'pattern' of conversion. Here it refers to the pattern of sound teaching — Timothy must not merely remember the content but maintain the form (the healthy framework) of apostolic doctrine. The qualifying phrase en pistei kai agapē ('in faith and love') means the pattern must be held with the right disposition, not merely intellectual adherence.
14. The 'good deposit' (kalēn parathēkēn) is the apostolic gospel and teaching. The means of guarding it is dia pneumatōs hagiou ('by the Holy Spirit') — human effort alone cannot preserve divine truth. The participle enoikountos ('dwelling in') describes the Spirit's permanent residence in believers, providing ongoing empowerment for the task.
15. The verb apestraphēsan ('turned away from') indicates abandonment — when Paul needed support, his Asian associates deserted him. 'All' (pantes) is likely hyperbolic but indicates widespread desertion. Phygelus and Hermogenes are named as representative defectors — they appear nowhere else in the New Testament. This personal pain sets up the contrast with Onesiphorus in the next verses.
16. Onesiphorus's name means 'profit-bearer' — fitting for one who brought refreshment (anepsyxen, 'cooled, refreshed' — the opposite of the 'rekindling' metaphor in v. 6). His loyalty is highlighted by what it cost: ouk epaischynthē ('was not ashamed') of Paul's chains (halysin). The prayer is directed to 'the household' (oikō) of Onesiphorus, which some interpreters take as evidence that Onesiphorus himself had died, though this is uncertain.
17. The adverb spoudaiōs ('earnestly, diligently') and the verb ezētēsen ('sought, searched for') indicate that finding Paul in Rome was not easy. Prisoners were not always easily located in the Roman system. Onesiphorus's persistence contrasts sharply with those who turned away (v. 15).
18. The prayer 'may the Lord grant him to find mercy from the Lord' (dōē autō ho kyrios heurein eleos para kyriou) uses 'Lord' twice — possibly distinguishing God the Father and Christ, or using 'Lord' for both as the source and the mediator of mercy. 'That day' (ekeinē tē hēmera) is the same day of judgment referenced in verse 12. Onesiphorus's service in Ephesus, well known to Timothy (beltion sy ginōskeis, 'you know better than I'), preceded his courageous service in Rome.

Summary: Paul calls Timothy to endurance in ministry through a series of vivid metaphors: a soldier, an athlete, and a farmer — each illustrating single-minded devotion and the promise of reward. Paul grounds his exhortation in the faithfulness of Christ, offering a creedal fragment ('if we died with him, we will also live with him'). He warns against quarrelsome, divisive teaching — specifically naming Hymenaeus and Philetus, who claim the resurrection has already occurred — and contrasts it with the quiet competence of a worker rightly handling the word of truth. The chapter closes with instructions on gentleness toward opponents, in hope that God may grant them repentance.

What Makes This Remarkable: *The 'faithful saying' in verses 11-13 is likely an early Christian hymn or confession, exhibiting parallelism and conditional logic: faithfulness yields co-reign, denial yields denial, yet human faithlessness cannot override divine faithfulness ('he cannot deny himself'). The metaphor of a 'large house' containing vessels of honor and dishonor (vv. 20-21) draws on the Pauline body imagery but applies it to the church's mixed composition. The phrase 'rightly handling the word of truth' (orthotomeo, v. 15) literally means 'cutting straight' — a metaphor from road-building or tentmaking.*

Translation Friction: *The identity of the 'faithful saying' (pistos ho logos) is debated — does it begin at verse 11 or earlier? We take verses 11b-13 as the quoted material. Hymenaeus appears also in 1 Timothy 1:20; whether this is the same person is assumed but uncertain. The 'resurrection has already happened' teaching (v. 18) likely reflects an over-realized eschatology that spiritualized the resurrection, a recurring problem in early churches.*

Connections: The soldier/athlete/farmer triad connects to 1 Corinthians 9:7, 24-27 and the broader Pauline theme of disciplined endurance. The 'faithful saying' formula appears five times in the Pastoral Epistles (1 Tim 1:15, 3:1, 4:9; 2 Tim 2:11; Titus 3:8). The large-house metaphor recalls Romans 9:21 (potter and vessels). The call to gentleness toward opponents anticipates the warnings of chapter 3.

¹You therefore, my child, be strengthened by the grace that is in Christ Jesus. ²And what you have heard from me in the presence of many witnesses, entrust to faithful people who will be able to teach others as well. ³Share in suffering as a good soldier of Christ Jesus. ⁴No soldier on active duty gets entangled in civilian affairs, since his aim is to please the one who enlisted him. ⁵Likewise, if anyone competes as an athlete, he is not crowned unless he competes according to the rules. ⁶The hardworking farmer ought to be the first to receive a share of the crops. ⁷Think over what I say, for the Lord will give you understanding in everything. ⁸Remember Jesus Christ, risen from the dead, descended from David — this is my gospel, ⁹Wherein I suffer trouble, as an evil doer, even to bonds. But the message of God is not bound. ¹⁰Therefore I endure everything for the sake of the elect, so that they also may obtain the salvation that is in Christ Jesus, with eternal glory. ¹¹This saying is trustworthy: If we died with him, we will also live with him; ¹²Indeed, if we suffer, we will also reign with him — if we deny him, he also will deny us: ¹³If we trust not, yet he remains faithful — he cannot deny himself. ¹⁴Remind them of these things, charging them before God not to quarrel about words, which does no good but ruins the hearers. ¹⁵Make every effort to present yourself to God as one approved, a worker who has no need to be ashamed, rightly handling the word of truth. ¹⁶But avoid irreverent, empty talk, for it will lead people into more and more ungodliness, ¹⁷Their word will eat as does a canker — of whom is Hymenaeus and Philetus; ¹⁸Indeed, who concerning the truth have erred and stated that the resurrection is past already. And overthrow the faith of some. ¹⁹But God's firm foundation stands, bearing this inscription: "The Lord knows those who are his," and, "Let everyone who names the name of the Lord depart from unrighteousness." ²⁰Now in a great house there are not only vessels of gold and silver but also of wood and clay, some for honorable use and some for dishonorable. ²¹Therefore, if anyone cleanses himself from what is dishonorable, he will be a vessel for honorable use, set apart, useful to the master of the house, ready for every good work. ²²So flee youthful passions and pursue righteousness, faith, love, and peace, along with those who call on the Lord from a pure heart. ²³Have nothing to do with foolish, ignorant controversies; you know that they breed quarrels. ²⁴And the Lord's servant must not be quarrelsome but kind to everyone, able to teach, patiently enduring evil, ²⁵In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves. If God perhaps will provide them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth. ²⁶so that they may come to their senses and escape the trap of the devil, who has taken them captive to do his will.

1. The Greek endynamou ('be strengthened') is a present passive imperative — Timothy is not told to muster his own strength but to be empowered by grace. The address teknon ('child') expresses Paul's paternal relationship to Timothy, established in 1 Timothy 1:2.
2. This verse outlines four generations of transmission: Paul to Timothy to faithful people to others. The Greek parathou ('entrust, deposit') uses banking language — the gospel is a deposit to be guarded and transmitted intact. 'Faithful people' (pistoi anthrōpoi) uses the gender-inclusive anthrōpoi rather than the male-specific andrasin.
3. The compound verb synkakopatheson ('share in suffering together') links Timothy's hardships to Paul's own — and ultimately to Christ's. The military metaphor is the first of three vocational images (soldier, athlete, farmer) that structure verses 3-6.
4. The Greek empeketai ('gets entangled') conveys the image of being woven into something that restricts movement. Roman soldiers were legally prohibited from engaging in trade during service. The application to ministry is clear: undivided loyalty to the commanding officer — Christ.
5. The athletic metaphor shifts from military endurance to disciplined competition. The Greek nomimos ('lawfully, according to the rules') refers to the strict training and competition regulations of the Greek games. The stephanos ('crown, wreath') is the victor's garland, not a royal diadem.
6. The third metaphor — the farmer — emphasizes both labor and reward. The Greek kopiaonta ('laboring, toiling') is the same word Paul uses for ministerial work (1 Cor 15:10, 1 Tim 5:17). The right to first fruits echoes Deuteronomy 18:4 and 1 Corinthians 9:7-11.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Deuteronomy 18:4. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. Paul invites Timothy to active reflection (noei, 'perceive, think over') but assures him that understanding ultimately comes from the Lord. The future indicative dosei ('will give') expresses confidence, not mere wish.
8. This compact creedal statement names the two essential facts: resurrection (egegermenon, perfect participle — risen and still alive) and Davidic descent. The order is significant: resurrection comes first, then lineage. 'My gospel' (to euangelion mou) does not mean Paul invented it but that he was entrusted with it (cf. Rom 2:16, 16:25).

9. The contrast is sharp: Paul is bound (desmōn, 'chains'), but the word of God is not bound (ou dedetai). The Greek kakourgos ('criminal, evildoer') is the same word used for the criminals crucified with Jesus (Luke 23:33). Paul's situation mirrors his Lord's.
10. Paul's suffering is vicarious — endured for the benefit of the elect (tous eklektous, 'the chosen ones'). The phrase meta doxes aioniou ('with eternal glory') places present suffering against the horizon of eschatological weight, echoing Romans 8:18 and 2 Corinthians 4:17.
11. The formula pistos ho logos ('the saying is trustworthy') introduces what appears to be an early Christian hymn or confession (vv. 11b-13). The aorist synapethanomen ('we died with') likely refers to baptismal identification with Christ's death (Rom 6:8), not physical martyrdom.
12. The parallelism intensifies: endurance yields co-reign (symbasileusomen), but denial yields reciprocal denial. The warning echoes Jesus' own words in Matthew 10:33 and Luke 12:9. The shift from first person plural ('we') maintains the hymnic, communal voice.
13. The hymn's climactic line shifts from conditional symmetry to asymmetry: human unfaithfulness does not cancel divine faithfulness. The reason is ontological — 'he cannot deny himself' (arnesasthai heauton ou dynatai). God's faithfulness is not contingent on human response but rooted in his own nature. This is not a promise of universal salvation but a statement about God's character.
14. The Greek logomachein ('to fight about words, quarrel verbally') is a compound of logos and machomai. Paul is not dismissing theology but condemning fruitless verbal combat. The strong word katastrophe ('ruin, destruction') — from which English 'catastrophe' derives — shows the stakes of divisive teaching.
15. The Greek spoudason ('be diligent, make every effort') is stronger than the KJV's 'study.' The key term orthotomeo literally means 'to cut straight' — possibly from road-building (cutting a straight path) or tentmaking (cutting fabric correctly). The KJV's 'rightly dividing' has sometimes been misused to support compartmentalizing Scripture; 'rightly handling' better captures the sense of accurate, faithful interpretation and proclamation.
16. The Greek kenophonias ('empty sounds, empty talk') is a compound of kenos ('empty') and phone ('sound, voice'). The verb periastaso ('stand away from, avoid') conveys deliberate distance. False teaching is not merely incorrect — it produces progressive moral decay (epi pleion, 'more and more').
17. The medical metaphor is graphic: gangraina ('gangrene') describes dead tissue that spreads to healthy flesh. The Greek nomen hexei ('will have pasture, will spread') uses a grazing image — the disease feeds and spreads. Hymenaeus also appears in 1 Timothy 1:20 as someone Paul 'handed over to Satan'; Philetus is mentioned only here.
18. The Greek estochesan ('missed the mark, swerved') is an archery metaphor. The heresy — that the resurrection has already occurred (teen anastasin ede gegonenai) — likely represents an over-realized eschatology that spiritualized bodily resurrection. This directly undermines the hope Paul grounded in verse 11. The verb anatrepousin ('overthrow, upset') means to flip something upside down.
19. The two inscriptions (sphragida, 'seal, inscription') combine Numbers 16:5 (God knows his own — from the Korah rebellion) and a paraphrase of Numbers 16:26 or Isaiah 52:11. The architectural metaphor of a foundation with an inscription evokes ancient building dedications. Despite defections, God's foundation remains unshaken (hesteken, perfect tense — 'stands and continues standing').
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Numbers 16:5. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 52:11. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
20. The 'great house' (megale oikia) represents the church, containing a mix of vessels. The categories are material (gold/silver vs. wood/clay) and functional (honor vs. dishonor). The metaphor echoes Romans 9:21 but shifts agency — in the next verse, one can change one's category through self-purification.
21. The Greek ekkathare ('cleanses thoroughly') implies decisive separation from the false teachers and their influence. The progression — cleansed, set apart (hegiastmenon), useful (euchreston), ready (hetoimasmenon) — moves from purification to active service. The 'master' (despotes) refers to Christ as lord of the household.
22. The contrast between 'flee' (pheuge) and 'pursue' (dioke) creates a two-directional imperative: run away from and run toward. 'Youthful passions' (neotericas epithymias) may refer to Timothy's relative youth but more broadly to impulsive desires of any kind — impatience, combativeness, pride. The four virtues (righteousness, faith, love, peace) are pursued in community, not isolation.
23. The Greek apaideutos ('uneducated, ignorant, undisciplined') describes speculations that lack intellectual and moral formation. The verb gennōsin ('breed, give birth to') personifies these controversies as producing offspring — namely fights (machas).
24. The title 'the Lord's servant' (doulon kyriou) echoes the Old Testament 'servant of the LORD' (ebed YHWH) applied to Moses, David, and the prophets. The three qualities — kind (epion), able to teach (didaktikon), patient under mistreatment (anexikakon) — describe the temperament required for corrective ministry.
25. The Greek prauteti ('gentleness, meekness') is the quality Jesus claimed for himself (Matt 11:29). Repentance (metanoian) is here described as something God grants — not merely a human decision but a divine gift. The phrase epignōsin aletheias ('full knowledge of truth') uses the intensified form epignosis, indicating deep, experiential knowledge.
26. The Greek ananepsōsin ('come to their senses, become sober again') implies that the opponents are in a state of spiritual intoxication. The imagery combines hunting (pagidos, 'snare, trap') and military capture (ezōgremenoi, 'taken alive as prisoners'). The final phrase eis to ekeinou thelema ('to do his will') is ambiguous — 'his' could refer to the devil or to God. We take it as the devil's will, from which they may escape to do God's will.

Summary: Paul warns Timothy that the last days will bring moral and spiritual decay, cataloguing vices that masquerade as piety — people who hold to the outward form of godliness while denying its power. He draws a parallel between these deceivers and Jannes and Jambres, the Egyptian magicians who opposed Moses. Against this backdrop, Paul points to his own life as an example: his teaching, conduct, persecution, and endurance. The chapter culminates in one of the most significant statements in Scripture about the nature of sacred writings: 'All Scripture is God-breathed and profitable for teaching, reproof, correction, and training in righteousness.'

What Makes This Remarkable: Verse 16 contains the word theopneustos ('God-breathed'), found nowhere else in the New Testament or in earlier Greek literature — Paul may have coined it. The term does not describe the process of inspiration (how God did it) but the origin and character of Scripture (it comes from God's breath). The vice catalogue in verses 2-5 is structured around the concept of disordered love: love of self, love of money, and love of pleasure replace love of God. The reference to Jannes and Jambres (v. 8) draws on Jewish tradition not found in the Hebrew Bible but preserved in later texts — Paul treats this tradition as reliable.

Translation Friction: The phrase 'last days' (eschatai hemerai, v. 1) has been debated — does Paul refer to a future period or to the present age inaugurated by Christ? The Pastoral Epistles treat the 'last days' as already underway, with conditions worsening. The scope of 'all Scripture' (pasa graphe) in verse 16 originally referred to the Hebrew Scriptures (the only 'Scripture' Timothy knew from childhood), though the church later applied the principle to the New Testament writings as well. We render theopneustos as 'God-breathed' rather than the KJV's 'given by inspiration of God,' which is accurate but less precise about the metaphor.

Connections: The vice catalogue parallels Romans 1:29-31 in structure and content. The Jannes and Jambres tradition appears in the Targum of Pseudo-Jonathan on Exodus 7:11 and in later Jewish and early Christian texts. Paul's appeal to his own suffering (vv. 10-11) recalls 2 Corinthians 11:23-27. The Scripture passage (vv. 15-17) connects to the deposit language of 1 Timothy 6:20 and 2 Timothy 1:14, and provides the theological basis for the 'word of truth' in 2:15.

¹But understand this: in the last days there will come times of difficulty. ²For people will be lovers of self, lovers of money, boastful, arrogant, abusive, disobedient to their parents, ungrateful, unholy, ³Apart from natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are upright, ⁴Treacherous, reckless, conceited, loving pleasure rather than loving God; ⁵Indeed, having a form of godliness, but denying the authority thereof — from such turn away. ⁶For among them are those who creep into households and captivate vulnerable women, burdened with sins and led astray by various passions, ⁷Ever learning, and never able to arrive to the knowledge of the what is genuine. ⁸Just as Jannes and Jambres opposed Moses, so these men also oppose the truth — people of corrupted minds, disqualified regarding the faith. ⁹But they will not get very far, for their folly will be plain to all, as was the folly of those two. ¹⁰You, however, have followed my teaching, my conduct, my aim in life, my faith, my patience, my love, my endurance, ¹¹Persecutions, afflictions, which arrived to me at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra. What persecutions I endured — but out of them every one of the Lord delivered me. ¹²Indeed, all who desire to live a godly life in Christ Jesus will be persecuted. ¹³However, evil men and seducers will wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived. ¹⁴But as for you, continue in what you have learned and have firmly believed, knowing from whom you learned it ¹⁵That from a child you have known the holy scriptures, which are able to make you wise to salvation by way of faith which is in Christ Jesus. ¹⁶All Scripture is God-breathed and profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, and for training in righteousness, ¹⁷Indeed, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished to all good deeds.

1. The Greek chalepoi ('difficult, hard, dangerous') is used in Matthew 8:28 to describe the Gadarene demoniacs as 'fierce.' The 'last days' (eschatai hemerai) in Pauline theology began with Christ's resurrection and continue until his return — they are not solely future.

2. The catalogue begins with two phil- compounds: philautoi ('lovers of self') and philargyroi ('lovers of money'), establishing disordered love as the root problem. This prepares for the climactic contrast in verse 4: 'lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God.' The list echoes Romans 1:29-31, where moral decay follows the rejection of God.
3. The Greek astorgoi ('without natural affection, heartless') denotes the absence of storge — the instinctive love within families. The word diaboloi ('slandereous') is the same word used as a title for the devil (ho diabolos, 'the slanderer'). These people take on the character of the adversary himself.
4. The catalogue reaches its climax with the contrast: philedonoi mallon e philotheoi ('lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God'). The structure mirrors the opening — phil-compounds frame the entire list. The Greek tetyphomenoi ('puffed up, blinded by smoke') suggests delusion caused by pride.
5. The Greek morphosin ('outward form, appearance') implies an external shape without internal reality — a religious veneer over moral emptiness. The 'power' (dynamis) of godliness is the transformative energy of the Holy Spirit working through genuine faith. The command apotrepeō ('turn away from, avoid') is present imperative — this is an ongoing stance, not a one-time action.
6. The Greek gynaikaria (diminutive of gynē) has often been translated pejoratively ('silly women'). The diminutive likely indicates vulnerability rather than contempt — these are people in precarious situations who are exploited by predatory teachers. 'Captivate' (aichmalotizontes) is military language: taking prisoners of war. The false teachers conduct household-level infiltration campaigns.
7. The paradox of perpetual learning without ever reaching truth (epignosis aletheias) describes a cycle of religious consumption without transformation. The intensified epignosis ('full, experiential knowledge') underscores what is missing — not information but genuine encounter with truth.
8. Jannes and Jambres are not named in the Hebrew Bible but appear in Jewish tradition as the Egyptian magicians who replicated Moses' signs (Exodus 7:11, 8:7). Paul draws on this extrabiblical tradition without qualification. The term adokimoi ('disqualified, failing the test') is the opposite of dokimos ('approved') in 2:15 — these men fail the very test Timothy is called to pass.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 7:11 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. Paul offers reassurance: the false teachers' progress has limits. Just as Jannes and Jambres were ultimately exposed and defeated (Exodus 8:18-19, 9:11), so these opponents will be revealed. The Greek anoia ('folly, senselessness') contrasts with the 'knowledge of truth' they claim to possess.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 8:18-19. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The Greek parekolouthesas ('followed closely, investigated, accompanied') means Timothy did not merely hear Paul's teaching but observed his entire life. The seven items form a comprehensive portrait: doctrine (didaskalia), behavior (agoge), purpose (prothesis), faith (pistis), patience (makrothymia), love (agape), and endurance (hypomone).
11. Paul cites three cities from his first missionary journey (Acts 13-14) — notably, these are cities in Timothy's home region. Timothy would have known firsthand about these events (Acts 16:1-2). The Lystra reference is especially poignant: Paul was stoned and left for dead there (Acts 14:19). The declaration 'the Lord rescued me from them all' (ek pantōn me erhysato ho kyrios) echoes Psalm 34:19.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 34:19. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. This is a universal statement without qualification: all (pantes) who pursue godliness in Christ will face persecution. The passive diochthesontai ('will be persecuted') is a divine passive — God permits persecution as part of the faithful life. This verse functions as a theological axiom grounding the entire chapter.
13. The Greek goetes ('impostors, sorcerers, charlatans') originally meant 'wailing ones' — referring to the incantations of sorcerers. The double participle planōntes kai planōmenoi ('deceiving and being deceived') captures the self-referential nature of deception: the deceivers are themselves deceived. This is not merely about bad actors but about a contagion of falsehood.
14. The Greek epistōthes ('have become convinced, have been assured') implies settled conviction, not mere intellectual acceptance. 'From whom' (para tinōn) is plural — Timothy learned from multiple sources: Paul, his grandmother Lois, and his mother Eunice (1:5). The appeal to personal relationships as a basis for trust in teaching is characteristic of the Pastoral Epistles.
15. The Greek ta hiera grammata ('the sacred writings') refers to the Hebrew Scriptures — the Torah, Prophets, and Writings that Timothy learned from his Jewish mother and grandmother. The word brephos ('infant, baby') indicates that Timothy's scriptural education began in earliest childhood. These writings accomplish their saving purpose 'through faith in Christ Jesus' — the Old Testament is not superseded but fulfilled.
16. The Greek theopneustos ('God-breathed') is a compound of theos ('God') and pneō ('to breathe, blow'). It appears nowhere else in the New Testament and may be Paul's own coinage. The word describes not the process by which Scripture was written but its character and origin — it carries God's breath, his life-giving and authoritative word. The KJV's 'given by inspiration of God' accurately conveys the meaning but obscures the vivid breath metaphor. The four uses of Scripture — teaching (didaskalia), reproof (elegmon), correction (epanorthōsin), and training in righteousness (paideian tēn en dikaiosynē) — cover both doctrine and ethics, both confrontation and formation.

17. The Greek artios ('complete, capable, proficient') does not mean sinless perfection but fitness for purpose. The related verb exertismenos ('equipped, fully furnished') reinforces the practical aim: Scripture is not given for abstract knowledge but to produce people capable of every good work. 'The person of God' (ho tou theou anthrōpos) is a title with Old Testament roots (applied to Moses, Samuel, Elijah, and others) now applied to the Christian minister.

Summary: Paul delivers his most solemn charge to Timothy: preach the word in season and out of season, for a time is coming when people will accumulate teachers to suit their own desires. Paul then shifts to a deeply personal valediction — 'I have fought the good fight, I have finished the race, I have kept the faith' — announcing that his departure is at hand and a crown of righteousness awaits him. The chapter closes with personal requests and greetings: Demas has deserted, Luke alone is with him, Paul asks for Mark and for his cloak and scrolls left at Troas. He reports on Alexander the coppersmith's opposition and notes that at his first defense, no one stood with him — but the Lord stood by him and strengthened him.

What Makes This Remarkable: *This chapter is widely regarded as Paul's final written words — a spiritual last will and testament. The triple declaration in verse 7 ('I have fought... finished... kept') uses three perfect tenses, each indicating completed action with ongoing results. The metaphors shift from combat (agōn) to athletics (dromos) to stewardship (pistin) in three staccato clauses. The personal details in verses 9-21 provide an unparalleled window into Paul's final circumstances: the paths of abandonment, the practicality of requesting a cloak for Roman winter, and the enduring importance of his scrolls (likely Scripture).*

Translation Friction: *The identity of the 'first defense' (prōtē apologia, v. 16) is debated — it may refer to a preliminary hearing in Paul's current trial or to his first Roman imprisonment (Acts 28). 'The lion's mouth' (v. 17) may be literal (the arena), figurative (Satan or Nero), or an allusion to Psalm 22:21. Alexander the coppersmith (v. 14) may or may not be the Alexander of 1 Timothy 1:20 or Acts 19:33. The 'scrolls, especially the parchments' (v. 13) likely refer to Old Testament Scriptures, though their exact contents are unknown.*

Connections: The charge to 'preach the word' (v. 2) builds on the Scripture passage in 3:16-17. The 'crown of righteousness' (v. 8) connects to the athletic crown in 2:5 and the crowns in 1 Corinthians 9:25, James 1:12, and Revelation 2:10. Paul's abandonment at his trial (v. 16) echoes Jesus' experience in Gethsemane, and his prayer 'may it not be charged against them' echoes Stephen (Acts 7:60). The lion's mouth alludes to Psalm 22:21 and Daniel 6:22.

1I solemnly charge you in the presence of God and of Christ Jesus, who is to judge the living and the dead, and by his appearing and his kingdom: 2Preach the word; be ready in season and out of season; reprove, rebuke, and exhort, with complete patience and teaching. 3For the time is coming when people will not endure sound teaching but, having itching ears, they will accumulate for themselves teachers to suit their own passions, 4They will turn away their ears from the truth, and will be turned to fables. 5As for you, be sober-minded in everything, endure suffering, do the work of an evangelist, fulfill your ministry. 6For I am already being poured out as a drink offering, and the time of my departure has come. 7I have fought the good fight, I have finished the race, I have kept the faith. 8From now on there is laid up for me the crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, will award to me on that day — and not only to me but also to all who have loved his appearing. 9Do your best to come to me soon. 10For Demas, in love with this present age, deserted me and went to Thessalonica. Crescens went to Galatia, Titus to Dalmatia. 11Only Luke is with me. Get Mark and bring him with you, for he is useful to me for ministry. 12Tychicus I have sent to Ephesus. 13When you come, bring the cloak that I left with Carpus at Troas, also the books, and above all the parchments. 14Alexander the coppersmith did me great harm; the Lord will repay him according to his deeds. 15Beware of him yourself, for he strongly opposed our message. 16At my first defense no one came to stand by me, but all deserted me. May it not be charged against them! 17But the Lord stood by me and strengthened me, so that through me the message might be fully proclaimed and all the Gentiles might hear it. So I was rescued from the lion's mouth. 18The Lord will rescue me from every evil deed and bring me safely into his heavenly kingdom. To him be the glory forever and ever. Amen. 19Greet Prisca and Aquila, and the household of Onesiphorus. 20Erast us remained at Corinth, and I left Trophimus, who was ill, at Miletus. ²¹Do your best to come before winter. Eubulus sends greetings to you, as do Pudens and Linus and Claudia and all the brothers and sisters. ²²The Lord be with your spirit. Grace be with you.

1. The Greek diamartyromai ('I solemnly testify, I charge under oath') is the strongest form of adjuration available. The charge is issued before two witnesses: God and Christ Jesus. The phrase 'the living and the dead' (zōntas kai nekrous) encompasses all humanity across all time. 'His appearing' (tēn epiphaneian) and 'his kingdom' (tēn basileian) serve as the eschatological horizon that gives urgency to the charge.
2. Five imperatives in rapid succession create urgency: preach (kēryxon), be ready (epistēthi), reprove (elegxon), rebuke (epitimēson), exhort (parakaleson). The phrase 'in season and out of season' (eukairōs akairōs) means 'when it is convenient and when it is not' — the preacher does not wait for ideal conditions. The final phrase adds the necessary temperament: patience (makrothymia) and substance (didachē).
3. The medical metaphor hygiainousēs didaskalias ('sound/healthy teaching') recurs throughout the Pastoral Epistles — false teaching is a disease, sound teaching is health. The vivid image of 'itching ears' (knēthomenoi tēn akoēn) describes people who crave novelty and flattery rather than truth. The verb episōreuousin ('pile up, accumulate') suggests an excess of teachers — not quality but quantity, selected to validate existing desires.
4. The contrast is between truth (alētheia) and myths (mythous). The Greek mythoi in the Pastoral Epistles likely refers to speculative theological narratives — genealogical fantasies, proto-gnostic origin stories, or fanciful reinterpretations of Scripture (cf. 1 Tim 1:4, 4:7; Titus 1:14). The passive ektrapēsontai ('will be turned aside') suggests they are led astray rather than making a fully conscious choice.
5. Four more imperatives directed at Timothy: be sober (nēphe), suffer (kakopathēson), evangelize (ergon poiēson euangelistou), fulfill (plērophorēson). The term 'evangelist' (euangelistou) designates one who proclaims the good news — a role distinct from but overlapping with pastor and teacher (cf. Eph 4:11). 'Fulfill your ministry' (tēn diakonian sou plērophorēson) means to carry it to completion, leaving nothing undone.
6. The Greek spondomai ('I am being poured out as a libation') is a sacrificial metaphor — Paul's life is being poured out like the wine offering that accompanied temple sacrifices (Num 15:5-7; Phil 2:17). The word analyseos ('departure, loosing, breaking camp') is a euphemism for death drawn from military or nautical language — a ship being untied from port or an army breaking camp to march. Paul faces death not with dread but with the composure of a completed mission.
7. Three perfect tenses in succession — each denoting completed action with lasting results. The 'good fight' (kalon agōna) may refer to an athletic contest or military campaign. The 'race' (dromon) is a footrace — Paul has reached the finish line. 'Kept the faith' (tēn pistin tetērēka) carries a double sense: he has maintained personal trust in Christ and has guarded the deposit of apostolic teaching (cf. 1 Tim 6:20). This is perhaps the most quoted passage in the Pastoral Epistles.
8. The stephanos ('crown, wreath') is the victor's garland, not a royal diadem (diadēma). The genitive 'of righteousness' may mean the crown that consists of righteousness, the crown given for righteousness, or the crown awarded by the righteous judge. Paul immediately universalizes the promise: the crown belongs to 'all who have loved his appearing' (tois ēgapēkosin tēn epiphaneian autou) — not just apostles but every believer. The perfect participle ēgapēkosin ('have loved and continue to love') indicates an ongoing disposition.
9. The shift from theological grandeur to personal urgency is jarring and deeply human. Paul is alone, facing death, and wants Timothy beside him. The imperative spoudason ('be diligent, hurry') conveys genuine urgency.
10. Demas is mentioned positively in Colossians 4:14 and Philemon 24 but here has 'loved this present age' (agapēsas ton nyn aiōna) — the same verb used of those who 'loved his appearing' in verse 8, creating a painful contrast. Crescens and Titus apparently left on legitimate missions (no negative language is used), unlike Demas who deserted (egkatelipen, 'abandoned').
11. Luke the physician (Col 4:14) — traditionally the author of the Gospel of Luke and Acts — is Paul's sole remaining companion. The request for Mark (John Mark) represents a remarkable reconciliation: Paul had refused to take Mark on the second missionary journey because Mark had deserted them earlier (Acts 15:37-39). Now Paul calls him euchrēstos ('useful, serviceable') — the same root as the name Onesimus ('useful') in Philemon.
12. Tychicus was Paul's trusted envoy, mentioned in Acts 20:4, Ephesians 6:21, Colossians 4:7, and Titus 3:12. He may have carried this very letter and was likely sent to relieve Timothy so Timothy could travel to Paul in Rome.
13. The phailonēn ('cloak') was a heavy outer garment needed for a Roman winter (cf. v. 21). The request is poignantly practical — Paul is cold. The biblia ('books, scrolls') were likely papyrus rolls, and the membranas ('parchments') were animal-skin documents — possibly Old Testament Scriptures, legal documents, or Paul's own notes. The distinction between papyrus and parchment suggests different types of documents. This verse provides a rare glimpse into the material conditions of Paul's imprisonment.
14. The identification 'the coppersmith' (ho chalkeus) distinguishes this Alexander from others with the same common name. His 'great harm' (polla kaka) may have been testimony against Paul at trial. Paul does not curse Alexander but commits judgment to the Lord — echoing Psalm 62:12 and Proverbs 24:12. The future apodōsei ('will repay') expresses confident trust in divine justice.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalm 62:12. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.

14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Proverbs 24:12. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The warning to Timothy suggests Alexander may still be active and dangerous. The phrase tois hēmeterois logois ('our words') could mean Paul's legal defense or the apostolic message more broadly.
16. The apologia ('defense') is a legal term for a formal defense in court. The abandonment by 'all' (pantes) parallels Jesus' experience when the disciples fled (Matt 26:56). Paul's prayer — mē autois logistheīē ('may it not be reckoned to them') — echoes Stephen's dying prayer (Acts 7:60) and Jesus' words from the cross (Luke 23:34). The optative mood (logistheīē) expresses a genuine wish.
17. The contrast is stark: all human companions deserted, but the Lord stood by (parestē) — the very verb used for human support in the previous verse. The purpose of divine strengthening was not personal comfort but mission completion: full proclamation (plērophorēthē) to all nations (panta ta ethnē). The 'lion's mouth' (stomatos leontos) most likely alludes to Psalm 22:21 and may refer to the immediate threat of execution, to Nero, or to Satan (cf. 1 Pet 5:8).
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalm 22:21. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. Paul's confidence in rescue (rhysetai, future tense) is not necessarily about avoiding physical death — it is about deliverance from spiritual defeat. The ultimate salvation is entrance into 'his heavenly kingdom' (tēn basileian autou tēn epouranion). The doxology ('to him be the glory forever and ever, amen') follows the standard form of Jewish and early Christian praise, closing this section of the letter with worship.
19. Prisca (the formal name; Priscilla is the diminutive used in Acts) and Aquila were Paul's co-workers and hosts (Acts 18:2-3, Rom 16:3-4). The 'household of Onesiphorus' (rather than Onesiphorus himself) has led some scholars to conclude that Onesiphorus had died — Paul commended his past service in 1:16-18. However, this is not certain.
20. Erastus may be the city treasurer of Corinth mentioned in Romans 16:23. Trophimus was the Ephesian companion whose presence with Paul in Jerusalem triggered the riot in Acts 21:29. The detail that Paul left Trophimus ill (asthenounta) is significant — even Paul, who had healed others, did not always exercise miraculous healing.
21. The urgency 'before winter' (pro cheimōnos) is practical — sea travel ceased during winter, and Paul needed his cloak (v. 13). But it also carries the unspoken weight of Paul's limited time. Linus is traditionally identified as the first bishop of Rome after Peter. 'The brothers and sisters' (hoi adelphoi) uses the masculine plural inclusively, as is standard in Greek.
22. The closing benediction has two parts: a singular address to Timothy ('your spirit,' sou) and a plural blessing on the community ('with you,' hymōn). The shift from singular to plural suggests the letter, while personal, was also meant to be read in the congregation. The SBLGNT does not include 'Amen' in the closing, which appears in some later manuscripts. This is Paul's final recorded word: grace.

Titus

Summary: Paul opens his letter to Titus with a dense theological greeting that grounds apostolic authority in God's promise of eternal life 'before the ages began.' He then addresses the reason Titus was left in Crete: to appoint elders in every town. Paul provides qualifications for these leaders — blameless character, faithful family, and sound doctrine — before turning to the specific problem on Crete: insubordinate people, especially from the circumcision party, who are disrupting whole households for dishonest gain. Paul quotes a Cretan prophet (Epimenides) — 'Cretans are always liars, evil beasts, lazy gluttons' — and affirms the assessment, urging Titus to rebuke them sharply so they may be sound in the faith.

What Makes This Remarkable: The opening sentence (vv. 1-4) is one of the longest and most theologically compressed in the Pauline corpus, containing Paul's self-designation, God's pre-temporal promise, the revelation of the word through preaching, and the address to Titus — all in a single Greek sentence. The quotation of Epimenides (v. 12) is extraordinary: Paul cites a pagan poet-prophet and calls him a 'prophet of their own' (idios autōn prophētēs), granting a measure of truthful authority to a non-Israelite voice. This creates the famous 'liar paradox' — if a Cretan says all Cretans are liars, is the statement itself a lie?

Translation Friction: The elder/overseer terminology (presbyteros/episkopos) appears interchangeable in this passage, which has implications for church governance debates. Paul begins with 'elder' (v. 5) and shifts to 'overseer' (v. 7) without distinction. The Epimenides quotation raises questions about Paul's use of pagan literature and cultural stereotyping — he applies a broad ethnic generalization to a specific theological problem. We render the text as given without softening or qualifying Paul's argument.

Connections: The elder qualifications parallel 1 Timothy 3:1-7 closely but are adapted for the Cretan context. The 'circumcision party' (v. 10) connects to the controversy in Galatians 2:12 and Acts 15. The pre-temporal promise (v. 2) echoes Romans 16:25-26 and Ephesians 1:4. The Epimenides quotation is one of three pagan citations in Paul (cf. Acts 17:28, 1 Cor 15:33).

¹Paul, a servant of God and an apostle of Jesus Christ, for the sake of the faith of God's elect and their knowledge of the truth that accords with godliness, ²In hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the present age began;. ³However, has in due times manifested his word through preaching, which is committed to me in keeping with to the commandment of God our Saviour;. ⁴Indeed, to Titus, mine own son following the common faith — Grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ our Saviour. ⁵This is why I left you in Crete, so that you might put what remained into order, and appoint elders in every town as I directed you — ⁶An elder must be above reproach, faithful to his wife, and his children must be believers who are not wild or disobedient. ⁷For an overseer, as God's steward, must be above reproach. He must not be arrogant or quick-tempered or a drunkard or violent or greedy for gain, ⁸However, a lover of hospitality, a lover of good men, sober, just, holy, temperate. ⁹He must hold firm to the trustworthy word as taught, so that he may be able both to give instruction in sound doctrine and also to rebuke those who contradict it. ¹⁰For there are many who are insubordinate, empty talkers and deceivers, especially those of the circumcision party. ¹¹They must be silenced, since they are upsetting whole households by teaching for shameful gain what they ought not to teach. ¹²One of the Cretans, a prophet of their own, said, "Cretans are always liars, evil beasts, lazy gluttons." ¹³This witness is true. For this reason rebuke them sharply, that they may be sound in the faith;. ¹⁴Not giving heed to Jewish fables, and commandments of people, that redirect from the what is genuine. ¹⁵To the pure, all things are pure, but to the defiled and unbelieving, nothing is pure; both their minds and their consciences are defiled. ¹⁶They profess to know God, but they deny him by their works. They are detestable, disobedient, unfit for any good work.

1. Paul identifies himself as both 'servant of God' (doulos theou) — a designation shared with Moses, David, and the prophets — and 'apostle of Jesus Christ.' The dual title grounds his authority in both the Old Testament heritage and the new apostolic commission. The phrase kat' eusebeian ('according to godliness') links knowledge of truth inseparably to reverent living.
2. The Greek apseudēs ('without falsehood, who never lies') is a hapax legomenon in the New Testament, applied to God as the one whose character makes deception impossible. The phrase pro chronōn aiōniōn ('before eternal times') places God's promise in eternity past — before creation, before history, the plan of salvation was already determined.
3. The shift from eternal promise (v. 2) to historical manifestation (v. 3) spans the entire sweep of redemptive history: what God purposed before time, he revealed in time. The title 'God our Savior' (tou sōtēros hēmōn theou) is distinctive to the Pastoral Epistles and applies 'Savior' directly to God the Father, not only to Christ — a pattern that alternates throughout Titus.
4. The Greek gnēsio teknō ('true, legitimate child') indicates that Paul was instrumental in Titus's conversion. The phrase kata koinēn pistin ('according to a shared faith') emphasizes that their bond is not ethnic or biological but rooted in the same gospel. The SBLGNT reads 'grace and peace' without 'mercy' (eleos), which appears in some manuscripts. Now 'Savior' (sōtēros) is applied to Christ Jesus — the alternation with 'God our Savior' (v. 3) is deliberate throughout Titus.
5. Paul's departure from Crete is not recorded in Acts, suggesting this letter was written during a period of ministry not covered by Acts (possibly after a release from the first Roman imprisonment). The verb epidiorthōsē ('set right, put in order') implies that the church organization on Crete was incomplete. The instruction to appoint elders (presbyterous) 'in every town' (kata polin) indicates multiple congregations across the island.
6. The qualification 'above reproach' (anengklētos, 'not able to be called to account') sets the baseline. 'Husband of one wife' (mias gynaikos anēr) is debated — it may prohibit polygamy, remarriage after divorce, or remarriage after a spouse's death, or it may more broadly require marital faithfulness. The children must be pista ('faithful, believing') — the expectation is that an elder's household reflects his leadership capacity.
7. The shift from 'elder' (presbyteros, v. 5) to 'overseer' (episkopos, v. 7) without distinction indicates that these are the same office described from different angles — presbyteros emphasizing seniority and episkopos emphasizing function. The five negatives (not arrogant, not quick-tempered, not a drunkard, not violent, not greedy) describe the vices an overseer must not have, paralleling the positive qualities that follow.
8. Six positive virtues replace the five negatives: hospitable (philoxenos, 'loving strangers'), lover of good (philagathon), self-controlled (sōphrona), upright (dikaion), holy (hosion), and disciplined (enkratēs). The pairing of phil- compounds (philoxenos, philagathon) echoes the vice catalogue in 2 Timothy 3:2-4 where disordered phil- words describe the wicked.
9. The capstone qualification is doctrinal: the elder must hold firm (antechomenon, 'cling to') the faithful word. This has a dual purpose: positive instruction (parakalein, 'exhort, encourage') and negative correction (elegchein, 'rebuke, convict'). The phrase didaskalia hygiainousa ('sound/healthy doctrine') is the medical metaphor characteristic of the Pastoral Epistles.
10. The 'circumcision party' (hoi ek tēs peritomēs) refers to Jewish Christians who insisted on Torah observance (including circumcision) as necessary for Gentile believers — the same faction opposed in Galatians and Acts 15. The three descriptors — insubordinate (anypotaktoi), empty talkers (mataiologoi), and deceivers (phrenapitai, 'mind-deceivers') — escalate from disobedience to delusion.
11. The Greek epistomizein ('to stop the mouth, to muzzle, to silence') is vivid — these teachers must be gagged. The damage is domestic: 'whole households' (holous oikous) are being overturned (anatrepousin). The motive is financial — aischrou kerdous charin ('for the sake of shameful gain'). The combination of theological error and financial exploitation characterizes the false teachers throughout the Pastoral Epistles.

12. The quotation is attributed to Epimenides of Knossos (c. 6th century BC), a semi-legendary Cretan poet-prophet. Paul calls him 'a prophet of their own' (idios autōn prophētēs), granting a degree of prophetic authority to a pagan voice — similar to his citation of Aratus in Acts 17:28. The three charges — liars (pseustai), evil beasts (kaka thēria), and lazy gluttons (gasteres argai, literally 'idle bellies') — are harsh by modern standards but serve Paul's rhetorical purpose.
13. Paul's endorsement — 'this testimony is true' (hē martyria hautē estin alēthēs) — has troubled commentators. Paul is not making a universal ethnic claim but using the Cretan poet's words to describe the specific false teachers at work in the Cretan churches. The adverb apotomōs ('sharply, severely') is from a root meaning 'to cut' — the rebuke must be surgical, aimed at restoring health (hygiainōsin, 'may be healthy/sound').
14. The 'Jewish myths' (Ioudaikois mythois) likely refer to speculative elaborations on Old Testament genealogies and narratives (cf. 1 Tim 1:4, 4:7). The 'commands of people' (entolais anthrōpōn) echoes Isaiah 29:13 (cited by Jesus in Mark 7:7) — human religious regulations that replace divine truth.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 29:13. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. This proverbial statement (panta kathara tois katharais) addresses the food laws and purity regulations the circumcision party was imposing. It echoes Jesus' teaching in Mark 7:15-19 and Paul's argument in Romans 14:14, 20. The principle is that purity is a matter of internal disposition, not external regulation. For the defiled (memiammenois), the corruption is total — both mind (nous) and conscience (syneidēsis) are contaminated.
16. The chapter ends with a devastating verdict: verbal profession of God (homologousin eidenai) is contradicted by behavioral denial (tois ergois amountai). The three final adjectives — detestable (bdelyktoi, a term for ritual abomination), disobedient (apeitheis), and disqualified (adokimoi, 'failing the test') — are especially ironic for people who claim special knowledge of God's requirements. The term adokimoi echoes 2 Timothy 3:8 and directly opposes the 'approved' (dokimos) worker of 2 Timothy 2:15.

Summary: Paul instructs Titus to teach what accords with sound doctrine, then specifies age- and gender-appropriate exhortations: older men are to be temperate and sound in faith; older women are to be reverent and train the younger women in domestic virtues; younger men are to be self-controlled, with Titus himself as a model. The chapter then soars into one of the New Testament's most concentrated theological passages: 'The grace of God has appeared, bringing salvation for all people, training us to renounce ungodliness and to live self-controlled, upright, and godly lives in the present age, while we wait for the blessed hope — the appearing of the glory of our great God and Savior Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us to redeem us from all lawlessness and to purify for himself a people of his own who are zealous for good works.'

What Makes This Remarkable: Verses 11-14 constitute one of the densest christological and soteriological passages in the Pastoral Epistles. The phrase 'our great God and Savior Jesus Christ' (v. 13) is one of the clearest New Testament affirmations of Christ's deity, applying both 'God' and 'Savior' to Jesus in a single construction (the Granville Sharp rule in Greek grammar). Grace is personified as a teacher (paideuousa, v. 12) — the same grace that saves also trains. The tension between 'has appeared' (v. 11, first coming) and 'the appearing' (v. 13, second coming) structures Christian existence as life between two epiphanies.

Translation Friction: The household instructions in verses 2-10 reflect first-century social structures, particularly regarding women's roles. We render the Greek accurately without either modernizing or amplifying the cultural specifics. The phrase 'our great God and Savior Jesus Christ' (v. 13) is grammatically ambiguous — it could refer to one person (Jesus Christ who is both God and Savior) or two persons (God the Father and Jesus Christ the Savior). The Granville Sharp construction strongly favors the single-referent reading, which we adopt. The instruction for slaves (vv. 9-10) is rendered faithfully; Paul addresses the social reality without endorsing slavery as an institution.

Connections: The grace epiphany (vv. 11-14) parallels Titus 3:4-7 in structure and theology. The 'blessed hope' connects to Romans 8:23-25 and 1 Corinthians 15:51-52. Christ's self-giving 'to redeem us from all lawlessness' (v. 14) echoes Psalm 130:8 and Ezekiel 37:23. The phrase 'a people of his own' (laon periousion) quotes the Septuagint of Exodus 19:5 and Deuteronomy 14:2, applying Israel's covenant identity to the church.

¹But as for you, teach what accords with sound doctrine. ²Older men are to be sober-minded, dignified, self-controlled, sound in faith, in love, and in endurance. ³Older women likewise are to be reverent in behavior, not slanderers or slaves to much wine. They are to teach what is good, ⁴That they may instruct the youthful women to be sober, to devotion their husbands, to devotion their children,. ⁵to be self-controlled, pure, attentive to their homes, kind, and respectful toward their own husbands, so that the word of God will not be discredited. ⁶Likewise, urge the younger men to be self-controlled. ⁷Show yourself in all respects to be a model of good works, and in your teaching show integrity, dignity, ⁸Use wholesome speech that cannot be criticized, so that any opponent will be put to shame, having nothing bad to say about us. ⁹Bondservants are to be submissive to their own masters in everything; they are to be well-pleasing, not argumentative, ¹⁰Not purloining, but shewing all upright fidelity. That they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all matters. ¹¹For the grace of God has appeared, bringing salvation for all people, ¹²It teaches us to say no to ungodliness and worldly passions, and to live self-controlled, upright, and godly lives in this present age. ¹³while we wait for the blessed hope — the glorious appearing of our great God and Savior, Jesus Christ. ¹⁴Who offered himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify to himself a peculiar those present, zealous of good deeds. ¹⁵Declare these things; exhort and rebuke with all authority. Let no one disregard you.

1. The contrast with the false teachers of chapter 1 is marked by the emphatic 'you' (sy de). The verb lalei ('speak, teach') combined with prepei ('is fitting, accords with') demands that teaching content match doctrinal health. The medical metaphor hygiainousē didaskalia ('sound/healthy doctrine') continues from 1:9.
2. The Greek presbytas ('older men') refers to age, not the office of elder (presbyteros). The three character traits (sober-minded, dignified, self-controlled) are followed by three spheres of health: faith (pistei), love (agapē), and endurance (hypomonē). The medical metaphor appears again: hygiainontas ('being healthy/sound') in these three areas.
3. The Greek hieroprepes ('reverent, befitting a sacred person') literally means 'fitting for a temple' — older women are to carry themselves with priestly dignity. The prohibition against being diabolous ('slandorous') uses the same word as 'devil' — gossip makes one an agent of the accuser. The positive role kalodidaskalous ('teachers of good things') establishes older women as authorized teachers within the community.
4. The verb sōphronizōsin ('train, bring to their senses, encourage') implies practical mentoring, not merely theoretical instruction. The two phil- compounds — philandrous ('husband-loving') and philoteknous ('children-loving') — place domestic relationships at the center of the younger women's formation. This is mentorship by example, not classroom instruction.
5. The purpose clause — 'that the word of God may not be reviled' (hina mē ho logos tou theou blasphēmētai) — reveals the missional logic behind the instruction. In a Roman context where Christianity was already suspect, household disorder would bring public disgrace on the gospel. The Greek oikourgous ('working at home, managing the household') describes domestic productivity and management, not mere confinement.
6. The brevity is striking — younger men receive a single instruction: sōphronein ('to be self-controlled'). Self-control (sōphrosynē) is the virtue most frequently mentioned in this chapter, appearing in some form in verses 2, 4, 5, 6, and 12. It is the master virtue for the Cretan context.
7. Titus himself must be the typon ('pattern, model, example') — teaching is authenticated by the teacher's life. The qualities listed — aphthorian ('integrity, incorruptibility') and semnotēta ('dignity, gravity') — apply to both the content and the manner of his teaching.
8. The goal is apologetic: sound speech (logon hygiē) that is beyond condemnation (akatagnōston) removes ammunition from opponents. The Greek entrapē ('may be put to shame') describes the silencing of critics who can find no legitimate charge — a missional strategy through irreproachable conduct and teaching.
9. The Greek doulous ('slaves, bondservants') addresses the large enslaved population in the Roman world. Paul's instructions operate within the existing social structure while transforming the slave's motivation — as the next verse shows, the purpose is 'to adorn the doctrine of God.' Paul does not explicitly endorse or condemn the institution here; the Pastoral Epistles focus on conduct within existing circumstances.
10. The verb kosmōsin ('may adorn, may decorate') gives the passage its striking theological image: faithful living beautifies doctrine. The Christian slave's trustworthiness is not mere compliance but a form of witness — making the gospel attractive (kosmos, from which 'cosmetic' derives). 'God our Savior' (tou sōtēros hēmōn theou) applies the Savior title to God the Father, continuing the alternation noted throughout the letter.
11. The verb epephanē ('has appeared, has been manifested') is the root of 'epiphany' — grace arrived in history as a visible event, primarily in the incarnation and work of Christ. The adjective sōtērios ('saving, bringing salvation') modifies grace — grace itself is the saving agent. 'All people' (pasin anthrōpois) declares the universal scope of God's saving purpose, though the Pastoral Epistles do not thereby teach automatic universalism.
12. Grace is personified as a trainer (paideuōsa, from paideuō — 'to train, educate, discipline a child'). The same grace that saves also forms character. The training has two dimensions: negative (renouncing ungodliness and worldly passions) and positive (living with self-control, justice, and piety). The three adverbs — sōphronōs (self-controlled), dikaiōs (uprightly), eusebōs (godly) — correspond to one's relationship to self, neighbor, and God respectively.
13. The phrase tou megalou theou kai sōtēros hēmōn Iēsou Christou ('of our great God and Savior Jesus Christ') applies both titles — 'great God' and 'Savior' — to Jesus Christ. The Granville Sharp rule in Greek grammar (a single article governing two nouns joined by kai where the first noun is not a proper name) indicates a single referent. This is among the most explicit New Testament affirmations of Christ's deity. The 'blessed hope' (makarian elpida) is the second epiphany — Christ's return in glory — which creates the frame: life between two appearances.

14. Christ's self-giving (edōken heauton) has a double purpose: redemption from lawlessness (lytrosētai, 'to ransom, to liberate by payment') and purification of a people. The phrase laon periousion ('a people for his own possession') directly quotes the Septuagint of Exodus 19:5 and Deuteronomy 14:2 — Israel's covenant identity is now applied to the church. 'Zealous for good works' (zēlōtēn kalōn ergōn) connects the doctrinal heights of verses 11-14 back to the practical ethics of the entire chapter.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 19:5. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 14:2. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. Three imperatives — speak (lalei), exhort (parakalei), rebuke (elegche) — cover the full range of pastoral communication. The phrase meta pasēs epitagēs ('with all authority') underscores that Titus acts with apostolic delegation. The final command — mēdeis sou periphronēitō ('let no one think around you, let no one disregard you') — parallels 1 Timothy 4:12 and indicates that Titus, like Timothy, may have faced challenges to his authority.

Summary: Paul instructs Titus to remind the Cretan believers to be subject to rulers and authorities, to be ready for every good work, and to speak evil of no one. He grounds this ethical instruction in a stunning theological statement: God saved us not because of works done in righteousness but according to his own mercy, through the washing of regeneration and renewal of the Holy Spirit, whom he poured out on us richly through Jesus Christ our Savior — so that, being justified by his grace, we might become heirs according to the hope of eternal life. Paul identifies this as a 'trustworthy saying' and urges Titus to insist on it. He warns against foolish controversies and genealogies, instructs Titus on handling divisive persons, shares travel plans, and closes with greetings.

What Makes This Remarkable: Verses 4-7 form the second great soteriological passage in Titus (paired with 2:11-14). Together they constitute a comprehensive summary of salvation: its source (God's mercy and kindness), its means (the washing of regeneration and the Holy Spirit), its agent (Jesus Christ our Savior), its legal basis (justification by grace), and its goal (becoming heirs of eternal life). The phrase 'washing of regeneration' (loutron palingenesias) is unique in the New Testament and has been central to baptismal theology since the earliest centuries. The word palingenesia ('regeneration, new birth, new creation') appears only here and in Matthew 19:28.

Translation Friction: The relationship between 'washing of regeneration' and water baptism is debated. The language strongly evokes baptism but may describe spiritual regeneration symbolized by baptism rather than baptismal regeneration per se. We render the Greek without resolving the theological debate. The 'trustworthy saying' formula (pistos ho logos, v. 8) is the fifth and final occurrence in the Pastoral Epistles — whether it introduces or concludes the theological statement is debated. The instruction to reject a 'divisive person' after two warnings (v. 10) has shaped church discipline practices throughout history.

Connections: The salvation summary (vv. 4-7) parallels Titus 2:11-14, Ephesians 2:4-10, and Romans 3:21-26 in structure. The 'washing of regeneration' connects to John 3:5, Ezekiel 36:25-27, and the baptismal imagery of Romans 6:3-4. The 'pouring out' of the Spirit echoes Joel 2:28 (Acts 2:17) and Pentecost. The 'trustworthy saying' formula links to 1 Timothy 1:15, 3:1, 4:9, and 2 Timothy 2:11. The rejection of a factious person connects to Matthew 18:15-17.

¹Remind them to be submissive to rulers and authorities, to be obedient, to be ready for every good work, ²To talk wicked of no person, to be no brawlers, but gentle, shewing all meekness to all people. ³For we ourselves were once foolish, disobedient, led astray, slaves to various passions and pleasures, passing our days in malice and envy, hated by others and hating one another. ⁴But when the goodness and loving kindness of God our Savior appeared, ⁵Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but in keeping with to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Spirit; ⁶God poured out the Spirit on us generously through Jesus Christ our Savior, ⁷That while justified by his grace, we should be fashioned heirs according to the confident expectation of eternal life. ⁸The saying is trustworthy, and I want you to insist on these things, so that those who have believed in God may be careful to devote themselves to good works. These things are excellent and profitable for people. ⁹But avoid foolish controversies, genealogies, dissensions, and quarrels about the law, for they are unprofitable and worthless. ¹⁰As for a person who stirs up division, after warning him once and then twice, have nothing more to do with him, ¹¹Being aware that he that is these people is subverted, and sinneth, being condemned of himself. ¹²When I send Artemas or Tychicus to you, do your best to come to me at Nicopolis, for I have decided to spend the winter there. ¹³Do your best to speed Zenas the lawyer and Apollos on their way; see that they lack nothing. ¹⁴And let our people learn to devote themselves to good works, so as to help cases of urgent need, and not be unfruitful. ¹⁵All who are with me send greetings to you. Greet those who love us in the faith. Grace be with you all.

1. The Greek archais exousiais ('rulers and authorities') refers to civil government, not spiritual powers (as in Eph 6:12). The Cretan churches needed this instruction because the false teachers' insubordination (1:10) may have extended to civic life. The phrase 'every good work' (pan ergon agathon) recurs throughout the Pastoral Epistles as a summary of the Christian life's practical aim.
2. The scope is universal: 'no one' (mēdena) and 'all people' (pantas anthrōpous) — Christian conduct is not reserved for fellow believers but extends to everyone. The Greek epieikeis ('gentle, yielding, gracious') describes a quality that does not insist on its strict rights — the opposite of the combative false teachers.
3. Paul includes himself ('we ourselves,' hēmeis) in the pre-conversion portrait — this is not self-righteous judgment but shared confession. The catalogue of seven vices describes the human condition apart from grace: intellectual darkness (anoētoi), rebellion (apeitheis), deception (planōmenoi), slavery to desire (douleuontes), malice (kakia), envy (phthonos), and mutual hatred (misountes allēlous). This dark backdrop makes the light of verses 4-7 all the more brilliant.
4. The 'but' (de) marks the decisive turn from human depravity to divine initiative. Two divine attributes — chrēstotēs ('goodness, kindness') and philanthrōpia ('love for humanity, benevolence') — are the source of salvation. The word philanthrōpia (literally 'love of human beings') is the root of English 'philanthropy.' Once again, epephanē ('appeared') describes God's saving act as a visible, historical manifestation — paralleling 2:11.
5. The denial is categorical: 'not from works in righteousness which we did' (ouk ex ergōn tōn en dikaiosynē ha epoiēsamen hēmeis). Salvation is kata to autou eleos ('according to his mercy') — entirely God's initiative. The phrase loutrou palingenesias ('washing of regeneration') combines baptismal imagery with the concept of new birth/new creation. The word palingenesia (palin + genesis, 'again + origin') occurs only here and in Matthew 19:28 (where it refers to cosmic renewal). 'Renewal of the Holy Spirit' (anakainōseōs pneumatōs hagiou) describes the Spirit's work of making all things new — echoing Ezekiel 36:25-27.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Ezekiel 36:25-27 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The verb execheen ('poured out') echoes Joel 2:28 and Acts 2:17-18 — Pentecost language applied to every believer's experience of the Spirit. The adverb plousiōs ('richly, abundantly') emphasizes the lavish generosity of God's gift. 'Through Jesus Christ our Savior' (dia Iēsou Christou tou sōtēros hēmōn) places Christ as the mediator of the Spirit's outpouring — the Savior title now returns to Christ (cf. v. 4 where it applied to God the Father).
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Joel 2:28. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The sequence is complete: saved by mercy (v. 5), renewed by the Spirit (vv. 5-6), justified by grace (v. 7), and constituted as heirs (klēronomoi) of eternal life. Justification (dikaiothentes, 'having been declared righteous') is by grace (tē ekeinou chariti), not by works (v. 5). The inheritance language connects to the Old Testament land promise now transformed into 'the hope of eternal life' (kat' elpida zōēs aiōniou) — the same phrase that opened the letter (1:2).
8. The fifth and final 'trustworthy saying' (pistos ho logos) in the Pastoral Epistles likely refers back to verses 4-7. Paul's instruction to 'insist' (diabebaiousthai, 'affirm confidently, speak with certainty') shows that doctrine must be taught with conviction. The purpose is practical: believers are to 'devote themselves to good works' (kalōn ergōn proistasthai). Sound theology produces good works — the connection is causal, not coincidental.
9. The contrast with the 'profitable' things of verse 8 is explicit: these controversies are anōpheleis ('unprofitable, useless') and mataioi ('worthless, futile'). The 'genealogies' (genealogias) likely refer to speculative expansions of Old Testament genealogies — a feature of early Jewish and proto-gnostic speculation. 'Quarrels about the law' (machas nomikas) specify that the circumcision party (1:10) is still in view.
10. The Greek hairētikon ('divisive, factious, heretical') is the source of English 'heretic,' but its primary sense here is 'one who creates factions' rather than the later technical meaning of doctrinal heresy. The two-warning process before rejection shows that the goal is correction, not punishment — only persistent divisiveness warrants exclusion. This parallels the two-or-three-witness principle in Matthew 18:15-17 and Deuteronomy 19:15.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Deuteronomy 19:15 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The Greek exēstraptai ('has been turned inside out, has been perverted') is a perfect passive — the person's distortion is established and ongoing. The striking word autokatakrites ('self-condemned') appears only here in the New Testament. The divisive person's continued factious behavior after two warnings constitutes his own verdict — no external judgment is needed because his actions condemn him.

12. Artemas is mentioned only here in the New Testament. Tychicus appears in Acts 20:4, Ephesians 6:21, Colossians 4:7, and 2 Timothy 4:12. One of them will replace Titus on Crete so Titus can join Paul. Nicopolis ('victory city') — most likely the city in Epirus, on the western coast of Greece — was a common winter destination. Paul's travel plans indicate this letter was written before the final Roman imprisonment.
13. Zenas is called 'the lawyer' (ton nomikon) — possibly an expert in Jewish law or Roman law. He appears only here. Apollos is the well-known Alexandrian teacher of Acts 18:24-28 and 1 Corinthians 1:12. 'Speed on their way' (propempson) is a technical term for providing travelers with supplies and assistance for their journey — an early form of missionary support.
14. The phrase 'our people' (hoi hēmeteroi) refers to the Cretan believers. The instruction to 'devote themselves to good works' (kalōn ergōn proistasthai) repeats the language of verse 8 — the letter ends where it has been pointing throughout. The fruit metaphor (mē ōsin akarpoi, 'not be unfruitful') connects to Jesus' vine imagery (John 15:2, 4, 8) and the broader New Testament expectation that faith produces visible results.
15. The closing follows standard Pauline form: greetings from companions, greetings to the community, and a grace benediction. 'Those who love us in the faith' (tous philountas hēmas en pistei) specifies that the love is grounded in shared faith — this is not generic well-wishing but community solidarity. The final word is charis ('grace') — the same grace that appeared in 2:11 and saved in 3:5 now accompanies the community as Paul's parting gift. The SBLGNT does not include 'Amen,' which appears in some later manuscripts.

Philemon

Summary: Paul writes from prison to Philemon, a wealthy Christian in Colossae, on behalf of Onesimus — Philemon's runaway slave who has become a believer through Paul's ministry. Paul appeals not by apostolic authority but by love, asking Philemon to receive Onesimus back 'no longer as a slave but as a beloved brother.' He offers to repay any debt Onesimus owes, subtly reminds Philemon of his own spiritual debt to Paul, and expresses confidence that Philemon will do even more than Paul asks. The letter is a masterpiece of pastoral rhetoric, applying the gospel of reconciliation to a concrete social situation.

What Makes This Remarkable: Philemon is the shortest of Paul's letters and the most personal. It contains no doctrinal exposition, no church controversy, and no prophecy — yet it demonstrates the gospel's power to transform human relationships more vividly than any theological treatise. Paul's rhetorical strategy is extraordinarily sophisticated: he begins with praise (vv. 4-7), establishes the basis for his appeal as love rather than authority (vv. 8-9), reveals Onesimus's new identity in Christ (vv. 10-16), makes a concrete financial offer (vv. 17-19), and applies gentle pressure through expressed confidence (vv. 20-21). The pivotal verse — 'no longer as a slave but more than a slave, as a beloved brother' (v. 16) — does not explicitly command manumission but creates a framework in which continued enslavement becomes morally impossible. The letter's inclusion in the canon testifies to the early church's recognition that the gospel must address the most ordinary and difficult human situations.

Translation Friction: Paul does not explicitly command Philemon to free Onesimus. This silence has been debated for centuries: some see Paul as accommodating slavery, others see the letter as an implicit but devastating case for manumission. We render the Greek without resolving this debate, noting Paul's careful rhetoric in the translator notes. The legal situation of Onesimus is also debated — he may have been a fugitive slave (the traditional reading) or a slave sent by Philemon who overstayed his mission. The phrase 'separated from you' (v. 15) is more neutral than 'ran away.'

Connections: Onesimus and the other figures appear in Colossians 4:9-17, linking these two letters. The reconciliation theme echoes 2 Corinthians 5:18-20 — God's ministry of reconciliation is now applied horizontally between master and slave. Paul's offer to absorb Onesimus's debt (v. 18) mirrors Christ's substitutionary work. The letter's rhetorical structure parallels ancient letters of intercession (e.g., Pliny's letters to Sabinianus on behalf of a freedman).

¹Paul, a prisoner for Christ Jesus, and Timothy our brother, to Philemon our beloved fellow worker, ²To our dear Apphia, and Archippus our fellowsoldier, and to the church in your home:.. ³From god our father and the lord jesus christ, grace to you, and peace. ⁴I thank my God always when I remember you in my prayers, ⁵Listening of your love and faith, which you have toward the Lord Jesus, and toward all saints. ⁶I pray that your partnership in the faith will become effective as you come to understand every good thing we share in Christ Jesus. ⁷For I have derived much joy and comfort from your love, my brother, because the hearts of the saints have been refreshed through you. ⁸Accordingly, though I am bold enough in Christ to command you to do what is required, ⁹Yet for love's sake I instead beseech you, being these people an one as Paul the aged, and now also a prisoner of Jesus Christ. ¹⁰I appeal to you for my child, Onesimus, whose father I became in my imprisonment. ¹¹Formerly he was useless to you, but now he is indeed useful to you and to me. ¹²I am sending him back to you, sending my very heart. ¹³I would have been glad to keep him with me, in order that he might serve me on your behalf during my imprisonment for the gospel, ¹⁴However, without your mind would I do nothing. That your benefit should not be as it were of necessity, but willingly. ¹⁵For this perhaps is why he was separated from you for a while, that you might have him back forever, ¹⁶Indeed, not now as a servant, but above a servant, a brother dear, specially to me, but how much more to you, both in the flesh, and in the Lord? ¹⁷So if you consider me your partner, receive him as you would receive me. ¹⁸If he has wronged you at all, or owes you anything, charge that to my account. ¹⁹I, Paul, am writing this with my own hand: I will repay it — to say nothing of your owing me even your own self. ²⁰Yes, brother, I want some benefit from you in the Lord. Refresh my heart in Christ. ²¹Confident of your obedience, I write to you, knowing that you will do even more than I say. ²²At the same time, prepare a guest room for me, for I am hoping that through your prayers I will be graciously given to you. ²³Epaphras, my fellow prisoner in Christ Jesus, sends you greetings, ²⁴Marcus, Aristarchus, Demas, Lucas, my fellowlabourers. ²⁵The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit.

1. Paul identifies himself not as an apostle but as a 'prisoner' (desmios) — a deliberate rhetorical choice. The appeal that follows will be made from the position of one who has already sacrificed his freedom for the gospel, not from a position of institutional authority. Philemon is called 'beloved' (agapētō) and 'fellow worker' (synergō) — terms that establish the relationship as one of mutual respect and shared mission before the request is made.
2. Apphia is likely Philemon's wife and Archippus possibly their son (cf. Colossians 4:17). By addressing the letter not only to Philemon but to his household and the entire house church, Paul ensures that the appeal is not merely private — the community will hear it and hold Philemon accountable. The 'church in your house' (tē kat' oikon sou ekklēsia) confirms that early Christian assemblies met in private homes.
3. The standard Pauline greeting. The plural 'you' (hymen) addresses the entire group named in verses 1-2, though the letter's content primarily concerns Philemon.
4. The thanksgiving section (vv. 4-7) is the rhetorical foundation for the appeal. Paul establishes Philemon's character as generous and faithful before asking him to live up to that reputation. The phrase 'my God' (tō theō mou) is warmly personal.
5. Paul has heard reports of Philemon's love and faith — the two qualities that the forthcoming appeal will test. The structure may be a chiasm (ABBA): love—faith—Lord Jesus—all the saints, yielding faith toward the Lord Jesus and love toward all the saints. This reading connects the appeal: if Philemon loves 'all the saints,' that must now include Onesimus.
6. This verse is notoriously difficult to translate. The word koinōnia ('sharing, partnership, fellowship') may refer to Philemon's generosity, his evangelistic witness, or the mutual participation of faith. Paul prays that this koinōnia will become 'effective' (energēs, 'active, productive') through recognition (epignōsei) of every good thing in the community. The prayer subtly sets up the appeal: if Philemon can recognize the good that Christ produces in people, he will see that good in Onesimus.
7. The word splachna ('hearts,' literally 'inner organs, intestines') appears three times in this short letter (vv. 7, 12, 20), forming a verbal thread. Philemon has 'refreshed' (anapepautai, 'given rest to, renewed') the hearts of believers — Paul will soon ask him to refresh Paul's own heart (v. 20) by receiving Onesimus. The affectionate address 'brother' (adelphē) at the end of the sentence sets the emotional tone for what follows.
8. Paul's rhetoric is masterful: he mentions his right to command (epitassein, 'to order, to give authoritative instructions') precisely so he can renounce it. By stating what he could do but choosing not to, he makes the appeal more powerful — Philemon's response will be a free act of love rather than coerced compliance. The word anēkon ('what is fitting, what is proper, what is required') implies that what Paul asks is not optional but morally necessary.

9. The word parakalō ('I appeal, I urge, I encourage') replaces the command language of verse 8. Paul grounds his appeal in love (agapēn), not authority. He adds two qualifications designed to evoke compassion: he is a presbyteros ('old man' or possibly 'ambassador' — the words presbyteros and presbutēs differ by one letter, and some manuscripts read the latter) and a prisoner (desmios). The em-dashes set off this self-description as an emotional aside.
10. Paul delays naming Onesimus until the end of the sentence — a deliberate rhetorical strategy. Before Philemon hears the slave's name, he hears 'my child' (tou emou teknou), establishing the relationship. The verb egennēsa ('I fathered, I begot') indicates Paul led Onesimus to faith during his imprisonment. The name Onēsīmon ('useful, profitable') will be punned on in the next verse.
11. Paul plays on Onesimus's name (Onēsīmos, 'useful, beneficial'): the one whose name means 'useful' was once achrēston ('useless') but is now euchrēston ('very useful'). There may also be a further pun: achrēstos sounds like a-Christos ('without Christ'), and euchrēstos sounds like eu-Christos ('good in Christ'). The transformation from useless to useful encapsulates the gospel's power to change a person's identity and value.
12. The second use of splanchna ('heart, inner being') is the most emotionally charged: in sending Onesimus back, Paul is sending his own heart. The identification is complete — Onesimus is not merely a protege but an extension of Paul's own person. Any treatment of Onesimus will be experienced by Paul himself. The SBLGNT does not include 'receive him' (proslabou), which appears in some manuscripts.
13. Paul states his preference — he wanted to keep Onesimus — but immediately subordinates it to Philemon's rights. The phrase 'on your behalf' (hyper sou) is significant: Onesimus's service to Paul would have been a proxy for Philemon's own service. Paul frames Onesimus's presence as a gift from Philemon, not as his own possession.
14. The contrast between anankē ('compulsion, necessity') and hekousion ('voluntary, of one's own accord') is the letter's ethical crux. Paul could have kept Onesimus and presented Philemon with a fait accompli. Instead, he preserves Philemon's moral agency — the right response must be freely chosen to have moral value. This principle reflects Paul's broader theology of grace: God does not coerce love but invites it.
15. The verb echōrīsthē ('he was separated') uses the divine passive — avoiding the harsh 'he ran away' and suggesting that God's providence was at work in the separation. The adverb tacha ('perhaps') shows appropriate tentativeness about reading divine purpose into events. The contrast between 'for a while' (pros hōran, literally 'for an hour') and 'forever' (aiōnion) reframes the entire episode: a temporary loss has become an eternal gain.
16. This is the letter's theological climax. Onesimus returns to Philemon's household with a transformed identity: 'no longer as a slave' (ouketi hōs doulon) but 'more than a slave — a beloved brother' (hyper doulon, adelphon agapēton). The phrase 'both in the flesh and in the Lord' (kai en sarki kai en kyriō) means that the brother-relationship is not merely spiritual ('in the Lord') but also operates in the everyday, physical realm ('in the flesh'). Paul does not formally command manumission, but the logic is clear: you cannot own your brother. The phrase 'how much more to you' (posō de mallon soi) argues that if Onesimus is precious to Paul, he should be even more so to Philemon, who will have him present daily.
17. The word koinōnon ('partner, one who shares in common, associate') echoes the koinōnia of verse 6. Paul draws on the established partnership to leverage the appeal: if Philemon and Paul are partners, then Onesimus — who is Paul's 'very heart' (v. 12) — must be welcomed as Paul himself. The verb proslabou ('receive, take to yourself, welcome') is a hospitality term implying full acceptance into the household.
18. The conditional 'if' (ei) is diplomatic rather than doubtful — Onesimus likely did wrong Philemon or incur a debt (perhaps by stealing to fund his flight). The verb elloga ('charge to my account, reckon to me') is an accounting term — Paul creates a formal IOU. This is substitutionary language: Paul absorbs Onesimus's debt, just as Christ absorbed humanity's debt (Colossians 2:14). The parallel is unmistakable and intentional.
19. Paul signs the IOU in his own handwriting, making it legally binding. Then, in one of the most brilliantly ironic sentences in ancient literature, he adds: 'to say nothing of your owing me even your own self' (hina mē legō soi hoti kai seauton moi prosopheileis). The phrase 'to say nothing of' (hina mē legō) is a rhetorical device called paralipsis — saying something by claiming not to say it. The effect is devastating: Onesimus may owe Philemon money, but Philemon owes Paul his very soul (presumably Paul led Philemon to faith). The larger debt swallows the smaller one.
20. The verb onaimēn ('may I have benefit, may I have profit') is another pun on the name Onesimos ('beneficial, profitable'). Paul asks Philemon to be an 'Onesimus' to Paul — to live up to the very quality that Onesimus's name represents. The third appearance of splanchna ('heart') closes the literary frame opened in verse 7: Philemon has refreshed the hearts of the saints; now Paul asks him to refresh Paul's own heart by welcoming Onesimus.
21. The word hypakoē ('obedience') is striking — Paul has insisted on appealing rather than commanding, yet he describes Philemon's response as 'obedience.' The gospel appeal carries its own authority: to refuse love's request is a form of disobedience. The phrase 'even more than I say' (hyper ha legō poiēseis) leaves open the possibility that Paul hopes for manumission, or even that Philemon will send Onesimus back to Paul. By not specifying, Paul leaves room for Philemon to exceed expectations.
22. The request for lodging adds gentle pressure: Paul plans to visit and will see firsthand how Philemon has responded. The verb charisthēsomai ('I will be graciously given, I will be granted as a gift') uses the charis root — Paul's release from prison will be a gift of grace mediated through the Colossians' prayers. The request also expresses optimism about his release.
23. In Colossians 4:10, Aristarchus is the 'fellow prisoner' while Epaphras is not; here the designation is reversed. Paul may use the term synaichmalōtos ('co-prisoner of war') loosely for anyone who shares his captivity, whether literally imprisoned or voluntarily present. Epaphras, as founder of the Colossian church, has a personal connection to Philemon.

- 24. The same names appear in Colossians 4:10-14, confirming that both letters were sent at the same time. All four are called synergoi ('fellow workers, co-laborers') — an egalitarian designation that includes both Jews (Mark, Aristarchus) and Gentiles (Demas, Luke) in the shared work of the gospel.
- 25. The closing benediction matches Philippians 4:23 almost exactly. The plural 'your' (hymōn) addresses the entire community, not just Philemon. Grace — the undeserved generosity of God — is the letter's final word, as it was the first (v. 3). The entire letter is framed by grace: the same grace that freed Onesimus from sin now calls Philemon to free Onesimus from slavery. The SBLGNT omits the final 'Amen' of the Textus Receptus.

Hebrews

Summary: Hebrews 1 establishes the supremacy of God's revelation through his Son over all prior communication through prophets. The Son is declared the exact representation of God's nature, the sustainer of all things, and the one who accomplished purification for sins before sitting at God's right hand. The chapter then marshals a chain of Old Testament quotations to demonstrate the Son's superiority over angels, establishing a theme that will dominate chapters 1-2.

What Makes This Remarkable: The opening period (verses 1-4) is one of the most carefully constructed sentences in the New Testament, a single Greek sentence with seven descriptors of the Son. The catena of Old Testament quotations (verses 5-13) draws from Psalms 2, 104, 45, 102, and 110, plus 2 Samuel 7 and Deuteronomy 32, weaving a comprehensive scriptural argument. The author assumes his audience recognizes that angels mediated the Mosaic law (cf. Galatians 3:19, Acts 7:53), making the Son-versus-angels comparison directly relevant to the old covenant versus new covenant argument.

Translation Friction: The identity of the author is unknown; the letter is anonymous. The Greek style is the most polished in the New Testament. The phrase 'exact representation' (charakteer) in verse 3 carries philosophical weight that must be rendered without importing later Nicene categories. We render the Greek as given, noting theological implications in the study layer.

Connections: The opening echoes Genesis 1 (creation through the Son), Proverbs 8 (Wisdom as agent of creation), and Colossians 1:15-20 (the cosmic Christ hymn). The quotation from Psalm 110:1 in verse 13 becomes the most important Old Testament text in Hebrews, returning in chapters 5, 7, 8, 10, and 12. The 'purification for sins' language anticipates the extended priestly argument of chapters 7-10.

¹In many parts and in many ways, God spoke long ago to our ancestors through the prophets, ²Has in these last days spoken to us by his Son, whom he has appointed heir of all matters, by whom as well he made the worlds; ³He is the radiance of God's glory and the exact expression of his being, sustaining all things by his powerful word. After he had made purification for sins, he sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high, ⁴Being appointed so greatly better than the angels, as he has by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. ⁵For to which of the angels did God ever say, "You are my Son; today I have fathered you"? Or again, "I will be a Father to him, and he will be a Son to me"? ⁶And again, when he brings the firstborn into the world, he says, "Let all God's angels worship him." ⁷Of the angels he says, "He makes his angels winds, and his servants a flame of fire." ⁸But of the Son he says, "Your throne, O God, is forever and ever, and the scepter of uprightness is the scepter of your kingdom. ⁹You have loved righteousness and hated lawlessness; therefore God, your God, has anointed you with the oil of joy beyond your companions." ¹⁰And, "You, Lord, laid the foundation of the earth in the beginning, and the heavens are the work of your hands. ¹¹They will perish, but you remain. They will all wear out like a garment. ¹²You will roll them up like a cloak, and like a garment they will be changed. But you are the same, and your years will never end." ¹³But to which of the angels has he ever said, "Sit at my right hand until I make your enemies a footstool for your feet"? ¹⁴Are they not all serving spirits, sent out to serve those who are about to inherit salvation?

1. The Greek polymerōs kai polytropōs ('in many parts and in many ways') is an alliterative pair that sets the rhetorical tone for the entire letter. The first term suggests fragmentary revelation — given piece by piece — while the second suggests varied modes (visions, dreams, direct speech, enacted parables). Together they characterize Old Testament revelation as genuine but incomplete.
1. We render 'fathers' (patrasin) as 'ancestors' since the reference is to the entire covenant community's forebears, not exclusively male figures.
2. The phrase ep' eschatou tōn hēmerōn toutōn ('in the last of these days') signals an eschatological framework — the Son's arrival inaugurates the final era. The anarthrous 'a Son' (en huiō, without the article) emphasizes the quality of sonship rather than identifying a specific person, though the context makes the identity clear.
2. The Greek aiōnas ('ages') is broader than the KJV's 'worlds' — it encompasses both time and the created order. The Son is the agent through whom God structured reality itself.
3. The Greek apaugasma can mean either 'radiance' (light emanating from a source) or 'reflection' (light bouncing off a surface). The context favors 'radiance' since the Son is described as active agent, not passive mirror. The term charaktēr ('exact expression') denotes the precise imprint made by a stamping tool — what emerges is identical to the original. This is stronger than 'image' (eikōn).
3. The participle poiēsamenos ('having made') is middle voice, suggesting the Son accomplished purification through his own action. The aorist tense marks this as a completed, once-for-all act — a contrast with the repeated sacrifices of the Levitical system that the author will develop in chapters 9–10.
3. The phrase 'sat down at the right hand' alludes to Psalm 110:1, the most quoted Old Testament verse in the New Testament and the theological backbone of Hebrews.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalm 110:1 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The Greek genomenos ('having become') does not imply the Son was once inferior to angels. The verb marks his exaltation after the incarnation and cross — his human journey culminated in a publicly demonstrated superiority. The 'name' (onoma) is debated: it likely refers to 'Son' (as verses 5–14 will argue), though some scholars see it as the divine name itself. The verb keklēronomēken ('has inherited') connects to verse 2's appointment as 'heir of all things.'
5. The first quotation is from Psalm 2:7, a royal enthronement psalm originally spoken at the coronation of Davidic kings. The author of Hebrews applies it to Christ's exaltation. The verb gegennēka ('I have begotten/fathered') in the psalm context refers to the king's divine adoption at coronation, not biological generation.
5. The second quotation is from 2 Samuel 7:14, God's promise to David regarding his descendant — the foundational text of messianic hope. The rhetorical question expects the answer 'None' — God never addressed any angel with these words.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalms 2:7 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes 2 Samuel 7:14 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The quotation derives from Deuteronomy 32:43 (Septuagint) or Psalm 97:7. The Septuagint reading of Deuteronomy includes 'let all God's angels worship him,' which is absent from the Masoretic Text — the author uses the Greek Old Testament. The term prōtotokon ('firstborn') denotes preeminence and inheritance rights, not chronological birth order. The 'world' (oikoumenē) is literally 'the inhabited earth,' possibly referring to the incarnation or to the second coming.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Deuteronomy 32:43. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 97:7. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.

7. Quoting Psalm 104:4 (Septuagint). The Greek pneumata can mean either 'spirits' or 'winds' — the Hebrew of Psalm 104:4 speaks of God making winds his messengers, which the Septuagint reversed to 'making his messengers/angels winds.' The author's point is that angels are created, mutable servants — they can be transformed into wind or fire — while the Son's throne is eternal (verse 8).
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalms 104:4. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. Quoting Psalm 45:6-7, originally a royal wedding psalm. The vocative 'O God' (ho theos) addressed to the Son is the most direct divine attribution in the catena. Some scholars read it as 'God is your throne' or 'your throne is God's,' but the author of Hebrews clearly reads it as an address to the Son as God. The Greek euthytētos ('uprightness, straightness') is rendered 'uprightness' rather than 'righteousness' to distinguish it from dikaiosunē.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalms 45:6-7 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The continuation of Psalm 45:6-7. The phrase 'God, your God' (ho theos, ho theos sou) creates a striking paradox — the one addressed as 'God' in verse 8 also has a God. This tension is central to New Testament Christology. The anointing with 'oil of joy' (elaion agalliaseōs) refers to the coronation anointing of kings, connecting to 'Christ' (Christos = 'anointed one'). The Greek anomian ('lawlessness') is rendered as such rather than the KJV's 'iniquity' for precision.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalms 45:6-7. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. Quoting Psalm 102:25-27 (Septuagint 101:26-28). In the original psalm, these words are addressed to YHWH. The author of Hebrews applies them to the Son without explanation, implying that the Son shares the divine identity of the Creator. The phrase kat' archas ('in the beginning') echoes Genesis 1:1 and John 1:1.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalms 102:25-27 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 1:1 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The contrast is between the created order (heavens and earth) that will perish and the Son who endures. The clothing metaphor — creation wearing out like an old garment — is vivid and distinctly Hebrew in character (cf. Isaiah 51:6). The present tense 'you remain' (diameneis) against the future 'they will perish' (apolountai) emphasizes the Son's unchanging nature.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalms 102:25-27. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 51:6. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. The verb helixeis ('you will roll up') pictures the Son folding up the old creation like clothing being put away — a striking image of sovereign authority over the material universe. The declaration 'you are the same' (su de ho autos ei) asserts the Son's immutability, which becomes a key theme in Hebrews (cf. 13:8, 'Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, today, and forever'). This completes the Psalm 102 quotation.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalms 102:25-27. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. Quoting Psalm 110:1, the most quoted Old Testament text in the New Testament and the theological anchor of Hebrews. The psalm presents a divine invitation to a human king to share God's throne — an honor never extended to any angel. The 'right hand' (dexiōn) is the position of co-regency and highest honor. This verse bookends the catena with verse 5's rhetorical question ('to which of the angels?'), forming an inclusio. Psalm 110 will return in Hebrews 5:6, 7:17, 7:21 regarding the Melchizedek priesthood.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalms 110:1 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. The rhetorical question expects the answer 'Yes.' Angels are leitourgika pneumata ('ministering/serving spirits') — their role is service, not sovereignty. The verb apostellomena ('sent out') is related to 'apostle' (apostolos) — angels are commissioned agents. The phrase 'those about to inherit salvation' (tous mellontas klēronomein sōtērian) echoes the Son's inheritance language from verses 2 and 4, but here applied to believers who share in the Son's inheritance.

Summary: Hebrews 2 issues the first of the letter's warning passages (verses 1-4), urging listeners not to drift from the message delivered through the Son. The author then explains why the Son became lower than the angels — not because he was inferior, but because he took on humanity to share in flesh and blood, to die, and thereby to destroy the devil's power over death. Christ's solidarity with humanity is complete: he was made like his brothers in every way so he could serve as a merciful and faithful high priest.

What Makes This Remarkable: The quotation of Psalm 8:4-6 in verses 6-8 is a masterful reinterpretation. The psalm celebrates humanity's exalted place in creation; the author reads it as a description of Christ, the true human who fulfills humanity's intended role. The phrase 'tasting death for everyone' (verse 9) is startlingly physical. The description of Jesus as 'pioneer' (archēgos) of salvation introduces a term that will recur in 12:2.

Translation Friction: The phrase 'for a little while lower than the angels' (verse 7) could also mean 'a little lower than the angels' — the Greek brachy ti is ambiguous between time and degree, matching the same ambiguity in Psalm 8. We note both readings. The concept of Jesus being 'made perfect through suffering' (verse 10) does not imply moral imperfection but vocational completion.

Connections: The warning passage (verses 1-4) anticipates the more severe warnings of 6:1-8 and 10:26-31. The high priest theme introduced in verse 17 becomes the central argument of chapters 3-10. The 'pioneer' (archēgos) language returns in 12:2. Psalm 8 connects to the creation mandate of Genesis 1:26-28.

¹For this reason, we must pay much closer attention to what we have heard, so that we do not drift away. ²For if the message spoken through angels proved reliable, and every violation and act of disobedience received its just penalty, ³How will we escape, if we neglect so remarkable salvation. Which at the first started to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed to us by them that listened to him;. ⁴God as well bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Spirit, in keeping with to his own will? ⁵For it is not to angels that he has subjected the coming world, about which we are speaking. ⁶But someone has testified somewhere, saying, "What is a human being that you remember him, or a son of man that you care for him? ⁷You made him for a little while lower than the angels; you crowned him with glory and honor, ⁸You placed all things under his feet." Now in placing all things under him, God left nothing outside his control. Yet at present, we do not yet see all things subjected to him. ⁹But we do see Jesus — who was made for a little while lower than the angels — now crowned with glory and honor because of his suffering of death, so that by the grace of God he might taste death for everyone. ¹⁰For it was fitting for him, for whom and through whom all things exist, in bringing many sons and daughters to glory, to make the pioneer of their salvation perfect through sufferings. ¹¹For both the one who sanctifies and those who are being sanctified all come from one origin. For this reason, he is not ashamed to call them brothers and sisters, ¹²Declaring, I will declare your name to my brothers and sisters, in the midst of the church will I sing praise to you. ¹³And again, "I will put my trust in him." And again, "Here I am, and the children God has given me." ¹⁴Therefore, since the children share in flesh and blood, he himself likewise shared in the same things, so that through death he might destroy the one who holds the power of death — that is, the devil — ¹⁵Deliver them who by way of fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage. ¹⁶For surely it is not angels he helps, but the descendants of Abraham. ¹⁷Therefore he had to be made like his brothers and sisters in every way, so that he might become a merciful and faithful high priest in things relating to God, to make atonement for the sins of the people. ¹⁸For because he himself suffered when he was tested, he is able to help those who are being tested.

1. The Greek pararuōmen ('drift away') is a nautical metaphor — a ship slipping past its harbor because the crew was inattentive. The danger is not active rebellion but passive neglect. The verb prosechein ('to pay attention, to hold course toward') sustains the nautical image. This is the first of five warning passages in Hebrews (2:1-4; 3:7-4:13; 5:11-6:12; 10:26-31; 12:25-29).

2. The 'message spoken through angels' refers to the Mosaic law, which Jewish tradition held was mediated by angels at Sinai (cf. Acts 7:53, Galatians 3:19, Deuteronomy 33:2 LXX). The argument is from lesser to greater (a fortiori): if disobeying the angel-mediated law brought punishment, how much more serious is neglecting the Son-delivered message. The terms parabasis ('violation, stepping across a boundary') and parakoē ('disobedience, failure to hear') pair transgression of act with transgression of attention.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Deuteronomy 33:2. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. The rhetorical question expects no answer — there is no escape. The verb amelēsantes ('having neglected') continues the theme of passive drift rather than active rejection. The chain of transmission is explicit: the Lord spoke, those who heard him confirmed it to 'us.' This places the author in the second generation of Christians who received the gospel from eyewitnesses, which has implications for dating and authorship.
4. The fourfold attestation — signs (sēmeiois), wonders (terasín), powerful deeds (dynamésin), and Spirit distributions (pneumatós hagiou merismois) — parallels the language used in Acts for apostolic authentication. The compound verb synepimarturomentos ('testifying alongside, co-witnessing') means God added his own testimony to the human witnesses. The 'distributions' (merismois) of the Spirit suggests diverse gifts apportioned to different believers, echoing 1 Corinthians 12.
5. The phrase tēn oikoumenēn tēn mellousan ('the coming world/inhabited earth') introduces an eschatological horizon. The present world may involve angelic powers (cf. Daniel 10:13, 20-21), but the world to come belongs to the Son and, through him, to redeemed humanity. This sets up the Psalm 8 quotation that follows.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Daniel 10:13 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalm 8 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. Quoting Psalm 8:4-6 (LXX). The vague citation formula 'someone has testified somewhere' (pou tis) is not carelessness — it directs attention to the divine author rather than the human psalmist. The Greek anthrōpos and huios anthrōpou are rendered 'human being' and 'son of man' respectively. In the original psalm, these are parallel terms for humanity in general; the author of Hebrews will read them christologically.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalms 8:4-6. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The Greek brachu ti can mean 'for a little while' (temporal) or 'a little bit' (degree). The Hebrew of Psalm 8 uses me'at, which is similarly ambiguous. The author of Hebrews reads it temporally — the Son was lower than angels only during his brief incarnation, not permanently. This temporal reading drives the argument: the lowering was temporary; the crowning is permanent. The SBLGNT omits 'and set him over the works of your hands,' which appears in some manuscripts.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalms 8:4-6. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The author's commentary on Psalm 8 contains a crucial 'not yet' (oupō) — the subjection of all things is real but not yet fully realized. This 'already but not yet' tension is characteristic of New Testament eschatology. The word anypotakton ('unsubdued, outside of subjection') emphasizes that the divine intention leaves no exceptions, even though current reality shows incomplete fulfillment.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalms 8:4-6 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The name 'Jesus' appears here for the first time in Hebrews, and its placement is emphatic — after the description of lowering and before the description of crowning. The phrase geusētai thanatou ('taste death') is viscerally physical — death is experienced, not merely encountered. The preposition hyper ('for, on behalf of') with pantos ('everyone') asserts the universal scope of Christ's death. Some manuscripts read 'apart from God' (chōris theou) instead of 'by the grace of God' (chariti theou), but the SBLGNT follows the majority reading.
10. The verb eprepen ('it was fitting') argues not from necessity but from divine appropriateness — God's character made this the right path. The Greek archēgon ('pioneer, founder, leader, captain') denotes one who goes first and opens the way for others to follow. It will recur in 12:2 for Jesus as 'pioneer and perfecter of faith.' The verb teleiōsai ('to make perfect, to bring to completion') does not imply moral deficiency but vocational completion — Jesus was made fully fit for his saving role through the experience of suffering.
10. We render 'sons' (huios) as 'sons and daughters' since the Greek plural can be inclusive and the theological point — believers being brought to glory — applies to all.
11. The phrase ex henos ('from one') is deliberately ambiguous — it could mean 'from one Father,' 'from one source,' or 'of one nature.' The ambiguity serves the author's purpose: whatever the precise reference, the sanctifier and the sanctified share a common origin, which grounds Jesus's willingness to identify with humanity. The present passive participle hagiazomenoi ('being sanctified') suggests an ongoing process, while the active hagiazōn ('sanctifying') points to Jesus as the agent.
12. Quoting Psalm 22:22. This psalm begins with the cry of dereliction ('My God, my God, why have you forsaken me?') and moves to praise in the midst of the assembly. The author of Hebrews places these words on Jesus's lips — the Son identifies believers as 'my brothers' (adelphois mou). The Greek ekklēsia ('assembly, congregation') here translates the Hebrew qahal of the psalm.

12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalms 22:22. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. Two quotations from Isaiah 8:17-18. The first ('I will put my trust in him') shows the Son exercising the same faith that believers exercise — a profound statement of solidarity. The second ('Here I am and the children') originally referred to Isaiah and his children as signs to Israel; the author applies it to Jesus and his spiritual children. Together, these quotations establish that the Son shares humanity's dependence on God.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 8:17-18 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. The verb kekoinōnēken ('have shared, have participated in') is perfect tense — humanity's participation in flesh and blood is an ongoing state. The verb meteschen ('he shared in') is aorist — the Son's participation was a decisive, historical act. The difference in tense is theologically significant: we are always flesh and blood; he entered that condition by choice. The verb katargēsē ('destroy, render powerless, nullify') does not necessarily mean annihilation but rather the stripping of effective power.
15. The phrase dia pantos tou zēn ('throughout all of living') emphasizes that the fear of death pervaded the entirety of human existence, not just its final moments. The word douleia ('slavery, bondage') characterizes the human condition under death's shadow as a form of captivity. Christ's death breaks the power of this fear by removing death's finality.
16. The verb epilambanetai ('takes hold of, helps, grasps') is debated. The KJV reads it as 'took on the nature of,' but the more natural meaning is 'takes hold of to help' or 'comes to the aid of.' The present tense suggests ongoing action: Christ continually assists Abraham's descendants, not just at the incarnation. The phrase 'seed of Abraham' (spermatos Abraam) connects to the covenant promises of Genesis 12, 15, and 17.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 12. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. This is the first appearance of archiereus ('high priest') in Hebrews — the title that will dominate the letter's central argument. The verb hilaskesthai ('to make atonement, to propitiate, to make expiation') corresponds to the Hebrew kipper (כִּפֶּר) and the mercy seat (hilastērion/kapporet). The requirement that the high priest be both 'merciful' (eleēmōn) and 'faithful' (pistos) defines the two qualities that chapters 3-5 will develop — faithfulness in chapter 3 (comparison with Moses) and mercy in chapter 5 (sympathy with human weakness).
18. The Greek peirastheis/peirazomenois ('tested/being tested') can mean either 'tempted' or 'tested' — the semantic range covers both moral temptation and trial by suffering. In context, the emphasis is on suffering as the mode of testing. The perfect tense peponthen ('has suffered') indicates that Jesus's suffering remains a present reality in his experience — it is not something he has left behind but something that equips him to help. The verb boēthēsai ('to help, to come to aid') is the same word used for crying out for help in battle.

Summary: Hebrews 3 compares Jesus to Moses, arguing that while Moses was faithful as a servant in God's house, Jesus is faithful as a Son over God's house. The chapter then transitions into an extended warning passage based on Psalm 95:7-11, urging the audience not to repeat the wilderness generation's rebellion at Meribah. The hardening of hearts, the provocation in the wilderness, and the failure to enter God's rest become a cautionary paradigm for the Christian community.

What Makes This Remarkable: The comparison with Moses is structurally daring — Moses held unparalleled authority in Judaism, yet the author subordinates him to Christ not by diminishing Moses but by elevating the category: servant versus Son, part of the house versus builder of the house. The Psalm 95 quotation initiates an argument that extends through chapter 4, making it the longest sustained Old Testament exposition in Hebrews.

Translation Friction: The phrase 'apostle and high priest of our confession' (verse 1) is the only place in the New Testament where Jesus is called 'apostle.' The warning language is strong — 'evil, unbelieving heart' (verse 12) — and the question of whether genuine believers can fall away remains debated. We render the text without resolving the theological tension.

Connections: *The Moses comparison continues themes from Exodus 32-34 and Numbers 14. Psalm 95's 'rest' (katapausis) links to Genesis 2:2 (God's Sabbath rest) and will be developed in chapter 4. The 'house' language connects to the temple/tabernacle theology of chapters 8-9. The warning echoes Deuteronomy's exhortations to faithfulness.*

¹Therefore, holy brothers and sisters who share in a heavenly calling, consider Jesus, the apostle and high priest of our confession, ²He was faithful to the one who appointed him, just as Moses was faithful in all of God's household. ³For Jesus has been considered worthy of more glory than Moses, just as the builder of a house has more honor than the house itself. ⁴For every house is built by someone, but the builder of all things is God. ⁵Now Moses was faithful in all God's house as a servant, as a testimony to the things that would be spoken later. ⁶But Christ was faithful as a Son over God's house — and we are his house, if we hold firmly to our confidence and the hope we boast in. ⁷Therefore, as the Holy Spirit says, "Today, if you hear his voice, ⁸Indeed, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation, in the day of temptation in the desert:. ⁹Indeed, when your fathers tempted me, proved me, and noticed my works forty years. ¹⁰For this reason I was grieved with that generation, and stated, They do alway err in their heart. Then they have not known my ways. ¹¹So I swore in my anger, 'They will never enter my rest.'" ¹²Watch out, brothers and sisters, so that none of you has an evil, unbelieving heart that turns away from the living God. ¹³Instead, encourage one another every day, as long as it is still called 'today,' so that none of you may be hardened by the deceitfulness of sin. ¹⁴For we have become partners with Christ, if indeed we hold our original confidence firm until the end. ¹⁵As it is said, "Today, if you hear his voice, do not harden your hearts as in the rebellion." ¹⁶For who were the ones who heard and rebelled? Was it not all those who came out of Egypt led by Moses? ¹⁷And with whom was he angry for forty years? Was it not with those who sinned, whose bodies fell in the wilderness? ¹⁸And to whom did he swear that they would not enter his rest, if not to those who were disobedient? ¹⁹So we see that they were unable to enter because of unbelief.

1. This is the only verse in the New Testament that calls Jesus 'apostle' (apostolon, 'sent one'). The title pairs with 'high priest' to define Jesus's dual role: sent from God to humanity (apostle) and representing humanity before God (high priest). The word 'confession' (homologias) refers to the community's shared profession of faith. The verb katanoēsatē ('consider, fix your mind on, examine carefully') demands sustained intellectual attention, not casual thought.
2. The verb poiēsanti ('the one who made/appointed him') could mean 'created' or 'appointed.' In context, 'appointed' is more suitable since the comparison is about role and function, not ontology. The phrase 'in all his house' (en holō tō oikō autou) alludes to Numbers 12:7 (LXX), where God vindicates Moses: 'He is faithful in all my house.' The author affirms Moses's faithfulness before surpassing it.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Numbers 12:7. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. The argument is an analogy: as builder exceeds building, so Christ exceeds Moses. The verb kataskeuāsas ('the one who built, prepared, established') implies not just construction but design and purpose. Moses is part of the house (the people of God); Jesus built the house. The passive ēxiōtai ('has been considered worthy') is a divine passive — God has conferred this greater glory on Jesus.
4. This verse serves as a bridge in the argument. If every house requires a builder, and God is the ultimate builder of all things, then the one who built God's house (verse 3) operates with divine authority. The implication — that Jesus as builder shares in the creative work of God — is left for the reader to infer.
5. The Greek therapōn ('servant, attendant') is a more honorable term than doulos ('slave'). It denotes a trusted household attendant — Moses's role was noble but subordinate. The phrase eis martyrion tōn lalēthēsomenōn ('as a testimony to things that would be spoken later') casts Moses's entire ministry as preparatory and prophetic — pointing forward to Christ's fuller revelation.
6. The contrast is complete: Moses was faithful in (en) the house as servant; Christ is faithful over (epi) the house as Son. The conditional 'if' (ean) introduces the first of several conditional statements in the warning passages — membership in God's house is genuine but contingent on perseverance. The Greek parrēsia ('confidence, boldness, openness of speech') and kauchēma ('boast, ground of boasting') describe an outward, expressive faith. Some manuscripts add 'firm to the end' (mechri telous bebaian), but the SBLGNT omits it.
7. The quotation of Psalm 95:7-11 begins here and continues through verse 11. The attribution to the Holy Spirit (to pneuma to hagion) rather than to David reflects the author's view that Scripture's ultimate author is God himself. The word 'today' (sēmeron) becomes a key term — the author will apply this 'today' to the present moment of his audience in verses 13 and 15.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalms 95:7-11. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The Greek parapikrasmo ('rebellion, provocation, embitterment') translates the Hebrew Meribah ('strife, contention') from Psalm 95:8, which refers to the events at Meribah and Massah (Exodus 17:1-7). The Septuagint translates the place name as a description of the act. The verb sklērūnēte ('harden') echoes the Pharaoh narrative in Exodus — the same word group describes Pharaoh's hardened heart. The author warns against repeating the pattern.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalms 95:7-11 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.

8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 17:1-7 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The shift from 'do not harden your hearts' to God speaking in first person ('me,' 'my works') is dramatic — God himself recounts the offense. The Greek dokimasia ('testing, trial, proving') suggests they put God on trial, demanding proof. Despite seeing God's works (erga mou), they still refused to trust — a failure of will, not evidence.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalms 95:7-11. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The author separates 'forty years' from the preceding verse and attaches it to God's anger rather than to the works — a subtle interpretive move that emphasizes the duration of God's displeasure. The verb prosōchthisa ('was angry, was disgusted, was grieved') is stronger than mere sadness — it carries overtones of revulsion. The Greek planōntai ('go astray, wander') pictures a people who have lost their way, a deliberate irony for a generation literally wandering in the wilderness.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalms 95:7-11 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The Greek ei eiseleusontai ('if they will enter') reproduces a Hebrew oath formula — 'if they enter' means 'they certainly will not enter.' The concept of God's 'rest' (katapausin mou) is multivalent: it refers to the promised land (which that generation forfeited), to God's Sabbath rest (Genesis 2:2), and potentially to an eschatological rest that chapter 4 will develop. The divine oath seals the exclusion with ultimate finality.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalms 95:7-11. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 2:2. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. The verb blepete ('watch out, be on guard') shifts from psalm quotation to direct application. The phrase kardia ponēra apistias ('evil heart of unbelief') is shocking in its directness — unbelief is not a minor failing but an evil disposition. The infinitive apostēnai ('to turn away, to stand away from') is the root of 'apostasy.' The title 'living God' (theou zōntos) heightens the gravity: the one they would be turning from is not an abstraction but the living, active God.
13. The imperative parakaleite ('encourage, exhort') is plural and reciprocal — perseverance is a community project, not an individual achievement. The phrase achris hou to sēmeron kaleitai ('as long as it is still called today') turns the psalm's 'today' into a limited window of opportunity. The personification of sin as deceptive (apatē tēs hamartias) suggests that the hardening process is gradual and disguised — people do not recognize their own drift until the heart is already hardened.
14. The term metochoi ('partners, sharers, participants') is stronger than casual association — it implies shared ownership and joint participation. The phrase tēn archēn tēs hypostaseōs ('the beginning of our confidence/substance') is debated: hypostasis can mean 'confidence' (subjective) or 'reality/substance' (objective). In context, 'confidence' fits — the initial assurance that marked their conversion must be maintained to the end. The conditional eanper ('if indeed') is more emphatic than simple ean ('if').
15. The psalm quotation from verse 7-8 is repeated, but now 'today' carries the full weight of the intervening argument — it is no longer just a word in an ancient psalm but a present-tense demand on the audience. The repetition functions as a literary hinge between the exposition of the psalm (verses 7-11) and its application (verses 16-19).
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalms 95:7-8 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. The rhetorical questions in verses 16-18 form a devastating catechism. The answer to each is obvious and condemning. The word parepikranan ('rebelled, provoked') echoes parapikrasmos from verse 8. The shocking point: it was not some fringe group but 'all' (pantes) who came out of Egypt — the very people who witnessed the greatest deliverance in Israel's history. Privilege of experience did not guarantee faithfulness.
17. The Greek kōla ('limbs, bodies, corpses') is more graphic than 'carcasses' — it evokes bodies literally falling and lying scattered across the desert landscape. The image is drawn from Numbers 14:29, 32 where God declares that the bodies of the rebellious generation would fall in the wilderness. The forty years of anger corresponds to the forty years of wandering.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Numbers 14:29. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. The Greek apeithēsas ('those who were disobedient') can also mean 'those who were unbelieving' — the semantic overlap between disobedience and unbelief is significant. In Hebrew thought, to disbelieve God is to disobey him, and to disobey is to disbelieve. The author will make this connection explicit in verse 19.
19. The chapter's conclusion is stark: the wilderness generation's failure was ultimately a failure of faith (apistian, 'unbelief'). The verb ēdunēthēsan ('they were able') is negated — their unbelief made entry impossible, not merely unlikely. The verse links disobedience (verse 18) with unbelief (verse 19), establishing that the two are inseparable. The 'rest' that was forfeited through unbelief will be explored further in chapter 4 as still available to the present audience.

Summary: Hebrews 4 continues the argument about God's rest, demonstrating that the promise of entering God's rest still stands because neither Joshua nor the wilderness generation fully realized it. The rest is not merely the promised land but a Sabbath-rest that God has enjoyed since creation — a rest believers can enter through faithful obedience. The chapter then pivots with two powerful declarations: the word of God is living and active, sharper than any two-edged sword (verse 12), and Jesus the Son of God is a great high priest who sympathizes with human weakness, inviting believers to approach the throne of grace with confidence (verses 14-16).

What Makes This Remarkable: The argument about rest is subtle and layered: the rest God offered was not exhausted by Joshua's conquest because David, centuries later in Psalm 95, still speaks of 'today' — implying the rest remains available. The word-of-God passage (verses 12-13) is among the most memorized in the New Testament. The high priest transition (verses 14-16) forms a literary bridge from the warning section (chapters 3-4) to the priestly exposition (chapters 5-10).

Translation Friction: The identity of the 'rest' (katapausis/sabbatismos) is debated — eschatological, spiritual, or eternal. We render the terms without forcing a single interpretation. The Greek Iēsous in verse 8 refers to Joshua (the same name in Greek), not Jesus of Nazareth, which English translations must clarify. The relationship between verses 12-13 (word of God) and the surrounding argument is debated; it may function as a warning about divine judgment or as motivation for perseverance.

Connections: The rest theme connects to Genesis 2:2 (God's Sabbath), Psalm 95 (continued from chapter 3), and Joshua's conquest. The word-of-God imagery echoes Isaiah 49:2 and Revelation 1:16. The high priest declaration (verse 14) formally introduces the topic that will dominate chapters 5-10. The invitation to the 'throne of grace' (verse 16) anticipates the access through the curtain described in 10:19-22.

¹Therefore, let us fear, since a promise of entering his rest still stands, that none of you be found to have fallen short of it. ²For we also have had good news proclaimed to us, just as they did. But the message they heard did not benefit them, since it was not combined with faith in those who heard it. ³For we who have believed are entering that rest, just as he has said, "As I swore in my anger, "They will never enter my rest" — even though his works have been finished since the foundation of the world. ⁴For somewhere he has spoken about the seventh day in this way: "And God rested on the seventh day from all his works." ⁵And again in this passage: "They will never enter my rest." ⁶Therefore, since it remains for some to enter it, and those who formerly received the good news failed to enter because of disobedience, ⁷Again, he limiteth a certain day and stated in David, To day, following so long a time. As it is stated, To day if you will hear his voice, harden not your hearts. ⁸For if Joshua had given them rest, God would not have spoken later about another day. ⁹So then, a Sabbath rest remains for the people of God. ¹⁰For the one who has entered God's rest has also rested from his own works, just as God rested from his. ¹¹Let us therefore make every effort to enter that rest, so that no one may fall by following the same pattern of disobedience. ¹²For the word of God is living and active, sharper than any double-edged sword, penetrating to the point of dividing soul from spirit, joints from marrow, and able to judge the thoughts and intentions of the heart. ¹³And no creature is hidden from his sight, but all things are naked and exposed before the eyes of the one to whom we must give account. ¹⁴Therefore, since we have a great high priest who has passed through the heavens — Jesus the Son of God — let us hold firmly to our confession. ¹⁵For we do not have a high priest who is unable to sympathize with our weaknesses, but one who has been tested in every way as we are, yet without sin. ¹⁶Let us then approach the throne of grace with confidence, so that we may receive mercy and find grace for help at the right time.

1. The subjunctive phobēthōmen ('let us fear') is startling — the author includes himself. The participle kataleipomenēs ('being left, remaining') emphasizes that the promise is still active and unclaimed. The verb husterēkenai ('to have fallen short, to have come too late') suggests missing a deadline or arriving after the door has closed. The fear is not servile terror but reverent urgency.

2. The verb euēngelismenoi ('having received good news') is the same root as 'gospel' — the wilderness generation received a form of good news (the promise of rest), just as Christians have. The textual variant is significant: some manuscripts read 'not united by faith with those who heard' (referring to Joshua and Caleb who did believe), while others read 'not combined with faith in those who heard.' The SBLGNT reading emphasizes that hearing without faith is useless.
3. The present tense eisrchometha ('we are entering') describes an ongoing experience — believers are in the process of entering the rest, not merely hoping for it in the future. The parenthetical about God's works being finished since creation introduces the next argument: God's rest has existed since Genesis 2, which means the 'rest' offered to Israel was participation in God's own eternal rest, not merely settlement in Canaan.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalms 95:11 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 2 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. Quoting Genesis 2:2 (LXX). The casual citation formula 'somewhere' (pou) again directs attention to the divine author rather than to the specific text location. The author's argument: God's rest began at creation and has continued ever since — it is an existing reality, not a future creation. The verb katepausen ('rested, ceased') does not imply exhaustion but completion and satisfaction.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 2:2. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. The author juxtaposes Genesis 2:2 (God rested) with Psalm 95:11 (they will not enter my rest). The logic: the rest God enjoys since creation is the same rest the wilderness generation forfeited. Since that rest predates and outlasts the promised land, it must still be available.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalms 95:11 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 2:2 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The word apeitheian ('disobedience') here replaces apistian ('unbelief') from 3:19, reinforcing the interchangeability of the two concepts. The logic is compact: the rest exists (Genesis 2:2), the first recipients forfeited it (Psalm 95), therefore it must remain available for others.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 2:2. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 95. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The crucial argument: David wrote Psalm 95 centuries after Joshua led Israel into Canaan. If Joshua's conquest had fulfilled the promise of rest, David would not still be warning about it and offering a 'today.' The very existence of Psalm 95 proves the rest was not exhausted by the conquest. The verb horizei ('appoints, designates, defines') suggests God deliberately set a new day of opportunity.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalms 95:7-8. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The Greek Iēsous here refers to Joshua, not Jesus of Nazareth — both names are the same in Greek (from Hebrew Yehoshua). Context makes the reference clear since the subject is the conquest of Canaan. The conditional is contrary-to-fact: Joshua did not give the ultimate rest, therefore the rest still awaits. The author's logic reaches its conclusion in verse 9.
9. The author introduces a new term: sabbatismos ('Sabbath rest'), found only here in the New Testament and rare in Greek literature. This is not the generic katapausis ('rest') used throughout the argument but a specifically Sabbath-quality rest — a rest modeled on God's own cessation on the seventh day. The term is the climax of the argument: what remains is not merely a promised land or a cessation of labor but a participation in God's own eternal rest.
10. The parallel is precise: as God ceased from the work of creation on the seventh day, so the believer who enters God's rest ceases from their own works. The meaning of 'works' (ergōn) here is debated — it could mean laborious self-effort for salvation, or it could mean the completion of one's life mission. The Genesis 2:2 echo suggests satisfaction and completion rather than exhaustion or relief.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 2:2 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The verb spoudasōmen ('let us be diligent, make every effort, be eager') is not contradictory to 'rest' — the effort is to enter the rest, not to earn it. The word hypodeigmati ('pattern, example, model') turns the wilderness generation's failure into a cautionary template. The verb pesē ('fall') echoes the 'falling bodies' of 3:17 — the same fate awaits those who follow the same path.
12. The phrase logos tou theou ('word of God') likely refers to God's spoken declaration (as in the psalm quotations and the gospel message) rather than to Scripture as a written text or to Christ as the living Word, though all three layers may be present. The four adjectives — living (zōn), active (energēs), sharp (tomōteros), penetrating (diiknoumenos) — build in intensity. The division of 'soul and spirit' does not establish a trichotomist anthropology but uses merismus (a literary device listing extremes to indicate totality) — the word penetrates everything, even the most intimate interior spaces. The term kritikos ('able to judge, discerning') is the root of 'critic' — God's word is the ultimate judge of inner reality.

13. The shift from 'word of God' (verse 12) to 'his sight' and 'his eyes' personalizes the logos — the word that judges is inseparable from the God who sees. The Greek tetrachēlismena ('laid bare, exposed') literally means 'bent back the neck' — a term from wrestling (an opponent pinned with neck exposed) or from sacrifice (an animal's throat bared for slaughter). The final phrase pros hon hēmin ho logos ('to whom our account/word is due') is a wordplay — our logos must answer to the divine logos.
14. This verse marks a major transition, formally introducing the high priest theme that will dominate chapters 5-10. The phrase 'passed through the heavens' (dielēluthota tous ouranous) pictures Jesus traversing the celestial realms as the high priest passed through the outer courts to enter the Holy of Holies. The full title 'Jesus the Son of God' combines his human name with his divine status. The exhortation kratōmen tēs homologias ('let us hold firmly to our confession') echoes 3:1 and 3:6, framing the warning section.
15. The double negative (ou ... mē dynamenon, 'not unable') is a rhetorical understatement (litotes) that emphatically affirms: our high priest can and does sympathize. The Greek sympathēsai ('to sympathize, to suffer with') means not just intellectual understanding but shared experience of suffering. The phrase kata panta kath' homoiotēta ('in every respect in the same way') asserts the completeness of Jesus's testing. The qualifier chōris hamartias ('without sin') does not diminish the reality of the testing but affirms its outcome — he was genuinely tested and genuinely victorious.
16. The verb proserchōmetha ('let us approach') is a priestly term — the same word used for priests approaching the altar. Because of this high priest, all believers have priestly access. The 'throne of grace' (thronō tēs charitos) transforms a throne of judgment into a throne of generosity — the same throne that terrifies in verse 13 invites in verse 16. The two gifts — mercy (eleos) for past failure and grace (charin) for future need — together cover the full scope of human need. The phrase eis eukairon boētheian ('for timely help') literally means 'for well-timed assistance' — grace arrives at precisely the right moment.

Summary: Hebrews 5 begins the Melchizedek priesthood argument by establishing the qualifications of any high priest: he must be taken from among humans, he must be able to deal gently with the ignorant and wayward because of his own weakness, and he must be called by God. The author then shows how Christ meets these qualifications — particularly through his anguished prayers during his earthly life and his learning obedience through suffering. God designated him a priest forever according to the order of Melchizedek. The chapter ends with a rebuke: the audience should be teachers by now but still need elementary instruction.

What Makes This Remarkable: Verse 7 contains a vivid and emotionally raw depiction of Jesus's prayer life — 'loud cries and tears' — likely alluding to Gethsemane. The statement that Jesus 'learned obedience through what he suffered' (verse 8) is among the most theologically daring in the New Testament. The introduction of Melchizedek via Psalm 110:4 opens an argument the author will not complete until chapter 7, creating intentional suspense.

Translation Friction: The phrase 'he was heard because of his reverent submission' (verse 7) is debated — Jesus prayed to be saved from death, and he did die. In what sense was he 'heard'? Options include: heard in the sense of being rescued from death through resurrection, or heard in the sense that his prayer was received. We note both readings. The rebuke in verses 11-14 is sharp and raises questions about the audience's spiritual state.

Connections: Psalm 2:7 (verse 5) was already quoted in 1:5. Psalm 110:4 (verse 6) introduces the Melchizedek theme from Genesis 14:18-20 that dominates chapter 7. The Gethsemane allusion connects to the Synoptic Gospels (Mark 14:32-42 and parallels). The 'milk versus solid food' metaphor (verses 12-14) parallels 1 Corinthians 3:1-3.

1For every high priest chosen from among humans is appointed to represent them before God, to offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins. 2He is able to deal gently with the ignorant and wayward, since he himself is also subject to weakness. 3Because of this, he is obligated to offer sacrifices for sins not only for the people but also for himself. 4And no one takes this honor for himself, but only when called by God, just as Aaron was. 5So also Christ did not glorify himself to become high priest, but was appointed by the one who said to him, "You are my Son; today I have fathered you." 6As he also says in another passage, "You are a priest forever according to the order of Melchizedek." 7During the days of his life in the flesh, he offered up prayers and pleas with loud cries and tears to the one who was able to save him from death, and he was heard because of his reverent submission. 8Although he was a Son, he learned obedience through what he suffered. 9And having been made perfect, he became the source of eternal salvation for all who obey him, 10Called of God an high priest following the order of Melchisedec. 11We have much to say about this, and it is difficult to explain since you have become slow to understand. ¹²For by this time you ought to be teachers, yet you need someone to teach you again the basic elements of God's oracles. You have come to need milk, not solid food. ¹³For everyone who lives on milk is unskilled in the word of righteousness, since such a person is an infant. ¹⁴But solid food is for the mature — for those whose faculties have been trained by practice to distinguish good from evil.

1. The phrase ex anthrōpōn lambanomenos ('taken from among humans') establishes the first qualification: solidarity with humanity. The high priest must share the condition of those he represents. The verb kathistatai ('is appointed') indicates divine appointment, not self-selection. The twin offerings — gifts (dōra, voluntary offerings) and sacrifices (thysias, sin-related offerings) — cover the full range of priestly service.
2. The Greek metriopathein ('to deal gently, to moderate one's feelings') is a rare term — it describes a measured emotional response, neither indifferent nor overwhelmed. It was a term from Stoic philosophy for the moderation of passion. The Levitical high priest could be gentle because he knew his own frailty. This is both the strength and limitation of the old system — a weakness Christ transcends (he sympathizes without sharing the weakness of sin, 4:15).
3. This obligation to sacrifice for himself distinguishes the Levitical high priest from Christ. On the Day of Atonement, the high priest first offered a bull for his own sins before offering for the people (Leviticus 16:6, 11). Christ, being without sin (4:15), has no such need — a superiority the author will develop in 7:27.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Leviticus 16:6 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The second qualification: divine calling. The high priesthood is not an office one can seize — it requires God's appointment. The reference to Aaron (Exodus 28:1) grounds this in the Levitical system. The author will immediately show that Christ too was divinely called (verses 5-6), satisfying this requirement through a different but equally valid divine appointment.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 28:1. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. Psalm 2:7 returns from 1:5, now applied not to Christ's superiority over angels but to his priestly appointment. The logic: the same God who declared Jesus 'Son' also appointed him priest. The verb edoxasen ('glorified') indicates that the high priesthood is an honor (doxa/glory), not a position Christ arrogated to himself.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalms 2:7 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. Quoting Psalm 110:4, which the author will expound at length in chapter 7. This is the key text for the entire priestly argument of Hebrews. The phrase kata tēn taxin Melchisedek ('according to the order of Melchizedek') establishes a priesthood that is neither Aaronic nor Levitical but of a different and prior order — the order of the priest-king who blessed Abraham in Genesis 14:18-20. The word taxin ('order, arrangement, succession') means a category or type of priesthood, not a sequential organization.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalms 110:4. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 14:18-20. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The phrase en tais hēmerais tēs sarkos autou ('in the days of his flesh') refers to Jesus's entire earthly life, though the 'loud cries and tears' (kraugēs ischyra kai dakryōn) likely allude specifically to Gethsemane (Mark 14:32-42). The word hiketērias ('pleas, supplications') originally referred to olive branches held by those seeking mercy — it denotes urgent, desperate petition. The phrase eisakoustheis apo tēs eulabeias ('heard because of his reverent submission') is much debated. The preposition apo could mean 'because of' or 'out of.' His prayer to be saved from death was 'heard' — but he still died. Most scholars understand this as being heard through resurrection: God saved him not from dying but from remaining dead.
7. The Greek eulabeia ('reverent submission, godly fear, devotion') describes not terror but reverent awe before God's will.
8. The Greek emathēn ... epathēn ('he learned ... he suffered') is a deliberate wordplay — learning and suffering are paired by sound and by theology. The statement does not imply that Jesus was previously disobedient, but that obedience became experientially his through the process of suffering. As Son, he was always obedient; through suffering, he experienced what obedience costs in a fallen world. This is the 'perfecting' of verse 9 — vocational completion, not moral correction.
9. The passive teleiōtheis ('having been made perfect/complete') is the same verb used in 2:10. It describes vocational completion through suffering — Jesus was fully equipped as high priest through the full experience of human obedience under pressure. The word aitios ('source, cause, author') identifies Jesus not merely as an example of salvation but as its origin. The phrase 'all who obey him' (pasin tois hypakouousin autō) makes obedience the correlate of faith — those who are saved are those who respond with obedient trust.
10. The verb prosaгореutheis ('designated, addressed as, named') is a formal term — it denotes an official declaration or title conferral. God did not merely allow Jesus to function as priest; he formally proclaimed him one. This returns to Psalm 110:4 from verse 6 and completes the christological argument: Jesus meets both qualifications (solidarity with humanity, divine appointment) and exceeds them (his priesthood is of a superior order).

10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalm 110:4 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The Greek dysermēneutos ('difficult to explain, hard to interpret') is a rare word indicating the complexity of the Melchizedek argument. But the difficulty is not in the subject matter alone — it is in the audience. The word nōthroi ('slow, sluggish, dull') suggests a regression, not an original state. They have 'become' (gegonate) sluggish — they were once more receptive. This sharp transition from christological exposition to pastoral rebuke is characteristic of Hebrews.
12. The phrase dia ton chronon ('because of the time') indicates they have been believers long enough to be mature. The 'basic elements' (ta stoicheia tēs archēs) literally means 'the ABC's of the beginning' — the elementary principles. The word logia ('oracles') refers to God's authoritative utterances. The milk/solid food metaphor parallels Paul's use in 1 Corinthians 3:1-3 and reflects a common ancient educational analogy. The regression from solid food back to milk represents spiritual decline.
13. The phrase apeiros logou dikaiosynēs ('unskilled in the word/message of righteousness') could mean 'inexperienced in the teaching about righteousness' or 'unfamiliar with the righteous word/message.' The metaphor is straightforward: infants cannot digest solid food, and immature believers cannot process advanced theological teaching — specifically, the Melchizedek argument the author wants to make.
14. The Greek teleiōn ('the mature, the complete') contrasts with nēpios ('infant') in verse 13. The word aisthētēria ('faculties, senses, organs of perception') refers to the spiritual equivalent of the physical senses — the capacity to perceive and evaluate theological truth. The verb gegymnasmena ('trained, exercised') is from the gymnasium — spiritual maturity requires regular, disciplined exercise, not merely accumulated time. The phrase diakrisin kalou te kai kakou ('distinguishing good from evil') echoes the tree of knowledge in Genesis 2:17 — maturity involves the capacity for moral and theological discernment.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 2:17. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.

Summary: Hebrews 6 contains the letter's most severe warning (verses 4-8), declaring that those who have experienced the full blessings of the new covenant and then fall away cannot be renewed to repentance. This alarming passage is immediately balanced by pastoral encouragement (verses 9-12): the author is confident of better things for his audience. The chapter concludes with a meditation on the unshakeable nature of God's promise to Abraham, confirmed by divine oath, which serves as an anchor for the soul — a hope that enters behind the curtain where Jesus has gone as forerunner and eternal high priest.

What Makes This Remarkable: The warning of verses 4-8 is the most debated passage in Hebrews and one of the most contested in the entire New Testament. The five participial phrases describing the spiritual experience of those who fall away (enlightened, tasted, shared, tasted, participated) are maximally strong — these are not superficial inquirers. The agricultural metaphor (verses 7-8) grounds the abstract warning in vivid imagery. The shift to Abraham's oath (verses 13-20) provides the positive counterweight: God's promise is doubly guaranteed.

Translation Friction: The impossibility of restoration (verse 4) has generated centuries of debate. Does it describe a hypothetical impossibility, a practical impossibility, or an absolute theological impossibility? We render the text as written without resolving the debate. The phrase 'crucifying the Son of God again' (verse 6) is particularly strong. The connection between the warning section and the Abraham/oath section is debated but likely functions as comfort: God's promises are more reliable than human failure.

Connections: The warning echoes Numbers 14 (the wilderness generation's irreversible forfeiture of the land). The Abraham oath recalls Genesis 22:16-17. The 'anchor of the soul' (verse 19) draws on ancient navigation imagery. The 'forerunner' (prodromos, verse 20) introduces a term unique in the NT applied to Christ. The Melchizedek reference (verse 20) resumes the argument interrupted in 5:10.

Therefore, leaving behind the elementary teaching about Christ, let us press on toward maturity, not laying again a foundation of repentance from dead works and of faith toward God, ²Of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of care, and of resurrection of the no longer alive, and of eternal the time of reckoning. ³And this we will do, if God permits. ⁴For it is impossible, in the case of those who have once been enlightened, who have tasted the heavenly gift, who have shared in the Holy Spirit, ⁵Have tasted the good message of God, and the powers of the world to come,. ⁶and then fall away — it is impossible to restore them to repentance. By their rejection they are crucifying the Son of God all over again and exposing him to public disgrace. ⁷For land that has drunk the rain that often falls on it and produces a crop useful to those for whom it is cultivated receives a blessing from God. ⁸But if it produces thorns and thistles, it is worthless and close to being cursed, and its end is burning. ⁹But in your case, dear friends, we are convinced of better things — things that accompany salvation — even though we speak this way. ¹⁰For God is not unjust so as to forget your work and the love you showed for his name by serving the saints — as you still do. ¹¹And we want each one of you to show the same diligence toward the full assurance of hope until the end, ¹²That you be not slothful, but followers of them who by way of faith and patience inherit the promises. ¹³For when God made his promise to Abraham, since he had no one greater to swear by, he swore by himself, ¹⁴Declaring, Surely blessing I will bless you, and multiplying I will multiply you. ¹⁵And so Abraham, having waited patiently, obtained the promise. ¹⁶For people swear by something greater than themselves, and the oath serves as a confirmation that ends every dispute. ¹⁷In the same way, when God wanted to show even more clearly to the heirs of the promise the unchangeable nature of his purpose, he guaranteed it with an oath, ¹⁸That by a pair of immutable matters, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we may possess a strong consolation, who possess fled for refuge to lay hold upon the confident expectation set prior to us:. ¹⁹We have this hope as an anchor for the soul, firm and secure, which enters the inner place behind the curtain, ²⁰Indeed, whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made an high priest for ever following the order of Melchisedec.

1. The verb pherōmetha ('let us press on, let us be carried along') suggests both active effort and divine momentum — like a ship under full sail. The 'elementary teaching' (ton tēs archēs tou Christou logon) is literally 'the word of the beginning of Christ' — the foundational instruction. The author does not reject these basics but insists on moving beyond them. The six foundational elements listed in verses 1-2 appear to constitute an early catechetical curriculum.
2. The six foundation stones are grouped in three pairs: repentance and faith (verse 1), washings and laying on of hands (verse 2a), resurrection and judgment (verse 2b). The plural baptismōn ('washings') rather than the singular baptisma ('baptism') is noteworthy — it may include instruction distinguishing Christian baptism from Jewish ritual washings and John's baptism (cf. Acts 19:1-5). These elements appear to reflect a basic catechism for new believers.
3. The conditional 'if God permits' (eanper epitrepē ho theos) is not mere piety — in light of what follows (verses 4-6), it carries a solemn undertone. Whether the audience can indeed advance to maturity depends partly on their own response and partly on God's enabling. The subjunctive epitrepē leaves the outcome genuinely open.
4. The word adynaton ('impossible') stands emphatically at the head of the sentence. The five participial phrases (verses 4-5) describe the richest possible spiritual experience: enlightenment (photisthentas — possibly referring to baptism, which early Christians called 'illumination'), tasting the heavenly gift, sharing in the Holy Spirit, tasting God's good word, and experiencing the powers of the coming age. Each term is stronger than casual or superficial contact.
5. The 'good word of God' (kalon theou rhēma) echoes the promised land scouts' report: the land was 'good' (Numbers 14:7). Those who tasted the land's fruit still refused to enter. The 'powers of the coming age' (dynameis mellontos aiōnos) refers to eschatological realities — healings, spiritual gifts, transformed life — already experienced in the present. These people have sampled the age to come and found it real.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Numbers 14:7 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The participle parapesontas ('having fallen away') describes a decisive act of apostasy, not merely stumbling. The two present participles — anastaurountas ('crucifying again') and paradeigmatizontas ('exposing to public shame') — describe the ongoing significance of the fall: apostasy reenacts the crucifixion and makes a public spectacle of Christ. The impossibility is not that God's grace is insufficient but that the apostate has exhausted the only remedy — there is no sacrifice beyond Christ to which one can appeal.
7. The agricultural metaphor illustrates the warning by analogy. Land that receives rain (divine blessing) and produces good crops (faithful response) receives further blessing. The imagery draws on Isaiah 5:1-7 (the vineyard song) and Deuteronomy 11:10-17 (rain contingent on obedience). The verb piousa ('having drunk') personalizes the land — it has received God's provision.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 5:1-7. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Deuteronomy 11:10-17. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The thorns and thistles (akanthas kai tribolous) echo Genesis 3:18 — the curse on the ground after Adam's fall. Land that produces only cursed vegetation despite receiving rain is adokimos ('worthless, rejected, failing the test'). The burning (kausin) refers to the ancient agricultural practice of burning unproductive fields, but here carries eschatological overtones. Note that the text says 'close to cursing' (kataras engys), not 'cursed' — even in this severe warning, there remains a space before final judgment.

8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 3:18 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The address 'dear friends' (agapētoi, 'beloved') is the only time in Hebrews the author uses this endearment — it signals a deliberate pastoral shift from the severe warning to confident encouragement. The perfect tense pepeismetha ('we are convinced, we have been persuaded') indicates a settled confidence, not a tentative hope. The phrase ta kreissona ('the better things') uses the comparative that runs throughout Hebrews — the audience belongs to the 'better' category.
10. The litotes 'not unjust' (ou adikos) affirms God's absolute justice and faithfulness — he cannot overlook genuine service. The evidence of their salvation is practical: they served (diakonēsantes, aorist — past action) and continue serving (diakonountes, present — ongoing action) the saints. Their love is demonstrated in deed, not merely profession. This verse grounds the author's confidence from verse 9.
11. The phrase hekaston hymōn ('each one of you') individualizes the exhortation — corporate encouragement is not enough; each person must persevere. The word plērophorian ('full assurance, complete confidence') describes a hope that has reached its maximum capacity — not wishful thinking but settled certainty. The phrase achri telous ('until the end') repeats the perseverance theme from 3:6 and 3:14.
12. The word nōthroi ('sluggish') returns from 5:11, forming an inclusio around the warning section. The antidote to sluggishness is imitation (mimētai) of the faithful — a concept the author will develop extensively in chapter 11's catalogue of faith. The pair 'faith and patience' (pisteōs kai makrothymias) represents the active and enduring dimensions of perseverance. The verb klēronountōn ('inheriting') echoes the inheritance language of 1:2 and 1:14.
13. The Abraham narrative now provides positive support for perseverance. The logic of God's oath is elegant: human oaths invoke a higher authority as guarantor, but God has no superior — so he swore by himself, making his own nature the guarantee. This draws on Genesis 22:16-17, where God's oath follows Abraham's willingness to sacrifice Isaac.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 22:16-17 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. Quoting Genesis 22:17. The Hebrew construction behind the Greek (infinitive absolute + finite verb) expresses emphasis through repetition: 'blessing I will bless' means 'I will absolutely, without question, bless.' We render this emphatic construction with 'surely' and 'certainly' rather than preserving the repetitive form that sounds unnatural in English.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 22:17. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The verb makrothymēsas ('having waited patiently, having been long-suffering') picks up the 'patience' (makrothymia) of verse 12 — Abraham is the model of the patience the author recommends. The word epetychen ('obtained, attained') indicates successful arrival at the goal. Abraham waited twenty-five years for Isaac — the patience was not passive but active trust sustained over decades.
16. The author explains the universal logic of oath-taking: people invoke a higher authority to settle disputes. An oath brings finality (peras, 'end, limit, boundary') and confirmation (bebaiōsin, 'ratification, guarantee'). This human practice establishes the framework for understanding God's oath — if human oaths settle matters, how much more does a divine oath?
17. The word ametatheton ('unchangeable, irrevocable, immutable') is emphatic — God's purpose cannot be altered, reversed, or modified. The verb emesiteusen ('guaranteed, mediated, interposed') means God inserted an oath between his promise and its fulfillment as a mediating guarantee. The 'heirs of the promise' (klēronomois tēs epangelias) extends beyond Abraham to include all who inherit the Abrahamic blessing — including the Christian audience.
18. The 'two unchangeable things' (duo pragmatōn ametaethetōn) are God's promise and God's oath — either alone would suffice, but together they provide double assurance. The phrase 'impossible for God to lie' (adynaton pseusasthai ton theon) asserts a divine impossibility — not a limitation but a perfection. The image of 'fleeing for refuge' (kataphygontes) evokes the Old Testament cities of refuge (Numbers 35:9-15), where those who fled found legal protection.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Numbers 35:9-15 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. The anchor metaphor is unique in the New Testament, though common in Greco-Roman literature as a symbol of stability. What is remarkable is where this anchor is fixed — not in the ocean floor but behind the curtain (katapetasmatos) of the heavenly sanctuary. The imagery combines nautical and temple language: the soul is anchored in the Holy of Holies. The adjectives asphalē ('firm, safe, unfailing') and bebaian ('secure, reliable, confirmed') double the assurance.
20. The term prodromos ('forerunner') is used only here of Christ in the New Testament. A forerunner goes ahead to prepare the way for others to follow — unlike the Levitical high priest who entered the Holy of Holies alone, Jesus enters on behalf of others who will follow him in. The phrase 'forever according to the order of Melchizedek' returns the argument to Psalm 110:4 from 5:6, resuming the Melchizedek discussion that the warning passage (5:11-6:12) interrupted. Chapter 7 will now expound this priesthood in full.

Summary: Hebrews 7 develops the Melchizedek priesthood argument at full length. The chapter moves in three stages: first, an exposition of Genesis 14:18-20 showing Melchizedek's superiority to Abraham and therefore to Levi (verses 1-10); second, an argument that the change from Levitical to Melchizedek priesthood implies a change of law (verses 11-19); third, the superiority of Christ's permanent, oath-guaranteed priesthood over the temporary, death-limited Levitical priesthood (verses 20-28). The chapter culminates in a description of Jesus as the perfect high priest — holy, innocent, undefiled, exalted above the heavens.

What Makes This Remarkable: The Melchizedek argument is the most sophisticated typological exegesis in the New Testament. The author uses the silence of Genesis (no recorded parents, birth, or death) as positive evidence — what the text does not say about Melchizedek becomes a type of Christ's eternal priesthood. The tithing argument (verses 4-10) is brilliantly constructed: Levi, though unborn, paid tithes to Melchizedek through Abraham's body, proving Melchizedek's superiority to the entire Levitical system.

Translation Friction: The argument from silence about Melchizedek's genealogy (verse 3) is a hermeneutical method unfamiliar to modern readers. The claim that the Levitical system is 'set aside' (verse 18) raises significant questions about continuity and discontinuity between the covenants. We render the text as the author presents it without adjudicating between dispensational and covenantal frameworks.

Connections: Genesis 14:18-20 (Melchizedek's appearance) and Psalm 110:4 (the divine oath) are the two pillars. The argument about a change of law (verse 12) anticipates the new covenant argument of chapter 8. The 'indestructible life' (verse 16) connects to the resurrection. The oath without repentance (verse 21) echoes the oath certainty of 6:13-20.

¹For this Melchizedek, king of Salem, priest of God Most High, met Abraham as he was returning from the defeat of the kings and blessed him, ²To whom as well Abraham offered a tenth part of all. First being by interpretation King of righteousness, and after that as well King of Salem, which is, King of peace. ³Without father, without mother, without genealogy, having neither beginning of days nor end of life, but resembling the Son of God, he remains a priest forever. ⁴Now consider how great this man was — even the patriarch Abraham gave him a tenth of the finest spoils. ⁵Now the descendants of Levi who receive the priestly office have a commandment under the law to collect tithes from the people — that is, from their own brothers and sisters — even though they too are descended from Abraham. ⁶But this man, who does not trace his descent from them, received tithes from Abraham and blessed the one who had the promises. ⁷And beyond all dispute, the lesser is blessed by the greater. ⁸In the one case, mortal men receive tithes; but in the other case, one receives them of whom it is testified that he lives. ⁹And, so to speak, even Levi, who collects tithes, paid tithes through Abraham. ¹⁰For he was still in the body of his ancestor when Melchizedek met Abraham. ¹¹Now if perfection had been attainable through the Levitical priesthood — for on the basis of it the people received the law — what further need would there have been for another priest to arise according to the order of Melchizedek, rather than being designated according to the order of Aaron? ¹²For when the priesthood is changed, there must also be a change of law. ¹³For the one about whom these things are said belongs to a different tribe, from which no one has ever served at the altar. ¹⁴For it is clear that our Lord descended from Judah, and in connection with that tribe Moses said nothing about priests. ¹⁵And this becomes even more clear when another priest arises in the likeness of Melchizedek, ¹⁶Who is made, not following the law of a carnal commandment, but following the authority of an endless life. ¹⁷For it is testified of him, "You are a priest forever according to the order of Melchizedek." ¹⁸For on the one hand, a former commandment is set aside because of its weakness and uselessness — ¹⁹For the instruction of Moses fashioned nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better confident expectation did. By the which we draw nigh to God. ²⁰And this was not without an oath. For others became priests without an oath, ²¹For those priests were made without an oath. But this with an oath by him that stated to him, The Lord swears and will not turn back, you are a priest for ever following the order of Melchisedec.). ²²Accordingly, Jesus has also become the guarantee of a better covenant. ²³The former priests were many in number because death prevented them from continuing in office. ²⁴But because he remains forever, he holds a permanent priesthood. ²⁵Therefore he is able to save completely those who approach God through him, since he always lives to intercede for them. ²⁶For it was fitting that we should have such a high priest: holy, innocent, unstained, separated from sinners, and exalted above the heavens. ²⁷He has no need, like those high priests, to offer sacrifices day after day, first for his own sins and then for those of the people, since he did this once for all when he offered up himself. ²⁸For the law appoints as high priests men who are subject to weakness, but the word of the oath, which came after the law, appoints the Son, who has been made perfect forever.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The author begins expounding Genesis 14:18-20 verse by verse. Melchizedek holds two offices simultaneously — king and priest — a combination forbidden under the Mosaic law (kings came from Judah, priests from Levi). Only Christ unites both offices. 'Salem' (Salēm) is traditionally identified with Jerusalem (cf. Psalm 76:2). The Greek kopēs ('defeat, slaughter, cutting down') refers to Abraham's military victory over the four kings who had captured Lot.

1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 76:2. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
2. The author interprets both the name and the title etymologically. Melchizedek (Hebrew malki-tsedeq) means 'king of righteousness.' Salem (Hebrew shalem) means 'peace.' The combination — righteousness and peace — echoes Psalm 85:10 ('righteousness and peace have kissed') and Isaiah 32:17 ('the fruit of righteousness will be peace'). The order matters: righteousness first, then peace — reflecting the biblical principle that true peace is founded on justice. Abraham's tithe to Melchizedek is the key datum for the argument in verses 4-10.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 14:18-20. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalm 85:10. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 32:17. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. The three alpha-privative adjectives — apatōr ('without father'), amētōr ('without mother'), agenealogētos ('without genealogy') — describe what Genesis does not record about Melchizedek, not necessarily what was historically true. The argument is typological: because the text records no beginning or end for Melchizedek, his literary portrait resembles the eternal Son. The crucial verb is aphōmoiōmenos ('made to resemble, being likened to') — Melchizedek resembles the Son, not the reverse. The type points to the reality, not the reality to the type. He 'remains' (menei) a priest eis to diēnekes ('in perpetuity, forever').
4. The imperative theōreite ('consider, observe') calls for careful thought. The word pēlikos ('how great') asks the audience to measure Melchizedek's stature. The word akrothinion ('finest spoils, choicest portion of plunder') indicates Abraham gave not a random tenth but the best of the best. The title 'patriarch' (patriarchēs) — the highest dignity in Jewish memory — is deliberately used to heighten the contrast: even the great Abraham paid tribute to this figure.
5. The argument builds: Levitical priests collect tithes from fellow descendants of Abraham. They tithe equals. But Melchizedek collected tithes from Abraham himself — the superior tithing the inferior. The phrase exelēluthotas ek tēs osphyos Abraam ('having come from the loins of Abraham') uses vivid physical language to emphasize shared ancestry.
6. Melchizedek stands outside the Levitical genealogical system entirely (mē genealogoumenos ex autōn) — his authority derives from a different source. Two actions demonstrate his superiority: he received tithes from Abraham, and he blessed Abraham. Verse 7 will explain why the second action proves superiority.
7. This is stated as an axiom: chōris pasēs antilogias ('beyond all dispute, without any contradiction'). Blessing flows downward — from the greater to the lesser. Since Melchizedek blessed Abraham, Melchizedek was the greater party. This inverts the expected hierarchy: Abraham, the father of the nation, the recipient of divine promises, was the lesser in this encounter.
8. The contrast is between Levitical priests who die (apothnēskontes anthrōpoi, 'dying humans') and Melchizedek of whom Scripture testifies 'he lives' (hoti zē). Since Genesis records no death for Melchizedek, the silence of the text functions as testimony to ongoing life. This argument from silence is characteristic of the author's exegetical method.
9. The cautious phrase hōs epos eipein ('so to speak, one might even say') shows the author is aware this is a bold claim. Levi, the ancestor of all priests, himself paid tithes to Melchizedek — not directly, but through his ancestor Abraham. The argument depends on the concept of corporate solidarity: descendants are present in their ancestors' actions.

10. The Greek osphyi ('loins, body') refers to the procreative capacity of the ancestor. Levi was 'in' Abraham seminally — his existence was contained within Abraham's future line. This concept of ancestral representation was common in ancient thought and appears in the rabbinic principle that what the fathers do affects the children. The argument is complete: if Levi paid tithes to Melchizedek through Abraham, then the Melchizedek priesthood is superior to the Levitical.
11. The argument shifts from Melchizedek's superiority (verses 1-10) to the insufficiency of the Levitical system (verses 11-19). The word teleiōsis ('perfection, completion, accomplishment') refers to the ability to bring worshipers into full, permanent relationship with God. If the Levitical system could do this, Psalm 110:4 would be unnecessary. The parenthetical note — the people received the law on the basis of the Levitical priesthood — shows how deeply intertwined priesthood and law were. To change one is to change the other (verse 12).
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 110:4. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. The verb metatithemenēs ('being changed, being transferred') and the noun metathesis ('change, transfer, alteration') share the same root, creating emphasis through repetition. The logic is compact and revolutionary: priesthood and law are an integrated system. If the priesthood changes from Levitical to Melchizedek, the entire legal framework built on the Levitical priesthood must also change. This is the author's most direct statement about the obsolescence of the Mosaic law.
13. The practical proof: Jesus belongs to the tribe of Judah, not Levi. Under Mosaic law, no Judahite could serve as priest. The very fact that a non-Levite is declared priest confirms that the legal framework has changed. The phrase proschēken tō thysiastērīō ('attended to/served at the altar') refers to the priestly ministry of sacrifice.
14. The verb anatetalken ('has risen, has sprung up') is used for the rising of a star or the sprouting of a plant — both messianic images (Numbers 24:17, Isaiah 11:1). The phrase 'our Lord' (ho kyrios hēmōn) is one of the few times Hebrews uses 'Lord' for Jesus (cf. 2:3, 13:20). Moses's silence about Judahite priests is decisive: the Mosaic law made no provision for what God accomplished in Christ.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Numbers 24:17. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 11:1. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The phrase katadēlon estin ('it is thoroughly clear, it is abundantly evident') intensifies the argument. The word homoiotēta ('likeness, resemblance, similarity') echoes verse 3's aphōmoiōmenos — the resemblance between Melchizedek and Christ is the hinge of the entire argument.
16. The contrast is between two foundations for priesthood: nomou entolēs sarkinēs ('a law of fleshly/physical commandment') — meaning the genealogical requirement that priests descend from Aaron — and dynameōs zōēs akatalytou ('power of indestructible life'). The word sarkinēs ('fleshly, physical') is not pejorative but describes a system based on physical lineage. The word akatalytou ('indestructible, unable to be dissolved') is powerful — Christ's life cannot be terminated, making his priesthood permanent.
17. Psalm 110:4 is quoted again (cf. 5:6), now as scriptural testimony supporting the claim of verse 16. The 'forever' (eis ton aiōna) is the key word — it is the permanence of Christ's priesthood, grounded in his indestructible life, that distinguishes it from the temporary Levitical priesthood.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalms 110:4. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. The word athetēsis ('setting aside, annulment, abrogation') is a legal term for the cancellation of a regulation. The 'former commandment' (proagousēs entolēs) refers to the Levitical priesthood system and its associated laws. The two reasons for annulment — weakness (asthenes, 'inability to accomplish its purpose') and uselessness (anōpheles, 'unprofitableness, inability to help') — are not moral judgments on the law itself but assessments of its capacity to bring perfection (verse 11).
19. The stark declaration 'the law made nothing perfect' (ouden eteleiōsen ho nomos) is the hinge of the argument. What the law could not do — bring people into full, permanent access to God — the 'better hope' (kreittōn elpis) accomplishes. The verb engizomen ('we draw near') is a priestly term for approaching God's presence, now democratized — all believers draw near, not just the high priest once a year. The word 'better' (kreittonos) is the signature adjective of Hebrews, appearing thirteen times.
20. The argument shifts to the oath guarantee. Levitical priests were appointed by genealogical qualification, not by divine oath. Christ's priesthood, by contrast, was established by God's sworn oath in Psalm 110:4. An oath-backed appointment is inherently more authoritative and permanent than one based on birth.
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalm 110:4 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
21. Quoting Psalm 110:4 with a new element emphasized: the oath includes the clause 'will not change his mind' (ou metamelēthēsetai). The Greek metamelēthēsetai ('will not repent, will not regret, will not change his mind') asserts the irrevocability of God's decision. Unlike human appointments that can be reversed, God's oath-backed priesthood stands permanently. Some manuscripts add 'according to the order of Melchizedek,' but the SBLGNT omits it here.
21. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalms 110:4. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.

- 22. The word engyos ('guarantee, surety, bondsman') appears only here in the New Testament. A guarantor personally stakes themselves that an agreement will be honored. Jesus is not merely the mediator of the new covenant but its personal guarantee — his very person ensures its fulfillment. The word diathēkēs ('covenant') introduces the covenant theme that will dominate chapter 8. This is the first time in Hebrews that the new covenant is called 'better' (kreittōn).
- 23. The argument is simple but devastating: the Levitical system required a succession of priests because each one died. The accumulation of priests (pleiones, 'many, numerous') is itself evidence of the system's impermanence. Each death was a disruption, requiring a new priest to be installed.
- 24. The Greek aparabaton ('permanent, untransferable, inviolable') describes a priesthood that cannot be passed to another. The word literally means 'not passing to another' — Christ's priesthood has no successor because he never vacates the office. This is the practical implication of the 'indestructible life' of verse 16.
- 25. The phrase sōzein eis panteles ('to save completely/to the uttermost') can mean both 'completely' (in scope — every dimension of salvation) and 'forever' (in duration — to the final end). Both meanings are likely intended. The present participle proserchomenous ('those who are approaching') describes an ongoing habit, not a one-time act. The word entynchanein ('to intercede, to appeal on behalf of') describes Christ's perpetual priestly ministry in the heavenly sanctuary — his saving work did not end at the cross but continues through intercession.
- 26. Five attributes describe the ideal high priest, moving from moral character to cosmic status: hosios ('holy, devout, pious' — holy in personal character, distinct from hagios which emphasizes consecration), akakos ('innocent, without evil, guileless'), amiantos ('unstained, undefiled, pure'), kechōrismenos apo tōn hamartōlōn ('separated from sinners' — not in the sense of avoiding them, since he was 'made like his brothers in every way' in 2:17, but in the sense of being untouched by sin), and hypsēloteros tōn ouranōn genomenos ('having become higher than the heavens' — his exaltation to cosmic supremacy).
- 27. Three contrasts with the Levitical system: frequency (daily versus once for all), sequence (first for himself, then for the people — Christ has no sins requiring atonement), and substance (animal sacrifices versus himself). The adverb ephapax ('once for all') is the most important word — it asserts the unrepeatable, completely sufficient nature of Christ's self-offering. This word will recur in 9:12 and 10:10 as the defining characteristic of the new covenant sacrifice.
- 28. The chapter's concluding summary compresses the entire argument into one sentence with two contrasts: the law versus the oath, and weak men versus the perfected Son. The phrase meta ton nomon ('after the law') is chronologically significant — Psalm 110 was written after the Mosaic legislation, meaning God's oath supersedes the earlier arrangement. The perfect participle teteleōmenon ('having been made perfect') describes a completed state — the Son's perfection through suffering (2:10, 5:8-9) is permanent and irreversible.
- 28. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalm 110 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.

Summary: Hebrews 8 is the theological summit of the letter's central argument. Christ is a high priest who serves in the true heavenly sanctuary, not the earthly copy. The earthly tabernacle and its priesthood were a shadow of the heavenly reality. The chapter then quotes Jeremiah 31:31-34 in its entirety — the longest Old Testament quotation in the New Testament — to demonstrate that God himself declared the first covenant would be replaced by a new and better covenant. The chapter concludes with a devastating inference: by calling the covenant 'new,' God made the first one old, and what is old and aging is about to disappear.

What Makes This Remarkable: The Jeremiah 31 quotation is the longest continuous Old Testament quotation in the New Testament (verses 8-12). The author lets the prophet's words carry the full weight of the argument — the new covenant is not a Christian invention but a divine promise through Israel's own prophet. The four promises of the new covenant (law written on hearts, direct knowledge of God, universal knowledge, forgiveness of sins) define the essence of the Christian experience.

Translation Friction: *The relationship between the 'shadow' (skia) and the 'true' (alēthinos) sanctuary reflects a Platonic-sounding framework that the author may draw from Hellenistic Judaism (particularly Philo). Whether this indicates direct Platonic influence or independent theological reasoning is debated. The final verse's statement that the first covenant 'is about to disappear' may reflect a pre-70 AD date (before the temple's destruction) or may be theological rather than historical language.*

Connections: Jeremiah 31:31-34 is the foundational new covenant text, echoed in the Last Supper narratives (Luke 22:20, 1 Corinthians 11:25). The shadow/reality framework draws on Exodus 25:40 (the heavenly pattern shown to Moses). The obsolescence of the first covenant connects to 7:12 (change of priesthood requires change of law). The new covenant promises will be applied practically in 10:15-18.

¹Now the main point of what we are saying is this: we have such a high priest, one who is seated at the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens, ²He serves in the true sanctuary, the genuine tabernacle set up by the Lord and not by any human being. ³For every high priest is appointed to offer gifts and sacrifices; therefore it was necessary for this priest also to have something to offer. ⁴Now if he were on earth, he would not be a priest at all, since there are already those who offer gifts according to the law. ⁵They serve in a sanctuary that is a copy and shadow of the heavenly one, just as Moses was warned when he was about to construct the tent: "See that you make everything according to the pattern that was shown to you on the mountain." ⁶But now Christ has obtained a ministry that is as much more excellent as the covenant he mediates is better, since it is enacted on better promises. ⁷For if that first covenant had been faultless, there would have been no occasion to look for a second. ⁸For he finds fault with them when he says: "The days are coming, declares the Lord, when I will establish a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah — ⁹Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day when I picked up them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt. Because they continued not in my covenant, and I regarded them not, says the Lord. ¹⁰For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, declares the Lord: I will put my laws into their minds, and I will write them on their hearts. And I will be their God, and they will be my people. ¹¹And they will not teach each one his neighbor and each one his brother, saying, 'Know the Lord,' for they will all know me, from the least of them to the greatest. ¹²For I will be merciful toward their wrongdoing, and I will remember their sins no more." ¹³By calling it 'new,' he has made the first one obsolete. And what is becoming obsolete and growing old is about to disappear.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The word kephalaion ('main point, summary, chief matter') signals that what follows is the central thesis of the entire letter. The phrase 'seated at the right hand' (ekathisen en dexia) returns to Psalm 110:1 from 1:3, 13 — the Son's session at God's right hand frames the entire argument. The title 'Majesty' (megalōsynēs) avoids the divine name while conveying supreme authority.
1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 110:1. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
2. The word leitourgos ('minister, servant, one who performs public service') is a cultic term for priestly service. The phrase tēs skēnēs tēs alēthinēs ('the true tent/tabernacle') introduces the shadow/reality distinction. The 'true' (alēthinos) tabernacle is not 'true' as opposed to 'false' but 'true' as opposed to 'copy' — the heavenly original versus the earthly reproduction. The Lord (kyrios) pitched this tent, distinguishing it from the human-made tabernacle of Exodus.
3. The logic is simple: a priesthood requires an offering. Since Christ is a high priest, he must have an offering. The author does not specify the offering here — that revelation comes in 9:12-14 (his own blood) and 9:26 (himself). The verb prosenegkē (aorist subjunctive of prospherō) points to a definitive, singular offering rather than repeated acts.
4. The conditional is contrary-to-fact: Christ is not on earth but in the heavenly sanctuary. On earth, only Levitical priests could serve, and Christ is from Judah (7:14). His priesthood operates in a different sphere — the heavenly sanctuary. The present tense 'there are' (ontōn) those who offer according to the law suggests the earthly temple is still functioning when this letter was written, possibly indicating a pre-70 AD date.
5. Quoting Exodus 25:40. The terms hypodeigmati ('copy, imitation') and skia ('shadow') describe the earthly tabernacle's relationship to the heavenly reality. A shadow proves the existence of the object casting it but is not the object itself. The word typon ('pattern, model') shown to Moses on Sinai was the heavenly original — Moses built a replica. This framework is central to the author's argument: the earthly system was always derivative, pointing to the true reality where Christ now serves.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 25:40 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The verse establishes a proportion: ministry excellence corresponds to covenant excellence. Three uses of 'better' (diaphorōteras, kreittōn, kreittosin) drive the comparison. The word mesitēs ('mediator') describes one who stands between two parties to guarantee an agreement. The phrase epi kreittosin epageliais nenomothetai ('enacted on better promises') introduces the Jeremiah 31 quotation — the new covenant's superiority lies in its promises.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Jeremiah 31. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The logic parallels 4:8 (if Joshua had given rest, no second day would be appointed) and 7:11 (if perfection came through the Levitical priesthood, no Melchizedek priest would be needed). The word amemptos ('faultless, blameless, without defect') does not mean the first covenant was sinful but that it was unable to accomplish its ultimate purpose — permanent access to God. The very existence of Jeremiah 31's 'new covenant' prophecy proves the first was insufficient.

7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Jeremiah 31. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The Jeremiah 31:31-34 quotation begins here — the longest continuous Old Testament quotation in the New Testament. The Greek memphomenos ('finding fault with') could be directed at the people (autous, 'them') or at the covenant. The author reads Jeremiah's prophecy as God's own critique of the first covenant's inadequacy. The verb synteleō ('I will establish, I will bring to completion') suggests not mere replacement but fulfillment. The specification of 'Israel and Judah' encompasses the entire covenant people — both kingdoms.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Jeremiah 31:31-34 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The image of God taking Israel 'by the hand' (epilabomenou mou tēs cheiros autōn) is tender — like a parent leading a child. The contrast with their subsequent unfaithfulness is poignant. The Greek ēmelēsa autōn ('I showed no concern for them, I neglected them') translates a difficult Hebrew phrase in Jeremiah. The Septuagint rendering differs from the Masoretic Text's 'though I was a husband to them.' The author follows the Septuagint, which emphasizes God's withdrawal rather than his continued commitment.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Jeremiah 31:31-34. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The first two promises of the new covenant: internalized law and restored relationship. The move from external stone tablets to internal inscription (dianoian, 'mind'; kardias, 'hearts') transforms obedience from external compliance to internal disposition. The covenant formula 'I will be their God and they will be my people' (esomai autois eis theon) is the most ancient covenant declaration, running from Exodus 6:7 through Revelation 21:3. In the new covenant, this relationship is fully realized.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 6:7 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The third promise: universal, direct knowledge of God. The double negative ou mē ('they will never, they will not at all') is emphatic. The knowledge promised is not intellectual information about God but relational knowing (gnōthi, from ginōskō) — the personal, experiential knowledge of covenant intimacy. The phrase 'from the least to the greatest' (apo mikrou heōs megalou) asserts that this knowledge crosses all social and spiritual hierarchies.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Jeremiah 31:31-34. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. The fourth promise and the foundation of all the others: complete forgiveness. The word hileōs ('merciful, gracious, propitious') is related to hilaskomai ('to atone,' cf. 2:17) — God's mercy toward sin is rooted in atonement. The phrase ou mē mnēsthō eti ('I will never again remember') does not mean God literally forgets but that he will not hold sins against his people — they will never be counted in the record. This promise is what makes the new covenant 'better': the sin problem is definitively resolved. The author will return to this verse in 10:17 as the clinching argument.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Jeremiah 31:31-34. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. The author's commentary on the Jeremiah quotation is surgically precise: the single word 'new' (kainēn) in Jeremiah 31:31 logically renders the first covenant 'old' (pepalaiōken, 'has made old/obsolete'). The two participles — palaïoumenon ('becoming obsolete') and gēraskon ('growing old, aging') — describe a process rather than a sudden event. The phrase engys aphanismou ('near disappearance') is debated: is this a pre-70 AD prediction of the temple's destruction, or a theological statement about the first covenant's status regardless of the temple's physical fate? The text does not specify, and we leave it unresolved.

Summary: Hebrews 9 provides a detailed comparison between the earthly tabernacle and the heavenly sanctuary. The chapter describes the furniture and rituals of the old covenant tabernacle (verses 1-10), then declares that Christ entered the heavenly sanctuary once for all through his own blood, obtaining eternal redemption (verses 11-14). Christ is the mediator of the new covenant, and his death is both sacrifice and testament-inauguration (verses 15-22). The chapter climaxes with the declaration that Christ appeared once at the end of the ages to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself, and will appear a second time not to deal with sin but to save those who are eagerly waiting for him (verses 23-28).

What Makes This Remarkable: The tabernacle typology is the most sustained in the New Testament. The author describes the outer and inner sanctuaries, their furnishings, and the annual Day of Atonement ritual, all as shadows of Christ's work. The phrase 'once for all' (ephapax, verse 12) is the theological center of gravity. The double-entendre of diathēkē as both 'covenant' and 'testament/will' (verses 16-17) is a unique wordplay that works because a will requires the testator's death.

Translation Friction: The author's description of the tabernacle furniture (verses 2-5) contains some details that differ from the Old Testament layout (e.g., the golden altar of incense placed inside the Holy of Holies rather than outside). Scholars debate whether this reflects a different tradition, a theological point about the altar's function, or the Day of Atonement ritual when incense entered the inner chamber. We render the text as written and note the discrepancy.

Connections: The tabernacle description draws on Exodus 25-30. The Day of Atonement ritual follows Leviticus 16. The blood-of-the-covenant language echoes Exodus 24:8 and Jesus's words at the Last Supper (Mark 14:24). The 'once for all' theme connects to 7:27 and 10:10. Christ's second appearing (verse 28) connects to the eschatological hope throughout the New Testament.

¹Now even the first covenant had regulations for worship and an earthly sanctuary. ²For a tent was prepared — the outer section — in which were the lampstand, the table, and the bread of the Presence. This is called the Holy Place. ³Behind the second curtain was a tent called the Most Holy Place. ⁴It had the golden altar of incense and the ark of the covenant covered on all sides with gold, in which were a golden jar holding the manna, Aaron's staff that budded, and the tablets of the covenant. ⁵Above the ark were the cherubim of glory overshadowing the mercy seat. But we cannot speak about these things in detail now. ⁶With these arrangements in place, the priests continually enter the outer tent to carry out their duties of worship, ⁷However, into the second traveled the high priest alone once every year, not apart from blood, which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people. ⁸By this the Holy Spirit was showing that the way into the Most Holy Place had not yet been disclosed as long as the outer tent still had standing. ⁹This is a symbol for the present time, during which gifts and sacrifices are offered that cannot perfect the conscience of the worshiper, ¹⁰These were outward regulations about food, drink, and various ceremonial washings — rules that applied only until the time when God would set things right. ¹¹But when Christ appeared as high priest of the good things that have come, he entered through the greater and more perfect tent — not made with hands, that is, not of this creation — ¹²Neither by the lifeblood of goats and calves, but by his own lifeblood he went into in once into the sacred location, possessing obtained eternal redemption for us. ¹³For if the blood of goats and bulls and the ashes of a heifer sprinkled on those who are ceremonially unclean sanctify them for the purification of the body, ¹⁴Purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living god?, how much more will the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God. ¹⁵For this reason he is the mediator of a new covenant, so that those who are called may receive the promised eternal inheritance, since a death has occurred that redeems them from the transgressions committed under the first covenant. ¹⁶For where a will is involved, the death of the one who made it must be established. ¹⁷For a will takes effect only at death; it has no force while the one who made it is still alive. ¹⁸Therefore not even the first covenant was inaugurated without blood. ¹⁹For when every commandment of the law had been declared by Moses to all the people, he took the blood of calves and goats, with water and scarlet wool and hyssop, and sprinkled both the scroll itself and all the people, ²⁰Indeed, declaring, This is the blood of the testament which God has enjoined to you. ²¹And in the same way he sprinkled the tent and all the vessels used in worship with blood. ²²Indeed, under the law almost everything is purified with blood, and without the shedding of blood there is no forgiveness. ²³Therefore it was necessary for the copies of the heavenly things to be purified with these rites, but the heavenly things themselves require better sacrifices than these. ²⁴For Christ did not enter a sanctuary made by hands — a mere copy of the true one — but into heaven itself, to appear now in the presence of God on our behalf. ²⁵Nor was it to offer himself repeatedly, as the high priest enters the Most Holy Place every year with blood that is not his own. ²⁶Otherwise, he would have had to suffer repeatedly since the foundation of the world. But as it is, he has appeared once for all at the end of the ages to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. ²⁷And just as it is appointed for people to die once, and after that comes judgment, ²⁸So Christ was once offered to bear the wrongdoings of numerous. And to them that pay attention for him will he appear the second moment without sin to salvation.

1. The adjective kosmikon ('earthly, worldly, of this world') does not mean 'cosmetic' or 'ornamental' but 'belonging to this created order' — as opposed to the heavenly sanctuary. The word dikaiōmata ('regulations, ordinances') refers to the divinely prescribed rules of worship. The author acknowledges the first covenant had legitimate worship — it was real but provisional.
2. The author describes the tabernacle's two-chamber structure from Exodus 26. The 'first' (prōtē) tent is the outer chamber, the Holy Place. Its furnishings are: the lampstand (lychnia, the seven-branched menorah of Exodus 25:31-40), the table (trapeza, for the showbread, Exodus 25:23-30), and the prothesis tōn artōn ('the setting forth of the bread,' the bread of the Presence renewed weekly). We render 'the Holy Place' (Hagia) to distinguish it from the inner chamber.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 26. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 25:31-40. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. The 'second curtain' (deuteron katapetasma) separated the Holy Place from the Most Holy Place (Hagia Hagiōn, literally 'Holy of Holies'). Only the high priest could pass this curtain, and only once a year on the Day of Atonement (Leviticus 16:2). This curtain is the same one that the author says Jesus has passed through (6:19, 10:20).
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Leviticus 16:2 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The word thymiaterion can mean either 'censer' (a portable incense burner) or 'altar of incense.' In the Old Testament, the altar of incense stood in the Holy Place, not in the Most Holy Place (Exodus 30:6). The author may be associating it with the inner room because on the Day of Atonement the high priest brought incense inside the curtain (Leviticus 16:12-13), or he may be describing a functional relationship rather than physical location. The three items inside the ark — manna (Exodus 16:33), Aaron's budded staff (Numbers 17:10), and the tablets (Exodus 25:16) — are all covenant tokens.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 30:6. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Leviticus 16:12-13. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 16:33. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Numbers 17:10. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 25:16. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. The cherubim (Cheroubin doxēs, 'cherubim of glory') are the golden figures described in Exodus 25:18-22, their wings forming the space where God's presence was manifest. The word hilastērion ('mercy seat, place of atonement') is the same word Paul uses in Romans 3:25 for Christ as the 'place of atonement.' It is the lid of the ark where the high priest sprinkled blood on the Day of Atonement. The author deliberately abbreviates — his purpose is not a tour of the tabernacle but the contrast between the old system and Christ.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 25:18-22 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The regular priests entered the Holy Place daily to tend the lampstand, set out the bread, and offer incense. The phrase dia pantos ('continually, at all times') emphasizes the repetitive nature of this service. The author's point will become clear in contrast: where the ordinary priests go continually, the high priest goes once a year (verse 7), and Christ goes once for all (verse 12).
7. Three restrictions govern the high priest's access to the Most Holy Place: only the high priest (monos), only once a year (hapax tou eniautou, on the Day of Atonement), and never without blood (ou chōris haimatos). These limitations demonstrate the imperfection of the system — access to God's presence was severely restricted. The word agnoēmātōn ('sins of ignorance, unintentional errors') refers to sins committed unknowingly, following Leviticus 4-5. Deliberate, defiant sins had no sacrificial remedy under the old system (Numbers 15:30-31).
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Leviticus 4-5. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Numbers 15:30-31. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The Holy Spirit is identified as the interpreter of tabernacle symbolism — the physical structure communicated a spiritual lesson. The closed curtain between the two chambers was not merely a liturgical boundary but a divine sign: full access to God's presence was 'not yet disclosed' (mēpō pephanerōsthai). The phrase 'still had standing' (eti echousēs stasin) could refer to the physical first chamber of the tabernacle or, figuratively, to the entire old covenant system.
9. The word parabolē ('symbol, parable, illustration') identifies the tabernacle as a parabolic structure — it teaches by analogy. The critical phrase is kata syneidēsīn teleiōsai ('to perfect with respect to conscience'). The old sacrifices could not cleanse the inner person — they dealt with external ritual purity but left the conscience (syneidēsis, the internal moral awareness) unresolved. This is the fundamental deficiency Christ's sacrifice addresses

10. The phrase dikaiōmata sarkos ('regulations for the body/flesh') characterizes the old system as externally focused — food laws, drink laws, and ritual washings (baptismois, cf. 6:2). The word diorthōseōs ('new order, reformation, setting right') is used only here in the New Testament. It describes the time when the external, provisional regulations would be replaced by internal, permanent realities. The author identifies that time as the present — Christ's coming is the diorthōsis.
11. The Greek shifts dramatically from the old system to Christ. Some manuscripts read 'good things to come' (mellontōn) rather than 'good things that have come' (genomenōn); the SBLGNT reads genomenōn, emphasizing that the good things are already realized in Christ. The heavenly tent is described by three negatives: not made with hands (ou cheiropoiētou), not of this creation (ou tautēs tēs ktiseōs) — it belongs to an entirely different order of reality.
12. This verse is the theological center of Hebrews. Three contrasts with the Day of Atonement ritual: the medium (animal blood versus his own blood), the frequency (annually versus once for all, ephapax), and the result (temporary cleansing versus eternal redemption, aiōnian lytrōsin). The word lytrōsin ('redemption, ransoming, liberation by payment') evokes the Old Testament go'el — the kinsman who pays the price to set family members free. Christ's blood is both the means of entry and the price of redemption.
13. The argument is from lesser to greater (a fortiori). The three ritual elements — blood of goats, blood of bulls (Day of Atonement, Leviticus 16), and ashes of a heifer (the red heifer ceremony, Numbers 19) — achieved genuine but limited cleansing: purification of the 'flesh' (sarkos), meaning external ritual purity. The author concedes the old system's effectiveness within its domain before arguing for Christ's greater effectiveness.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Leviticus 16 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Numbers 19 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. The phrase posō mallon ('how much more') completes the a fortiori argument. Three elements make Christ's sacrifice superior: the agent (Christ, not an animal), the means (through the eternal Spirit, not through ritual procedure), and the quality (without blemish, amōmon — the sacrificial perfection requirement of Leviticus 1:3 applied to Christ's moral perfection). The result penetrates where the old system could not: it cleanses the conscience (syneidēsin), not just the body. The purpose is positive — not merely forgiveness but enablement: 'to serve the living God' (latreuein theō zōnti).
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Leviticus 1:3. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. Christ's death has retroactive power — it atones for sins committed under the first covenant as well as the second. The word apolytrōsin ('redemption, ransoming') extends the liberation language of verse 12. The phrase 'those who are called' (hoi keklēmenoi) uses the perfect passive — their calling is a completed divine act with ongoing effect. The 'eternal inheritance' (aiōniou klēnomias) echoes the inheritance language of 1:2, 14.
16. The author exploits the double meaning of diathēkē: in verses 15 and earlier, it means 'covenant'; here and in verse 17, it means 'will/testament.' A will becomes operative only when the testator dies. The wordplay works because the same Greek word serves both legal concepts. This is not a switch in meaning but an exploitation of the semantic overlap — Christ's death activates the new covenant just as a death activates a will.
17. The legal principle is straightforward: a will is valid (bebaia, 'secure, in force') only after the testator's death. It has no legal power (ischyei, 'is strong, is operative') during the testator's lifetime. Applied to Christ: the new covenant's blessings became operative through his death. This is the author's explanation of why the new covenant required a death — not merely to provide blood for sacrifice but to activate the testamentary provisions.
18. The verb engekainistai ('was inaugurated, was dedicated, was put into effect') indicates the formal activation of the covenant. The principle applies universally: both covenants required blood for their inauguration. The first covenant's inauguration with blood (Exodus 24:3-8) foreshadowed the new covenant's inauguration with Christ's blood.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 24:3-8 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. The author describes the covenant inauguration ceremony of Exodus 24:3-8, adding details not found in the Exodus account (goats, water, scarlet wool, hyssop, and sprinkling of the scroll). These additional elements may come from a tradition that combined the covenant ceremony with the Day of Atonement and red heifer rituals, or from a textual tradition no longer extant. The hyssop and scarlet wool appear in the red heifer ceremony (Numbers 19) and the leper cleansing (Leviticus 14).
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 24:3-8. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Numbers 19. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Leviticus 14. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
20. Quoting Exodus 24:8 with slight modification. The Hebrew/LXX reads 'which the LORD has made with you'; the author writes 'which God has commanded for you' (eneteilato pros hymas). The verb eneteilato ('commanded') emphasizes the obligatory nature of the covenant. Jesus's words at the Last Supper — 'This is my blood of the covenant' (Mark 14:24) — deliberately echo this covenant-inauguration language.

- 20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 24:8 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
- 21. The sprinkling of the tabernacle and its vessels with blood is not directly recorded in Exodus 24 but is attested in Leviticus 8:15, 19 (the consecration of the tabernacle) and in Josephus (Antiquities 3.206). Every element of the worship system was consecrated by blood, reinforcing the principle of verse 22.
- 21. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 24. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
- 21. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Leviticus 8:15. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
- 22. The qualifier 'almost' (schedon) is precise — some purification under the law used water (Numbers 31:23), fire (Numbers 31:23), or flour (Leviticus 5:11-13) rather than blood. But the general principle stands: blood is the primary means of purification and atonement. The final clause — chōris haimatekchysias ou ginetai aphesis ('without blood-shedding there is no forgiveness/release') — is one of the most foundational statements in biblical theology. The word haimatekchysias ('blood-shedding') appears only here in the New Testament.
- 22. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Numbers 31:23. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
- 22. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Leviticus 5:11-13. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
- 23. The argument: if the earthly copies (hypodeigmata) required animal blood for purification, the heavenly originals require a better sacrifice — Christ's own blood. The plural 'sacrifices' (thysiais) is surprising since Hebrews emphasizes the singularity of Christ's offering; it may be a plural of category ('sacrifices of a better kind') rather than quantity.
- 24. Three contrasts define Christ's superior priestly ministry: the sanctuary (handmade copy versus heaven itself), the timing (now — presently, continuously), and the purpose (on our behalf — hyper hēmōn, his presence before God is for us). The word antitypa ('copies, counterparts, representations') identifies the earthly tabernacle as a reproduction, not the original. The verb emphanisthēnai ('to appear, to be manifest') describes Christ's visible presence before God's face (prosōpō, literally 'face') — he stands before God representing us.
- 25. The adverb pollakis ('repeatedly, often, many times') contrasts with the 'once for all' of verse 12. The phrase en haimati allotriō ('with blood belonging to another, with blood not his own') highlights both the distance between the Levitical high priest and his sacrifice (he offers someone else's blood) and between the Levitical system and Christ (who offers his own blood). Christ's self-offering is both more costly and more effective.
- 26. The reductio ad absurdum: if Christ's sacrifice were not once-for-all sufficient, he would have needed to suffer repeatedly throughout all of history. The phrase epi synteleia tōn aiōnōn ('at the culmination of the ages') places Christ's sacrifice at the climax of history — all previous ages were leading to this moment. The verb *atheēs*in ('to put away, to set aside, to annul') uses the same word from 7:18 (the annulment of the old commandment) — here it is sin itself that is annulled.
- 27. The analogy: human beings die once (hapax), not repeatedly. Death is a singular, unrepeatable event followed by judgment. Christ's death follows the same pattern — singular and unrepeatable — but with a different sequel: not judgment but salvation (verse 28). The word apokeitai ('is appointed, is laid up, is stored away') suggests a divine decree — death is not random but ordained.
- 28. The chapter ends with a sweeping christological summary in three acts: Christ's first appearing was to deal with sin (verse 26), his present ministry is intercession before God (verse 24), and his second appearing will bring final salvation (this verse). The phrase pollōn anenenkein hamartias ('to bear the sins of many') echoes the Servant Song of Isaiah 53:12. The words chōris hamartias ('without sin, apart from sin') mean his second coming will have nothing to do with sin — the sin problem was fully and finally resolved at the cross. The verb apekdechomenois ('eagerly waiting, expectantly anticipating') describes an active, longing hope.
- 28. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 53:12 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.

Summary: Hebrews 10 completes the central priestly argument and transitions to exhortation. The chapter first demonstrates that animal sacrifices could never take away sins (verses 1-4), then presents Christ's self-offering as the fulfillment of Psalm 40 — 'a body you have prepared for me' (verses 5-10). Christ's single offering has perfected believers forever (verses 11-18). The author then draws three practical conclusions: approach God with confidence, hold fast to hope, and encourage one another (verses 19-25). A fourth warning passage warns of judgment for deliberate sin after receiving the truth (verses 26-31). The chapter closes by urging the audience to remember their earlier endurance and not throw away their confidence (verses 32-39).

What Makes This Remarkable: The Psalm 40 quotation (verses 5-7) is theologically decisive — it places on Christ's lips a declaration that God does not desire animal sacrifices but has prepared a body for the purpose of doing God's will. The 'new and living way through the curtain, that is, his flesh' (verse 20) is one of the most profound metaphors in the letter. The warning passage (verses 26-31) is the most severe in the New Testament after the unforgivable sin passages.

Translation Friction: The Septuagint reading of Psalm 40:6 ('a body you have prepared for me') differs from the Masoretic Text ('ears you have dug/opened for me'). The author depends on the Septuagint reading for his argument. The warning of verses 26-31 raises the same questions about apostasy as 6:4-8. The phrase 'trampled the Son of God underfoot' (verse 29) is among the harshest in the New Testament.

Connections: The Psalm 40 quotation connects to the incarnation theology of chapter 2. The new covenant quotation from Jeremiah 31 returns in verses 16-17, closing the argument begun in chapter 8. The 'new and living way' (verse 20) connects to the 'forerunner' of 6:20. The call to perseverance (verses 32-39) anticipates the faith catalogue of chapter 11. The Habakkuk 2:3-4 quotation (verses 37-38) will be developed in chapter 11.

¹For since the law has only a shadow of the good things to come and not the true form of these realities, it can never, by the same sacrifices that are continually offered year after year, make perfect those who draw near. ²Otherwise, would they not have stopped being offered, since the worshipers, once cleansed, would no longer have any consciousness of sins? ³But in these sacrifices there is a reminder of sins year after year. ⁴For it is impossible for the blood of bulls and goats to take away sins. ⁵Therefore, when Christ comes into the world, he says, "Sacrifices and offerings you have not desired, but a body you have prepared for me. ⁶In burnt offerings and sin offerings you have taken no pleasure. ⁷Then I said, 'See, I have come — in the scroll of the book it is written about me — to do your will, O God.'" ⁸When he said above, "You have neither desired nor taken pleasure in sacrifices and offerings and burnt offerings and sin offerings" — these are offered according to the law — ⁹Then stated he, Lo, I arrive to do your will, O God. He takes off the initially, that he may establish the second. ¹⁰By that will, we have been sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all. ¹¹And every priest stands day after day ministering and offering the same sacrifices repeatedly, which can never take away sins. ¹²But when Christ had offered for all time a single sacrifice for sins, he sat down at the right hand of God, ¹³Since that time, he waits for his enemies to be made a footstool under his feet. ¹⁴For by a single offering he has perfected for all time those who are being sanctified. ¹⁵And the Holy Spirit also testifies to us, for after saying, ¹⁶"This is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, declares the Lord: I will put my laws on their hearts, and write them on their minds," ¹⁷Then he adds: "I will never again remember their sins and lawless acts." ¹⁸Where there is forgiveness of these, there is no longer any offering for sin. ¹⁹Therefore, brothers and sisters, since we have confidence to enter the Most Holy Place by the blood of Jesus, ²⁰He opened a new and living way for us through the curtain — that is, through his body. ²¹After an high priest over the house of God; ²²And our bodies washed with pure water, let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience. ²³Let us hold fast to the confession of our hope without wavering, for the one who promised is faithful. ²⁴And let us consider how to stir up one another to love and good works, ²⁵Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves as one, as the kind of some is. But exhorting one another — and so much the more, as you see the day approaching. ²⁶For if we go on sinning deliberately after receiving the knowledge of the truth, there no longer remains a sacrifice for sins, ²⁷However, a certain fearful looking for of the time of reckoning and fiery indignation, which will devour the adversaries. ²⁸Anyone who rejected the law of Moses died without mercy on the testimony of two or three witnesses. ²⁹How much worse punishment, do you think, will be deserved by the one who has trampled the Son of God underfoot, who has treated the blood of the covenant by which he was sanctified as an ordinary thing, and who has outraged the Spirit of grace? ³⁰For we know the one who said, "Vengeance is mine; I will repay." And again, "The Lord will judge his people." ³¹It is a terrifying thing to fall into the hands of the living God. ³²But recall the earlier days when, after you were enlightened, you endured a hard struggle with sufferings. ³³Sometimes you were publicly exposed to ridicule and affliction, and sometimes you became partners with those who were treated that way. ³⁴For you showed sympathy to the prisoners and joyfully accepted the plundering of your property, since you knew that you yourselves had a better and lasting possession. ³⁵Therefore do not throw away your confidence, which has a great reward. ³⁶For you have need of endurance, so that when you have done the will of God, you may receive what is promised. ³⁷For, "In just a very little while, the one who is coming will come and will not delay. ³⁸But my righteous one will live by faith, and if he shrinks back, my soul has no pleasure in him." ³⁹But we are not among those who shrink back and are destroyed, but among those who have faith and preserve their souls.

1. The distinction between 'shadow' (skian) and 'true form' (eikona, literally 'image') refines the typology of 8:5. A shadow gives outline but no substance; the 'image' (eikōn) is the thing itself in its true form. The repetition of sacrifices 'year after year' (kat' eniauton) is itself evidence of their inadequacy — if they worked, they would not need repeating. The verb teleiōsai ('make perfect') carries the full weight of Hebrews' perfection concept: to bring into complete, permanent right relationship with God.
2. The rhetorical question expects the answer 'Yes.' If the sacrifices actually cleansed the conscience (syneidēsin hamartiōn, 'consciousness of sins'), they would be unnecessary after the first offering. The fact that they continue proves they have not accomplished their purpose. The word hapax ('once') here means 'once and for all' — genuine cleansing would be definitive.
3. The word anamnēsis ('reminder, remembrance, memorial') is deeply ironic: the sacrifices meant to deal with sin actually function as an annual reminder that sin has not been dealt with. The same word appears in the Last Supper accounts ('do this in remembrance of me,' Luke 22:19) — but Christ's memorial is of accomplished redemption, not unresolved guilt.
4. The declaration adynaton ('impossible') is categorical — not 'difficult' or 'unlikely' but absolutely impossible. The verb aphairein ('to take away, to remove') describes complete elimination. Animal blood could cover sins ceremonially (Leviticus 17:11) but could not remove them from the conscience or from God's account. This blunt assessment sets up the Psalm 40 quotation as the divine alternative.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Leviticus 17:11. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalm 40. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. Quoting Psalm 40:6-8 (LXX 39:7-9). The Greek sōma katērtisō moi ('a body you have prepared for me') differs from the Hebrew 'ears you have dug/opened for me.' The Septuagint translators apparently interpreted the Hebrew idiom (ears opened = readiness to hear and obey) with a broader reference to the whole body given for obedience. The author of Hebrews depends on this Septuagint reading — the 'body prepared' becomes the body Christ offered on the cross. The author places these words on Christ's lips as he enters the world (eiserchamenos eis ton kosmon), making the incarnation itself a priestly act of willing obedience.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalms 40:6-8 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The holokautōmata ('burnt offerings,' where the entire animal is consumed) and peri hamartias ('sin offerings') represent the full range of Levitical sacrifice. God's displeasure is not with the sacrifices themselves but with their inability to accomplish what he desires — the permanent removal of sin and the restoration of relationship.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalms 40:6-8. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The phrase en kephalidi bibliou ('in the scroll/heading of the book') likely refers to the Torah, where God's will for the Messiah is recorded. Christ's statement 'I have come to do your will' replaces the entire sacrificial system with personal, willing obedience. The obedience of the incarnate Son — culminating in the cross — is what God always desired, and what animal sacrifice could only symbolize.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalms 40:6-8. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The author now interprets the psalm quotation. Four categories of sacrifice are listed comprehensively (sacrifices, offerings, burnt offerings, sin offerings) and all four are rejected. The parenthetical 'these are offered according to the law' (kata nomon prosperontai) is significant: God does not desire the very sacrifices his own law prescribed. This paradox — God commanded what he did not ultimately want — is resolved by understanding the sacrificial system as preparatory and typological.

9. The author's conclusion is decisive: the verb anairei ('he abolishes, he takes away, he removes') eliminates the first system (animal sacrifice), and the verb stēsē ('he may establish, he may set up') installs the second (Christ's willing obedience unto death). The 'first' and 'second' refer to the two systems, not the two covenants directly, though the implication is the same.
10. The phrase en hō thelēmati ('by that will') connects directly to Psalm 40:8 — Christ's doing of God's will is the instrument of our sanctification. The perfect passive hēgiasmenoi esmen ('we have been sanctified') describes a completed state with ongoing effect — the sanctification accomplished by Christ's offering is permanent. The word ephapax ('once for all') appears for the climactic fourth time in Hebrews (7:27, 9:12, 9:26, 10:10), definitively closing the argument about sacrifice.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalm 40:8 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The posture of the Levitical priests is significant: they stand (hestēken). There was no chair in the tabernacle because their work was never finished. The repetitive language — 'day after day' (kath' hēmeran), 'the same' (tas autas), 'repeatedly' (pollakis), 'never' (oudepote) — creates a sense of futile, endless repetition. The verb perielein ('take away, remove completely') is stronger than aphairein (verse 4) — these sacrifices cannot strip sin away.
12. The contrast with verse 11 is total: where Levitical priests stand (work unfinished), Christ sat down (work completed). Where they offer the same sacrifices repeatedly, Christ offered one sacrifice (mian thysian). The phrase eis to diēnekes ('for all time, in perpetuity') can modify either the offering ('one sacrifice that is effective for all time') or the sitting ('he sat down permanently'). Both readings are theologically true. The return to Psalm 110:1 ('sat down at the right hand') signals the completion of the priestly argument.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalm 110:1. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. Quoting Psalm 110:1b. Christ's present activity is described as 'waiting' (ekdechamenos) — his sacrificial work is done, and he awaits the consummation when all opposition is subdued. The 'enemies made a footstool' imagery is ancient Near Eastern — a conquered king's enemies were placed under his feet as a sign of total subjection.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalm 110:1 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. This verse is the theological summary of the entire priestly argument. The perfect tense teteleiōken ('he has perfected') describes a completed act with permanent results. The present passive hagiazomenous ('those who are being sanctified') describes an ongoing process. The combination is precise: the sacrifice is complete and unrepeatable (perfect tense), but its application to believers is progressive (present tense). Believers are already perfected in status but still being sanctified in experience.
15. The Holy Spirit is again identified as the author of Scripture (cf. 3:7). The 'testimony' (martyrei) is from Jeremiah 31:33-34, returning to the new covenant passage quoted in full in chapter 8. The author now uses only the portions most relevant to his conclusion.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Jeremiah 31:33-34 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. The Jeremiah 31:33 quotation is repeated from 8:10 with slight variations in word order — hearts before minds rather than minds before hearts. This may reflect citation from memory or a different manuscript tradition. The author extracts the two promises most relevant to his argument: internalized law (verse 16) and forgiveness (verse 17).
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Jeremiah 31:33. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. This is the clinching verse. The double negative ou mē mnēsthēsomai ('I will never, ever remember') from Jeremiah 31:34 asserts the absolute finality of new covenant forgiveness. The author has built an elaborate argument about sacrifice, priesthood, and covenant, and it all comes down to this: God will not remember sins.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Jeremiah 31:34. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. The conclusion is elegant and final: if sins are forgiven, no further sacrifice is needed. The word aphesis ('forgiveness, release, sending away') describes sins fully dismissed. The phrase ouketi prosphora peri hamartias ('no longer any offering for sin') closes the priestly argument — the sacrificial system is not merely superseded but rendered unnecessary by accomplished forgiveness. The argument that began in 5:1 reaches its definitive conclusion.
19. The transition from exposition to exhortation is marked by 'therefore' (oun). Everything argued in chapters 5-10 now yields practical application. The word parrēsian ('confidence, boldness, freedom of speech') describes the access believers now possess — access that was restricted to one person, one day per year under the old system. The Most Holy Place (tōn hagiōn) is now open through Jesus's blood.
20. The phrase hodon prosphaton kai zōsan ('a new and living way') describes a path that is freshly opened (prosphaton, 'newly slaughtered/newly made' — originally a sacrificial term) and living (zōsan — this is not a dead ritual path but one animated by resurrection life). The identification of the curtain with Christ's flesh (toutestin tēs sarkos autou) is one of the letter's most compressed theological statements: just as the high priest passed through the curtain to reach God's presence, so Christ's death (the tearing of his flesh) opened permanent access to God.

- 21. The title 'great priest' (hierea megan) echoes the 'great high priest' of 4:14. The phrase 'over the house of God' (epi ton oikon tou theou) returns to the language of 3:6, where Christ was described as 'Son over God's house.' The two grounds for confidence are now stated: we have access (verses 19-20) and we have a priest (verse 21).
- 22. The first of three exhortations (verses 22, 23, 24-25). Drawing near (proserchōmetha) is the priestly access language of 4:16. The requirements parallel the high priest's preparation for the Day of Atonement: sprinkling of blood (Leviticus 16:14-15, here applied to the heart) and washing with water (Leviticus 16:4, here likely a reference to baptism). The four qualifications — sincere heart, full faith, sprinkled conscience, washed body — unite inner disposition and outward sign.
- 23. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Leviticus 16:14-15. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
- 23. The second exhortation. The word aklinē ('without wavering, unbending, firm') describes a confession that does not tilt or lean. The ground for unwavering hope is not human determination but divine faithfulness — pistos ho epangeilamenos ('faithful is the one who promised'). This echoes 6:13-20 on the certainty of God's oath.
- 24. The third exhortation is communal. The verb katanoōmen ('let us consider, let us pay careful attention to') demands thoughtful observation of one another's needs. The word paroxysmon ('stirring up, provocation, sharp incitement') is usually negative (cf. Acts 15:39, sharp disagreement), but here it is positive — provoking one another to love. Faith is not solitary but mutually dependent.
- 25. The word episynagōgēn ('gathering together, assembling') refers to the Christian community's regular meetings. Some were already abandoning corporate worship — a danger the author treats as serious, since isolation makes apostasy easier (cf. 3:13, mutual daily encouragement). The 'Day' (tēn hēmeran) is the day of Christ's return (9:28), which serves as both motivation and deadline.
- 26. The fourth and most severe warning passage begins. The word hekousiōs ('deliberately, willfully, voluntarily') contrasts with the sins of ignorance covered by the Levitical system (9:7). The present participle hamartanontōn ('sinning, continuing to sin') suggests a sustained pattern, not a single lapse. The phrase epignōsin tēs alētheias ('full knowledge of the truth') describes someone who has understood the gospel completely. The devastating conclusion: for such a person, ouketi apoleipetai thysia ('no sacrifice remains') — Christ's sacrifice is the last and only one, and if it is rejected, nothing else can atone.
- 27. The Greek phobera tis ekdochē kriseōs ('a certain fearful expectation of judgment') describes the dread anticipation of divine judgment. The phrase pyros zēlos ('fury/jealousy of fire') alludes to Deuteronomy 4:24 and Isaiah 26:11 — God's jealous fire consuming those who oppose him. The word hupēnantios ('adversaries, opponents') is strong — those who reject Christ's sacrifice place themselves among God's enemies.
- 27. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Deuteronomy 4:24. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
- 27. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 26:11. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
- 28. Referring to Deuteronomy 17:2-6, which prescribed death for covenant violators when verified by two or three witnesses. The a fortiori argument follows: if rejection of the Mosaic law brought physical death, how much worse is the punishment for rejecting Christ?
- 28. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Deuteronomy 17:2-6 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
- 29. Three acts of sacrilege are described with escalating severity: trampling the Son of God (katapatēsas — treating him as worthless, walking on him), treating the covenant blood as common/profane (koinon hēgisamenos — 'common' means 'not holy,' treating the sacred as ordinary), and outraging the Spirit of grace (enyubrisas — to insult with arrogant contempt). The phrase 'by which he was sanctified' (en hō hēgiasthē) is significant — the apostate was genuinely sanctified by Christ's blood, making the rejection more culpable.
- 30. Two quotations from Deuteronomy 32:35-36 (the Song of Moses). The first ('vengeance is mine') asserts God's exclusive right to execute justice — vengeance is not human prerogative but divine. The second ('the Lord will judge his people') is ominous in this context: the word 'his people' (ton laon autou) means that God's judgment falls on his own covenant community, not just outsiders. Those inside the covenant who violate it face divine judgment.
- 30. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Deuteronomy 32:35-36 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
- 31. The adjective phoberon ('terrifying, fearful, dreadful') describes not irrational fear but appropriate terror before unmediated divine power. The verb empesein ('to fall into') suggests helpless collapse — not voluntary approach but involuntary exposure. The title 'living God' (theou zōntos) appears for the third time in Hebrews (3:12, 9:14), each time emphasizing God's active, dangerous vitality. This is not a philosophical abstraction but a God who acts.
- 32. The tone shifts from warning to encouragement. The word phōtisthentes ('enlightened') echoes 6:4 and may refer to baptism. The word athlēsin ('struggle, contest, fight') is an athletic metaphor — their faith was tested in a grueling competition. The verb hypemeinate ('you endured') is the same word used of Jesus in 12:2-3. Their past endurance is evidence that they are capable of continuing.

33. The verb theatrizomenoi ('publicly exposed, made a spectacle') comes from theatron ('theater') — they were put on public display for mockery. The two dimensions of their suffering: direct persecution (ridicule and affliction) and solidarity with others who suffered (becoming partners/koinōnoi with the persecuted). Both are costly: one involves personal pain, the other the risk of guilt by association.
34. The Greek synepathēsate ('you sympathized with, you suffered alongside') recalls the sympathy language of 4:15. They visited and supported imprisoned believers at personal risk. Even more remarkably, they accepted the confiscation (harpagēn, 'plundering, seizure') of their property with joy (meta charas). The reason: they possessed something better (kreitton — the signature comparative) and lasting (menousan, 'remaining, enduring'). Earthly possessions could be taken; heavenly possession could not.
35. The imperative mē apobalēte ('do not throw away') pictures a deliberate discarding of something valuable. Their parrēsian ('confidence, boldness') — the same word from verse 19 — is not something to be lightly abandoned. It carries a great reward (megalēn misthapodosian, 'great repayment, great recompense'). The word misthapodosian connects to 11:6 ('God is a rewarder of those who seek him') and 11:26 (Moses looked to the reward).
36. The word hypomonēs ('endurance, patient steadfastness') is the essential virtue for the Hebrews community. It bridges the gap between doing God's will (to thelēma tou theou poiēsantes — echoing Christ's words from Psalm 40 in verse 7) and receiving the promise (tēn epangelian). The gap requires time, and time requires endurance.
36. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 40. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
37. Quoting a combination of Isaiah 26:20 (LXX) and Habakkuk 2:3-4 (LXX). The phrase mikron hoson hoson ('a very little while, just a bit more') intensifies the brevity of the remaining wait. The Septuagint's 'the one who is coming' (ho erchomenos) personalizes Habakkuk's vision — it is not an event but a person who is anticipated. This messianic reading was widely shared in early Christianity.
37. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Habakkuk 2:3-4. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.

38. The Habakkuk 2:4 quotation is also foundational for Paul (Romans 1:17, Galatians 3:11), but the author of Hebrews uses it differently — Paul emphasizes justification by faith; Hebrews emphasizes perseverance in faith. The phrase ek pisteōs zēsetai ('will live by/from faith') describes faith as the sustaining principle of the righteous person's life. The warning — 'if he shrinks back' (ean hyposteilētai) — describes cowardly retreat, withdrawal from the battle.
38. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Habakkuk 2:3-4 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
39. The chapter ends with a confident declaration that echoes 6:9 ('we are convinced of better things'). The two categories are starkly contrasted: hypostolēs eis apōleian ('shrinking back leading to destruction') versus pisteōs eis peripoīēsin psychēs ('faith leading to the preservation of the soul'). The word peripoīēsin ('preservation, obtaining, possession') means the soul is kept safe, secured, possessed. This verse serves as the bridge to chapter 11's great catalogue of faith — 'we are people of faith' leads naturally to 'now let me tell you what faith looks like.'

Summary: Hebrews 11 is the celebrated 'Faith Hall of Fame,' a sweeping survey of Old Testament figures who lived and acted by faith. The chapter opens with a definition of faith (verse 1), then moves chronologically from Abel through Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Sarah, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Moses, Rahab, and a compressed catalogue of judges, kings, and prophets. Each example demonstrates that faith is not passive belief but active trust that shapes decisions, risks everything, and looks beyond present reality to future promise. The chapter concludes with the sobering note that none of these heroes received what was promised — God had planned something better, so that they would not be made perfect apart from the community of faith that includes the present audience.

What Makes This Remarkable: The definition in verse 1 has shaped Christian theology for two millennia. The chapter functions as a narrative commentary on the entire Old Testament, selecting episodes that demonstrate the faith principle. The faith of women is specifically noted (Sarah, Rahab, the mothers of verse 35). The catalogue of unnamed sufferers in verses 35-38 is among the most harrowing passages in the Bible. The final twist — that these heroes are not complete without the present audience — transforms a historical survey into a pastoral appeal.

Translation Friction: The attribution of faith to Sarah (verse 11) is textually disputed — some manuscripts make Abraham the subject. The assertion that Moses 'considered the reproach of Christ greater wealth than the treasures of Egypt' (verse 26) applies Christian categories to a pre-Christian figure. We render the text as written and note the interpretive framework. The compressed catalogue of verses 32-38 covers centuries in a few sentences.

Connections: The chapter draws on Genesis 4 (Abel), Genesis 5 (Enoch), Genesis 6-9 (Noah), Genesis 12-25 (Abraham and Sarah), Genesis 27 (Isaac), Genesis 48-49 (Jacob), Genesis 50 (Joseph), Exodus 1-14 (Moses), Joshua 2-6 (Rahab and Jericho), and dozens of Judges, Kings, and Prophets passages. The 'cloud of witnesses' in 12:1 refers back to this entire catalogue. The 'something better' of verse 40 echoes the 'better' theme throughout Hebrews.

¹Now faith is the reality of things hoped for, the proof of things not seen. ²For by this the people of old received commendation. ³By faith we understand that the ages were formed by the word of God, so that what is seen was not made from things that are visible. ⁴By faith Abel offered to God a more acceptable sacrifice than Cain, through which he was commended as righteous, God himself commending him by accepting his gifts. And through his faith, though he died, he still speaks. ⁵By faith Enoch was taken up so that he would not see death, and he was not found because God had taken him. For before he was taken up, he was commended as having pleased God. ⁶And without faith it is impossible to please God, for whoever would draw near to God must believe that he exists and that he rewards those who earnestly seek him. ⁷By faith Noah, being warned by God about events yet unseen, acted with reverent caution and constructed an ark for the saving of his household. By this he condemned the world and became an heir of the righteousness that comes by faith. ⁸By faith Abraham obeyed when he was called to go out to a place that he was to receive as an inheritance, and he went out not knowing where he was going. ⁹By faith he lived as a stranger in the land of promise, as in a foreign country, dwelling in tents with Isaac and Jacob, co-heirs of the same promise. ¹⁰For he was looking forward to the city that has foundations, whose architect and builder is God. ¹¹By faith Sarah herself received power to conceive, even though she was past the age, since she considered faithful the one who had promised. ¹²Therefore from one man, and him as good as dead, there were born descendants as many as the stars of heaven and as innumerable as the sand on the seashore. ¹³All these died in faith without having received what was promised, but they saw it and greeted it from a distance, and they acknowledged that they were strangers and exiles on the earth. ¹⁴For people who speak in this way make it clear that they are seeking a homeland. ¹⁵If they had been thinking of the land they had left behind, they would have had opportunity to return. ¹⁶But as it is, they desire a better country, that is, a heavenly one. Therefore God is not ashamed to be called their God, for he has prepared a city for them. ¹⁷By faith Abraham, when he was tested, offered up Isaac; and he who had received the promises was in the act of offering his only son, ¹⁸Of whom it was stated, That in Isaac will your seed be called:. ¹⁹He considered that God was able even to raise from the dead, and figuratively speaking, he did receive him back from the dead. ²⁰Through faith Isaac blessed Jacob and Esau regarding what was still to happen. ²¹By faith Jacob, as he was dying, blessed each of Joseph's sons, and worshiped, leaning on the top of his staff. ²²By faith Joseph, at the end of his life, mentioned the exodus of the Israelites and gave instructions about his bones. ²³By faith Moses, when he was born, was hidden for three months by his parents, because they saw that the child was beautiful, and they were not afraid of the king's edict. ²⁴By faith Moses, when he had grown up, refused to be called a son of Pharaoh's daughter, ²⁵He chose to suffer alongside the people of God rather than enjoy the fleeting pleasures of sin. ²⁶He considered the reproach suffered for Christ as greater wealth than the treasures of Egypt, for he was looking ahead to the reward. ²⁷By faith he left Egypt, not fearing the king's anger, for he endured as one who sees the invisible God. ²⁸By faith he kept the Passover and the sprinkling of blood, so that the destroyer of the firstborn would not touch them. ²⁹By faith the people crossed the Red Sea as if on dry land, but when the Egyptians attempted to do so, they were drowned. ³⁰By faith the walls of Jericho fell after they had been encircled for seven days. ³¹By faith Rahab the prostitute did not perish with those who were disobedient, because she had welcomed the spies in peace. ³²And what more should I say? For time would fail me to tell of Gideon, Barak, Samson, Jephthah, David, Samuel, and the prophets — ³³Indeed, who by way of faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions,. ³⁴They quenched raging fires, escaped death by the sword. Their weakness was turned to strength. They became powerful in battle and routed foreign armies. ³⁵Women received back their dead by resurrection. Others were tortured, refusing to accept release, so that they might gain a better resurrection. ³⁶Others endured mocking and flogging, and even chains and imprisonment. ³⁷They were stoned, they were sawn in two, they were killed with the sword. They went about in sheepskins and goatskins, destitute, afflicted, mistreated — ³⁸(Of whom the present age was not worthy:) they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the world. ³⁹And all these, though commended through their faith, did not receive what was promised, ⁴⁰God after provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be appointed perfect.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The Greek hypostasis ('reality, substance, assurance, foundation') in this context means not merely subjective confidence but the substantial reality that gives content to hope. Faith is the present reality of what is hoped for, not mere wishful thinking. The word elegchos ('proof, conviction, evidence') means the inner conviction that unseen realities are real — faith functions as evidence in the court of the soul. Together, hypostasis and elegchos define faith as the capacity to live as though the unseen promises are already substantial and proven.
2. The phrase hoi presbyteroi ('the elders, the people of old') refers to the Old Testament figures about to be catalogued. The passive emartyrēthēsan ('received testimony, were commended') indicates that God himself bore witness to their faith — the verb martyreō ('to testify, to bear witness') runs through the chapter as a refrain.
3. Before cataloguing the faith of specific individuals, the author grounds faith in creation itself. The phrase tous aiōnas ('the ages') is the same word from 1:2 — the entire framework of time and space. The declaration that the visible came from the invisible (eis to mē ek phainomenōn to blepomenon gegonenai) asserts that the most fundamental reality is unseen — creation itself rests on the invisible word of God. Faith, which trusts the unseen (verse 1), thus aligns with the deepest structure of reality.
4. The catalogue begins with Abel (Genesis 4:1-16). The adjective pleiona ('more, greater, better') does not specify what made Abel's sacrifice superior — Genesis does not explain it either. The author attributes the difference to faith. The phrase apothanōn eti lalei ('though he died, he still speaks') is a powerful conclusion — Abel's faith outlived his murder. The 'speaking' may refer to his blood crying from the ground (Genesis 4:10) or to the ongoing testimony of his example.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 4:3-10. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. Enoch's translation (Genesis 5:21-24) is described with the verb metatethē ('was transferred, was removed') — the same root used in 7:12 for the 'change' of priesthood. The Septuagint of Genesis 5:24 reads 'Enoch pleased God' (euairestēkenai tō theō) where the Hebrew reads 'Enoch walked with God.' The author works from the Septuagint text. The verb 'was not found' (ouch hēurisketo) echoes Genesis 5:24 — Enoch simply disappeared.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 5:24 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. This verse generalizes from Enoch's example to a universal principle. Two beliefs are necessary: that God exists (hoti estin, 'that he is') and that he rewards seekers (misthapodotēs ginetai, 'he becomes a rewarder'). The word ekzētousin ('earnestly seek, diligently search for') implies more than casual interest — it describes active, sustained pursuit. The word misthapodotēs ('rewarder') appears only here in the New Testament and connects to 10:35 (the 'great reward' of confidence) and 11:26 (the 'reward' Moses looked to).
7. Noah's faith (Genesis 6-9) exemplifies the definition of verse 1 — he acted on things 'not yet seen' (mēdepō blepomenōn). The word eulabētheis ('having acted with reverent caution, having revered') describes motivated obedience rooted in awe, not paralyzing fear. Noah's ark-building was itself an act of judgment — his obedience condemned the disobedient world by contrast. The phrase 'righteousness that comes by faith' (tēs kata pistin dikaiosynēs) connects to Habakkuk 2:4 and Paul's language in Romans.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 6:13-22. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.

7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Habakkuk 2:4. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. Abraham's faith (Genesis 12:1-4) is the paradigmatic case in the chapter, receiving the most extended treatment (verses 8-19). The participle kaloumenos ('when he was called, while being called') suggests he obeyed during the calling — immediately, without delay. The phrase mē epistamenos pou erchetai ('not knowing where he was going') captures the essence of Abrahamic faith: obedience without complete information, trusting the caller rather than the destination.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 12:1-4 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The verb parōkēsen ('lived as a stranger, sojourned') means Abraham never owned the promised land — he lived in it as a resident alien. The tents (skēnais) are concrete symbols of impermanence. The three generations sharing the same condition — Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob all dwelling in tents — demonstrates that the promise was not fulfilled in their lifetimes. They were synklēronomōn ('co-heirs, joint inheritors') of a promise they never saw completed.

10. Abraham's tent-dwelling was not aimlessness but anticipation. He looked for a permanent city (polin, with foundations — themelious) in contrast to his temporary tents (without foundations). The two titles for God — technitēs ('architect, designer, craftsman') and dēmiourgos ('builder, creator, maker') — distinguish design from construction. God both designed and built the permanent city. This city will be identified in 12:22 and 13:14 as the heavenly Jerusalem.
11. The text is debated: some manuscripts and scholars read Abraham as the subject, with Sarah mentioned parenthetically. The SBLGNT includes 'Sarah herself' (autē Sarra) as the subject, which we follow. Despite her initial laughter (Genesis 18:12-15), Sarah ultimately trusted God's promise. The phrase para kairon hēlikias ('past the time of age') is a euphemism for post-menopausal. The reason for her faith: she considered God 'faithful' (piston) — the same word applied to Christ in 2:17 and 3:2.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 18:11-14. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. The phrase nenekrōmenou ('as good as dead') describes Abraham's advanced age — his body was effectively dead with respect to reproductive capacity (cf. Romans 4:19). The imagery of stars (Genesis 15:5) and sand (Genesis 22:17) represents the two great covenant promises of innumerable offspring. The contrast between the one dead man and the countless descendants demonstrates the power of God's promise working through faith.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 15:5. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 22:17. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. This is the first of two summary statements (the second is verses 39-40). The patriarchs died mē labontes tas epangelias ('not having received the promises') — they died with the promise unfulfilled. Yet they 'saw' (idontes) the fulfillment from afar and 'greeted' (aspasamennoi) it — like travelers who spot their destination on the horizon and wave to it. The self-identification as 'strangers and exiles' (xenoi kai parepidēmoi) quotes Genesis 23:4 and 47:9. Their impermanence on earth testified to the permanence of their heavenly hope.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 23:4 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. The word patrída ('homeland, fatherland') is the place of origin, the place where one belongs. By calling themselves strangers on earth, the patriarchs revealed that earth was not their home — they were seeking their true homeland elsewhere.
15. Abraham could have returned to Mesopotamia — it was physically possible. The fact that he did not proves that his 'homeland' was not an earthly place. The verb emnēmoneuon ('were remembering, were thinking of') in the imperfect tense suggests sustained thought — if they had kept thinking of their origin, they could have gone back. Their forward orientation proved their faith was in the unseen future, not the visible past.
16. The word kreittōnos ('better') is the signature adjective of Hebrews for the final time in this chapter. The statement 'God is not ashamed to be called their God' (ouk epaischynetai autous ho theos theos epikaleisthai autōn) echoes Exodus 3:6 ('I am the God of Abraham') — God voluntarily binds his name to these faith-filled sojourners. The 'city' (polin) recalls verse 10 and will be identified in 12:22 as the heavenly Jerusalem.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 3:6. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. The Aqedah, the binding of Isaac (Genesis 22), is the supreme test of faith. The perfect tense prosenēnochen ('has offered') indicates a completed act, while the imperfect prosepheren ('was offering') describes the ongoing process — Abraham was in the act of sacrificing when God intervened. The word monogenē ('only, unique, one and only') emphasizes that Isaac was irreplaceable — the entire promise line depended on him.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 22:1-10. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. Quoting Genesis 21:12. The paradox is sharp: God promised descendants through Isaac, then commanded Isaac's sacrifice. Abraham's faith held both realities simultaneously — the promise and the command — trusting that God could reconcile what appeared irreconcilable.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 21:12 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. The verb logisamenos ('having reckoned, having considered') describes rational faith — Abraham calculated that if God promised descendants through Isaac and demanded Isaac's death, then God must be able to raise the dead. The phrase en parabolē ('figuratively, in a parable, as a type') indicates that Abraham's receiving Isaac back was a figure or type of resurrection — Isaac's near-death and restoration prefigured the death and resurrection of Christ.
20. Isaac's faith (Genesis 27) is demonstrated in his blessing, which spoke of future realities he could not see. Even though the blessing was obtained through deception, Isaac recognized it as binding and prophetic (Genesis 27:33). The order 'Jacob and Esau' (rather than Esau and Jacob, the birth order) reflects the reversal that was God's intention from the beginning (Genesis 25:23).

20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 25:23 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
21. Jacob's faith (Genesis 48) was exercised at death — crossing his hands to give the greater blessing to the younger son Ephraim rather than Manasseh, trusting God's choice over natural order. The detail of worshiping while leaning on his staff comes from Genesis 47:31 (LXX), where the Hebrew 'bed' (mittah) was read as 'staff' (matteh) by the Septuagint translators. The author follows the Septuagint.
21. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 47:31. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
22. Joseph's faith (Genesis 50:24-25) looked beyond his own death to the future exodus. His command about his bones — that they be carried out of Egypt — was a concrete expression of faith in God's promise to bring Israel to the promised land. He refused to be permanently buried in Egypt because he believed Israel's future lay elsewhere. The word exodou ('exodus, departure') here refers to the departure from Egypt.
22. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 50:24-25. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
23. Moses's parents (Exodus 2:1-3) acted in faith by defying Pharaoh's decree to kill all Hebrew male infants. The word asteion ('beautiful, fine, elegant') is the same word used in the Septuagint of Exodus 2:2 and in Acts 7:20 ('beautiful before God'). They saw something in the child that gave them courage to risk their lives. The phrase ouk ephobēthēsan ('they were not afraid') echoes the courage demanded of faith throughout the chapter.
23. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 2:2-3 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
24. Moses's personal faith now takes over from his parents' faith. The verb ērēsato ('refused, denied, rejected') describes a deliberate choice — he actively turned away from royal privilege and identity. The phrase megas genomenos ('having become great/grown up') marks the transition from childhood to adult decision-making.
25. The verb synkakoucheisthai ('to suffer with, to be mistreated alongside') emphasizes solidarity — Moses chose shared suffering over solitary comfort. The phrase proskairin apolausin hamartias ('temporary enjoyment of sin') does not deny that sin offers pleasure, but qualifies it as proskairos — 'for a season, temporary, fleeting.' The comparison between lasting suffering with God's people and fleeting pleasure through sin mirrors the audience's own choice.
26. The phrase ton oneidismōn tou Christou ('the reproach of Christ') is striking: the author reads Moses's suffering as participation in Christ's reproach — a suffering that belongs to the Messiah and is shared by all who follow him across all eras. The verb apeblepen ('was looking away toward') describes a focused gaze that looks past the present to fix on the future. The misthapodosian ('reward, recompense') is the same word from 10:35 and 11:6.
27. Whether this refers to Moses's flight after killing the Egyptian (Exodus 2:14-15) or the exodus itself is debated. The phrase mē phobētheis ton thymon tou basileōs ('not fearing the king's anger') better fits the exodus, since Exodus 2:14 says Moses 'was afraid.' The concluding phrase ton aoraton hōs horōn ('seeing the unseen one') is a paradox that encapsulates the chapter's entire message: faith sees what is invisible. The verb ekartērēsen ('he endured, he held firm') appears only here in the New Testament.
27. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 2:14-15. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
28. Moses's faith in instituting the Passover (Exodus 12) meant trusting that lamb's blood on the doorframes would protect against death — an extraordinary act of faith in the invisible. The word proschysin ('sprinkling, pouring') refers to the application of blood to the doorposts and lintel. The olothreūōn ('the destroyer') is the death-dealing agent of God's judgment, distinct from God himself.
28. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 12:21-23 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
29. The faith here is corporate — the people (implied subject) crossed together. The phrase hōs dia xēras gēs ('as through dry ground') from Exodus 14:21-22. The Egyptians' attempt to cross using the same path failed — the distinction between the two groups was faith, not technique. The verb katēpothēsan ('were swallowed up, were drowned') is vivid — the sea consumed them.
29. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 14:21-29. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
30. The conquest of Jericho (Joshua 6) required faith expressed through obedience to an absurd military strategy — marching around a city for seven days. The walls fell not by siege engines but by faith and divine power. The passive kyklōthenta ('having been encircled') emphasizes the action of faithful obedience.

- 31. Rahab (Joshua 2) is the second Gentile woman in the faith catalogue (after the implied inclusion of non-Israelite women among the mothers). Her designation as hē pornē ('the prostitute') is not sanitized — the text preserves her identity while celebrating her faith. The rest of Jericho is described as apeithēsasin ('the disobedient/unbelieving'), connecting disobedience and unbelief as in 3:18-19. Her faith was expressed in action: she welcomed (dexamenē) the spies.
- 31. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Joshua 2:1-21. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
- 32. The author shifts to a rapid catalogue, acknowledging that the full account of faith would take longer than the letter allows. The names are not in chronological order (Gideon precedes Barak in Judges; Samson follows both; Jephthah precedes Samson). The arrangement may be deliberate, grouping by type or significance rather than timeline. The move from individuals to 'the prophets' (tōn prophētōn) signals a transition to categories of faith-action.
- 32. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Judges 6:11. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
- 33. The compressed catalogue begins with triumphant deeds. 'Conquered kingdoms' may refer to Joshua, David, or the judges. 'Administered justice' (eirgasanto dikaiosynēn) applies to all righteous rulers. 'Obtained promises' refers to partial fulfillments (though the ultimate promise remained outstanding, verse 39). 'Shut the mouths of lions' alludes to Daniel in the lions' den (Daniel 6:22).
- 33. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Daniel 6:22 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
- 34. More triumphant deeds: 'quenched fire' alludes to Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego (Daniel 3). 'Escaped the sword' may refer to David fleeing Saul or Elijah fleeing Jezebel. 'Made strong out of weakness' (edynamōthēsan apo astheneias) is the pattern of divine reversal — Gideon, Samson, Hezekiah's recovery from illness. 'Put foreign armies to flight' summarizes the judges and the Maccabean resistance.
- 34. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Daniel 3. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
- 35. The tone shifts dramatically at the middle of this verse. 'Women received their dead by resurrection' alludes to the widow of Zarephath (1 Kings 17:17-24) and the Shunammite woman (2 Kings 4:17-37). Then the catalogue turns dark: 'others were tortured' (etympanisthēsan, literally 'beaten on a drum' — stretched on a rack or wheel and beaten to death). They refused release (apolytrōsin — the same word used for Christ's 'redemption' in 9:15) because they sought a 'better resurrection' (kreittōnos anastaseōs) — not temporary resuscitation but permanent, eschatological resurrection.

- 36. The catalogue of suffering continues. Mocking (empaigmōn) may allude to the prophets ridiculed for their messages. Flogging (mastigōn) recalls Jeremiah's treatment (Jeremiah 20:2). Chains and imprisonment point to Joseph (Genesis 39:20), Micaiah (1 Kings 22:27), and Jeremiah (Jeremiah 37:15-16).

- 37. The violence escalates: stoning (Zechariah son of Jehoiada, 2 Chronicles 24:21; Naboth, 1 Kings 21), sawing in two (tradition holds Isaiah was sawn in two by Manasseh), death by sword (1 Kings 19:10, Uriah the prophet in Jeremiah 26:23). Then the catalogue shifts to deprivation: sheepskins and goatskins as clothing (Elijah's mantle, 1 Kings 19:13, 2 Kings 1:8), destitution, affliction, mistreatment. Some manuscripts include epeirasthēsan ('they were tested/tempted') between 'sawn in two' and 'killed with the sword.'

38. The parenthetical judgment 'of whom the world was not worthy' (hōn ouk ēn axios ho kosmos) is one of the most powerful interjections in the New Testament. The world rejected these people, but the author reverses the judgment: it was the world that was unworthy of them. Their hiding in deserts, mountains, and caves recalls Elijah (1 Kings 19:9), David (1 Samuel 22:1), and the Maccabean resisters (1 Maccabees 2:29-30).

39. The second summary statement (cf. verse 13). The martyrethentes ('commended, attested, testified about') returns the chapter to its opening refrain (verse 2). The stunning admission: ouk ekomisanto tēn epangelian ('they did not receive the promise'). Despite all their faith, suffering, and triumph, the ultimate promise remained unfulfilled in their lifetimes. The reason follows in verse 40.
40. The chapter's final verse is its theological climax. God had 'provided something better' (kreitton ti problepsamenou) for the present generation — the fulfillment in Christ that the Old Testament heroes could only anticipate. The phrase 'apart from us they would not be made perfect' (hina mē chōris hēmōn teleiōthōsin) means the old covenant saints and the new covenant community complete each other. The perfection (teleiōsis) that Hebrews has argued for throughout the letter is corporate — it requires the full company of the redeemed across all ages. The 'cloud of witnesses' of 12:1 awaits the arrival of the present audience to complete the assembly.

Summary: Hebrews 12 opens with the famous exhortation to run the race of faith surrounded by the 'great cloud of witnesses' from chapter 11, looking to Jesus the pioneer and perfecter of faith. The chapter then interprets suffering as divine discipline — God trains his children as a father disciplines his sons — and calls for endurance. A warning against Esau's profanity follows. The chapter reaches its climax in a dramatic comparison between Sinai (the old covenant) and Zion (the new covenant): the terrifying mountain of law versus the joyful city of grace. The final warning declares that God's voice now speaks from heaven, and those who refuse him face a shaking that will remove everything except the unshakeable kingdom.

What Makes This Remarkable: The 'cloud of witnesses' (12:1) transforms the historical survey of chapter 11 into a present reality — the heroes of faith are spectators watching the present generation run. The Sinai/Zion contrast (verses 18-24) is the most vivid typological comparison in Hebrews, moving from terror to celebration. The phrase 'consuming fire' (verse 29) echoes Deuteronomy 4:24 and closes the letter's theological argument with awe.

Translation Friction: The 'spirits of righteous people made perfect' (verse 23) raises questions about the intermediate state. The 'sprinkled blood that speaks a better word than Abel's' (verse 24) compresses enormous theology into a single phrase. The final shaking (verses 26-27) draws on Haggai 2:6 but applies it eschatologically. We render without resolving the many interpretive debates.

Connections: The cloud of witnesses connects to chapter 11. The discipline teaching draws on Proverbs 3:11-12. The Esau warning connects to Genesis 25:29-34 and the irreversibility theme of 6:4-8. The Sinai scene draws on Exodus 19-20 and Deuteronomy 4-5. Mount Zion anticipates the heavenly city of 13:14. The Haggai quotation develops the eschatological hope of 1:10-12.

Therefore, since we are surrounded by so great a cloud of witnesses, let us also lay aside every weight and the sin that so easily entangles us, and let us run with endurance the race that is set before us, ²Keep your eyes on Jesus, who began and will complete our faith. For the joy that lay ahead of him, he endured the cross, disregarding its shame, and has sat down at the right hand of God's throne. ³Consider him who endured such hostility from sinners against himself, so that you may not grow weary or lose heart. ⁴You have not yet resisted to the point of shedding your blood in your struggle against sin. ⁵And have you forgotten the exhortation that addresses you as sons and daughters? "My child, do not regard lightly the discipline of the Lord, nor grow weary when you are corrected by him. ⁶For the Lord disciplines the one he loves, and chastises every child he accepts." ⁷Endure your trials as discipline. God is treating you as his children. For what child is there whom a father does not discipline? ⁸But if you are without discipline, in which all have participated, then you are illegitimate children and not true sons and daughters. ⁹Besides, we had earthly fathers who disciplined us, and we respected them. Should we not much more submit to the Father of spirits and live? ¹⁰For they disciplined us for a short time as it seemed best to them, but he disciplines us for our good, so that we may share in his holiness. ¹¹All discipline seems painful at the time rather than pleasant, but later it yields the peaceful fruit of righteousness to those who have been trained by it. ¹²Therefore, strengthen your drooping hands and your weak knees, ¹³Make straight paths since your ankles, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way. But let it rather be healed. ¹⁴Pursue peace with everyone, and the holiness without which no one will see the Lord. ¹⁵See to it that no one falls short of the grace of God, that no 'root of bitterness' springs up and causes trouble, and through it many become defiled, ¹⁶Lest there be any sexually immoral person, or godless individual, as Esau, who for a single meal traded away his inheritance rights. ¹⁷For you know that afterward, when he wanted to inherit the blessing, he was rejected, for he found no opportunity to change his father's mind, even though he sought the blessing with tears. ¹⁸For you have not come to something that can be touched — a blazing fire, darkness, gloom, and a storm, ¹⁹The sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words. Which voice they that listened to intreated that the message should not be spoken to them any more:. ²⁰Since they could not endure that which was commanded, And if so much as a beast touch the mountain, it will be stoned, or thrust by way of with a dart:. ²¹And so terrifying was the sight that Moses said, "I am trembling with fear." ²²But you have come to Mount Zion and to the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to innumerable angels in festive assembly, ²³To the general assembly and church of the firstborn, which are recorded in the heavens above, and to God the pass the time of reckoning on of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect,. ²⁴To Jesus the mediator of the new binding agreement, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel. ²⁵See to it that you do not refuse the one who is speaking. For if they did not escape when they refused the one who warned them on earth, how much less will we escape if we reject the one who warns from heaven! ²⁶At that time his voice shook the earth, but now he has promised, "Yet once more I will shake not only the earth but also heaven." ²⁷This phrase 'yet once more' indicates the removal of what can be shaken — that is, created things — so that what cannot be shaken may remain. ²⁸Therefore, since we are receiving an unshakeable kingdom, let us be thankful, and so offer worship pleasing to God with reverence and awe, ²⁹Our God is indeed a consuming fire.

1. The athletic metaphor is sustained: nephos martyron ('cloud of witnesses') pictures the chapter 11 heroes as spectators in a stadium surrounding the runners. They are 'witnesses' (martyron) in a double sense — they testified to their own faith and now witness ours. The word ogkon ('weight, bulk, mass') refers to excess weight an athlete would shed before competing. The phrase euperistaton hamartian ('the sin that easily entangles/besets') is debated — the word euperistatos may mean 'easily encircling,' 'closely clinging,' or 'admired by many.' The athletic image suggests anything that hinders the runner. The race (agona) is an endurance event, not a sprint — hypomonē ('endurance, perseverance') is the required virtue.
2. The verb aphorontes ('looking away to, fixing the gaze on') means looking away from everything else to focus exclusively on Jesus. The two titles — archegon ('pioneer,' cf. 2:10) and teleiōtēn ('perfecter, completer') — describe Jesus as both the one who began faith and the one who brought it to completion. He is the supreme example of the faith described in chapter 11. The phrase anti tēs prokeimenēs autō charas ('for/instead of the joy set before him') is debated: anti can mean 'for the sake of' (he endured the cross to obtain the joy) or 'instead of' (he chose the cross rather than the joy he could have had). Both readings work theologically. The phrase aischynēs kataphronēsas ('disregarding the shame') treats the cross's disgrace as beneath consideration — not denied but dismissed.
3. The verb analogisasthe ('consider, think through, calculate') demands careful comparison — measure your suffering against his. The word antilogian ('hostility, opposition, contradiction') describes the opposition Jesus faced from sinners. The two dangers — kamēte ('grow weary, become exhausted') and eklyomenoi ('lose heart, become faint, go slack') — describe the spiritual fatigue the audience is experiencing. The remedy is sustained contemplation of Jesus's example.
4. The phrase mechris haimatos ('to the point of blood') means they have not yet been martyred. This is not dismissive but comparative — their suffering, while real, has not reached the ultimate cost. Jesus resisted to the point of blood (the cross); they have not yet been required to do the same. The athletic metaphor continues with antagonizomenoi ('struggling against, competing against') — sin is the opponent in the contest.

5. Quoting Proverbs 3:11-12 (LXX). The verb eklelēsthe ('have you forgotten?') suggests their suffering has caused them to lose sight of this foundational teaching. The word paideias ('discipline, training, education') is the key term for the passage — it means not punishment for punishment's sake but training for maturity. The two errors to avoid: oligōrei ('regard lightly, make little of') — dismissing discipline as meaningless — and eklyou ('grow weary, lose heart') — collapsing under it.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Proverbs 3:11-12 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The paradox: discipline is evidence of love (agapa), not rejection. The verb mastigoi ('chastises, scourges') is strong — divine training can be painful. The word paradechetai ('accepts, receives, welcomes') means the child who is disciplined is a child who belongs. The logic reverses the audience's interpretation of their suffering: instead of evidence that God has abandoned them, their trials prove they are his children.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Proverbs 3:11-12. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The imperative hypomenete ('endure') can also be read as indicative ('you are enduring'). The rhetorical question expects the answer 'None' — every father disciplines his children. The analogy assumes that good parenting involves correction, not permissiveness.
8. The argument from reverse: the absence of discipline would be worse than its presence, indicating that one is not a genuine child (nothoi, 'illegitimate children, born outside the family'). The word metochoi ('participants, sharers') from 3:1 and 3:14 — all genuine children share in the discipline.
9. The a fortiori argument: if we respected human fathers who disciplined us, how much more should we submit to God? The title 'Father of spirits' (patri tōn pneumatōn) distinguishes divine fatherhood from human ('fathers of our flesh'). The verb zēsomen ('and live') connects obedience to the discipline with life itself — submission to God's training leads to spiritual vitality.
10. Two contrasts: duration (short time versus permanent benefit) and quality (as seemed best to imperfect humans versus for genuine benefit from a perfect Father). The goal of divine discipline is metalabein tēs hagiōtētos autou ('to share in his holiness') — participation in God's own character. This is not legal status but transformative reality.
11. The author concedes the reality of pain — discipline does not 'seem' (dokei) joyful because it is not joyful in the moment. But the metaphor shifts from athletics to agriculture: discipline produces 'fruit' (karpon). The compound phrase karpon eirēnikon dikaiosynēs ('peaceful fruit of righteousness') describes the harvest — a life characterized by both peace and righteousness. The verb gegymnasmēnois ('trained') returns the athletic metaphor from 5:14 — discipline is training that produces capacity.
12. Alluding to Isaiah 35:3. The imagery is physical — hands hanging limp from exhaustion, knees buckling from fatigue. The verb anorthōsate ('straighten up, strengthen, restore') calls for physical and spiritual renewal. The athletic and military imagery continues — a runner or soldier whose hands and knees give out cannot finish the course.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 35:3. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. Quoting Proverbs 4:26 (LXX). The 'straight paths' (trochias orthas) are both literal (running paths) and moral (right conduct). The concern for 'what is lame' (to chōlon) suggests the weaker members of the community — if the path is straight, even the injured can follow it. The verb ektrapē ('be turned aside, be dislocated, be put out of joint') continues the physical metaphor. The community's responsibility is to create conditions where the weak can be healed rather than lost.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Proverbs 4:26 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. Two pursuits are commanded: peace (eirēnē) with all people and holiness (hagiasmon). The verb diōkete ('pursue, chase, run after') is intense — these are not passive states but active goals. The warning — 'without which no one will see the Lord' (hou chōris oudeis opsetai ton kyrion) — is absolute. Holiness is not optional but essential for the vision of God. This connects to 10:14 (perfected for holiness) and 12:10 (sharing God's holiness).
15. The verb episkopountes ('watching over, overseeing') makes perseverance a communal responsibility. The phrase riza pikrias ('root of bitterness') quotes Deuteronomy 29:18 (LXX), which warns against a person whose apostasy infects the community. The danger is not isolated failure but contagion — one bitter person can defile many (mianthōsin polloi). This is why the author urges communal vigilance.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Deuteronomy 29:18 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. Esau (Genesis 25:29-34) serves as the negative example to counter the positive examples of chapter 11. The word bebēlos ('godless, profane, irreverent') describes someone who treats sacred things as common — precisely the danger warned against in 10:29. Esau traded eternal blessing for immediate gratification. Whether pornos ('sexually immoral') applies to Esau specifically or is a separate warning is debated; the terms may form a hendiadys: 'immoral or irreverent.'
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 25:29-34. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.

17. The phrase metanoias topon ouch heuren ('he found no place/opportunity for repentance/change of mind') is debated: does it mean Esau could not repent, or that Isaac could not reverse the blessing, or that God would not grant Esau a reversal? The grammar allows 'he found no opportunity to change [his father's] mind' (the feminine autēn referring to the blessing or to metanoia). The connection to 6:4-6 (impossibility of restoration for apostates) is clear — some choices are irreversible. The tears (meta dakryōn) make the scene devastating.
18. The Sinai/Zion contrast begins. The description of Sinai (Exodus 19-20, Deuteronomy 4-5) emphasizes its terrifying sensory impact: fire, darkness (gnophō), deep gloom (zophō), and storm (thyellē). The word psēlaphōmenō ('something that can be touched') emphasizes the physical, earthly nature of the Sinai revelation — it was tangible but terrifying. The 'not' (ou) sets up the contrast with what they have come to in verse 22.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 19-20 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Deuteronomy 4-5 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. The trumpet blast (Exodus 19:16, 19) and the divine voice (Exodus 20:1, 18-19) were so overwhelming that the people begged Moses to mediate. They could not endure hearing God directly. The verb parētēsanto ('begged off, refused, asked to be excused') indicates their request that no more words be added — they had reached the limit of what they could bear.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 19:16. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 20:1. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
20. Quoting Exodus 19:12-13. The severity of the Sinai holiness — even an animal trespassing the boundary around the mountain must die — illustrates the unapproachable nature of God under the old covenant. Access was forbidden, contact was fatal. This is the opposite of the 'draw near' language of 4:16 and 10:22.
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 19:12-13 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
21. Even Moses — the greatest figure of the old covenant — was terrified. The phrase ekphobos eimi kai entromos ('I am full of fear and trembling') is not directly quoted from the Sinai narrative in Exodus but may draw from Deuteronomy 9:19 (where Moses feared God's anger after the golden calf) or from an extracanonical tradition. The point is that the old covenant experience terrified even its greatest leader.
21. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Deuteronomy 9:19. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
22. The contrast with Sinai is total. Instead of a mountain that could not be touched, they come to Mount Zion — the mountain of grace. Instead of terror, there is celebration (panēgyrei, 'festive assembly, joyful gathering'). The city is identified three ways: Mount Zion (the traditional name), the city of the living God (echoing 3:12 and 10:31), and the heavenly Jerusalem (the eternal city of 11:10, 16). The 'innumerable angels' (myriasin angelōn) are the hosts of heaven in celebration.
23. The list continues: the ekklēsia ('assembly, church') of the firstborn (prōtotokōn, plural — all believers share in Christ's firstborn status) whose names are registered (apogegrammōn) in heaven. Then God himself as judge (kritē) of all — not a terrifying judge as at Sinai but the judge who is present in the celebration. The 'spirits of the righteous made perfect' (pneumasin dikaiōn teteleiōmenōn) refers to the chapter 11 heroes who have now been 'made perfect' (teleiōsis, the goal of the entire letter) through Christ's work.
24. The climax of the list: Jesus himself, identified as mesitē ('mediator') of the new (neās) covenant. The sprinkled blood (haimati rhanismou) is the blood of Christ applied in the heavenly sanctuary. This blood 'speaks' (lalounti) — it has a voice, and that voice says something better (kreitton) than Abel's blood. Abel's blood cried out for vengeance (Genesis 4:10); Christ's blood speaks forgiveness and reconciliation. The comparative kreittōn makes its final appearance.
24. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 4:10. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
25. The fifth and final warning passage. The a fortiori argument returns: if Israel could not escape judgment for rejecting the earthly Sinai revelation (ton epi gēs chrēmatisationata), how much more inescapable is judgment for rejecting the heavenly revelation (ton ap' ouranōn). The verb apostrephomenoi ('turning away from, rejecting') is stronger than paraiteēsamenoi ('refused') — it implies a deliberate turning of the back.
26. Quoting Haggai 2:6. At Sinai, God's voice shook the earth (Exodus 19:18). But a greater shaking is promised — one that will affect not only the earth but heaven itself. The phrase eti hapax ('yet once more') indicates a final, definitive event. The author interprets this eschatologically in verse 27.
26. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Haggai 2:6. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
26. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 19:18. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
27. The author interprets Haggai: the 'once more' shaking will remove (metathesis, 'removal, change, transfer') everything that is shakable — the entire created order (hōs pepoiēmenōn, 'as things that have been made'). What remains is the unshakeable (ta mē saleuomena) — the kingdom of God. This is the ultimate expression of the permanent/temporary distinction that runs throughout Hebrews.

28. The present participle paralambanontes ('receiving') describes an ongoing reception — the kingdom is being received now, not merely in the future. The phrase echōmen charin can mean 'let us have grace' or 'let us be thankful' — both meanings are likely intended. The worship response to receiving an unshakeable kingdom is not casualness but eulabeias kai deous ('reverence and awe') — the same eulabeia from 5:7 and 11:7.
29. Quoting Deuteronomy 4:24. The chapter ends where Deuteronomy ends its Sinai account — with the declaration that God is pyr katanaliskon ('consuming fire'). This is not a contradiction of the grace celebrated in verses 22–24 but its complement: the same God who welcomes in grace judges in fire. The fire consumes everything that is shakeable, leaving only the unshakeable kingdom. The word 'our' (hēmōn) is significant — this consuming fire is not a distant, alien deity but our God.

Summary: Hebrews 13 is the letter's practical conclusion, moving from theological argument to community ethics. The chapter covers hospitality, marriage, contentment, leadership, the unchanging Christ, and sacrificial living. Theologically, it declares that Jesus suffered outside the city gate to sanctify the people with his own blood, and calls believers to go to him 'outside the camp,' bearing his reproach. The chapter concludes with a benediction, personal notes, and greetings — the only section of Hebrews that reads like a typical first-century letter.

What Makes This Remarkable: The declaration 'Jesus Christ is the same yesterday and today and forever' (verse 8) is one of the most memorized verses in the Bible. The 'outside the camp' theology (verses 11–14) connects Jesus's crucifixion site to the old covenant practice of burning sin offerings outside the camp (Leviticus 16:27). The benediction (verses 20–21) is one of the most complete in the New Testament, containing resurrection, covenant, shepherd, and sanctification themes. The mention of Timothy (verse 23) provides the only personal connection to the Pauline circle.

Translation Friction: The final chapter's style differs from the rest of the letter — more practical, less theological, with personal notes. Some scholars view chapter 13 as a later addition, though this is a minority view. The 'outside the camp' language was used by various early Christian groups to justify separation from Judaism or from established religious institutions. We render the text without endorsing any particular ecclesiological application.

Connections: The hospitality command (verse 2) connects to Genesis 18 (Abraham's angelic visitors). 'Jesus Christ is the same' (verse 8) echoes 1:12 (Psalm 102). The 'outside the camp' imagery draws on Leviticus 16:27 and Numbers 19:3. The heavenly city (verse 14) completes the promise of 11:10, 16 and 12:22. The shepherd imagery (verse 20) echoes Psalm 23, Isaiah 40:11, and John 10. The 'great shepherd' title connects to 1 Peter 5:4.

¹Let mutual love continue. ²Do not neglect to show hospitality to strangers, for by doing so some have entertained angels without knowing it. ³Remember those who are in prison, as though you were in prison with them, and those who are mistreated, since you also are in the body. ⁴Let marriage be honored by all, and let the marriage bed be kept undefiled, for God will judge the sexually immoral and adulterers. ⁵Keep your life free from the love of money, and be content with what you have, for he himself has said, "I will never leave you nor forsake you." ⁶So we can confidently say, "The Lord is my helper; I will not be afraid. What can anyone do to me?" ⁷Remember your leaders, those who spoke the word of God to you. Consider the outcome of their way of life, and imitate their faith. ⁸And for ever, Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to day. ⁹Do not be carried away by various and strange teachings, for it is good for the heart to be strengthened by grace, not by foods, which have not benefited those who have been occupied with them. ¹⁰We have an altar from which those who serve the tent have no right to eat. ¹¹For the bodies of those animals whose blood is brought into the Most Holy Place by the high priest as a sin offering are burned outside the camp. ¹²Therefore Jesus also suffered outside the city gate in order to sanctify the people through his own blood. ¹³Therefore let us go out to him outside the camp, bearing his reproach. ¹⁴For here we have no lasting city, but we are seeking the city that is to come. ¹⁵Through him, then, let us continually offer up a sacrifice of praise to God, that is, the fruit of lips that confess his name. ¹⁶And do not neglect doing good and sharing with others, for with such sacrifices God is pleased. ¹⁷Obey your leaders and submit to them, for they are keeping watch over your souls as those who will have to give an account. Let them do this with joy and not with groaning, for that would be of no advantage to you. ¹⁸Pray for us, for we are confident that we have a clear conscience, desiring to act honorably in all things. ¹⁹I urge you all the more to do this, so that I may be restored to you sooner. ²⁰Now may the God of peace, who brought back from the dead our Lord Jesus, the great shepherd of the sheep, by the blood of the eternal covenant, ²¹Make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is wellpleasing in his sight, by way of Jesus Christ. To him be glory by way of every one of the ages. Amen. ²²I appeal to you, brothers and sisters, bear with my word of exhortation, for I have written to you only briefly. ²³You should know that our brother Timothy has been released. If he comes soon enough, I will see you with him. ²⁴Greet all your leaders and all the saints. Those from Italy send you greetings. ²⁵Grace be with all of you.

1. The word philadelphia ('brotherly love, mutual love, love for fellow believers') describes the distinctive affection of the Christian community. The verb menetō ('let it continue, let it remain') assumes this love already exists — the command is not to start it but to sustain it. The brevity of the command is striking after twelve chapters of theological argument.
2. The word philoxenias ('hospitality, love of strangers') is the practical outworking of philadelphia. The reference to 'entertaining angels unawares' (elathon tines xenisantes angelous) alludes to Abraham and Sarah's hospitality to the three visitors at Mamre (Genesis 18:1-15), who turned out to be divine messengers. The implication: any stranger could be an angel, so treat all strangers with generous welcome.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 18:1-15. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. The command recalls 10:34 (showing sympathy to prisoners) and 10:33 (becoming partners with those who suffered). The phrase hōs syndedemenoi ('as though bound together with them') demands imaginative solidarity — placing oneself mentally and emotionally in their condition. The reminder 'you also are in the body' (hōs kai autoi ontes en sōmati) means either 'you also have physical bodies subject to the same treatment' or 'you are members of the same body (of Christ).'
4. The adjective timios ('honored, precious, valuable') elevates marriage as a respected institution. The phrase hē koitē amiantos ('the bed undefiled') uses koitē (literally 'bed,' euphemistic for sexual relations) to affirm marital sexuality as pure. The two categories of violators — pornous ('sexually immoral,' any sexual activity outside marriage) and moichous ('adulterers,' those who violate existing marriages) — face divine judgment (krinei ho theos). The statement is declarative, not conditional — God will judge.
5. The word aphilargyros ('free from love of money, not greedy') contrasts with the contentment (arkoumenoi, 'being satisfied') that trusts God's provision. The quotation combines Deuteronomy 31:6, 8 and Joshua 1:5. The Greek contains five negatives (ou mē se anō oud' ou mē se enkatalipō) — an emphatic accumulation: 'I will never, never, never, never leave or abandon you.' In context, freedom from greed is grounded not in asceticism but in God's promise of presence.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Deuteronomy 31:6 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Joshua 1:5 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. Quoting Psalm 118:6 (LXX 117:6). The confidence (tharrountas, 'being bold, being of good courage') is not self-generated but flows from God's promise in verse 5. The rhetorical question 'What can anyone do to me?' does not deny that people can inflict suffering (the audience has already experienced it, 10:32-34) but asserts that no human action can separate the believer from God's help.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalms 118:6. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The word hēgoumenōn ('leaders, those who lead') appears three times in this chapter (verses 7, 17, 24), framing the community's relationship to its leadership. These particular leaders are past tense — they 'spoke' (elalēsan, aorist) the word of God, and their 'way of life' (anastrophēs) has a visible 'outcome' (ekbasin), suggesting they have died, possibly as martyrs. The command is to imitate (mimeisthe) their faith — echoing the imitation theme of 6:12.
8. This verse stands as an independent declaration, functioning as both a conclusion to verse 7 (your leaders change; Christ does not) and an introduction to verse 9 (therefore do not be carried away by strange teachings). The three temporal markers — echthes ('yesterday,' the past), sēmeron ('today,' the present), and eis tous aiōnas ('forever,' the endless future) — assert Christ's absolute immutability. This echoes 1:12 ('you are the same, and your years will never end') and is the practical application of the Christology developed throughout the letter.
9. The verb parapheresthe ('be carried away, be swept along') pictures being blown off course. The 'various and strange teachings' (didachais poikilais kai xenais) likely refer to Jewish food regulations or cultic meals that some were promoting as necessary. The contrast is between grace (chariti) and foods (brōmasin) as the foundation for spiritual stability. The author dismisses food regulations as having provided no benefit (ouk ōphelēthēsan) to those who followed them.

10. The 'altar' (thysiatērion) is likely a reference to the cross or to Christ's sacrifice itself — not a physical altar but the sacrifice from which Christians 'feed' (in the Eucharist or spiritually). Those who serve the old covenant tent (tē skēnē latreuontes) have no access to what this altar provides. The statement asserts a Christian exclusive — the benefits of Christ's sacrifice are available only to those who embrace the new covenant.
11. The author draws on Leviticus 16:27, which prescribes that the bodies of the Day of Atonement sin offerings be burned outside the camp. The blood goes inside (into the Most Holy Place); the bodies go outside (beyond the camp). This creates the typological framework for what follows: Jesus's blood enters the heavenly sanctuary, but his body suffered outside the city.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Leviticus 16:27. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. The typological connection: as the sin offering was burned outside the camp, so Jesus suffered exō tēs pylēs ('outside the gate') — outside the walls of Jerusalem. The crucifixion site was deliberately outside the city, fulfilling the sin-offering typology. The purpose clause 'in order to sanctify' (hina hagiāsē) identifies Christ's death as the definitive act of consecration — his blood does what animal blood could not (9:13-14).
13. The practical application: since Jesus suffered outside, believers must go to him there — outside the familiar, respectable structures. The phrase exō tēs parembolēs ('outside the camp') symbolizes departure from the security of established religious systems. The word oneidismōn ('reproach, disgrace') echoes 11:26 (Moses's choosing 'the reproach of Christ'). Following Jesus means accepting social disgrace.
14. This verse completes the 'city' theme that runs from 11:10 (Abraham looked for the city with foundations), through 11:16 (God prepared a city), 12:22 (the heavenly Jerusalem), to this final statement. The present city (whatever earthly security the audience clings to) is not lasting (menousan, 'remaining, permanent'). The future city (tēn mellousan) is the heavenly Jerusalem. The verb epizētoumen ('we are seeking') echoes 11:14 — believers are still seeking the homeland.
15. The old animal sacrifices have been replaced by a new kind of sacrifice: thysian aineseōs ('sacrifice of praise'), echoing Hosea 14:2 (LXX) and Psalm 50:14, 23. The phrase karpon cheileōn ('fruit of lips') from Hosea 14:3 (LXX) identifies praise as the produce of the mouth. The word homologountōn ('confessing, acknowledging') connects to the 'confession' (homologia) theme of 3:1, 4:14, and 10:23. Praise is offered 'through him' (di' autou) — Christ is the mediator even of worship.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Hosea 14:2 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalm 50:14 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. Two more sacrifices replace the old system: eupoiias ('doing good, beneficence') and koinōnias ('sharing, fellowship, generosity'). Together with praise (verse 15), these constitute the new covenant sacrificial system. The verb euarestetai ('is pleased, is well pleased') echoes Enoch's commendation (11:5, 6) — what pleases God is not ritual but faith expressed in praise, goodness, and generosity.
17. The second reference to leaders (hēgoumenoi, cf. verse 7). The verb peithesthe ('obey, be persuaded by, trust') implies willing submission based on trust rather than coerced compliance. The leaders agrypnousin ('keep watch, stay awake') — a word used for sleepless vigilance. They will give an account (logon apodōsontes) to God for their care of souls. The practical concern: difficult members who cause leaders to groan (stenazein) rather than rejoice create a situation that is alysiteles ('unprofitable, harmful') for everyone.
18. The request for prayer reveals the author's pastoral relationship with the audience. The claim of a 'clear conscience' (kalēn syneidēsin) may respond to suspicion or criticism. The verb anastrephesthai ('to conduct oneself, to live') describes the whole pattern of life. The plural 'us' (hēmōn) may refer to the author and his associates.
19. The switch to first person singular (parakalō, 'I urge') is one of the few personal moments in Hebrews. The verb apokatastatō ('be restored, be returned') implies the author has been separated from the community, possibly by imprisonment or travel. The urgency suggests a genuine desire for reunion.
20. The benediction is one of the richest in the New Testament. 'God of peace' (theos tēs eirēnēs) is a common Pauline title (Romans 15:33, 16:20). This is the only explicit reference to the resurrection in Hebrews (anagagōn ek nekron, 'having brought up from the dead'). The title 'great shepherd' (poimena ton probatōn ton megan) echoes Isaiah 63:11 (LXX) and Ezekiel 34:23 (the Davidic shepherd). The phrase en haimati diathēkēs aiōniou ('by the blood of the eternal covenant') may modify the resurrection ('God raised Jesus on the basis of the eternal covenant blood') or the shepherding ('Jesus shepherds by virtue of covenant blood').
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 63:11 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Ezekiel 34:23 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
21. The verb katartisai ('equip, make complete, put in order, restore') is the same root as 'prepared' in 10:5 ('a body you have prepared for me') — God who prepared Christ's body now equips believers for service. The phrase poiōn en hēmin to euareston ('working in us what is pleasing') asserts that good works are ultimately God's work in the believer, mediated through Christ (dia Iēsou Christou). The doxology — 'to whom be glory forever' — may refer to Christ or to God; the grammar allows either.
22. The phrase logou tēs paraklēseōs ('word of exhortation') is the same phrase used in Acts 13:15 for a synagogue sermon. The author characterizes the entire letter as an exhortation. The claim to have written 'briefly' (dia bracheōn) is either self-deprecating humor (the letter is not short) or relative — compared to what could be said, he has been concise.

- 23. This is the only personal name in Hebrews besides Jesus and the Old Testament figures. Timothy is identified as 'our brother' (ton adelphon hēmōn), linking the author to the Pauline circle. The word apolelumenon ('released, set free') implies Timothy was imprisoned, though no other New Testament text records this. The conditional 'if he comes soon' (ean tachion erchētai) suggests uncertain travel plans.
- 24. The third reference to leaders (hēgoumenoi) alongside 'all the saints' (pantas tous hagiois) — the greeting encompasses the entire community. The phrase hoi apo tēs Italias ('those from Italy') is ambiguous: it could mean 'those who are in Italy' (the letter is being sent from Italy) or 'those who are from Italy' (Italian Christians now living elsewhere, sending greetings back home). If the latter, the letter may be addressed to a Roman church.
- 25. The closing benediction is simple and universal: hē charis meta pantōn hymōn ('grace with all of you'). After thirteen chapters of complex theological argument, the letter ends with the single word that summarizes everything the new covenant provides: grace (charis). Some manuscripts add 'Amen,' but the SBLGNT omits it.

Summary: James 1 opens with a greeting to 'the twelve tribes in the Dispersion' and immediately addresses the paradox of joy in trials: testing produces endurance, and endurance leads to maturity. The chapter then introduces several key themes that the letter will develop: asking God for wisdom without doubting, the reversal of rich and poor, the nature of temptation (which comes from one's own desires, not from God), God as the giver of every good gift, and the call to be 'doers of the word and not hearers only.' The chapter closes with a definition of true religion: caring for orphans and widows and keeping oneself unstained by the world.

What Makes This Remarkable: James's letter is the most practically oriented writing in the New Testament. The opening greeting to 'the twelve tribes in the Dispersion' is the broadest address in the NT epistles and may be literal (Jewish Christians abroad) or metaphorical (the church as renewed Israel). The theology of temptation in verses 13-15 is psychologically sophisticated, tracing sin from desire through conception to death using a birth metaphor. The 'perfect law of liberty' (v. 25) is a striking paradox that unites freedom and law — anticipating the letter's argument that genuine faith expresses itself in obedient action.

Translation Friction: The relationship between James and Paul on faith and works has been debated since the Reformation. James's emphasis on works as evidence of faith is not a contradiction of Paul's emphasis on justification by faith but addresses a different problem: people who claim faith without any corresponding action. The phrase 'twelve tribes in the Dispersion' (v. 1) may indicate the letter was written to Jewish Christians, but the Greek is too polished for a simple pastoral letter to a single community.

Connections: The testing-produces-endurance theme connects to Romans 5:3-5. The wisdom request echoes Proverbs 2:1-6 and the wisdom tradition broadly. The reversal of rich and poor echoes the Magnificat (Luke 1:46-55) and the Sermon on the Plain (Luke 6:20-26). The mirror metaphor (v. 23) anticipates Paul's mirror image in 1 Corinthians 13:12. The 'pure and undefiled religion' definition (v. 27) echoes Isaiah 1:17 and Micah 6:8.

¹James, a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, to the twelve tribes in the Dispersion: greetings. ²Count it all joy, my brothers and sisters, when you fall into various trials, ³Being aware this, that the trying of your faith works patience. ⁴And let endurance have its full effect, so that you may be mature and complete, lacking in nothing. ⁵If any of you lacks wisdom, let him ask God, who gives generously to all without reproach, and it will be given to him. ⁶But let him ask in faith, with no doubting, for the one who doubts is like a wave of the sea that is driven and tossed by the wind. ⁷For that person must not suppose that he will receive anything from the Lord; ⁸Such a person is divided in loyalty and unreliable in everything they do. ⁹Let the lowly brother boast in his exaltation, ¹⁰However, the rich, in that he is made low — because as the flower of the grass he will pass away. ¹¹For the sun rises with its scorching heat and dries up the grass; its flower falls and its beauty perishes. So also will the rich person fade away in the midst of his pursuits. ¹²Blessed is the man who endures trial, for when he has stood the test he will receive the crown of life, which God has promised to those who love him. ¹³Let no one say when he is tempted, "I am being tempted by God," for God cannot be tempted by evil, and he himself tempts no one. ¹⁴But each person is tempted when he is lured and enticed by his own desire. ¹⁵Then desire, when it has conceived, gives birth to sin, and sin, when it is fully grown, brings forth death. ¹⁶Do not be deceived, my beloved brothers and sisters. ¹⁷Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, coming down from the Father of lights, with whom there is no variation or shadow due to change. ¹⁸Of his own will he brought us forth by the word of truth, that we should be a kind of firstfruits of his creation. ¹⁹Know this, my beloved brothers and sisters: let every person be quick to hear, slow to speak, slow to anger, ²⁰Because the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God. ²¹Therefore put away all filthiness and rampant wickedness, and receive with meekness the implanted word, which is able to save your souls. ²²Deceiving your own selves, but be you doers of the word, and not hearers only. ²³For if anyone is a hearer of the word and not a doer, he is like a man who looks at his natural face in a mirror. ²⁴For he looks at himself and goes away and immediately forgets what he was like. ²⁵But the one who looks intently into the perfect law of freedom and perseveres, being not a forgetful hearer but a doer who acts — this person will be blessed in his doing. ²⁶If anyone considers himself religious and does not bridle his tongue but deceives his heart, this person's religion is worthless. ²⁷Religion that is pure and undefiled before God the Father is this: to visit orphans and widows in their affliction, and to keep oneself unstained by the world.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The Greek Iakobos is the same name as the Hebrew Ya'akov (Jacob). The author identifies himself simply as doulos ('servant, slave') — not as an apostle or brother of the Lord, though tradition identifies him as the brother of Jesus who led the Jerusalem church (Acts 15:13). The address to the 'twelve tribes in the Dispersion' (diaspora) uses Israel's covenant identity language for the Christian community scattered across the Roman world.
2. The Greek pasan charan ('all joy, complete joy') is emphatic — not partial or reluctant joy but total joy. The word peirasmois can mean 'trials' (external hardships) or 'temptations' (internal enticements); here the context of 'falling into' (peripesete) suggests external trials. The adjective poikilois ('various, diverse, many-colored') indicates the trials come in multiple forms. James wastes no time on pleasantries — the very first command after the greeting is to rejoice in suffering.
3. The Greek dokimion ('testing, proving, means of testing') is related to the assaying of metals — faith is refined through trials like gold through fire (cf. 1 Peter 1:7). The verb katergazetai ('produces, works out, accomplishes') indicates an active process, not passive experience. The result is hypomone ('endurance, steadfastness, patient perseverance') — a quality that can only be forged through difficulty.
4. The Greek teleion ('perfect, complete, mature') and holokleroi ('complete, whole, entire') are near-synonyms reinforcing the idea of full spiritual development. James's use of teleios is not moral perfection but maturity — the fully developed character that results from endurance under trial. The phrase 'lacking in nothing' (en meedeni leipomenoi) is the positive flip side of the trials — what begins as loss ends as fullness.
5. The link to verse 4 is the word 'lacks' (leipetai) — if you lack nothing through endurance, but find you lack wisdom, simply ask. The Greek haplos ('generously, simply, without reserve') describes God's giving nature. The phrase me oneidizontos ('not reproaching, not finding fault') assures the asker that God does not shame those who come in need. This is one of the NT's most direct promises regarding prayer.
6. The Greek diakrinomenos ('doubting, wavering, being divided') literally means 'judging between two options' — the doubter is pulled in two directions. The sea-wave image (klydoni thalasses) captures the instability of a mind that trusts God one moment and fears the next. The verbs anemizomeno ('driven by wind') and rhipizomeno ('tossed, blown about') pile up to emphasize the chaotic motion of doubt.
7. The demonstrative 'that person' (ho anthropos ekeinos) creates distance — the doubter is held at arm's length as a cautionary example. The Greek leempsetai ('will receive') is emphatic in its negation: there is no expectation of receiving when the asking is halfhearted.
8. The Greek dipsychos ('double-souled, double-minded') may be a coinage of James — it does not appear in earlier Greek literature. It describes someone with two competing allegiances or belief systems. The instability (akatastatos, 'unsettled, disordered') is not limited to prayer but pervades 'all his ways' — the doubting mind produces an unstable life.
9. The Greek tapeinos ('lowly, humble, of low social standing') describes economic and social position, not merely a spiritual attitude. The verb kauchasthoo ('let him boast, let him glory') is surprising — the poor person is told to boast because in God's kingdom, their status is reversed. This is the first of James's strong statements about wealth and poverty.

10. The rich person is told to boast in being brought low (tapeinosei, 'humiliation') — a bitter irony. The flower-grass image comes from Isaiah 40:6-8, which James will develop in the next verse. Whether the 'rich brother' is a believer who should see wealth correctly or an unbeliever who will be judged is debated; the text is deliberately ambiguous.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 40:6-8 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. James expands Isaiah 40:6-7, adding vivid agricultural detail: the kausoni ('scorching wind' or 'burning heat') is the sirocco, the hot desert wind that withers vegetation in hours. The rich person will 'fade' (marantheesetai, 'wither, decay') in the very midst of their business activities (poreiais, 'journeys, pursuits, enterprises'). The point is not that wealth is inherently evil but that it provides no lasting security.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 40:6-8. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. The beatitude form (makarios, 'blessed, happy, fortunate') echoes Jesus's beatitudes. The 'crown of life' (stephanon tees zoos) is the victor's wreath — the stephanos of the athletic games, not the royal diadema. The promise is to those who 'love him' (agaposin auton), connecting endurance under trial to love for God. The SBLGNT does not specify 'the Lord' as the subject of the promise; the context implies God.
13. The word peirazomenos shifts from 'trial' (v. 12) to 'temptation' — the same Greek root covers both external hardship and internal enticement to sin. James categorically rejects the idea that God is the source of temptation. The Greek apeirastos ('untestable, unable to be tempted') means God has no vulnerability to evil and therefore cannot be its source.
14. The Greek exelkomenos ('being dragged out, being lured') and delezomenos ('being baited, being enticed') use fishing or hunting imagery — desire is the bait that hooks the person. The emphasis on 'his own' (idias) desire places responsibility squarely on the individual, not on external circumstances or divine testing.
15. James traces a genealogy of death using a birth metaphor: desire conceives (syllabousa), gives birth (tiktei) to sin, and sin when fully mature (apotelestheisa, 'brought to completion') produces (apokuei, 'gives birth to') death. The metaphor is darkly ironic — what appears to be life-giving (conception, birth) leads inexorably to death. This is one of the most psychologically penetrating analyses of sin in the NT.
16. The imperative me planasthe ('do not be led astray, do not be deceived') is a common NT warning formula (cf. 1 Corinthians 6:9, 15:33, Galatians 6:7). It serves as a hinge between the analysis of temptation (vv. 13-15) and the declaration of God's goodness (vv. 17-18).
17. The Greek has a rhythmic, almost poetic quality: pasa dosis agathe kai pan doorema teleion. The title 'Father of lights' (patros toon phoootoon) identifies God as creator of the heavenly luminaries (Genesis 1:14-18). Unlike the sun, moon, and stars that cast shifting shadows, God has no parallagee ('variation, change') or tropes aposkiasma ('shadow cast by turning'). The astronomical metaphor declares God's absolute constancy — he does not shift like celestial bodies.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 1:14-18. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. The verb apekueesen ('brought forth, gave birth to') is the same used in verse 15 for sin producing death — but here God 'gives birth' to new life. The 'word of truth' (logo aleetheias) is the gospel. The 'firstfruits' (aparcheen) image comes from the OT offering of the first portion of the harvest (Leviticus 23:10), signifying that believers are the first installment of a larger redemption that will encompass all creation.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Leviticus 23:10 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. The triple command — quick to hear, slow to speak, slow to anger — has the form of a wisdom proverb (cf. Proverbs 10:19, 14:29, 17:27, Ecclesiastes 5:1-2). The Greek iste may be indicative ('you know this') or imperative ('know this!'); either way it introduces practical wisdom. This verse anticipates the extended discussion of the tongue in chapter 3.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Proverbs 10:19. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Ecclesiastes 5:1-2. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
20. The statement is categorical: human anger (orgee andros) is incapable of producing (ouk ergazetai) God's righteousness (dikaiosyneen theou). The 'righteousness of God' here likely means the righteous conduct that God requires, not God's own attribute of righteousness. James does not deny that anger exists or even that it can be justified, but insists it cannot generate the godly life.
21. The Greek rhyparian ('filthiness, moral uncleanness') and perisseian kakias ('abundance of wickedness, overflow of evil') describe the moral debris that must be cleared away before the word can take root. The 'implanted word' (emphyton logon) is a horticultural metaphor — the word is like a seed planted in the soil of the heart. The verb dexasthe ('receive, welcome') is an active choice, not passive absorption.
22. This is the programmatic statement of the entire letter. The Greek poieetai logou ('doers of the word') is the antithesis of akroatai ('hearers, listeners') — a distinction drawn from the synagogue practice of hearing Scripture read aloud. The verb paralagizomenoi ('deceiving, deluding by false reasoning') suggests that hearing without doing creates a dangerous illusion of spiritual health.
23. The Greek esoptro ('mirror') in the ancient world was polished bronze or silver — the reflection was real but imperfect. The phrase 'the face of his birth' (to prosopon tees geneseos autou) means his natural, God-given face. The mirror reveals the person's true condition, but without action the revelation is useless.

24. The sequence is pointed: he 'looked at himself' (katenoesen heauton), 'went away' (apeleelythen), and 'immediately forgot' (eutheos epelatheto). The problem is not the looking but the failure to act on what was seen. The speed of forgetting — 'immediately' — satirizes the superficiality of hearing without doing.
25. The Greek parakupsas ('having stooped to look, having peered intently') describes a deliberate, focused examination — far more attentive than the casual glance of the mirror-gazer. The 'perfect law of freedom' (nomon teleion ton tees eleutherias) is a remarkable phrase that unites what many thought contradictory: law and liberty. For James, God's instruction (nomos) leads to freedom, not bondage. The promise of blessing is conditional on doing, not merely on looking.
26. The Greek threeskos ('religious, pious, devout') and threeskeia ('religion, worship, religious practice') refer to outward religious observance. The horse-bridling metaphor (chalinagagoon, 'putting a bridle on') anticipates the tongue imagery of chapter 3. James's point is devastating: uncontrolled speech invalidates all religious practice.
27. James defines true religion with two components: active mercy (visiting orphans and widows) and personal holiness (remaining unstained by the world). The Greek episkeptesthai ('to visit, to look after, to care for') means more than a social call — it implies providing practical help. Orphans and widows were the most vulnerable members of ancient society, and their care was a covenant obligation (Deuteronomy 14:29, 24:17-21, Isaiah 1:17). The word aspilon ('unstained, spotless') is a purity term — the believer is to remain uncontaminated by the world's values.
27. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Deuteronomy 14:29. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.

Summary: James 2 develops two interconnected arguments. The first (vv. 1-13) condemns partiality in the assembly: when believers honor the rich and dishonor the poor, they violate the 'royal law' of neighbor-love and stand condemned by the law of liberty. The second (vv. 14-26) is the letter's theological climax — the argument that faith without works is dead. James uses Abraham's offering of Isaac and Rahab's sheltering of the spies to demonstrate that genuine faith always produces corresponding action. The chapter's final verdict is stark: 'As the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead.'

What Makes This Remarkable: This chapter contains the most direct engagement with Pauline theology in the New Testament. James and Paul both cite Genesis 15:6 ('Abraham believed God, and it was credited to him as righteousness') but draw different conclusions — Paul to demonstrate justification apart from law-works, James to demonstrate that the faith credited to Abraham was a living, acting faith. The two are addressing different errors: Paul confronts legalism, James confronts antinomianism. The pairing of Abraham and Rahab is striking — the patriarch of the covenant and a Gentile prostitute stand together as models of living faith.

Translation Friction: The apparent tension between James 2:24 ('a person is justified by works and not by faith alone') and Romans 3:28 ('a person is justified by faith apart from works of the law') has generated centuries of debate. We render both texts straightforwardly from the Greek without harmonizing. The word 'justify' (dikaioō) may carry different nuances in each context: Paul uses it for God's initial declaration of righteousness, while James uses it for the visible vindication of faith before others. The phrase 'faith alone' (pistis monon, v. 24) is the only place in the New Testament where these words appear together — and James denies it.

Connections: The partiality prohibition echoes Leviticus 19:15 and Deuteronomy 1:17. The 'royal law' (v. 8) quotes Leviticus 19:18, the same text Jesus identified as the second greatest commandment (Matthew 22:39). Genesis 15:6 (v. 23) is cited also in Romans 4:3 and Galatians 3:6. The Abraham-and-Isaac narrative (v. 21) draws on Genesis 22. Rahab's story (v. 25) comes from Joshua 2. The faith-and-works argument anticipates the pastoral concern of 1 John 3:17-18.

1My brothers and sisters, do not hold the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with partiality. 2For if a man wearing a gold ring and fine clothing comes into your assembly, and a poor man in shabby clothing also comes in, 3Indeed, you have respect to him that weareth the gay clothing, and say to him, Sit you here in a good location. And say to the poor, Stand you there, or sit here under my footstool: ⁴Are you not then partial in yourselves, and are become judges of wickedness thoughts? ⁵Listen, my beloved brothers and sisters: has not God chosen those who are poor in the world to be rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom that he promised to those who love him? ⁶But you have dishonored the poor. Are not the rich the ones who oppress you, and are they not the ones who drag you into court? ⁷Are they not the ones who blaspheme the noble name by which you were called? ⁸If you really fulfill the royal law according to the Scripture, 'You shall love your neighbor as yourself,' you are doing well. ⁹But if you show partiality, you are committing sin and are convicted by the law as transgressors. ¹⁰For whoever keeps the whole law but stumbles at one point has become guilty of all of it. ¹¹For the one who said, 'Do not commit adultery,' also said, 'Do not murder.' If you do not commit adultery but do murder, you have become a transgressor of the law. ¹²So speak and so act as those who are to be judged by the law of liberty. ¹³For judgment is without mercy to the one who has shown no mercy. Mercy triumphs over judgment. ¹⁴What good is it, my brothers and sisters, if someone says he has faith but does not have works? Can that faith save him? ¹⁵If a brother or sister is without clothing and lacking daily food, ¹⁶One of you say to them, Depart in peace, be you warmed and filled. Even so you give them not those things which are needful to the body. What does it profit? ¹⁷So also faith, if it does not have works, is dead by itself. ¹⁸But someone will say, 'You have faith and I have works.' Show me your faith apart from your works, and I will show you my faith by my works. ¹⁹You believe that God is one. You do well — even the demons believe that, and shudder. ²⁰Do you want to be shown, you empty person, that faith apart from works is useless? ²¹Was not Abraham our father justified by works when he offered up his son Isaac on the altar? ²²You see that faith was working together with his works, and faith was completed by works. ²³Indeed, the scripture came to fulfillment which says, Abraham believed God, and it was imputed to him for righteousness — then he was called the Friend of God. ²⁴You see that a person is justified by works and not by faith alone. ²⁵And in the same way, was not Rahab the prostitute also justified by works when she received the messengers and sent them out by another route? ²⁶For just as the body without the spirit is dead, so also faith without works is dead.

1. The Greek prosōpolēmpsiais ('acts of partiality, favoritism') is a compound word literally meaning 'face-receiving' — judging by outward appearance. The genitive tēs doxēs ('of glory') is in apposition to Jesus Christ: he is 'the Lord of glory,' an exalted title that makes human status distinctions absurd. The plural 'acts of partiality' suggests a pattern of behavior, not an isolated incident.
2. The word synagōgēn ('assembly, synagogue') is used here for a Christian gathering — suggesting either a very early date for the letter or a Jewish-Christian audience that still used synagogue terminology. The compound chrysodaktylios ('gold-ringed') appears only here in the New Testament and describes someone conspicuously displaying wealth. The contrast between lamptra ('bright, splendid') and rhypara ('dirty, shabby') clothing is vivid and immediate.
3. The directive seating — 'sit here in a good place' versus 'stand over there or sit at my feet' — reflects actual social stratification in ancient assemblies. The Greek hypo to hypopodion mou ('under my footstool') is a position of extreme social inferiority. James paints the scene with sharp specificity to expose the absurdity.
4. The verb diekrithēte ('made distinctions, were divided') carries a double meaning: they have both discriminated between people and become internally divided. The phrase kritai dialogismōn ponērōn ('judges of evil reasonings') means they have become judges whose criteria are corrupt — wealth rather than character.
5. The imperative akousate ('listen!') signals a major theological point. God's election reverses worldly valuations: those poor 'in the world' (tō kosmō, dative of reference) are rich 'in faith.' The phrase 'heirs of the kingdom' echoes Jesus's beatitude in Matthew 5:3 and Luke 6:20. The kingdom is promised specifically to 'those who love him' — a covenantal condition.
6. The verb ētimasate ('dishonored, treated with contempt') is the opposite of the honor God bestows. The irony is biting: the rich whom believers fawn over are the very ones who katadynasteuousin ('exercise power against, oppress') them and physically helkousin ('drag') them to legal proceedings. James exposes the absurdity of honoring one's own oppressors.
7. The 'noble name' (to kalon onoma) is the name of Christ, invoked over believers at baptism. The phrase to epiklēthen eph' hymas ('that was called upon you') echoes the Old Testament formula for God's name being placed upon his people (cf. 2 Chronicles 7:14, Amos 9:12 LXX). To dishonor the poor while honoring those who blaspheme Christ's name is a profound contradiction.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on 2 Chronicles 7:14. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.

7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Amos 9:12. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The 'royal law' (nomon basilikon) may be called royal because it comes from the King (God), governs the kingdom, or is the supreme law that rules over all others. The quotation is from Leviticus 19:18, which Jesus identified as the second greatest commandment (Mark 12:31). The adverb mentoi ('really, indeed') adds a conditional edge — 'if you truly do this.'
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Leviticus 19:18 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The verb prosōpolēmpteite ('show partiality') is the verbal form of the noun in verse 1. Showing favoritism is not a minor social error — it is hamartian ('sin') and makes one a parabatēs ('transgressor, lawbreaker'). The law that convicts is not merely the Mosaic code but the 'royal law' of love.
10. The logic is not that every sin is equally severe but that the law is a unified whole — violating any part ruptures the entire relationship of obedience. The verb ptaisē ('stumbles') is gentler than 'transgresses,' suggesting that even a misstep brings full liability. This principle was recognized in rabbinic teaching as well.
11. James grounds the unity of the law in the unity of the lawgiver — 'the one who said' (ho eipōn) both commandments is the same God. The examples come from the Decalogue (Exodus 20:13-14). Selective obedience is no obedience at all.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 20:13-14. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. The 'law of liberty' (nomou eleutherias) reprises 1:25 — the paradoxical idea that true freedom comes through obedience to God's law. Believers should live in awareness that their future judgment will be measured by this standard. Both speech (laleite) and action (poieite) are included — anticipating chapter 3's focus on the tongue.
13. The first clause warns: those who show no mercy (eleos) will face merciless judgment. The second clause is one of the great one-line summaries in the New Testament — katakauchatai eleos kriseōs, 'mercy boasts against / triumphs over judgment.' The verb katakauchaomai means to boast triumphantly over a defeated opponent. Mercy does not ignore judgment but overcomes it.
14. The pivotal section begins with a rhetorical question expecting a negative answer. Note carefully: James does not say 'if someone has faith' but 'if someone says he has faith' (legē tis echein) — the issue is claimed faith without evidence. The article hē pistis ('that faith,' 'the faith in question') is crucial: James asks not whether faith in general saves but whether this particular kind of faith — faith that produces no works — can save. The expected answer is no.
15. The illustration is deliberately simple and urgent — not a hypothetical but a scenario the audience would recognize. The phrase tēs ephēmerou trophēs ('of daily food') echoes the Lord's Prayer's petition for daily bread (Matthew 6:11). The need is not exotic but elemental: clothing and food.
16. The dismissal 'go in peace' (hypagete en eirēnē) uses pious language — the standard Hebrew farewell blessing — while withholding practical help. The passive imperatives 'be warmed and filled' (thermainesthē kai chortazesthē) are either middle ('warm and feed yourselves') or divine passives ('may God warm and fill you'). Either way, the speaker passes responsibility to someone else. James exposes religious language used as a substitute for action.
17. The first occurrence of the chapter's verdict: faith without works is nekra ('dead'). The phrase kath' heautēn ('by itself, on its own') clarifies that such faith is not merely incomplete but lifeless — it has no animating principle. This is not an attack on faith itself but on a counterfeit version of faith that exists only as verbal claim.
18. This is one of the most debated verses in James due to the difficulty of identifying the objector's position. The most natural reading is that James is addressing a hypothetical person who tries to separate faith and works as independent spiritual gifts. James's response is a challenge: demonstrate faith without works — it cannot be done. Faith is invisible apart from its expression in action. The verb deixon ('show') demands visible, demonstrable evidence.
19. James quotes the Shema (Deuteronomy 6:4), the most fundamental confession of Jewish faith: 'God is one' (heis estin ho theos). The devastating comparison follows: demons possess orthodox theology — they believe the correct proposition — yet their belief produces not obedience but phrissoousin ('shudder, tremble with horror'). Mere intellectual assent to truth, even the highest truth, is not saving faith.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 6:4. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
20. The address ō anthrōpe kene ('O empty person') is sharp — kenos means hollow, lacking substance, like the faith being described. Some manuscripts read nekra ('dead') instead of argē ('useless, idle, barren'), but argē is the better-attested reading in critical editions and creates a wordplay: a-rgē means 'without work,' matching the 'without works' (chōris tōn ergōn) that James condemns.
21. James appeals to the Aqedah, the binding of Isaac (Genesis 22). The verb edikaiōthē ('was justified, was shown righteous') in James's usage means 'was demonstrated to be righteous' — Abraham's willingness to offer Isaac was the visible proof that his faith (confessed in Genesis 15:6) was genuine. Paul cites Genesis 15:6 for the moment of faith; James cites Genesis 22 for the demonstration of that same faith in action.
21. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 22. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.

21. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 15:6. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
22. The verb synēgei ('was working together with, cooperated with') presents faith and works as collaborative, not competitive. The verb eteleiōthē ('was completed, was brought to its goal, was perfected') means that Abraham's faith reached its intended maturity through action. Faith without works is not merely deficient — it is unfinished, like a seed that never germinates.
23. The quotation is Genesis 15:6 (LXX), the same text Paul cites in Romans 4:3 and Galatians 3:6. James's argument is that Genesis 22 (the offering of Isaac) 'fulfilled' (eplērōthē) what Genesis 15 declared — Abraham's faith was genuine and was proven so by his obedience decades later. The title 'friend of God' (philos theou) is not found in Genesis but appears in Isaiah 41:8, 2 Chronicles 20:7, and Jewish tradition. It represents the highest intimacy between a human and God.
23. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 15:6 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
23. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 22 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.

24. This is the only verse in the New Testament that contains the phrase 'faith alone' (pisteōs monon) — and it denies its sufficiency. The statement must be read in context: James is not contradicting Paul but addressing a different problem. Paul argues against those who add law-observance as a requirement for initial acceptance by God; James argues against those who claim saving faith while producing no evidence of transformed life. The word dikaïoutai here means 'is shown to be righteous' in the visible, evidentiary sense.
25. The pairing of Abraham and Rahab is extraordinary: the father of the nation and a Canaanite prostitute. If Abraham represents the highest pedigree of faith, Rahab represents the most unlikely. Her 'work' was sheltering the Israelite spies (Joshua 2) and sending them away safely — an act of faith expressed in concrete, risky action. She appears in Matthew's genealogy (1:5) and Hebrews 11:31. The word pornē ('prostitute') is not softened; James retains it to emphasize that works-producing faith is available to anyone.
25. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Joshua 2 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
26. The chapter's closing analogy is devastating in its clarity. The Greek pneumatōs ('spirit, breath') refers to the animating life-force — without it, a body is a corpse. Works are to faith what breath is to the body: not an addition but the evidence of life. A faith that produces no works is not weak faith or immature faith — it is dead faith, a spiritual corpse. This is the third and final declaration of faith's death in the chapter (cf. vv. 17, 20), forming the definitive verdict.

Summary: James 3 addresses two related themes: the destructive power of the tongue (vv. 1-12) and the nature of true versus false wisdom (vv. 13-18). The tongue section uses a cascade of vivid metaphors — a horse's bit, a ship's rudder, a small fire, a restless evil, a spring, a fig tree — to demonstrate that the tongue, though small, wields disproportionate power for both blessing and destruction. James declares that no human being can tame the tongue and that using it to both praise God and curse people made in God's image is a fundamental contradiction. The wisdom section contrasts earthly wisdom (characterized by jealousy and selfish ambition) with wisdom from above (characterized by purity, peaceableness, gentleness, and mercy).

*What Makes This Remarkable: The density of metaphor in verses 3-8 is unmatched in the New Testament epistles. James piles image upon image — bit, rudder, fire, world of unrighteousness, animal kingdom, poison, spring, fig tree, vine — creating an overwhelming sense of the tongue's danger. The theological grounding in verse 9 is striking: cursing people is wrong not merely because it is unkind but because humans are made 'in the likeness of God' (kath' homoiōsin theou) — an appeal to Genesis 1:26-27. The wisdom passage (vv. 13-18) anticipates modern psychology's recognition that speech reveals character.*

Translation Friction: James's statement that 'no human being can tame the tongue' (v. 8) raises the question of whether he is describing an impossibility or an extreme difficulty. The context suggests that while human effort alone cannot master the tongue, the wisdom 'from above' (v. 17) provides the transformation needed. The relationship between this chapter's practical ethics and Paul's theology of Spirit-empowered transformation (Galatians 5:22-23) is complementary rather than contradictory.

Connections: The tongue's fire connects to Proverbs 16:27 and 26:20-21. The image of God in verse 9 echoes Genesis 1:26-27 and 9:6. The wisdom from above parallels the wisdom tradition of Proverbs 8 and Sirach 24. The 'fruit of righteousness sown in peace' (v. 18) echoes Isaiah 32:17 and Hosea 10:12. The list of wisdom's qualities anticipates the fruit of the Spirit in Galatians 5:22-23.

¹Not many of you should become teachers, my brothers and sisters, for you know that we who teach will be judged with greater strictness. ²For we all stumble in many ways. And if anyone does not stumble in what he says, he is a mature person, able to bridle the whole body as well. ³If we put bits into the mouths of horses so that they obey us, we guide their whole body as well. ⁴Look at ships too: though they are so large and driven by fierce winds, they are guided by a very small rudder wherever the will of the pilot directs. ⁵So also the tongue is a small member, yet it boasts of great things. How great a forest is set ablaze by such a small fire! ⁶And the tongue is a fire, a world of unrighteousness. The tongue is set among our members, staining the whole body, setting on fire the entire course of life, and itself set on fire by hell. ⁷For every kind of beast and bird, of reptile and sea creature, is tamed and has been tamed by humankind, ⁸However, the tongue can no man tame. It is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison. ⁹With it we bless the Lord and Father, and with it we curse people who are made in the likeness of God. ¹⁰From the same mouth come blessing and cursing. My brothers and sisters, these things ought not to be so. ¹¹Does a spring pour out from the same opening both fresh water and bitter? ¹²Can a fig tree, my brothers and sisters, produce olives, or a grapevine produce figs? Neither can a salt spring yield fresh water. ¹³Who is wise and understanding among you? By his good conduct let him show his works in the gentleness of wisdom. ¹⁴But if you have bitter jealousy and selfish ambition in your hearts, do not boast and be false to the truth. ¹⁵This is not the wisdom that comes down from above but is earthly, unspiritual, demonic. ¹⁶For where jealousy and selfish ambition exist, there will be disorder and every vile practice. ¹⁷But the wisdom from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, open to reason, full of mercy and good fruits, impartial and sincere. ¹⁸And a harvest of righteousness is sown in peace by those who make peace.

1. The warning targets the role of didaskaloi ('teachers'), not 'masters' as the KJV has it. In the early church, teachers held significant authority (cf. Acts 13:1, 1 Corinthians 12:28). James includes himself in the warning — 'we will receive' (lēmposometha) — acknowledging that greater responsibility brings greater accountability. The word krima here means 'judgment' or 'verdict,' not necessarily 'condemnation.'
2. The universal admission — 'we all stumble' (ptaiomen hapantes) — includes James himself. The logic is that speech is the hardest arena of self-control; mastering it means mastering everything. The metaphor chalinagōgēsai ('to bridle, to lead with a bridle') introduces the horse imagery that verse 3 will develop. The word teleios ('perfect, mature, complete') reprises its use in 1:4.
3. The first analogy: a small bit (chalinous) in a horse's mouth controls the entire animal. The parallel to the tongue is implicit — a small member directing the whole person. The verb metagomen ('we guide, we direct') emphasizes deliberate control over something much larger than the instrument.
4. The second analogy scales up: from a horse to a ship. The adjective tēlikauta ('so great, so large') emphasizes the disproportion between vessel and rudder (elachistou pēdaliou, 'smallest rudder'). Even fierce winds (anemōn sklērōn) cannot override the rudder's direction. The pilot's hormē ('impulse, will, intention') determines the ship's course — just as the intention behind speech determines its effect.
5. James now makes the application explicit: the tongue (glōssa) is mikron melos ('a small member') with disproportionate effect. The verb auchei ('boasts') can be positive or negative — the tongue claims great power, and the claim is true. The fire metaphor shifts to pure danger: hēlikon pyr hēlikēn hylēn anapteī — a tiny spark ignites a vast forest (hylē can mean 'forest' or 'wood/matter').
6. This is the most concentrated verse in the chapter. The tongue is identified flatly as pyr ('fire') and as ho kosmos tēs adikias ('the world of unrighteousness') — it is a microcosm of all that is wrong. The phrase ton trochon tēs geneseōs ('the wheel/course of birth/existence') is notoriously difficult; it likely means the entire cycle of human life from birth to death. The tongue is set on fire hypo tēs geennēs ('by Gehenna/hell') — its destructive power has a demonic origin. The progression moves from human body to the whole of life to hell itself.

7. The four categories — thērion ('beasts'), peteinōn ('birds'), herpetōn ('reptiles'), and enaliōn ('sea creatures') — echo the four domains of Genesis 1:26, where God gives humanity dominion over all living things. The double verb damazetai kai dedamastai ('is being tamed and has been tamed') covers both present and past — humanity has a comprehensive track record of subduing the animal kingdom.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 1:26. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The contrast is stark: humanity tames every creature but cannot tame its own tongue. The adjective akatastaton ('restless, unstable, uncontrollable') appeared in 1:8 to describe the double-minded person. The tongue is mestos iou thanatēphorou ('full of death-bearing poison') — the image shifts from fire to venom, suggesting the tongue kills like a serpent. The echoes of Genesis 3 (the serpent's lethal speech) may be intentional.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 3 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The theological core of the passage: cursing a human being is an assault on the divine image they bear. The phrase kath' homoiōsin theou ('according to the likeness of God') quotes Genesis 1:26 (LXX). The repetition of en autē ('with it... with it') hammers the contradiction: the same tongue performs worship and destruction. The verb katarōmetha ('we curse') is strong — it means to invoke harm or judgment on someone.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 1:26. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The verdict is simple and direct: ou chrē ('it is not fitting, it must not be'). Blessing (eulogia) and cursing (katara) from the same mouth is a moral impossibility that believers routinely commit. The understated 'ought not to be so' carries the weight of divine expectation, not mere social etiquette.
11. The rhetorical question expects the answer 'no.' A spring (pēgē) produces water according to its nature — it cannot produce both sweet (glyky) and bitter (pikron) water from the same source (opēs, 'opening'). The implication is that a person whose tongue produces both blessing and cursing has a divided nature that needs transformation at the source.
12. Three rapid-fire examples from nature — fig tree, grapevine, salt spring — all making the same point: nature is consistent; each thing produces according to its kind. The application to speech is unstated but clear: if your tongue consistently produces cursing, the problem is not the tongue but the heart that drives it. Jesus made the same argument with similar botanical imagery (Matthew 7:16-20, 12:33-37).
13. The transition to the wisdom section echoes the faith-works argument of chapter 2: true wisdom, like true faith, is demonstrated by visible evidence. The word anastrophēs ('conduct, manner of life') is far broader than 'conversation' (KJV). The phrase en prāytēti sophias ('in the gentleness/meekness of wisdom') defines what wise conduct looks like — not assertive self-promotion but humble, gentle action.
14. The opposite of gentle wisdom is zēlon pikron ('bitter jealousy') and eritheian ('selfish ambition, factious rivalry'). The word eritheia originally referred to a hired laborer and came to mean self-seeking partisanship. To claim wisdom while harboring these is to pseudesthe kata tēs alētheias ('lie against the truth') — not merely to be wrong but to actively oppose truth itself.
15. False wisdom receives a devastating three-word diagnosis: epigeios ('earthly, belonging to this world'), psychikē ('natural, unspiritual, of the soul rather than the Spirit'), and daimoniōdēs ('demonic, characteristic of demons'). The progression descends from merely human to actively evil. The term psychikē is the same word Paul uses in 1 Corinthians 2:14 for the 'natural person' who cannot receive the things of the Spirit.
16. Jealousy and selfish ambition produce akatastasia ('disorder, instability, chaos') — the same word family as the 'restless' (akatastaton) tongue in verse 8 and the 'unstable' (akatastatos) double-minded person in 1:8. James uses this word group as a signature marker of uncontrolled human nature. The result is pan phaulon pragma ('every worthless/vile deed').
17. The seven qualities of heavenly wisdom form one of the most beautiful ethical lists in the New Testament. The order is significant: purity (hagnē) comes first because it is foundational. Then follow: eirēnikē ('peaceable'), epieikēs ('gentle, fair, yielding'), eupieithēs ('open to reason, willing to yield, compliant'), mestē eleous kai karpōn agathōn ('full of mercy and good fruits'), adiakritos ('impartial, without favoritism' — connecting back to chapter 2), and anypokritos ('sincere, without pretense, unhypocritical'). This is James's portrait of the transformed life.
18. The chapter closes with an agricultural metaphor: the 'fruit of righteousness' (karpos dikaiosynēs) is both the seed and the harvest — peacemakers sow peace and reap righteousness. The echo of Jesus's beatitude is unmistakable: 'Blessed are the peacemakers' (Matthew 5:9). The phrase also echoes Isaiah 32:17: 'The fruit of righteousness will be peace.' Peace is both the method and the result.

Summary: James 4 diagnoses the root cause of conflict among believers: disordered desires that produce wars, quarrels, and unanswered prayer. The solution is radical humility before God. The chapter builds to its central command — 'Draw near to God, and he will draw near to you' (v. 8) — and frames the choice between God and the world as one of spiritual adultery. James then warns against speaking evil of one another (placing oneself as judge over the law) and against presumptuous planning that ignores the sovereignty of God. Life is a vapor, and all human plans should be held under the phrase 'If the Lord wills.'

What Makes This Remarkable: The metaphor of spiritual adultery (v. 4) draws on the prophetic tradition of Hosea, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, where Israel's unfaithfulness to God is portrayed as marital infidelity. The ten imperatives in verses 7-10 (submit, resist, draw near, cleanse, purify, lament, mourn, weep, let laughter be turned, humble yourselves) form the most concentrated call to repentance in the New Testament epistles. The quotation in verse 5 ('the spirit that he made to dwell in us yearns jealously') has no exact Old Testament source, making it one of the most debated citations in James.

Translation Friction: The quotation in verse 5 does not match any known Old Testament text exactly. It may be a free paraphrase of passages like Exodus 20:5 or a reference to a text now lost. We render the Greek as given without attempting to identify a specific source. The address 'adulteresses' (moichalides, v. 4) in some manuscripts reads 'adulterers and adulteresses' — the SBLGNT follows the shorter reading, understanding the feminine as a metaphorical address to the unfaithful community.

Connections: The 'wars and fights' language (v. 1) connects to the disorder of 3:16. The friendship-with-the-world theme echoes 1 John 2:15-17. 'Draw near to God' recalls Psalm 73:28 and Hebrews 10:22. 'God opposes the proud but gives grace to the humble' (v. 6) quotes Proverbs 3:34 (LXX). The 'vapor' metaphor for life (v. 14) echoes Ecclesiastes and Psalm 39:5-6. The presumptuous planning warning parallels Proverbs 27:1 and Luke 12:16-21.

¹What causes quarrels and what causes fights among you? Is it not this — your passions that are at war within your members? ²You desire and do not have, so you murder. You covet and cannot obtain, so you fight and quarrel. You do not have because you do not ask. ³You ask and do not receive, because you ask wrongly, in order to spend it on your passions. ⁴You adulteresses! Do you not know that friendship with the world is hostility toward God? Therefore whoever wishes to be a friend of the world makes himself an enemy of God. ⁵Or do you suppose it is to no purpose that the Scripture says, 'He yearns jealously over the spirit that he has made to dwell in us'? ⁶But he gives more grace. Therefore it says, 'God opposes the proud but gives grace to the humble.' ⁷So place yourselves under God's authority. Stand firm against the devil, and he will run from you. ⁸Draw near to God, and he will draw near to you. Cleanse your hands, you sinners, and purify your hearts, you double-minded. ⁹Be wretched and mourn and weep. Let your laughter be turned to mourning and your joy to gloom. ¹⁰Humble yourselves before the Lord, and he will exalt you. ¹¹Do not speak evil against one another, brothers and sisters. The one who speaks against a brother or judges his brother speaks evil against the law and judges the law. But if you judge the law, you are not a doer of the law but a judge. ¹²There is only one lawgiver and judge, the one who is able to save and to destroy. But who are you to judge your neighbor? ¹³Come now, you who say, 'Today or tomorrow we will go into such and such a town and spend a year there and trade and make a profit' — ¹⁴Whereas you know not what will be on the morrow. For what is your life? It is indeed a vapour, that appeareth for a little occasion, and then vanisheth away. ¹⁵Instead you ought to say, 'If the Lord wills, we will live and do this or that.' ¹⁶As it is, you boast in your arrogance. All such boasting is evil. ¹⁷So whoever knows the right thing to do and fails to do it, for him it is sin.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The Greek polemoi ('wars') and machai ('battles, fights') may refer to literal conflicts within the community or to fierce interpersonal disputes. The cause is identified as hēdonōn ('pleasures, desires') — the English word 'hedonism' comes from this root. These desires are strateuomenōn ('warring, campaigning like soldiers') inside the person — an internal civil war that spills over into communal conflict.

2. The escalation is shocking: desire leads to murder (phoneuete). Some commentators take this metaphorically (cf. Matthew 5:21-22, 1 John 3:15), but James may intend the full force of the word. The cycle is: desire frustration violence more frustration. The solution shifts abruptly: 'you do not have because you do not ask' — the failure is not merely moral but prayerful. They grasp instead of asking.
3. Even when they do pray, the problem is motive: kakōs aiteisthe ('you ask badly, wrongly'). Prayer driven by hēdonais ('pleasures') — the same word as verse 1 — is prayer that treats God as a supplier for self-indulgence. The verb dapanēsēte ('spend, squander') suggests wasteful consumption, the same verb used for the prodigal son's squandering (Luke 15:14).
4. The address moichalides ('adulteresses') uses the prophetic metaphor of Israel as God's unfaithful spouse (Hosea 1-3, Jeremiah 3, Ezekiel 16). The SBLGNT reads only the feminine form, treating the community corporately as God's betrothed who has gone after other lovers. The stark binary — friendship with the world (philia tou kosmou) equals hostility toward God (echthra tou theou) — allows no middle ground. The verb kathistatai ('is established as, constitutes himself') indicates a deliberate stance, not an accidental drift.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Hosea 1-3. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Jeremiah 3. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Ezekiel 16. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. This is one of the most debated verses in James. No Old Testament text matches the quotation exactly. The grammar is ambiguous: the subject could be 'the spirit' (our human spirit yearns enviously) or God (who yearns jealously for the spirit he placed in us). The rendering follows the interpretation that God is the subject — he jealously desires the complete loyalty of the spirit he gave to humanity. This reading fits the context of spiritual adultery and connects to the jealous God of Exodus 20:5 and 34:14.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 20:5 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The quotation is from Proverbs 3:34 (LXX). The verb antitassetai ('opposes, sets himself in battle array against') is a military term — God actively resists the proud. By contrast, he 'gives grace' (didōsin charin) to the humble. The opening phrase 'he gives more grace' (meizona didōsin charin) assures that God's grace is sufficient to overcome the jealous yearning described in verse 5. Grace exceeds the pull of worldly desire.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Proverbs 3:34. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The first two of ten rapid-fire imperatives. The structure is chiasmic: submit to God (positive), resist the devil (negative). The verb hypotagēte ('submit, place yourself under') is the same word used for military subordination. The promise that the devil will 'flee' (pheuxetai) from those who resist is a remarkable assurance — the enemy's power is real but breakable. The KJV rendering is retained here as it accurately captures the Greek.
8. The chapter's central verse contains the letter's most famous promise: eggisate tō theō, kai engiei hymin — 'draw near to God and he will draw near to you.' The promise is conditional but certain: the initiative is human, but God's response is guaranteed. The following commands use temple purification language: 'cleanse your hands' (katharisate cheiras) echoes the priestly handwashing of Exodus 30:19-21, while 'purify your hearts' (hagnisate kardias) goes deeper than ritual to moral transformation. The terms 'sinners' (hamartōloi) and 'double-minded' (dipsychoi) are not insults but pastoral diagnoses — the hands represent external conduct, the heart represents internal loyalty.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 30:19-21 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. Three imperatives of grief: talaipōrēsate ('be miserable, feel your wretchedness'), penthēsate ('mourn'), klausate ('weep'). These are not calls to perpetual sadness but to genuine repentance — feeling the weight of the spiritual adultery just described. The reversal of laughter to mourning and joy to gloom (katēpheian, 'downcast eyes, dejection') echoes the prophetic call of Joel 2:12-13 and Jesus's 'woe to you who laugh now' (Luke 6:25).
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Joel 2:12-13. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The final imperative and the climax of the ten commands: tapeinōthēte ('humble yourselves, make yourselves low'). The promise mirrors the Proverbs 3:34 quotation in verse 6 — God gives grace to the humble. The verb hypsōsei ('will lift up, will exalt') is the same word used for Christ's exaltation (Acts 2:33, Philippians 2:9). The pattern is consistently biblical: the way up is down.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Proverbs 3:34 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The verb katalaleite ('speak against, slander, badmouth') connects to the tongue teaching of chapter 3. James's logic: the law commands love of neighbor (2:8); speaking against a brother violates that law; but instead of submitting to the law as a doer (poiētēs, cf. 1:22), the slanderer sets himself above it as its judge (kritēs). Only God is qualified for that role (v. 12).
12. The argument reaches its conclusion: God alone is nomothetēs ('lawgiver') and kritēs ('judge'), and he alone has the power to sōsai ('save') and apolesai ('destroy'). The rhetorical question su de tis ei ('but who are you?') is deliberately deflating — it reduces the self-appointed judge to insignificance before the one true Judge.
13. The phrase age nyn ('come now') is a sharp attention-getter, introducing a new audience: traveling merchants who plan their itineraries with confident self-sufficiency. The specificity of the plan — city, duration (a year), activity (trade), result (profit) — makes the presumption vivid. There is nothing wrong with planning; the problem is planning without acknowledging God's sovereignty over the outcome.

14. The metaphor atmis ('mist, vapor, steam') captures life's brevity and fragility with devastating economy. The verb phainomenē ('appearing') and aphanizomenē ('disappearing, vanishing') describe a vapor's entire existence — briefly visible, then gone. The echo of Ecclesiastes and Psalm 39:5 ('my days are a few handbreadths') is unmistakable. James does not sentimentalize this but states it as fact.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalm 39:5. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The corrective is not to stop planning but to hold all plans under divine sovereignty: ean ho kyrios thelēō ('if the Lord wills'). This phrase (Latin: Deo volente, abbreviated D.V.) became a standard Christian expression of dependence on God. Note the order: 'we will live' comes before 'and do this or that' — even continued existence is subject to God's will, not just the success of business ventures.
16. The word alazoneia ('arrogance, pretension, braggadocio') describes the false confidence of those who plan without God. It appears also in 1 John 2:16 ('the pride of life'). Such boasting (kauchēsis) is not merely foolish but ponēra ('evil, wicked') — it usurps God's place as sovereign over the future.
17. The chapter's closing sentence is a principle of universal application: sins of omission are real sins. The participle eidoti ('knowing') establishes that knowledge creates moral obligation. This is not a new category of sin but a summary of the entire letter's argument — faith that knows but does not act is dead (2:17), planning that knows God's sovereignty but ignores it is arrogant (4:13-16), and knowing the good but not doing it is hamartia ('sin'). James's ethics consistently demand action, not merely assent.

Summary: James 5 opens with a thundering prophetic denunciation of the rich who have hoarded wealth, defrauded workers, and lived in self-indulgent luxury (vv. 1-6). The tone then shifts to pastoral encouragement: believers are called to patience until the Lord's coming, following the example of the prophets and Job (vv. 7-11). The chapter addresses oath-taking (v. 12), prayer in suffering, singing in cheerfulness, and the anointing of the sick by elders (vv. 13-15). It closes with the confession of sins, the power of Elijah-like prayer, and the restoration of wandering believers (vv. 16-20).

What Makes This Remarkable: The denunciation of the rich (vv. 1-6) is among the most ferocious social criticism in the New Testament, rivaling the prophetic oracles of Amos and Isaiah. The rust on hoarded gold and silver will 'testify against you' and 'eat your flesh like fire' — wealth itself becomes the instrument of judgment. The prayer-and-anointing passage (vv. 14-15) has shaped Christian practice for two millennia, from Catholic last rites to Protestant healing ministries. The closing verses (19-20) contain no formal farewell — the letter simply ends with the urgency of rescuing the wanderer, as if James cannot be bothered with epistolary conventions when souls are at stake.

Translation Friction: The relationship between James's denunciation of the rich (vv. 1-6) and his audience is debated — are these rich people within the church or outsiders? The shift to 'brothers and sisters' in verse 7 suggests the rich of verses 1-6 may be outside the community, but the warning still functions for believers. The anointing with oil (v. 14) may be medicinal (olive oil was used therapeutically), sacramental, or both — the text does not separate the physical from the spiritual. The phrase 'the prayer of faith will save the one who is sick' (v. 15) must be read alongside the letter's emphasis on God's sovereignty (4:15).

Connections: *The condemnation of the rich echoes Amos 2:6-7, 5:11-12, and Isaiah 5:8-9. 'The Lord of hosts' (v. 4) is a rare NT use of the title Kyrios Sabaōth, drawn from Isaiah 5:9 (LXX). The farmer's patience (v. 7) echoes Deuteronomy 11:14. Job's endurance (v. 11) connects to the book of Job and the 'compassion of the Lord' echoes Exodus 34:6. The Elijah prayer passage (vv. 17-18) draws on 1 Kings 17-18. The restoration of wanderers (vv. 19-20) echoes Ezekiel 34 and Jesus's parable of the lost sheep (Luke 15:3-7).*

¹Come now, you rich, weep and howl for the miseries that are coming upon you. ²Your riches have rotted and your garments are moth-eaten. ³Your gold and silver have corroded, and their corrosion will be evidence against you and will eat your flesh like fire. You have laid up treasure in the last days. ⁴Behold, the wages of the laborers who mowed your fields, which you kept back by fraud, are crying out, and the cries of the harvesters have reached the ears of the Lord of hosts. ⁵You have lived on the earth in luxury and self-indulgence. You have fattened your hearts in a day of slaughter. ⁶You have condemned and murdered the righteous person. He does not resist you. ⁷Be patient, therefore, brothers and sisters, until the coming of the Lord. See how the farmer waits for the precious fruit of the earth, being patient about it, until it receives the early and the late rains. ⁸You also, be patient. Establish your hearts, for the coming of the Lord is near. ⁹Do not grumble against one another, brothers and sisters, so that you may not be judged. Behold, the Judge is standing at the door. ¹⁰As an example of suffering and patience, brothers and sisters, take the prophets who spoke in the name of the Lord. ¹¹Behold, we consider blessed those who remained steadfast. You have heard of the endurance of Job, and you have seen the purpose of the Lord, how the Lord is compassionate and merciful. ¹²But above all, my brothers and sisters, do not swear, either by heaven or by earth or by any other oath, but let your 'yes' be yes and your 'no' be no, so that you may not fall under judgment. ¹³Is anyone among you suffering? Let him pray. Is anyone cheerful? Let him sing praise. ¹⁴Is any sick in the midst of you? let him call for the elders of the church. And let them pray over him, anointing him with oil by the authority of the Lord:. ¹⁵And the prayer of faith will save the one who is sick, and the Lord will raise him up. And if he has committed sins, he will be forgiven. ¹⁶Therefore, confess your sins to one another and pray for one another, so that you may be healed. The prayer of a righteous person has great power as it is working. ¹⁷Elijah was a man with a nature like ours, and he prayed fervently that it might not rain, and for three years and six months it did not rain on the earth. ¹⁸Then he prayed again, and heaven gave rain, and the earth produced its fruit. ¹⁹My brothers and sisters, if anyone among you wanders from the truth and someone brings him back, ²⁰I indeed, let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way will save a soul from death, and will hide a crowd of sins.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The opening age nyn ('come now') echoes 4:13 but now addresses the rich directly. The verb ololyzontes ('howling, wailing') is an onomatopoeic word used in the prophets for the shrieking of those under divine judgment (Isaiah 13:6, 14:31 LXX). The miserias (talaipōriais) are not present but eperchomenais ('coming, approaching') — eschatological judgment is on the way.
1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 13:6. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
2. The perfect tenses sesēpen ('have rotted') and gegonen ('have become') present the decay as already accomplished — from God's perspective, the judgment is already underway. Hoarded wealth is not merely useless but actively decomposing. Garments were a primary form of stored wealth in the ancient world (cf. Acts 20:33), making moth damage a vivid image of wealth's impermanence.
3. Gold and silver do not literally rust, but James uses katiōtai ('has corroded') to make a theological point: hoarded wealth self-destructs. The corrosion (ios) serves double duty — it testifies against the hoarders at judgment (martyrion) and consumes their flesh like fire (phageai tas sarkas). The final phrase is devastating: ethēsaurisate en eschatais hēmerais — 'you have treasured up in the last days.' With judgment imminent, hoarding is not merely foolish but insane.
4. The personification is extraordinary: the withheld wages themselves krazei ('cry out') — echoing the blood of Abel crying from the ground (Genesis 4:10). Wage theft violates Leviticus 19:13 and Deuteronomy 24:14-15. The title Kyrios Sabaōth ('Lord of hosts/armies') appears only here and in Romans 9:29 in the New Testament (both quoting Isaiah). It emphasizes God's power to act on behalf of the oppressed. The defrauded workers have an advocate who commands armies.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 4:10. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Leviticus 19:13. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 24:14-15. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. The verbs etryphēsate ('lived in luxury') and espatalēsate ('lived self-indulgently, lived wantonly') describe extravagant consumption. The image shifts to cattle: ethrepsate tas kardias hymōn ('you fattened your hearts') pictures the rich as livestock being fattened for hēmera sphagēs ('a day of slaughter'). The day of slaughter is the day of judgment — and the rich have been preparing themselves for it through their own indulgence. The irony is brutal: they think they are feasting; they are actually being fattened for the kill.
6. The climax of the indictment: the rich have used the legal system (katedikasate, 'condemned in court') to destroy (ephoneusate, 'murdered') the righteous person (ton dikaion). The singular 'the righteous one' may refer to a specific person (possibly Jesus, or James the Just himself), or to a type — the vulnerable righteous person who cannot fight back. The final clause ouk antitassetai hymin ('he does not resist you') underscores the victim's helplessness and, by implication, the gravity of the crime. The same verb (antitassetai) was used in verse 4:6 of God opposing the proud — the righteous does not resist, but God will.
7. The tone shifts dramatically from judgment oracle to pastoral encouragement. The verb makrothymēsate ('be patient, be long-tempered') is the chapter's keyword, appearing four times (vv. 7, 8, 10). The parousia ('coming, arrival, presence') of the Lord is the hoped-for event that makes present suffering endurable. The farmer analogy is drawn from Palestinian agriculture: the 'early rain' (proimon) comes in October-November to soften the ground for plowing, and the 'late rain' (opsimon) comes in March-April to mature the grain before harvest.

8. The command stērixate tas kardias hymōn ('strengthen, establish, make firm your hearts') calls for inner resolve. The assurance that the parousia ēggiken ('has drawn near, is at hand') uses the same verb Jesus used in Mark 1:15: 'The kingdom of God has drawn near.' The nearness of the Lord's coming provides both urgency and comfort.
9. The verb stenazete ('grumble, groan, sigh') refers to complaining against fellow believers under the pressure of suffering — blaming each other rather than enduring together. The image of the Judge standing pro tōn thyrōn ('before the doors') is vivid and immediate: Christ the judge is not distant but at the threshold, about to enter. The urgency makes petty mutual grievances absurd.
10. The prophets serve as a hypodeigma ('example, model, pattern') of both kakopatheia ('suffering, enduring hardship') and makrothymia ('patience, long-suffering'). The prophets suffered not despite speaking God's word but because of it — their faithfulness to the divine message brought them persecution. The audience is to see their own suffering in this prophetic lineage.
11. Job is the supreme Old Testament example of endurance (hypomonē) under suffering whose cause is hidden. The phrase to telos kyriou ('the end/purpose of the Lord') means the outcome that God brought about — Job's restoration (Job 42:10-17). The final description of God as polysplanchnos ('deeply compassionate,' literally 'of many intestines/feelings') is found only here in the New Testament. The companion word oiktirmōn ('merciful, pitying') echoes the great self-description of God in Exodus 34:6.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Job 42:10-17. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 34:6. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. The phrase pro pantōn ('above all, before everything') marks this as a matter of supreme importance. The prohibition against oath-taking closely parallels Jesus's teaching in Matthew 5:33-37. The point is not that oaths are inherently evil but that a community of truth-tellers should need no oaths — their simple word should be sufficient. The warning hypo krisin pesēte ('fall under judgment') connects oath-breaking to the eschatological judgment theme that runs through the chapter.
13. Two terse instructions covering the full range of human experience: suffering (kakopathei) calls for prayer (proseuchesthō), and cheerfulness (euthymei) calls for praise-singing (psalletō). The verb psalletō ('sing praise, make music') originally meant to pluck a stringed instrument and came to mean singing psalms or hymns. Every emotional state has an appropriate spiritual response.
14. The instruction is specific and communal: the sick person (asthenei, 'is weak/ill') initiates by calling (proskalesasthō) the elders (presbyterous), who pray and anoint with olive oil (elaion). The anointing is done en tō onomati tou kyriou ('in the name of the Lord'), indicating that the oil is not merely medicinal but functions as a sign of the Lord's healing power. Olive oil was widely used medicinally in antiquity (cf. Luke 10:34), so the action may be both therapeutic and sacramental.
15. The 'prayer of faith' (euchē tēs pisteōs) — not the oil — is the operative element. The verb sōsei ('will save') can mean physical healing or spiritual salvation; both may be intended. The Lord (not the elders) is the one who egerei ('will raise up') the sick person. The conditional clause about sin (kan hamartias ē pepoiēkōs, 'even if he has committed sins') acknowledges a possible connection between sickness and sin without making it automatic — 'if' (kan) leaves the connection open, not assumed.
16. The instruction is mutual — allēlois ('to one another') — not hierarchical. Confession is to fellow believers, not exclusively to clergy. The purpose is healing (iathēte), which may be physical, spiritual, or both. The final sentence is often quoted in isolation: deēsis dikaïou energoumenē poly ischyei. The participle energoumenē can be middle ('effective, at work') or passive ('energized by God'). Either way, the point is that righteous prayer is not passive wishing but a powerful force.
17. James emphasizes that Elijah was homoioopathēs hēmin ('of like nature/feelings with us') — not a superhuman figure but an ordinary person whose prayer had extraordinary power. The phrase proseuchē prosēuxato ('he prayed with prayer') is a Hebraism (cognate dative) meaning 'he prayed earnestly/fervently.' The three-and-a-half-year drought is drawn from 1 Kings 17-18, though the Old Testament does not specify the exact duration. Luke 4:25 gives the same timeframe.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on 1 Kings 17-18. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. The simplicity is the point: Elijah prayed, and heaven responded. The sequence — rain from heaven, fruit from earth — echoes the farmer analogy of verse 7 and completes the chapter's agricultural imagery. Prayer is the means by which heaven's resources reach earth's needs.
19. The letter closes without a formal farewell, turning instead to the urgent matter of reclaiming the straying. The verb planēthē ('wanders, goes astray, is deceived') is the root of the English 'planet' (wandering star). The 'truth' (alētheias) here encompasses both correct doctrine and faithful living — James makes no separation between the two.
20. The letter's final sentence is not about personal salvation but about the rescue of others. The one who turns a sinner back sōsei psychēn autou ek thanatou ('will save his soul from death') — the 'his' most naturally refers to the sinner being rescued, though some take it as the rescuer's own soul. The phrase kalypsei plēthos hamartiōn ('will cover a multitude of sins') echoes Proverbs 10:12 and 1 Peter 4:8. To 'cover' sins is to secure their forgiveness. The letter ends as it began — with practical, community-oriented faith that acts.

Summary: First Peter opens with a greeting from Peter to scattered believers across Asia Minor (modern Turkey), identifying them as chosen exiles. Peter blesses God for a living hope through Christ's resurrection, describes an inheritance kept in heaven, and encourages believers enduring trials that their tested faith is more precious than gold. He speaks of prophets who searched out the salvation now revealed, urges holiness in conduct, and reminds them they were ransomed not with perishable things but with the precious blood of Christ — the lamb foreknown before the foundation of the world.

What Makes This Remarkable: Peter's opening is dense with Old Testament imagery recast around Christ. The 'sprinkling of blood' (v. 2) echoes the covenant ratification at Sinai (Exodus 24:8). The 'imperishable seed' (v. 23) and the Isaiah 40 quotation (vv. 24-25) ground the new birth in the enduring word of God. The letter addresses Gentile converts using Israel's identity language — exile, diaspora, election — a radical theological move that extends covenant identity to non-Jews.

Translation Friction: *The addressees are described with the Greek parepidēmois diasporac ('exiles of the dispersion'), language traditionally reserved for Jews living outside Palestine. Peter applies this to predominantly Gentile churches, redefining 'exile' as a spiritual rather than ethnic category. The Trinitarian structure of verse 2 (foreknowledge of the Father, sanctification of the Spirit, sprinkling of Christ's blood) is theologically loaded but rendered as the Greek presents it without imposing later creedal formulations.*

Connections: The 'living hope through resurrection' (v. 3) connects to the early kerygma of Acts 2. The lamb 'without defect or blemish' (v. 19) echoes Exodus 12 (Passover lamb) and Isaiah 53:7. The quotation from Isaiah 40:6-8 in verses 24-25 ties the permanence of God's word to the gospel proclaimed to these believers. The 'foreknown before the foundation of the world' language (v. 20) resonates with Ephesians 1:4 and Revelation 13:8.

¹Peter, an apostle of Jesus Christ, to the chosen exiles of the dispersion in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, ^{2c}hosen according to God the Father's foreknowledge, set apart by the Spirit for obedience and for the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ. May grace and peace be multiplied to you. ³Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ! According to his great mercy, he has given us new birth into a living hope through the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, ⁴an inheritance that can never perish, spoil, or fade — kept safe in heaven for you. ⁵Who are kept by the authority of God by way of faith to salvation ready to be revealed in the last time. ⁶In this you rejoice greatly, even though now for a little while, if necessary, you have been grieved by various trials, ⁷That the trial of your faith, being greatly more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be discovered to praise and honour and splendor at the appearing of Jesus Christ: ⁸Though you have not seen him, you love him; and though you do not see him now, you believe in him and rejoice with an inexpressible and glorious joy, ⁹for you are receiving the goal of your faith: the salvation of your souls. ¹⁰Concerning this salvation, the prophets who prophesied about the grace destined for you searched and investigated carefully, ¹¹They searched to find out the time and circumstances that the Spirit of Christ within them was pointing to when it predicted the sufferings of Christ and the glories that would follow. ¹²It was revealed to them that they were serving not themselves but you, in the things that have now been announced to you through those who proclaimed the good news to you by the Holy Spirit sent from heaven — things into which angels long to look. ¹³Therefore, prepare your minds for action, be self-controlled, and set your hope fully on the grace that will be brought to you at the revelation of Jesus Christ. ¹⁴As obedient children, do not be conformed to the desires you formerly had in your ignorance, ¹⁵However, as he which has called you is holy, so be you holy in all manner of conversation; ¹⁶Indeed, because it is written, Be you holy. For I am holy. ¹⁷And if you call on him as Father — the one who judges impartially according to each person's work — conduct yourselves with reverent fear during the time of your exile, ¹⁸Since as you know that you were not redeemed with corruptible matters, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers. ¹⁹However, with the costly blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot. ²⁰He was foreknown before the foundation of the world but was revealed in these last times for your sake, ²¹Who by him do trust in God, that raised him up from the dead, and offered him glory. That your faith and hope might be in God. ²²Having purified your souls by your obedience to the truth for sincere brotherly love, love one another earnestly from a pure heart, ²³Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the message of God, which liveth and remains for ever. ²⁴For "all flesh is like grass, and all its glory like the flower of grass. The grass withers, and the flower falls off, ²⁵But the message of the Lord endureth for ever. And this is the message which by the gospel is preached to you.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The Greek eklektois parepidēmois diasporac combines three theologically charged terms: 'chosen' (eklektois), 'exiles/sojourners' (parepidēmois), and 'dispersion' (diasporas). The KJV's 'strangers scattered' flattens the covenantal weight. 'Dispersion' (diaspora) was a technical term for Jews living outside the land of Israel; Peter applies it to Gentile Christians, redefining covenant belonging.
1. The five provinces listed cover most of Roman Asia Minor (modern Turkey), suggesting a circular letter carried through these regions in order.
2. The verse has a Trinitarian structure: the Father's foreknowledge, the Spirit's sanctification, and Christ's blood. This is not a later theological imposition — the Greek naturally groups the three divine agents.
2. The Greek rhantismōn ('sprinkling') directly echoes the Septuagint of Exodus 24:8, where Moses sprinkled blood on the people at Sinai to ratify the covenant. Peter's audience would recognize this as covenant-ratification language.
2. The optative plēthyntheî ('may it be multiplied') is a prayer-wish, not a statement — grace and peace are not merely declared but invoked.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 24:8. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. The Greek anagennēsas ('having begotten again, having given new birth') is a distinctively Petrine word — it appears only here and in verse 23 in the entire New Testament. The KJV's 'begotten us again' is literal but unclear in modern English; 'given us new birth' captures the regeneration concept.
3. The phrase elpida zōsan ('living hope') is striking — hope itself is described as alive, animated by the resurrection. This is not wishful thinking but a hope that has the quality of life because it is grounded in a resurrection that actually happened.
4. Peter uses three alpha-privative adjectives in succession — aphtharton ('imperishable'), amianton ('undefiled'), amaranton ('unfading') — creating a rhetorical triplet that emphasizes what this inheritance is not: it will not decay, it will not be polluted, it will not wither. The alliteration in Greek (all three begin with alpha-privative) is partly preserved by using 'im-/un-/un-' prefixes in English.
4. The concept of 'inheritance' (klēronomia) for these predominantly Gentile believers draws on Israel's land-inheritance language — what Israel had in the promised land, these believers have in heaven.
5. The Greek phrouroumenous ('being guarded') is a military term — a garrison protecting a city. God's power stands guard over believers like a military garrison. The present participle indicates ongoing, continuous protection.

5. The phrase en kairō eschatō ('in the last time') reflects early Christian expectation of an imminent consummation. The salvation is described as 'ready' (hetoimēn) — prepared and waiting to be unveiled.
6. The Greek poikilois peirasmōis ('various trials') uses poikilos ('many-colored, diverse, varied') — the trials come in many forms. The word peirasmōs can mean both 'trial' and 'temptation'; here the context of suffering favors 'trials.' The KJV's 'temptations' may mislead modern readers into thinking of moral temptation rather than external persecution and hardship.
7. The Greek dokimion ('tested quality, proven character') refers not to the trial itself but to the result of testing — the proven genuineness that emerges. Gold is tested by fire to prove its purity; faith is tested by suffering to prove its genuineness. The irony is that gold, which survives fire, still perishes — but proven faith endures forever.
7. The triad 'praise and glory and honor' (epainon kai doxan kai timēn) may refer to praise directed toward the believers at Christ's return, or to the glory that accrues to God through their faithfulness. The Greek is ambiguous and we preserve that ambiguity.
8. The Greek aneklalētō ('inexpressible, unspeakable') appears only here in the New Testament. It describes a joy that exceeds the capacity of language. The participle dedoxasmenē ('glorified, full of glory') suggests this joy already participates in the coming glory — it is not merely earthly happiness but a foretaste of eschatological glory.
8. Peter draws a contrast between sight and faith that resonates with John 20:29 ('blessed are those who have not seen and yet believe'). These believers never met Jesus in the flesh, yet their love and joy are real.
9. The Greek telos here means 'outcome, result, goal' rather than 'end/termination.' The KJV's 'end' is ambiguous in modern English. The 'salvation of souls' (sōtērian psychōn) uses psychē in its full biblical sense — not the disembodied 'soul' of Greek philosophy but the whole person, the living self. Peter is speaking of the complete deliverance of the whole person.
10. The compound verbs exezētēsan ('searched out') and exēraunēsan ('investigated thoroughly') convey intense, diligent inquiry — the prophets were not casual observers but passionate seekers trying to understand their own oracles. The prefix ex- intensifies both verbs.
11. The phrase to pneuma Christou ('the Spirit of Christ') identifies the spirit that inspired the Old Testament prophets as Christ's own Spirit — a remarkable christological claim. The prophets spoke of 'sufferings' (pathēmata, plural) and 'glories' (doxas, plural) — not a single event but a pattern of suffering followed by glorification.
11. The Greek promarturomenon ('testifying beforehand') is a compound found only here in the New Testament, emphasizing that the prophetic witness pointed forward to events the prophets themselves could not fully comprehend.
12. The final clause — eis ha epithymousin angeloι parakypsaί ('into which angels long to look') — is vivid. The verb parakypsaί means 'to bend over and peer into,' suggesting angels straining to see and understand the mystery of salvation. If even angels are fascinated by what God has done for believers, how much more should the recipients value it.
12. The prophets' ministry is reframed as service to a future generation — they spoke not for their own benefit but for these Gentile believers in Asia Minor, centuries later.
13. The Greek anazōsamenoι tas osphyas tēs dianoias hymōn is literally 'having girded up the loins of your mind' — a metaphor drawn from tucking robes into a belt for vigorous activity. The KJV preserves the metaphor literally; we render the meaning ('prepare your minds for action') since 'girding loins' is not a living metaphor in modern English.
13. The adverb teleiōs ('fully, completely, to the end') modifies the imperative 'hope' — this is not tentative hope but wholehearted, unreserved expectation.
14. The Greek tekna hypakoēs ('children of obedience') is a Semitic idiom meaning 'people characterized by obedience' — not biological children but those whose defining trait is obedience. The verb sychēmatizomenoι ('being conformed, being shaped') implies an external molding pressure; Paul uses the same word in Romans 12:2.
15. The Greek anastrophē means 'conduct, way of life, behavior' — not 'conversation' in the modern sense (the KJV's 'conversation' meant 'manner of living' in 17th-century English). The command to holiness is grounded in God's own character: 'as he is holy, you must be holy' — a direct echo of Leviticus 11:44-45 that Peter will quote in the next verse.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Leviticus 11:44-45 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. Peter quotes Leviticus 11:44-45 (also 19:2 and 20:7). The command was originally given to Israel at Sinai as part of the covenant obligations; Peter applies it directly to Gentile believers, further confirming their inclusion in the covenant people. The Greek hagios ('holy, set apart') corresponds to the Hebrew qadosh.

- 17. The Greek aprosōpolēmtōs ('without respect of persons, impartially') is a compound word found only here in the New Testament. It means God shows no favoritism based on external status — a theme running through the New Testament (Acts 10:34, Romans 2:11, James 2:1).
- 17. The word paroikias ('sojourning, exile, temporary residence') reinforces the 'exile' language of verse 1. Believers are temporary residents in this world, and their conduct during this time of exile matters because the Father judges impartially.
- 18. The Greek elytrōthēte ('you were ransomed, redeemed') uses the language of slave-redemption and the Old Testament go'el (kinsman-redeemer). The price of ransom is stated negatively first — not silver or gold — before the positive is revealed in verse 19.
- 18. The phrase mataias anastophēs patroparadotou ('futile way of life inherited from ancestors') likely refers to the Gentile pagan practices these converts left behind. The word patroparadotou ('handed down from fathers') appears only here in the New Testament.
- 19. The sacrificial imagery draws on both the Passover lamb (Exodus 12:5, which required a lamb 'without blemish') and the Suffering Servant of Isaiah 53:7 ('like a lamb led to slaughter'). The adjectives amōmou ('without defect') and aspilou ('without spot') echo the Levitical requirements for sacrificial animals — the offering had to be physically perfect.
- 19. Peter places 'precious blood' (timiō haimati) in emphatic contrast with the 'perishable things' of verse 18. The ransom price is not material wealth but something infinitely more valuable.
- 19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 12:5. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
- 19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 53:7. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
- 20. The Greek proegnōsmenou ('foreknown') is stronger than mere awareness — it implies divine foreordination and purposeful choice. The contrast between 'before the foundation of the world' (pro katabolēs kosmou) and 'in these last times' (ep' eschatou tōn chronōn) spans the entire arc of history: Christ's redemptive work was planned before creation and executed at the end of the ages.
- 20. The phrase di' hymas ('for your sake, on account of you') is remarkable — the cosmic plan was revealed specifically for these particular believers in Asia Minor.
- 21. The verse ties faith and hope together as directed toward God — not as abstract virtues but as relational trust in the God who demonstrated his power and faithfulness by raising Christ and glorifying him. The resurrection is the ground of both faith and hope.
- 22. The Greek philadelphian anypokriton ('sincere brotherly love') combines the family metaphor (philadelphia, 'love of brothers/siblings') with the negation of hypocrisy (anypokriton, 'without a mask' — from the theatrical term for an actor's mask). The love commanded here must be genuine, not performed.
- 22. The adverb ektenōs ('earnestly, fervently, intensely') describes a love that is stretched out, strained to its limit — not casual affection but deliberate, costly commitment to fellow believers.
- 23. The Greek anagegnēmēnoi repeats the regeneration language of verse 3 but shifts the metaphor from birth to seed (spora, 'seed'). The new birth is not from a seed that decays (like biological reproduction) but from an imperishable seed — the word of God. The adjectives 'living' (zōntos) and 'enduring' (menontos) may modify either 'word' or 'God'; the Greek is ambiguous. Most interpreters take them with 'word,' which prepares for the Isaiah quotation in the next verses.
- 24. Peter quotes Isaiah 40:6-8 from the Septuagint. The Hebrew original uses a different metaphor for transience — the 'breath of the LORD' that dries the grass — which the Septuagint omits. Peter follows the Septuagint text. The imagery contrasts human frailty and transience (flesh = grass) with the permanence of God's word (verse 25).
- 24. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 40:6-8. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
- 25. Peter's interpretive move is decisive: the 'word of the Lord' that Isaiah said endures forever is identified with the gospel message proclaimed to these believers. The eternal, imperishable word of God (Isaiah 40:8) is now equated with the Christian gospel. The Greek rhēma ('word, utterance, message') and the participle euangelisthen ('proclaimed as good news') make the connection explicit.
- 25. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 40:6-8 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.

Summary: Peter urges believers to crave spiritual nourishment like newborn infants, then develops the metaphor of a living temple built of living stones with Christ as the cornerstone. He applies a constellation of Old Testament identity texts to these Gentile believers — they are now a chosen race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, God's own possession. Peter then addresses their conduct as exiles among unbelievers, gives instructions for submission to governing authorities, and concludes with a profound portrait of Christ's suffering as the model for enduring unjust treatment, drawing heavily on Isaiah 53.

What Makes This Remarkable: Verse 9 is the theological climax: Peter takes exodus language from Exodus 19:5-6 and applies it to Gentile Christians — 'a royal priesthood, a holy nation.' This is not metaphorical softening; Peter is claiming that these scattered Gentile believers now hold the identity that was promised to Israel at Sinai. The Isaiah 53 passage (vv. 22-25) is the longest sustained quotation of the Suffering Servant in the New Testament epistles, applied directly to Christ's atoning death.

Translation Friction: The household code instructions (vv. 13-20), particularly regarding slaves submitting to masters, reflect first-century social structures. We render the Greek as written without editorial softening. The word oiketai (v. 18) refers specifically to household slaves, not servants in a modern employment sense. The stone imagery (vv. 4-8) weaves together Isaiah 28:16, Psalm 118:22, and Isaiah 8:14 — three distinct Old Testament texts unified by the 'stone' metaphor.

Connections: The 'living stone' imagery (vv. 4-5) connects to Jesus's own use of Psalm 118:22 (Matthew 21:42). The 'royal priesthood' language (v. 9) draws on Exodus 19:5-6 and is echoed in Revelation 1:6 and 5:10. The Isaiah 53 quotation (vv. 22-25) parallels the use of that passage in Acts 8:32-35 and Romans 4:25. The 'shepherd and overseer of your souls' (v. 25) anticipates the pastoral imagery of chapter 5.

¹So put away all malice, all deceit, hypocrisy, envy, and all slander. ²Like newborn infants, crave the pure spiritual milk, so that by it you may grow up into salvation, ³Indeed, if so be you have tasted that the Lord is gracious. ⁴As you come to him, a living stone rejected by people but chosen and honored by God, ⁵You also, like living stones, are being built into a spiritual house and a holy priesthood, offering spiritual sacrifices that are acceptable to God through Jesus Christ. ⁶For it stands in Scripture: "See, I am laying in Zion a stone, a cornerstone, chosen and honored, and whoever believes in him will never be put to shame." ⁷So the honor is for you who believe, but for those who do not believe, "the stone that the builders rejected has become the cornerstone," ⁸A rock of stumbling, and a rock of offence, not even to them which stumble at the message, while disobedient — whereunto as well they were appointed. ⁹But you are a chosen race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people for God's own possession, so that you may proclaim the excellencies of him who called you out of darkness into his marvelous light. ¹⁰Once you were not a people, but now you are God's people; once you had not received mercy, but now you have received mercy. ¹¹Dear friends, I urge you as foreigners and exiles to abstain from the desires of the flesh, which wage war against your soul. ¹²Maintain honorable conduct among the Gentiles, so that when they slander you as evildoers, they may observe your good works and glorify God on the day of visitation. ¹³Submit yourselves to every human institution for the Lord's sake, whether to the emperor as supreme, ¹⁴Indeed, or to governors, as to them that are dispatched by him for the punishment of evildoers, and for the praise of them that do well. ¹⁵For it is God's will that by doing good you should silence the ignorance of foolish people. ¹⁶Live as free people, but do not use your freedom as a cover for evil. Live as servants of God. ¹⁷Honor everyone. Love the brotherhood. Fear God. Honor the emperor. ¹⁸Household slaves, submit yourselves to your masters with all respect, not only to those who are good and gentle but also to those who are harsh. ¹⁹For this is a grace — if, because of your awareness of God, someone endures suffering unjustly. ²⁰For what credit is there if, when you sin and are beaten for it, you endure? But if you suffer for doing good and endure it, this is a grace before God. ²¹For to this you were called, because Christ also suffered for you, leaving you an example, so that you might follow in his steps. ²²"He committed no sin, and no deceit was found in his mouth." ²³When he was insulted, he did not insult in return; when he suffered, he made no threats, but entrusted himself to the one who judges justly. ²⁴He himself bore our sins in his body on the tree, so that having died to sins, we might live for righteousness. By his wounds you have been healed. ²⁵For you were like sheep going astray, but now you have returned to the Shepherd and Overseer of your souls.

1. The participle apothemenoi ('having put off, laid aside') uses the imagery of removing clothing — strip off these vices like a dirty garment. The list moves from internal disposition (malice) through deceptive behavior (deceit, hypocrisy) to interpersonal sins (envy, slander). The 'all...all...all' repetition (pasan...panta...pasas) emphasizes totality — no partial removal.
2. The Greek logikon adolon gala ('pure rational/spiritual milk') is debated. Logikon can mean 'rational' (pertaining to logos/reason) or 'spiritual' (pertaining to the word/logos). The KJV's 'milk of the word' is interpretive. Given the context of verse 1:25 (the word proclaimed to them), the connection to logos is likely intentional, but we render 'spiritual' as the broader term that captures the metaphor without over-specifying.
2. The verb epipothēsate ('crave, long for intensely') describes the desperate hunger of a newborn — not casual interest but survival-level need.
3. Peter quotes Psalm 34:8 (33:9 LXX), 'Taste and see that the LORD is good.' The Greek chrēstos ('good, kind, gracious') may contain a wordplay with Christos ('Christ') — in Greek pronunciation they would sound similar. The conditional 'if' (ei) is not expressing doubt but rather 'since you have tasted' — it assumes the experience is real.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalm 34:8 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The metaphor shifts from milk (v. 2) to stone (v. 4) — Christ is the 'living stone' (lithon zōnta), an apparent paradox since stones are the epitome of lifelessness. The double contrast — rejected by humans but chosen by God — sets up the extended stone theology of verses 6-8. The participial phrase proserchomenoi ('coming to, approaching') echoes the language of approaching God in worship at the temple.
5. The believers are not merely compared to stones — they are living stones being assembled into a spiritual temple. The Greek oikodomisthe can be read as indicative ('you are being built') or imperative ('let yourselves be built'). The passive voice suggests God is the builder. The 'holy priesthood' (hierateuma hagian) draws directly on Exodus 19:6 (LXX), anticipating the full quotation in verse 9.
5. The 'spiritual sacrifices' (pneumatikas thysias) replace the animal sacrifices of the Jerusalem temple — the entire sacrificial system is reimagined around this new community.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 19:6 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. Peter quotes Isaiah 28:16 from the Septuagint. The original context is God establishing a foundation in Zion amid national crisis. Peter identifies this cornerstone with Christ. The Greek akrogōniaion ('cornerstone') could refer to either a foundation stone at the corner of a building or a capstone at the top — the architectural metaphor works either way, placing Christ as the defining structural element.
6. The strong negation ou mē ('never, by no means') with the subjunctive kataischynthē guarantees that trust in this stone will not result in shame — a double negative for emphatic assurance.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 28:16. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. Peter now quotes Psalm 118:22 (117:22 LXX), the stone rejected by builders that becomes the head of the corner. Jesus himself applied this psalm to his own rejection (Matthew 21:42, Mark 12:10, Luke 20:17). The Greek apistousin can mean either 'disbelieve' or 'disobey' — in biblical thought, unbelief and disobedience are inseparable.
7. The phrase kephalēn gōnias ('head of the corner') means the most important stone in the structure — the one that determines the alignment of everything else.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalms 118:22. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The third stone text is Isaiah 8:14, where God himself becomes a stone of stumbling for both houses of Israel. Peter completes the stone trilogy: Isaiah 28:16 (cornerstone), Psalm 118:22 (rejected stone), Isaiah 8:14 (stumbling stone). The same Christ is cornerstone to believers and stumbling-block to unbelievers.
8. The phrase eis ho kai etethēsan ('to which they were also appointed/destined') is theologically charged. It states that their stumbling was within God's purpose, though it does not explain the mechanism of that appointment. We render it plainly and let the tension stand.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 8:14 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 28:16 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalm 118:22 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.

9. This verse weaves together Exodus 19:5-6 ('a kingdom of priests and a holy nation'), Isaiah 43:20-21 ('my chosen people...the people I formed for myself that they might proclaim my praise'), and possibly Hosea 1-2 (the not-my-people who become my-people, developed in verse 10). The Greek basileion hierateuma ('royal priesthood') follows the Septuagint of Exodus 19:6 exactly.
9. The Greek aretas ('excellencies, virtues, mighty deeds') is broader than 'praises' (KJV) — it refers to God's praiseworthy acts and character, which the priestly people are called to announce to the world.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 19:6. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 43:20-21. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Hosea 1-2. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. Peter echoes Hosea 2:23 and 1:6, 9 — the prophet's children named Lo-Ammi ('not my people') and Lo-Ruhamah ('not shown mercy') who were later renamed Ammi ('my people') and Ruhamah ('shown mercy'). Paul applies Hosea to Gentile inclusion in Romans 9:25-26. The 'once...now' structure emphasizes the radical transformation of status: those who had no covenant identity now possess the fullest covenant identity.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Hosea 2:23 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The Greek paroikous kai parepidēmous ('resident aliens and exiles') echoes the language of Genesis 23:4 (LXX), where Abraham describes himself as a 'sojourner and foreigner' in the land. Believers share Abraham's status — present in a place but not belonging to it.
11. The military metaphor strateuntai ('wage war, campaign against') portrays fleshly desires as an invading army besieging the soul. This is not abstract moral philosophy but vivid warfare imagery.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 23:4. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. The Greek en hēmera episkopēs ('on the day of visitation') echoes Isaiah 10:3 (LXX) and Luke 19:44. 'Visitation' (episkopē) can be either judgment or mercy — the day when God comes to inspect and act. Peter may mean that the pagans' observation of Christian conduct will lead them to glorify God when he comes — whether at their own conversion or at the final judgment.
12. The word kakopoion ('evildoers') suggests that Christians in Asia Minor were being accused of criminal behavior — a pattern attested in Roman sources (cf. Pliny's correspondence with Trajan about Christians in Bithynia, c. 112 AD).
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 10:3. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. The Greek pasē anthrōpinē ktisei is literally 'every human creation/institution' — not merely laws (as the KJV's 'ordinance' implies) but the structures and authorities that humans establish. The submission is motivated 'for the Lord's sake' (dia ton kyrion) — it is not intrinsic obedience to human power but obedience rendered to God through human structures.
13. The word basilei ('king') in context refers to the Roman emperor — likely Nero at the time of writing.
14. The 'him' who sends governors could refer to the emperor (the immediate antecedent) or to God (the ultimate authority behind the human institution). Peter's phrasing allows both readings. The dual function of government — punishing evil and commending good — parallels Paul's discussion in Romans 13:1-7.
15. The Greek phimoun ('to muzzle, to silence') is vivid — good conduct literally shuts the mouth of ignorant accusers. The same verb is used of muzzling an ox (1 Timothy 5:18) and of Jesus silencing the Sadducees (Matthew 22:34). The 'foolish people' (aphronōn anthrōpōn) are not malicious but ignorant — their slander stems from misunderstanding, which exemplary behavior can correct.
16. The paradox is sharp: believers are simultaneously free (eleutheroi) and slaves of God (theou douloi). True freedom is not autonomy but willing service to God. The Greek epikalymma ('covering, cloak, pretext') warns against using Christian freedom as a disguise for malice — freedom is not license.
17. Four terse imperatives in ascending relational intensity: general respect for all people, special love for fellow believers, reverent fear toward God, and appropriate honor toward the emperor. The structure is notable — God receives 'fear' (phobeisthe) while the emperor receives only 'honor' (timate). The distinction in verbs is deliberate: the emperor gets respect but not the reverence owed to God alone.
18. The Greek oiketai refers specifically to household slaves — domestic workers who were the property of their masters — not employees or servants in a modern sense. The word despotais ('masters') is the root of English 'despot' and refers to the absolute authority of the slaveholder. Peter does not endorse the institution but addresses the reality his audience lives in.
18. The Greek skoliois ('crooked, perverse, harsh') is the KJV's 'froward' — an archaic term. We render it 'harsh' to capture the unjust, abusive nature of such masters.
19. The Greek charis here means not 'thankworthy' (KJV) but 'grace, a thing of grace, commendable before God.' Enduring unjust suffering with an awareness of God is itself an act of grace — a participation in the grace of God. The phrase syneidēsin theou ('consciousness/awareness of God') means the sufferer endures not out of passivity but out of a God-directed conscience.

- 20. The Greek kolaphizomenoi ('being struck with a fist, beaten') is graphic — this is physical abuse, not metaphorical hardship. Peter distinguishes between deserved punishment (suffering for wrongdoing) and undeserved suffering (suffering for doing right). Only the latter is charis ('grace') before God.
- 20. The word kleos ('credit, fame, glory') appears only here in the New Testament. It asks what reputation or honor one gains by enduring punishment that was deserved.
- 21. The Greek hypogrammon ('example, pattern, model') originally referred to a writing template that students would trace — a master copy of letters that beginners followed stroke by stroke. Christ's suffering is the template for believers' response to unjust treatment. The phrase tois ichnesin autou ('in his footsteps') extends the tracing metaphor — believers walk in the exact tracks Christ laid down.
- 22. Peter begins quoting Isaiah 53:9 (LXX), applying the Suffering Servant passage directly to Christ. The quotation extends through verse 25, making this the longest sustained use of Isaiah 53 in the New Testament epistles. The sinlessness of Christ is the foundation of his exemplary suffering — he suffered entirely without cause.
- 22. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 53:9. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
- 23. The Greek antiloidorei ('reviled in return') has the prefix anti- ('against, in return'), emphasizing the refusal to retaliate in kind. The pattern is: provocation no retaliation entrusting to God. This is the specific example believers are to follow (v. 21). The phrase tō krinonti dikaiōs ('the one who judges justly') is God — Christ committed his case to the divine court rather than taking justice into his own hands.
- 24. The Greek xylon ('tree, wood') rather than stauros ('cross') echoes Deuteronomy 21:23 ('cursed is anyone who hangs on a tree') and connects to Acts 5:30 and 10:39 where the same word is used for the cross. The word carries the overtone of the Deuteronomic curse.
- 24. The final clause quotes Isaiah 53:5 — 'by his wounds (mōlōpi, singular in Greek — one stripe, one wound) you were healed.' The shift from 'our sins' to 'you were healed' moves from the universal scope of Christ's atonement to the personal application to these specific believers.
- 24. The verb anēnenken ('bore, carried up') is sacrificial language — the same word used for offering a sacrifice on an altar. Christ carried sins up onto the cross as a priest carries an offering up onto the altar.
- 24. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 53:4-5. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
- 24. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 21:23. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
- 25. Peter concludes with Isaiah 53:6 ('all we like sheep have gone astray') but adds the positive resolution: the straying sheep have now returned to their shepherd. The dual title 'Shepherd and Overseer' (poimena kai episkopon) applies to Christ terms that Peter will later use for church leaders (5:2-4). The word episkopon ('overseer, guardian, bishop') carries the sense of watchful care — Christ keeps watch over their souls as a shepherd watches a flock.
- 25. The KJV's 'Bishop' reflects later ecclesiastical usage. We render episkopon as 'Overseer' to preserve the original pastoral meaning without importing institutional connotations.
- 25. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 53:6 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.

Summary: Peter continues the household code with instructions for wives and husbands, then turns to the entire community with exhortations toward unity, compassion, and blessing. The famous 'reason for hope' passage (v. 15) calls believers to be always ready to give a defense of their hope with gentleness and respect. The chapter concludes with one of the most debated passages in the New Testament — Christ's proclamation to the 'spirits in prison' from the days of Noah — connecting baptism to salvation through Christ's resurrection and exaltation.

What Makes This Remarkable: Verse 15 ('always be prepared to give a reason for the hope that is in you') has become the foundational text for Christian apologetics. The 'spirits in prison' passage (vv. 18-20) is among the most disputed texts in the New Testament, with at least four major interpretive traditions. Peter's reference to Noah and the flood as a 'type' of baptism (vv. 20-21) is one of the clearest examples of typological interpretation in the epistles.

Translation Friction: The instructions to wives (vv. 1-6) reflect first-century household structures and include Sarah's obedience to Abraham as a model. We render the Greek faithfully without modernizing the social context. The 'spirits in prison' passage (vv. 18-20) is genuinely ambiguous in Greek and we preserve that ambiguity. The baptism typology (v. 21) is carefully worded in the Greek to avoid implying that water itself saves — Peter adds the clarifying parenthesis about conscience.

Connections: The Sarah reference (v. 6) connects to Genesis 18:12. The 'reason for hope' echoes the 'living hope' of 1:3. The Noah typology connects to Genesis 6-8 and Jesus's use of the flood narrative (Matthew 24:37-39). Christ's exaltation at God's right hand (v. 22) echoes Psalm 110:1 and the early Christian confession of Acts 2:33-34.

¹Likewise, wives, submit yourselves to your own husbands, so that even if some of them do not obey the word, they may be won over without a word through the conduct of their wives, ²While they take notice your chaste conversation coupled with fear. ³Your adornment should not be external — the braiding of hair, the wearing of gold jewelry, or the putting on of fine clothing. ⁴Rather, let your adornment be the hidden person of the heart, with the imperishable quality of a gentle and quiet spirit, which in God's sight is very precious. ⁵For this is how the holy women who hoped in God used to adorn themselves, by submitting to their own husbands, ⁶just as Sarah obeyed Abraham and called him her lord. You are her daughters when you do what is right and refuse to give way to fear. ⁷Husbands, likewise, live with your wives in an understanding way, showing honor to the woman as the weaker vessel, since they are also heirs with you of the grace of life, so that your prayers may not be hindered. ⁸Finally, all of you be like-minded, sympathetic, loving as brothers and sisters, compassionate, and humble, ⁹Not rendering wickedness for wickedness, or railing for railing — but contrariwise blessing. Knowing that you are thereunto called, that you should inherit a blessing. ¹⁰For "whoever desires to love life and see good days must keep the tongue from evil and the lips from speaking deceit. ¹¹Turn away from evil and do good; seek peace and pursue it. ¹²And his ears are open to their prayers — but the face of the lord is against them that do evil, and because the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous. ¹³Now who will harm you if you are devoted to what is good? ¹⁴But even if you should suffer for the sake of righteousness, you are blessed. Do not fear what they fear, and do not be disturbed, ¹⁵However, sanctify the Lord God in your hearts — and be ready at all times to provide an answer to every person that asketh you a reason of the confident expectation that is in you with meekness and fear. ¹⁶Having a upright conscience. That, whereas they speak wickedness of you, as of evildoers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your upright conversation in Christ. ¹⁷For it is better to suffer for doing good, if that should be God's will, than for doing evil. ¹⁸For Christ also suffered once for sins, the righteous for the unrighteous, that he might bring you to God, being put to death in the flesh but made alive in the spirit, ¹⁹By which also he traveled and preached to the spirits in prison; ²⁰Which sometime were rebellious, when once the patience of God waited in the days of Noah, during the building of the ark, in which only a few, that is, eight people, were brought safely through the water. ²¹Baptism, which corresponds to this, now saves you — not as a removal of dirt from the body, but as an appeal to God for a good conscience — through the resurrection of Jesus Christ, ²²Indeed, who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God. Angels and authorities and powers being made under the control of him.

1. The Greek homoiōs ('likewise') connects this instruction to the submission pattern begun in 2:13 (to government) and 2:18 (slaves to masters). The scenario Peter envisions is a believing wife married to an unbelieving husband — a common situation in the early church where women often converted independently.
2. The Greek epoptesantes ('having observed, having witnessed') is the same word used in 2:12 for pagans observing Christian behavior. The combination of hagnēn ('pure, chaste') and en phobō ('in reverence, with respect') describes conduct that is both morally clean and directed toward God — not fearful subservience to the husband but reverence toward God that shapes all behavior.
3. The Greek kosmos ('adornment, decoration, order') — from which English 'cosmetic' derives — sets up a contrast between external display and internal character. Peter does not absolutely prohibit these things (the grammar is 'not the external... but the internal' — a comparative negation, emphasizing priority rather than absolute prohibition). The specific items mentioned (elaborate hairstyles, gold, fine clothing) were associated with wealth and social status in the Roman world.
4. The phrase ho kryptos tēs kardias anthrōpos ('the hidden person of the heart') is a remarkable expression — the true self, invisible to others but visible to God. The 'imperishable' (aphthartō) quality of this inner adornment contrasts with the perishable nature of external decoration, echoing the 'imperishable inheritance' of 1:4.
4. The Greek prautēs kai hēsychiou pneumatōs ('of a gentle and quiet spirit') does not describe weakness or passivity. Prautēs ('gentleness') in Greek denotes controlled strength — a horse under bridle, power that is restrained. Hēsychios ('quiet, tranquil') refers to an inner calm, not silence.

5. Peter appeals to the matriarchs as models — 'the holy women' (hai hagai gynaikes) refers to Old Testament women of faith. The verb ekosmoun ('adorned themselves') uses the same kosmos root from verse 3, completing the contrast: their true adornment was not external but relational and spiritual.
6. The reference is to Genesis 18:12 (LXX), where Sarah refers to Abraham as 'my lord' (kyrios) in the context of the promise of Isaac. Peter's point is that these Gentile women have become 'daughters of Sarah' — they are now part of the covenant lineage through faith and conduct, not ethnicity.
6. The final phrase mē phoboumenai mēdemian ptoēsīn ('not fearing any intimidation') suggests that some of these women faced real social pressure or threat for their faith — yet they are to stand firm without being intimidated.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 18:12. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The Greek kata gnōsin ('according to knowledge, in an understanding way') calls husbands to informed, attentive care — not ignorant or careless treatment. The phrase astheneserō skeuei tō gynaikeiō ('the weaker vessel, the feminine one') uses 'weaker' (asthenestera) in a comparative sense — not 'weak' absolutely but 'weaker' relatively. The word skeuos ('vessel') refers to the body or the whole person (cf. 1 Thessalonians 4:4).
7. The remarkable motivation is the final clause: mistreatment of one's wife hinders one's prayers. The marriage relationship has direct spiritual consequences — dishonor toward one's spouse creates a barrier between the husband and God. The phrase synklēronomōis charitos zōēs ('co-heirs of the grace of life') establishes full spiritual equality between husband and wife.
8. Five adjectives describe the communal character Peter envisions: homophrones ('like-minded, united in purpose'), sympatheis ('sympathetic, sharing in feelings'), philadelphoi ('loving as siblings'), eusplanchnoi ('compassionate, tender-hearted' — literally 'good-gutted,' from the Greek understanding that emotions resided in the intestines), and tapeinophrones ('humble-minded'). The KJV's 'courteous' for tapeinophrones is too weak — this is genuine humility, not mere politeness.
9. The non-retaliation ethic echoes both Jesus's teaching (Matthew 5:38-48) and Paul's instruction (Romans 12:17). The paradox: believers are called to bless even those who insult them, and in doing so they themselves inherit blessing. The word eulogountes ('blessing') is the opposite of loidoria ('insult, verbal abuse') — where others curse, believers bless.
10. Peter quotes Psalm 34:12-16 (33:13-17 LXX), a wisdom psalm that connects ethical conduct with divine blessing. The quotation extends through verse 12. The opening question in the psalm ('Who is the one who desires life?') becomes a conditional statement: if you want to experience the good life, here is the path.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalms 34:12-16 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The imperatives move from negative (turn away from evil) to positive (do good), from passive avoidance to active pursuit. The verb diōxatō ('pursue, chase') is a hunting metaphor — peace must be actively tracked down, not merely hoped for. The same verb (diōkō) is used elsewhere for pursuing or persecuting someone — here it is channeled toward peace.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalms 34:12-16. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. The psalm quotation concludes with a two-part assurance: God watches over the righteous and listens to their prayers, but his face is set against evildoers. The anthropomorphic language (eyes, ears, face) expresses God's attentive care and active opposition using body-part imagery common in Hebrew poetry.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalms 34:12-16. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. The Greek zēlōtai ('zealots, enthusiasts, devotees') is stronger than the KJV's 'followers' — it implies passionate, consuming dedication to goodness. The rhetorical question implies that those who pursue good are generally protected, though Peter immediately acknowledges the exception in verse 14.
14. The optative paschoite ('you should suffer') expresses a hypothetical but real possibility — not a certainty but not unlikely. The beatitude echoes Jesus's words in Matthew 5:10 ('blessed are those who are persecuted for righteousness' sake').
14. Peter quotes Isaiah 8:12-13 (LXX). The phrase ton phobon autōn mē phobēthēte can be read either as 'do not fear their terror' (what they threaten) or 'do not fear what they fear' (the things that terrify them). The Isaiah context supports the latter reading — God tells Isaiah not to share the people's panic.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 8:12. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The Greek hagiasate ('sanctify, set apart as holy') applied to Christ means to give him the place of ultimate honor in one's inner life — to treat Christ as the holy Lord of one's heart. The phrase echoes Isaiah 8:13 ('the LORD of hosts, him you shall sanctify'), but Peter substitutes 'Christ' for 'the LORD of hosts,' a significant christological move.
15. The word apologian ('defense, reasoned account') is the origin of English 'apologetics.' It was a legal term for a defendant's speech in court. Peter envisions believers explaining their faith in a rational, articulate manner — not aggressive argument but calm, reasoned testimony. The 'hope that is in you' (tēs en hymin elpidos) connects back to the 'living hope' of 1:3.

15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 8:13 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. The manner of the defense is as important as its content: meta prautētos kai phobou ('with gentleness and reverence'). Aggressive, combative apologetics would undermine the very message being defended. The 'clear conscience' (syneidēsīn agathēn) ensures that the verbal defense matches the lived reality — there is no gap between what believers say and how they live.
17. The optative theloi ('should will') expresses that suffering is within God's sovereign plan but not his arbitrary whim. The comparison is not between suffering and comfort but between two kinds of suffering — for good conduct versus for bad. Peter assumes suffering is inevitable; the question is what kind.
18. The Greek hapax ('once, once for all') emphasizes the unrepeatable sufficiency of Christ's suffering — unlike the repeated sacrifices of the old covenant, this one was definitive. The phrase dikaios hyper adikōn ('righteous on behalf of unrighteous') is a compressed statement of substitutionary atonement.
18. The purpose clause hina hymas prosagagē tō theō ('that he might bring you to God') uses prosagō, a technical term for introducing someone into the presence of a king. Christ's death provides access to God's presence.
18. The contrast thanatōtheis sarki / zōopoiētheis pneumatī ('put to death in flesh / made alive in spirit') is debated. 'Spirit' may refer to the Holy Spirit, Christ's own spirit, or the sphere of spiritual existence. We render the datives as instrumental/spherical ('in the flesh...in the spirit') to preserve the ambiguity.
19. This is one of the most debated verses in the New Testament. The key questions: (1) When did Christ go? After his death, after his resurrection, or through Noah before the flood? (2) Who are the 'spirits in prison'? Fallen angels (cf. 2 Peter 2:4, Jude 6), deceased humans, or the generation of Noah? (3) What did he proclaim? The gospel, or a declaration of victory? The Greek ekēryxen ('proclaimed, heralded') does not specify the content — it could be a proclamation of triumph over evil powers rather than an evangelistic message.
19. We render the text as the Greek presents it without resolving the ambiguity. The phrase en hō ('in which') most naturally refers back to 'spirit' (pneumatī) from verse 18.
20. The 'spirits' are identified as those who disobeyed during the construction of Noah's ark. God's patience (makrothymia, 'long-suffering') extended through the construction period, giving opportunity for repentance. Only eight people (Noah, his wife, their three sons, and their wives) were saved.
20. The phrase diesōthēsan di' hydatos ('were saved through water') is ambiguous — were they saved 'by means of' water or 'through' water (i.e., passing safely through it)? The preposition dia with genitive can mean either. Peter will connect this to baptism in verse 21.
21. The Greek antitypon ('corresponding to, antitype') establishes a typological relationship: the flood waters that destroyed the old world and delivered Noah are a 'type' of baptism that delivers believers. Peter immediately qualifies: baptism saves not by its physical washing (ouch sarkos apothēsis rhy pou, 'not the removal of bodily dirt') but as an appeal or pledge of a good conscience toward God (syneidēseōs agathēs eperōtēma eis theon).
21. The word eperōtēma is debated — it can mean 'appeal, request, inquiry' or 'pledge, commitment.' Either reading works: baptism is either an appeal to God for a clear conscience or a pledge of a clear conscience before God. The saving power comes 'through the resurrection of Jesus Christ' — not through the water itself.
22. The verse is a compressed christological confession: ascension ('gone into heaven'), session ('at the right hand of God,' echoing Psalm 110:1), and cosmic lordship ('angels, authorities, and powers subjected'). The triad angelōn kai exousiōn kai dunameōn encompasses all categories of spiritual beings — whether good or evil, all are under Christ's authority.
22. The genitive absolute hypotagentōn ('having been subjected') uses the same root (hypotassō, 'to submit, to subject') that structured the household code of 2:13-3:7 — the pattern of submission that governs human relationships finds its ultimate ground in the submission of all cosmic powers to Christ.
22. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalm 110:1. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.

Summary: Peter exhorts believers to arm themselves with the same mindset as Christ who suffered in the flesh, to live for God's will rather than human desires, and to recognize that the pagan lifestyle they have left behind now provokes hostility from former associates. He emphasizes that judgment begins with the household of God, encourages the faithful use of spiritual gifts for mutual service, and calls believers to rejoice in sharing Christ's sufferings so that they may also rejoice at his revelation.

What Makes This Remarkable: *The phrase 'judgment begins with the household of God' (v. 17) has shaped Christian self-understanding for centuries — accountability starts with God's own people, not with outsiders. The passage on suffering 'as a Christian' (v. 16) contains one of only three uses of the word Christianos in the New Testament (also Acts 11:26 and 26:28), suggesting it was originally an outsider's label that believers were learning to wear without shame.*

Translation Friction: The statement 'the gospel was proclaimed even to the dead' (v. 6) is nearly as debated as 3:19. We render the Greek as written. The eschatological urgency ('the end of all things is near,' v. 7) reflects the early church's expectation of an imminent return. The vice list in verse 3 is blunt and specific — we do not soften it.

Connections: The 'arm yourselves with the same mindset' (v. 1) echoes Philippians 2:5. The gift language (vv. 10-11) parallels Romans 12:6-8 and 1 Corinthians 12. The 'fiery trial' (v. 12) resonates with the tested-by-fire imagery of 1:7. The 'judgment begins with us' principle echoes Ezekiel 9:6 and Malachi 3:1-5.

¹Since Christ suffered in the flesh, arm yourselves also with the same resolve, because whoever has suffered in the flesh has ceased from sin, ²That he no longer should dwell the remainder of his moment in the physical nature to the lusts of men, but to the will of God. ³For the time already past is sufficient for doing what the Gentiles desire — living in sensuality, passions, drunkenness, orgies, drinking parties, and lawless idolatry. ⁴They are surprised that you no longer plunge with them into the same flood of dissipation, and they malign you. ⁵They will give account to the one who is ready to judge the living and the dead. ⁶For this is why the gospel was proclaimed even to the dead, so that though they were judged in the flesh as people are, they might live in the spirit as God does. ⁷The end of all things is near. Therefore be clear-minded and self-controlled for the sake of your prayers. ⁸Above all, maintain an earnest love for one another, because love covers a multitude of sins. ⁹Be hospitable to one another without grumbling. ¹⁰As each one has received a gift, use it to serve one another as good stewards of God's varied grace. ¹¹If anyone speaks, let it be as one speaking the very words of God. If anyone serves, let it be with the strength that God supplies, so that in everything God may be glorified through Jesus Christ. To him belong the glory and the power forever and ever. Amen. ¹²Dear friends, do not be surprised at the fiery trial that has come upon you to test you, as though something strange were happening to you. ¹³But rejoice insofar as you share in the sufferings of Christ, so that when his glory is revealed you may also rejoice with great joy. ¹⁴If you are insulted for the name of Christ, you are blessed, because the Spirit of glory and of God rests upon you. ¹⁵But let none of you suffer as a murderer, a thief, an evildoer, or as a meddler in others' affairs. ¹⁶But if anyone suffers as a Christian, let that person not be ashamed but glorify God by bearing that name. ¹⁷For it is time for judgment to begin with the household of God. And if it begins with us, what will be the outcome for those who do not obey the gospel of God? ¹⁸And "if the righteous person is scarcely saved, where will the ungodly and the sinner appear?" ¹⁹Therefore, let those who suffer according to God's will entrust their souls to a faithful Creator while doing good.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The Greek hoplisasthe ('arm yourselves') is a military metaphor — take up the mindset of Christ as a weapon. The word ennoian ('resolve, mindset, intention') refers to an inner disposition, not just intellectual agreement. Believers are to adopt Christ's willingness to suffer as their own combat readiness.
1. The clause ho pathōn sarki pepautai hamartias ('whoever has suffered in the flesh has ceased from sin') is theologically dense. It likely means that the person who has embraced suffering for Christ's sake has broken decisively with the sinful life — suffering marks the turning point away from sin's dominion.

2. The contrast is stark: anthrōpōn epithymiais ('human desires') versus thelēmati theou ('God's will'). The 'remaining time in the flesh' (ton epiloipon en sarki chronon) treats earthly life as a finite, limited period with a definite end — every day that remains should be oriented toward God's purposes rather than human passions.
3. The vice list is specific to the Greco-Roman social world: aselgeiais ('sensuality, debauchery'), epithymiais ('passions, lusts'), oinophylgiais ('drunkenness' — literally 'wine-bubbling'), kōmois ('orgies, revelries' — nocturnal processions associated with Dionysus worship), potois ('drinking bouts'), and athemitois eidōlatriais ('lawless idolatries'). These were not fringe activities but normal features of pagan social life in Asia Minor.
3. The word athemitois ('lawless, forbidden') applied to idolatry reflects a Jewish perspective — idol worship violated divine law even though it was legal in the Roman system.
4. The Greek xenizontai ('they are surprised, they find it strange') captures the social shock when someone withdraws from the expected communal activities. The vivid metaphor anachysin ('flood, outpouring, overflow') pictures dissipation as a raging torrent — former companions are being swept along in this flood and are bewildered that believers have climbed out. The word asōtias ('dissipation, debauchery') is literally 'unsavingness' — a life that wastes and destroys.
5. The phrase hetoimōs echonti krinai zōntas kai nekrous ('the one ready to judge the living and the dead') echoes an early creedal formula (cf. Acts 10:42, 2 Timothy 4:1). The judgment is comprehensive — it covers those alive at Christ's return and those already dead. The slanderers of verse 4 will face this judge.
6. This verse is among the most difficult in the New Testament. 'The dead' (nekrois) may refer to: (1) people who heard the gospel while alive and have since died, (2) the spiritually dead, or (3) the literally dead to whom Christ preached (connecting to 3:19). The most natural reading is that the gospel was proclaimed to people who are now dead — they heard it during their lifetime, were condemned by human judgment (perhaps through persecution and death), but live on in the spirit before God.
6. The contrast kata anthrōpous sarki ('according to humans in the flesh') versus kata theon pneumatī ('according to God in the spirit') places human and divine perspectives in opposition: human judgment ends at physical death, but God's purposes extend beyond it.
7. The Greek ēngiken ('has drawn near, is at hand') is the same verb used in Mark 1:15 for the kingdom of God. Peter shares the early Christian conviction that the consummation is imminent. The two imperatives — sōphronēsate ('be clear-minded, be sensible') and nēpsate ('be sober, be watchful') — are not redundant: the first addresses mental clarity, the second self-control. Both serve prayer.
8. The Greek ektenē ('earnest, stretched out, intense') describes love at full extension — love strained to its limit, as in 1:22. The proverb 'love covers a multitude of sins' echoes Proverbs 10:12 ('love covers all offenses'). The meaning is not that love hides sin or ignores it, but that love creates a relational environment where forgiveness flows freely and offenses do not fester.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Proverbs 10:12 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The Greek philoxenoi ('hospitable,' literally 'lover of strangers') was a crucial virtue in the ancient world where inns were often dangerous or immoral. Christian hospitality — opening one's home to traveling believers — was essential for the spread of the gospel and the functioning of house churches. The qualifier aneu gongysmou ('without grumbling') acknowledges the cost of hospitality and insists it be given cheerfully.
10. The Greek charisma ('gift, grace-gift') is from the same root as charis ('grace') — every gift is a concrete expression of God's grace. The stewardship metaphor (oikonomoi, 'household managers') means these gifts are not personal possessions but resources entrusted for the benefit of others. The adjective poikilēs ('varied, many-colored, diverse') describes God's grace as multifaceted — it manifests differently in each person.
11. Peter divides gifts into two broad categories: speaking (lalei) and serving (diakonei). Both must be exercised in dependence on God — the speaker delivers God's words (logia theou, 'oracles of God'), not personal opinions; the servant operates from God's supplied strength (ischyos hēs chorēgei ho theos), not personal capacity.
11. The doxology ('to him belong the glory and the power') could refer to God the Father or to Jesus Christ. The nearest antecedent is 'Jesus Christ,' which would be a significant attribution of divine glory to Christ. The formula eis tous aiōnas tōn aiōnōn ('to the ages of the ages') is the strongest temporal expression available in Greek — without end.
12. The Greek pyrōsei ('burning, fiery ordeal') echoes the gold-tested-by-fire imagery of 1:7. The verb xenizesthe ('be surprised, find strange') is the same word used in verse 4 for pagans being surprised at Christian behavior — now Peter tells believers not to be similarly surprised by persecution. Suffering is not an anomaly in the Christian life but an expected feature.
13. The Greek koinōneite ('you share, you participate') expresses real participation in Christ's sufferings — not mere imitation but genuine sharing. The logic is: present suffering with Christ guarantees future joy at his revelation. The verb agalliōmenoi ('rejoicing exceedingly') is the same word used in 1:6, creating a literary bracket — the joy that bookends suffering.
14. This beatitude echoes Matthew 5:11 ('Blessed are you when people insult you...on my account'). The phrase to tēs doxēs kai to tou theou pneuma ('the Spirit of glory and of God') is an unusual construction that identifies the Holy Spirit as both 'the Spirit of glory' and 'the Spirit of God.' The verb anapauetai ('rests') echoes Isaiah 11:2 (the Spirit of the LORD resting on the Messiah) — what rested on Christ now rests on his persecuted followers.
14. The SBLGNT does not include the longer reading found in some manuscripts ('on their part he is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified'), which the KJV includes. We follow the critical text.

14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 11:2. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The Greek allotrioepiskopos ('meddler, one who oversees others' business') is a rare word — found only here in the New Testament. It may refer to interfering in others' matters, or it could have a more specific social meaning: a Christian who provokes unnecessary conflict by inserting themselves into pagan affairs. Peter's point is that suffering must be for Christ's sake, not as a consequence of criminal or meddlesome behavior.
16. The word Christianos ('Christian') appears only three times in the New Testament (here, Acts 11:26, Acts 26:28). It was likely a label coined by outsiders — the Latin suffix -ianus indicates a partisan or follower. Peter takes what may have been a slur and transforms it into a badge of honor: do not be ashamed of this name; instead, glorify God through it.
16. The phrase en tō onomati toutō ('in this name, by this name') can mean either 'by bearing this name' or 'in this matter.' We follow the reading that connects to the name 'Christian,' which fits the context of identity-based suffering.
17. The principle echoes Ezekiel 9:6, where judgment begins at God's sanctuary. The 'household of God' (oikos tou theou) refers to the church — God's temple community (cf. 2:5). The argument from lesser to greater: if God's own people undergo purifying judgment through suffering, how much more severe will the judgment be for those who reject the gospel entirely.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Ezekiel 9:6. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. Peter quotes Proverbs 11:31 from the Septuagint (which differs significantly from the Hebrew Masoretic Text here). The Greek molis ('scarcely, with difficulty') does not imply uncertainty of salvation but its costliness — the righteous are saved, but the path involves suffering and testing. The rhetorical question about the ungodly expects an answer of devastating judgment.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Proverbs 11:31 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. The chapter concludes with the only New Testament use of the title pistō ktistē ('faithful Creator'). In the context of suffering, Peter points believers back to the one who made them — the Creator is faithful and can be trusted with their souls. The verb paratithesthōsan ('let them entrust, deposit') is a banking term — depositing something valuable with a trustworthy guardian. The word echoes Jesus's final words in Luke 23:46, 'Father, into your hands I commit my spirit.'

Summary: Peter addresses the elders as a fellow elder and witness of Christ's sufferings, urging them to shepherd God's flock willingly, not under compulsion or for dishonest gain, and not by domineering over those in their charge but by being examples. He promises the unfading crown of glory when the Chief Shepherd appears. Younger members are told to submit to elders, and all are called to clothe themselves with humility. The letter closes with the famous image of the devil prowling like a roaring lion, an exhortation to resist him firm in faith, and a benediction of the God of all grace who will restore, confirm, strengthen, and establish the suffering believers.

What Makes This Remarkable: Peter identifies himself as a 'fellow elder' (sympresbyteros) and 'witness of Christ's sufferings' (v. 1) — extraordinary humility from the apostle, placing himself alongside local church leaders rather than above them. The 'crown of glory that does not fade' (v. 4) uses amarantinos, found only here in the New Testament, echoing the 'unfading' inheritance of 1:4. The lion metaphor (v. 8) would carry special resonance for Christians who knew of martyrdom in Roman arenas.

Translation Friction: The reference to 'Babylon' (v. 13) is almost certainly a code name for Rome, as in Revelation 14:8, 17:5, and 18:2. Some argue it refers to literal Babylon in Mesopotamia, but the letter's Roman context and the widespread early Christian use of 'Babylon' for Rome make this reading more probable. The mention of 'Mark, my son' (v. 13) is taken by tradition as John Mark, the author of the Second Gospel.

Connections: The shepherd imagery (vv. 1-4) connects to John 21:15-17 (Jesus's charge to Peter: 'Feed my sheep'). The humility command (v. 5) quotes Proverbs 3:34 (LXX). The lion metaphor recalls Psalm 22:13 and the language of the Psalms about enemies. The benediction (vv. 10-11) echoes Paul's doxological closings. Silvanus (v. 12) is likely the Silas of Acts 15:22-40 and Paul's companion.

¹So I appeal to the elders among you as a fellow elder and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, as well as a partaker in the glory that is about to be revealed: ²Shepherd the flock of God that is among you, exercising oversight not under compulsion but willingly, as God would have it — not for shameful gain but eagerly, ³Do not lord it over the people entrusted to your care; instead, be examples to the flock. ⁴And when the Chief Shepherd appears, you will receive the unfading crown of glory.

⁵Likewise, you who are younger, submit yourselves to the elders. And all of you, clothe yourselves with humility toward one another, because God opposes the proud but gives grace to the humble. ⁶Humble yourselves, therefore, under the mighty hand of God, so that he may exalt you at the proper time, ⁷Casting all your care upon him. Since he careth for you. ⁸Be self-controlled and alert. Your adversary the devil prowls around like a roaring lion, seeking someone to devour. ⁹Resist him, firm in your faith, knowing that the same kinds of suffering are being experienced by your brotherhood throughout the world. ¹⁰And the God of all grace, who called you to his eternal glory in Christ Jesus, will himself, after you have suffered for a little while, restore, confirm, strengthen, and establish you. ¹¹To him be the power forever and ever. Amen. ¹²Through Silvanus, whom I regard as a faithful brother, I have written to you briefly, encouraging you and testifying that this is the true grace of God. Stand firm in it. ¹³She who is in Babylon, chosen together with you, sends you greetings, and so does Mark, my son. ¹⁴Greet one another with a kiss of love. Peace to all of you who are in Christ.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Peter identifies himself with three titles: sympresbyteros ('fellow elder' — placing himself alongside the local leaders, not above them), martyr tōn tou Christou pathēmātōn ('witness of Christ's sufferings' — an eyewitness claim rooted in his presence at the crucifixion), and koinōnos tēs mellousēs apokalypseōs ('sharer in the coming glory' — linking present witness to future hope).
1. The word martyr here means 'witness' in the sense of eyewitness testimony, not yet the technical sense of 'martyr' (one who dies for faith), though Peter's own tradition held that he was martyred under Nero.
2. The imperative poimane ('shepherd') echoes Jesus's charge to Peter in John 21:16 — the very apostle who was told 'shepherd my sheep' now passes that charge to other leaders. The three contrasts define proper pastoral motivation: not by compulsion but willingly (hekousiōs), not for financial gain (aischroterdōs, 'in a shamefully greedy way') but eagerly (prothymōs), and (in verse 3) not by domineering but by example.
2. The phrase kata theon ('as God would have it, according to God') is present in some manuscripts and absent in others. The SBLGNT includes it, indicating that willing oversight must align with God's own character and purposes.
3. The Greek kataklyreuous ('lording it over, domineering') uses the same verb Jesus used in Mark 10:42 when he contrasted worldly rulers who 'lord it over' people with the servant leadership he modeled. The word klērōn ('those allotted, those assigned') literally means 'lots' or 'portions' — each group of believers has been assigned to its elders as a trust, not as a possession.
3. The word typoi ('models, examples, patterns') means the elders' lives should be templates that others can follow — leadership by lived example rather than by imposed authority.
4. The title archipoimen ('Chief Shepherd') appears only here in the New Testament. It establishes a hierarchy of shepherding: the elders shepherd under the authority of the Chief Shepherd, Christ. When he appears (phanerōthentos — the same word used for Christ's first appearing in 1:20), the faithful under-shepherds receive their reward.
4. The adjective amarantinon ('unfading, unwithering') is built from the same root as amaranton in 1:4 ('unfading inheritance'). Greek victory wreaths were made of leaves that quickly withered; this crown never will. The word is found only here in the entire New Testament.
5. The Greek encombōsasthe ('clothe yourselves, tie on like a garment') is a rare word — possibly referring to a slave's work apron (encombōma) tied over other clothing for service. If so, Peter is saying: put on the servant's apron of humility. The image is especially powerful coming from the apostle who watched Jesus tie on a towel and wash the disciples' feet (John 13).
5. The quotation 'God opposes the proud but gives grace to the humble' is from Proverbs 3:34 (LXX), also quoted by James (4:6). The Greek antitassetai ('opposes, sets himself in battle array against') is a military term — God actively resists the proud as an army opposes an enemy.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Proverbs 3:34 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The 'mighty hand of God' (krataian cheira tou theou) is exodus language — God's hand delivered Israel from Egypt (Exodus 3:19, Deuteronomy 5:15). The same hand that once rescued Israel now governs the circumstances of these suffering believers. The promise of exaltation (hypsōsē, 'may lift up') is conditioned on humility and timing — 'at the proper time' (en kairō), not immediately.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 3:19. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Deuteronomy 5:15. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The Greek epirhpsantes ('having cast, thrown upon') is a decisive, once-for-all action — hurl your entire burden of worry onto God. The word merimnan ('anxiety, care, worry') is the same word Jesus used in the Sermon on the Mount (Matthew 6:25-34). The reason for casting anxiety is personal and intimate: autō melei peri hymōn ('it matters to him concerning you') — God is personally invested in their well-being. Peter echoes Psalm 55:22 ('Cast your burden on the LORD, and he will sustain you').

7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalms 55:22. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The twin imperatives nēpsate ('be sober, self-controlled') and grēgorēsate ('be watchful, stay alert') form a sentinel's posture — the soldier who falls asleep on guard duty is vulnerable. The Greek antidikos ('adversary, legal opponent') is a courtroom term, portraying the devil as a prosecutor seeking to bring charges.
8. The lion simile ōs leōn ōryomenos ('like a roaring lion') draws on the psalmist's imagery of enemies as predatory animals (Psalm 22:13). For believers in Asia Minor who knew of martyrdoms in Roman arenas where lions were used, this was not merely figurative. The participle peripatei ('walks about, prowls') suggests constant, restless hunting.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalm 22:13 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The imperative antistēte ('resist, stand against') is the same verb used in James 4:7 ('Resist the devil, and he will flee from you'). The resistance is not passive endurance but active opposition. The phrase stereoi tē pistei ('firm in the faith, solid in faith') uses an adjective meaning 'hard, solid, firm' — like a foundation that will not budge.
9. The final clause provides solidarity: these believers are not alone in their suffering. The same pathēmatōn ('sufferings') are being endured by the adelphotēti ('brotherhood, community of siblings') across the entire Roman world. Isolation amplifies suffering; shared experience provides strength.
10. Four future-tense verbs form a crescendo of divine action: katartisei ('restore, mend, make complete' — the same word used for mending nets in Mark 1:19), stērixei ('confirm, make firm'), sthenōsei ('strengthen'), and themeliōsei ('establish, lay a foundation'). God does not merely permit suffering — he personally completes the restoration afterward.
10. The title 'God of all grace' (theos pasēs charitos) is the letter's theological summary: every form of grace needed for every form of suffering flows from this God. The phrase oligon pathontas ('having suffered for a little while') puts suffering in eschatological perspective — it is real but brief compared to 'eternal glory' (aiōnion doxan).
11. The doxology is brief and emphatic: to kratos ('the power, the dominion') belongs to God eis tous aiōnas ('forever, to the ages'). The SBLGNT reads only kratos ('power') without 'glory' (doxan), which some manuscripts add. We follow the critical text. The doxology provides theological closure: the God who has the power forever is the same God who promises restoration in verse 10.
12. Silvanus (Silouanos) is most likely the Silas of Acts 15:22-40 who traveled with Paul. The phrase dia Silouanou ('through Silvanus') may mean Silvanus was the letter carrier, the secretary (amanuensis) who wrote at Peter's dictation, or both.
12. The phrase tautēn einai alethē charin tou theou ('this is the true grace of God') summarizes the letter's message: everything Peter has described — the living hope, the tested faith, the identity as God's people, the purpose in suffering — all of this is genuine grace. The imperative stēte ('stand firm') is the letter's final command: remain in this grace.
13. The feminine hē syneklektē ('she who is co-chosen') most likely refers to the church in 'Babylon' — the feminine article matching the implied ekklēsia ('church, assembly'). 'Babylon' is almost certainly a code name for Rome, a usage attested in Jewish apocalyptic literature and in Revelation (14:8, 17:5, 18:2). Literal Babylon in Mesopotamia was largely depopulated by this period.
13. Mark (Markos) is traditionally identified as John Mark of Acts 12:12, 25, the author of the Second Gospel. Peter calls him 'my son' (ho huios mou), indicating a spiritual father-son relationship. The early church tradition (via Papias, Eusebius) held that Mark recorded Peter's testimony in his Gospel.
14. The 'kiss of love' (philēmati agapēs) is a variation of Paul's 'holy kiss' (philēma hagion, Romans 16:16, 1 Corinthians 16:20). This was a liturgical greeting in early Christian worship — a physical expression of the family bond among believers.
14. The letter closes as it opened — with peace (eirēnē, cf. 1:2). The final phrase tois en Christō ('to those in Christ') defines the recipients by their fundamental identity: they are people who exist 'in Christ,' and within that sphere, peace is their possession. The SBLGNT does not include the final 'Amen' found in some manuscripts and in the KJV.

Summary: Second Peter opens with a greeting from Simeon Peter, then immediately declares that God's divine power has granted everything needed for life and godliness through the knowledge of the one who called us. Through precious promises, believers may become partakers of the divine nature. Peter lists a chain of virtues to be cultivated — faith, virtue, knowledge, self-control, endurance, godliness, mutual affection, and love — and warns that neglecting these means forgetting one's cleansing from sin. He affirms the reliability of apostolic testimony as eyewitness, not cleverly devised myth, recounting the Transfiguration, and closes by affirming prophetic Scripture as divinely inspired.

What Makes This Remarkable: The 'divine power' passage (v. 3) and 'partakers of the divine nature' (v. 4) are among the most theologically distinctive statements in the New Testament, providing the biblical basis for the Eastern Orthodox doctrine of theosis (deification/divinization). The virtue chain (vv. 5-7) is a Greco-Roman literary form (sorites) adapted for Christian ethics. The Transfiguration account (vv. 16-18) is one of only two direct apostolic eyewitness claims to a specific event in Jesus's life found in the epistles.

Translation Friction: The relationship between 2 Peter and Jude is debated — significant material in chapter 2 parallels Jude closely. The Greek style of 2 Peter differs markedly from 1 Peter, which some attribute to a different amanuensis or to pseudonymous authorship. We render the text as presented without adjudicating the authorship question. The phrase 'partakers of the divine nature' (v. 4) uses language at home in Hellenistic philosophy (particularly Stoicism) but repurposed for a distinctly Christian and covenantal meaning.

Connections: The 'divine power' language (v. 3) connects to the power language throughout the New Testament (Romans 1:16, 1 Corinthians 1:18). The Transfiguration account (vv. 16-18) parallels Matthew 17:1-8, Mark 9:2-8, Luke 9:28-36. The prophetic inspiration statement (vv. 20-21) provides one of the New Testament's clearest declarations about the origin of Scripture, alongside 2 Timothy 3:16.

¹Simeon Peter, a servant and apostle of Jesus Christ, to those who have received a faith equal in value to ours through the righteousness of our God and Savior Jesus Christ: ²May grace and peace be multiplied to you in the knowledge of God and of Jesus our Lord. ³His divine power has granted to us everything needed for life and godliness, through the knowledge of the one who called us by his own glory and excellence, ⁴Through these he has granted to us his precious and magnificent promises, so that through them you may become partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world because of sinful desire. ⁵For this very reason, make every effort to supplement your faith with virtue, and virtue with knowledge, ⁶to knowledge add self-control; to self-control add endurance; to endurance add godliness; ⁷to godliness add mutual affection; and to mutual affection add love. ⁸For if these qualities are yours and are increasing, they keep you from being ineffective or unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. ⁹For whoever lacks these qualities is blind — nearsighted, in fact — having forgotten the cleansing from former sins. ¹⁰Therefore, brothers and sisters, be all the more diligent to make your calling and election certain, for if you practice these qualities you will never stumble. ¹¹For in this way, entry into the eternal kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ will be richly provided to you. ¹²Therefore I intend always to remind you of these things, even though you know them and are established in the truth that you now have. ¹³I consider it right, as long as I am in this tent, to stir you up by way of reminder, ¹⁴Being aware that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, indeed as our Lord Jesus Christ has shewed me. ¹⁵And I will make every effort so that after my departure you may be able at any time to recall these things. ¹⁶For we did not follow cleverly devised myths when we made known to you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but we were eyewitnesses of his majesty. ¹⁷For he received honor and glory from God the Father when a voice came to him from the Majestic Glory, saying, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased" — ¹⁸This voice which arrived from heaven we listened to, when we were with him in the holy mount. ¹⁹And we have the prophetic word made more sure, to which you do well to pay attention as to a lamp shining in a dark place, until the day dawns and the morning star rises in your hearts, ²⁰Being aware this foremost, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation. ²¹For no prophecy was ever produced by human will, but people spoke from God as they were carried along by the Holy Spirit.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The Greek Symeōn is the Semitic form of the name (cf. Acts 15:14), lending an archaic, Hebraic flavor to the greeting. The phrase isotomon hēmīn lachousin pistin ('having obtained a faith of equal value with ours') uses isotimos ('of equal honor/value') — the faith of these recipients is not second-class compared to apostolic faith.
1. The phrase tou theou hēmōn kai sōtēros Iēsou Christou ('of our God and Savior Jesus Christ') is grammatically most naturally read as applying both titles — 'God' and 'Savior' — to Jesus Christ (the Granville Sharp rule in Greek). This would be one of the clearest New Testament identifications of Jesus as God.
2. The greeting echoes 1 Peter 1:2 but adds the distinctive phrase en epignōsei ('in the knowledge'). The word epignōsis ('full knowledge, deep knowledge') is a key term in 2 Peter, appearing four times (1:2, 3, 8; 2:20). It is more than intellectual awareness — it is relational, experiential knowledge of God. Grace and peace grow as knowledge of God deepens.
3. The Greek theias dynamēōs ('divine power') uses theios ('divine'), a word common in Hellenistic religious philosophy but rare in the New Testament (only here, v. 4, and Acts 17:29). Peter bridges Jewish-Christian theology and Greco-Roman vocabulary — communicating to a Hellenistic audience in their own conceptual language.
3. The phrase ta pros zōēn kai eusebeian ('the things pertaining to life and godliness') is comprehensive — 'life' (zōē) covers all of existence, and 'godliness' (eusebeia) covers all of religious practice. Together they leave nothing out.
4. The phrase theias koinōnoi physeōs ('sharers/partakers of the divine nature') is unique in the New Testament and has generated enormous theological discussion. In its Hellenistic context, 'divine nature' (theia physis) was philosophical language for the essence of deity. Peter claims that believers participate in this — not becoming divine in essence (as in pagan apotheosis) but sharing in God's moral character and eternal life.
4. The Eastern Orthodox tradition built its theology of theosis (deification) significantly on this verse. The Western tradition has generally interpreted it as moral transformation. The text itself supports both emphases without collapsing into either exclusively.
5. The Greek epichorēgēsate ('supply, furnish, provide generously') is from the theater — a chorēgos was a wealthy patron who funded a chorus. The word implies lavish, generous investment, not minimal addition. The sorites (chain-link) argument that follows (vv. 5-7) builds each virtue upon the previous one, creating an ascending staircase of character development.
5. The word aretē ('virtue, moral excellence') was the central concept in Greek ethics. Peter integrates it into the Christian framework, beginning with faith (pistis) and culminating in love (agapē).
6. The chain continues: gnōsis ('knowledge') leads to egkrateia ('self-control' — mastery over desires and impulses, a key virtue in Stoic ethics), which produces hypomonē ('endurance, steadfast perseverance under pressure'), which deepens into eusebeia ('godliness, piety, reverent devotion to God'). Each virtue both builds on and produces the next.

7. The chain culminates in agapē ('love') — the highest Christian virtue (1 Corinthians 13). Before agapē comes philadelphia ('mutual affection, brotherly/sisterly love'), which is love within the community. Agapē transcends philadelphia — it is the self-giving love that extends even beyond the boundaries of the Christian family. The progression from faith to love mirrors Paul's triad in 1 Corinthians 13:13, with the intervening virtues filling out the developmental path.
8. The Greek argous ('idle, useless, ineffective') literally means 'not-working' (a-ergos). Combined with akarpous ('unfruitful'), Peter warns against a faith that produces nothing. The knowledge (epignōsis) of Christ is not static information but a living relationship that bears fruit through the cultivation of these virtues.
9. The Greek myōpazōn ('being shortsighted, squinting') is found only here in the New Testament. The irony is deliberate: the person is not actually blind but has such narrow vision that they might as well be. They can see only what is immediately before them and have lost sight of the larger picture — specifically, the cleansing (katharismos) from sin that launched their Christian life. Forgetting their own salvation leads to moral stagnation.
10. The Greek bebaian ('firm, certain, reliable') applied to 'calling and election' (klēsīn kai eklogēn) does not mean that God's choice is uncertain and needs human help — rather, the cultivation of virtues provides subjective assurance and objective evidence that one's calling is genuine. The strong negation ou mē ptaisēte pote ('you will never, ever stumble') guarantees stability to those who pursue these virtues.
11. The verb epichorēgēthēsetai ('will be richly supplied, lavishly furnished') echoes the same root from verse 5 — believers who generously supply the virtues (epichorēgēsate) will receive a generous entry (epichorēgēthēsetai) into the eternal kingdom. The word plousiōs ('richly, abundantly') pictures not a bare-minimum entry but a triumphal welcome.
12. Peter acknowledges that his readers already know these truths and are established (estērigmenous, 'firmly planted') in them — yet he considers repeated reminders essential. The phrase tē parousē alētheia ('the truth that is present/that you have') may mean 'the truth now present among you' or 'the truth that has come to you.' Knowledge and stability do not eliminate the need for reinforcement.
13. The Greek skēnōmati ('tent, tabernacle, temporary dwelling') refers to Peter's body — a metaphor for the temporary nature of physical life. The image echoes Paul's tent metaphor in 2 Corinthians 5:1-4. Peter sees his earthly existence as a temporary encampment, not a permanent home, and uses the remaining time to reinforce essential teaching.
14. The Greek tachinē ('swift, soon, imminent') indicates Peter expects death in the near future. The phrase kathos kai ho kyrios hēmōn Iēsous Christos edēlōsen moi ('as our Lord Jesus Christ made clear to me') likely refers to Jesus's prediction of Peter's death in John 21:18-19, where Jesus told Peter that in old age he would be led where he did not wish to go — traditionally understood as a prediction of crucifixion.
15. The Greek exodon ('departure, exodus') for death is the same word used in Luke 9:31 for Jesus's 'departure' (death) that he discussed with Moses and Elijah at the Transfiguration — a connection Peter would have witnessed firsthand. The word carries overtones of the great Exodus from Egypt — death as a liberation journey. Peter's concern is for the church's ongoing memory after he is gone, which may explain the writing of this letter itself.
16. The Greek sesophismenois mythois ('cleverly devised myths, fabricated stories') uses sophizō ('to make clever, to contrive') — the apostolic message is not a skilled human invention. The word epoptai ('eyewitnesses') is a technical term — in the Greek mystery religions, an epoptēs was one who had seen the sacred rites at the highest level of initiation. Peter co-opts the term: the apostles are the true 'initiates' who witnessed Christ's glory firsthand.
16. The word parousian ('coming, presence, arrival') refers to Christ's second coming — a topic that will dominate chapter 3. Peter grounds the future hope in past eyewitness experience.
17. Peter recounts the Transfiguration (Matthew 17:1-8, Mark 9:2-8, Luke 9:28-36). The title megaloprepous doxēs ('the Majestic Glory') is a circumlocution for God — a reverent avoidance of the divine name, referring to God's visible, overwhelming presence. The divine voice repeats the baptismal declaration (Matthew 3:17) with the demonstrative houtos ('this one') — pointing to Jesus as the unique, beloved Son.
17. Peter's version of the heavenly voice matches Matthew's account more closely than Mark's or Luke's, which may reflect Peter's own memory since Matthew's Gospel draws on Petrine tradition.
18. The emphatic hēmeis ('we ourselves') stresses the eyewitness character of the testimony. The 'holy mountain' (hagiō orei) is not named — tradition identifies it as Mount Tabor or Mount Hermon — but Peter's point is not the geography but the experience. The mountain is 'holy' because God's presence sanctified it, as Sinai was holy when God descended upon it (Exodus 19:23).
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 19:23 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. The phrase bebaieron ton prophētikon logon ('the prophetic word made more sure') can be read two ways: (1) the Transfiguration experience confirms the reliability of Old Testament prophecy, or (2) prophetic Scripture is even more reliable than eyewitness experience. Either reading elevates the authority of Scripture.
19. The metaphor of a lamp (lychnō) in a dark (auchēmō, 'murky, squalid, dry') place portrays the present age as dark and Scripture as the light that guides through it. The 'morning star' (phōsphoros, literally 'light-bearer') is Christ himself (cf. Revelation 22:16), whose full appearing will make the lamp of prophecy no longer necessary — the sunrise replaces the lamp.

- 20. The Greek epilyseōs ('one's own interpretation/explanation') is debated. The KJV takes it as a statement about how prophecy should be interpreted (not privately but communally/ecclesially). However, the context of verse 21 suggests it is about the origin of prophecy — no prophetic Scripture arose from the prophet's own devising or interpretation of events. The prophet did not generate the message; it came from God. We render it in the origination sense, which fits the flow into verse 21.
- 21. The Greek pheromenoi ('being carried, being borne along') is a nautical metaphor — like a ship driven by the wind. The prophets were not passive instruments (they spoke, using their own faculties and personalities) but neither were they autonomous authors. The Holy Spirit was the driving force; the prophets were the vessels carried along by that force.
- 21. The phrase apo theou ('from God') identifies the origin of the prophetic message — it came from God, through the Spirit, and was spoken by human beings. This verse, alongside 2 Timothy 3:16, forms the New Testament's clearest statement about the divine inspiration of Scripture.

Summary: Peter warns that false teachers will arise among the believers, just as false prophets arose in Israel. He draws on three Old Testament examples of divine judgment — the fallen angels, the flood, and Sodom and Gomorrah — to assure that God knows how to rescue the godly and punish the unrighteous. The chapter provides a vivid portrait of the false teachers: they exploit with fabricated words, follow the way of Balaam, are like waterless springs and mists driven by a storm, promise freedom while being slaves of corruption, and are ultimately worse off than before they knew Christ.

What Makes This Remarkable: This chapter shares extensive material with Jude (compare 2 Peter 2:1-18 with Jude 4-16). The literary relationship is debated — whether Peter drew on Jude, Jude drew on Peter, or both used a common source. Peter's version notably omits Jude's references to the Assumption of Moses and 1 Enoch, possibly adapting the material for a more Hellenistic audience. The Balaam tradition (vv. 15-16) includes the talking donkey episode, one of the most memorable stories from Numbers 22.

Translation Friction: *The reference to angels who sinned being cast into Tartarus (v. 4) uses tartarōsas, a word drawn from Greek mythology (Tartarus was the deepest abyss of Hades) found nowhere else in the Bible. Peter adapts pagan cosmological vocabulary for theological purposes. The strong language describing the false teachers is some of the harshest in the New Testament. We render it faithfully without softening.*

Connections: The three judgment examples (angels, flood, Sodom) parallel Jude 5-7. The Balaam material connects to Numbers 22-24 and is also referenced in Jude 11 and Revelation 2:14. The 'dog returns to its vomit' proverb (v. 22) quotes Proverbs 26:11. The 'waterless springs' imagery echoes Jude 12-13.

¹But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there will be false teachers among you, who privily will bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction. ²Many will follow their sensuality, and because of them the way of truth will be maligned. ³In their greed they will exploit you with fabricated words. Their condemnation from long ago is not idle, and their destruction does not slumber. ⁴For if God did not spare angels when they sinned, but cast them into Tartarus and committed them to chains of deepest darkness, to be held for judgment; ⁵Spared not the old present age, but saved Noah the eighth person, a preacher of righteousness, bringing in the flood upon the present age of the ungodly; ⁶He condemned the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah by burning them to ashes, making them an example of what will happen to the ungodly. ⁷Handed down just Lot, vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked. ⁸Indeed, (For that righteous man dwelling in the midst of them, in seeing and hearing, vexed his righteous soul from day to day with their unlawful deeds;). ⁹The Lord knows how to rescue the godly from their trials and how to hold the unrighteous for punishment on the day of judgment. ¹⁰However, chiefly them that conduct your lives following the physical nature in the lust of uncleanness, and despise government. Presumptuous are they, selfwilled, they are not afraid to speak evil of dignities. ¹¹Whereas angels, which are greater in authority and might, bring not railing accusation opposed to them prior to the Lord. ¹²But these people, like irrational animals, creatures of instinct born to be caught and destroyed — blaspheming about matters of which they are ignorant — will also be destroyed in their destruction, ¹³Will accept the reward of unrighteousness, as they that count it pleasure to riot in the day time. Spots they are and blemishes, sporting themselves with their own deceivings while they feast with you;. ¹⁴They have eyes full of adultery, insatiable for sin. They entice unstable souls. They have hearts trained in greed. Accursed children! ¹⁵Forsaking the straight path, they have gone astray, following the way of Balaam son of Beor, who loved the wages of unrighteousness, ¹⁶However, was rebuked for his iniquity — the dumb ass speaking with man's voice forbad the madness of the prophet of old. ¹⁷These are waterless springs and mists driven by a storm. For them the gloom of utter darkness has been reserved. ¹⁸For by speaking bombastic, empty words, they entice through fleshly desires and sensuality those who are barely escaping from people who live in error. ¹⁹They promise them freedom, but they themselves are slaves of corruption. For whatever overcomes a person, to that he is enslaved. ²⁰For if, after escaping the defilements of the world through the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, they are again entangled in them and overcome, the last state has become worse for them than the first. ²¹For it would have been better for them never to have known the way of righteousness than, having known it, to turn back from the holy commandment delivered to them. ²²What the true proverb says has happened to them: "A dog returns to its own vomit," and, "A washed sow returns to wallowing in the mud."

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The Greek pseudodidaskaloi ('false teachers') parallels the pseudoprophētai ('false prophets') of Israel's history — the problem is not new. The verb pareisaxousin ('will secretly introduce, smuggle in') implies stealth — these teachings are not openly presented but infiltrated into the community.
1. The phrase ton agorasanta autous despotēn arnoumenoi ('denying the Master who bought them') uses commercial language: agorazō ('to buy in the marketplace') applied to Christ's redemptive work. The word despotēn ('Master, absolute Lord') emphasizes Christ's ownership claim over those he purchased.
2. The Greek aselgeiais ('sensuality, licentiousness, debauchery') indicates the false teachers' moral character, not just their doctrinal errors — the two are inseparable. 'The way of truth' (hē hodos tēs alētheias) is an early designation for the Christian movement (cf. Acts 9:2, 'the Way'). The public behavior of these teachers will cause outsiders to slander the entire Christian faith.
3. The Greek emporeuontai ('they will trade in, make merchandise of') portrays the false teachers as merchants who view believers as commodities to be exploited for profit. The word plastoīs ('fabricated, molded, invented') — from which English 'plastic' derives — describes their teaching as artificially shaped to serve their purposes.
3. The personification of judgment and destruction as active agents ('not idle,' 'does not slumber') is vivid — divine judgment is not sleeping or inactive but wakefully approaching.
4. The Greek tartarōsas ('having cast into Tartarus') is a hapax legomenon — it appears only here in the entire Bible. In Greek mythology, Tartarus was the lowest region of the underworld where the Titans were imprisoned. Peter uses this Greek cosmological term to describe the imprisonment of fallen angels, adapting pagan vocabulary for a Jewish-Christian narrative that draws on the tradition of Genesis 6:1-4 and the Book of 1 Enoch (cf. Jude 6).
4. The 'chains of deepest darkness' (seirais zophou) — some manuscripts read seirois ('pits') instead of seirais ('chains'). The SBLGNT reads seirais. Either way, the imagery is of imprisonment in complete darkness awaiting final judgment.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 6:1-4. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. The Greek ogdoon Nōe ('Noah the eighth') means Noah and seven others — his wife, three sons, and their wives (Genesis 7:13, 1 Peter 3:20). Peter calls Noah kēruka dikaiosynēs ('a herald/preacher of righteousness'), a characterization not found in Genesis but present in Jewish tradition. The word kēryx ('herald, public announcer') portrays Noah as actively proclaiming righteousness during the ark's construction, not merely building in silence.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 7:13 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The Greek tephrosās ('having reduced to ashes') is found only here in the New Testament. The word katastrophē ('overthrow, destruction') — source of English 'catastrophe' — describes total demolition. Peter presents Sodom and Gomorrah as a visible, permanent warning (hypodeigma, 'example, pattern') of divine judgment — what happened to those cities illustrates what awaits all who practice ungodliness.
7. Peter calls Lot dikaios ('righteous'), a characterization that might surprise readers of Genesis 19, where Lot's behavior is morally ambiguous at best. Peter focuses on Lot's inner distress at the surrounding wickedness rather than his compromised choices. The word kataponoumenon ('being oppressed, worn down, distressed') suggests chronic psychological suffering from living among the immoral — Lot was ground down by constant exposure to depravity.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 19. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.

8. The Greek ebasanizen ('was tormented, tortured') is a strong word — the same verb used for physical torture (Matthew 8:6, Revelation 9:5). Lot's exposure to lawless behavior was not mere discomfort but soul-level anguish. The phrase hēmeran ex hēmeras ('day after day, day from day') emphasizes the relentless, cumulative nature of this torment — it never stopped.
9. This verse provides the resolution to the extended conditional that began in verse 4. The three examples (angels, flood, Sodom) all demonstrate the same dual principle: God rescues the righteous (Noah, Lot) and punishes the wicked. The word kolazomenous ('being punished') is a present participle — the unrighteous are already under punishment while awaiting the final judgment, not merely stored in neutral waiting.
10. Peter now turns from the historical examples to the present false teachers. They are characterized by two traits: indulging corrupt desires (opisō sarkos en epithymia mias mou, 'pursuing flesh in defiling desire') and rejecting authority (kyriotētos kataphronountas, 'despising lordship'). The 'glorious ones' (doxas) likely refers to angelic beings — the false teachers show contempt for the spiritual hierarchy.
10. The adjectives tolmētai ('bold, daring, presumptuous') and authentai ('self-willed, arrogant, stubborn') describe people who recognize no authority beyond their own will.
11. The argument is from greater to lesser: if angels — who are vastly more powerful than any human — do not presume to slander spiritual beings before God's tribunal, how much more outrageous that these human false teachers do so. Compare Jude 9, which provides the specific example of Michael the archangel refusing to pronounce a slanderous judgment against the devil regarding Moses's body.
12. The comparison to aloga zōa ('irrational animals, brute beasts') is harsh — these teachers operate on instinct (physika, 'natural, by nature') rather than reason or revelation. The wordplay on phthora/phtharēsontai ('corruption/they will be corrupted') creates a grim symmetry: they will be destroyed by the very corruption they promote. Ignorance and arrogance combine to produce destruction.
13. The Greek misthon adikias ('wages of unrighteousness') is ironic — they pursued profit through unrighteousness and receive unrighteousness as their payment. Carousing en hēmera ('in daytime') was considered especially shameful in the ancient world, where respectable people reserved evening hours for banqueting.
13. The words spiloi ('blots, stains') and mōmoi ('blemishes') contrast sharply with the 'without spot or blemish' language applied to Christ in 1 Peter 1:19 — these teachers are the opposite of Christ. The phrase syneuōchoumenoi hymin ('feasting together with you') indicates they are still participating in the community's shared meals, probably including the Lord's Supper.
14. The Greek ophthalmous mestous moichalidos ('eyes full of an adulteress') is literally 'eyes full of an adulteress' — every woman they see is seen as a potential partner in adultery. The participle deleazontes ('enticing, luring with bait') is a fishing metaphor — they bait and hook vulnerable believers. The phrase kardian gegymnasmenen pleonexias ('a heart trained/exercised in greed') uses the athletic training metaphor (gymnazō, from which 'gymnasium' derives) — they have disciplined themselves in the art of greed as an athlete trains for competition.
15. Balaam (Numbers 22-24) is the paradigmatic example of a prophet motivated by money. Despite being hired by Balak to curse Israel, God forced him to bless them instead. Yet Jewish tradition (and the New Testament: Jude 11, Revelation 2:14) consistently portrays Balaam as a negative example — a man with genuine prophetic gifts corrupted by greed. The false teachers follow his 'way' (hodon) — the path of using spiritual authority for financial gain.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Numbers 22-24 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. The story is from Numbers 22:28-30 — Balaam's donkey saw the angel of the LORD blocking the path when Balaam could not, and God opened the donkey's mouth to speak. The Greek paraphronian ('madness, insanity') is a strong word — a prophet so blinded by greed that a donkey had better spiritual perception. The irony is devastating: the wordless animal speaks while the speaking prophet is senseless.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Numbers 22:28-30. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. Two nature metaphors: waterless springs (pēgai anydroi) — promising refreshment but delivering nothing — and storm-driven mists (homichlai hypo lailapos elaunomenai) — appearing to promise rain but blown away before delivering. Both images describe people who promise much and deliver nothing. The false teachers' promised 'freedom' (v. 19) is as empty as a dry well.
17. Compare Jude 12-13, which has 'waterless clouds' and 'wandering stars' — the imagery is parallel but not identical.
18. The Greek hyperonka mataiotētos ('swelling things of emptiness, bombastic vanities') describes speech that sounds impressive but is empty — inflated rhetoric with no substance. The targets are people oligōs apopheugontas ('barely escaping, just recently escaping') — new converts still vulnerable, who have only just begun to separate from their former way of life. The false teachers target the weakest members of the community.
19. The irony is pointed: the false teachers promise eleutherian ('freedom, liberty') while being themselves douloi ('slaves') of corruption. The principle hō gar tis hēttētai, toutō dedoulōtai ('by whatever someone is defeated, to that person they are enslaved') expresses a universal truth — the conqueror becomes the master. Those who are defeated by corruption become its permanent slaves. The promise of freedom through moral license actually produces deeper bondage.
20. The language echoes Jesus's parable of the unclean spirit that returns with seven others (Matthew 12:43-45, 'the last state of that person is worse than the first'). The word emplagkentes ('entangled') pictures someone caught in a net or snare — the defilements they once escaped have recaptured them. The knowledge (epignōsis) of Christ provided real escape, making the return to corruption inexcusable and the final condition worse than the original state of ignorance.

21. The 'way of righteousness' (tēn hodon tēs dikaioynēs) and 'the holy commandment' (tēs hagian entolēs) both describe the Christian life as a path with clear moral direction. To know this path and then deliberately abandon it is worse than never having found it at all. The word hypostrepsai ('to turn back, to return') implies a conscious reversal — not gradual drift but deliberate retreat.
22. The first proverb quotes Proverbs 26:11 ('As a dog returns to its vomit, so a fool repeats his folly'). The second about the washed sow is not from the Old Testament but from a wider proverbial tradition (possibly from the Story of Ahikar or common Hellenistic wisdom). Both images are deliberately revolting — the animal's nature reasserts itself despite temporary cleaning. Peter's point is severe: the false teachers' return to corruption reveals that their nature was never truly transformed.
22. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Proverbs 26:11. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.

Summary: Peter addresses scoffers who mock the promise of Christ's return, arguing that the delay demonstrates God's patience, not his unfaithfulness. He reminds them that God's sense of time differs from humanity's — a thousand years is like a day. The day of the Lord will come unexpectedly like a thief, and the heavens and earth will be dissolved by fire. Yet Peter's hope looks beyond destruction to the promise of new heavens and a new earth where righteousness dwells. He closes by referencing Paul's letters and urging steadfastness.

What Makes This Remarkable: The 'new heavens and a new earth in which righteousness dwells' (v. 13) is one of the great eschatological hopes of the New Testament, drawing on Isaiah 65:17 and 66:22 and anticipating Revelation 21:1. The reference to Paul's letters as Scripture (vv. 15-16) is one of the earliest witnesses to the collection of Paul's correspondence and its elevation to scriptural authority. The 'day equals a thousand years' passage (v. 8) draws on Psalm 90:4 and has profoundly shaped Christian thinking about time, eternity, and divine patience.

Translation Friction: The cosmological language of dissolution by fire (vv. 10-12) has been interpreted literally (cosmic conflagration), figuratively (radical transformation), and ecologically. We render the Greek without imposing any particular scientific or theological framework. The reference to Paul writing things 'hard to understand' (v. 16) is remarkably candid and has been treasured by exegetes who find Paul difficult.

Connections: The 'new heavens and new earth' draws on Isaiah 65:17, 66:22, and anticipates Revelation 21:1. The 'day of the Lord as a thief' echoes Jesus's teaching (Matthew 24:43, Luke 12:39) and Paul (1 Thessalonians 5:2). The Psalm 90:4 quotation (v. 8) connects to the Mosaic prayer tradition. The fire cosmology may connect to Stoic ekpyrosis (cosmic conflagration) concepts familiar to Peter's Hellenistic audience.

¹This is now, dear friends, the second letter I am writing to you. In both of them I am stirring up your sincere mind by way of reminder, ²So you can become mindful of the words which were spoken prior to by the holy prophets, and of the commandment of us the apostles of the Lord and Saviour. ³Knowing this first, that there will come in the last days scoffers, walking following their own lusts, ⁴Declaring, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the start of creation. ⁵For they deliberately overlook this fact: that the heavens existed long ago, and the earth was formed out of water and through water by the word of God, ⁶Whereby the age that then was, while overflowed with the waters, perished. ⁷But by that same word the present heavens and earth are stored up for fire, being kept until the day of judgment and destruction of ungodly people. ⁸But do not overlook this one fact, dear friends: that with the Lord one day is like a thousand years, and a thousand years like one day. ⁹The Lord is not slow about his promise, as some consider slowness, but is patient toward you, not wanting anyone to perish but everyone to come to repentance. ¹⁰But the day of the Lord will come like a thief, and then the heavens will pass away with a roar, and the heavenly bodies will be dissolved with intense heat, and the earth and the works done on it will be exposed. ¹¹Since all these things are to be dissolved in this way, what sort of people ought you to be in lives of holiness and godliness, ¹²Indeed, looking for and hasting to the coming of the day of God, wherein the sky being on fire will be dissolved, and the elements will melt with fervent heat? ¹³But according to his promise we are waiting for new heavens and a new earth in which righteousness dwells. ¹⁴Therefore, dear friends, since you are waiting for these things, be diligent to be found by him without spot or blemish, and at peace. ¹⁵And regard the patience of our Lord as salvation, just as our dear brother Paul also wrote to you according to the wisdom given to him, ¹⁶As also in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things. In which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, to their own destruction. ¹⁷You therefore, dear friends, since you know this in advance, be on your guard so that you are not carried away by the error of lawless people and lose your own stability. ¹⁸But grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. To him be the glory both now and to the day of eternity. Amen.

1. The reference to a 'second letter' (deuteran epistolēn) identifies 1 Peter as the first. The word eilikrinē ('sincere, pure, unmixed') literally means 'judged by sunlight' — tested and found genuine. Peter's purpose is not to introduce new teaching but to activate (diegeirō, 'stir up, rouse from sleep') what they already know.
2. Peter places two sources of authority side by side: the Old Testament prophets and the apostolic witness. The phrase tēs tōn apostolōn hymōn entolēs tou kyriou kai sōtēros ('the commandment of the Lord and Savior through your apostles') establishes a chain of authority: the Lord commands, the apostles transmit, the churches receive. This two-testament consciousness (prophets + apostles) anticipates the later canonical structure of the Christian Bible.
3. The Greek en empaigmonē empaiktai ('with mocking, mockers') is a cognate construction — the mockers mock. Their behavior is driven by desire (kata tas idias epithymias, 'according to their own desires') rather than by truth — the mocking of Christ's return is not intellectual doubt but moral convenience. If there is no coming judgment, there is no moral accountability.
4. The scoffers' argument is what modern philosophy would call uniformitarianism — the assumption that natural processes continue unchanging, therefore no divine intervention (parousia) should be expected. 'The fathers fell asleep' (hoi pateres ekoimēthēsan) refers to the first generation of Christians who died without seeing the return — their death seems to disprove the promise.
4. The rhetorical question 'Where is the promise?' (Pou estin hē epangelia) echoes the Old Testament taunt pattern: 'Where is your God?' (Psalm 42:3, 10; Joel 2:17; Malachi 2:17).
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalm 42:3. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Joel 2:17. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Malachi 2:17. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. The Greek lanthanei autous touto thelontas ('it escapes them, this being willing' — i.e., 'they willingly ignore') marks their ignorance as deliberate, not innocent. Peter's counter-argument begins with creation: the world was not always as it is. It was formed by God's word (tō tou theou logō) out of and through water — referencing Genesis 1:2-9, where the primordial waters are separated and dry land appears at God's command.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 1:2-9 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The Greek di' hōn ('through which things') refers back to both the water and the word — the same elements that formed the world were used to destroy it in the flood. The uniformitarian argument ('everything continues unchanged') is refuted by history: there was a cataclysmic interruption. The word kataklustheis ('deluged, flooded') is the root of English 'cataclysm.'
7. The parallel is precise: as the ancient world was destroyed by water, the present world is reserved (tēroumenoi, 'being kept, guarded') for destruction by fire. The word tethēsaismenoi ('stored up, treasured') is ironic — the heavens and earth are 'treasured' for fire as one stores up valuables. The concept of cosmic conflagration by fire was also present in Stoic philosophy (ekpyrosis), which may have made Peter's argument accessible to Hellenistic readers.
8. Peter quotes Psalm 90:4 ('A thousand years in your sight are like a day that has just gone by'), but adds the reverse — not only does a millennium seem brief to God, but a single day can contain what seems like a millennium's worth of divine activity. The point is that God operates on a fundamentally different time scale. What seems like a 'delay' from a human perspective may be an instant in divine reckoning.
8. The verb lanthanetō ('let it escape, let it be hidden') echoes verse 5 where the same root described the scoffers' willful ignorance. Peter tells believers: do not make the same mistake of ignoring crucial facts.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalms 90:4 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. This verse reframes the 'delay' of the parousia: what appears to be divine procrastination is actually divine patience (makrothymēi, 'is long-tempered, is patient'). The purpose of the delay is soteriological — God extends the time before judgment so that more people have opportunity for repentance (metanoian, 'change of mind, turning of life direction').

9. The phrase mē boulomenos tinas apolesthai ('not wanting anyone to perish') expresses God's desire for universal salvation, while the history of judgment in chapter 2 shows that this desire does not override human choice. The tension between divine patience and divine justice runs throughout the letter.
10. The thief simile comes from Jesus himself (Matthew 24:43, Luke 12:39) and is used by Paul (1 Thessalonians 5:2). The Greek rhoizēdon ('with a rushing sound, with a roar, with a loud noise') appears only here in the New Testament — it describes the sound of an arrow in flight, the hiss of a serpent, or the rush of a flame.
10. The Greek stoicheia ('elements, elemental substances, heavenly bodies') could refer to the four classical elements (earth, water, air, fire), the celestial bodies (sun, moon, stars), or the spiritual 'elemental forces' (cf. Galatians 4:3, 9). Given the cosmological context, 'heavenly bodies' is most likely.
10. A major textual variant exists in the final clause: some manuscripts read katakaesetai ('will be burned up'), others heurethēsetai ('will be found/exposed'). The SBLGNT reads heurethēsetai, which is the more difficult reading and likely original — the earth and its works will be 'found out,' 'laid bare,' 'exposed' before God's judgment.
11. Peter draws ethical implications from eschatology: if everything material will be dissolved (lyomenōn, 'being loosened, being destroyed'), then clinging to material things is foolish and investing in holy conduct is wise. The rhetorical question potapous dei ('what sort must you be') expects the answer: people of extraordinary holiness and devotion. The plural hagiois anastrophais kai eusebeiais ('holy conducts and godlinesses') emphasizes that holiness and godliness are expressed in multiple, varied ways.
12. The Greek speudontas ('hastening, speeding up') is striking — believers can actually hasten the day of God's coming. How? The traditional interpretation is through repentance, holy living, and proclamation of the gospel (cf. v. 9, where God waits for all to come to repentance). The rabbinical tradition also held that Israel's repentance could hasten the Messiah's coming.
12. The phrase tēs tou theou hēmeras ('the day of God') rather than 'the day of the Lord' (v. 10) shifts the focus from judgment to the full arrival of God's purposes.
13. Peter draws on Isaiah 65:17 ('I am about to create new heavens and a new earth') and 66:22. The adjective kainous ('new') denotes newness of quality rather than mere chronological succession — not 'another' world but a 'renewed, transformed' world. The verb katoikei ('dwells, inhabits permanently') is present tense, vividly placing the reader in the future reality where righteousness is not visiting but residing.
13. This verse is the theological climax of the letter — beyond the dissolution of the present order lies not annihilation but renewal. The fire of judgment is the means to the end of a world where righteousness is the permanent atmosphere.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 65:17 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. The adjectives aspiloi kai amōmētoi ('without spot and without blame') echo 1 Peter 1:19, where Christ is described as a lamb 'without defect or blemish' (amōmou kai aspilou). Believers are to mirror the character of their redeemer. The phrase en eirēnē ('in peace, at peace') describes both internal serenity and relational harmony — the opposite of the agitation produced by false teachers.
15. Peter reframes the delay as salvation: God's patience (makrothymian, cf. v. 9) is not weakness but redemptive opportunity. The reference to Paul as 'our dear brother' (ho agapētos hēmōn adelphos Paulos) is warm and collegial, despite the confrontation between them recorded in Galatians 2:11. Peter acknowledges Paul's wisdom as divinely given (kata tēn dotheisan autō sophian, 'according to the wisdom given to him').
16. The phrase en pasais epistolais ('in all the letters') implies Peter knows of a collection of Paul's letters — an early stage of the Pauline corpus taking shape. The candid admission dysnoēta tina ('some things hard to understand') is remarkable — an apostle acknowledging that another apostle's writing is difficult. This honesty has comforted generations of readers who struggle with Paul.
16. The phrase hōs kai tas loipas graphas ('as they do the other Scriptures') is momentous: it places Paul's letters in the same category as graphai ('Scriptures') — one of the earliest attestations of Paul's correspondence being regarded as Scripture alongside the Old Testament.
16. The verb streblousin ('twist, distort, torture on the rack') is violent — these false interpreters put Scripture on the rack and twist it until it says what they want.
17. The warning is practical: foreknowledge of these dangers should produce watchfulness (phylassesthe, 'guard yourselves'). The Greek synapachthentes ('carried away together with, swept along') pictures being caught in a current — the error of the lawless has momentum and can pull the unsuspecting along with it. The word stērigmou ('stability, steadfastness, firm standing') connects to the stable foundation language throughout the letter (1:10, 12).
18. The letter closes where it began — with grace (charis) and knowledge (gnōsis) of Jesus Christ (cf. 1:2). The imperative auxanete ('grow, increase') is the final command: not merely maintain but advance. The phrase eis hēmeran aiōnos ('to the day of eternity') is unusual — it combines temporal ('day') and eternal ('of eternity') language, pointing to a moment that opens into endless duration.
18. The doxology attributes glory (doxa) to Jesus Christ — both now and for eternity — a strong affirmation of his divine status, consistent with the letter's opening identification of Jesus as 'our God and Savior' (1:1).

Summary: First John opens without a standard epistolary greeting, plunging directly into proclamation: what was from the beginning, heard, seen, and touched — the word of life — is now declared so that the readers may share in fellowship with the Father and the Son. John then states the letter's foundational theological assertion: 'God is light, and in him there is no darkness at all.' The remainder of the chapter tests three claims against this reality: those who say they have fellowship with God but walk in darkness lie; those who walk in the light have fellowship and the blood of Jesus cleanses them; and those who claim to be without sin deceive themselves.

What Makes This Remarkable: The prologue (vv. 1-4) deliberately echoes the prologue of John's Gospel ('In the beginning was the Word'), but shifts from cosmic theology to sensory testimony — what we have heard, seen, gazed upon, and touched. The declaration 'God is light' (v. 5) is one of the three 'God is' statements in John's writings (alongside 'God is spirit' in John 4:24 and 'God is love' in 1 John 4:8, 16). The interplay of light and darkness throughout the chapter establishes the moral dualism that structures the entire letter.

Translation Friction: First John has no named author, sender, recipient, or greeting — it reads more like a theological treatise or homily than a letter. Tradition attributes it to the apostle John, author of the Fourth Gospel. The Greek is notably simple — short sentences, limited vocabulary, repeated patterns — yet the theology is profound. We render the simplicity of the Greek honestly rather than adding complexity.

Connections: The prologue echoes John 1:1-14 (the Word who was from the beginning). The light/darkness motif connects to John 1:4-5, 3:19-21, and 8:12. The confession and cleansing language (vv. 7-9) resonates with Psalm 32, Psalm 51, and the Day of Atonement ritual. The 'advocate' (paraklētos) introduced in 2:1 connects to Jesus's promise of the Paraclete in John 14-16.

¹What was from the beginning, what we have heard, what we have seen with our eyes, what we have gazed upon and our hands have touched — concerning the word of life — ²This life appeared, and we have seen it. We testify to it and proclaim to you the eternal life that was with the Father and was revealed to us. ³That which we possess seen and listened to declare we to you, that you as well may possess fellowship with us — and truly our fellowship is with the Parent, and with his Descendant Jesus Christ. ⁴And we are writing these things so that our joy may be complete. ⁵This is the message we have heard from him and proclaim to you: God is light, and in him there is no darkness at all. ⁶If we say we have fellowship with him while walking in darkness, we lie and do not practice the truth. ⁷And the blood of jesus christ his son cleanseth us from all sin, but if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another. ⁸And the truth is not in us, if we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves. ⁹And to cleanse us from all unrighteousness, if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins. ¹⁰And his word is not in us, if we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar.

1. The fourfold 'what' (ho) creates an accumulating sensory testimony: hearing, seeing, gazing, and touching. The progression moves from the most common sense (hearing) to the most intimate (touching). The word etheasametha ('gazed upon, beheld, contemplated') implies sustained, attentive looking — not a glance but prolonged observation. The verb epsēlaphēsan ('touched, handled, felt') is the same verb used in Luke 24:39 where the risen Jesus invites the disciples to touch him.
1. The phrase peri tou logou tēs zōēs ('concerning the word of life') identifies the subject: this sensory testimony is about the logos — the same 'Word' of John 1:1, now encountered through physical senses. This opening directly counters any docetic denial of Christ's physical reality.
2. The parenthetical structure mirrors John's habit of interrupting his thought to expand on a crucial point. The phrase hētis ēn pros ton patera ('which was with the Father') directly echoes John 1:1 ('the Word was with God'). The preposition pros ('with, toward') implies face-to-face relationship, not mere proximity.
2. Three verbs describe the apostolic response to seeing the life: heōrakamen ('we have seen' — perfect tense, the seeing has permanent effect), martyroumen ('we testify' — present tense, the testimony continues), and apangellomen ('we proclaim' — present tense, the announcement goes on). Sight produces testimony produces proclamation.
3. The purpose of the proclamation is koinōnia ('fellowship, participation, sharing, partnership'). This is not casual social interaction but deep communion — first horizontal (with us) and then vertical (with the Father and with his Son). The fellowship with the apostolic community is simultaneously fellowship with God. There is no private, individualistic spirituality here — relationship with God is mediated through and expressed in community.
3. The phrase meta tou patros kai meta tou huiou autou Iēsou Christou places the Father and the Son as equal partners in fellowship — a casual but profound affirmation of the Son's divine status.
4. Some manuscripts read 'your joy' (hymōn) rather than 'our joy' (hēmōn). The SBLGNT reads hēmōn ('our'). The choice matters: 'our joy' means John's joy is completed when the recipients enter into fellowship — the writer's joy depends on the readers' response. This echoes John 15:11 and 16:24, where Jesus speaks of his joy being made complete in his disciples.
5. The word angelia ('message, announcement') appears only here and in 3:11 in the New Testament. John claims this message came directly from Christ ('from him' — ap' autou). The declaration ho theos phōs estin ('God is light') is one of John's three great 'God is' statements (with 'God is spirit' in John 4:24 and 'God is love' in 4:8, 16).
5. The double negation skotia en autō ouk estin oudemia ('darkness in him is not — none') is emphatically redundant in Greek, using both ouk and oudemia to eliminate any possibility of darkness in God. This absolute claim sets up the ethical tests that follow.
6. The first of three conditional tests (vv. 6, 8, 10), each beginning with 'if we say' (ean eipōmen). The verb peripatōmen ('walk') is a Hebrew idiom (halak) for one's manner of life — how a person conducts themselves daily. John's test is simple: claimed fellowship with the God who is light is contradicted by a life characterized by darkness. The phrase ou poioumen tēn alētheian ('we do not do the truth') treats truth as something practiced, not merely believed — truth is lived.
7. Walking in the light produces two results: fellowship with one another (koinōnian met' allēlōn — note: not fellowship with God, which is assumed, but with each other) and ongoing cleansing from sin. The present tense katharizei ('cleanses, keeps cleansing') indicates continuous purification, not a one-time event. The blood of Jesus is not a past transaction only but an ongoing reality for those who walk in the light.
7. The scope is comprehensive: apo pasēs hamartias ('from all sin, from every sin') — no sin is beyond the cleansing power of Christ's blood for those who walk in the light.
8. The second 'if we say' test. The claim to sinlessness is not merely mistaken but self-deceptive (heautous planōmen, 'we lead ourselves astray'). The Greek hamartian ouk echomen ('we do not have sin') likely addresses a proto-Gnostic claim that the enlightened are beyond sin. John counters: to deny the reality of sin is to exile truth from oneself. Note the distinction between 'having sin' (the ongoing reality of sinfulness, v. 8) and 'committing sins' (specific acts, v. 9).
9. The Greek homologōmen ('confess, acknowledge openly') literally means 'to say the same thing' — to agree with God's assessment of our sin, to call it what it is. The basis for forgiveness is not human merit but God's character: pistos ('faithful' — he keeps his promises) and dikaios ('just, righteous' — his forgiveness is consistent with his justice, not a violation of it).
9. The dual result of confession is forgiveness (aphē, 'release, cancellation') of sins and cleansing (katharisē, 'purification') from all unrighteousness. Forgiveness addresses the guilt; cleansing addresses the stain.

10. The third 'if we say' test escalates the stakes: denying our sin does not merely deceive ourselves (v. 8) but makes God a liar (pseustēn poioumen auton). The perfect tense hēmartēkamen ('have not sinned') claims a sinless history, which contradicts God's own testimony that all have sinned. The consequence — 'his word is not in us' (ho logos autou ouk estin en hēmin) — means total alienation from God's truth. This is the most severe of the three tests.

Summary: First John 2 develops the letter's central themes of fellowship with God, obedience, and love. John begins by describing Jesus as the advocate (parakletos) and atoning sacrifice for the world's sins, then establishes that knowing God is demonstrated by keeping his commandments — particularly the command to love. The chapter introduces the famous triad of worldly temptations (the desire of the flesh, the desire of the eyes, and the pride of life) and warns that the world is passing away. John then addresses the appearance of 'antichrists' — those who have left the community and deny that Jesus is the Christ — and reassures believers that they possess an anointing (chrisma) from the Holy One that guards them in truth.

What Makes This Remarkable: The term parakletos ('advocate, one called alongside') connects Jesus's ongoing heavenly ministry to the same word used for the Holy Spirit in John's Gospel (John 14:16, 26; 15:26; 16:7). John's 'antichrist' language appears here for the first time in the New Testament — not as an apocalyptic beast figure but as a present theological reality: anyone who denies the Father and the Son. The concept of chrisma ('anointing') given to all believers democratizes what was once reserved for kings and priests, echoing the promise of Jeremiah 31:34 that all would know the LORD directly.

Translation Friction: The 'new commandment that is also old' (vv. 7-8) presents an apparent paradox that John resolves by locating the newness in its realization through Christ. The identity of the 'antichrists' likely refers to a specific secession from the Johannine community (v. 19: 'they went out from us'), not a future eschatological figure. The three-stage address to 'children,' 'fathers,' and 'young men' (vv. 12-14) may reflect age groups, spiritual maturity levels, or rhetorical variation — the text does not resolve this clearly.

Connections: The advocacy of Christ before the Father (v. 1) connects to the high-priestly intercession theme of Hebrews 7:25 and Romans 8:34. The 'new commandment' echoes John 13:34. The 'antichrist' concept draws on Daniel 7-8 and the Olivet Discourse (Mark 13:22). The warning about worldly desires parallels James 4:4 and the temptation narrative of Genesis 3 (the tree was good for food, a delight to the eyes, and desired to make one wise).

1My little children, I am writing these things to you so that you may not sin. But if anyone does sin, we have an advocate with the Father — Jesus Christ, the righteous one. 2He himself is the atoning sacrifice for our sins, and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world. 3And by this we know that we have come to know him: if we keep his commandments. 4Whoever says "I have come to know him" but does not keep his commandments is a liar, and the truth is not in that person. 5But whoever keeps his word, in that person the love of God has truly been made complete. By this we know that we are in him. 6Whoever claims to remain in him ought to walk in the same way that he walked. 7Beloved, I am not writing a new commandment to you, but an old commandment that you have had from the beginning. The old commandment is the word that you heard. 8Yet I am writing a new commandment to you, which is true in him and in you, because the darkness is passing away and the true light is already shining. 9Whoever says he is in the light yet hates his brother is still in the darkness even now. 10Whoever loves his brother remains in the light, and there is no cause for stumbling in him. 11But whoever hates his brother is in the darkness and walks in the darkness, and does not know where he is going, because the darkness has blinded his eyes. 12I am writing to you, little children, because your sins have been forgiven on account of his name. 13I am writing to you, fathers, because you have known him who is from the beginning. I am writing to you, young men, because you have overcome the evil one. 14I have written to you, children, because you have known the Father. I have written to you, fathers, because you have known him who is from the beginning. I have written to you, young men, because you are strong, and the word of God remains in you, and you have overcome the evil one. 15Do not love the world or the things in the world. If anyone loves the world, the love of the Father is not in that person. 16For everything in the world — the desire of the flesh, the desire of the eyes, and the arrogance of life — is not from the Father but is from the world. ¹⁷And the world is passing away along with its desires, but whoever does the will of God remains forever. ¹⁸Children, it is the last hour, and just as you heard that the antichrist is coming, even now many antichrists have appeared. From this we know that it is the last hour. ¹⁹They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would have remained with us. But they went out so that it would be made clear that none of them were of us. ²⁰But you have an anointing from the Holy One, and you all have knowledge. ²¹I have not written to you because you do not know the truth, but because you do know it, and because no lie comes from the truth. ²²Who is the liar, if not the one who denies that Jesus is the Christ? This is the antichrist — the one who denies the Father and the Son. ²³Everyone who denies the Son does not have the Father either. Whoever confesses the Son has the Father also. ²⁴As for you, let what you heard from the beginning remain in you. If what you heard from the beginning remains in you, then you also will remain in the Son and in the Father. ²⁵And this is the promise that he himself promised us: eternal life. ²⁶I have written these things to you about those who are trying to deceive you. ²⁷As for you, the anointing that you received from him remains in you, and you have no need for anyone to teach you. But as his anointing teaches you about all things — and is true and is not a lie — just as it has taught you, remain in him. ²⁸And now, little children, remain in him, so that when he appears we may have confidence and not shrink back from him in shame at his coming. ²⁹If you know that he is righteous, you know that everyone who practices righteousness has been born of him.

1. The Greek teknia ('little children') is a term of intimate affection, not condescension, reflecting the elder's pastoral relationship with the community. The word parakletos ('advocate, helper, one called alongside') is the same term Jesus uses for the Holy Spirit in John 14:16. Here it describes Christ's ongoing intercessory role before the Father. The adjective dikaion ('righteous') qualifies Christ as the perfect advocate — his righteousness is the ground of his intercession.
2. The Greek hilasmos ('atoning sacrifice, propitiation, expiation') carries both the sense of turning away wrath (propitiation) and covering sin (expiation). The word echoes the Hebrew kapporet (mercy seat) and the Day of Atonement ritual of Leviticus 16. The scope — 'the whole world' (holou tou kosmou) — extends the atonement beyond the believing community, a remarkable universalizing statement.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Leviticus 16. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
4. John uses two different tenses of ginoskein ('to know'): the present ginoskomen ('we know' — ongoing awareness) and the perfect egnokamen ('we have come to know' — completed action with present results). True knowledge of God is not abstract or mystical but is verified by obedience. This epistemological test recurs throughout the letter.
5. John's blunt designation — pseustes ('liar') — is characteristic of the letter's stark moral categories. The claim to know God while disobeying him is not merely mistaken but constitutes a lie. 'The truth is not in him' treats truth as an indwelling reality, not merely a correct proposition.
6. The phrase 'the love of God' (he agape tou theou) is ambiguous in Greek — it could mean God's love for us, our love for God, or the kind of love that comes from God. The context suggests all three dimensions. The verb teteleiōtai ('has been made complete, perfected') is a perfect passive, indicating a divine work brought to completion in the obedient believer.
7. The Greek peripatein ('to walk') is the standard metaphor for conducting one's life, corresponding to the Hebrew halak. 'As he walked' (kathōs ekeinos periepatēsen) refers to Jesus's earthly life as the model for Christian conduct. The verb opheilei ('ought, is obligated') expresses moral necessity, not mere suggestion.
8. The SBLGNT reads agapetoi ('beloved') rather than the KJV's 'brethren.' The 'old commandment from the beginning' likely refers to the love command that the community received when they first heard the gospel (cf. John 13:34). The paradox of old and new is resolved in the next verse.
9. The commandment is both old (rooted in the Torah's love command, Leviticus 19:18) and new (realized in Christ and the believing community). The present tense paragetai ('is passing away') and phainei ('is shining') indicate an eschatological transition already underway — the new age has begun but the old has not yet fully departed. This 'already but not yet' tension characterizes Johannine eschatology.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Leviticus 19:18 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
11. The test is relational: hatred of a fellow believer (adelphos, 'brother') invalidates any claim to spiritual enlightenment. The phrase heōs arti ('even now, until this moment') suggests someone who has never actually moved from darkness to light, despite their claim.

10. The Greek skandalon ('cause of stumbling, trap, offense') could mean either that the loving person does not stumble, or that the loving person does not cause others to stumble. Both senses may be intended — love both secures the believer and removes obstacles for others.
11. The threefold description — being in darkness, walking in darkness, not knowing one's direction — forms a devastating portrait of spiritual blindness. The verb etyflōsen ('has blinded') is aorist, suggesting a decisive event: hatred did not merely dim but extinguished sight. The imagery echoes John 12:35.
12. The address teknia ('little children') encompasses the whole community. The perfect passive apheōntai ('have been forgiven') indicates a completed and enduring reality. Forgiveness comes 'on account of his name' — that is, through the person and work of Christ, not through the community's merit.
13. The 'fathers' (pateres) are characterized by deep, mature knowledge of Christ, 'him who is from the beginning.' The 'young men' (neaniskoi) are characterized by victory over 'the evil one' (ton poneron) — likely Satan. The perfect tenses (egnōkate, nenikēkate) indicate accomplished realities that continue in force.
14. The shift from graphō ('I am writing') to egrapsa ('I have written') may indicate a second pass through the same groups, or an epistolary aorist referring to the letter itself. The SBLGNT reads paidia ('children') for the first address here, a slightly different word than teknia in v. 12 but with similar meaning. The young men's strength is grounded in two realities: the indwelling word of God and their victory over the evil one.
15. The Greek kosmos ('world') here does not mean the created order (which God loves, John 3:16) but the world-system organized in opposition to God — the values, priorities, and allegiances that compete with devotion to the Father. The prohibition is a present imperative with mē, forbidding an ongoing disposition.
16. The triad of worldly temptations has often been compared to the threefold temptation in Genesis 3:6 (good for food, a delight to the eyes, desired to make one wise) and the temptation of Jesus (Matthew 4:1-11). The Greek epithymia ('desire, craving') is morally neutral in itself but here denotes disordered desire directed at flesh-gratification and visual acquisitiveness. The word alazoneia ('arrogance, boastfulness, pretension') refers to the vain confidence that comes from material security (bios here meaning 'livelihood, possessions' rather than mere 'life').
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 3:6. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. The present tense parageitai ('is passing away') conveys the world's transience as an ongoing reality, not merely a future event. The contrast between the passing world and the one who 'remains forever' (menei eis ton aiōna) echoes the Johannine theme of abiding. Doing the will of God is not legalistic compliance but alignment with God's eternal purposes.
18. The phrase eschatē hōra ('last hour') without the article suggests a qualitative description of the present era rather than a precise chronological claim. John's innovation is to pluralize 'antichrist' (antichristoi polloi) — the expected single eschatological opponent has multiplied into many present figures. The word antichristos appears only in the Johannine Epistles (here, 2:22, 4:3, and 2 John 7) in the entire New Testament.
19. This verse reveals the concrete historical situation behind the letter: a group has seceded from the community. John interprets their departure theologically — it was not a loss but a revealing. The contrary-to-fact conditional (ei ... ēsan ... memeneikeisan an) asserts that genuine belonging would have produced perseverance. Their leaving exposed what was always true.
20. The Greek chrisma ('anointing') is etymologically related to Christos ('anointed one'). In the Old Testament, anointing was reserved for kings, priests, and occasionally prophets. John declares that all believers possess this anointing. The SBLGNT reading oidate pantes ('you all know') rather than oidate panta ('you know all things') emphasizes that every believer — not just leaders — has been given knowledge through the Spirit.
21. John writes not to inform but to confirm — the community already possesses the truth through their anointing. The final clause establishes an absolute separation between truth and falsehood that will undergird his identification of the secessionists' teaching as lies.
22. The definite article (ho pseustēs, 'the liar') elevates this beyond a general statement — this is the liar par excellence. The specific denial — that Jesus is the Christ — likely reflects a proto-Gnostic or Cerinthian position that separated the human Jesus from the divine Christ. John insists that denying the Son necessarily entails denying the Father, because the two are inseparable in the Johannine theological framework.
23. The verb homologeōn ('confessing, acknowledging') is the counterpart to arnoumenos ('denying'). The relationship with the Father is mediated entirely through the Son — there is no access to the Father apart from the Son. This echoes Jesus's words in John 14:6-9. Some manuscripts omit the second clause; the SBLGNT includes it.
24. The emphatic hymeis ('you') at the beginning contrasts the faithful community with the secessionists. 'From the beginning' (ap' archēs) refers to the original apostolic message they received. The logic is reciprocal: if the message remains in them, they remain in the Son and the Father. Abiding in the truth and abiding in God are inseparable.
25. The promise (epangelia) of eternal life (tēn zōēn tēn aiōnion) is the content of remaining in the Father and Son. In Johannine theology, eternal life is not merely future but a present reality that begins with knowing God (John 17:3). The emphatic autos ('he himself') likely refers to Christ.
26. The participle planōntōn ('those deceiving, leading astray') is present tense, indicating ongoing activity. The secessionists are not merely gone — they are actively attempting to draw the remaining community after them. The verb planein ('to lead astray, deceive') is the root of the English 'planet' (a wandering star) and captures the sense of being led off course.

27. The statement that believers 'have no need for anyone to teach you' does not reject all teaching (John's letter is itself teaching) but asserts that the community possesses an internal criterion — the Spirit's anointing — by which to evaluate external claims. This echoes Jeremiah 31:34 ('they shall all know me') and Jesus's promise of the Spirit of truth in John 16:13. The final menete ('remain') is an imperative: continue abiding in him.
27. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Jeremiah 31:34. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
28. The term parrēsian ('confidence, boldness, freedom of speech') was a civic virtue in Greek culture — the right to speak openly before authority. Here it describes the believer's posture before Christ at his return. The word parousia ('coming, presence, arrival') is the standard early Christian term for the second coming of Christ. John shifts to the first person plural ('we may have') — he includes himself among those who will face this moment.
29. The verb gegennētai ('has been born') is a perfect passive, indicating a divine act with enduring consequences — being born of God is not a human achievement but a divine begetting. The logic runs from God's character to the believer's conduct: because he is righteous, those born of him will practice righteousness. This sets up the major theme of chapter 3.

Summary: First John 3 opens with an astonished declaration of God's love in calling believers his children, then develops the incompatibility of habitual sin with divine parentage. John draws a sharp line between the children of God and the children of the devil, using Cain as the paradigmatic example of hatred. The central ethical demand is love expressed in concrete action — not merely in words but in laying down one's life for others, as Christ did. The chapter closes with the assurance that God is greater than our self-condemning hearts, and that obedience and faith produce confidence before God and the indwelling of the Spirit.

What Makes This Remarkable: *The phrase 'what we will be has not yet appeared' (v. 2) is one of the New Testament's most striking admissions of eschatological incompleteness — the full transformation of believers awaits Christ's return. The definition of sin as anomia ('lawlessness,' v. 4) is theologically significant: sin is not merely moral failure but rebellion against God's ordering of reality. The Cain reference (v. 12) is the only New Testament use of Cain outside Hebrews 11:4 and Jude 11, and John uniquely attributes his murder to spiritual allegiance to the evil one.*

Translation Friction: Verse 6 ('no one who remains in him keeps on sinning') and verse 9 ('no one born of God practices sin') have generated extensive debate. The present tenses in Greek indicate habitual, characteristic action — John is describing a pattern of life, not claiming sinless perfection (which would contradict 1:8-10 and 2:1). The tension between the ideal stated here and the realistic acknowledgment of sin earlier in the letter is deliberate, reflecting the 'already but not yet' of Christian existence.

Connections: The children-of-God theme connects to John 1:12-13 and Romans 8:14-17. The Cain narrative draws from Genesis 4. The command to love one another echoes John 13:34-35. The laying-down-of-life language directly mirrors John 10:11, 15 and 15:13. The confidence-before-God theme anticipates the boldness language of Hebrews 4:16 and 10:19-22.

¹See what kind of love the Father has given to us, that we should be called children of God — and so we are! The reason the world does not know us is that it did not know him. ²Beloved, we are now children of God, and what we will be has not yet been revealed. We know that when he appears, we will be like him, because we will see him as he is. ³And everyone who has this hope fixed on him purifies himself, just as he is pure. ⁴Everyone who practices sin also practices lawlessness, and sin is lawlessness. ⁵And you know that he appeared in order to take away sins, and in him there is no sin. ⁶No one who remains in him keeps on sinning. No one who keeps on sinning has seen him or known him. ⁷Little children, let no one deceive you. Whoever practices righteousness is righteous, just as he is righteous. ⁸Whoever practices sin is of the devil, because the devil has been sinning from the beginning. The Son of God appeared for this purpose: to destroy the works of the devil. ⁹No one who has been born of God practices sin, because God's seed remains in that person, and he cannot keep on sinning, because he has been born of God. ¹⁰By this it is evident who are the children of God and who are the children of the devil: whoever does not practice righteousness is not of God, nor is the one who does not love his brother. ¹¹That we should love one another, and for this was the message that you heard from the beginning. ¹²We should not be like Cain, who was of the evil one and murdered his brother. And why did he murder him? Because his own works were evil, and his brother's were righteous. ¹³Do not be surprised, brothers, if the world hates you. ¹⁴We know that we have passed out of death into life, because we love the brothers. Whoever does not love remains in death. ¹⁵Everyone who hates his brother is a murderer, and you know that no murderer has eternal life remaining in him. ¹⁶By this we have come to know love: that he laid down his life for us. And we ought to lay down our lives for the brothers. ¹⁷But if anyone has the world's possessions and sees his brother in need, yet closes his heart against him, how does the love of God remain in that person? ¹⁸Little children, let us not love in word or in speech, but in action and in truth. ¹⁹By this we will know that we are of the truth, and we will reassure our hearts before him, ²⁰Because if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knows all things. ²¹Beloved, if our heart does not condemn us, we have confidence before God, ²²Whatsoever we ask, we accept of him, on account of the fact that we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight. ²³And this is his commandment: that we believe in the name of his Son Jesus Christ and love one another, just as he commanded us. ²⁴Whoever keeps his commandments remains in God, and God in that person. And by this we know that he remains in us: by the Spirit that he has given us.

1. The Greek potapēn ('what kind of, what manner of') expresses astonishment — this is not merely great love but a foreign, unexpected quality of love. The phrase kai esmen ('and we are') is a parenthetical exclamation affirming that the title 'children of God' is not honorific but real. We render tekna ('children') rather than the KJV's 'sons' because the Greek tekna is gender-inclusive and emphasizes birth-relationship, while huiioi ('sons') would emphasize legal status.
2. The tension between 'now' (nyn) and 'not yet' (oupō) captures the eschatological position of believers — genuine identity now, full transformation later. The promise 'we will be like him' (homoioi autō esometha) is stunning in its scope and deliberately left undefined. The causal clause 'because we will see him as he is' suggests that the vision of Christ itself will be transformative — seeing and becoming are linked.
3. The verb hagnizei ('purifies') is the same word used for ceremonial purification in the Septuagint (e.g., Numbers 19). The eschatological hope of transformation produces present ethical effort. The standard is nothing less than Christ's own purity (hagnos).
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Numbers 19 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The Greek anomia ('lawlessness') is not merely 'breaking a rule' but rebellion against God's ordering of reality. The equation 'sin is lawlessness' (hē hamartia estin hē anomia) defines sin in its deepest sense — not as individual infractions but as a fundamental posture of defiance against divine authority. The present participle poiōn ('practicing, doing') indicates habitual action.
5. The verb ephanerōthē ('was manifested, appeared') refers to Christ's incarnation. The verb arē ('take away, remove, bear') echoes John the Baptist's declaration in John 1:29 ('the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world'). Christ's sinlessness is the ground of his ability to remove sin — only one without sin can bear and remove the sin of others.
6. The present tenses (menōn, hamartanei, hamartanōn) are crucial: John is describing habitual, ongoing action. 'No one who remains in him keeps on sinning' does not assert sinless perfection but rather that abiding in Christ and a settled pattern of sin are incompatible. This must be read alongside 1:8-2:2, where John acknowledges that believers do sin and need an advocate. The distinction is between occasional failure and characteristic lifestyle.
7. The warning against deception (mēdeis planatō) suggests the secessionists may have taught that conduct does not reflect spiritual status. John insists on the opposite: practice reveals identity. The standard of comparison is Christ's own righteousness (kathōs ekeinos dikaios estin).
8. The phrase ek tou diabolou ('of the devil, from the devil') indicates origin and allegiance, just as 'born of God' indicates divine origin. The devil's sinning 'from the beginning' (ap' archēs) echoes the serpent narrative of Genesis 3 and Jesus's words in John 8:44. The verb lysē ('destroy, undo, dissolve') means literally 'to loose' — Christ unties, dismantles, and dissolves the devil's works.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 3 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The word sperma ('seed') has been interpreted as God's word, the Holy Spirit, or the divine nature implanted in the believer. In context, it likely refers to the divine life-principle communicated through new birth. 'Cannot sin' (ou dynatai hamartanein) does not mean absolute impossibility but moral incompatibility — the new nature resists and is fundamentally opposed to habitual sin. The present infinitive hamartanein describes an ongoing pattern, not a single act.
10. John establishes two tests by which spiritual parentage is revealed: practicing righteousness and loving fellow believers. The phrase 'children of the devil' (ta tekna tou diabolou) is stark — just as there are children of God by divine birth, there are children of the devil by spiritual allegiance. This dualistic framework serves pastoral urgency, not philosophical speculation.
11. The word angelia ('message') appears only here and in 1:5 in the New Testament. In 1:5 the message was 'God is light'; here it is the command of mutual love. These two messages — God's nature and the resulting ethical obligation — frame the letter's argument. 'From the beginning' (ap' archēs) again refers to the original proclamation of the gospel.

12. The verb esphaxen ('slaughtered, butchered') is a violent word often used for slaying sacrificial animals (it appears in Revelation for the slaughter of the Lamb, 5:6). John attributes Cain's act to his spiritual origin — he 'was of the evil one' (ek tou ponērou ēn). The rhetorical question and answer reveal that hatred of righteousness motivates murder. This interprets Genesis 4 through a spiritual-warfare lens.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 4. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. The imperative mē thaumazete ('do not be surprised, stop marveling') echoes Jesus's words in John 15:18-19. The world's hatred of believers follows the same pattern as Cain's hatred of Abel — the righteous provoke hostility simply by being righteous. The conditional ei ('if') with the indicative misei suggests this is a real condition: the world does hate them.
14. The perfect metabebēkamen ('we have passed') describes a completed transition with enduring results — believers have already crossed from the realm of death into the realm of life. Love for fellow believers is not the cause of this transition but the evidence of it. The stark alternative — remaining in death — is the default human condition apart from divine intervention.
15. The Greek anthrōpoktonos ('murderer,' literally 'man-killer') is the same word used of the devil in John 8:44. John equates hatred with murder in its spiritual essence — the same move Jesus makes in the Sermon on the Mount (Matthew 5:21-22). The logic is relentless: hatred = murder, and no murderer possesses eternal life.
16. The phrase tēn psychēn autou ethēken ('he laid down his life') directly echoes Jesus's words in John 10:11, 15 and 15:13. The Greek psychē means 'life, soul, self.' Love is defined not by sentiment but by sacrifice. The obligation (opheilomen, 'we ought') extends the pattern of Christ's self-giving to all believers — this is the highest expression of the love command.
17. The Greek splanchna ('inner organs, bowels, heart') was the seat of compassion in ancient thought, corresponding roughly to the modern 'heart.' The verb kleisē ('shuts, closes') is vivid — it pictures someone deliberately closing off the natural response of compassion. John moves from the grand principle (laying down one's life) to the mundane test (sharing material resources), suggesting that daily generosity is the realistic measure of love.
18. The contrast between logō and glōssē ('word' and 'tongue/speech') on one side, and ergō and alētheia ('deed/action' and 'truth') on the other, establishes that genuine love is demonstrated through concrete acts. 'In truth' (en alētheia) adds the dimension of sincerity — the actions must be genuine, not performative.
19. The verb peisomen ('we will persuade, reassure, set at rest') indicates the active process of calming a troubled conscience. Loving in deed and truth provides the believer with objective evidence of genuine faith, which in turn produces inner assurance before God.
20. This is one of the most pastorally significant verses in the letter. The Greek kataginōskē ('condemns, accuses') describes the inner voice of self-accusation. The response is not to dismiss the heart's verdict but to appeal beyond it to God, who 'is greater' — his knowledge of our love and obedience is more comprehensive and more gracious than our own self-assessment. The verse offers comfort to the scrupulous, not license to the careless.
21. The word parrēsian ('confidence, boldness, freedom of speech') reappears from 2:28. A clear conscience — not from self-deception but from genuine love in action — produces bold access to God. This confidence is not self-reliance but the fruit of a life aligned with God's commands.
22. The connection between obedience and answered prayer echoes John 15:7 ('if you remain in me and my words remain in you, ask whatever you wish'). The logic is not transactional — obedience does not earn answers — but relational: the obedient life is aligned with God's will, so its requests are naturally in harmony with his purposes.
23. John distills all of God's commands into two inseparable requirements: faith in Christ and mutual love. The singular 'commandment' (entolē) encompasses both, suggesting they cannot be separated — faith without love, or love without faith, is incomplete. The aorist pisteusōmen ('believe') may point to the decisive act of faith, while the present agapōmen ('love') indicates ongoing practice.
24. The mutual indwelling formula — 'remains in God, and God in that person' — is the hallmark of Johannine theology (cf. John 15:4-5). The Spirit is introduced for the first time in the letter as the means by which believers know God's presence. This sets up the discussion of testing the spirits in chapter 4. The verb edōken ('has given') is aorist, pointing to the definitive gift of the Spirit.

Summary: First John 4 contains the letter's theological and emotional climax. It opens with a call to test the spirits, providing a christological criterion: every spirit that confesses Jesus Christ as having come in the flesh is from God. John then develops the theme that God is love — not merely that God loves, but that love defines his very nature. God's love is demonstrated in sending his Son as an atoning sacrifice, and this love calls forth a response of mutual love among believers. The chapter reaches its apex in the declaration that perfect love drives out fear, and closes with the warning that anyone who claims to love God while hating a brother is a liar.

What Makes This Remarkable: The twin declarations 'God is love' (vv. 8, 16) are among the most quoted sentences in the Bible and represent the deepest theological distillation in the Johannine writings. Notably, John does not say 'love is God' — the statement is not reversible. God defines love, not the reverse. The christological test (vv. 2-3) addresses what appears to be an early docetic heresy that denied the reality of Jesus's physical incarnation. The phrase 'perfect love drives out fear' (v. 18) is psychologically profound and theologically revolutionary, redefining the human relationship to divine judgment.

Translation Friction: The identity of the false prophets and the 'spirit of the antichrist' (vv. 1-3) points to the same secession described in 2:19. The confession 'Jesus Christ has come in the flesh' (v. 2) targets a specific denial — likely a proto-docetic or Cerinthian teaching that the divine Christ merely appeared to be human. The phrase 'he who is in you is greater than he who is in the world' (v. 4) has often been decontextualized; in its original setting, it refers to discernment of true and false teaching, not a general promise of victory.

Connections: The testing of spirits connects to Deuteronomy 13:1-5 and 1 Corinthians 12:3. The incarnation confession echoes John 1:14 ('the Word became flesh'). The 'God is love' declarations connect to the broader biblical narrative of God's chesed (steadfast love) and its ultimate expression in the cross. The fear/love dynamic resonates with Romans 8:15 ('you did not receive a spirit of slavery to fall back into fear'). The 'no one has ever seen God' statement (v. 12) echoes John 1:18.

¹Beloved, do not believe every spirit, but test the spirits to see whether they are from God, because many false prophets have gone out into the world. ²By this you know the Spirit of God: every spirit that confesses that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh is from God, ³Every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God — and this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof you have heard that it should come. And even now already is it in the world. ⁴You are from God, little children, and have overcome them, because he who is in you is greater than he who is in the world. ⁵They are from the world; therefore they speak from the world, and the world listens to them. ⁶We are from God. Whoever knows God listens to us; whoever is not from God does not listen to us. By this we know the Spirit of truth and the spirit of deception. ⁷Beloved, let us love one another, because love is from God, and everyone who loves has been born of God and knows God. ⁸Whoever does not love does not know God, because God is love. ⁹In this the love of God was revealed among us: that God sent his only Son into the world so that we might live through him. ¹⁰In this is love: not that we loved God, but that he loved us and sent his Son as an atoning sacrifice for our sins. ¹¹Beloved, if God loved us in this way, we also ought to love one another. ¹²No one has ever seen God. If we love one another, God remains in us, and his love has been made complete in us. ¹³By this we know that we remain in him and he in us: because he has given us of his Spirit. ¹⁴And we have seen and testify that the Father has sent the Son as Savior of the world. ¹⁵Whoever confesses that Jesus is the Son of God, God remains in that person and that person in God. ¹⁶And we have come to know and have believed the love that God has for us. God is love, and whoever remains in love remains in God, and God remains in that person. ¹⁷In this, love has been made complete among us, so that we may have confidence on the day of judgment, because as he is, so also are we in this world. ¹⁸There is no fear in love, but perfect love drives out fear, because fear has to do with punishment. The one who fears has not been made complete in love. ¹⁹Indeed, we love him, because he first loved us. ²⁰If anyone says, "I love God," and yet hates his brother, he is a liar. For the one who does not love his brother, whom he has seen, cannot love God, whom he has not seen. ²¹And this commandment we have from him: that whoever loves God must also love his brother.

1. The verb dokimazete ('test, examine, prove') was used for testing metals and coins for genuineness. John does not counsel gullibility or blanket suspicion but careful discernment. The connection between 'spirits' and 'false prophets' indicates that John views human teaching as inspired by spiritual powers — behind every prophet stands a spirit, and not all spirits are from God.
2. The confession Iēsoun Christon en sarki elēlythota ('Jesus Christ having come in the flesh') is the christological touchstone. The perfect participle elēlythota ('having come') indicates a completed action with ongoing results — Christ came in the flesh and remains incarnate. This targets any teaching that would deny the reality of the incarnation. The confession is not merely intellectual assent but a public declaration (homologeī).
3. The SBLGNT reads simply 'does not confess Jesus' (mē homologeī ton Iēsoun) rather than the fuller reading in some manuscripts. The brevity may be significant — any diminishment of Jesus, not merely the specific denial of his incarnation, fails the test. The 'spirit of the antichrist' is identified not as a future apocalyptic figure but as a present spiritual reality already operating through false teachers.
4. The perfect nenikēkate ('you have overcome') declares victory as an accomplished fact. The 'them' (autous) refers to the false prophets and the spirits behind them. The ground of victory is not the believers' own strength but the indwelling presence of God (through the Spirit, cf. 3:24). 'He who is in the world' refers to the devil (cf. 5:19).
5. The false teachers' popularity is not a mark of truth but of worldly origin. Their message resonates with the world because it comes from the world. John establishes a diagnostic principle: the audience a message attracts reveals its source. This is not anti-intellectualism but a theological observation about spiritual affinity.
6. The 'we' (hēmeis) likely refers to the apostolic circle — those who bear the original eyewitness testimony (cf. 1:1-3). Response to apostolic teaching becomes a second test of spiritual authenticity. The contrast between 'the Spirit of truth' (to pneuma tēs alētheias, cf. John 14:17, 15:26, 16:13) and 'the spirit of deception' (to pneuma tēs planēs) frames the situation in stark dualistic terms.
7. This verse begins the letter's theological crescendo. Love is traced to its source: it originates in God (ek tou theou). The one who loves demonstrates two realities — divine birth (gegennētai, perfect passive) and knowledge of God (ginōskei, present active). Love is both the evidence and the fruit of the divine relationship.
8. The declaration ho theos agapē estin ('God is love') is one of the most profound theological statements in Scripture. The predicate is without an article, making it qualitative — love characterizes God's very essence. Critically, the statement is not reversible: 'love is God' would be pantheistic. Rather, all genuine love has its source and definition in God's own nature. The aorist ouk egnō ('did not know') suggests the person never truly knew God, not that they lost knowledge.
9. The Greek monogenē ('only, unique, one-of-a-kind') is rendered 'only Son' rather than 'only begotten' because the word emphasizes uniqueness rather than the manner of origin. The perfect apostalken ('has sent') indicates a completed mission with enduring effects. The purpose — 'that we might live' (hina zēsōmen) — defines God's love as life-giving. The verse parallels John 3:16 in its structure and theology.
10. The priority of God's love is emphatic: love originates with God, not with humanity. Human love for God is always a response, never the initiative. The word hilasmon ('atoning sacrifice') reappears from 2:2, connecting God's love directly to the cross. The aorist ēgapēsen ('he loved') and aposteilen ('he sent') point to the historical acts of the incarnation and crucifixion as the definitive demonstration of divine love.
11. The conditional ei ('if') with the indicative is a first-class condition, assuming the reality of the premise: since God has loved us this way. The obligation (opheilomen, 'we ought') flows from the indicative of God's action — the imperative of love is grounded in the prior reality of having been loved. John does not say 'we ought to love God back' but 'we ought to love one another' — divine love redirects outward.
12. The opening statement — 'no one has ever seen God' (theon oudeis pōpote tetheatai) — echoes John 1:18. The invisible God becomes visible, as it were, through the mutual love of his people. The perfect participle teteleiōmenē ('made complete, perfected') indicates that God's love reaches its intended goal and full expression when it flows through believers to one another.
13. The phrase ek tou pneumatōs autou ('of his Spirit') uses the partitive ek, suggesting a share in the Spirit rather than the Spirit in totality — though the theological distinction should not be pressed too far. The Spirit is the inner witness to the mutual indwelling of God and believer, confirming what love makes visible.
14. The 'we' (hēmeis) is emphatic and likely refers to the apostolic eyewitness circle (cf. 1:1-3). The perfect tetheametha ('we have seen') and apostalken ('has sent') indicate enduring realities rooted in historical events. The title sōtēra tou kosmou ('Savior of the world') appears elsewhere only in John 4:42, spoken by the Samaritans — a universalizing title that extends salvation beyond Israel.
15. The confession 'Jesus is the Son of God' is the christological complement to v. 2's confession of the incarnation. Together they affirm both the divinity and the true humanity of Jesus. The result of confession is mutual indwelling — the same reciprocal abiding that characterizes the Father-Son relationship (John 14:10-11) is extended to believers.
16. The second declaration 'God is love' (ho theos agapē estin) now carries the full weight of the chapter's argument. Knowing and believing God's love are paired as twin aspects of a single response — experiential knowledge and volitional trust. The mutual indwelling formula reaches its fullest expression: to remain in love is to remain in God, and to remain in God is to have God remain in you.

17. Love's completion (teteleiōtai) produces confidence (parrēsian) before the final judgment. The remarkable claim 'as he is, so also are we in this world' (kathōs ekeinos estin kai hēmeis esmen) asserts that believers already share Christ's standing before the Father — not because of their own merit but because they abide in love. This is among the most daring statements in the letter.
18. The Greek exō ballei ('casts out, drives out') is forceful — love does not merely soothe fear but expels it entirely. The word kolasin ('punishment') connects fear to the expectation of divine judgment. Perfect love (teleia agapē) — love that has reached its intended goal — eliminates the dread of condemnation. John does not deny the reality of judgment but declares that those who abide in love need not fear it.
19. The SBLGNT omits the object ('him') found in some manuscripts, making the statement broader: we love — in general, in every direction — because God's prior love enables and motivates all of our loving. The adverb prōtos ('first') establishes the absolute priority of divine initiative. Human love is always derivative and responsive.
20. The argument moves from the lesser to the greater: if you cannot love a visible brother, you certainly cannot love the invisible God. The word pseustēs ('liar') reappears (cf. 1:10, 2:4, 2:22), maintaining John's unsparing moral vocabulary. The test is devastatingly practical — love for God is measured by love for the people around you.
21. The chapter closes by fusing love for God and love for one's brother into a single, indivisible commandment. The two cannot be separated — the vertical and horizontal dimensions of love are one. The source of the command (ap' autou, 'from him') could refer to God or to Christ; the ambiguity may be intentional, since both the Father and the Son have issued this command (cf. John 13:34, 15:12, 17).

Summary: First John 5 brings the letter to its conclusion by weaving together its major themes: faith, love, obedience, and assurance. John declares that faith in Jesus as the Son of God overcomes the world, and identifies three witnesses — the Spirit, the water, and the blood — that testify to the truth of Christ. The chapter reaches its crescendo with the assurance of eternal life for those who believe in the Son. John addresses the topic of sin leading to death versus sin not leading to death, and closes with three affirmations introduced by 'we know,' providing the community with certainties to anchor their faith.

What Makes This Remarkable: The threefold witness of Spirit, water, and blood (vv. 7-8) is one of the most debated passages in the Johannine writings. The water likely refers to Jesus's baptism, the blood to his crucifixion, and the Spirit to ongoing divine testimony — together affirming that Jesus was the Christ from baptism through death, not merely at one point. The Comma Johanneum (the Trinitarian expansion found in some late manuscripts at vv. 7-8) is not present in the earliest Greek manuscripts and is not part of the SBLGNT text. The distinction between sin 'leading to death' and sin 'not leading to death' (vv. 16-17) has generated extensive discussion throughout church history.

Translation Friction: The Comma Johanneum (a Trinitarian gloss reading 'the Father, the Word, and the Holy Spirit, and these three are one') found in later Latin manuscripts and some late Greek manuscripts is absent from all early Greek manuscripts, the earliest Latin manuscripts, and the earliest church fathers. It is not included in the SBLGNT and is accordingly not included in our rendering. The identity of the 'sin leading to death' (v. 16) remains disputed: possibilities include apostasy, the denial of Christ that characterizes the secessionists, blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, or mortal sin in a later Catholic sense. In context, the most natural referent is the christological denial of the secessionists.

Connections: The overcoming-the-world language (vv. 4-5) echoes Jesus's declaration in John 16:33. The witness of water and blood connects to John 19:34 (water and blood flowing from Jesus's pierced side). The assurance of eternal life (v. 13) parallels the purpose statement of John's Gospel (John 20:31). The prayer-confidence passage (vv. 14-15) develops the teaching of 3:21-22. The closing warning about idols (v. 21) echoes the Old Testament prophetic tradition.

1Everyone who believes that Jesus is the Christ has been born of God, and everyone who loves the Father loves the one who has been born of him. 2By this we know that we love the children of God: when we love God and carry out his commandments. 3For this is the love of God: that we keep his commandments. And his commandments are not burdensome, 4For whatsoever is brought into the world of God overcometh the age — and this is the victory that overcometh the age, even our faith. 5Who is the one who overcomes the world except the one who believes that Jesus is the Son of God? 6

This is the one who came through water and blood — Jesus Christ. He came not by water only, but by water and by blood. And the Spirit is the one who testifies, because the Spirit is the truth. ⁷For there are three that testify: ⁸Three things testify on earth: the Spirit, the water, and the blood — and these three are in agreement. ⁹If we accept the testimony of humans, the testimony of God is greater, because this is the testimony of God: that he has testified concerning his Son. ¹⁰Whoever believes in the Son of God has the testimony within himself. Whoever does not believe God has made him a liar, because he has not believed in the testimony that God has given concerning his Son. ¹¹And this is the testimony: that God gave us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. ¹²Whoever has the Son has life; whoever does not have the Son of God does not have life. ¹³I have written these things to you who believe in the name of the Son of God, so that you may know that you have eternal life. ¹⁴And this is the confidence that we have before him: that if we ask anything according to his will, he hears us. ¹⁵And if we know that he hears us in whatever we ask, we know that we have the requests that we have asked of him. ¹⁶If anyone sees his brother committing a sin that does not lead to death, he should ask, and God will give him life — to those who commit sins not leading to death. There is sin that leads to death; I am not saying he should pray about that. ¹⁷All unrighteousness is sin, and there is sin that does not lead to death. ¹⁸We know that everyone who has been born of God does not keep on sinning, but the one who was born of God protects him, and the evil one does not touch him. ¹⁹We know that we are from God, and the whole world lies in the power of the evil one. ²⁰And we know that the Son of God has come and has given us understanding so that we may know the one who is true. And we are in the one who is true — in his Son Jesus Christ. This one is the true God and eternal life. ²¹Little children, guard yourselves from idols.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The perfect gegennētai ('has been born') indicates that divine birth precedes and enables faith — belief is the evidence, not the cause, of being born of God. The logic of the second clause is familial: to love the parent is necessarily to love the parent's children. This links faith (believing Jesus is the Christ) with love (for God and for fellow believers) as inseparable marks of divine birth.
2. The logic here reverses the direction of 4:20–21. There, love for the brother was the test of love for God. Here, love for God and obedience to his commands verify that our love for fellow believers is genuine rather than merely sentimental. The two tests are mutually reinforcing — neither can stand alone.
3. Love for God is defined not by emotion but by obedience — keeping his commands. The declaration that his commands 'are not burdensome' (bareiai ouk eisin) echoes Jesus's words in Matthew 11:30 ('my yoke is easy and my burden is light') and stands in contrast to the Pharisaic burden-making that Jesus condemned. The divine birth described in vv. 1 and 4 is what makes obedience possible rather than oppressive.
4. The neuter pan to gegennēmenon ('everything/everyone born of God') generalizes the principle. The present nika ('overcomes') describes an ongoing reality, while the aorist nikēsasa ('having overcome') treats the victory as accomplished. Faith is identified as the instrument of victory — not military power, political strategy, or ascetic discipline, but trust in God. The noun nikē ('victory') appears only here in the New Testament.
5. The rhetorical question expects the answer 'no one else.' The present participle nikōn ('overcoming') and pisteuōn ('believing') indicate ongoing, characteristic activity. The confession 'Jesus is the Son of God' is the specific content of world-overcoming faith — it is christological, not vague spiritual optimism.
6. The 'water' most likely refers to Jesus's baptism and the 'blood' to his crucifixion. The emphatic insistence — 'not by water only, but by water and by blood' — suggests the false teachers accepted Jesus's baptism (the beginning of his ministry) but denied the saving significance of his death. The Spirit provides ongoing testimony to the full reality of Christ. Calling the Spirit 'the truth' (hē alētheia) echoes Jesus's description of the Spirit as 'the Spirit of truth' (John 14:17, 15:26, 16:13).
7. The SBLGNT text here is significantly shorter than the KJV. The KJV's expanded reading — 'in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one. And there are three that bear witness in earth' — is known as the Comma Johanneum. This expansion is absent from all Greek manuscripts before the fourteenth century, absent from the earliest and best Latin manuscripts, and unknown to the Greek church fathers. It entered the Latin tradition through marginal glosses that were eventually incorporated into the text. It is not part of the original letter. The SBLGNT correctly omits it, and our rendering follows the critical Greek text.
8. The three witnesses — Spirit, water, and blood — converge in a single testimony about Jesus Christ. The phrase eis to hen eisin ('are into the one,' i.e., 'agree as one') indicates not identity but unanimous testimony. Under Jewish law, two or three witnesses established a matter (Deuteronomy 19:15); God provides three converging witnesses to his Son. The Spirit witnesses through ongoing testimony in the community, the water through the baptism that inaugurated Jesus's ministry, and the blood through the death that completed it.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Deuteronomy 19:15 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.

9. The argument moves from the lesser to the greater: if human testimony is accepted in legal proceedings, how much more should divine testimony be trusted? The perfect memartyrēken ('he has testified') indicates that God's testimony is a completed and standing witness. The content of God's testimony is explained in v. 11.
10. The believer possesses God's testimony internally — through the Spirit's witness (cf. 3:24, 4:13). The one who refuses to believe does something far worse than mere skepticism: he 'has made God a liar' (pseustēn pepoiēken auton). This is the ultimate insult — calling God's testimony about his own Son false. The perfect tenses (pepoiēken, pepisteuken, memartyrēken) emphasize settled states with ongoing consequences.
11. The content of God's testimony is now made explicit: he has given eternal life, and that life is located exclusively in his Son. The aorist edōken ('gave') points to the definitive gift accomplished through Christ's death and resurrection. The phrase 'this life is in his Son' means that eternal life is not an independent commodity but is inseparable from the person of Jesus Christ.
12. The statement is perfectly balanced and admits no middle ground. 'Having the Son' means possessing a living relationship with Christ through faith. The addition of 'of God' (tou theou) in the second clause adds formal weight to the negative statement. This verse is the letter's sharpest expression of the exclusive connection between Christ and eternal life.
13. This verse parallels the purpose statement of John's Gospel (John 20:31). The Gospel was written 'so that you may believe'; the letter is written 'so that you may know that you have eternal life.' The audience is those who already believe — the letter's purpose is assurance, not evangelism. The SBLGNT does not include the second clause found in some manuscripts ('and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God').
14. The word parrēsia ('confidence, boldness') appears for the fourth time in the letter (2:28, 3:21, 4:17). Prayer confidence is not presumption — it is conditioned by alignment with God's will (kata to thelēma autou). The verb akouei ('hears') carries the Hebrew sense of hearing that includes responding and acting.
15. The logic is: if God hears (v. 14), and we know he hears (v. 15a), then we already possess what we have asked (v. 15b). The present echomen ('we have') expresses a certainty so firm that the future answer is treated as already in hand. This is the prayer of faith — not manipulating God but trusting his character and alignment with his purposes.
16. The distinction between sin 'not leading to death' (mē pros thanaton) and sin 'leading to death' (pros thanaton) is the most debated passage in the letter. In context, the 'sin leading to death' most likely refers to the deliberate, settled denial of Christ that characterizes the secessionists — a willful apostasy that places one beyond the reach of intercessory prayer. John does not forbid prayer for such sin but declines to command it. Ordinary sin within the community should prompt intercessory prayer, and God will respond with life.
17. John clarifies that all wrongdoing (adikia, 'unrighteousness, injustice') is genuinely sin — he is not trivializing non-fatal sin. But the reassurance is clear: not all sin is the irrecoverable apostasy described in v. 16. Most sin within the community can be addressed through confession and intercessory prayer.
18. The first of three 'we know' (oidamen) statements that close the letter. The SBLGNT reading ho gennētheis ek tou theou ('the one who was born of God') likely refers to Christ, not the believer — Christ protects the one born of God. The aorist passive gennētheis (referring to Christ's unique divine birth) is distinguished from the perfect gegennēmenos (referring to the believer's new birth). The evil one 'does not touch' (ouch haptetai) — the verb implies grasping or laying hold of, suggesting that Satan cannot seize or control the one Christ guards.
19. The second 'we know' statement. The contrast is stark: believers are 'from God' (ek tou theou), while the entire world-system 'lies in the evil one' (en tō ponērō keitai). The verb keitai ('lies') suggests a passive, helpless state — the world lies in the devil's grip without resistance. The dative/locative en tō ponērō is better rendered 'in the power of the evil one' than the KJV's abstract 'in wickedness.'
20. The third and climactic 'we know' statement. The verb hēkei ('has come') is present tense with perfect force — he has come and is present. The word dianoian ('understanding, insight, mind') denotes the faculty of spiritual comprehension that Christ has given. The final sentence — houtos estin ho alēthinos theos kai zōē aiōnios ('this one is the true God and eternal life') — is among the strongest christological affirmations in the New Testament. The pronoun houtos ('this one') most naturally refers to the nearest antecedent, Jesus Christ, identifying him directly as 'the true God and eternal life.'
21. The letter's abrupt closing has puzzled commentators. The imperative phylaxate ('guard, protect, keep') is an aorist suggesting decisive, urgent action. In context, the 'idols' (eidōlōn) likely refer not to pagan statues but to the false conceptions of God promoted by the secessionists — any substitute for the 'true God' just identified in v. 20. After a letter devoted to distinguishing truth from falsehood, the final word warns against every counterfeit. The SBLGNT does not include the 'Amen' found in some manuscripts.

Summary: Second John is the shortest book in the New Testament by word count. Written by 'the elder' to 'the elect lady and her children,' the letter commends the community for walking in truth and love, reaffirms the commandment of mutual love, and issues a sharp warning against deceivers who deny that Jesus Christ came in the flesh. The elder instructs the community not to receive such false teachers into their homes or extend them hospitality, lest they share in their wicked work. The letter closes with the hope of a personal visit.

What Makes This Remarkable: The letter demonstrates that Johannine theology is not abstract but has immediate practical implications — the community must make concrete decisions about whom to welcome. The identification of the author as 'the elder' (ho presbyteros) rather than 'the apostle' suggests either a deliberate choice of a relational title or a different figure within the Johannine circle. The 'elect lady' (eklektē kyria) is almost certainly a personification of a house church rather than an individual woman, as indicated by the plural 'you' in the body of the letter and the greeting from the 'children of your elect sister' in v. 13.

Translation Friction: The instruction not to welcome false teachers (vv. 10-11) raises questions about the limits of hospitality and tolerance. In the ancient world, extending hospitality to traveling teachers was effectively sponsoring their mission. The elder's prohibition is not about personal rudeness but about material and social support for a message that undermines the gospel. The identity of the 'elect lady' — whether a specific woman, a personified church, or a title — cannot be resolved with certainty from the text alone.

Connections: The christological test (v. 7) parallels 1 John 4:2-3. The love commandment 'from the beginning' echoes 1 John 2:7-8 and John 13:34. The 'teaching of Christ' (v. 9) connects to the Johannine emphasis on remaining in the received tradition. The elder's hope for a face-to-face visit (v. 12) parallels 3 John 13-14 and reflects the limitations of written communication in the ancient world.

¹The elder, to the elect lady and her children, whom I love in truth — and not I alone, but also all who have known the truth — ²Because the truth's sake, which dwelleth in us, and will be with us for ever. ³Grace, mercy, and peace will be with us from God the Father and from Jesus Christ, the Son of the Father, in truth and in love. ⁴I rejoiced greatly to find some of your children walking in the truth, just as we received a commandment from the Father. ⁵And now I ask you, dear lady — not as though I am writing a new commandment to you, but one that we have had from the beginning — that we love one another. ⁶

And this is love: that we walk according to his commandments. This is the commandment, just as you heard from the beginning, so that you should walk in it. ⁷For many deceivers have gone out into the world — those who do not confess that Jesus Christ is coming in the flesh. Such a person is the deceiver and the antichrist. ⁸Watch yourselves, so that you do not lose what we have worked for, but may receive a full reward. ⁹Everyone who goes too far and does not remain in the teaching of Christ does not have God. Whoever remains in the teaching has both the Father and the Son. ¹⁰If anyone comes to you and does not bring this teaching, do not receive him into your house or give him any greeting, ¹¹Indeed, since he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds. ¹²Though I have much to write to you, I would rather not use paper and ink. Instead, I hope to come to you and speak face to face, so that our joy may be made complete. ¹³The children of your elect sister greet you.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The self-designation ho presbyteros ('the elder') is a title of both age and authority within the early church. The phrase eklektē kyria ('elect lady') most likely refers to a local church community personified as a woman (cf. the 'elect sister' in v. 13 and the personification of the church as female in Revelation 12 and 2 Corinthians 11:2). 'In truth' (en alētheia) could mean 'truly' (adverbially) or 'in the sphere of truth' — both senses may be intended.
2. Truth is personified as an abiding presence — it dwells in believers and accompanies them eternally. The language parallels Jesus's promise of the Spirit of truth who 'remains with you and will be in you' (John 14:17). The future estai ('will be') extends the assurance beyond the present into eternity.
3. The greeting is unusual in its confidence — estai ('will be') is declarative rather than optative, stating a certainty rather than expressing a wish. The triad 'grace, mercy, and peace' appears elsewhere only in 1 Timothy 1:2 and 2 Timothy 1:2. The title 'the Son of the Father' (tou huiou tou patros) is found only here in the New Testament and emphasizes the unique filial relationship. The closing phrase 'in truth and in love' previews the letter's twin themes.
4. The phrase ek tōn teknōn sou ('some of your children') may imply that not all members of the community are walking in truth — a gentle pastoral concern. The verb peripatountas ('walking') uses the standard metaphor for daily conduct. The commandment 'from the Father' connects truthful living to divine authority, not human preference.
5. The request (erōtō, a polite verb for asking) echoes 1 John 2:7-8: the commandment is both old and foundational. The singular 'you' (se) addresses the community as a whole through its personified identity. 'From the beginning' (ap' archēs) refers to the original reception of the gospel message.
6. Love is defined as obedient walking (peripatōmen kata tas entolas autou). The circular structure — love is keeping commandments, and the commandment is to love — is intentional, not confused. Love and obedience are mutually defining in Johannine theology. The final pronoun 'in it' (en autē) could refer to the commandment or to love — the ambiguity reinforces their inseparability.
7. The participle erchomenon ('coming') is present tense, which could refer to Christ's past coming (historical present), his ongoing incarnate state, or his future return. The confession affirms the full, continuing reality of the incarnation — Jesus Christ did not merely appear in flesh temporarily but remains the incarnate one. The singular houtos ('this one') individualizes the type: every such deceiver embodies the spirit of the antichrist. This closely parallels 1 John 4:2-3.
8. The imperative blepete ('watch, look out, beware') is urgent. The SBLGNT mixes persons — 'you' do not lose what 'we' worked for — suggesting that the elder's apostolic labor is at stake in the community's faithfulness. The 'full reward' (misthon plērē) implies that partial loss is possible through compromise with false teaching, even if ultimate salvation is not in view.
9. The verb proagōn ('going ahead, going beyond, advancing') is used here negatively — the false teachers see themselves as progressive, going beyond basic Christianity, but the elder judges their innovation as departure. 'The teaching of Christ' (tē didachē tou Christou) could mean the teaching about Christ or the teaching that comes from Christ; both are likely intended. The consequence of departing is devastating: one 'does not have God' — the loss of relationship, not merely of correct doctrine.
10. In the ancient world, traveling teachers depended on private hospitality. Receiving someone into one's home (eis oikian) was effectively sponsoring their ministry. The prohibition against greeting (chairein, literally 'rejoice,' the standard greeting) is not about rudeness but about withholding the social endorsement that would legitimize the false teacher's mission. The 'house' may refer to a private home or to the house church that met there.
11. The verb koinōnei ('shares in, participates in, has fellowship with') is strong — extending hospitality to a false teacher makes one a partner in the deception. The principle is that material and social support for false teaching constitutes complicity. This verse has sometimes been misapplied to justify general inhospitality; its original scope is specific to those who deny the incarnation and actively propagate a counter-gospel.
12. The Greek stoma pros stoma ('mouth to mouth') is the literal expression behind 'face to face.' The preference for personal presence over written communication reflects both the limitations of ancient letter-writing and the Johannine conviction that personal encounter is superior to mediated communication (cf. John 1:14 — the Word became flesh, not text). The phrase 'our joy may be made complete' (hē chara hēmōn peplērōmenē ē) echoes John 15:11 and 16:24.

- 13. The 'elect sister' (tēs adelphēs sou tēs eklektēs) is most likely another church community — the one from which the elder writes. The parallel language of 'elect lady' (v. 1) and 'elect sister' (v. 13) suggests two sister congregations within the Johannine network. The 'children' are the members of that community. The SBLGNT does not include the 'Amen' found in some manuscripts.

Summary: Third John is a personal letter from 'the elder' to a beloved individual named Gaius. The elder commends Gaius for his faithfulness and especially for his hospitality to traveling missionaries, even those who were strangers to him (vv. 1-8). He then sharply condemns Diotrephes, a church leader who refuses to welcome the elder's representatives, speaks malicious nonsense against the elder, and excommunicates those who do offer hospitality (vv. 9-10). Demetrius is briefly commended as a trustworthy figure (vv. 11-12). The letter closes with a hope for a personal visit.

What Makes This Remarkable: Third John provides a rare window into the internal power struggles of the early church. Diotrephes represents a local leader who has effectively seized control of a congregation, rejecting apostolic authority and punishing those who disagree. This is not a doctrinal dispute (unlike 2 John's concern about false teaching) but a conflict over authority and hospitality. The letter reveals that the apostolic church was not a utopian community but a human institution with real power dynamics. The contrast between Gaius (who gives) and Diotrephes (who controls) is the letter's central moral lesson.

Translation Friction: The identity of 'the elder' remains debated — he may be the apostle John, a distinct figure called John the Elder (mentioned by Papias), or another Johannine community leader. The nature of Diotrephes' offense is also debated: some see him as a proto-heretic, others as an ambitious leader who simply resisted outside authority. The text itself focuses on his behavior (refusing hospitality, slandering the elder, excommunicating supporters) rather than his theology. The letter's brevity makes many questions unanswerable from the text alone.

Connections: The hospitality theme connects to Romans 12:13, Hebrews 13:2, and the instructions in 2 John 10-11 (though 2 John restricts hospitality to false teachers, 3 John commends it for true ones). The 'walking in truth' language (vv. 3-4) parallels 2 John 4. The elder's self-designation matches 2 John 1. Diotrephes' love of 'being first' (philoprōteuōn) contrasts with Jesus's teaching that the first shall be last (Mark 10:43-44). Demetrius's commendation 'by the truth itself' (v. 12) echoes the Johannine emphasis on truth as a living reality.

¹The elder, to the beloved Gaius, whom I love in truth. ²Beloved, I pray that all may go well with you and that you may be in good health, as it goes well with your soul. ³For I rejoiced greatly when the brothers came and testified to your truth, as indeed you are walking in the truth. ⁴I have no deeper joy than knowing that my children live according to the truth. ⁵Belove

d, it is a faithful thing you do in all your efforts for the brothers, especially those who are strangers. ⁶They have testified to your love before the church. You will do well to send them on their journey in a manner worthy of God, ⁷Indeed, because that for his name's sake they traveled forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles. ⁸Therefore we ought to support people like these, so that we may be fellow workers for the truth. ⁹I have written something to the church, but Diotrophes, who loves to put himself first, does not acknowledge our authority. ¹⁰So if I come, I will bring up what he is doing, talking malicious nonsense against us. And not content with that, he refuses to welcome the brothers himself, and he also stops those who want to and expels them from the church. ¹¹Beloved, do not imitate evil but imitate good. Whoever does good is from God; whoever does evil has not seen God. ¹²Demetrius has received a good testimony from everyone, and from the truth itself. We also add our testimony, and you know that our testimony is true. ¹³I had much to write to you, but I would rather not write with ink and pen. ¹⁴I hope to see you soon, and we will talk face to face. ¹⁵Peace be to you. The friends greet you. Greet the friends, each by name.

1. The self-designation ho presbyteros ('the elder') matches 2 John 1, linking the two letters to the same author. Gaius is called agapētō ('beloved') — a term of deep personal affection. The phrase en alētheia ('in truth') can mean 'truly, genuinely' or 'within the sphere of truth.' The name Gaius was extremely common in the Roman world; this is not necessarily the same Gaius mentioned in Acts 19:29, 20:4, Romans 16:23, or 1 Corinthians 1:14.
2. The prayer-wish follows standard Hellenistic letter conventions but is transformed by genuine pastoral concern. The verb euodousthai ('to prosper, to have a good journey, to go well') and hygiainein ('to be healthy') cover material and physical welfare. The comparison kathōs euodoutai sou hē psychē ('as your soul prospers') is a compliment — Gaius's spiritual health is the standard by which the elder measures his wish for physical health.
3. Traveling brothers (adelphōn) have brought reports to the elder about Gaius. The verb martyrountōn ('testifying, bearing witness') uses courtroom language for a solemn attestation. 'Your truth' (sou tē alētheia) means the truth that characterizes Gaius — his truthful way of living. The present tense peripateis ('you are walking') indicates an ongoing pattern of conduct, not a single event.
4. The superlative meizoteran ('greater') is intensified — literally 'more greater,' a double comparative found in colloquial Greek. The phrase ta ema tekna ('my children') reveals the elder's pastoral relationship to Gaius and others in his care. The greatest joy for a spiritual father is not institutional success but the faithful conduct of those he has nurtured.
5. The adjective piston ('faithful, trustworthy, reliable') characterizes Gaius's actions as consistent with his faith. The phrase kai touto xenous ('and this, strangers') adds emphasis — Gaius's hospitality extends not only to known believers but to traveling missionaries who are unknown to him personally. In the ancient world, hospitality to strangers was both a social virtue and a practical necessity, since public inns were often dangerous or disreputable.
6. The missionaries have publicly (enōpion ekklēσίας, 'before the church/assembly') testified to Gaius's love. The verb propempsas ('having sent forward, having provided for their journey') was a technical term for equipping travelers with provisions, money, and companions for the next stage of their journey (cf. Acts 15:3, Romans 15:24, 1 Corinthians 16:6). The standard is axiōs tou theou ('worthy of God') — the hospitality should reflect the God whom both host and guest serve.
7. The missionaries went out hyper tou onomatos ('for the sake of the Name') — 'the Name' without further specification is Jesus Christ. This absolute use of 'the Name' reflects early Christian reverence (cf. Acts 5:41). They accept nothing from ethnikōn ('Gentiles, pagans, non-believers'), maintaining the principle that the gospel mission should be funded by believers, not by those who do not share the faith. This makes Christian hospitality essential to the church's mission.
8. The verb hypolambanein ('receive, support, take up') goes beyond mere welcome to active support. The theological motivation is striking: by supporting missionaries, believers become synergoi ('fellow workers, co-laborers') tē alētheia ('for the truth'). Hospitality is not charity but partnership in mission. Those who stay home and support those who go are equally engaged in the work of the gospel.
9. The transition is abrupt: a letter was sent to the church, but Diotrophes blocked it. The participle philoprōteuōn ('loving to be first, desiring preeminence') is a rare compound word found only here in the New Testament. It describes not a formal office but a personality — someone who craves control. The verb epidechetai ('receive, welcome, acknowledge') means Diotrophes refuses to accept the elder's authority or his representatives. The 'something' (ti) written to the church may be a lost letter, 2 John, or a general communication.
10. The elder lists Diotrophes' offenses in escalating severity: (1) phylarōn hēmas ('babbling malicious nonsense against us') — spreading slander with poisonous words; (2) oute autos epidechetai tous adelphous ('he himself does not receive the brothers') — personally refusing hospitality to traveling missionaries; (3) tous boulomenous kōlyei ('he prevents those who wish to') — blocking others from showing hospitality; (4) ek tēs ekklēσίας ekballēi ('he throws them out of the church') — excommunicating those who defy his control. This is a portrait of authoritarian leadership: monopolizing communication, controlling access, and punishing dissent.
11. The imperative mē mimou ('do not imitate') uses the verb from which 'mimic' derives. The principle is stated in absolute Johannine terms: doing good (agathopoiōn) is evidence of being ek tou theou ('from God'), while doing evil (kakopoiōn) proves one ouch heōraken ton theon ('has not seen God'). This echoes 1 John 3:6 and 4:20. In context, the implicit contrast is between Gaius (good) and Diotrophes (evil), with Gaius urged to continue his pattern despite Diotrephes' opposition.

12. Demetrius receives a threefold commendation: (1) hypo pantōn ('from everyone') — universal reputation; (2) hypo autēs tēs alētheias ('from the truth itself') — his life conforms to truth as an objective standard, so that truth itself bears witness to him; (3) hēmeis de martyroumen ('we also testify') — the elder's personal endorsement. The phrase 'you know that our testimony is true' (oidate hoti hē martyria hēmōn alēthēs estin) echoes John 21:24. Demetrius may be the bearer of this letter, which would explain why he needs an introduction and recommendation to Gaius.
13. The closing mirrors 2 John 12 almost exactly. The elder has more to say but prefers personal communication to written correspondence. The mention of melanos ('ink,' literally 'black') and kalamou ('reed pen') are the standard writing implements of the ancient world. The preference for face-to-face communication over written media is a recurring theme in the Johannine letters.
14. The phrase stoma pros stoma ('mouth to mouth') is more literally physical than the English idiom 'face to face.' It emphasizes the directness and intimacy of personal conversation over the limitations of written communication. The adverb eutheōs ('immediately, soon') conveys urgency — the situation with Diotrephes likely requires prompt personal intervention.
15. The farewell eirēnē soi ('peace to you') is the standard Semitic greeting-and-farewell (Hebrew shalom lekha), here placed at the close. The designation hoi philoi ('the friends') for fellow believers is distinctive — it appears as a group designation only here in the New Testament and echoes Jesus's words in John 15:14-15 ('I have called you friends'). The instruction kat' onoma ('by name, individually') insists on personal, not generic, greetings — each person matters individually. The letter that began with one beloved name (Gaius) ends with an insistence on naming each friend.

Jude

Summary: Jude writes to urge believers to 'contend for the faith that was once for all delivered to the saints' (v. 3) because certain people have infiltrated the community who pervert grace into licentiousness and deny Jesus Christ as Lord. Jude marshals a barrage of Old Testament and Second Temple examples of divine judgment — the exodus generation, the fallen angels, Sodom and Gomorrah, Cain, Balaam, Korah — to demonstrate that such false teachers face certain destruction. The letter reaches its rhetorical peak in verses 14-15 with a direct quotation from 1 Enoch prophesying judgment on the ungodly. After warning that the apostles predicted such scoffers would come, Jude closes with practical instructions for the community and one of the most magnificent doxologies in all of Scripture (vv. 24-25).

What Makes This Remarkable: Jude is unique in the New Testament for its explicit citation of 1 Enoch (vv. 14-15), a Jewish apocalyptic text that was widely read but never accepted into the Hebrew canon. The citation is introduced with the formula 'Enoch prophesied' (eprophēteusen), treating the text as genuine prophecy without necessarily endorsing the entire book as canonical. Verse 9 alludes to the Assumption of Moses (or a related tradition) regarding a dispute between the archangel Michael and the devil over the body of Moses — a tradition not found in the Old Testament. These references demonstrate that early Christians drew on a wider literary and theological tradition than the Hebrew Bible alone. The doxology (vv. 24-25) is among the most liturgically influential passages in Christianity.

Translation Friction: Jude's use of non-canonical sources raises hermeneutical questions. The 1 Enoch citation (vv. 14-15) is presented as prophecy, and the Michael-and-Moses tradition (v. 9) is presented as historical event. Neither claim requires that 1 Enoch or the Assumption of Moses be treated as canonical Scripture; ancient authors regularly cited non-canonical sources to make theological points (cf. Paul quoting pagan poets in Acts 17:28 and Titus 1:12). We render the Greek as given and note the sources without adjudicating their canonical status. The relationship between Jude and 2 Peter 2 (which shares much of Jude's content but omits the non-canonical references) remains debated — most scholars see Jude as the earlier text.

Connections: The faith 'once for all delivered' (v. 3) anticipates the concept in Hebrews 9:26-28. The fallen angels (v. 6) connect to Genesis 6:1-4 and the Enochic tradition. Sodom and Gomorrah (v. 7) echo Genesis 19. Cain, Balaam, and Korah (v. 11) draw on Genesis 4, Numbers 22-24, and Numbers 16 respectively. The 1 Enoch citation (vv. 14-15) comes from 1 Enoch 1:9. The Michael-Moses dispute (v. 9) is attributed to the Assumption of Moses. The doxology (vv. 24-25) has influenced Christian worship from the patristic period to the present.

¹Jude, a servant of Jesus Christ and brother of James, to those who are called, beloved in God the Father and kept for Jesus Christ: ²May mercy, peace, and love be multiplied to you. ³Beloved, although I was very eager to write to you about our common salvation, I found it necessary to write appealing to you to contend for the faith that was once for all delivered to the saints. ⁴For certain people have crept in unnoticed who long ago were designated for this condemnation, ungodly people who pervert the grace of our God into sensuality and deny our only Master and Lord, Jesus Christ. ⁵Now I want to remind you, although you once fully knew it, that Jesus, who saved a people out of the land of Egypt, afterward destroyed those who did not believe, ⁶And the angels who did not stay within their own position of authority, but left their proper dwelling, he has kept in eternal chains under deep darkness for the judgment of the great day — ⁷Even as Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities about them in like manner, giving themselves over to sexual immorality, and going after strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire. ⁸Yet in like manner these people also, relying on their dreams, defile the flesh, reject authority, and blaspheme the glorious ones. ⁹But when the archangel Michael, contending with the devil, was disputing about the body of Moses, he did not presume to pronounce a blasphemous judgment, but said, 'The Lord rebuke you.' ¹⁰But these people blaspheme all that they do not understand, and they are destroyed by all that they, like unreasoning animals, understand instinctively. ¹¹Woe to them! For they walked in the way of Cain and abandoned themselves for profit to Balaam's error and perished in Korah's rebellion. ¹²These are hidden reefs at your love feasts, as they feast with you without fear, shepherds feeding only themselves; waterless clouds swept along by winds; fruitless trees in late autumn, twice dead, uprooted; ¹³They are wild waves of the sea, churning up the foam of their own disgrace. They are wandering stars, for whom the deepest darkness has been reserved forever. ¹⁴It was also about these that Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied, saying, 'Behold, the Lord comes with ten thousands of his holy ones, ¹⁵To execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly in the midst of them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken opposed to him. ¹⁶These are grumblers, malcontents, following their own sinful desires; their mouth speaks boastful words, and they show favoritism to gain advantage. ¹⁷But you must remember, beloved, the predictions of the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ. ¹⁸They said to you, 'In the last time there will be scoffers, following their own ungodly passions.' ¹⁹It is these who cause divisions, worldly people, devoid of the Spirit. ²⁰But you, beloved, building yourselves up in your most holy faith and praying in the Holy Spirit, ²¹Keep yourselves safe in God's love as you wait for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ to bring you to eternal life. ²²And have mercy on those who doubt; ²³Others rescue with be afraid, pulling them out of the flames. Hating not even the garment spotted by the physical nature. ²⁴Now to him who is able to keep you from stumbling and to present you blameless before the presence of his glory with great joy, ²⁵Indeed, to the only wise God our Saviour, be glory and majesty, dominion and authority, both now and ever. Amen.

1. Jude identifies himself as doulos ('servant, slave') of Jesus Christ and adelphos ('brother') of James — almost certainly James the brother of Jesus and leader of the Jerusalem church (Acts 15:13, Galatians 1:19). Like James, he does not claim the title 'brother of the Lord,' instead defining his identity through service. The recipients are described with three perfect participles: ēgapēmenois ('having been loved,' permanently loved), tetērēmenois ('having been kept,' preserved and guarded), and klētois ('called'). The SBLGNT reads 'beloved in God the Father and kept for Jesus Christ,' though some manuscripts read 'sanctified' (hēgiasmenois) instead of 'beloved.'
2. The greeting triad — eleos ('mercy'), eirēnē ('peace'), agapē ('love') — is unique to Jude. Most epistles use 'grace and peace' (Paul) or 'grace, mercy, and peace' (Pastorals). Jude substitutes 'love' for 'grace,' anticipating the letter's concern that grace is being perverted (v. 4). The optative plēthyntheī ('may it be multiplied') is a prayer-wish for abundance, not merely presence.
3. Jude had planned a general letter about salvation but was compelled by circumstances to write an urgent warning instead. The verb epagōnizesthai ('contend, fight for, struggle on behalf of') is an athletic or military term — the faith requires active defense, not passive reception. The phrase tē hapax paradotheisē tois hagiois pistei ('the faith once for all delivered to the saints') treats the Christian faith as a fixed deposit (paradosis) entrusted to the community, not as something still being developed. The adverb hapax ('once for all') emphasizes finality and completeness.
4. The verb pareisedysan ('crept in secretly, slipped in by the side door') describes infiltration, not open attack. These people are hoi palai proگرامmenoi ('written about long ago,' 'designated beforehand') for judgment — their condemnation was anticipated in Scripture and tradition. Their two-fold offense: (1) metatithentes ('changing, perverting, transforming') God's grace into aselgeian ('sensuality, licentiousness, moral abandon'); (2) arnoumenoi ('denying') Jesus Christ as despotēn kai kyrion ('Master and Lord'). Grace that permits immorality is not grace but its perversion.

5. The first of three Old Testament examples of judgment. Some manuscripts read 'the Lord' (kyrios), others read 'Jesus' (Iēsous) — the SBLGNT follows manuscripts reading kyrios, but the variant 'Jesus' (found in significant early manuscripts) would mean Jude identifies the pre-incarnate Christ with the God who led the exodus. The point is stark: being saved once does not guarantee final salvation — the exodus generation was delivered from Egypt but destroyed in the wilderness for unbelief (Numbers 14:26-35, 1 Corinthians 10:1-12).
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Numbers 14:26-35 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The second example: fallen angels who abandoned their archēn ('position, domain, sphere of authority') and their oikētērion ('dwelling, habitation'). This draws on the tradition of Genesis 6:1-4 as elaborated in 1 Enoch 6-16, where angelic 'Watchers' descended to earth, took human wives, and were imprisoned as punishment. They are kept (tetērēken, a perfect tense indicating ongoing state) in desmois aidiois ('eternal bonds/chains') hypozophon ('under deep darkness/gloom') awaiting final judgment. Even supernatural beings face consequences for transgressing their appointed boundaries.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 6:1-4. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The third example: Sodom and Gomorrah (Genesis 19). The phrase ekporneusasai ('having given themselves over to sexual immorality') and apelhousai opisō sarkos heteras ('having gone after other/different flesh') describe the sexual transgression. The phrase sarkos heteras ('different flesh') connects the sin of Sodom to the angels of verse 6 — both transgressed the boundaries of their nature. The cities prokeintai ('are displayed, lie before us') as deigma ('example, sample, specimen') of divine judgment — their destruction is a visible preview of eschatological punishment.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 19. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. Jude now applies the three examples to the present infiltrators. The participle enypniazomenoi ('dreaming') suggests they claim visionary authority for their behavior. Their threefold offense mirrors the three examples: (1) sarka miainousin ('they defile the flesh') — like Sodom; (2) kyriotēta athetousin ('they reject lordship/authority') — like the exodus rebels; (3) doxas blasphēmousin ('they blaspheme the glorious ones') — like the fallen angels. The 'glorious ones' (doxas) most likely refers to angelic beings, whether good or evil.
9. This episode is not found in the Old Testament. Ancient sources attribute it to the Assumption of Moses (also called the Testament of Moses), a Jewish pseudepigraphal work largely lost. The argument from the lesser to the greater is: if Michael the archangel — the highest of angels — would not blaspheme even the devil but deferred judgment to the Lord, how much less should mere humans blaspheme angelic beings. The phrase epitimēsai soi kyrios ('May the Lord rebuke you') echoes Zechariah 3:2, where the Lord rebukes Satan in a heavenly courtroom scene. Jude uses a non-canonical source to make a canonical point about restraint and deference to divine authority.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 34:5-6. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Zechariah 3:2. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The contrast is between two kinds of knowledge: what they do not understand (ouk oidasin) they blaspheme, and what they know instinctively (physikōs epistantai) — like animals driven by appetite — destroys them. The comparison to aloga zōa ('unreasoning animals, creatures without logos') is severe: they have rejected the capacity for rational moral thought and now operate purely on instinct. The verb phtheirontai ('are being destroyed, are corrupted') is in the present tense — their destruction is already underway.
11. Three more Old Testament examples in rapid succession, each introduced with a different verb: (1) tē hodō tou Kain eporeuthēsan ('they went in the way of Cain') — Cain's 'way' represents hatred and murder of a brother (Genesis 4); (2) tē planē tou Balaam misthou exechythēsan ('they poured themselves out into the error of Balaam for hire') — Balaam represents the corruption of prophetic office for money (Numbers 22-24, 31:16); (3) tē antilogia tou Kore apōlonto ('they perished in the rebellion of Korah') — Korah's rebellion represents challenging divinely established authority (Numbers 16). The aorist tenses treat their destruction as already accomplished — prophetically certain.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 4. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Numbers 22-24. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Numbers 16. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. A torrent of metaphors describes the false teachers: (1) spilades ('hidden reefs' or 'blemishes') at the agapais ('love feasts,' communal meals of the early church) — they are a concealed danger; (2) they feast aphobōs ('fearlessly, without reverence') and poimainontes heautous ('shepherd only themselves') — an echo of Ezekiel 34:2's condemnation of selfish shepherds; (3) nephelai anydroi ('waterless clouds') — they promise rain but deliver nothing; (4) dendra phthinopōrina akarpa ('fruitless late-autumn trees') — past the season for bearing fruit; (5) dis apothanonta ('twice dead') — dead by nature and dead by judgment; (6) ekrizōthenta ('uprooted') — permanently removed.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Ezekiel 34:2. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.

13. The metaphor cascade continues: (5) kymata agria thalassēs ('wild waves of the sea') that foam up their own shame — their sin is not hidden but publicly visible like sea foam; (6) asteres planētai ('wandering stars,' the root of English 'planet') — in ancient cosmology, wandering stars were irregular and unreliable, unlike the fixed stars that guided navigation. For these wanderers, ho zophos tou skotous ('the gloom of darkness') is reserved eis aiōna ('forever'). The six metaphors move from earth (reefs, trees) to sea (waves) to sky (stars), encompassing the entire cosmos in condemnation.
14. Jude introduces a direct quotation from 1 Enoch 1:9, a Jewish apocalyptic text dating to the third-second century BC. Enoch is identified as hebdomos apo Adam ('seventh from Adam'), following the genealogy of Genesis 5. The formula prophēteusen ('prophesied') treats the Enochic text as genuine prophecy — a notable use of a non-canonical source with prophetic authority. This does not necessarily mean Jude regarded the entirety of 1 Enoch as Scripture, but he treats this particular prophecy as divinely inspired truth. The Lord's coming en hagiais myriasis ('with his holy myriads/ten thousands') depicts a theophany accompanied by an angelic army.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 5. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The quotation from 1 Enoch 1:9 is characterized by the relentless repetition of 'all' (antas/pantōn/panta, four occurrences) and the cognate forms of 'ungodly' (asebeias/ēsebēsan/asebeis, four occurrences). The judgment is universal (kata pantōn, 'against all') and the ungodliness is both in action (ergōn asebeias, 'works of ungodliness') and in speech (sklērōn, 'harsh things spoken against him'). The fourfold repetition of aseb- roots hammers the single point: ungodliness in every form will face divine reckoning.
16. Five characteristics: (1) goggystai ('grumblers, murmurers') — echoing Israel's grumbling in the wilderness; (2) mempsimolroi ('malcontents, fault-finders,' literally 'blamers of their lot/fate'); (3) following their own desires; (4) their mouth speaks hyperogka ('swollen, pompous, arrogant things'); (5) thaumazontes prosōpa ('showing admiration for faces') ōpheleias charin ('for the sake of benefit') — flattering people for personal gain. The portrait is of people who simultaneously complain about everything and flatter those who can benefit them.
17. The tone shifts from denunciation to direct pastoral address. The imperative mnēsthēte ('remember') calls the community to anchor themselves in apostolic teaching. The phrase tōn rhēmatōn tōn proeirēmēnōn ('the words previously spoken') suggests the apostolic era is viewed as a completed period — the apostles spoke 'beforehand' (proeirēmēnōn), and their words now function as authoritative prophecy. This may suggest a date after the first generation of apostles.
18. The apostolic prediction is summarized: ep' eschatou tou chronou ('in the last time/period') there will be empaiktai ('mockers, scoffers') who follow their own desires. Similar predictions appear in Acts 20:29-30, 2 Timothy 3:1-5, and 2 Peter 3:3. The present situation is not a surprise but the fulfillment of what the apostles foresaw. The community should be prepared, not panicked.
19. Three final descriptions: (1) apodiorizontes ('those who make boundaries, those who cause divisions') — they fragment the community they have infiltrated; (2) psychikoi ('natural, worldly, soul-ish') — the same word James uses (3:15) for wisdom that is 'earthly, unspiritual'; (3) pneuma mē echontes ('not having the Spirit') — the definitive diagnosis. Despite any claims to spiritual insight, they lack the Holy Spirit entirely. The contrast between psychikos (natural) and pneumatikos (spiritual) echoes 1 Corinthians 2:14-15.
20. The contrast is emphatic: hymeis de ('but you'). While the false teachers destroy, the community is to build. The participle epoikodomountes ('building up') uses construction imagery — the faith is the foundation, and believers are the structure being raised upon it. The faith is called hagiōtatē ('most holy'), the superlative reinforcing the sacredness of the deposit they have received. Prayer in the Holy Spirit (en pneumatī hagiō) distinguishes them from the false teachers who are pneuma mē echontes ('without the Spirit,' v. 19).
21. The main imperative in this section: tērēstate heautous en agapē theou ('keep yourselves in the love of God'). The verb tērēstate ('keep, guard, maintain') echoes verse 1 where believers are tetērēmenois ('kept') by God — there is a divine keeping and a human keeping that work together. The participle prosdēchomenoi ('waiting for, expecting') turns their gaze to the future: the mercy (eleos) of Jesus Christ at his return, which leads eis zōēn aiōnion ('to eternal life'). The letter's emotional arc moves from urgent warning to confident hope.
22. The textual tradition for verses 22-23 is notoriously unstable, with manuscripts preserving two-fold, three-fold, and other arrangements. The SBLGNT follows a reading that distinguishes two or three groups. The first group: eleate diakrinomenous ('have mercy on those who are doubting/wavering'). The participle diakrinomenous can mean 'doubting' or 'disputing' — these are people caught between faithfulness and the false teachers' influence. They need compassion, not condemnation.
23. The remaining groups require more urgent action: (1) some must be sōzete ek pyros harpazontes ('saved by snatching them from the fire') — a rescue operation from imminent destruction, echoing Zechariah 3:2 and Amos 4:11; (2) others require mercy with phobō ('fear, caution'), while misountes ('hating') even the chitōna ('inner garment, tunic') that has been espilōmenon ('stained, spotted') by sarx ('flesh'). The image is of a garment so contaminated by sin that even it must be avoided — the rescuer must be careful not to be contaminated by the very person being rescued. The pastoral wisdom is nuanced: different situations require different approaches.
23. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Zechariah 3:2 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
23. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Amos 4:11 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
24. The great doxology begins. After a letter focused on danger, Jude turns to the One who can phylaxai ('guard, protect, keep safe') believers aptaistous ('without stumbling') — the very security the false teachers threaten. The verb stēsai ('to stand, to present') before katenōpion tēs doxēs autou

('before the presence of his glory') is an eschatological courtroom image: God will present believers amōmous ('blameless, without blemish') — the same word used for sacrificial animals without defect (cf. Ephesians 1:4, 5:27). The final note is en agalliasei ('with exultation, great joy') — the presentation is not somber but jubilant.

- 25. The doxology ascribes four attributes to God: doxa ('glory'), megalōsynē ('majesty, greatness'), kratos ('might, dominion, sovereign power'), and exousia ('authority, right to rule'). The temporal scope is comprehensive: pro pantos tou aiōnos ('before all the ages' — eternity past), kai nyn ('and now' — the present), kai eis pantas tous aiōnas ('and unto all the ages' — eternity future). God's sovereignty spans the totality of time. The mediation dia Iēsou Christou tou kyriou hēmōn ('through Jesus Christ our Lord') ensures that the doxology is christologically grounded. The final amēn seals the prayer and the letter. This doxology has been used in Christian worship from the earliest centuries and remains one of the most recognized benedictions in the church.

Revelation

Summary: Revelation 1 opens with a prologue identifying the work as a revelation from God, given through Jesus Christ to his servant John. A blessing is pronounced on those who read and heed its words. John then addresses seven churches in the province of Asia with a greeting of grace and peace. He describes being 'in the Spirit' on the Lord's day on the island of Patmos, where he hears a loud voice commanding him to write what he sees and send it to the seven churches. Turning, he sees a vision of the glorified Christ standing among seven golden lampstands — a figure with white hair, blazing eyes, feet like burnished bronze, and a voice like rushing waters, holding seven stars in his right hand with a sharp two-edged sword coming from his mouth. John falls at his feet as though dead, but Christ lays his right hand on him and identifies himself as 'the first and the last, the living one' who holds the keys of death and Hades.

What Makes This Remarkable: The opening vision draws heavily on Daniel 7:9-14 (the Ancient of Days and Son of Man), Daniel 10:5-6 (the angelic figure), and Ezekiel 1:24-28 (the throne vision). The description of Christ merges attributes that Daniel assigns to both the Ancient of Days (white hair) and the Son of Man (glory, dominion), making a striking theological claim about Christ's identity. The seven lampstands echo Zechariah 4:2. The 'sharp two-edged sword' from his mouth alludes to Isaiah 49:2 and anticipates the word-as-weapon imagery throughout Revelation. The self-designation 'the Alpha and the Omega' uses the first and last letters of the Greek alphabet to express totality and sovereignty.

Translation Friction: The Greek apokalypsis ('unveiling, revelation') gives the book its name and its genre designation. We render the apocalyptic imagery as written without attempting to decode symbols into modern equivalents — the text presents visions, and we translate them as visions. The phrase en pneumati ('in the Spirit') in verse 10 could mean 'in a state of spiritual ecstasy' or 'by the agency of the Spirit'; we preserve the ambiguity. Some textual variants exist in the doxology of verses 5-6; we follow the SBLGNT reading.

Connections: Daniel 7:9-14 (Son of Man, Ancient of Days), Daniel 10:5-6 (angelic figure description), Ezekiel 1:24-28 (throne theophany), Zechariah 4:2 (seven lampstands), Isaiah 49:2 (sword from mouth), Isaiah 44:6 (first and last). The greeting formula in verses 4-5 echoes the covenant name of God from Exodus 3:14. The 'seven spirits before his throne' may allude to Isaiah 11:2 or Zechariah 4:2-10.

¹The revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave him to show his servants what must soon take place. He made it known by sending his angel to his servant John, ²Who bare record of the message of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he noticed. ³Blessed is the one who reads aloud, and blessed are those who hear the words of this prophecy and keep what is written in it, for the time is near. ⁴John, to the seven churches in Asia: Grace to you and peace from him who is and who was and who is to come, and from the seven spirits before his throne, ⁵From Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the initially brought into the world of the no longer alive, and the prince of the kings of the age. To him that loved us, and washed us from our wrongdoings in his own blood,, ⁶Has fashioned us kings and priests to God and his Parent. To him be splendor and dominion for ever and ever. Amen. ⁷Look, he is coming with the clouds, and every eye will see him, even those who pierced him, and all the tribes of the earth will mourn over him. Yes, amen. ⁸"I am the Alpha and the Omega," says the Lord God, "who is and who was and who is to come, the Almighty." ⁹I, John, your brother and partner in the tribulation, the kingdom, and the endurance that are in Jesus — I was on the island called Patmos because of the word of God and the testimony of Jesus. ¹⁰I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and I heard behind me a loud voice like a trumpet, ¹¹Saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last — and, What you seest, write in a book, and send it to the seven churches which are in Asia. To Ephesus, and to Smyrna, and to Pergamos, and to Thyatira, and to Sardis, and to Philadelphia, and to Laodicea. ¹²I turned to see the voice that was speaking to me, and when I turned I saw seven golden lampstands, ¹³Among the lampstands stood someone who looked like the Son of Man. He was dressed in a long robe and wore a golden sash across his chest. ¹⁴His head and his hair were white as white wool, white as snow, and his eyes were like a flame of fire. ¹⁵His feet were like burnished bronze, refined in a furnace, and his voice was like the sound of many waters. ¹⁶In his right hand he held seven stars, from his mouth came a sharp two-edged sword, and his face was like the sun shining at full strength. ¹⁷When I saw him, I fell at his feet as though dead. But he laid his right hand on me and said, "Do not be afraid. I am the first and the last, ¹⁸Indeed, I am he that liveth, and was dead. And, take notice, I am alive for evermore, Amen. And have the keys of hell and of death. ¹⁹Therefore write what you have seen, what is now, and what will take place after this. ²⁰As for the mystery of the seven stars that you saw in my right hand, and the seven golden lampstands: the seven stars are the angels of the seven churches, and the seven lampstands are the seven churches."

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The Greek apokalypsis means 'unveiling' or 'disclosure' — the removal of a covering to reveal what was hidden. This is not merely a prediction of the future but a disclosure of heavenly realities. The phrase en tachei ('in quickness/soon') can mean 'soon' or 'swiftly when it begins'; the temporal ambiguity is inherent in the Greek. The verb esēmanen ('made known, signified') shares a root with sēmeion ('sign'), suggesting that the revelation communicates through signs and symbols rather than plain speech.
2. The Greek emartyrēsen ('testified, bore witness') and martyrian ('testimony') share the root martyr-, connecting witness with suffering — a theme that pervades Revelation. John's role is as a witness who reports what he has seen, not as an interpreter who explains it.
3. This is the first of seven beatitudes in Revelation (1:3; 14:13; 16:15; 19:9; 20:6; 22:7; 22:14). The singular 'the one who reads aloud' (ho anaginōskōn) and the plural 'those who hear' (hoi akouontes) reflect the practice of public reading in early Christian assemblies — one reader, many listeners. The Greek kairos ('time, appointed season') differs from chronos ('clock time'); kairos suggests a decisive moment, not merely a date.
4. The phrase ho ōn kai ho ēn kai ho erchomenos ('the one who is and who was and who is coming') is a deliberate expansion of the divine name revealed in Exodus 3:14. The Greek grammar is intentionally broken — apo ('from') should govern a genitive, but ho ōn is nominative, as if the divine name resists grammatical subordination. The 'seven spirits' may refer to the Holy Spirit in sevenfold fullness (cf. Isaiah 11:2) or to seven angelic beings before God's throne (cf. Zechariah 4:2-10); we render the phrase as written without deciding between interpretations.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 3:14. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 11:2. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Zechariah 4:2-10. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. Three titles are given to Christ: 'faithful witness' (ho martys ho pistos), 'firstborn from the dead' (ho prōtotokos tōn nekrōn), and 'ruler of the kings of the earth' (ho archōn tōn basileōn tēs gēs). The third title echoes Psalm 89:27, where God promises David's heir will be 'the highest of the kings of the earth.' The SBLGNT reads lysanti ('freed, released') rather than the variant lousanti ('washed'), which changes the metaphor from washing to liberation. We follow the SBLGNT. The present participle agapōnti ('who loves') indicates ongoing love, while the aorist lysanti ('freed') points to a completed act.

5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalm 89:27 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The Greek basileian, hierais ('a kingdom, priests') echoes Exodus 19:6, where Israel is called 'a kingdom of priests.' The singular 'kingdom' (not 'kings') with the apposition 'priests' is the SBLGNT reading — the community collectively forms a kingdom, and each member serves as a priest. This democratization of priestly identity is a major theme in Revelation. The doxology eis tous aiōnas tōn aiōnōn ('into the ages of the ages') is the strongest Greek expression of endlessness.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 19:6. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. This verse fuses two Old Testament passages: Daniel 7:13 ('one like a son of man coming with the clouds') and Zechariah 12:10 ('they will look on me, the one they have pierced, and they will mourn'). The combination identifies the pierced one of Zechariah with Daniel's Son of Man — a connection with profound christological implications. The verb exekentēsān ('pierced') is the same word the Fourth Gospel applies to Christ's crucifixion (John 19:37). The closing nai, amēn pairs a Greek affirmation with a Hebrew one, bridging both linguistic worlds.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Zechariah 12:10. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Daniel 7:13. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. Alpha and Omega are the first and last letters of the Greek alphabet, expressing totality — God encompasses all reality from beginning to end. This echoes Isaiah 44:6 ('I am the first and I am the last; apart from me there is no God'). The title pantokratōr ('Almighty, ruler of all') translates the Hebrew Shaddai and occurs nine times in Revelation — more than in the rest of the New Testament combined. The threefold temporal description repeats from verse 4.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 44:6 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. John identifies himself not with a title of authority but as 'brother' and 'partner' (synkoinōnos, 'co-sharer'). Three things are shared: tribulation (thlipsis), kingdom (basileia), and endurance (hypomonē) — all bound together 'in Jesus.' Patmos is a small island in the Aegean Sea, traditionally understood as a place of exile. The phrase dia ton logon ('because of the word') could mean John was exiled for preaching or that he went to Patmos to receive the word; the traditional reading of exile is more likely given the context of tribulation.
10. The phrase en pneumati ('in the Spirit') describes a state of prophetic vision or ecstasy — John is transported beyond ordinary perception. This phrase recurs at key structural points in Revelation (4:2; 17:3; 21:10). The 'Lord's day' (tē kyriakē hēmera) is the earliest extra-biblical reference to Sunday as a distinctive day for Christians. The trumpet voice echoes Exodus 19:16, where a trumpet blast accompanies God's appearance at Sinai.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 19:16 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The SBLGNT does not include 'I am the Alpha and the Omega, the first and the last' in this verse, which appears in some later manuscripts (reflected in the KJV). We follow the critical text. The Greek biblion ('scroll, book') refers to a papyrus scroll, not a codex. The seven churches are listed in geographical order, forming a rough circuit through the province of Asia (western modern Turkey), beginning with Ephesus, the largest city and nearest to Patmos.
12. The synesthetic phrase 'see the voice' (blepein tēn phōnēn) is striking — John turns to see a sound. This conflation of senses reflects the overwhelming nature of visionary experience. The seven golden lampstands (lychnias chrysas) recall the menorah of the tabernacle (Exodus 25:31-37) and Zechariah's vision of a golden lampstand with seven lights (Zechariah 4:2). Verse 20 will identify the lampstands as the seven churches.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 25:31-37. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Zechariah 4:2. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. The phrase homoion huion anthrōpou ('one like a son of man') directly echoes Daniel 7:13 (LXX), where one 'like a son of man' approaches the Ancient of Days and receives dominion. The long robe (podērē) is the garment of a priest (Exodus 28:4; Ezekiel 9:2), and the golden sash (zōnēn chrysan) also suggests priestly or royal authority. The description that follows will merge attributes of Daniel's Ancient of Days with the Son of Man figure, making a claim about Christ's divine identity.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Daniel 7:13 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 28:4 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.

13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Ezekiel 9:2 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. The white hair is drawn from Daniel 7:9, where it describes the Ancient of Days — not the Son of Man. By applying this attribute to the risen Christ, Revelation makes a bold identification: the Son of Man shares the characteristics of the eternal God. The fiery eyes echo Daniel 10:6, where they describe an angelic or divine figure. Each element of this vision is drawn from Old Testament theophany and reassigned to Christ.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Daniel 7:9. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Daniel 10:6. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The Greek chalkolibanō is a rare word, possibly a copper-zinc alloy or orichalcum — the exact metal is uncertain. 'Burnished bronze' captures the sense of a glowing, refined metal. The 'sound of many waters' echoes Ezekiel 1:24 and 43:2, where it describes the voice of God himself. Daniel 10:6 similarly describes an angelic figure with bronze limbs and a powerful voice. The cumulative effect is of overwhelming divine majesty.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Ezekiel 1:24 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Daniel 10:6 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. The seven stars are identified in verse 20 as the angels of the seven churches. The two-edged sword (rhomphaia distomos oxeia) proceeding from his mouth alludes to Isaiah 49:2 ('He made my mouth like a sharp sword') and represents the power of Christ's word to judge and divide. The image is not of a physical weapon but of divine speech that cuts. His face shining like the sun recalls the transfiguration (Matthew 17:2) and the angel of Daniel 10:6, as well as the radiance of Moses's face after encountering God (Exodus 34:29-30).
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 49:2. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.

16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 34:29-30. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. Falling 'as though dead' (hōs nekros) is the typical human response to a divine encounter (cf. Daniel 8:17-18; 10:8-9; Ezekiel 1:28). The reassuring touch and 'do not be afraid' also follow the pattern of Daniel 10:10-12. 'The first and the last' (ho prōtos kai ho eschatos) is a direct claim to the title God applies to himself in Isaiah 44:6 and 48:12. Christ applies to himself the exclusive self-designation of YHWH.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Daniel 8:17-18. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Ezekiel 1:28. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Daniel 10:10-12. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 44:6. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. The self-identification moves from eternal existence ('the first and the last') to incarnate death ('I was dead') to resurrection ('I am alive forever and ever') — the entire gospel compressed into a single sentence. The 'keys of death and Hades' (tas kleis tou thanatou kai tou hadou) represent authority over the realm of the dead. Hades (hadēs) is the Greek equivalent of Hebrew Sheol — the abode of the dead, not the later Christian concept of hell as a place of punishment. Christ's possession of these keys means death no longer operates as a final, unopposed power.
19. This verse provides a threefold outline that many interpreters use to structure the entire book: 'what you have seen' (the vision of chapter 1), 'what is now' (the situation of the seven churches in chapters 2-3), and 'what will take place after this' (the visions of chapters 4-22). Whether or not John intended this as a formal outline, the three temporal categories — past vision, present reality, future events — frame the entire work.
20. The Greek mystērion ('mystery') does not mean 'puzzle' but 'revealed secret' — something previously hidden that is now disclosed. Christ himself provides the interpretation of the vision's symbols, establishing a pattern for the rest of the book where some symbols are explained and others are left for the reader. The identity of the 'angels' (angeloi) of the churches is debated: they may be heavenly guardians, human leaders (the Greek angelos can mean 'messenger'), or the spiritual identity of each congregation. The text does not resolve this ambiguity.

Summary: Revelation 2 contains four of the seven letters to the churches of Asia: Ephesus (vv. 1-7), Smyrna (vv. 8-11), Pergamum (vv. 12-17), and Thyatira (vv. 18-29). Each letter follows a consistent pattern: an address identifying Christ by a feature from the chapter 1 vision, a commendation ('I know your works'), a criticism or encouragement, a command, and a promise 'to the one who conquers.' Ephesus is praised for endurance but has abandoned its first love. Smyrna faces suffering and is told to be faithful unto death. Pergamum holds fast to Christ's name but tolerates false teaching. Thyatira is commended for love and service but rebuked for tolerating a false prophetess.

What Makes This Remarkable: Each letter begins with a self-description of Christ drawn from the vision of 1:12-20, creating a direct literary connection. The promises to the conqueror in each letter anticipate the final vision of the new creation in chapters 21-22 (tree of life, no second death, hidden manna, morning star). The reference to 'the synagogue of Satan' (2:9) reflects a sharp conflict between the early church and local Jewish communities over claims to be the true people of God. The 'Nicolaitans' and the teaching of 'Balaam' appear to involve compromise with Greco-Roman religious culture, particularly eating food offered to idols and sexual immorality.

Translation Friction: The phrase 'synagogue of Satan' (2:9) is historically specific to a first-century dispute and must not be generalized; we render it as written. 'Jezebel' in the Thyatira letter (2:20) is likely a symbolic name drawn from the Old Testament figure, not a literal name; we note the allusion. The precise identity of the Nicolaitans is uncertain; we render the name without speculative identification.

Connections: Ephesus: Genesis 2:9 and Revelation 22:2 (tree of life). Smyrna: Daniel 1:12-14 (testing period). Pergamum: Numbers 22-25 (Balaam), Numbers 25:1-2 (eating sacrifices, sexual immorality), Exodus 16:33-34 (hidden manna), Isaiah 62:2 (new name). Thyatira: 1 Kings 16:31, 21:25 (Jezebel), Psalm 2:8-9 (ruling nations with iron rod), Isaiah 14:12 (morning star).

¹To the angel of the church in Ephesus write: These are the words of the one who holds the seven stars in his right hand, who walks among the seven golden lampstands: ²"I know your works, your labor and your endurance, and that you cannot tolerate evil people. You have tested those who claim to be apostles but are not, and you have found them to be false. ³You have endurance, and you have borne up for the sake of my name, and you have not grown weary. ⁴But I have this against you: you have abandoned the love you had at first. ⁵Remember then how far you have fallen. Repent, and do the works you did at first. If you do not, I will come to you and remove your lampstand from its place — unless you repent. ⁶But you do have this: you hate the works of the Nicolaitans, which I also hate. ⁷Let the one who has an ear hear what the Spirit says to the churches. To the one who conquers, I will grant the right to eat from the tree of life, which is in the paradise of God." ⁸To the angel of the church in Smyrna write: These are the words of the first and the last, who was dead and came to life: ⁹"I know your tribulation and your poverty — but you are rich — and the slander of those who say they are Jews and are not, but are a synagogue of Satan. ¹⁰Do not fear what you are about to suffer. Look, the devil is about to throw some of you into prison so that you may be tested, and you will face tribulation for ten days. Be faithful even to the point of death, and I will give you the crown of life. ¹¹Let the one who has an ear hear what the Spirit says to the churches. The one who conquers will not be harmed by the second death." ¹²To the angel of the church in Pergamum write: These are the words of the one who has the sharp two-edged sword: ¹³"I know where you dwell — where Satan's throne is. Yet you hold fast to my name, and you did not deny your faith in me even in the days of Antipas, my faithful witness, who was killed among you, where Satan dwells. ¹⁴But I have a few things against you: you have some there who hold to the teaching of Balaam, who taught Balak to put a stumbling block before the sons of Israel, so that they would eat food sacrificed to idols and practice sexual immorality. ¹⁵In the same way, you also have some who hold to the teaching of the Nicolaitans. ¹⁶Therefore repent. If you do not, I will come to you soon and wage war against them with the sword of my mouth. ¹⁷Let the one who has an ear hear what the Spirit says to the churches. To the one who conquers, I will give some of the hidden manna, and I will give him a white stone, and on the stone a new name written that no one knows except the one who receives it." ¹⁸To the angel of the church in Thyatira write: These are the words of the Son of God, who has eyes like a flame of fire and feet like burnished bronze: ¹⁹"I know your works — your love, faith, service, and endurance — and that your last works are greater than your first. ²⁰But I have this against you: you tolerate that woman Jezebel, who calls herself a prophetess and teaches and deceives my servants to practice sexual immorality and to eat food sacrificed to idols. ²¹I gave her time to repent, but she refuses to repent of her sexual immorality. ²²Look, I will throw her onto a bed of sickness, and those who commit adultery with her into great tribulation, unless they repent of her works. ²³I will strike her children dead, and all the churches will know that I am the one who searches minds and hearts, and I will give to each of you according to your works. ²⁴But to the rest of you in Thyatira, who do not hold this teaching, who have not known what they call 'the deep things of Satan' — I place no other burden on you. ²⁵Only hold fast to what you have until I come. ²⁶The one who conquers and who keeps my works until the end — to that one I will give authority over the nations, ²⁷He will rule them with a rod of iron. As the vessels of a potter will they be broken to shivers:. ²⁸Indeed as I received of my Father. And I will provide him the morning star. ²⁹Let the one who has an ear hear what the Spirit says to the churches."

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The formula tade legei ('these things says') echoes the prophetic messenger formula of the Old Testament ('thus says the LORD'). Christ's self-identification draws from 1:13 and 1:16. The verb peripatōn ('walking') implies active presence — Christ is not distant from his churches but moves among them. Ephesus was the largest and most prominent city in the province of Asia, home to the famous temple of Artemis.
2. The Greek oida ('I know') is emphatic — Christ's knowledge is comprehensive and personal. The triad of 'works, labor, endurance' (erga, kopon, hypomonēn) suggests both active effort and patient suffering. The testing of false apostles indicates a community with strong doctrinal vigilance — a quality that will be contrasted with their deficiency in verse 4.
3. The Greek ou kekopiakes ('you have not grown weary') uses the perfect tense, indicating a sustained state — they have not flagged despite ongoing hardship. The phrase 'for the sake of my name' (dia to onoma mou) connects their suffering to their identification with Christ.
4. The Greek aphēkes ('you have abandoned, left behind') is a strong word — not 'diminished' or 'cooled' but actively forsaken. The 'first love' (tēn agapēn sou tēn prōtēn) likely refers to the initial fervent devotion to Christ and to one another that characterized the community's founding. The irony is sharp: a church excellent at doctrinal vigilance has lost the very thing that motivated its faith.
5. Three imperatives frame the call to restoration: 'remember' (mnēmoneue), 'repent' (metanoēson), and 'do' (poiēson). Repentance here is not merely feeling sorry but taking concrete action — returning to the 'first works.' The threat to remove the lampstand means the loss of the church's identity and witness — it would cease to exist as a church. This is not about individual salvation but about the community's corporate calling.
6. The identity of the Nicolaitans (Nikolaitōn) is uncertain. Early church tradition connected them to Nicolas of Antioch (Acts 6:5), but this is unverifiable. Their 'works' appear related to the teaching of Balaam in 2:14-15 — compromise with pagan religious practices. The name may be a Greek equivalent of the Hebrew Balaam (both possibly meaning 'conqueror of the people'), though this etymology is debated. Christ's statement 'which I also hate' validates the church's rejection of these practices.
7. The hearing formula ('let the one who has an ear hear') echoes Jesus's words in the Synoptic Gospels (Matthew 11:15; 13:9). The promise of the 'tree of life' (xylou tēs zōēs) reaches back to Genesis 2:9 and 3:22-24 — access to the tree that was lost at the fall is restored to those who conquer. The same tree reappears in Revelation 22:2. The word paradeisos ('paradise') is a Persian loanword originally meaning 'an enclosed garden,' used in the Septuagint for the Garden of Eden.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 2:9. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. Christ's self-identification draws from 1:17-18. For a church facing death, Christ identifies himself as one who has already passed through death and conquered it. Smyrna (modern Izmir) was a prosperous port city; its name is related to the word for myrrh, an aromatic resin associated with burial — an ironic connection given the letter's theme of suffering and death.
9. The paradox 'poverty but rich' (ptōcheian, alla plousios) inverts worldly categories — material deprivation coexists with spiritual wealth, a reversal that contrasts sharply with Laodicea (3:17). The phrase 'synagogue of Satan' (synagōgē tou satana) reflects a specific local conflict where certain members of the Jewish community were opposing or denouncing Christians to Roman authorities. This is not a blanket condemnation of Judaism but a charge against specific accusers. The Greek blasphēmian here means 'slander' or 'defamation' rather than blasphemy in the theological sense.
10. The 'ten days' (hēmerōn deka) may echo Daniel 1:12-14 (Daniel's ten-day test) or simply indicate a limited, defined period of suffering. The promise 'be faithful unto death' (ginou pistos achri thanatou) does not mean 'until you die of old age' but 'even if faithfulness costs your life.' The 'crown of life' (ton stephanon tēs zōēs) uses stephanos, the victor's wreath given to athletic champions, not diadēma (a royal crown) — the imagery is of winning a contest through endurance. Smyrna was famous for its athletic games, making this metaphor locally resonant.

10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Daniel 1:12-14 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The double negative ou mē ('absolutely not') is the strongest form of negation in Greek — there is no possibility of harm from the second death for the one who conquers. The 'second death' (tou thanatou tou deuterou) is defined in 20:14 as 'the lake of fire.' Physical death may come to the faithful in Smyrna, but the second death — final, permanent separation from God — holds no power over them.
12. Christ's self-identification draws from 1:16. For a church in a city dominated by Roman imperial authority, the reference to a sword is significant — Rome claimed the 'right of the sword' (ius gladii), the authority to execute. Christ holds a greater sword, one that proceeds from his mouth (the word of truth that judges all human authority). Pergamum was the administrative capital of the province of Asia and a major center of emperor worship.
13. The 'throne of Satan' (ho thronos tou satana) may refer to the great altar of Zeus on the Pergamum acropolis, the temple of Augustus and Roma (the first provincial temple of the imperial cult in Asia), or the city's role as the judicial seat where death sentences were pronounced. The exact referent is uncertain; the point is that Pergamum was a stronghold of forces opposed to Christ. Antipas is called 'my faithful witness' (ho martys mou ho pistos mou) — the same title given to Christ himself in 1:5. The word martys here carries both its original meaning ('witness') and its developing sense of 'one who dies for testimony' — the English word 'martyr' derives from this Greek word.
14. The reference to Balaam draws on Numbers 22-25 and 31:16. According to the tradition, Balaam could not curse Israel directly, so he advised Balak to seduce Israel into idolatry and sexual sin through Moabite women — an indirect strategy of corruption from within. The parallel is clear: some in Pergamum are teaching that participation in pagan religious feasts (which involved eating idol-sacrificed food and often ritual sexual activity) is acceptable. The Greek eidōlothyta ('food sacrificed to idols') and porneusai ('to practice sexual immorality') are the same issues addressed at the Jerusalem Council (Acts 15:20, 29).
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Numbers 22-25. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The word homoiōs ('in the same way, likewise') links the Nicolaitans directly to the teaching of Balaam — the two groups may be identical or share the same essential error of accommodating pagan practice. The SBLGNT does not include 'which thing I hate' (found in some manuscripts and reflected in the KJV); we follow the critical text.
16. The command to repent is directed to the whole church ('you,' singular, addressing the congregation), but the war is directed against 'them' (the Nicolaitans/Balaamites). The church as a whole is responsible for tolerating false teaching within its community. The 'sword of my mouth' (tē rhomphaia tou stomatos mou) is the word of Christ that exposes and judges — the same sword described in 1:16 and drawn from Isaiah 49:2.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 49:2. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. Three gifts are promised: hidden manna, a white stone, and a new name. The 'hidden manna' (tou manna tou kekrymmenou) alludes to the jar of manna preserved in the ark of the covenant (Exodus 16:33-34; Hebrews 9:4) and to Jewish tradition that Jeremiah hid the ark before the Babylonian destruction. Against the temptation to eat idol-food, Christ offers heavenly food. The 'white stone' (psēphon leukēn) has been variously interpreted: a voting pebble signifying acquittal, an admission token to a feast, or a victor's token. The 'new name' may echo Isaiah 62:2 ('you will be called by a new name that the mouth of the LORD will bestow'). Its secrecy — known only to the recipient — suggests an intimate, personal relationship between Christ and the individual believer.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 16:33-34. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 62:2. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. This is the only place in Revelation where the title 'Son of God' (ho huios tou theou) is used explicitly. The description draws from 1:14-15. Thyatira was the smallest of the seven cities but receives the longest letter. The city was known for its trade guilds (including dyeing — Lydia, the seller of purple cloth in Acts 16:14, was from Thyatira). Guild membership typically required participation in guild feasts held in pagan temples, creating the central tension of this letter.
19. Four qualities are listed: love (agapēn), faith (pistin), service (diakonian), and endurance (hypomonēn). Notably, Thyatira possesses the very quality Ephesus has lost — love. The statement that their 'last works are greater than the first' (ta erga sou ta eschata pleiona tōn prōtōn) indicates a growing, maturing community — the opposite trajectory from Ephesus, which declined from its first love.
20. The name 'Jezebel' (Iezabel) almost certainly alludes to Ahab's wife in 1 Kings 16:31 and 21:25, who promoted Baal worship in Israel and persecuted the prophets of the LORD. Whether this is the woman's actual name or a prophetic label is debated; the Old Testament association — a woman who leads God's people into idolatry — is clearly intended. The charges are identical to the Balaam/Nicolaitan teaching in the Pergamum letter: idol-food and sexual immorality, the twin temptations of assimilation into Greco-Roman culture.
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes 1 Kings 16:31 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
21. The verb edōka ('I gave') is aorist — time for repentance was given at a specific past point. The present tense ou thelei ('she does not wish, refuses') indicates an ongoing, deliberate choice. The opportunity for repentance was real but has been rejected. God's patience has a boundary.

- 22. The 'bed' (klinēn) is an ironic reversal — the bed of illicit pleasure becomes a bed of illness and judgment. The Greek moicheuontas ('committing adultery') may be literal or metaphorical (spiritual unfaithfulness, following the Old Testament prophetic tradition where idolatry is depicted as adultery — cf. Hosea, Ezekiel 16, 23). The condition 'unless they repent' (ean mē metanoēsōsin) keeps the door open — even followers of Jezebel can still turn back.
- 22. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Ezekiel 16. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
- 23. The phrase 'her children' (ta tekna autēs) likely refers to her committed followers, not biological offspring. The expression 'searches minds and hearts' (eraunōn nephrou kai kardias) echoes Jeremiah 17:10 ('I the LORD search the heart and test the mind'), directly applying a divine prerogative of YHWH to Christ. The Greek nephrou literally means 'kidneys,' which in ancient thought were the seat of deep emotion and will — we render it as 'minds' for clarity. The principle of judgment 'according to your works' (kata ta erga hymōn) echoes Psalm 62:12 and Proverbs 24:12.
- 23. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Jeremiah 17:10 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
- 23. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalm 62:12 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
- 23. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Proverbs 24:12 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
- 24. The phrase ta bathēta tou satana ('the deep things of Satan') is ambiguous: it may be what Jezebel's followers claimed as their own teaching (claiming to know 'deep things,' possibly gnostic-style secret knowledge, which Christ relabels as satanic), or it may be Christ's own label for their teaching. The phrase hōs legousin ('as they say') suggests the former — they advertised their knowledge of 'deep things,' and Christ reframes it. The phrase 'no other burden' (ou...allo baros) echoes the language of the Jerusalem Council's decision (Acts 15:28).
- 25. The imperative kratēsate ('hold fast, grip firmly') implies active resistance, not passive waiting. The phrase achri hou an hēxō ('until I come') points to the return of Christ — the eschatological horizon that frames all seven letters.
- 26. The promise shifts from individual rewards (tree of life, hidden manna) to cosmic authority. The phrase exousian epi tōn ethnōn ('authority over the nations') draws from Psalm 2, which is quoted directly in the next verse. This is a royal promise: those who share in Christ's faithful endurance will share in his reign.
- 26. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 2. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
- 27. This is a direct quotation from Psalm 2:9 (LXX), a royal enthronement psalm. The verb poimanei can mean 'to rule' or 'to shepherd' — the dual meaning is deliberate, as ancient kings were conceived as shepherds of their people. The iron rod and shattered pottery express the irresistible authority of the messianic king. In Psalm 2, this authority belongs to God's anointed; here Christ shares it with those who conquer.
- 27. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalms 2:9. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
- 28. Christ's authority is derived from the Father and then shared with the faithful — a chain of delegated sovereignty. The 'morning star' (ton astera ton prōinon) is identified in 22:16 as Christ himself ('I am the bright morning star'). The gift of the morning star is therefore the gift of Christ's own presence and glory. The morning star allusion may also draw on Numbers 24:17 ('A star will come out of Jacob'), one of the oldest messianic oracles.
- 28. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Numbers 24:17 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
- 29. In the first three letters, the hearing formula precedes the promise to the conqueror; in the last four (beginning with Thyatira), the promise precedes the hearing formula. This structural shift at the midpoint of the seven letters may be intentional, though its significance is debated.

Summary: Revelation 3 contains the final three of seven letters to the churches of Asia: Sardis (vv. 1-6), Philadelphia (vv. 7-13), and Laodicea (vv. 14-22). Sardis has a reputation for being alive but is actually dead and is called to wake up. Philadelphia, despite little power, has kept Christ's word and is promised an open door that no one can shut and protection from the coming hour of trial. Laodicea is famously 'lukewarm' — neither hot nor cold — and is warned that Christ is about to spit them out of his mouth. Yet even to Laodicea the invitation remains: Christ stands at the door and knocks.

What Makes This Remarkable: The Sardis and Laodicea letters contain no commendation, while the Philadelphia and Smyrna letters (ch. 2) contain no criticism — only two churches on each extreme. The 'open door' promise to Philadelphia (3:8) may relate to missionary opportunity or eschatological access. The Laodicea letter's imagery is drawn from local conditions: Laodicea's water supply came via aqueduct from hot springs near Hierapolis and arrived lukewarm; the city was a wealthy banking center (hence 'you say I am rich'); and it was famous for black wool and eye salve (hence the counsel to buy white garments and eye ointment). The image of Christ knocking at the door (3:20) has become one of the most recognized images in Christian art and devotion.

Translation Friction: The 'synagogue of Satan' reference recurs in the Philadelphia letter (3:9), reflecting the same first-century Jewish-Christian conflict noted in the Smyrna letter. The 'hour of trial coming on the whole world' (3:10) has been variously interpreted as a local persecution, a future tribulation, or both; we render the text as written. The phrase 'I will spit you out of my mouth' (3:16) uses the Greek emesai, which literally means 'to vomit.'

Connections: Sardis: Isaiah 29:13 (outward appearance vs. reality), Daniel 5:27 (weighed and found wanting). Philadelphia: Isaiah 22:22 (key of David), Isaiah 60:14 (enemies bowing before God's people), Isaiah 62:2 (new name). Laodicea: Hosea 12:8 (Israel's false self-assessment of wealth), Proverbs 3:12 (whom the Lord loves he disciplines), Song of Solomon 5:2 (knocking at the door).

¹To the angel of the church in Sardis write: These are the words of the one who holds the seven spirits of God and the seven stars: "I know your works. You have a reputation for being alive, but you are dead. ²Wake up, and strengthen what remains and is about to die, for I have not found your works complete before my God. ³Remember then what you received and heard. Keep it, and repent. If you do not wake up, I will come like a thief, and you will not know at what hour I will come against you. ⁴Yet you have a few people in Sardis who have not soiled their garments, and they will walk with me in white, for they are worthy. ⁵The one who conquers will be clothed in white garments in this way, and I will never blot his name out of the book of life. I will confess his name before my Father and before his angels. ⁶Let the one who has an ear hear what the Spirit says to the churches." ⁷To the angel of the church in Philadelphia write: These are the words of the holy one, the true one, who has the key of David, who opens and no one will shut, who shuts and no one opens: ⁸"I know your works. Look, I have placed before you an open door that no one is able to shut. I know that you have little power, yet you have kept my word and have not denied my name. ⁹Look, I will make those of the synagogue of Satan who say they are Jews and are not, but lie — look, I will make them come and bow down before your feet, and they will know that I have loved you. ¹⁰Because you have kept my word of endurance, I will also keep you from the hour of trial that is about to come upon the whole world, to test those who dwell on the earth. ¹¹I am coming soon. Hold fast to what you have, so that no one takes your crown. ¹²The one who conquers — I will make him a pillar in the temple of my God, and he will never go out of it again. I will write on him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God — the new Jerusalem, which comes down out of heaven from my God — and my own new name. ¹³Let the one who has an ear hear what the Spirit says to the churches." ¹⁴To the angel of the church in Laodicea write: These are the words of the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the origin of God's creation: ¹⁵"I know your works: you are neither cold nor hot. I wish you were either cold or hot. ¹⁶So, because you are lukewarm — neither hot nor cold — I am about to vomit you out of my mouth. ¹⁷For you say, 'I am rich; I have prospered and need nothing,' not realizing that you are wretched, pitiful, poor, blind, and naked. ¹⁸I counsel you to buy from me gold refined by fire so that you may be rich, and white garments so that you may be clothed and the shame of your nakedness not be exposed, and eye salve to anoint your eyes so that you may see. ¹⁹Those whom I love, I rebuke and discipline. Therefore be zealous and repent. ²⁰Look, I stand at the door and knock. If anyone hears my voice and opens the door, I will come in to him and eat with him, and he with me. ²¹The one who conquers, I will grant him to sit with me on my throne, just as I also conquered and sat down with my Father on his throne. ²²Let the one who has an ear hear what the Spirit says to the churches."

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Christ identifies himself by holding both the seven spirits (fullness of the Spirit) and the seven stars (the churches' angels) — complete authority over spiritual life and over the churches. The indictment is devastating: onoma echeis hoti zēs ('you have a name that you are alive') — reputation without reality. Sardis was historically captured twice by enemies who exploited its defenders' complacency (by Cyrus in 547 BC and by Antiochus III in 214 BC), giving the command to 'wake up' in verse 2 a pointed local resonance.

2. The imperative ginou grēgorōn ('become watchful/wake up') uses the present imperative, indicating a state that must begin and continue. The verb stērisōn ('strengthen') is aorist — an urgent, decisive action. What remains is 'about to die' (emellon apothanein) — the situation is critical but not yet beyond rescue. The works are not called sinful but 'incomplete' (peplērōmena in the negative) — Sardis has started well but not followed through.
3. The four imperatives — 'remember' (mnēmoneue), 'keep' (tērei), 'repent' (metanoēsōn) — escalate in urgency. The thief metaphor (hōs kleptēs) echoes Jesus's teaching in Matthew 24:43-44 and Paul's use in 1 Thessalonians 5:2. Given Sardis's history of being captured because its watchmen fell asleep, the image of a thief in the night would have been particularly stinging. The phrase 'come against you' (hēxō epi se) is threatening rather than comforting — this is a coming in judgment.
4. The word onomata ('names') is used metonymically for people — a few individuals amid the spiritually dead church have remained faithful. 'Soiled their garments' (emolunan ta himatia) is a metaphor for moral or spiritual contamination. Walking 'in white' (en leukois) symbolizes purity, victory, and festal celebration — white garments were worn at Roman triumphs and at festivals. The declaration 'they are worthy' (axioi eisin) stands in implicit contrast to the unworthiness of the majority.
5. Three promises: white garments (purity/victory), retention in the book of life, and personal acknowledgment by Christ before God. The 'book of life' (tēs biblou tēs zōēs) appears in Exodus 32:32-33, Psalm 69:28, and Daniel 12:1 — a register of those who belong to God. The double negative ou mē ('never, absolutely not') provides emphatic assurance. Christ's promise to 'confess' (homologēsō) their name echoes his teaching in Matthew 10:32 ('whoever acknowledges me before others, I will also acknowledge before my Father in heaven').
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 32:32-33 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalm 69:28 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Daniel 12:1 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The hearing formula closes the Sardis letter. As in the final four letters, it follows rather than precedes the promise to the conqueror.
7. Unlike the other letters, Christ does not identify himself by features from the chapter 1 vision but by titles — 'the holy one' (ho hagios) and 'the true one' (ho alēthinos) — that are divine attributes in the Old Testament. The 'key of David' (tēn klein Daid) draws directly from Isaiah 22:22, where Eliakim is given the key to the house of David, granting unrestricted authority to grant or deny access. Applied to Christ, this means he alone controls access to God's kingdom. Philadelphia ('brotherly love') was a frontier city founded to spread Greek culture eastward — a detail that adds resonance to the 'open door' promise.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 22:22. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The 'open door' (thyran ēneōgmenēn) has been interpreted as missionary opportunity (cf. Paul's use in 1 Corinthians 16:9, 2 Corinthians 2:12, Colossians 4:3) or as assured access to God's kingdom. Given the key-of-David context, the latter is primary — Christ has opened a door for Philadelphia that no earthly power can close. The phrase 'little power' (mikran echeis dynamin) is not a rebuke but an acknowledgment of the church's small size and limited social influence. Despite their weakness, they have been faithful — the opposite of Sardis, which had reputation but no reality.
9. The 'synagogue of Satan' reappears from the Smyrna letter (2:9), indicating a similar conflict in Philadelphia. The promise that opponents will 'bow before your feet' (proskynēsousin enōpion tōn podōn sou) echoes Isaiah 60:14 ('the children of your oppressors will come bowing before you') and Isaiah 49:23. The ironic reversal is striking: those who denied the Philadelphian Christians' status before God will be brought to acknowledge that God's love rests on this small, weak community. The verb proskynēsousin here means 'bow down' or 'do obeisance,' not necessarily 'worship' in the fullest sense.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 60:14. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 49:23. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The phrase ton logon tēs hypomonēs mou ('my word of endurance') means either 'the word about my endurance' or 'the word that calls for endurance' — the genitive is ambiguous and may be intentionally so. The promise tērēsō ek ('I will keep from') is debated: ek can mean 'out of' (removal from) or 'through' (protection within). The text does not resolve whether Christians will be absent from the trial or preserved through it. The 'hour of trial' (tēs hōras tou peirasmou) coming on the 'whole world' (tēs oikoumenēs holēs) indicates a universal scope — not merely local persecution but a worldwide crisis.
11. The present tense erchomai ('I am coming') conveys imminence and certainty. The 'crown' (ton stephanon) is the victor's wreath, as in 2:10 — not a possession to be casually held but a prize that can be forfeited through unfaithfulness. The warning 'so that no one takes' (hina mēdeis labē) implies that the crown is not irrevocably secured but depends on continued faithfulness.
12. Three names are inscribed on the conqueror: God's name, the city's name, and Christ's new name — expressing total belonging. The 'pillar' (stulon) metaphor promises permanence in God's presence. Philadelphia experienced frequent earthquakes, and after the devastating earthquake of 17 AD, residents often fled the city to the surrounding countryside; the promise 'he will never go out again' (exō ou mē exelthē eti) would resonate powerfully with people who knew the terror of collapsing buildings. The 'new Jerusalem' (kainēs Ierousalēm) anticipates the climactic vision of chapters 21-22. Christ says 'my God' (tou theou mou) four times in this verse, emphasizing his mediatorial role.

13. The hearing formula closes the Philadelphia letter, the sixth of seven. Philadelphia and Smyrna are the only two churches that receive no rebuke — both are small, suffering communities that have remained faithful.
14. Christ identifies himself with three titles: 'the Amen' (ho amēn) — the one in whom all God's promises find their 'yes' (cf. 2 Corinthians 1:20; Isaiah 65:16, where God is called 'the God of Amen/truth'); 'the faithful and true witness' (ho martys ho pistos kai alēthinos); and 'the origin of God's creation' (hē archē tēs ktiseōs tou theou). The Greek archē can mean 'beginning,' 'origin,' 'ruler,' or 'first cause.' We render it as 'origin' to avoid the misreading that Christ was the first created being — the term indicates source and sovereignty, not temporal sequence, consistent with its use in Colossians 1:15-18.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 65:16. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The hot/cold metaphor has often been misread as 'fervent vs. opposed.' In context, both hot water (from the nearby hot springs of Hierapolis, used for healing) and cold water (from the mountain springs of Colossae, refreshing and pure) were useful. Lukewarm water — what Laodicea actually received through its aqueduct — was nauseating and useless. The point is not that opposition is preferable to indifference, but that the Laodicean church provides neither healing nor refreshment. The Greek ophelon ('I wish, would that') expresses strong desire.
16. The Greek emesai literally means 'to vomit' — a visceral, revolting image. The KJV's 'spue' (spew) softens this slightly. We render the physical force of the verb directly. The verb mellō ('I am about to') indicates imminence but not yet completion — there is still time for Laodicea to change. Anyone who drank the tepid, mineral-laden water arriving through Laodicea's aqueduct would understand this metaphor immediately.
17. The contrast is total: Laodicea's self-assessment ('rich, prospered, needing nothing') is the exact opposite of Christ's diagnosis ('wretched, pitiful, poor, blind, naked'). The fivefold indictment dismantles every claim. Laodicea was genuinely wealthy — after an earthquake in 60 AD, the city famously refused imperial aid and rebuilt with its own resources (Tacitus, Annals 14.27). The church has absorbed the city's self-sufficient attitude. The echo of Hosea 12:8 ('I have become wealthy; I have found riches for myself') is unmistakable — Israel made the same boast.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Hosea 12:8. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. Each remedy precisely addresses a local industry and a spiritual deficiency. Laodicea was a banking center (gold), known for its glossy black wool textiles (garments), and home to a famous medical school that produced a Phrygian eye powder (eye salve). Christ ironically tells this commercially successful city to 'buy' from him — the only merchant whose goods can address their actual poverty. The gold 'refined by fire' (pepyrōmenon ek pyros) suggests faith tested through suffering (cf. 1 Peter 1:7). The white garments contrast with the city's signature black wool.
19. This verse reveals that the severe language of the Laodicean letter is motivated by love (philō), not rejection. The principle echoes Proverbs 3:12 ('the LORD disciplines those he loves') and Hebrews 12:6. The Greek verb philō indicates personal, affectionate love — even lukewarm Laodicea is loved. The two imperatives 'be zealous' (zēleue) and 'repent' (metanoēson) call for passionate commitment and a decisive turn — the opposite of lukewarm indifference.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Proverbs 3:12. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
20. This verse is often read as an evangelistic appeal to non-believers, but in context Christ is addressing a church — he stands outside the door of a community that bears his name. The image may draw on Song of Solomon 5:2 ('I slept but my heart was awake. A sound! My beloved is knocking'). The meal (deipnēsō, 'I will dine/eat the evening meal') suggests intimate fellowship — table fellowship in the ancient world signified deep personal relationship. The reciprocity is striking: 'I with him and he with me' (met' autou kai autos met' emou) — a shared meal where both host and guest give and receive.
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Song of Solomon 5:2 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
21. This is the climactic promise of the seven letters — the greatest of all the rewards. The conqueror is offered a share in Christ's own throne, which is itself a share in the Father's throne. The chain is explicit: the Father shares his throne with Christ, Christ shares his throne with the faithful. The verb enikēsa ('I conquered') uses the same root as nikōn ('the one who conquers') — Christ's conquest (through faithful suffering and death) is the pattern for the believer's conquest.
22. The hearing formula closes the seventh and final letter, completing the cycle that began in 2:1. The seven letters collectively address every possible condition a church can face: persecution, false teaching, compromise, complacency, decline, faithfulness in weakness, and self-satisfied indifference. Together they form a comprehensive pastoral address to the church in every age.

Summary: Revelation 4 shifts from the seven churches on earth to the throne room of heaven. John sees an open door in heaven and hears the trumpet-like voice from chapter 1 calling him to come up. He is immediately 'in the Spirit' and sees a throne with one seated on it, described in terms of precious stones and surrounded by a rainbow. Twenty-four elders on twenty-four thrones encircle the central throne, dressed in white with golden crowns. From the throne come lightning, thunder, and voices. Seven blazing torches burn before the throne. A crystal sea stretches before it. Four living creatures — one like a lion, one like an ox, one with a human face, and one like a flying eagle — each covered with eyes and having six wings, never cease to cry: 'Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, who was and is and is to come.' When they give glory, the twenty-four elders fall down in worship, casting their crowns before the throne.

What Makes This Remarkable: The throne-room vision draws heavily from three Old Testament sources: Isaiah 6 (seraphim with six wings crying 'Holy, holy, holy'), Ezekiel 1 and 10 (four living creatures with multiple faces and eyes), and Daniel 7 (the Ancient of Days on his throne). John synthesizes these traditions into a single, cohesive vision. The one on the throne is never directly named or described in anthropomorphic terms — only through the imagery of light refracted through gemstones. The 'trisagion' (threefold 'holy') is one of the oldest continuous liturgical elements in Christian worship. The twenty-four elders may represent the twelve tribes and twelve apostles — the full people of God from both covenants.

Translation Friction: We render the vision as presented without attempting to identify the symbolic referents definitively. The rainbow (iris) is described as 'like an emerald' (homoios horasei smaragdinō), which is unusual since rainbows are multicolored; this may refer to a dominant green hue or to a circular halo of light. The precise identification of the gemstones (iaspidi, sardiō) is uncertain; ancient gem names do not always correspond to modern ones.

Connections: Isaiah 6:1-4 (seraphim, trisagion), Ezekiel 1:4-28 (four living creatures, throne, rainbow, crystal), Ezekiel 10 (cherubim), Daniel 7:9-10 (Ancient of Days, throne, fire), 1 Kings 22:19 (heavenly court), Exodus 24:10 (sapphire pavement under God's feet). The 'sea of glass' may echo the bronze sea in Solomon's temple (1 Kings 7:23) or the cosmic waters above the firmament (Genesis 1:6-7).

¹After this I looked, and there before me was an open door in heaven. And the first voice that I had heard speaking to me like a trumpet said, "Come up here, and I will show you what must take place after this." ²At once I was in the Spirit, and there before me was a throne set in heaven, with one seated on the throne. ³And the one seated there had the appearance of jasper and carnelian, and around the throne was a rainbow that had the appearance of an emerald. ⁴Around the throne were twenty-four thrones, and seated on the thrones were twenty-four elders, clothed in white garments, with golden crowns on their heads. ⁵From the throne came flashes of lightning, rumblings, and peals of thunder. Before the throne burned seven torches of fire, which are the seven spirits of God. ⁶Before the throne there was something like a sea of glass, like crystal. And in the center, around the throne, were four living creatures covered with eyes in front and behind. ⁷The first living creature was like a lion, the second living creature was like an ox, the third living creature had a face like that of a human, and the fourth living creature was like a flying eagle.

⁸Each of the four living creatures had six wings and was covered with eyes all around and within. Day and night they never cease to say:

"Holy, holy, holy,
Lord God Almighty,
who was and is and is to come!"

⁹And whenever the living creatures give glory and honor and thanksgiving to the one seated on the throne, who lives forever and ever, ¹⁰The four and twenty elders fall down prior to him that sat on the throne, and worship him that liveth for ever and ever, and cast their crowns prior to the throne and stated,

11 "Worthy are you, our Lord and God, to receive glory and honor and power,
for you created all things, and by your will they existed and were created."

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The phrase meta tauta ('after this') marks a major structural transition — from the earthly churches to the heavenly throne room. The 'first voice' (hē phōnē hē prōtē) refers back to 1:10, connecting this scene to the initial commission. The open door in heaven (thyra ēneōgmenē en tō ouranō) recalls Ezekiel 1:1 ('the heavens were opened and I saw visions of God'). The phrase ha dei genesthai ('what must take place') echoes Daniel 2:28-29 (LXX), where Daniel reveals to Nebuchadnezzar 'what must happen in the last days.'
1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Ezekiel 1:1. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Daniel 2:28-29. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
2. This is the second of four 'in the Spirit' (en pneumati) experiences in Revelation (1:10; 4:2; 17:3; 21:10), each introducing a major new vision. The description of the one on the throne is strikingly restrained — no human features are described, only the appearance of gemstones and light (v. 3). This reticence about depicting God directly follows the tradition of Ezekiel 1:26-28, where the prophet describes only 'the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the LORD.'
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Ezekiel 1:26-28. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. God is described entirely through light and gemstones — jasper (iaspidi, likely a clear, brilliant stone, not the modern opaque jasper) and carnelian (sardiō, a red stone). The combination of clear brilliance and deep red may evoke glory and judgment. The rainbow (iris) echoes Genesis 9:13-16, where the rainbow is the sign of God's covenant with Noah — its presence around the throne is a covenant symbol. The emerald-like quality (smaragdinō) gives the rainbow a dominant green hue, suggesting life and renewal. Ezekiel 1:28 similarly describes 'the appearance of a rainbow in the clouds' surrounding the divine presence.

3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Ezekiel 1:28 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The twenty-four elders (eikosi tessaras presbyterous) have been variously identified as angelic beings, heavenly representatives of Israel's tribes, the combined twelve patriarchs and twelve apostles, or the twenty-four priestly divisions of 1 Chronicles 24. Their white garments recall the promise to the faithful in 3:4-5, and their crowns (stephanous, victor's wreaths) will be cast before the throne in verse 10. They sit on thrones (thronous), indicating delegated authority within a heavenly court.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes 1 Chronicles 24. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. Lightning, voices/rumblings, and thunder (astrapai kai phōnai kai brontai) echo the Sinai theophany (Exodus 19:16) and recur at key structural points in Revelation (8:5; 11:19; 16:18), each time with escalating intensity. The seven torches (hepta lampades pyros) are explicitly identified as the seven spirits of God, connecting to 1:4 and 3:1. The imagery merges Zechariah's seven-lamped menorah (Zechariah 4:2) with the fiery presence of God. The Greek lampades refers to torches or large lamps, not small candles.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 19:16 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Zechariah 4:2 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The 'sea of glass' (thalassa hyalinē) may recall the cosmic waters above the firmament (Genesis 1:6-7), the bronze sea in Solomon's temple (1 Kings 7:23-26), or the pavement of sapphire under God's feet at Sinai (Exodus 24:10). Its crystal-like stillness contrasts with the turbulent sea that symbolizes chaos elsewhere in Revelation. The four 'living creatures' (zōa, not 'beasts' as in the KJV — zōa means 'living beings,' while the hostile creatures of later chapters are thēria, 'beasts/wild animals'). Their eyes covering front and back suggest omniscient awareness. The description draws on Ezekiel 1:5-21 and 10:12.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 1:6-7. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes 1 Kings 7:23-26. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.

6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 24:10. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Ezekiel 1:5-21. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The four faces correspond to Ezekiel 1:10, where each cherub has all four faces simultaneously; here each creature bears one face. The lion, ox, human, and eagle have been traditionally interpreted as representing the noblest, strongest, wisest, and swiftest of all creatures — the entirety of animate creation in worship before the Creator. Early Christian tradition also associated them with the four Gospels (lion = Mark, ox = Luke, human = Matthew, eagle = John), though this association is not in the text. The Greek moschos ('calf, young bull') is rendered 'ox' to capture the full-grown stature implied by the parallel with lion and eagle.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Ezekiel 1:10. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The six wings come from Isaiah 6:2 (the seraphim), while the eyes come from Ezekiel 1 and 10 (the cherubim). John's living creatures merge features of Isaiah's seraphim and Ezekiel's cherubim into a single heavenly order. The trisagion ('Holy, holy, holy') is a direct echo of Isaiah 6:3. In Hebrew, repetition for emphasis is common (doubling = superlative), but the threefold repetition is unique in the Old Testament and expresses the absolute holiness of God. The threefold temporal designation (ho ēn kai ho ōn kai ho erchomenos) repeats from 1:4 and 1:8, but here the order shifts — 'who was' comes first, perhaps emphasizing God's eternal past as foundation for present and future sovereignty.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 6:3 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Ezekiel 1 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The temporal clause hotan dōsousin ('whenever they give') uses the indefinite construction, indicating a repeated, ongoing action — each time the living creatures offer their praise, the elders respond. The three offerings — glory (doxan), honor (timēn), and thanksgiving (eucharistian) — will be expanded to seven in 7:12. The phrase tō zōnti eis tous aiōnas tōn aiōnōn ('the one living into the ages of the ages') affirms God's eternal, inexhaustible life.
10. The casting of crowns (balousin tous stephanous) is an act of subordination — whatever authority or honor the elders possess is derived from and returned to the one on the throne. In Greco-Roman culture, subject kings would lay their crowns before the emperor as a sign of submission; here the gesture acknowledges that all created authority is delegated from and belongs to God. The repetition of 'forever and ever' reinforces the endless nature of this worship.
11. The acclamation 'worthy are you' (axios ei) deliberately echoes the Roman acclamation 'axios' ('worthy!') used to acclaim emperors. The heavenly court declares God — not Caesar — as the one truly worthy of universal praise. The title 'our Lord and God' (ho kyrios kai ho theos hēmōn) is notably the same title the emperor Domitian reportedly demanded: dominus et deus noster ('our lord and god'). The ground for worship is creation — God made all things, and all things exist because of his will (dia thelēma sou). The verb ēsan ('they existed') preceding ektisthēsan ('they were created') is puzzling; it may mean 'they came into being and were created' or 'they existed [in God's purpose] and [then] were created.'

Summary: Revelation 5 continues the throne-room vision as John sees a scroll sealed with seven seals in the right hand of the one on the throne. A mighty angel asks who is worthy to open the scroll, and no one in heaven, on earth, or under the earth is found worthy. John weeps bitterly. Then one of the elders tells him to stop weeping: 'The Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Root of David, has conquered.' But when John looks, he sees not a lion but a Lamb standing as though slaughtered, with seven horns and seven eyes. The Lamb takes the scroll, and the four living creatures and twenty-four elders fall before him, each holding harps and golden bowls of incense (the prayers of the saints). They sing a new song declaring the Lamb worthy because he was slaughtered and purchased people for God from every tribe and language. Myriads of angels join the worship, and finally every creature in all creation praises the one on the throne and the Lamb together.

What Makes This Remarkable: The central literary and theological moment of the chapter — arguably of the entire book — is the contrast between what John hears and what he sees. He hears 'the Lion of Judah' but sees a slaughtered Lamb. This hear/see pattern is a key interpretive device in Revelation: the Lamb redefines what it means to be the Lion. Power operates through sacrifice. The Lamb (to arnion, a diminutive form) appears 28 times in Revelation, becoming the dominant christological image. The seven horns represent complete power, seven eyes complete knowledge (identified as the seven spirits of God sent into all the earth). The 'new song' combines themes from Isaiah 42:10

(new song of salvation), Psalm 33:3, and Psalm 96:1.

Translation Friction: The scroll (biblion) sealed with seven seals has been identified with various Old Testament backgrounds: Ezekiel's scroll of woes (Ezekiel 2:9-10), a Roman testament or will, a contract deed, or God's plan for history. We render it as written without resolving the identification. The phrase 'standing as though slaughtered' (hestēkos hōs esphagmenon) presents a paradox: the Lamb bears the marks of slaughter yet stands alive. We preserve this tension.

Connections: Genesis 49:9-10 (Lion of Judah), Isaiah 11:1, 10 (Root of David/Jesse), Isaiah 53:7 (lamb led to slaughter), Ezekiel 2:9-10 (scroll written on both sides), Daniel 7:10 (myriads of angels), Zechariah 4:10 (seven eyes of the LORD), Psalm 33:3, 96:1, 149:1 (new song), Exodus 19:6 (kingdom of priests), Isaiah 42:10 (new song of redemption).

¹Then I saw in the right hand of the one seated on the throne a scroll written on the inside and on the back, sealed with seven seals. ²And I saw a mighty angel proclaiming in a loud voice, "Who is worthy to open the scroll and break its seals?" ³And no one in heaven or on earth or under the earth was able to open the scroll or to look into it. ⁴And I wept and wept because no one was found worthy to open the scroll or to look into it. ⁵Then one of the elders said to me, "Stop weeping. Look, the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Root of David, has conquered, so that he can open the scroll and its seven seals." ⁶Then I saw, in the center of the throne and of the four living creatures and in the center of the elders, a Lamb standing as though slaughtered, having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven spirits of God sent out into all the earth. ⁷He came and took the scroll from the right hand of the one seated on the throne. ⁸When he took the scroll, the four living creatures and the twenty-four elders fell down before the Lamb, each holding a harp and golden bowls full of incense, which are the prayers of the saints.

⁹And they sang a new song, saying:

"Worthy are you to take the scroll and to open its seals, for you were slaughtered and by your blood you purchased people for God from every tribe and language and people and nation,

¹⁰Has made us to our God kings and priests — and we will reign on the earth. ¹¹Then I looked, and I heard the voice of many angels around the throne and the living creatures and the elders, and their number was myriads of myriads and thousands of thousands, ¹²Declaring with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to accept authority, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing.

¹³And I heard every creature in heaven and on earth and under the earth and in the sea — everything in them — saying:

"To the one seated on the throne and to the Lamb be blessing and honor and glory and dominion forever and ever!"

¹⁴And the four living creatures said, "Amen!" And the elders fell down and worshiped.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The scroll (biblion) written on both sides echoes Ezekiel 2:9-10, where God's scroll was 'written on both sides with words of lamentation, mourning, and woe.' Writing on both sides indicates completeness — there is no room for additions. The seven seals (sphragisin hepta) indicate maximum security; each must be broken in sequence. In Roman legal practice, a testament required seven witnesses and seven seals. The scroll may represent God's redemptive plan, a decree of judgment, or the inheritance deed of creation.

1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Ezekiel 2:9-10. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.

2. The 'mighty angel' (angelon ischyron) reappears in 10:1 and 18:21. The question 'who is worthy?' (tis axios) uses the same word (axios) as the acclamation in 4:11, where God is declared 'worthy.' The question is not merely 'who is able?' but 'who has the moral standing and authority?' The proclamation goes out to all of creation — the universal scope of the search emphasizes the uniqueness of the one who is eventually found worthy.
3. The threefold cosmic division — heaven, earth, under the earth — encompasses the totality of created existence (cf. Philippians 2:10). The Greek oudeis ('no one') is absolute. Not even looking at the scroll (blepein auto) is possible — the scroll's contents are completely inaccessible without a worthy mediator. The impossibility is total: no angel, no human, no being of any kind can approach God's sealed purpose.
4. The Greek ekleiaion poly ('I was weeping much') uses the imperfect tense, indicating continued, uncontrollable weeping — not a single tear but sustained grief. John's weeping reflects the devastating implication: if no one can open the scroll, God's purposes remain sealed and unrealized. Creation's story has no resolution, no redemption, no ending. The emotional intensity makes the resolution in verse 5 all the more dramatic.
5. Two messianic titles converge: 'the Lion of the tribe of Judah' from Genesis 49:9-10 (Jacob's blessing on Judah: 'Judah is a lion's cub') and 'the Root of David' from Isaiah 11:1, 10 (the shoot from Jesse's stump). Both are titles of royal power and conquest. The verb enikēsen ('has conquered') is the same root as nikōn ('the one who conquers') used in the promises to the seven churches — Christ is the archetypal conqueror. But the nature of his conquest will be radically redefined in the next verse.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 49:9 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 11:1 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. This is the pivotal moment of Revelation's theology. John hears 'Lion' but sees 'Lamb' — the hear/see contrast redefines conquest as sacrificial death. The Lamb (arnion, a diminutive of arēn) is small, vulnerable — yet it stands at the very center of heaven's power. 'Standing as though slaughtered' (hestēkos hōs esphagmenon) is a paradox: the marks of violent death are visible, yet the Lamb is alive and upright. The verb sphazō ('to slaughter') is the same used for ritual sacrifice. Seven horns represent complete power (horns = strength in biblical symbolism); seven eyes represent complete knowledge, identified with the seven spirits of God (cf. Zechariah 4:10, 'the eyes of the LORD that range through all the earth'). The slaughtered Lamb possesses omnipotence and omniscience.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Zechariah 4:10. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The simplicity of this verse belies its enormity. The Lamb approaches the throne of God and takes the scroll — an act no one in all creation could perform. The perfect tense eilēphen ('has taken') in some manuscripts emphasizes the permanence of the act. The transfer of the scroll from the hand of God to the Lamb is the decisive moment of the entire heavenly scene — the one who was slaughtered now holds the destiny of creation.
8. The living creatures and elders offer the Lamb the same worship they gave to the one on the throne in 4:10 — a striking theological claim about the Lamb's divine status. The harps (kitharan) accompany the 'new song' of verse 9. The golden bowls of incense (phialas chrysas gemousas thymiamaton) directly identified as 'the prayers of the saints' (hai proseuchai tōn hagiōn) — the prayers of God's people on earth are present in heaven as fragrant offerings. This echoes Psalm 141:2 ('Let my prayer be set before you like incense'). The prayers of suffering believers are not lost but are held in golden vessels before the throne.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalm 141:2 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The 'new song' (ōdēn kainēn) echoes Psalms 33:3, 96:1, and 149:1, as well as Isaiah 42:10 — always a song celebrating God's new act of salvation. The Lamb is 'worthy' (axios) — answering the question of verse 2. The ground of worthiness is sacrificial death: 'you were slaughtered' (esphagēs) and 'you purchased' (ēgorasas). The SBLGNT does not include 'us' (hēmas) after 'purchased,' reading instead 'you purchased for God' people from every group — the universal scope is the emphasis. The fourfold formula 'tribe, language, people, nation' (phylēs, glōssēs, laou, ethnous) appears seven times in Revelation with slight variations, expressing the complete diversity of humanity.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalms 33:3. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 42:10. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The SBLGNT reads 'them' (autous) and 'they will reign' (basileusousin) rather than 'us' and 'we shall reign' — the elders and living creatures speak about the redeemed rather than identifying themselves as the redeemed. The echo of Exodus 19:6 ('a kingdom of priests') continues from 1:6. The future tense basileusousin ('they will reign') points to a still-future consummation of the saints' royal priesthood on earth — not in heaven as disembodied spirits but on the renewed earth.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 19:6 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The worship expands concentrically: the four living creatures and twenty-four elders (v. 8), then countless angels (v. 11), then every creature in existence (v. 13). The numbers myriades myriadōn kai chiliades chiliadōn ('myriads of myriads and thousands of thousands') echo Daniel 7:10, where the heavenly court numbers 'a thousand thousands served him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him.' These are not precise counts but expressions of innumerable multitude.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Daniel 7:10. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.

12. Seven attributes are ascribed to the Lamb — power (dynamis), wealth (plouton), wisdom (sophia), might (ischyn), honor (timē), glory (doxa), and blessing (eulogia). The sevenfold list represents completeness — the Lamb deserves all praise without remainder. The angels' acclamation parallels but expands the threefold praise of 4:11 (glory, honor, power), now directed not to the Creator alone but to the slaughtered Lamb. That a slain animal receives the same worship as the one on the throne is the theological climax of the chapter.
13. The worship reaches its widest circle — every creature (pan ktisma) in the fourfold cosmic division (heaven, earth, under earth, sea) joins the praise. The Lamb now receives praise alongside the one on the throne in a single doxology — 'to the one seated on the throne and to the Lamb' (tō kathēmēnō epi tō thronō kai tō arniō). This coordinated worship is one of Revelation's strongest statements of the Lamb's divine status. The four attributes (blessing, honor, glory, dominion) are directed jointly to God and the Lamb, with no distinction in the quality or degree of worship. The phrase eis tous aiōnas tōn aiōnōn ('forever and ever') ensures this is not temporary acclaim but eternal worship.
14. The chapter closes with the simplest possible response: 'Amen' from the living creatures and silent prostration from the elders. After the expanding circles of praise — four creatures, twenty-four elders, myriads of angels, every creature in existence — the scene resolves into stillness and wordless adoration. The SBLGNT does not include 'him who lives forever and ever' after 'worshiped' (found in some later manuscripts); the object of worship is implicit from the preceding context — both the one on the throne and the Lamb.

Summary: Revelation 6 recounts the opening of the first six of the seven seals on the scroll. The first four seals release the four horsemen: a white horse (conquest), a red horse (war), a black horse (famine), and a pale horse (death), followed by Hades. The fifth seal reveals the souls of the martyrs under the altar, crying out for justice and told to wait until the full number of their fellow servants is completed. The sixth seal unleashes a cosmic catastrophe — a great earthquake, the sun turning black, the moon becoming like blood, stars falling, the sky rolling up, and every mountain and island displaced. The chapter ends with the terrified cry of kings, generals, and all people: 'Who is able to stand?'

What Makes This Remarkable: The four horsemen draw on Zechariah 1:8-11 and 6:1-8, where colored horses patrol the earth as agents of divine sovereignty. The imagery of cosmic collapse in the sixth seal comes from Isaiah 34:4 (the heavens rolled up like a scroll), Joel 2:31 (sun darkened, moon to blood), and Isaiah 2:19-21 (people hiding in rocks from God's terror). The cry of the martyrs under the altar (fifth seal) introduces a theology of divine justice delayed but not denied — God's people suffer and die, but their blood is remembered. The altar imagery suggests their deaths are sacrificial offerings. The chapter moves from human violence (horsemen) to divine response (cosmic signs), framing history as moving toward judgment.

Translation Friction: The identity of the rider on the white horse (first seal) is debated: some identify him as Christ (cf. 19:11), others as the Antichrist or a personification of conquest/imperialism. The text does not explicitly identify the rider, and we render the vision without resolving the ambiguity. The martyrs' cry 'How long?' (heos pote) echoes the psalms of lament, not vindictiveness. The cosmic language of the sixth seal may be literal, metaphorical, or both; we render it as written.

Connections: Zechariah 1:8-11, 6:1-8 (colored horses), Ezekiel 14:21 (four judgments: sword, famine, wild beasts, pestilence), Isaiah 34:4 (sky rolled up), Joel 2:31 (sun and moon), Isaiah 2:19-21 (hiding in rocks), Hosea 10:8 ('say to the mountains, cover us'), Psalm 79:5-10 (how long?), Nahum 1:6 (who can stand?), Malachi 3:2 (who can endure?).

¹Then I watched as the Lamb opened the first of the seven seals, and I heard one of the four living creatures say with a voice like thunder, "Come!" ²I looked, and there was a white horse. Its rider held a bow, and a crown was given to him, and he rode out conquering and to conquer. ³When the Lamb opened the second seal, I heard the second living creature say, "Come!" ⁴And out came another horse, fiery red. Its rider was permitted to take peace from the earth so that people would slaughter one another, and he was given a great sword. ⁵When the Lamb opened the third seal, I heard the third living creature say, "Come!" I looked, and there was a black horse, and its rider held a pair of scales in his hand. ⁶And I heard what sounded like a voice from among the four living creatures, saying, "A quart of wheat for a denarius, and three quarts of barley for a denarius — but do not damage the oil and the wine." ⁷When the Lamb opened the fourth seal, I heard the voice of the fourth living creature say, "Come!" ⁸I looked, and there was a pale green horse. Its rider's name was Death, and Hades was following close behind him. They were given authority over a fourth of the earth, to kill with sword and with famine and with pestilence and by the wild animals of the earth. ⁹When the Lamb opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of those who had been slaughtered because of the word of God and because of the testimony they had held. ¹⁰They cried out with a loud voice, "How long, Sovereign Lord, holy and true, until you judge and avenge our blood on those who dwell on the earth?" ¹¹Then each of them was given a white robe, and they were told to rest a little longer, until the number would be completed of their fellow servants and their brothers and sisters who were about to be killed just as they had been. ¹²I watched as the Lamb opened the sixth seal. There was a great earthquake, the sun turned black like sackcloth made of hair, and the whole moon became like blood. ¹³The stars of heaven fell to the present age, indeed as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind. ¹⁴The sky was split apart like a scroll being rolled up, and every mountain and island was moved from its place. ¹⁵Then the kings of the earth, the nobles, the generals, the rich, the powerful, and every slave and free person hid themselves in the caves and among the rocks of the mountains. ¹⁶They called to the mountains and the rocks, "Fall on us and hide us from the face of the one seated on the throne and from the wrath of the Lamb! ¹⁷For the great day of their wrath has come, and who is able to stand?"

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The SBLGNT reads simply erchou ('come'), without 'and see' (kai ide/blepei), which appears in some manuscripts and is reflected in the KJV. The command is directed to the horseman, summoning him forth, not to John. Each of the four living creatures in turn summons a horseman — they are agents of divine sovereignty, not passive observers. The voice 'like thunder' (hōs phōnē brontēs) conveys irresistible authority.
2. The white horse (hippos leukos) and its rider have been interpreted as Christ, the gospel's advance, military conquest, or the Antichrist. The passive edothē ('was given') — a 'divine passive' recurring throughout the seal judgments — indicates that the horseman's authority is granted from above. The bow (toxon) and crown (stephanos, victor's wreath) suggest military conquest. The phrase nikōn kai hina nikēsē ('conquering and in order to conquer') expresses unstoppable momentum. We render the vision as described without identifying the rider.
3. The pattern repeats: each seal opening is accompanied by a summons from one of the four living creatures. The second creature corresponds to the ox-like figure of 4:7.
4. The red horse (hippos pyrrhos, 'fire-red') represents bloodshed and war. The verb sphaxousin ('they will slaughter') is the same root (sphazō) used for the Lamb's sacrificial death in 5:6 — an ironic echo. Human beings slaughter one another while the slaughtered Lamb opens the seals. The 'great sword' (machaira megalē) is the short sword of close combat, not the long sword (rhomphaia) of Christ's mouth. The divine passive edothē ('was given/permitted') appears twice, emphasizing that even warfare operates under God's sovereign permission.
5. The black horse (hippos melas) represents famine and economic hardship. The scales (zygon, literally 'yoke' or 'balance') are instruments for measuring grain by weight — indicating scarcity so severe that food must be rationed. In prosperous times, grain was sold by volume; selling by weight indicates extreme shortage.
6. A choenix (approximately one quart or one liter) of wheat was a daily ration for one person. A denarius was a day's wage for a laborer (Matthew 20:2). Normally, a denarius could buy eight to twelve quarts of wheat. These prices represent inflation of roughly eight to twelve times normal — extreme but not total famine. Barley, the poor person's grain, is cheaper but still inflated. The command 'do not damage the oil and the wine' (to elaion kai ton oionon mē adikēsēs) has been interpreted as a limitation on the famine (luxury goods survive while necessities are scarce) or as divine protection of certain resources. Some see a reference to Domitian's edict regarding vineyard management in Asia Minor.
7. The fourth and final horseman is summoned by the eagle-like living creature (4:7). The four horsemen together correspond to the four judgments of Ezekiel 14:21 — sword, famine, plague, and wild beasts — which God sends as comprehensive judgment.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Ezekiel 14:21. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The Greek chlōros means 'pale green, yellowish green' — the color of a corpse or of vegetation. It is the same word used for green grass in Mark 6:39. 'Pale green' captures the deathly pallor better than the KJV's generic 'pale.' This is the only horseman explicitly named: Death (ho Thanatos), with Hades (ho Hadēs) as his companion collecting the dead. The four means of killing — sword (rhomphaia), famine (limos), pestilence (thanatos, here meaning 'plague/deadly disease' rather than 'death'), and wild animals (thērion) — correspond to Ezekiel 14:21's four judgments. The scope is limited to 'a fourth of the earth' — devastating but not total, allowing room for repentance.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Ezekiel 14:21 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The scene shifts from earth to heaven. The martyrs are 'under the altar' (hypokatō tou thysiasstēriou), corresponding to the base of the sacrificial altar where the blood of offerings was poured (Leviticus 4:7). Their placement under the altar frames their deaths as sacrificial offerings — their blood, like animal blood, is at the altar's base. The verb esphagmenōn ('slaughtered') is the same word used for the Lamb in 5:6 — the martyrs' deaths mirror the Lamb's death. They were killed dia ('because of') the word of God and their testimony — their faithfulness was the cause of their deaths.

9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Leviticus 4:7. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The cry 'how long?' (heōs pote) echoes the psalms of lament (Psalm 6:3; 13:1-2; 79:5; 94:3) — the ancient cry of God's suffering people. The address ho despotēs ('Sovereign Lord, Master') is stronger than kyrios and emphasizes God's absolute authority — the martyrs appeal not to a peer but to the supreme ruler who has the power and right to act. The request for vengeance (ekdikēis, 'vindicate, avenge') is not personal revenge but a plea for divine justice — the restoration of moral order. 'Those who dwell on the earth' (tōn katoikountōn epi tēs gēs) becomes a fixed phrase in Revelation for humanity in opposition to God.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalm 6:3 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The white robe (stolē leukē) is an interim reward — vindication and honor even before the final judgment. The instruction to 'rest a little longer' (anapausontai eti chronon mikron) implies that divine justice operates on a timeline that encompasses more martyrdoms yet to come. The disturbing implication is that God's plan includes the deaths of more faithful witnesses before the end. The phrase 'until the number would be completed' (heōs plērōthōsin) suggests a divinely determined measure of suffering — not arbitrary prolongation but purposeful completion. We render adelphoi as 'brothers and sisters' since the Greek can be inclusive.
12. The cosmic disruptions draw on Joel 2:31 ('The sun will be turned to darkness and the moon to blood') and Isaiah 13:10 ('The stars of heaven and their constellations will not show their light'). Sackcloth (sakkos trichinos, 'sackcloth of hair') was a coarse, dark fabric made of goat hair, worn in mourning. The sun in sackcloth suggests the cosmos itself mourning. The moon 'like blood' (hōs haima) — reddened, ominous. These images appear in multiple prophetic texts as signs of the Day of the LORD (Isaiah 13:10; Joel 2:31; Amos 8:9), signaling divine intervention in cosmic terms.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Joel 2:31. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 13:10. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Amos 8:9. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. The simile of the fig tree (sykē) dropping unripe figs (olynthous, the late figs that cling to the branch through winter) in a violent wind is vivid and agricultural — even the stars are no more secure in the sky than winter figs on a branch in a storm. The image echoes Isaiah 34:4 ('All the stars of the heavens will dissolve and the sky will be rolled up like a scroll; all their host will wither like leaves withering on a vine, like a withered fig falling from a fig tree').
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 34:4 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. The sky splitting like a rolled scroll comes directly from Isaiah 34:4 (LXX). The image suggests the sky peeling back to reveal the reality behind it — the barrier between heaven and earth torn open. Mountains and islands displaced (ekinēthēsan, 'were moved, shaken') represents the destabilization of what seems most permanent and immovable. The vision depicts the total unmaking of the created order — not merely weather events but the dissolution of the cosmic framework.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 34:4. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The list includes seven categories of people — from kings to slaves — representing the totality of human society. No one is exempt from the terror of God's judgment, regardless of rank or status. The movement from the powerful (kings, nobles, generals, rich, powerful) to the common (slave, free) shows that social hierarchies dissolve before divine judgment. Hiding in caves and rocks echoes Isaiah 2:19-21 ('People will flee to caves in the rocks and to holes in the ground from the fearful presence of the LORD').
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 2:19-21 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. The cry to the mountains echoes Hosea 10:8 ('they will say to the mountains, "Cover us!" and to the hills, "Fall on us!"'), which Jesus also cited in Luke 23:30. The phrase 'the wrath of the Lamb' (tēs orgēs tou arniou) is one of Revelation's most arresting paradoxes — a lamb is the least wrathful of creatures, yet this Lamb's anger terrifies kings. The juxtaposition of 'the one on the throne' and 'the Lamb' as joint sources of wrath parallels their joint reception of worship in 5:13.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Hosea 10:8. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. The SBLGNT reads autōn ('their,' referring to both the one on the throne and the Lamb) rather than autou ('his'). The 'great day' (hē hēmera hē megalē) echoes the prophetic 'Day of the LORD' (Joel 2:11, 31; Zephaniah 1:14-18; Malachi 3:2; 4:5). The question 'who is able to stand?' (tis dynatai stathēnai) echoes Nahum 1:6 ('Who can endure his fierce anger?') and Malachi 3:2 ('Who can endure the day of his coming? Who can stand when he appears?'). The question is rhetorical but receives its answer in chapter 7 — those sealed by God are able to stand.

17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Joel 2:11. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.

Summary: Revelation 7 provides an interlude between the sixth and seventh seals, answering the question of 6:17: 'Who is able to stand?' Two scenes are presented. First, four angels hold back the four winds of the earth while another angel ascends from the rising sun with the seal of the living God, commanding that 144,000 servants of God be sealed on their foreheads — 12,000 from each of the twelve tribes of Israel (vv. 1-8). Second, John sees an innumerable multitude from every nation, tribe, people, and language, standing before the throne and the Lamb, clothed in white robes, holding palm branches, and crying out that salvation belongs to God and to the Lamb. Angels, elders, and living creatures worship. One of the elders identifies the multitude as those who have come out of the great tribulation, who have washed their robes in the blood of the Lamb. The chapter concludes with a promise that God will shelter them, and the Lamb will shepherd them to springs of living water, and God will wipe every tear from their eyes.

What Makes This Remarkable: The hear/see pattern from chapter 5 recurs: John hears a number (144,000 from Israel's tribes) but sees a vision (an innumerable multitude from every nation). As with the Lion/Lamb contrast, what is heard and what is seen may describe the same reality from different perspectives — the sealed community of God's people is both defined (rooted in Israel's covenant identity) and unlimited (encompassing all nations). The tribal list is unusual: Dan is omitted and Manasseh is included separately from Joseph, which has generated extensive scholarly discussion. The final verses (15-17) anticipate the new creation vision of chapters 21-22.

Translation Friction: Whether the 144,000 and the great multitude are the same group described differently or two distinct groups is debated. We render both visions as written without resolving the relationship. The omission of Dan from the tribal list has been variously explained (a scribal error, a tradition associating Dan with idolatry, an association with the Antichrist); we note it without adopting a position. The phrase 'the great tribulation' (tēs thlipseōs tēs megalēs) is rendered with the article as it appears in Greek.

Connections: Ezekiel 9:4-6 (marking foreheads for protection), Ezekiel 37:15-28 (reunification of Israel's tribes), Isaiah 49:10 (no hunger or thirst), Isaiah 25:8 (God will wipe away tears), Psalm 23:1-2 (shepherd, still waters), Zechariah 6:5 (four winds), Leviticus 23:40 (palm branches at Sukkot/Tabernacles), Joel 2:32 (whoever calls on the name of the LORD will be saved).

1After this I saw four angels standing at the four corners of the earth, holding back the four winds of the earth so that no wind would blow on the earth or on the sea or on any tree. 2Then I saw another angel ascending from the rising of the sun, holding the seal of the living God. He called out with a loud voice to the four angels who had been given power to harm the earth and the sea, 3Indeed, declaring, Hurt not the world, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads. 4And I heard the number of the sealed: 144,000, sealed from every tribe of the sons of Israel: 5From the tribe of Juda, twelve thousand were sealed. From the tribe of Reuben, twelve thousand were sealed. From the tribe of Gad, twelve thousand were sealed. 6From the tribe of Aser, twelve thousand were sealed. From the tribe of Nepthalim, twelve thousand were sealed. From the tribe of Manasses, twelve thousand were sealed. 7From the tribe of Simeon, twelve thousand were sealed. From the tribe of Levi, twelve thousand were sealed. From the tribe of Issachar, twelve thousand were sealed. 8From the tribe of Zabulon, twelve thousand were sealed. From the tribe of Joseph, twelve thousand were sealed. From the tribe of Benjamin, twelve thousand were sealed. 9After this I looked, and there before me was a great multitude that no one could count, from every nation, tribe, people, and language, standing before the throne and before the Lamb, clothed in white robes, with palm branches in their hands.

¹⁰They cried out in a loud voice:

"Salvation belongs to our God who sits on the throne, and to the Lamb!"

¹¹And all the angels stood around the throne and around the elders and the four living creatures, and they fell on their faces before the throne and worshiped God, ¹²Indeed, declaring, Amen — Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and authority, and might, be to our God for ever and ever. Amen. ¹³Then one of the elders addressed me, saying, "These who are clothed in white robes — who are they, and where did they come from?" ¹⁴I said to him, "My lord, you know." And he said to me, "These are the ones coming out of the great tribulation. They have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. ¹⁵For this reason they are before the throne of God, and they serve him day and night in his temple, and the one seated on the throne will shelter them with his presence. ¹⁶They will hunger no more and thirst no more; the sun will not strike them, nor any scorching heat, ¹⁷Because the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne will feed them, and will lead them to living fountains of waters — and God will wipe away all tears from their eyes.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The 'four corners of the earth' (tas tessaras gōnias tēs gēs) is a standard ancient expression for the whole world (cf. Isaiah 11:12; Ezekiel 7:2), not a cosmological claim about the earth's shape. The four winds (tessaras anemous) represent destructive forces held in check by divine command (cf. Jeremiah 49:36; Daniel 7:2; Zechariah 6:5). The three domains — earth, sea, trees — represent the totality of the natural world. The restraining of the winds creates a dramatic pause before the sealing, ensuring God's servants are protected before judgment proceeds.

2. The angel ascends 'from the rising of the sun' (apo anatolēs hēliou) — the east, the direction of dawn and new beginnings. The 'seal of the living God' (sphragida theou zōntos) echoes Ezekiel 9:4, where a man with a writing case marks the foreheads of those in Jerusalem who grieve over its abominations, protecting them from the coming slaughter. The phrase 'living God' (theou zōntos) contrasts with the dead idols that pervade the Roman world — this God is active and capable of protecting his own.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Ezekiel 9:4. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. The sealing (sphragisōmen) on the forehead is a mark of ownership and protection — like a royal seal on a document declaring its origin and inviolability. In Ezekiel 9:4, the mark (Hebrew tav, which in ancient script looked like an X or +) protected the faithful from destruction. The seal does not prevent suffering (the great multitude in verse 14 has come 'out of the great tribulation') but guarantees ultimate preservation. The first-person plural 'we have sealed' (sphragisōmen) suggests the angel speaks on behalf of a divine company.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Ezekiel 9:4 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. John hears (ēkousa) the number — he does not see it. As in 5:5-6 (hearing 'Lion,' seeing 'Lamb'), what John hears may be interpreted by what he sees (the innumerable multitude in v. 9). The number 144,000 (12 x 12 x 1,000) is a symbolic number of completeness: twelve tribes times twelve (perhaps twelve apostles) times one thousand (a large, round number representing fullness). Whether this represents ethnic Israel, the church as spiritual Israel, or a specific end-time remnant is debated. We render the text as stated.

5. Judah is listed first rather than Reuben (the firstborn), likely because Judah is the messianic tribe — the tribe of the Lamb. The list departs from every Old Testament tribal order, creating a unique arrangement that prioritizes Judah and includes Levi (normally omitted from territorial lists because the Levites had no tribal land allotment).
6. Manasseh is listed separately from Joseph (v. 8), which is unusual — normally Manasseh and Ephraim together constitute Joseph. The separate listing of Manasseh and Joseph (without Ephraim) maintains the count of twelve while substituting for the omitted tribe of Dan.
7. The inclusion of Levi is notable — in Old Testament territorial lists, Levi is typically excluded because the Levites received no land inheritance, being set apart for priestly service (Numbers 18:20-24). Their inclusion here suggests that the list is not based on territorial divisions but on a new ordering of God's people.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Numbers 18:20-24. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The list ends with Benjamin, completing twelve tribes with each contributing exactly 12,000. The tribe of Dan is conspicuously absent — an omission that has generated much speculation. Some scholars point to Dan's association with idolatry (Judges 18:30; 1 Kings 12:29), an early tradition linking Dan to the Antichrist (based on a reading of Genesis 49:17 and Jeremiah 8:16), or a simple scribal error confusing Dan and Manasseh. The text does not explain the omission, and we do not speculate beyond noting it.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Judges 18:30 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References 1 Kings 12:29 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 49:17 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Jeremiah 8:16 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The contrast with the 144,000 is striking: the previous group was precisely numbered and ethnically defined; this group is innumerable and universally sourced. John heard a number (v. 4) but now sees a countless crowd (v. 9) — the hear/see pattern that in chapter 5 revealed Lion and Lamb as the same reality viewed differently. The fourfold formula ethnous, phylōn, laōn, glōssōn ('nation, tribe, people, language') echoes 5:9. The palm branches (phoinikes) recall the Feast of Tabernacles (Sukkot, Leviticus 23:40), a celebration of God's provision during the wilderness wandering, and also the triumphal entry traditions.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Leviticus 23:40. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The Greek hē sōtēria tō theō ('salvation to our God') can mean 'salvation belongs to God' (attributing salvation to its source) or 'salvation/praise to our God' (an acclamation). The multitude credits their deliverance jointly to God and the Lamb — as in chapter 5, the two receive unified worship. The cry is the multitude's answer to the question of 6:17 ('who is able to stand?') — those who attribute their salvation to God and the Lamb are the ones who stand.
11. The concentric arrangement reappears: throne at the center, living creatures and elders next, angels surrounding them, and the great multitude beyond. The angels respond to the multitude's cry by falling prostrate (epesan epi ta prosōpa autōn, 'fell on their faces') — a posture of complete submission and reverence.
12. A sevenfold doxology — blessing (eulogia), glory (doxa), wisdom (sophia), thanksgiving (eucharistia), honor (timē), power (dynamis), and might (ischys) — framed by double 'Amen.' The seven attributes parallel the sevenfold praise to the Lamb in 5:12, with slight variations (thanksgiving replaces wealth). The framing 'Amen...Amen' seals the praise with absolute affirmation. The angels ascribe to God the totality of praise — seven attributes representing completeness.
13. The elder's question is pedagogical — he asks in order to teach, a common technique in apocalyptic literature (cf. Zechariah 4:4-5; Daniel 7:16). The Greek apekrithē ('answered') can mean 'responded' or 'spoke up' even without a prior question from John, as it does here.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Zechariah 4:4-5 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Daniel 7:16 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. John's reply 'my lord, you know' (kyrie mou, sy oidas) is respectful deference, not divine address — kyrie here is a polite title for the elder. The phrase 'the great tribulation' (tēs thlipseōs tēs megalēs) has the definite article, indicating a specific, known period of suffering. The present participle hoi erchomenoi ('the ones coming') suggests an ongoing process, not a single past event — they are continually arriving. The paradox of washing robes white in blood is striking: blood normally stains, but the Lamb's blood purifies. The image combines sacrifice (blood) with cleansing (washing white), echoing Isaiah 1:18 ('though your sins are like scarlet, they shall be as white as snow').

14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 1:18. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The verb latreuouein ('they serve, worship') is cultic language — priestly service in the temple. Day and night service echoes the Levitical priests' perpetual ministry (1 Chronicles 9:33). The verb skēnōsei ('will tabernacle, will spread his tent over') is related to skēnē ('tent, tabernacle') and evokes the Shekinah — God's dwelling presence among his people. The concept echoes John 1:14 ('the Word became flesh and tabernacled among us') and anticipates Revelation 21:3 ('the tabernacle of God is with humanity'). We render it as 'shelter with his presence' to capture both the protective and relational dimensions.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes 1 Chronicles 9:33 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. This verse quotes Isaiah 49:10 almost verbatim from the Septuagint: 'They will not hunger or thirst, neither will the scorching heat or the sun strike them.' The Isaiah passage describes the return from exile — God's people journeying home under divine protection. The application to the great multitude frames their experience as a new exodus, a journey through tribulation to the promised presence of God. The negations are emphatic: no more hunger, no more thirst, no more exposure to harsh elements.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 49:10. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. The paradox of a lamb shepherding is striking — normally lambs are shepherded, not shepherds. Yet the Lamb who was slaughtered now leads and protects. The verb poimanei ('will shepherd') echoes Psalm 23:1 ('The LORD is my shepherd') and Ezekiel 34:23 ('I will set up over them one shepherd, my servant David'). 'Springs of living water' (zōēs pēgas hydatōn) echoes Jeremiah 2:13 ('the spring of living water') and anticipates 21:6 and 22:1 (the river of life). The final image — God wiping tears from their eyes — comes from Isaiah 25:8 and is repeated in Revelation 21:4, forming an inclusio between this interlude and the new creation vision. The intimacy of the gesture is remarkable: the sovereign God of the universe personally attending to human grief.

Summary: Revelation 8 opens with the seventh seal, which produces a dramatic half-hour silence in heaven. Seven angels are given seven trumpets. Another angel with a golden censer offers incense mingled with the prayers of the saints on the golden altar, then fills the censer with fire from the altar and hurls it to earth, producing thunder, lightning, rumblings, and an earthquake. The first four trumpets sound in sequence: the first brings hail and fire mixed with blood, burning a third of the earth and trees; the second causes something like a great burning mountain to fall into the sea, turning a third of it to blood; the third sends a blazing star called Wormwood into the rivers, poisoning a third of the waters; the fourth strikes a third of the sun, moon, and stars, darkening them. The chapter closes with an eagle flying through the sky, crying 'Woe, woe, woe' to those on earth because of the remaining three trumpets.

What Makes This Remarkable: The half-hour silence after the seventh seal is unique in Revelation's relentless visionary movement. It may echo the silence before creation, the awestruck silence of the heavenly court (cf. Habakkuk 2:20, Zephaniah 1:7, Zechariah 2:13), or the breathless pause before the Day of the LORD. The incense-prayer-judgment sequence (vv. 3-5) explicitly connects the prayers of the saints to the execution of judgment — the martyrs' cry of 6:10 is being answered. The trumpet judgments echo the Egyptian plagues (hail, water to blood, darkness) but are limited to a third of creation, indicating restrained judgment that leaves room for repentance.

Translation Friction: *The relationship between the seals, trumpets, and bowls (ch. 16) is debated: sequential, recapitulatory, or telescoping. We render each vision as it stands. The 'great mountain burning with fire' (v. 8) and 'great star blazing like a torch' (v. 10) are described with hōs ('like, as if'), maintaining their visionary, symbolic character. We render the imagery as presented without naturalistic interpretation.*

Connections: Exodus 7-10 (Egyptian plagues: hail, water to blood, darkness), Ezekiel 10:2 (coals from the altar), Joel 2:30-31 (blood, fire, columns of smoke), Jeremiah 9:15, 23:15 (wormwood), Amos 5:7, 6:12 (justice turned to wormwood), Habakkuk 2:20 (silence before the LORD), Exodus 30:1-10 (golden altar of incense), Isaiah 14:12 (fallen star).

¹When the Lamb opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven for about half an hour. ²Then I saw the seven angels who stand before God, and seven trumpets were given to them. ³Another angel came and stood at the altar with a golden censer. He was given a large quantity of incense to offer with the prayers of all the saints on the golden altar before the throne. ⁴The smoke of the incense, together with the prayers of the saints, rose before God from the angel's hand. ⁵Then the angel took the censer, filled it with fire from the altar, and threw it to the earth. And there came peals of thunder, rumblings, flashes of lightning, and an earthquake. ⁶Then the seven angels who had the seven trumpets prepared to sound them. ⁷The first angel sounded his trumpet, and there came hail and fire mixed with blood, and it was thrown to the earth. A third of the earth was burned up, a third of the trees were burned up, and all the green grass was burned up. ⁸The second angel sounded his trumpet, and something like a great mountain burning with fire was thrown into the sea, and a third of the sea became blood. ⁹A third of the living creatures in the sea died, and a third of the ships were destroyed. ¹⁰The third angel sounded his trumpet, and a great star fell from heaven, blazing like a torch, and it fell on a third of the rivers and on the springs of water. ¹¹The name of the star is Wormwood. A third of the waters became wormwood, and many people died from the water because it had been made bitter. ¹²The fourth angel sounded his trumpet, and a third of the sun was struck, a third of the moon, and a third of the stars, so that a third of their light was darkened. A third of the day was without light, and likewise a third of the night. ¹³Then I looked, and I heard an eagle flying in midheaven, crying with a loud voice, "Woe, woe, woe to those who dwell on the earth, because of the remaining trumpet blasts that the three angels are about to sound!"

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. After chapters of praise, thunder, and acclamation, the silence (sigē) is startling. The Greek hēmiōrion ('half an hour') is the only time reference in the heavenly visions. The silence may reflect the tradition of reverent stillness before God (Habakkuk 2:20, 'Let all the earth be silent before him'; Zephaniah 1:7, 'Be silent before the Lord GOD'; Zechariah 2:13, 'Be still before the LORD'). Jewish tradition held that angels cease their praise in heaven during moments when God listens to human prayers — the silence may create space for the saints' prayers to be heard (vv. 3-4).

2. The definite article 'the seven angels' (tous hepta angelous) suggests a recognized group — possibly the archangels known from Jewish tradition (Tobit 12:15, 'I am Raphael, one of the seven holy angels who present the prayers of the saints'). The trumpets (salpiggēs) recall the trumpets at Sinai (Exodus 19:16, 19), the trumpets at Jericho (Joshua 6:4-20), and the eschatological trumpet of Joel 2:1 and 1 Thessalonians 4:16. In ancient Israel, trumpets summoned to worship, announced war, and heralded the king.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 19:16. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Joshua 6:4-20. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Joel 2:1. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. The angel performs a priestly function — offering incense on the golden altar, which in the tabernacle/temple stood directly before the Holy of Holies (Exodus 30:1-10). The incense is added to (not substituted for) the prayers of the saints — the prayers are already there (cf. 5:8), and the incense mingles with them. The 'golden altar before the throne' (to thysiastērion to chrysoun to enōpion tou thronou) corresponds to the altar of incense in the earthly tabernacle, now revealed in its heavenly archetype.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 30:1-10 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.

4. The visual image is powerful: the smoke carrying the prayers ascends into God's presence. The prayers are not merely spoken and forgotten but physically rise to God. This echoes Psalm 141:2 ('Let my prayer be set before you like incense; the lifting up of my hands like the evening sacrifice'). The scene makes the theological claim that human prayer reaches God and has consequences — the fire that follows (v. 5) is the divine response to those prayers.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalm 141:2. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. The same censer that carried prayers upward now carries fire downward — the connection between prayer and judgment is direct. The fire from the altar echoes Ezekiel 10:2, where coals from between the cherubim are scattered over Jerusalem in judgment. The thunder, rumblings, lightning, and earthquake reprise the Sinai-theophany pattern from 4:5, now with the addition of an earthquake (seismos). This formula recurs at 11:19 and 16:18, each time with intensification.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Ezekiel 10:2 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The preparation (hētoimasan) creates a moment of anticipation before the first trumpet blast. The deliberate sequence — silence, prayer, fire, preparation — slows the narrative pace, building tension before the rapid succession of trumpet judgments.
7. The first trumpet echoes the seventh Egyptian plague — hail mixed with fire (Exodus 9:23-24). The addition of blood intensifies the image beyond the Exodus account, recalling Joel 2:30 ('blood and fire and columns of smoke'). The destruction is limited to a third (to triton) — a recurring fraction in the trumpet judgments that indicates severe but not total devastation. The SBLGNT includes 'a third of the earth was burned up' (to triton tēs gēs katekae), which some manuscripts lack; we follow the critical text.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 9:23-24. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Joel 2:30. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The simile hōs oros mega ('like a great mountain') maintains the visionary quality — John describes what he sees without claiming to know exactly what it is. The sea turning to blood echoes the first Egyptian plague (Exodus 7:20-21). The 'burning mountain' may recall Jeremiah 51:25, where Babylon is called a 'destroying mountain' that God will turn into a 'burned-out mountain.' The destruction moves from land (first trumpet) to sea (second trumpet), systematically affecting the created order.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 7:20-21 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Jeremiah 51:25 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The scope of destruction includes both marine life (ktismatōn...ta echonta psychas, 'creatures having life/soul') and human commerce (ploiōn, 'ships'). The destruction of ships represents economic devastation — maritime trade was the backbone of the Roman economy, and the loss of a third of shipping would be catastrophic. The pattern of 'one-third' continues, emphasizing that the judgment, while severe, is not total annihilation.
10. The progression continues: land, sea, now fresh water. The falling star (astēr megas) burning like a torch (lampas) moves the destruction from sea to rivers and springs — the sources of drinking water. Stars falling from heaven echo Isaiah 14:12 (the fall of the king of Babylon, 'How you have fallen from heaven, morning star') and may also recall the ancient association of stars with angelic beings (cf. Revelation 1:20; 12:4). The shift from salt water to fresh water intensifies the threat to human survival.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 14:12 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. Apsinthos ('Wormwood') is a bitter plant (Artemisia absinthium) that was proverbially associated with bitterness and suffering. In Jeremiah 9:15 and 23:15, God threatens to feed Israel 'wormwood' and give them 'poisoned water to drink' as punishment for following false prophets. In Amos 5:7 and 6:12, justice turned to 'wormwood' describes the perversion of what should sustain life into what destroys it. The naming of the star gives the judgment a personal, identifiable character. The verb epikranthēsan ('were made bitter') describes the transformation of life-giving water into death-dealing poison.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Jeremiah 9:15. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Amos 5:7. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. The fourth trumpet echoes the ninth Egyptian plague — darkness (Exodus 10:21-23). The progression of the first four trumpets covers the created order systematically: land and vegetation (1st), sea and marine life (2nd), fresh water (3rd), and celestial bodies (4th). This mirrors the creation sequence of Genesis 1 in reverse — an undoing of creation. The fraction 'one-third' applies to light itself — the most fundamental element of the created order (Genesis 1:3-5). The result is a diminishment of the cosmos, not yet its destruction.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 10:21-23. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.

12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 1. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. The SBLGNT reads aetou ('eagle') rather than angelou ('angel'), which is the reading of some later manuscripts reflected in the KJV. An eagle (or vulture — aetos can mean either) flying in midheaven (mesouranēmati, the point of the sky directly overhead, where the sun stands at noon) would be visible to all. The threefold 'woe' (ouai ouai ouai) corresponds to the three remaining trumpets — the fifth, sixth, and seventh — which will be called the three 'woes' (9:12; 11:14). The phrase 'those who dwell on the earth' (tous katoikountas epì tēs gēs) is Revelation's recurring designation for humanity in rebellion against God.

Summary: Revelation 9 describes the fifth and sixth trumpet judgments — the first two 'woes.' The fifth trumpet (vv. 1-12): a star fallen from heaven opens the shaft of the abyss, releasing smoke that darkens the sun and air, and from the smoke emerge locust-like creatures with scorpion power. They are commanded not to harm vegetation but only those who do not have God's seal on their foreheads. They torment people for five months but do not kill them; people will seek death but not find it. The locusts are described in terrifying composite imagery — faces like human faces, hair like women's hair, teeth like lions' teeth, breastplates of iron, wings like chariots rushing to battle. Their king is the angel of the abyss, named Abaddon in Hebrew and Apollyon in Greek. The sixth trumpet (vv. 13-21): a voice from the golden altar commands the release of four angels bound at the great river Euphrates, prepared for a specific hour, day, month, and year, to kill a third of humanity. A cavalry of 200 million with horses bearing lion heads and serpent tails kills through fire, smoke, and sulfur. Yet the rest of humanity does not repent of their idolatry, murders, sorcery, sexual immorality, or theft.

What Makes This Remarkable: The locust vision draws on Joel 1-2 (the locust plague as the Day of the LORD), but transforms natural locusts into supernatural beings of torment. The composite description — combining human, animal, and military features — is characteristic of apocalyptic symbolism and should be rendered as written, not decoded into specific modern equivalents. The Euphrates River was the eastern boundary of the Roman Empire and the traditional invasion route from Parthia, Rome's great rival — the sixth trumpet evokes the terror of invasion from beyond civilization's borders. The chapter's climax is theological: despite all these judgments, the survivors do not repent (vv. 20-21). The purpose of judgment is to provoke repentance, but the human heart resists.

Translation Friction: *The composite imagery of the locusts defies naturalistic interpretation and should be rendered symbolically as John describes it. The number 200 million (dismyriades myriadōn, literally 'two myriads of myriads') is an enormous figure that may be symbolic of an incalculable army rather than a literal count. The names Abaddon/Apollyon are translated in the text itself; we retain both names as given.*

Connections: Joel 1:2-2:11 (locust plague), Exodus 10:12-15 (Egyptian locust plague), Daniel 7 (composite beasts), Genesis 15:18, Deuteronomy 1:7 (Euphrates as boundary), Isaiah 5:26-30 (invading army from afar), Jeremiah 51:27 (armies from the north), Psalm 115:4-8, 135:15-18 (idols of gold, silver, bronze, stone, wood).

1The fifth angel sounded his trumpet, and I saw a star that had fallen from heaven to earth, and the key to the shaft of the abyss was given to him. 2He opened the shaft of the abyss, and smoke rose from the shaft like the smoke of a great furnace, and the sun and the air were darkened by the smoke from the shaft. 3From the smoke, locusts came down on the earth, and they were given power like the power of scorpions of the earth. 4They were told not to harm the grass of the earth or any green plant or any tree, but only those people who do not have the seal of God on their foreheads. 5They were allowed to torment them for five months but not to kill them, and their torment was like the torment of a scorpion when it stings a person. 6In those days people will seek death and will not find it. They will long to die, but death will flee from them. 7In appearance the locusts were like horses prepared for battle. On their heads were what looked like crowns of gold, and their faces were like human faces. 8They had hair like women's hair, and their teeth were like lions' teeth. 9They had breastplates like breastplates of iron, and the sound of their wings was like the sound of many horse-drawn chariots rushing into battle. 10 They have tails and stings like scorpions, and in their tails is their power to harm people for five months. 11They have as king over them the angel of the abyss. His name in Hebrew is Abaddon, and in Greek he is called Apollyon. 12The first woe has passed. Two woes are still to come after this. ¹³The sixth angel sounded his trumpet, and I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar that is before God, ¹⁴Indeed, declaring to the sixth angel which had the trumpet, Loose the four angels which are bound in the remarkable river Euphrates. ¹⁵So the four angels were released, who had been prepared for this hour, day, month, and year, to kill a third of humanity. ¹⁶The number of the mounted troops was two hundred million; I heard their number. ¹⁷And this is how I saw the horses in the vision and their riders: they wore breastplates the color of fire, dark blue, and sulfur yellow. The heads of the horses were like lions' heads, and out of their mouths came fire, smoke, and sulfur. ¹⁸By these three plagues a third of humanity was killed — by the fire, the smoke, and the sulfur coming out of their mouths. ¹⁹For the power of the horses is in their mouths and in their tails, for their tails are like serpents, with heads, and with them they inflict harm. ²⁰The rest of humanity, who were not killed by these plagues, did not repent of the works of their hands or stop worshiping demons and idols of gold, silver, bronze, stone, and wood — which cannot see or hear or walk. ²¹And they did not repent of their murders, their sorceries, their sexual immorality, or their thefts.

1. The star (astera) is personified — 'him' (autō) — indicating an angelic or demonic being, not a literal celestial body. The perfect participle peptōkota ('having fallen') indicates a completed fall, not one in progress — this star has already fallen. The 'abyss' (abyssou) in Revelation is the prison of demonic forces (cf. 11:7; 17:8; 20:1-3). The 'shaft' (phreatos) suggests a well or pit with a covering that can be opened and closed. The divine passive edothē ('was given') indicates that even this destructive action operates under God's permission.
2. The smoke (kapnos) obscuring sun and air recalls the pillar of smoke at Sinai (Exodus 19:18, 'Mount Sinai was covered with smoke, because the LORD descended on it in fire. The smoke billowed up from it like smoke from a furnace'). The same vocabulary (kaminos, 'furnace') appears in both passages. But whereas the Sinai smoke signaled God's presence, this smoke releases destructive forces — a dark inversion. The darkening of the sky by smoke continues the darkness motif from the fourth trumpet (8:12).
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 19:18. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. The locusts (akrides) emerge from the abyss, not from the natural world — they are demonic entities in locust form. Their power is compared to scorpions (skorpioi), combining two of the most feared creatures in the ancient Near East. The divine passive edothē ('was given') again emphasizes that their power is delegated, not inherent. The locust plague echoes Joel 1-2, where a devastating locust invasion prefigures the Day of the LORD.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Joel 1-2 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. Natural locusts devour vegetation; these supernatural locusts are commanded to leave vegetation alone and target humans instead — a complete inversion of natural behavior that marks them as demonic rather than natural. The exemption of those with God's seal (tēn sphragida tou theou) connects directly to the sealing of the 144,000 in 7:3-4. God's servants are protected from demonic torment even in the midst of worldwide suffering.
5. The five-month period (mēnas pente) may correspond to the typical lifespan of locusts (roughly May through September). The torment (basanismos) is agonizing but not lethal — a carefully limited judgment. The verb basanisthēsontai ('they will be tormented') is the same word used for the testing of gold in fire and for the interrogation of prisoners. The scorpion sting comparison specifies the type of suffering: intense, burning pain that incapacitates but does not kill.
6. The double statement — seeking death, longing to die — emphasizes the extremity of the torment. Death personified as fleeing (pheugei, present tense — it keeps fleeing) inverts the normal human experience where death is the pursuer and life flees. This echoes Job 3:21 ('who long for death, but it does not come, who search for it more than for hidden treasure'). The irony is that those who 'dwell on the earth' (the ones opposed to God throughout Revelation) sought security in earthly things; now even death offers no escape.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Job 3:21. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The description begins a composite portrait that combines features from Joel 2:4 ('They have the appearance of horses; they gallop along like cavalry'). The repeated use of hōs and homoios ('like, resembling') — at least seven times in vv. 7-10 — maintains the visionary quality. John is describing what he sees in terms of the closest analogies he can find. The 'crowns of gold' (hōs stephanoi homoioi chrysō) suggest authority or victory, though the qualifier 'what looked like' indicates they are not actual crowns. Human faces suggest intelligence or cunning.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Joel 2:4. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The hair 'like women's hair' (hōs trichas gynaikōn) may refer to the locusts' antennae, which could suggest flowing hair, or may evoke a sense of the uncanny — a blurring of categories that makes these creatures more disturbing. The lion's teeth echo Joel 1:6 ('It has the teeth of a lion, the fangs of a lioness'), directly linking these creatures to Joel's locust-plague prophecy. The combination of human faces, flowing hair, and predatory teeth creates a composite that is deliberately disorienting.

8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Joel 1:6 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The iron breastplates (thōrakas hōs thōrakas sidērous) suggest invulnerability — these creatures cannot be fought or stopped. The thunderous sound of their wings echoes Joel 2:5 ('like the noise of chariots, they leap over the mountaintops, like the crackling of fire consuming stubble, like a mighty army drawn up for battle'). The cumulative effect of the description is of an unstoppable, invulnerable, terrifying army that combines the worst features of insects, predators, warriors, and supernatural beings.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Joel 2:5. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The description circles back to the scorpion imagery of verse 3, creating a frame around the composite portrait. The five-month period is repeated from verse 5, confirming the limited duration. Their power (exousia, 'authority') resides in their tails — the part that delivers the sting. The description has moved from head to tail: golden crowns, human faces, women's hair, lion's teeth, iron breastplates, chariot-wing sound, and scorpion tails — a top-to-bottom portrait of supernatural terror.
11. Both names mean 'Destroyer' — Abaddon from the Hebrew root 'b-d ('to perish, destroy') and Apollyon from the Greek apollymi ('to destroy'). In the Old Testament, Abaddon is a place — the realm of the dead (Job 26:6; 28:22; 31:12; Psalm 88:11; Proverbs 15:11; 27:20). Here it becomes a personal name for the ruler of that realm. Some scholars see a wordplay on Apollo (Apollōn), the Greco-Roman deity claimed as patron by several Roman emperors — if so, this is a subversive identification of the imperial god with the king of the underworld. Proverbs 30:27 states that 'locusts have no king,' making these supernatural locusts a deliberate contrast to natural ones.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Job 26:6. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 88:11. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.

11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Proverbs 30:27. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. This editorial interjection marks the structural division of the three woes announced by the eagle in 8:13. The fifth trumpet = first woe; the sixth trumpet = second woe (11:14); the seventh trumpet = third woe (11:15ff). The phrase 'two woes are still to come' (erchetai eti duo ouai) maintains the escalating tension — if the locust plague was only the first woe, the remaining judgments will be worse.
13. The voice comes from the golden altar of incense — the same altar where the saints' prayers were offered in 8:3-4. The connection implies that the sixth trumpet is a response to those prayers, specifically the martyrs' cry in 6:10 ('How long...until you avenge our blood?'). The 'four horns' (tessarōn keratōn) of the altar are the projections at its four corners (cf. Exodus 30:2-3), where sacrificial blood was applied. The SBLGNT brackets tessarōn ('four'), as it is absent in some manuscripts, but the reading is well-attested.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 30:2-3 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. These four angels (tous tessaras angelous) are distinct from the four angels of 7:1 who hold back the winds — these are 'bound' (dedemenous), suggesting they are malevolent beings restrained by divine authority. The Euphrates (Euphratē) was the traditional eastern boundary of both the promised land (Genesis 15:18; Deuteronomy 1:7) and the Roman Empire. Enemies from beyond the Euphrates — Assyria, Babylon, Parthia — were the archetypal invading threat throughout Israel's history. The release of these angels symbolizes the unleashing of forces from beyond the boundary of the known world.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 15:18. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 1:7. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The fourfold time specification — hour, day, month, year — emphasizes divine precision. These angels were prepared for this exact moment (hētoimasmenoi, 'having been prepared' — perfect passive, indicating prior divine arrangement). The killing of 'a third of humanity' (to triton tōn anthrōpōn) escalates beyond the trumpet pattern of damaging a third of creation to the direct killing of a third of the human race. Where the fifth trumpet tormented but did not kill, the sixth trumpet kills on a massive scale.
16. The Greek dismyriades myriadōn literally means 'two ten-thousands of ten-thousands' — 200,000,000. This number far exceeds any ancient army (the entire Roman Empire may have had only 50-70 million inhabitants). The staggering figure likely represents an innumerable, overwhelming force rather than a precise count. John specifies 'I heard their number' (ēkousa ton arithmon autōn) — the number was told to him, not counted by him, underscoring its symbolic character.
17. The breastplates are described by three colors matching the three agents of death: fire-red (pyrinous), dark blue like hyacinth (hyakinthinous, the deep blue of smoke), and sulfur-yellow (theiōdeis). Fire, smoke, and sulfur (pyr kai kapnos kai theion) recall the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah (Genesis 19:24-28), establishing this as divine judgment. The lion heads continue the predatory imagery — these horses are weapons, not transport. John frames this as 'what I saw in the vision' (en tē horasei), reminding the reader of the visionary medium.

- 17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 19:24-28. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
- 18. The three destructive agents are called 'plagues' (plēgōn), the same word used for the Egyptian plagues in the Septuagint. The identification of fire, smoke, and sulfur as distinct 'plagues' formalizes what verses 15 and 17 described visually. The repetition of 'a third' (to triton) maintains the pattern established throughout the trumpet sequence — severe but not total destruction.
- 19. The horses are deadly at both ends — fire from their mouths and serpent-tails that bite. Like the locusts of verses 7-10, the description defies natural categories. The serpent tails (homoiai ophesin, 'like snakes') add another layer to the composite imagery and may evoke the primordial serpent of Genesis 3. The description of tails 'having heads' (echousai kephalas) is deliberately unsettling — these are creatures designed to harm from every direction.
- 19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 3. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
- 20. This is the theological climax of the chapter — the purpose of judgment was to provoke repentance, but the survivors refuse to turn. The critique of idolatry (ta eidōla ta chrysa kai ta argyra kai ta chalka kai ta lithina kai ta xylina) echoes Daniel 5:23 and Psalm 115:4-8 / 135:15-18, which mock idols that 'have eyes but cannot see, ears but cannot hear.' The list of materials descends in value (gold, silver, bronze, stone, wood), suggesting the absurdity of exchanging the living God for increasingly worthless substitutes. Behind the idols stand 'demons' (daimonia) — the worship appears religious but serves destructive spiritual realities.
- 20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Daniel 5:23 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
- 20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalm 115:4-8 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
- 21. Four sins are listed alongside idolatry from verse 20: murders (phonōn), sorceries (pharmakōn), sexual immorality (porneias), and thefts (klemmatōn). The Greek pharmakōn (from which 'pharmacy' derives) refers to the use of drugs, potions, and spells — sorcery in the ancient world often involved pharmacological substances used in magical rituals. These four sins roughly correspond to violations of the second table of the Decalogue (murder, false worship through magic, adultery, theft). The double statement of non-repentance (verses 20 and 21) frames the human response as tragically, stubbornly defiant in the face of overwhelming evidence of divine power.

Summary: Revelation 10 provides an interlude between the sixth and seventh trumpets, paralleling the interlude between the sixth and seventh seals (chapter 7). A mighty angel descends from heaven, wrapped in a cloud with a rainbow over his head, his face like the sun and legs like pillars of fire. He holds a small open scroll, places his right foot on the sea and left foot on the land, and shouts like a lion. Seven thunders speak, but John is commanded to seal up what they said and not write it down. The angel then swears by the Creator that there will be no more delay — when the seventh angel sounds his trumpet, the mystery of God will be fulfilled. John is told to take the scroll from the angel and eat it; it is sweet in his mouth but bitter in his stomach. He is told he must prophesy again about many peoples, nations, languages, and kings.

What Makes This Remarkable: The 'mighty angel' (angelos ischyros) has features reminiscent of Christ's description in chapter 1 (face like the sun, cloud, authority over sea and land) and of the angel of Daniel 10 and 12. His stance on sea and land claims authority over the entire earth. The sealed seven thunders are unique in Revelation — every other vision is recorded, but this one is suppressed, suggesting that not all of God's purposes are revealed. The eating of the scroll directly parallels Ezekiel 2:8-3:3, where Ezekiel eats a scroll that is sweet as honey — John's experience adds the element of bitterness, reflecting the mixed content of prophetic proclamation (sweet truth, bitter judgment).

Translation Friction: The identity of the 'mighty angel' is debated: some identify him as Christ, others as a powerful angel (like Michael). The divine features could describe either a theophany or an angel bearing divine glory. We render the text as written without identifying the figure beyond what the text states. The seven thunders remain sealed — any attempt to identify their content is speculation, and we note the deliberate concealment.

Connections: Daniel 10:5-6 (angelic figure), Daniel 12:7 (angel standing on water, swearing by the eternal God), Ezekiel 2:8-3:3 (eating the scroll), Exodus 20:11, Nehemiah 9:6 (God as Creator of heaven, earth, and sea), Amos 3:7-8 (the lion roars, the Lord GOD has spoken), Psalm 29:3-9 (the voice of the LORD as thunder).

¹Then I saw another mighty angel coming down from heaven, wrapped in a cloud, with a rainbow over his head. His face was like the sun, and his legs were like pillars of fire. ²He held a small scroll open in his hand. He planted his right foot on the sea and his left foot on the land, ³He shouted in a loud voice, like a lion roaring. When he shouted, seven thunders spoke with their own voices. ⁴When the seven thunders had spoken, I was about to write, but I heard a voice from heaven saying, "Seal up what the seven thunders have said, and do not write it down." ⁵Then the angel whom I had seen standing on the sea and on the land raised his right hand to heaven ⁶Sware by him that liveth for ever and ever, who created the heavens above, and the things that therein are, and the world, and the things that therein are, and the sea, and the things which are therein, that there should be time no longer:. ⁷But in the days when the seventh angel is about to sound his trumpet, the mystery of God will be fulfilled, just as he announced to his servants the prophets." ⁸Then the voice that I had heard from heaven spoke to me again, saying, "Go, take the scroll that is open in the hand of the angel who is standing on the sea and on the land." ⁹So I went to the angel and asked him to give me the small scroll. He said to me, "Take it and eat it. It will turn your stomach bitter, but in your mouth it will be sweet as honey." ¹⁰I took the small scroll from the angel's hand and ate it. It was sweet as honey in my mouth, but when I had eaten it, my stomach turned bitter. ¹¹Then they said to me, "You must prophesy again about many peoples, nations, languages, and kings."

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The angel's description echoes multiple Old Testament theophanies: the cloud recalls God's presence in the wilderness (Exodus 13:21-22); the rainbow recalls the throne-room vision (4:3) and God's covenant with Noah (Genesis 9:13); the sun-like face recalls both the transfiguration (Matthew 17:2) and the glorified Christ (1:16); the fire-pillars recall the pillar of fire that led Israel (Exodus 13:21). The word allon ('another') distinguishes this angel from the seven trumpet angels. The Greek podes can mean 'feet' or 'legs'; given the pillar imagery, 'legs' better conveys the visual impression.

1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 9:13. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
2. The 'small scroll' (biblaridion, a diminutive of biblion) is open (ēneōgmenon), in contrast to the sealed scroll of chapter 5. Whether this is the same scroll now unsealed or a different document is debated. The colossus-like stance — one foot on the sea, one on the land — claims authority over the entire created world. The imagery echoes the ancient concept of a conqueror placing his foot on conquered territory (cf. Joshua 10:24). The verb ethēken ('planted, set') suggests a firm, deliberate placement.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Joshua 10:24. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. The lion's roar (hōsper leōn mykatai) echoes Amos 3:8 ('The lion has roared — who will not fear? The Sovereign LORD has spoken — who can but prophesy?') and Hosea 11:10 ('He will roar like a lion. When he roars, his children will come trembling from the west'). The 'seven thunders' (hai hepta brontai) are introduced with the definite article, as if they are a recognized group — possibly related to the sevenfold voice of the LORD in Psalm 29, where 'the voice of the LORD' (qol YHWH) appears seven times, accompanied by thunder.

4. This is the only instance in Revelation where John is told not to write. Elsewhere he is repeatedly commanded to write (1:11, 19; 2:1, 8, 12, 18; 3:1, 7, 14; 14:13; 19:9; 21:5). The sealing (sphragison) of the thunders' message contrasts with the unsealing of the scroll in chapter 5. The command establishes that there are aspects of God's plan that remain hidden — not every divine purpose is revealed to human knowledge. This echoes Daniel 12:4 ('seal up the words of the scroll until the time of the end') and Deuteronomy 29:29 ('the secret things belong to the LORD our God').
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Daniel 12:4. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 29:29. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. The raising of the right hand is the gesture of a solemn oath (cf. Genesis 14:22; Deuteronomy 32:40; Daniel 12:7). The scene closely parallels Daniel 12:7, where 'the man clothed in linen, who was above the waters of the river, raised his right hand and his left hand toward heaven and swore by him who lives forever.' In Daniel, the angel swears about the timing of the end; here the angel makes a similar declaration about the fulfillment of God's mystery.

5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 14:22 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Deuteronomy 32:40 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Daniel 12:7 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The oath is sworn by the eternal Creator — the highest possible authority. The threefold creation formula (heaven and what is in it, earth and what is in it, sea and what is in it) echoes Exodus 20:11 and Nehemiah 9:6. The declaration chronos ouketi estai is better rendered 'there will be no more delay' than the KJV's 'time shall be no more' — the Greek chronos here means 'time of waiting' or 'interval of delay,' not time itself. The martyrs' cry 'how long?' (6:10) is finally being answered: no more waiting.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 20:11. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Nehemiah 9:6. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The 'mystery of God' (to mystērion tou theou) is his complete redemptive plan — the same concept Paul uses in Romans 16:25-26 and Ephesians 3:3-6. The verb etelesthē ('will be fulfilled, completed') is the same root as Christ's cry from the cross: tetelestai ('it is finished,' John 19:30). The verb euēngelisen ('announced good news, proclaimed as gospel') is striking — God's mystery was 'gospelled' to the prophets. The fulfillment of the mystery at the seventh trumpet connects to 11:15-18, where the kingdom of the world becomes the kingdom of God and of his Christ. The prophets (tous prophētas) refers to the Old Testament prophets who proclaimed this coming consummation (cf. Amos 3:7, 'Surely the Sovereign LORD does nothing without revealing his plan to his servants the prophets').
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Amos 3:7. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The heavenly voice (from v. 4) now directs John to participate in the vision, not merely observe it. The instruction to 'take the scroll' (labe to biblion) transitions John from witness to actor. The angel's posture is reiterated — standing on sea and land — emphasizing the cosmic authority behind the scroll's contents.
9. The command to eat the scroll directly parallels Ezekiel 2:8-3:3, where God commands Ezekiel to eat a scroll containing 'lamentations, mourning, and woe' — and it tasted 'as sweet as honey.' John's experience adds the element of bitterness in the stomach (pikranei sou tēn koilian), which Ezekiel's account lacks. The scroll's sweetness represents the pleasure of receiving God's word; its bitterness represents the painful content of what must be proclaimed — judgment, suffering, and woe. The prophet must internalize the message before delivering it.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Ezekiel 2:8-3:3. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The experience unfolds exactly as the angel predicted but in reverse order: he was told bitter-then-sweet, but he experiences sweet-then-bitter. The sweetness comes first — the initial reception of God's word is a delight (cf. Psalm 119:103, 'How sweet are your words to my taste, sweeter than honey to my mouth!'). The bitterness follows — the content of prophetic proclamation involves suffering and judgment. This sequence mirrors the experience of many prophets: called with joy, burdened by the message.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalm 119:103 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The plural legousin ('they said') is unexpected — the angel was singular. The plural may indicate a heavenly council or may be an impersonal construction ('it was said to me'). The commission to 'prophesy again' (palin prophēteusai) recommissions John for the visions that follow, particularly chapters 11-22. The preposition epi can mean 'about, concerning' or 'before, in the presence of.' The fourfold formula (peoples, nations, languages, kings) varies the standard Revelation pattern, substituting 'kings' (basileusin) for 'tribes' — anticipating the prominent role of earthly kings in the visions to come.

Summary: Revelation 11 opens with John being given a measuring rod and told to measure the temple of God and the altar but not the outer court, which has been given to the nations who will trample the holy city for forty-two months. Two witnesses are introduced who will prophesy for 1,260 days, clothed in sackcloth. They are described as the two olive trees and two lampstands that stand before the Lord of the earth. They have power to shut the sky, turn water to blood, and strike the earth with plagues. When they finish their testimony, the beast from the abyss kills them, and their bodies lie in the street of the great city for three and a half days while the earth's inhabitants celebrate. Then the breath of life from God enters them, they stand up, and a loud voice calls them up to heaven in a cloud while their enemies watch. A great earthquake destroys a tenth of the city, killing 7,000, and the survivors give glory to God. The second woe ends, and the seventh trumpet sounds, prompting heavenly voices to declare that the kingdom of the world has become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ. The twenty-four elders worship God, and the temple in heaven is opened, revealing the ark of the covenant amid lightning, thunder, earthquake, and hail.

What Makes This Remarkable: The two witnesses combine features of Moses (turning water to blood, plagues) and Elijah (shutting the sky, fire from their mouths), the two great figures of the Law and the Prophets. Their identification as 'olive trees and lampstands' draws directly from Zechariah 4, where the olive trees represent anointed figures who serve the Lord. The forty-two months / 1,260 days / three and a half years is the same period found in Daniel 7:25, 9:27, and 12:7 — a time of trial and tribulation. The seventh trumpet brings not another judgment but the climactic declaration of God's kingdom — the 'mystery of God' announced in 10:7 is fulfilled. The ark of the covenant appearing in the heavenly temple connects to the lost ark of the earthly temple, suggesting that what was lost on earth is preserved in heaven.

Translation Friction: The identity of the two witnesses has generated extensive debate: literal future individuals, Moses and Elijah returned, the Law and the Prophets, the church's witness, or Israel and the church together. We render the text as written, noting the Mosaic and Elijahnic allusions. The 'great city' (v. 8) is 'spiritually called Sodom and Egypt, where their Lord was crucified' — this identifies it as Jerusalem but in the language of prophetic condemnation. The measuring of the temple (vv. 1-2) may refer to the physical temple, the spiritual community, or both.

Connections: Zechariah 4:2-14 (two olive trees and lampstands), Daniel 7:25, 9:27, 12:7 (three and a half years), 1 Kings 17:1 (Elijah shuts the sky), Exodus 7:17-20 (Moses turns water to blood), 2 Kings 1:10-12 (Elijah calls fire from heaven), Ezekiel 37:5-10 (breath of life enters the dead), Ezekiel 40-42 (measuring the temple), Daniel 7:14, 27 (kingdom given to the saints), Psalm 2:1-2 (nations rage), Isaiah 26:20-21 (God comes to judge), Exodus 25:10-22 (ark of the covenant).

¹Then I was given a measuring rod like a staff, and I was told, "Rise and measure the temple of God and the altar and those who worship there, ²However, the court which is without the temple leave out, and measure it not. Since it is given to the Gentiles — and the holy city will they tread under foot forty and two months. ³And I will grant authority to my two witnesses, and they will prophesy for 1,260 days, clothed in sackcloth." ⁴These are the two olive trees and the two lampstands that stand before the Lord of the earth. ⁵If anyone would harm them, fire comes from their mouths and consumes their enemies. If anyone would try to harm them, this is how that person must be killed. ⁶They have the power to shut the sky so that no rain falls during the days of their prophesying, and they have power over the waters to turn them into blood and to strike the earth with every kind of plague, as often as they wish. ⁷When they have finished their testimony, the beast that rises from the abyss will make war on them and conquer them and kill them. ⁸Their bodies will lie in the street of the great city that is symbolically called Sodom and Egypt, where also their Lord was crucified. ⁹For three and a half days, people from the peoples, tribes, languages, and nations will gaze at their bodies and refuse to let them be placed in a tomb. ¹⁰Those who dwell on the earth will gloat over them and celebrate and exchange gifts, because these two prophets had tormented those who dwell on the earth. ¹¹But after the three and a half days, the breath of life from God entered them, and they stood on their feet, and great fear fell on those who saw them. ¹²Then they heard a loud voice from heaven saying to them, "Come up here."

And they went up to heaven in a cloud, while their enemies watched. ¹³At that moment a great earthquake struck, and a tenth of the city collapsed. Seven thousand people were killed in the earthquake, and the rest were terrified and gave glory to the God of heaven. ¹⁴The second woe has passed. The third woe is coming soon.

¹⁵Then the seventh angel sounded his trumpet, and there were loud voices in heaven, saying:

"The kingdom of the world has become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and he will reign forever and ever!"

¹⁶Then the twenty-four elders, who sit before God on their thrones, fell on their faces and worshiped God, ¹⁷Saying, We give you thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come. Because you have taken to you your remarkable authority, and hast reigned.

¹⁸The nations raged,
but your wrath has come,
and the time for the dead to be judged, and the time to reward your servants the prophets and the saints and those who fear your name, both small and great,
and the time to destroy those who destroy the earth."

¹⁹Then God's temple in heaven was opened, and the ark of his covenant was seen within his temple. There came flashes of lightning, rumblings, peals of thunder, an earthquake, and heavy hail.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The measuring of the temple echoes Ezekiel 40-42, where an angelic figure measures the new temple in detail. In Ezekiel, measuring signifies preservation and divine ownership — what is measured is claimed and protected by God. The Greek naon (not hieron) specifically refers to the inner sanctuary, the dwelling place of God's presence, not the entire temple complex. The instruction to measure 'those who worship' (tous proskynountas) extends the protection to people, not just architecture — the faithful community is measured and preserved.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Ezekiel 40-42. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
3. The outer court (tēn aulēn tēn exōthen) — the Court of the Gentiles in the physical temple — is excluded from measurement, meaning it is not preserved but given over (edothē, divine passive) to the nations (ethnesin). The forty-two months (mēnas tessarakonta duo) equals 1,260 days (v. 3) and three and a half years — the period of tribulation drawn from Daniel 7:25, 9:27, and 12:7, where it represents a time of suffering under hostile powers. Luke 21:24 uses the same verb patēsousin ('trample') for the Gentile domination of Jerusalem. The distinction between the protected inner sanctuary and the exposed outer court may represent the preservation of God's true people amid the external suffering of the visible community.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Daniel 7:25. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
5. The speaker shifts to first person — God or Christ directly commissions the two witnesses. The 1,260 days equals forty-two months (at 30 days per month), the same period of Gentile trampling in verse 2 — the witnesses prophesy during the time of tribulation, not after it. Sackcloth (sakkous) is the garment of mourning, repentance, and prophetic lamentation (cf. Isaiah 20:2; Jonah 3:5-6). Their ministry is one of urgent warning, not celebration. The Greek martyrsin ('witnesses') is the same word that gives English 'martyr' — these witnesses will testify and die.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 20:2 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Jonah 3:5-6 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
8. This verse directly identifies the witnesses with the vision of Zechariah 4:2-14, where two olive trees flanking a golden lampstand represent 'the two anointed ones who stand by the Lord of all the earth.' In Zechariah, the olive trees supply oil to the lampstand — they are sources of the Spirit's power. The identification of the witnesses as both olive trees (sources of the Spirit) and lampstands (bearers of light) combines the imagery. The phrase 'the Lord of the earth' (tou kyriou tēs gēs) echoes Zechariah 4:14 and asserts God's sovereignty over the world that persecutes his witnesses.

4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Zechariah 4:2-14. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. The fire from their mouths echoes 2 Kings 1:10-12, where Elijah calls fire from heaven on the soldiers sent to arrest him, and Jeremiah 5:14 ('I will make my words in your mouth a fire, and this people the wood it consumes'). The double statement ('if anyone would harm them...if anyone would try to harm them') emphasizes the inviolability of the witnesses during their appointed prophetic ministry. The verb dei ('must') indicates divine necessity — this is not arbitrary violence but the divinely ordained consequence of opposing God's witnesses.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes 2 Kings 1:10-12 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Jeremiah 5:14 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. Two specific powers combine Moses and Elijah: shutting the sky from rain is Elijah's signature act (1 Kings 17:1; cf. James 5:17, 'Elijah prayed fervently that it would not rain, and it did not rain on the earth for three years and six months' — notably the same three-and-a-half-year period). Turning water to blood and sending plagues is Moses's role in the Exodus (Exodus 7:17-20; chapters 7-12). The witnesses embody the combined authority of the Law (Moses) and the Prophets (Elijah) — the two figures who appeared with Jesus at the Transfiguration (Matthew 17:3). The phrase hosákis ean thelēsōsin ('as often as they wish') grants them extraordinary freedom of action.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes 1 Kings 17:1. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 7:17-20. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The temporal clause hotan teleōsin ('when they have finished') is crucial — the beast cannot touch them until their prophetic task is complete. Their death is not a failure but comes after the fulfillment of their mission. The 'beast from the abyss' (to thērion to anabainon ek tēs abyssou) is introduced here abruptly and will be fully described in chapter 13. The word thērion ('wild beast') is distinct from zōon ('living creature') used for the heavenly beings — this is a predatory, destructive entity. The verbs escalate: war (polemon), conquer (nikēsei), kill (apoktenei). The beast's 'conquering' (nikēsei) uses the same verb applied to the Lamb in 5:5 and to the faithful in the seven letters — a counterfeit victory that will itself be overcome.
8. The city is identified by three symbolic names: 'the great city' (tēs poleōs tēs megalēs — a term later applied to Babylon in 16:19, 17:18, 18:10), 'Sodom' (representing sexual immorality and divine destruction, Genesis 18-19), and 'Egypt' (representing oppression and enslavement of God's people, Exodus 1-14). The clause 'where their Lord was crucified' (hopou kai ho kyrios autōn estaurōthē) identifies the city as Jerusalem — yet Jerusalem is described with the names of Israel's archetypal enemies. The adverb pneumatikōs ('spiritually, symbolically') signals that these names are prophetic characterizations, not geographical identifiers.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 18-19 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 1-14 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The fourfold formula (laōn, phylōn, glōssōn, ethnōn) indicates worldwide observation — the witnesses' humiliation is public and universal. The three and a half days (hēmeras treis kai hēmisy) mirrors the three and a half years of their ministry in miniature. Refusing burial was the ultimate dishonor in the ancient world (cf. the outrage over the unburied body of Polynices in Sophocles' Antigone; and the importance of burial in 1 Kings 14:11; Jeremiah 22:19). The denial of burial expresses contempt for the witnesses and for the God they served.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes 1 Kings 14:11. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Jeremiah 22:19. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The celebration over the prophets' death — complete with gift-giving — is a grim parody of a festival. The witnesses' prophetic ministry is described as 'torment' (ebasanisan) from the perspective of the unrepentant — the truth of God's word is experienced as agony by those who reject it. The phrase hoi katoikountes epi tēs gēs ('those who dwell on the earth') recurs as Revelation's standard term for humanity in rebellion against God. The scene will be dramatically reversed in the next verses.
11. The phrase pneuma zōēs ek tou theou ('breath/spirit of life from God') directly echoes Ezekiel 37:5-10, where God breathes life into the valley of dry bones and they stand on their feet — the same verb histēmi ('to stand') appears in both passages. The reversal is total: the celebrated death becomes terrifying resurrection. The divine passive construction (pneuma...eisēlthen, 'the breath entered') emphasizes God's direct action. The 'great fear' (phobos megas) that falls on observers is the typical human response to divine intervention (cf. Luke 1:12, 65; Acts 5:5, 11).
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Ezekiel 37:5-10. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. The command 'Come up here' (anabate hōde) echoes the invitation to John in 4:1. The ascension in a cloud (en tē nephelē) recalls both Elijah's ascension (2 Kings 2:11) and Christ's ascension (Acts 1:9). The phrase 'their enemies watched' (etheōrēsan autous hoi echthroi autōn) is the ultimate reversal — the same people who refused to bury them and celebrated their death now witness their vindication. The cloud, a symbol of divine presence throughout Scripture, carries them into God's domain in full view of their persecutors.

12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on 2 Kings 2:11. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. The earthquake accompanies the witnesses' vindication — divine confirmation of their ministry. A tenth (to dekaton) of the city falls, and 7,000 die — precise numbers suggesting a measured, controlled judgment. The 7,000 may invert 1 Kings 19:18, where 7,000 in Israel had not bowed to Baal — there, 7,000 were the faithful remnant; here, 7,000 are the judged. Crucially, 'the rest' (hoi loipoi) gave glory to God (edōkan doxan tō theō tou ouranou) — unlike the survivors of the trumpet plagues who refused to repent (9:20-21), these survivors respond with worship. This suggests that the witnesses' ministry, including their death and resurrection, achieves what the plagues alone could not: genuine repentance.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References 1 Kings 19:18 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. This structural marker parallels 9:12. The second woe (the sixth trumpet, including the interlude of chapters 10-11:13) has ended. The third woe is identified with the seventh trumpet, which sounds in the very next verse. The adverb tachy ('quickly, soon') heightens the urgency — there is no further delay.
15. The seventh trumpet is the climactic moment anticipated since 10:7. The SBLGNT reads the singular hē basileia ('the kingdom') rather than the KJV's plural 'kingdoms' — the entire world-system, conceived as a single rebellious kingdom, is now claimed by God and his Christ. The phrase tou kyriou hēmōn kai tou Christou autou ('of our Lord and of his Christ') echoes Psalm 2:2 ('against the LORD and against his anointed one') — the psalm of universal rebellion is answered by universal sovereignty. The future tense basileusei ('he will reign') may be a 'prophetic future' or may indicate that the reign, while declared, is still being realized. The phrase 'forever and ever' (eis tous aiōnas tōn aiōnōn) ensures this is no temporary political transfer but eternal dominion.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalms 2:2 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. The elders respond to the kingdom proclamation as they did to the creation hymn in 4:10-11 — falling prostrate in worship. The pattern of heavenly worship in response to divine action is consistent throughout Revelation. Their thrones (thronous, not the KJV's 'seats') indicate their authority, yet they voluntarily prostrate themselves before the supreme throne.
17. The divine title is now twofold — 'who is and who was' (ho ōn kai ho ēn) — the third element ('who is to come') is omitted because he has now come. The future arrival is no longer anticipated; it has occurred. This subtle change signals the fulfillment of the promise. The verb ebasileusas ('you have reigned/begun to reign') is an ingressive aorist — God has always been sovereign, but now he actively exercises that sovereignty in the transformation of the world's kingdoms. The thanksgiving (eucharistoumen) is the appropriate response when the long-awaited kingdom arrives.
18. The opening line 'the nations raged' (ta ethnē ōrgisthēsan) quotes Psalm 2:1 (LXX), where the nations rage against the LORD and his anointed — a rage now met by God's own wrath (hē orgē sou). The verse compresses the entire eschatological program into a single sentence: judgment of the dead, reward for the faithful (prophets, saints, God-fearers — both small and great, demolishing all social hierarchy), and destruction of the destroyers. The final phrase diaphtheirai tous diaphtheirontas tēn gēn ('to destroy those who destroy the earth') contains a powerful wordplay — the same verb is used for both God's action and the destroyers' crime. Those who corrupt and ruin God's creation will themselves be ruined.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalm 2:1 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. The heavenly temple opens to reveal the ark of the covenant (hē kibōtos tēs diathēkēs autou) — the most sacred object in Israel's worship, lost since the destruction of Solomon's temple in 586 BC. Its appearance in the heavenly temple declares that what was lost on earth is preserved in heaven — God's covenant faithfulness endures even when its earthly symbols are destroyed. The word diathēkēs ('covenant') connects this vision to the entire biblical narrative of God's binding relationship with his people. The Sinai-theophany formula recurs with full intensity: lightning, rumblings, thunder, earthquake, and now hail — the most complete iteration yet, escalating from 4:5 (lightning, rumblings, thunder) and 8:5 (those plus earthquake). Each repetition adds an element, suggesting that the revelation of God's presence intensifies as Revelation progresses.

Summary: Revelation 12 presents a cosmic drama in three movements: a woman clothed with the sun gives birth to a male child who is snatched up to God's throne; war erupts in heaven as Michael and his angels defeat the dragon; and the dragon, cast down to earth, pursues the woman and her offspring. The chapter establishes the theological framework for the rest of the book's conflict — the dragon (identified as Satan) has been defeated in heaven and now wages war against those who keep God's commands and hold to the testimony of Jesus.

What Makes This Remarkable: The woman figure is richly symbolic, drawing on imagery from Genesis 37 (Joseph's dream of sun, moon, and twelve stars), Isaiah 26:17-18 and 66:7 (Zion in labor), and the exodus narrative. The male child 'who will rule all nations with an iron rod' echoes Psalm 2:9, a royal messianic psalm. The number 1,260 days (v. 6) equals forty-two months or three and a half years — half of seven, the number of completion — representing a limited period of tribulation. The victory hymn in verses 10-12 is the theological center: the accuser has been thrown down, and the saints conquer him 'by the blood of the Lamb and by the word of their testimony.'

Translation Friction: The identity of the woman has been debated throughout Christian history — she has been understood as Israel, the Church, Mary, or a composite figure. We render the Greek as given without resolving this in the text. The 'time, times, and half a time' formula (v. 14) comes from Daniel 7:25 and 12:7, linking Revelation's timeline to Daniel's prophecy.

Connections: The chapter connects to Genesis 3:15 (enmity between the serpent and the woman's seed), Psalm 2 (the messianic king who rules with an iron rod), Isaiah 66:7-8 (Zion giving birth), Daniel 7:25 and 12:7 (the three-and-a-half-year period), and Daniel 10:13, 21 (Michael as Israel's champion). The dragon's identification as 'the ancient serpent' (v. 9) explicitly links to the Eden narrative.

¹Then a great sign appeared in heaven: a woman clothed with the sun, with the moon under her feet, and on her head a crown of twelve stars. ²She was pregnant and was crying out in labor pains, in agony to give birth. ³Then another sign appeared in heaven: a great fiery-red dragon with seven heads and ten horns, and seven diadems on his heads. ⁴His tail swept a third of the stars from the sky and hurled them to the earth. The dragon stood before the woman who was about to give birth, so that when she bore her child he might devour it. ⁵She gave birth to a son, a male child, who is destined to shepherd all the nations with an iron rod. And her child was snatched up to God and to his throne. ⁶The woman fled into the wilderness, where she has a place prepared by God, so that she would be nourished there for one thousand two hundred and sixty days. ⁷Then war broke out in heaven. Michael and his angels fought against the dragon, and the dragon and his angels fought back, ⁸Prevailed not. Neither was their location discovered any more in heaven. ⁹The great dragon was thrown down — the ancient serpent, who is called the Devil and Satan, the one who deceives the whole inhabited world — he was thrown down to the earth, and his angels were thrown down with him. ¹⁰Then I heard a loud voice in heaven saying, "Now have come the salvation and the power and the kingdom of our God, and the authority of his Christ, because the accuser of our brothers and sisters has been thrown down — the one who accuses them before our God day and night. ¹¹They conquered him by the blood of the Lamb and by the word of their testimony, and they did not love their lives even in the face of death. ¹²Therefore rejoice, you heavens and all who dwell in them! But woe to the earth and the sea, because the devil has come down to you with great fury, knowing that his time is short." ¹³When the dragon saw that he had been thrown down to the earth, he pursued the woman who had given birth to the male child. ¹⁴But the woman was given the two wings of a great eagle so that she could fly to her place in the wilderness, where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time, away from the presence of the serpent. ¹⁵Then the serpent spewed water like a river from his mouth after the woman, to sweep her away with the flood. ¹⁶But the earth helped the woman: the earth opened its mouth and swallowed the river that the dragon had spewed from his mouth. ¹⁷Then the dragon became enraged at the woman and went off to wage war against the rest of her offspring — those who keep God's commands and hold to the testimony of Jesus. ¹⁸I took my stand on the seashore.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The Greek semeion ('sign') is distinct from the KJV's 'wonder' (teras). A semeion in Revelation is a symbolic vision pointing to a deeper reality, not merely a spectacle. The imagery of sun, moon, and twelve stars echoes Joseph's dream in Genesis 37:9, where these represent Jacob, Rachel, and the twelve tribes of Israel.
1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 37:9. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
2. The Greek basanizomene ('being tormented, agonized') is a strong word also used for torture — the birth pangs are depicted with intense suffering. Prophetic birth imagery for Israel's deliverance appears in Isaiah 26:17-18, 66:7-8, and Micah 4:10.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 26:17-18. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Micah 4:10. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.

3. The Greek pyrros ('fiery-red') suggests the color of fire or blood, not merely 'red.' The seven heads and ten horns echo the fourth beast of Daniel 7:7, 24, linking the dragon to oppressive imperial power. The diadems (diademata) are royal crowns, distinct from the victor's wreath (stephanos) worn by the woman in verse 1.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Daniel 7:7 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The sweeping of a third of the stars recalls Daniel 8:10, where the little horn casts stars to the ground. Stars in apocalyptic literature often represent angelic beings (cf. Revelation 1:20). The dragon's posture before the woman evokes Pharaoh's threat to Israel's children (Exodus 1) and Herod's massacre (Matthew 2).
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Daniel 8:10. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 1. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. The phrase 'shepherd with an iron rod' (poimainein en rhabdo sidera) quotes Psalm 2:9 (LXX), where the messianic king rules the nations. The Greek poimainein means 'to shepherd, to tend, to rule' — it carries both pastoral care and authoritative governance. The verb herpassthe ('was snatched up') is the same root as harpazo, used by Paul for the catching up of believers in 1 Thessalonians 4:17.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalms 2:9 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The wilderness (eremos) is a place of both danger and divine provision in biblical tradition — Israel was sustained in the wilderness for forty years. The 1,260 days equal forty-two months or three and a half years, a period drawn from Daniel 7:25 and 12:7 that represents a limited time of tribulation under divine control. The passive 'nourished' (trephōsin) implies divine provision without naming the agents.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Daniel 7:25. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. Michael (Michaēl, from Hebrew 'Who is like God?') appears in Daniel 10:13, 21 and 12:1 as the angelic prince who fights for Israel. The war in heaven is presented not as a primordial event but as a consequence of the messianic birth and ascension described in verse 5.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Daniel 10:13. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The Greek ouk ischysen ('he was not strong enough') emphasizes the dragon's inability, not merely his defeat. The phrase 'no place found' (oude topos heurethe) echoes Daniel 2:35, where the kingdoms of the world leave no trace. The expulsion is total and permanent.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Daniel 2:35 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. This verse provides four identifying titles: 'the great dragon' (the current visionary form), 'the ancient serpent' (linking to Genesis 3), 'the Devil' (diabolos, 'slanderer, accuser'), and 'Satan' (Satanas, from Hebrew satan, 'adversary'). The participle planōn ('the one deceiving') describes his ongoing activity. The Greek oikoumenē ('the inhabited world') refers to the entire human world, not merely the Roman Empire.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 3. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The Greek katēgōr ('accuser') is a legal term for a prosecutor. The image draws on Zechariah 3:1, where Satan stands to accuse the high priest Joshua. The fourfold declaration — salvation, power, kingdom, authority — marks the dragon's expulsion as the turning point of cosmic history. The phrase 'day and night' indicates relentless, ceaseless accusation.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Zechariah 3:1 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The verb enikēsan ('they conquered, they overcame') is the same word used of Christ in 5:5 — the believers' victory mirrors and participates in the Lamb's victory. The three instruments of victory — blood, testimony, and self-sacrifice — form a pattern central to Revelation's theology: conquering through faithful witness, not through violence. The phrase 'did not love their lives even in the face of death' (ouk ēgapēsan tēn psychēn autōn achri thanatou) does not celebrate death but commends a loyalty that death cannot break.
12. The Greek skēnountes ('those who tent, those who dwell') uses the same root as skēnē ('tabernacle'), evoking God's dwelling presence. The contrast is sharp: heaven rejoices because the accuser is gone, but earth and sea face intensified danger because a cornered, desperate enemy is more dangerous, not less. The word thymos ('fury, rage') is distinct from orgē ('wrath') — thymos suggests explosive, passionate anger.
13. The Greek ediōxen ('pursued, persecuted') carries both senses — physical pursuit and hostile persecution. The narrative resumes from verse 6, now explaining why the woman fled to the wilderness.
14. Eagle wings as divine deliverance echo Exodus 19:4 ('I carried you on eagles' wings') and Deuteronomy 32:11. The time formula 'a time, times, and half a time' (kairon kai kairous kai hemisy kairou) comes directly from Daniel 7:25 and 12:7, equaling three and a half years or 1,260 days (v. 6). This deliberate echo ties Revelation's persecution timeline to Daniel's prophetic framework.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 19:4. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.

14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 32:11. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Daniel 7:25. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The flood-from-the-mouth imagery may draw on ancient Near Eastern chaos-water mythology and the biblical tradition of threatening waters (Psalm 18:4, 69:1-2, 124:4-5). The Greek potamophoretōn ('carried away by a river') is a rare compound word found only here in the New Testament.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalm 18:4 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. The earth personified as an agent of rescue reverses the 'woe to the earth' of verse 12. Creation itself assists in God's protective purposes. The imagery of the earth swallowing may echo Numbers 16:32, where the earth swallowed Korah's rebellion — but here the earth swallows the threat rather than the threatened.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Numbers 16:32. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. The phrase 'the rest of her offspring' (tōn loipōn tou spermatos autēs) echoes Genesis 3:15, where enmity is placed between the serpent and the woman's seed. The two identifying marks of the woman's offspring — keeping God's commands and holding the testimony of Jesus — define the faithful community throughout Revelation (cf. 14:12). The SBLGNT omits 'Christ' after 'Jesus' in the best manuscripts.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 3:15. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. Textual variant: some manuscripts read 'I stood' (estathēn, first person — the KJV reading), but the SBLGNT reads 'he stood' (estathē, third person), referring to the dragon. We follow the SBLGNT. The dragon's position on the seashore anticipates the beast rising from the sea in 13:1. This verse functions as a transition between chapters 12 and 13.

Summary: Revelation 13 introduces the dragon's two agents on earth: a beast rising from the sea with ten horns and seven heads, and a second beast rising from the earth with two horns like a lamb. The first beast receives the dragon's authority and wages war against the saints. The second beast performs signs and compels all people to worship the first beast, enforcing a mark without which no one can buy or sell. The chapter closes with the famous number of the beast: 666.

What Makes This Remarkable: The sea beast combines features of all four beasts from Daniel 7 — leopard, bear, lion, and ten-horned monster — into a single composite figure, suggesting it embodies all oppressive empire. The fatal wound that was healed (v. 3) parodies Christ's death and resurrection. The second beast acts as a false prophet (later explicitly called this in 16:13, 19:20), forming a counterfeit trinity: the dragon (anti-Father), the sea beast (anti-Christ), and the earth beast (anti-Spirit). The number 666, calculated through gematria (assigning numerical values to letters), most likely points to 'Nero Caesar' in Hebrew letters, though the text deliberately leaves the identification as a riddle.

Translation Friction: The identity of the beast has generated centuries of speculation. We render the Greek text without identifying the beast with any specific historical or future figure. The 'mark' (charagma) was a term used for imperial stamps and brands in the Roman world, but the text presents it in visionary, symbolic terms that transcend any single historical referent.

Connections: The chapter draws heavily on Daniel 7 (the four beasts and the saints' persecution), Daniel 3 (the command to worship an image on pain of death), and Exodus 7-8 (signs performed by competing powers). The mark on the forehead and hand inverts the phylacteries of Deuteronomy 6:8 and the seal of God on the forehead in Revelation 7:3.

¹And I saw a beast rising out of the sea, with ten horns and seven heads. On its horns were ten diadems, and on its heads were blasphemous names. ²The beast I saw resembled a leopard, its feet were like a bear's, and its mouth was like a lion's mouth. The dragon gave it his power and his throne and great authority. ³One of its heads appeared to have been fatally wounded, but its mortal wound had been healed. The whole earth was amazed and followed the beast. ⁴They worshiped the dragon because he had given authority to the beast, and they worshiped the beast, saying, "Who is like the beast? Who can wage war against it?" ⁵The beast was given a mouth to speak arrogant words and blasphemies, and it was given authority to act for forty-two months. ⁶It opened its mouth to utter blasphemies against God, blaspheming his name and his dwelling — that is, those who dwell in heaven. ⁷It was permitted to wage war against the saints and to conquer them, and it was given authority over every tribe and people and language and nation. ⁸All who dwell on the earth will worship it — everyone whose name has not been written from the foundation of the world in the book of life of the Lamb who was slain. ⁹If anyone has an ear, let them hear: ¹⁰If anyone is destined for captivity, to captivity they go. If anyone is to be killed with the sword, with the sword they will be killed. Here is the endurance and the faith of the saints. ¹¹Then I saw another beast rising out of the earth. It had two horns like a lamb, but it spoke like a dragon. ¹²It exercises all the authority of the first beast on its behalf and makes the earth and those who dwell on it worship the first beast, whose mortal wound had been healed. ¹³It performs great signs, even making fire come down from heaven to earth in the sight of people. ¹⁴It deceives those who dwell on the earth because of the signs it was permitted to perform on behalf of the beast, telling those who dwell on the earth to make an image for the beast that had been wounded by the sword and yet lived. ¹⁵It was permitted to give breath to the image of the beast, so that the image of the beast could even speak and cause all who would not worship the image of the beast to be killed. ¹⁶It also compels everyone — small and great, rich and poor, free and slave — to receive a mark on their right hand or on their forehead, ¹⁷That no person may buy or sell, rescue he that had the mark, or the identity of the beast, or the number of his identity. ¹⁸This calls for wisdom. Let the one who has understanding calculate the number of the beast, for it is the number of a person, and its number is six hundred sixty-six.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The SBLGNT places 'and he stood on the sand of the sea' at the end of chapter 12 (12:18), so chapter 13 begins with 'And I saw.' The beast from the sea echoes Daniel 7:3, where four beasts rise from the sea — here compressed into one composite monster. The sea in apocalyptic thought represents chaos and the realm of evil. The diadems are on the horns (political power) rather than the heads, distinguishing this from the dragon's diadems in 12:3. The plural 'blasphemous names' (onomata blasphemias) suggests imperial titles claiming divine status.
1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Daniel 7:3. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
2. The three animal features come from Daniel 7:4-6 but in reverse order — leopard (Daniel's third beast), bear (second), lion (first) — suggesting John sees them from the perspective of the present looking backward. The transfer of power, throne, and authority from dragon to beast establishes the beast as Satan's earthly agent, a dark parody of the Father giving authority to the Son (Matthew 28:18).
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Daniel 7:4-6. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. The Greek hōs esphagmenēn ('as though slain') uses the same verb (sphazō) applied to the Lamb in 5:6 — the beast parodies Christ's death and resurrection. The 'healing' of the death-wound creates a counterfeit resurrection narrative that captures the world's allegiance. The verb ethaumasthē ('was amazed, marveled') indicates awe that leads to worship.
4. The acclamation 'Who is like the beast?' is a blasphemous inversion of the divine praise 'Who is like you, LORD?' (Exodus 15:11, Psalm 35:10) and even of Michael's name (Mi-ka-el, 'Who is like God?'). The dual worship — of dragon and beast — reveals that the beast's power is derivative; worshiping the beast means worshiping the dragon behind it.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 15:11. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalm 35:10. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. The passive 'was given' (edothē) appears twice, indicating that the beast's power operates under divine permission — even the beast's authority has boundaries set by God. The 'mouth speaking great things' echoes Daniel 7:8, 11, 20 (the little horn). The forty-two months equal 1,260 days or three and a half years, the same period of the woman's wilderness refuge in 12:6, 14.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Daniel 7:8 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The beast's blasphemy targets three things: God's name, God's dwelling (skēnē, 'tabernacle/tent'), and those who dwell in heaven. The apposition 'his dwelling, that is, those who dwell in heaven' suggests that God's true tabernacle is his people — the dwelling and the dwellers are identified. The Greek skēnē recalls the tabernacle tradition and anticipates 21:3, where God's dwelling will be with humanity.
7. Again the divine passive 'was given' (edothē) — the beast's war against the saints occurs within God's sovereign permission, echoing Daniel 7:21 where the horn prevails against the saints for a time. The fourfold universal formula (tribe, people, language, nation) appears repeatedly in Revelation (5:9, 7:9, 11:9, 14:6) and here describes the beast's totalitarian reach.

7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Daniel 7:21. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The phrase 'from the foundation of the world' (apo katabolēs kosmou) can modify either 'written' (names written before creation) or 'slain' (the Lamb slain before creation). The Greek word order most naturally connects it to 'written' — the names were recorded before the world's foundation. Compare 17:8, where the same phrase clearly modifies 'written.' Both readings carry profound theological weight.
9. This formula echoes Jesus's repeated refrain in the Synoptic Gospels (Matthew 11:15, 13:9) and in Revelation's letters to the seven churches (2:7, 11, etc.). Here it introduces the solemn oracle that follows, demanding careful attention from the hearer.
10. This oracle, echoing Jeremiah 15:2 and 43:11, calls the saints to accept suffering rather than retaliate. The Greek hypomonē ('endurance, patient steadfastness') is one of Revelation's key ethical terms — it describes not passive resignation but active, faithful perseverance under pressure. The SBLGNT reading presents both lines as statements about the saints' destiny, not as threats against persecutors.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Jeremiah 15:2 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The second beast rises from the earth (gē) rather than the sea, perhaps representing established social and religious structures rather than chaotic political power. Its lamb-like appearance but dragon-like speech makes it a deceiver — it looks harmless but serves the dragon's purposes. Later (16:13, 19:20, 20:10) this beast is called 'the false prophet,' clarifying its role as a religious counterfeit.
12. The second beast functions as enforcer and propagandist for the first. The phrase 'on its behalf' (enōpion autou, literally 'before him/in his presence') indicates the second beast acts as the first beast's representative. This mirrors the Holy Spirit's role in directing worship to Christ — the second beast directs worship to the first beast, completing the counterfeit trinity.
13. Fire from heaven recalls Elijah's contest on Mount Carmel (1 Kings 18:38) — the second beast counterfeits prophetic signs. Jesus warned that false prophets would perform signs to deceive (Matthew 24:24), and Paul speaks of the lawless one performing counterfeit miracles (2 Thessalonians 2:9). The signs are real in their effects but deceptive in their source and purpose.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References 1 Kings 18:38 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. The command to construct an image (eikōn) of the beast recalls Nebuchadnezzar's golden image in Daniel 3, where refusal to worship meant death. The beast's recovery from a sword wound (plēgē tēs machairēs) continues the parody of Christ's death and resurrection. The verb ezēsen ('lived, came to life') is the same word used for Christ's resurrection in 2:8.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Daniel 3. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The Greek pneuma here means 'breath' rather than 'spirit' or 'life' — the second beast animates the image with breath, parodying God breathing life into Adam (Genesis 2:7). The speaking image may reflect ancient practices of ventriloquism in pagan temples or mechanical devices that made idols appear to speak. The death penalty for non-worship directly parallels Daniel 3:6.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Daniel 3:6 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. The Greek charagma ('mark, stamp, brand') was used for the imperial stamp on documents and the brand on livestock or slaves. The three pairs (small/great, rich/poor, free/slave) emphasize that no social category is exempt. The mark on hand and forehead deliberately inverts the Shema practice of Deuteronomy 6:8, where God's words are bound on hand and forehead — the beast demands the same total allegiance that belongs to God alone.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Deuteronomy 6:8. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. Economic exclusion as a tool of coercion would have resonated powerfully in the Roman trade-guild system, where participation in commercial life often required offering incense to the emperor or patron deity. The mark, the name, and the number appear to be three expressions of the same allegiance, not three separate requirements.
18. The Greek arithmos anthrōpou ('number of a person/human') could mean either 'a number that identifies a specific person' or 'a human number' (as opposed to an angelic one). The number 666, through Hebrew gematria (where letters carry numerical values), most plausibly corresponds to 'Nero Caesar' (nrwn qsr = 50+200+6+50+100+60+200 = 666). Some manuscripts read 616, which corresponds to 'Nero Caesar' in the Latin spelling. The text presents the calculation as a riddle requiring wisdom, not as an equation with an obvious solution.

Summary: Revelation 14 presents a series of contrasting visions. First, the Lamb stands on Mount Zion with 144,000 redeemed saints singing a new song. Then three angels proclaim messages in sequence: the eternal gospel, the fall of Babylon, and a warning against taking the beast's mark. A voice from heaven pronounces blessing on those who die in the Lord. Finally, two harvest visions close the chapter — one of grain reaped by the Son of Man, and one of grapes thrown into 'the great winepress of God's wrath,' producing blood as deep as a horse's bridle.

What Makes This Remarkable: The chapter functions as an intermission between the beast visions (ch. 13) and the bowl judgments (chs. 15-16), providing heavenly perspective on earthly events. The 144,000 reappear from chapter 7, now seen in their triumphant state. The three angel messages (vv. 6-11) form a triptych of proclamation that has been extraordinarily influential in Christian history. The harvest imagery draws on Joel 3:13 and Isaiah 63:1-6, with the winepress producing blood to the depth of about 180 miles — a hyperbolically horrifying image of judgment.

Translation Friction: The 144,000 who 'have not defiled themselves with women' (v. 4) has been interpreted as literal celibacy, spiritual purity (faithfulness to God), or metaphorical virginity (not participating in idolatrous worship). We render the Greek directly and note the interpretive options. The grain harvest (vv. 14-16) and grape harvest (vv. 17-20) may represent different aspects of judgment, or grain may symbolize salvation and grapes judgment.

Connections: Mount Zion connects to Psalm 2:6 and Isaiah 24:23. The new song recalls Psalms 33:3, 96:1, and 149:1. The harvest imagery draws on Joel 3:13, Isaiah 63:1-6, and Jesus's harvest parables (Matthew 13:24-30, 36-43). The winepress of God's wrath anticipates 19:15. The declaration 'Fallen is Babylon' echoes Isaiah 21:9 and anticipates chapters 17-18.

¹Then I looked, and there was the Lamb, standing on Mount Zion, and with him were one hundred forty-four thousand who had his name and his Father's name written on their foreheads. ²I heard a sound from heaven like the roar of many waters and like the sound of loud thunder, and the sound I heard was like harpists playing their harps. ³They were singing a new song before the throne and before the four living creatures and the elders, and no one could learn the song except the one hundred forty-four thousand who had been redeemed from the earth. ⁴These are the ones who have not defiled themselves with women, for they are virgins. These are the ones who follow the Lamb wherever he goes. They were redeemed from among humanity as firstfruits for God and for the Lamb. ⁵No lie was found in their mouths; they are blameless. ⁶Then I saw another angel flying in midheaven, carrying an eternal gospel to proclaim to those who dwell on the earth — to every nation and tribe and language and people. ⁷He said with a loud voice, "Fear God and give him glory, because the hour of his judgment has come. Worship the one who made heaven and earth, the sea and the springs of water." ⁸A second angel followed, saying, "Fallen, fallen is Babylon the great — she who made all the nations drink the wine of the fury of her sexual immorality." ⁹A third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, "If anyone worships the beast and its image and receives a mark on their forehead or on their hand, ¹⁰Indeed, the same will drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation. Then he will be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb: ¹¹The smoke of their torment rises forever and ever, and they have no rest day or night — those who worship the beast and its image, and whoever receives the mark of its name." ¹²Here is the endurance of the saints — those who keep God's commands and their faith in Jesus. ¹³Then I heard a voice from heaven saying, "Write this: Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from now on." "Yes," says the Spirit, "so that they may rest from their labors, for their deeds follow them." ¹⁴Then I looked, and there was a white cloud, and seated on the cloud was one like a son of man, with a golden crown on his head and a sharp sickle in his hand. ¹⁵Another angel came out of the temple, calling with a loud voice to the one seated on the cloud, "Put in your sickle and reap, for the hour to reap has come, because the harvest of the earth is fully ripe." ¹⁶So the one seated on the cloud swung his sickle over the earth, and the earth was harvested. ¹⁷Then another angel came out of the temple in heaven, and he too had a sharp sickle. ¹⁸Still another angel came from the altar — the one who has authority over fire — and he called with a loud voice to the angel with the sharp sickle, "Put in your sharp sickle and gather the clusters from the vine of the earth, for its grapes are ripe." ¹⁹So the angel swung his sickle over the earth and gathered the grape harvest of the earth and threw it into the great winepress of God's wrath. ²⁰The winepress was trampled outside the city, and blood flowed from the winepress as high as a horse's bridle for a distance of one thousand six hundred stadia.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The SBLGNT includes both the Lamb's name and the Father's name on the foreheads, in contrast to the KJV which mentions only the Father's name. This double name stands in direct contrast to the beast's mark on the foreheads of its followers (13:16). Mount Zion represents God's chosen dwelling place (Psalm 2:6, 48:2), and the Lamb's standing there asserts sovereign authority over the territory the beast claims.
1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Psalm 2:6. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
2. Three similes describe the heavenly sound: rushing waters (cf. Ezekiel 1:24, 43:2), thunder (associated with divine presence), and harp music (associated with worship). The combination of overwhelming power and musical beauty reflects the dual nature of the heavenly reality — both awesome and beautiful.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Ezekiel 1:24. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. The 'new song' (ōdē kainē) is a recurring biblical motif (Psalm 33:3, 40:3, 96:1, 144:9, 149:1) signaling a new act of God's deliverance. The Greek ēgorasmenoi ('redeemed, purchased') uses commercial language — these were 'bought' from the earth, the purchase price being the Lamb's blood (cf. 5:9). Only those who have experienced this redemption can sing this song — the content is inseparable from the experience.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalm 33:3 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The Greek parthenoi ('virgins') applied to males is unusual. Three main interpretations exist: (1) literal celibacy as a form of military consecration (cf. Deuteronomy 23:9-10, 1 Samuel 21:4-5); (2) metaphorical sexual purity representing spiritual faithfulness — not participating in the 'fornication' of idolatrous Babylon (cf. 17:2, 18:3); (3) a broader metaphor for covenant faithfulness, since the Old Testament often portrays idolatry as sexual unfaithfulness. The term 'firstfruits' (aparchē) comes from Israel's agricultural offering system (Leviticus 23:10) — the first portion, dedicated to God, that consecrates the whole harvest.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 23:9-10. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes 1 Samuel 21:4-5. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Leviticus 23:10. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. The Greek pseudos ('lie, falsehood') connects to the dragon's identity as deceiver (12:9) and to the exclusion of liars from the New Jerusalem (21:27, 22:15). The word amōmoi ('blameless, without blemish') is sacrificial language — it describes unblemished animals fit for offering (cf. Leviticus 1:3, 1 Peter 1:19). The SBLGNT omits 'before the throne of God' found in some manuscripts and the KJV.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Leviticus 1:3 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The Greek euangelion aiōnion ('eternal gospel/good news') is striking — even at the hour of judgment, the message remains 'good news.' The angel flies in mesouranēma ('midheaven,' the zenith of the sky), ensuring maximum visibility and audibility. The fourfold universal formula (nation, tribe, language, people) appears in a different order from 13:7, perhaps emphasizing universality through variation.
7. The angel's proclamation is essentially a call to creation-worship — worship the Creator, not the creature. The fourfold creation catalogue (heaven, earth, sea, springs) echoes Exodus 20:11 and Psalm 146:6. In the context of beast-worship (ch. 13), this is a radical counter-claim: the only one worthy of worship is the Maker of all things. The 'hour of judgment' (hōra tēs kriseōs) recalls Jesus's language in John 12:31.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 20:11. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Psalm 146:6. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The doubled 'fallen, fallen' (epesen epesen) quotes Isaiah 21:9, where it announces historical Babylon's fall. The metaphor is layered: Babylon's 'wine' represents both the intoxicating allure of her idolatry and empire, and the wrath (thymos) that results from drinking it. The Greek porneia ('sexual immorality, fornication') is used throughout Revelation as a metaphor for idolatrous allegiance — spiritual unfaithfulness to God. This brief announcement anticipates the extended Babylon oracle in chapters 17-18.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 21:9 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.

9. The third angel's message is the most severe warning in Revelation, extending through verse 11. The three conditions — worshipping the beast, worshipping its image, receiving its mark — are parallel expressions of the same allegiance. This directly answers the economic coercion of 13:16-17 by declaring the eternal consequences of compliance.
10. The Greek akratou ('unmixed, full strength') refers to wine not diluted with water — in the ancient world, wine was normally mixed. Unmixed wine meant maximum intensity. The combination of thymos ('fury, passion') and orgē ('wrath, settled anger') in the same phrase is unique and emphatic. Fire and sulfur (theion, 'brimstone/sulfur') recall the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah (Genesis 19:24). The judgment occurs 'in the presence of (enōpion) the Lamb — the one who offered mercy that was refused now witnesses the consequences of refusal.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 19:24 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The phrase eis aiōnas aiōnōn ('to the ages of ages, forever and ever') is the strongest expression of unending duration in Greek. The image of smoke ascending echoes Isaiah 34:10 (the destruction of Edom). The 'no rest day or night' contrasts sharply with the four living creatures who worship God 'day and night' (4:8) — perpetual torment mirrors perpetual worship in tragic inversion.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 34:10. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. This echoes the same double identification from 12:17: keeping God's commands and holding faith in Jesus. The Greek pistin Iēsou could be 'faith in Jesus' (objective genitive) or 'the faithfulness of Jesus' (subjective genitive). Both readings are theologically valid — the saints endure because they trust Jesus and because they share in his pattern of faithfulness.
13. This is the second of seven beatitudes in Revelation (1:3, 14:13, 16:15, 19:9, 20:6, 22:7, 22:14). The phrase 'from now on' (ap' arti) may mean 'from this point in the visionary narrative' or 'from this eschatological moment.' The Spirit confirms and expands the heavenly voice — a rare dialogue between heaven and the Spirit. The 'rest' (anapausontai) directly contrasts with the 'no rest' of beast-worshippers in verse 11. Their 'deeds follow them' — good works are not left behind at death but accompany the faithful into God's presence.
14. The phrase 'one like a son of man' (homoion huion anthrōpou) comes from Daniel 7:13, where a human-like figure receives dominion from the Ancient of Days. This same phrase opens Revelation in 1:13. The golden crown (stephanos) is a victor's wreath, not a royal diadem. The sickle (drepanon) introduces the harvest metaphor that will dominate the rest of the chapter, drawing on Joel 3:13.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Daniel 7:13. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Joel 3:13. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The angel comes from the temple (naos), indicating the command originates with God. The Greek exēranthē ('is dried, is fully ripe') literally means 'has dried out' — grain is harvested when it dries on the stalk. Whether this grain harvest represents salvation (gathering the elect) or judgment (or both) is debated. The distinction between the grain harvest (vv. 14-16) and grape harvest (vv. 17-20) may parallel Jesus's parable of wheat and tares (Matthew 13:24-30).
16. The brevity of this verse is striking — no details are given about the harvest's outcome or destination. The passive 'was harvested' (etheristhē) leaves the result unstated, creating a deliberate pause before the far more graphic grape harvest that follows.
17. This angel carries a sickle like the Son of Man figure, but the harvest he will perform is explicitly one of wrath. The specification 'the temple in heaven' (tou naou tou en tō ouranō) emphasizes the heavenly origin of this judgment.
18. The angel from the altar connects to 6:9-10, where the souls under the altar cry for justice, and to 8:3-5, where fire from the altar is hurled to earth. The altar-angel's authority over fire links judgment to the prayers of the martyrs. The verb ēkmasan ('are ripe') literally means 'have reached their peak' — the grapes are at maximum ripeness, meaning the wickedness of the earth has reached its full measure.
19. The winepress (lēnos) as a metaphor for divine judgment comes from Isaiah 63:1-6, where God treads the winepress alone and the nations' lifeblood spatters his garments. The phrase 'the great winepress of God's wrath' (tēn lēnon tou thymou tou theou ton megan) uses thymos ('fury, passionate wrath'), emphasizing the intensity of divine judgment. This image returns in 19:15.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 63:1-6. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
20. The location 'outside the city' may echo the tradition that Jesus suffered 'outside the gate' (Hebrews 13:12) or the Joel 3 judgment in the Valley of Jehoshaphat outside Jerusalem. The scale is deliberately apocalyptic and hyperbolic: blood reaching horse-bridle depth (about four and a half feet) for 1,600 stadia (approximately 184 miles, or roughly the length of Palestine). The number 1,600 may be symbolic: 4 x 4 x 100, representing the four corners of the earth squared and multiplied — totality of judgment. A stadion is approximately 607 feet (185 meters).
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Joel 3 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.

Summary: Revelation 15 is the shortest chapter in the book and serves as the prelude to the seven bowl judgments. John sees those who have conquered the beast standing on a sea of glass mixed with fire, singing the Song of Moses and of the Lamb. Then the heavenly temple opens and seven angels emerge with seven golden bowls filled with the wrath of God, while smoke from God's glory fills the temple so that no one can enter.

What Makes This Remarkable: The Song of Moses and of the Lamb (vv. 3-4) merges exodus and new covenant in a single hymn. It draws almost entirely from Old Testament scripture — every line echoes Exodus 15, Deuteronomy 32, Psalm 86, Psalm 111, Jeremiah 10, and Malachi 1. The sea of glass mixed with fire recalls the Red Sea crossing, where Israel stood on the far shore and sang (Exodus 15:1-21). The smoke filling the temple so that no one can enter parallels the dedication of Solomon's temple (1 Kings 8:10-11) and the Sinai theophany (Exodus 19:18) — God's glory is so intense that even the heavenly temple becomes inaccessible.

Translation Friction: The 'Song of Moses and of the Lamb' combines two great deliverances — from Egypt and from sin — in a single composition. Whether 'of Moses and of the Lamb' means one combined song or two songs is debated; the singular 'song' (ōdēn) in Greek favors a single unified hymn.

Connections: The chapter connects to Exodus 15 (the Song of the Sea), 1 Kings 8:10-11 (glory filling the temple), Isaiah 6:4 (smoke in the temple), and Leviticus 26:21 (plagues multiplied sevenfold). The phrase 'King of the nations' echoes Jeremiah 10:7. The seven bowls parallel the seven trumpets (chs. 8-11) but with intensified scope.

¹Then I saw another sign in heaven, great and marvelous: seven angels with seven plagues — the last ones — because with them the wrath of God is completed. ²I saw what appeared to be a sea of glass mixed with fire, and those who had conquered the beast and its image and the number of its name were standing beside the sea of glass, holding harps of God. ³They sing the song of Moses, the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying: "Great and marvelous are your works, Lord God Almighty! Righteous and true are your ways, King of the nations! ⁴Who will not fear you, Lord, and glorify your name? For you alone are holy. All nations will come and worship before you, because your righteous acts have been revealed." ⁵After this I looked, and the sanctuary of the tent of testimony in heaven was opened, ⁶The seven angels arrived out of the temple, after the seven plagues, clothed in pure and white linen, and after their breasts girded with golden girdles. ⁷Then one of the four living creatures gave the seven angels seven golden bowls filled with the wrath of God, who lives forever and ever. ⁸The sanctuary was filled with smoke from the glory of God and from his power, and no one could enter the sanctuary until the seven plagues of the seven angels were completed.

1. This is the third 'sign' (semeion) in heaven, following the woman (12:1) and the dragon (12:3). The word eschatas ('last') indicates these bowl plagues bring God's judgments to their final expression. The verb etelestē ('is completed, is finished') from teleō shares the root of Jesus's cry tetelestai ('It is finished,' John 19:30) — God's wrath, like his salvation, reaches its telos (goal/end).
2. The sea of glass first appeared in 4:6 before God's throne. Here it is mixed with fire — possibly reflecting the trials through which the victors have passed, or the judgment about to be poured out. The Greek epi tēn thalassan ('on/beside the sea') recalls Israel standing on the far shore of the Red Sea. The conquerors are defined by three victories: over the beast, its image, and its number. The 'harps of God' (kitharas tou theou) are instruments belonging to God, given for worship.
3. Moses is called 'servant of God' (doulou tou theou), the same title given him in Joshua 1:1 (LXX). The SBLGNT reads 'King of the nations' (basileus tōn ethnōn), following Jeremiah 10:7, rather than the KJV's 'King of saints' (a variant reading). The hymn's content draws entirely from Old Testament praise: 'great and marvelous works' from Psalm 111:2, 'righteous and true ways' from Deuteronomy 32:4, and 'King of the nations' from Jeremiah 10:7.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 15:1-18 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Joshua 1:1 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.

3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Jeremiah 10:7 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Psalm 111:2 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Deuteronomy 32:4 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The rhetorical question 'Who will not fear?' echoes Jeremiah 10:7. The declaration 'you alone are holy' (monos hosios) uses hosios rather than hagios — hosios emphasizes moral purity and faithfulness to covenant obligations, while hagios emphasizes separation and consecration. The prophecy that 'all nations will come and worship' draws on Psalm 86:9 and anticipates the universal worship described in the New Jerusalem (21:24-26). The word dikaiōmata ('righteous acts, just decrees') can refer to both God's judgments and his saving acts.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalms 86:9. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Jeremiah 10:7. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. The unusual phrase 'sanctuary of the tent of testimony' (naos tēs skēnēs tou martyriou) combines temple and tabernacle language, echoing the wilderness tabernacle of Numbers 17:7 (LXX) — the 'tent of testimony' where God's covenant law was kept. The opening of this heavenly sanctuary signals that what follows comes directly from God's covenant faithfulness and justice.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Numbers 17:7 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The angels' attire — clean linen (linon katharon lampron) and golden sashes — matches the description of Christ in 1:13 and of the heavenly armies in 19:14. Some manuscripts read lithon ('stone') instead of linon ('linen'), which would suggest gemstone-like brilliance, but the SBLGNT follows the linen reading. The priestly vestments indicate that the bowl judgments are a liturgical act — God's justice administered as sacred duty.
7. The Greek phialē ('bowl') is a broad, shallow bowl used for libations in temple worship — the KJV's 'vials' is misleading. The bowls are golden, matching the heavenly furnishings (5:8, golden bowls of incense). That a living creature distributes them connects the judgments to the worship of the throne room. The title 'God who lives forever and ever' (tou theou tou zōntos eis tous aiōnas tōn aiōnōn) contrasts sharply with the beast whose life is derivative and temporary.
8. The smoke (kapnos) from God's glory recalls Isaiah 6:4, where the temple fills with smoke during Isaiah's throne vision. The inability to enter the temple means that intercession is suspended — the time for mercy has passed and judgment must run its full course. The verb telesthōsin ('are completed') echoes verse 1's etelesthē — the plagues must reach their telos (completion/goal).

Summary: Revelation 16 narrates the pouring out of the seven bowls of God's wrath in rapid succession. The plagues strike the earth (sores), the sea (blood), the rivers (blood), the sun (scorching heat), the beast's throne (darkness), the Euphrates (dried up, preparing for kings from the east), and finally the air (earthquake and hail). Two interludes punctuate the sequence: an affirmation of God's justice (vv. 5-7) and the gathering of kings at Armageddon (vv. 13-16). The chapter climaxes with 'It is done!' and catastrophic judgment on Babylon.

What Makes This Remarkable: The seven bowls intensify the Egyptian plague pattern established in the trumpet sequence (chs. 8-9), but whereas the trumpets affected one-third of creation, the bowls are total. The bowl plagues correspond to the Exodus plagues: sores (sixth plague, Exodus 9:10), water to blood (first plague, Exodus 7:20), darkness (ninth plague, Exodus 10:22), frogs (second plague, Exodus 8:2), and hail (seventh plague, Exodus 9:23). The reference to Armageddon (Har-Magedon, v. 16) — the only occurrence of this word in the Bible — has become one of the most culturally influential terms in Revelation.

Translation Friction: The name 'Armageddon' (Harmagedon in Greek) is debated: it likely transliterates the Hebrew Har Megiddo ('Mountain of Megiddo'), though Megiddo is a plain, not a mountain. Some scholars connect it to Har Mo'ed ('Mountain of Assembly,' Isaiah 14:13) or other Hebrew constructions. We transliterate the Greek as given.

Connections: The bowl sequence parallels the Exodus plagues and the trumpet judgments (chs. 8-11). The drying of the Euphrates (v. 12) recalls the parting of the Red Sea (Exodus 14) and the Jordan (Joshua 3). The three unclean spirits like frogs echo the Egyptian frog plague. Armageddon connects to the Megiddo battlefield tradition (Judges 5:19, 2 Kings 23:29). 'It is done!' (v. 17) parallels 'It is finished' (John 19:30).

¹Then I heard a loud voice from the sanctuary saying to the seven angels, "Go and pour out the seven bowls of God's wrath on the earth." ²So the first angel went and poured out his bowl on the earth, and harmful and painful sores broke out on the people who bore the mark of the beast and worshiped its image. ³The second angel poured out his bowl on the sea, and it became like the blood of a dead person, and every living creature in the sea died. ⁴The third angel poured out his bowl on the rivers and the springs of water, and they became blood. ⁵Then I heard the angel of the waters say, "You are righteous, the one who is and who was, the Holy One, because you have judged these things. ⁶Because they poured out the blood of saints and prophets, you have given them blood to drink. They deserve it." ⁷And I heard the altar say, "Yes, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are your judgments." ⁸The fourth angel poured out his bowl on the sun, and it was allowed to scorch people with fire. ⁹People were scorched by the intense heat, and they blasphemed the name of God who has authority over these plagues. They did not repent and give him glory. ¹⁰The fifth angel poured out his bowl on the throne of the beast, and its kingdom was plunged into darkness. People gnawed their tongues in anguish ¹¹Blasphemed the God of the heavens above on account of the fact that of their pains and their sores, and repented not of their deeds. ¹²The sixth angel poured out his bowl on the great river Euphrates, and its water was dried up to prepare the way for the kings from the east. ¹³And out of the mouth of the false prophet, I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast. ¹⁴These are demonic spirits performing signs, and they go out to the kings of the whole inhabited world to gather them for the battle on the great day of God the Almighty. ¹⁵"Look, I am coming like a thief! Blessed is the one who stays awake and keeps their clothes on, so that they will not walk around naked and their shame be exposed." ¹⁶And they gathered the kings together to the place that in Hebrew is called Armageddon. ¹⁷The seventh angel poured out his bowl into the air, and a loud voice came from the sanctuary, from the throne, saying, "It is done!" ¹⁸There were flashes of lightning, rumblings, peals of thunder, and a violent earthquake — such as had not occurred since people first appeared on the earth — so great was the earthquake. ¹⁹The great city split into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell. God remembered Babylon the great and gave her the cup of the wine of the fury of his wrath. ²⁰Every island fled, and the mountains could no longer be found. ²¹Enormous hailstones, each weighing about a talent, fell from the sky on people, and they blasphemed God because of the plague of the hail, for the plague was extremely severe.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. Since no one could enter the sanctuary (15:8), the voice must be God's own. The verb ekcheete ('pour out') is the standard term for pouring libations — the bowls of wrath are poured out as a liturgical act, an ironic inversion of the drink offering. The command is comprehensive: all seven bowls are to be poured in sequence.
2. The Greek helkos kakon kai ponēron ('harmful and painful sore') echoes the sixth Egyptian plague (Exodus 9:10-11, LXX). Notably, the plague targets only those with the beast's mark — there is discrimination in this judgment. The two adjectives (kakon, 'bad/harmful,' and ponēron, 'painful/evil') emphasize the severity.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 9:10-11. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. The sea turning to blood echoes the first Egyptian plague (Exodus 7:20-21) and the second trumpet (8:8-9), but is more intense — the second trumpet killed a third of sea life; here everything dies. The specification 'blood of a dead person' (haima hōs nekrou) indicates coagulated, putrid blood — not flowing life-blood but death-blood. The phrase 'every living soul' (pasa psychē zōēs) is total.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 7:20-21 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The third bowl extends the blood-water plague from the sea to freshwater sources — rivers and springs. This parallels the third trumpet (8:10-11) but goes further: the trumpet made water bitter; the bowl turns it to blood entirely. The brevity of 'and they became blood' (kai egeneto haima) emphasizes the immediate totality of the transformation.

5. The 'angel of the waters' (angelos tōn hydatōn) suggests angelic jurisdiction over natural elements (cf. 7:1, angels of the winds; 14:18, angel of fire). The divine title 'the one who is and who was' (ho ōn kai ho ēn) notably omits the usual third element 'and who is to come' (cf. 1:4, 8; 4:8) — perhaps because God has now arrived in judgment. The word hosios ('Holy One') emphasizes God's moral integrity and covenant faithfulness.
6. The principle of retributive justice is explicit: those who shed blood are given blood to drink. The verb exechesan ('they poured out') uses the same root as the pouring of the bowls (ekcheō) — a grim wordplay. The final phrase axioi eisin ('they are worthy/deserving') uses the same adjective applied to God and the Lamb in worship (4:11, 5:9, 12) — a dark inversion where 'worthiness' means deserving of judgment.
7. The altar itself speaks — personified as the voice of the martyrs whose souls rest beneath it (6:9-10). Their prayer for justice ('How long, Lord?') receives this answer. The SBLGNT reads 'the altar' (tou thusiastēriou) without 'another,' suggesting the altar itself speaks rather than an angel from it. The affirmation 'true and righteous' (alēthinai kai dikaiai) echoes 15:3 and confirms that God's judgments are both factually accurate and morally just.
8. The fourth trumpet darkened a third of the sun (8:12); the fourth bowl intensifies the sun instead. The divine passive edothē ('it was given/allowed') maintains the theme that even destructive forces operate under God's permission. The verb kaumatisai ('to burn, to scorch') appears in the New Testament only here and in verse 9.
9. The refusal to repent despite suffering is a recurring theme in the bowl sequence (vv. 9, 11, 21), echoing Pharaoh's hardened heart during the Exodus plagues. The people correctly identify God as the source of the plagues but respond with blasphemy rather than repentance. The phrase 'give him glory' (dounai autō doxan) is precisely what the first angel called for in 14:7 — the bowls vindicate that proclamation.
10. The fifth bowl strikes the beast's throne directly — the seat of its authority — and darkness spreads through its kingdom. This parallels the ninth Egyptian plague (Exodus 10:21-23) and the fifth trumpet (9:2). The verb emasōnto ('they gnawed, they chewed') conveys visceral, physical agony. The darkness is both literal and symbolic — the beast's kingdom is revealed as what it always was: darkness.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Exodus 10:21-23 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The sores from the first bowl (v. 2) are still active — the plagues are cumulative, not sequential. The title 'God of heaven' (ton theon tou ouranou) is used in Daniel 2:18-19, 44 and in the post-exilic books (Ezra 1:2, Nehemiah 1:4), emphasizing God's sovereign transcendence over the beast's earthly domain. The second refusal to repent (cf. v. 9) confirms the hardening pattern.

12. The Euphrates was the eastern boundary of the Roman Empire and the traditional barrier against invasion from Parthia and beyond. Its drying echoes the drying of the Red Sea (Exodus 14:21) and the Jordan (Joshua 3:14-17) — but here the way is prepared not for God's people but for hostile kings. The phrase 'kings from the rising of the sun' (basileōn tōn apo anatolēs hēliou) uses the full expression for 'east,' emphasizing the geographic direction. The sixth trumpet also featured the Euphrates (9:14).
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Exodus 14:21. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Joshua 3:14-17. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. This is the first explicit identification of the second beast (ch. 13) as 'the false prophet' (pseudoprophētou). The unholy trinity is now fully named: dragon, beast, and false prophet. The frog imagery recalls the second Egyptian plague (Exodus 8:1-15). Frogs emerging from mouths suggests deceptive speech — the counterfeit trinity wages war through propaganda and lies, not just military force. The three unclean spirits, one from each mouth, demonstrate coordinated deception.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Exodus 8:1-15 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. The spirits are identified as daimoniōn ('of demons') — their signs are real but their source is evil. The phrase 'the great day of God the Almighty' (tēs hēmeras tēs megalēs tou theou tou pantokratoros) echoes the Day of the LORD tradition in Joel 2:11, 31; Zephaniah 1:14; and Malachi 4:5. The gathering (synagagein) of kings for battle uses the same verb applied to gathering the grape harvest for the winepress of wrath (14:18-19).
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Joel 2:11. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Zephaniah 1:14. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Malachi 4:5. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.

15. This parenthetical word from Christ himself interrupts the battle narrative — a sudden first-person address recalling 3:3 (to Sardis) and echoing 1 Thessalonians 5:2 and Matthew 24:43-44. It is the third beatitude in Revelation. The clothing metaphor draws on the shame of nakedness (Genesis 3:7, 10) and the white garments promised to the faithful (3:4-5, 18). The placement here — between the demonic gathering and the actual battle — serves as a pastoral aside to readers.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 3:7 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. Armageddon (Harmagedōn) is the only occurrence of this word in the Bible. The specification 'in Hebrew' (Hebraisti) signals a symbolic name requiring interpretation. The most common derivation is Har Megiddo ('Mountain of Megiddo'), referencing the site of numerous decisive battles in Israel's history (Judges 5:19, 2 Kings 9:27, 23:29). However, Megiddo is located on a plain, not a mountain, which has led to alternative proposals including Har Mo'ed ('Mountain of Assembly,' Isaiah 14:13). The text presents it as a symbolic gathering point, not necessarily a literal geographic prediction.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Judges 5:19. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes 2 Kings 9:27. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.

17. The seventh bowl is poured on the air — the medium through which all previous plagues have traveled. The declaration gegonen ('It is done!' or 'It has happened!') is a perfect tense verb indicating a completed action with permanent results. It parallels Jesus's tetelestai ('It is finished,' John 19:30) and anticipates 21:6. The voice comes from both the sanctuary and the throne — the dual source emphasizes ultimate authority.
18. The theophanic signs (lightning, sounds, thunder, earthquake) have appeared at each major transition in Revelation (4:5, 8:5, 11:19), growing in intensity each time. The superlative description — unprecedented since humanity's existence on earth — echoes Daniel 12:1 ('a time of distress such as has not happened'). The fourfold repetition of forms of ginomai ('happened, occurred, appeared') emphasizes the overwhelming reality of the event.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Daniel 12:1 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. The 'great city' (hē polis hē megalē) that splits may be distinct from Babylon or may be Babylon itself (cf. 11:8, 17:18). The phrase 'God remembered' (emnēsthē enōpion tou theou) echoes the Hebrew zikaron — when God 'remembers,' he acts on stored-up justice (cf. Genesis 8:1, Exodus 2:24). The triple genitive 'cup of the wine of the fury of his wrath' (to potērion tou oinou tou thymou tēs orgēs autou) piles up terms for judgment with overwhelming force.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 8:1. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 2:24. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
20. The cosmic language of islands fleeing and mountains vanishing echoes 6:14 and draws on the prophetic tradition of creation undoing itself before God's judgment (Nahum 1:5, Jeremiah 4:24). This is de-creation language — the stable features of the earth dissolve before God's wrath.
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Nahum 1:5 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
20. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Jeremiah 4:24 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
21. A talent (talantiaios) weighed approximately 75 pounds (34 kg) — these are not meteorological hailstones but instruments of divine judgment on a scale beyond natural occurrence. The hail echoes the seventh Egyptian plague (Exodus 9:23-24) and Joshua 10:11, where God hurled hailstones on Israel's enemies. The third and final refusal to repent (cf. vv. 9, 11) completes the pattern of hardening — the response to every plague is blasphemy, never repentance.

Summary: Revelation 17 reveals the identity and fate of Babylon through an extended vision. One of the bowl angels carries John into the wilderness, where he sees a woman — 'Babylon the great, the mother of prostitutes' — seated on a scarlet beast with seven heads and ten horns. She is drunk with the blood of the saints. The angel interprets the vision: the seven heads are seven mountains and seven kings, the ten horns are ten kings who will give their power to the beast, and together they will wage war against the Lamb — but the Lamb will conquer them. In a final ironic twist, the beast and its allied kings will turn on the prostitute and destroy her.

What Makes This Remarkable: This chapter provides the most sustained interpretive commentary in Revelation — the angel explains the symbolism explicitly. The woman-on-the-beast image inverts the woman of chapter 12: where that woman was clothed with the sun and persecuted, this woman is clothed in luxury and persecutes. The seven mountains (v. 9) were universally understood as a reference to Rome in the ancient world. The self-destructive nature of evil is a key theme: Babylon is ultimately destroyed not by God directly but by the very forces she rode — the beast turns on its rider.

Translation Friction: The identification of the seven kings (v. 10) has generated extensive historical speculation. Various counting systems for Roman emperors have been proposed, none conclusively. We render the Greek without identifying specific historical figures. The phrase 'an eighth who belongs to the seven' (v. 11) adds further complexity. The 'one hour' of the kings' reign (v. 12) is symbolic of brevity.

Connections: The chapter draws on Jeremiah 51 (Babylon's judgment), Ezekiel 16 and 23 (Jerusalem/Samaria as prostitutes), Nahum 3:1-4 (Nineveh as a prostitute), and Daniel 7 (the beast with horns). The Lamb's title 'Lord of lords and King of kings' (v. 14) echoes Deuteronomy 10:17 and Daniel 2:47.

¹Then one of the seven angels who had the seven bowls came and said to me, "Come, I will show you the judgment of the great prostitute who sits on many waters, ²With whom the kings of the earth have committed sexual immorality, and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her sexual immorality. ³He carried me away in the Spirit to a wilderness, and I saw a woman sitting on a scarlet beast that was covered with blasphemous names, having seven heads and ten horns. ⁴The woman was clothed in purple and scarlet, and adorned with gold, precious stones, and pearls. She held a golden cup in her hand, full of abominations and the impurities of her sexual immorality. ⁵On her forehead a name was written, a mystery: "Babylon the Great, the Mother of Prostitutes and of the Abominations of the Earth." ⁶I saw the woman drunk with the blood of the saints and with the blood of the witnesses of Jesus. When I saw her, I was greatly astonished. ⁷The angel said to me, "Why are you astonished? I will tell you the mystery of the woman and of the beast that carries her — the one with the seven heads and the ten horns. ⁸The beast that you saw was, and is not, and is about to rise from the abyss and go to destruction. The inhabitants of the earth — those whose names have not been written in the book of life from the foundation of the world — will be astonished when they see the beast, because it was, and is not, and will be present. ⁹This calls for a mind with wisdom: the seven heads are seven mountains on which the woman sits. ¹⁰There are also seven kings: five have fallen, one is, and the other has not yet come — and when he does come, he must remain only a little while. ¹¹The beast that was and is not — it is itself an eighth king, yet it belongs to the seven, and it goes to destruction. ¹²The ten horns you saw are ten kings who have not yet received a kingdom, but they will receive authority as kings for one hour along with the beast. ¹³These are of one mind, and they give their power and authority to the beast. ¹⁴They will wage war against the Lamb, but the Lamb will conquer them, because he is Lord of lords and King of kings, and those with him are called and chosen and faithful. ¹⁵Then the angel said to me, "The waters you saw, where the prostitute sits, are peoples and multitudes and nations and languages. ¹⁶The ten horns you saw, along with the beast — these will hate the prostitute and make her desolate and naked. They will devour her flesh and burn her with fire. ¹⁷For God has put it into their hearts to carry out his purpose by being of one mind and handing over their royal power to the beast, until the words of God are fulfilled. ¹⁸The woman you saw is the great city that has sovereignty over the kings of the earth."

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The Greek pornē ('prostitute') is rendered directly rather than with the KJV's archaic 'whore.' The image of sitting on 'many waters' (hydatōn pollōn) comes from Jeremiah 51:13, where Babylon literally sat on the Euphrates and its canal system. Verse 15 will interpret the waters as 'peoples and multitudes and nations and languages' — Babylon's power rests on the populations she controls.
1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Jeremiah 51:13. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
2. The Greek eporneusan ('committed sexual immorality') and porneias ('sexual immorality') use the porneia word group metaphorically for political and religious unfaithfulness — the kings have entered into illicit alliance with Babylon, trading their sovereignty for her wealth. The intoxication metaphor suggests willing participation: the earth's inhabitants are not merely victims but willing partners in Babylon's corruption.
3. The transport 'in the Spirit' (en pneumatī) parallels 1:10, 4:2, and 21:10 — the four visionary translocations in Revelation. The wilderness setting contrasts with the New Jerusalem vision, where John is carried to a great mountain (21:10). The scarlet (kokkinon) beast matches the dragon's fiery-red color (12:3, pyrrōs). The beast is 'covered with' (gemon, 'full of') blasphemous names — not just on its heads (13:1) but everywhere.
4. Purple and scarlet were the colors of royalty and extreme wealth in the ancient world. The external adornment contrasts with the cup's contents — outward splendor concealing inner corruption. The word bdelygmatōn ('abominations') is the term used in the Septuagint for idolatrous objects and practices (cf. Daniel 9:27, 11:31, 12:11, 'the abomination of desolation'). The woman's finery will be catalogued in detail in 18:12-13 and mourned in 18:16.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Daniel 9:27. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. The word mystērion ('mystery') likely introduces the name as symbolic rather than being part of the name itself — 'Babylon' is a code name requiring interpretation. Roman prostitutes were known to wear headbands displaying their names, which may inform the imagery. The title 'Mother of Prostitutes' makes Babylon the source and origin of all corrupting influence, not merely one instance of it.
6. The woman is drunk not on wine but on blood — the blood of martyrs. The Greek martyrōn Iēsou ('witnesses/martyrs of Jesus') uses the word from which English derives 'martyr,' here carrying both senses simultaneously. John's astonishment (ethaumasa thauma mega, literally 'I marveled a great marvel') may reflect horror rather than admiration — the KJV's 'admiration' is misleading in modern English. The angel will rebuke his amazement in the next verse.
7. The angel's question implies that John should not be astonished — the mystery is about to be explained. The phrase 'the beast that carries her' (tou thēriou tou bastazontos autēn) emphasizes the parasitic relationship: Babylon rides the beast, dependent on its power. The interpretation that follows (vv. 8-18) is the longest angelic explanation in Revelation.
8. The formula 'was, and is not, and will be present' (ēn kai ouk estin kai parestai) is a deliberate parody of God's title 'who is and who was and who is to come' (1:4, 8). The beast's existence is a grotesque imitation of divine eternity. Its origin from the abyss (abyssou) identifies it with the demonic realm (cf. 9:1-2, 11:7). Its destination is apōleia ('destruction') — the beast's trajectory is the opposite of God's, who moves toward new creation.
9. The formula 'here is the mind with wisdom' parallels 13:18 ('here is wisdom'). The identification of seven mountains (hepta orē) with a city was unmistakable to ancient readers — Rome was universally known as the city on seven hills (Virgil, Martial, Cicero, and many others used this designation). The woman 'sits on' the mountains as she 'sits on' the waters (v. 1) and the beast (v. 3) — she derives power from all three.
10. The seven heads serve double duty: they are both seven mountains and seven kings. The temporal sequence (five fallen, one present, one future) has generated extensive debate about which Roman emperors are intended. The count depends on where one begins (Julius Caesar or Augustus?) and whether short-reigning emperors (Galba, Otho, Vitellius) are included. The text may be more interested in the symbolic pattern (the present moment within a sequence nearing its end) than in precise historical identification.
11. The beast is both distinct from the seven (an eighth) and part of them (from the seven) — it is the imperial system itself, which transcends any individual emperor. This likely reflects the Nero redivivus myth — the widespread belief that Nero would return from the dead — which the text co-opts for its own theological purposes. The repeated destination 'to destruction' (eis apōleian) confirms the beast's ultimate fate (cf. v. 8).
12. The ten kings echo Daniel 7:24, where ten horns represent ten kings. These are future rulers ('have not yet received a kingdom') whose reign is extremely brief ('one hour'). The phrase 'one hour' (mian hōran) symbolizes transient, negligible power compared to the eternal reign of God and the Lamb. They receive power 'with the beast' (meta tou thēriou) — their authority is derivative, not independent.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Daniel 7:24. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. The Greek mian gnōmēn ('one mind, one purpose') indicates unified intent — the ten kings act in perfect concert. Their voluntary surrender of power and authority to the beast illustrates how totalitarian systems consolidate: subsidiary powers willingly cede their autonomy to the central authority.
14. The outcome of the cosmic war is stated with stunning brevity: the Lamb will conquer. No battle details are given — the result is a foregone conclusion. The title 'Lord of lords and King of kings' (kyrios kyriōn kai basileus basileōn) comes from Deuteronomy 10:17 and Daniel 2:47, and recurs in 19:16 in reverse order. The Lamb's army is described not by military qualifications but by three spiritual qualities: called (klētoi), chosen (eklektoi), and faithful (pistoi).

14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Deuteronomy 10:17. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Daniel 2:47. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The 'many waters' of verse 1 are now interpreted: they represent the global populations over which Babylon exercises dominion. The fourfold formula (peoples, multitudes, nations, languages) is another variation of Revelation's universal scope language (cf. 5:9, 7:9, 13:7, 14:6). Babylon's power base is human — she sits on people.
16. The self-destructive nature of evil is the key theological insight: the beast and its allied kings turn on the woman they once carried. The four punishments (desolation, nakedness, devouring, burning) echo the penalties for a priest's daughter who becomes a prostitute (Leviticus 21:9) and Ezekiel's description of Jerusalem's punishment (Ezekiel 16:37-41, 23:25-29). Evil eventually consumes itself.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Leviticus 21:9. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Ezekiel 16:37-41. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. This verse reveals the deepest irony of the chapter: even the beast's coalition serves God's purposes. God placed the intention (gnōmēn, 'purpose, resolve') in their hearts — their evil cooperation is unwittingly executing God's plan. The phrase 'until the words of God are fulfilled' (achri telesthēsontai hoi logoi tou theou) sets a divine terminus on the arrangement: it lasts only as long as God allows.
18. The final identification is explicit: the woman is a city (polis) that rules (echousa basileian, 'having kingdom/sovereignty') over the earth's kings. For the original audience, this could only mean Rome — the city that held dominion over the known world. However, Revelation's symbolic language allows the image to apply to any civilization that embodies Babylon's characteristics: imperial arrogance, economic exploitation, persecution of the faithful, and seductive luxury.

Summary: Revelation 18 is an extended funeral dirge over Babylon's fall, modeled on the prophetic oracles against Tyre (Ezekiel 26-28) and historical Babylon (Jeremiah 50-51, Isaiah 13-14, 47). An angel of great authority announces Babylon's fall. A voice from heaven calls God's people to come out of her. Three groups mourn: kings who shared her luxury, merchants who grew rich from her trade, and sailors who carried her goods. The cargo list (vv. 12-13) catalogs Rome's extravagant trade, culminating shockingly in 'human souls.' A symbolic act closes the chapter: an angel hurls a great millstone into the sea, declaring that Babylon will be thrown down and found no more.

What Makes This Remarkable: The cargo list in verses 12-13 is one of the most economically detailed passages in the Bible, cataloging twenty-eight trade items from luxury goods to basic commodities. The list follows the actual trade routes of the Roman Empire. Its final item — 'bodies and human souls' (sōmatōn kai psychas anthrōpōn) — exposes the slave trade as the foundation of Babylon's economy, placing human trafficking as the ultimate indictment. The threefold dirge structure (kings, merchants, sailors) mirrors Ezekiel's lament over Tyre but applies it to a city of far greater scope.

Translation Friction: The command 'Come out of her, my people' (v. 4) echoes Jeremiah 51:45 and Isaiah 48:20. Whether this calls for literal physical separation or spiritual/moral disengagement from corrupt systems has been debated. The text supports both readings. The 'double portion' punishment (v. 6) draws on the cup-of-wrath imagery found throughout the prophets.

Connections: The chapter is a dense tissue of Old Testament allusion: Jeremiah 50-51 (Babylon's fall), Isaiah 13-14, 47 (oracles against Babylon), Ezekiel 26-28 (lament over Tyre), Isaiah 21:9 ('Fallen, fallen is Babylon'), and Jeremiah 25:10 (sounds of joy silenced). The millstone casting (v. 21) echoes Jeremiah 51:63-64, where Seraiah throws a scroll into the Euphrates as a symbolic act of Babylon's sinking.

1After this I saw another angel coming down from heaven with great authority, and the earth was illuminated by his glory. 2 He cried out with a mighty voice, "Fallen, fallen is Babylon the great! She has become a dwelling place for demons, a haunt for every unclean spirit, a haunt for every unclean bird, and a haunt for every unclean and detestable beast, 3For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her sexual immorality, and the kings of the earth have committed sexual immorality with her, and the merchants of the earth are grew rich through the abundance of her delicacies. 4Then I heard another voice from heaven saying, "Come out of her, my people, so that you do not share in her sins and so that you do not receive any of her plagues. ⁵For her sins have piled up to heaven, and God has remembered her crimes. ⁶Pay her back as she herself has paid out, and repay her double according to her deeds. In the cup she mixed, mix her a double portion. ⁷To the degree that she glorified herself and lived in luxury, give her that same measure of torment and grief. For in her heart she says, 'I sit as queen; I am no widow, and I will never see grief.' ⁸For this reason her plagues will come in a single day — death and grief and famine — and she will be consumed by fire, because the Lord God who judges her is mighty." ⁹The kings of the earth, who committed sexual immorality and shared her luxury, will weep and wail over her when they see the smoke of her burning. ¹⁰They will stand far off in fear of her torment and say, "Woe, woe to the great city, Babylon the mighty city! For in a single hour your judgment has come." ¹¹The merchants of the earth weep and mourn over her, because no one buys their cargo anymore — ¹²The cargo included gold, and silver, and precious stones, and of pearls, and fine cloth, purple, silk, and scarlet, and all citron wood, and every kind of container made from ivory, and every kind of container made from the finest wood, and of brass, and iron, and marble, ¹³Cinnamon, odours, ointments, and frankincense, wine, oil, and choice flour, wheat, beasts, and sheep, horses, chariots, and slaves, and souls of men. ¹⁴The fruit that your soul craved has gone from you, and all your luxury and splendor have vanished — never to be found again. ¹⁵The merchants who dealt in these things and grew rich from her will stand far off in fear of her torment, weeping and mourning, ¹⁶Saying, Alas, alas, that remarkable city, that was clothed in fine cloth, purple, scarlet, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls! ¹⁷For in a single hour all this wealth has been laid waste!" Every ship captain, every seafarer, sailors, and all who make their living from the sea stood far off ¹⁸Cried when they noticed the smoke of her burning and stated, What city is like to this remarkable city! ¹⁹They threw dust on their heads and cried out, weeping and mourning, "Woe, woe to the great city, where all who had ships at sea grew rich from her wealth! For in a single hour she has been laid waste." ²⁰Rejoice over her, O heaven, and you saints and apostles and prophets! For God has pronounced judgment for you against her. ²¹Then a mighty angel picked up a stone like a great millstone and hurled it into the sea, saying, "With such violence Babylon the great city will be thrown down, and will never be found again. ²²The sound of harpists and musicians, flute players and trumpeters, will never be heard in you again. No craftsman of any craft will ever be found in you again. The sound of the mill will never be heard in you again. ²³The light of a lamp will never shine in you again, and the voice of bridegroom and bride will never be heard in you again. For your merchants were the great ones of the earth, and all nations were deceived by your sorcery. ²⁴In her was found the blood of prophets and saints, and of all who have been slaughtered on the earth."

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. This angel's glory (doxa) is so intense that the entire earth is lit up — a theophanic characteristic usually reserved for God himself (cf. Ezekiel 43:2, where God's glory illuminates the earth). The great authority (exousian megalēn) suggests this is an angel of the highest rank, perhaps the same one who earlier bound the dragon (20:1).
1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Ezekiel 43:2. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
2. The doubled 'Fallen, fallen' repeats 14:8 and Isaiah 21:9. The three 'haunts' (phylakē, literally 'prison, guard-post') describe Babylon's post-judgment state: the once-glorious city becomes a ghost town inhabited by demons and unclean creatures. The imagery echoes Isaiah 13:21-22 and 34:11-15, where ruined cities become dwelling places for desert creatures and wild animals. The SBLGNT includes 'every unclean and detestable beast,' which some manuscripts omit.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 21:9. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 13:21-22. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. Three groups are implicated in Babylon's corruption: nations (who drank her wine), kings (who partnered with her), and merchants (who profited from her). The Greek strēnous ('luxury, wantonness, sensuality') appears only here and in verse 7 in the New Testament — it connotes arrogant, self-indulgent excess. The verb eploutēsān ('grew rich') introduces the economic theme that will dominate the chapter.
4. The call 'Come out of her, my people' (exelthate ho laos mou) echoes Jeremiah 51:45 ('Come out of her, my people!'), Jeremiah 50:8, and Isaiah 48:20 and 52:11. The two purposes are moral (not sharing in sins) and protective (not sharing in plagues). The verb synkoinōnēsēte ('share in, participate with') suggests complicity — remaining in Babylon means becoming co-responsible for her crimes.

4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Jeremiah 51:45. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Jeremiah 50:8. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 48:20. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. The Greek ekollēthēsan ('have clung together, have been joined') literally means 'have been glued together' — her sins have accumulated into a mass reaching heaven. The image recalls the Tower of Babel (Genesis 11:4), another human construction reaching toward heaven in defiance of God. When God 'remembers' (emnēmoneusen) crimes, it means the time for reckoning has arrived (cf. 16:19).
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 11:4 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The principle of reciprocal justice — measure for measure — is applied with intensification: not equal but double. The Greek diplōsate ta dipla ('double the double things') is emphatic. The cup imagery reverses the scenario: the cup Babylon used to intoxicate the nations (14:8, 17:2) is now filled double for her. This echoes Isaiah 40:2 (Jerusalem receiving 'double for all her sins') and Jeremiah 16:18.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 40:2. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Jeremiah 16:18. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. Babylon's inner monologue — 'I sit as queen, I am no widow' — quotes Isaiah 47:7-8, where historical Babylon made the same boast before her destruction. The Greek estrēniasen ('lived in luxury, lived wantonly') corresponds to the strēnous of verse 3. The punishment matches the crime exactly: glorification met with torment, luxury met with grief. The triple self-declaration (queen, not widow, no grief) expresses total self-assurance about to be completely overturned.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 47:7-8. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The suddenness — 'in a single day' (en mia hēmera) — contrasts with Babylon's assumption of permanence. The three plagues (death, grief, famine) systematically dismantle her boasts from verse 7. Fire as the instrument of final destruction recalls 17:16. The closing declaration 'the Lord God who judges her is mighty' (ischyros kyrios ho theos ho krinas autēn) answers the beast-worshippers' question 'Who can wage war against [the beast]?' (13:4) — God can.
9. The first of three laments begins: kings (vv. 9-10), merchants (vv. 11-17a), and sailors (vv. 17b-19). Each follows the same pattern: identification, mourning, and the cry 'Woe, woe!' The kings weep for a partner lost, not from repentance. The smoke of burning recalls the destruction of Sodom, which Abraham watched from a distance (Genesis 19:28).
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 19:28. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The kings stand 'far off' (apo makrothen) — close enough to see but too afraid to approach. The double 'Woe, woe' (ouai ouai) is the lament formula repeated by all three groups. The phrase 'in a single hour' (mia hōra) emphasizes the suddenness that punctuates all three dirges (vv. 10, 17, 19). The city that claimed eternal power fell in an hour.
11. The merchants' grief is explicitly economic: they mourn because 'no one buys their cargo' (ton gomōn autōn oudeis agorazei ouketi). Their relationship with Babylon was transactional — they mourn a lost market, not a lost friend. The word gomōn ('cargo, freight') introduces the detailed trade list that follows.
12. The cargo list moves from most to least valuable: precious metals and gems first, then luxury fabrics, then exotic woods and metals. The Greek sirikon ('silk') was an extraordinarily expensive import from China via the Silk Road. Citron wood (xylon thuīnon) from North Africa was prized for furniture and could cost more than gold by weight. The list reflects actual Roman trade routes and consumer goods of the first century.
13. The list continues through aromatics, foodstuffs, and livestock, descending in value until it reaches its devastating climax: sōmatōn kai psychas anthrōpōn — literally 'bodies and souls of human beings.' The final item exposes the slave trade as the foundation of Babylon's economy. The Greek sōma ('body') was the standard commercial term for a slave in the ancient world. By adding kai psychas anthrōpōn ('and human souls'), John refuses to let the slave trade be sanitized by commercial language — these 'bodies' are human souls. The shift from genitive to accusative (psychas) in the Greek may emphasize the final item as a parenthetical outcry.
14. The Greek opōra ('ripe fruit, autumn fruit') represents the peak of enjoyment. The address shifts to second person, speaking directly to Babylon. The double negative ou mē ('never, not at all') with the emphatic ouketi ('no longer') creates a triple negation in Greek — the loss is absolute and irrecoverable. The word lipara ('rich, luxurious, oily') and lampra ('bright, splendid, gorgeous') capture the sensory appeal of Babylon's lifestyle.
15. Like the kings (v. 10), the merchants stand at a distance — close enough to grieve their lost profits but not close enough to share the destruction. The phrase 'merchants of these things' (emporoi toutōn) links back to the cargo list: they are defined by what they sold, including human souls.
16. The merchants describe Babylon in terms of her consumer goods — the same items from the cargo list now appear as her clothing and jewelry. This is the language of commerce applied to a city: Babylon is described the way a merchant would describe inventory. Her identity is reduced to the luxury goods she consumed. The description parallels 17:4.

17. The second 'single hour' (mia hōra) refrain reinforces the theme of sudden destruction. The Greek ērēmōthē ('has been laid waste, has been made desolate') is related to erēmos ('wilderness, desolate place') — Babylon's wealth becomes a wasteland. The third mourning group (seafarers) includes four categories: ship captains (kybernētēs), seafarers (ho epi topon pleōn), sailors (nautai), and sea-traders — representing the entire maritime economy.
18. The sailors' cry 'What city was ever like the great city?' echoes Ezekiel 27:32, the lament over Tyre: 'Who was ever destroyed like Tyre in the midst of the sea?' It also darkly mirrors the beast-worshippers' cry 'Who is like the beast?' (13:4). In all these cases, the answer that Revelation presses is: God alone is incomparable.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Ezekiel 27:32 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. Throwing dust on the head is an ancient Near Eastern mourning gesture (Joshua 7:6, Job 2:12, Ezekiel 27:30). The third and final 'single hour' (mia hōra) refrain completes the pattern. The Greek timiotētos ('wealth, preciousness, costliness') derives from timē ('honor, price, value') — Babylon's value was entirely material, and now it is gone. All three laments follow the same structure: identification of the mourners, the double 'woe,' the description of what was lost, and the 'single hour' refrain.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Joshua 7:6. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Job 2:12. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Ezekiel 27:30. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
20. This call to heavenly rejoicing contrasts sharply with the earthly mourning that precedes it. While kings, merchants, and sailors weep, heaven is told to rejoice. The Greek ekrinen ho theos to krima hymōn ex autēs literally means 'God has judged your judgment out of her' — God has taken up the saints' cause and rendered the verdict they were owed. This answers the cry of the martyrs in 6:10: 'How long before you judge and avenge our blood?'
21. The symbolic act directly echoes Jeremiah 51:63-64, where Seraiah ties a stone to a scroll and throws it into the Euphrates, declaring 'So shall Babylon sink.' The Greek hormēmāti ('with violence, with a rush') conveys sudden, forceful, irreversible destruction. Jesus used the millstone image for judgment (Matthew 18:6, Mark 9:42), but here the scale is cosmic — the entire city-system sinks like a stone.
21. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Jeremiah 51:63-64. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
22. The sixfold 'never again' (ou mē ... eti) refrain catalogs the sounds and activities of a living city being silenced forever. The list moves from entertainment (music) to industry (crafts) to daily life (milling grain). This passage closely follows Jeremiah 25:10, which lists the sounds that will cease from Jerusalem. The progressive silencing — from the cultural to the mundane — paints a picture of total civilizational collapse.
22. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Jeremiah 25:10. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
23. The silencing continues: lamplight (domestic life) and wedding celebrations (the continuation of community) cease. The charges then shift from lament to indictment: Babylon's merchants were 'the great ones' (megistanes, 'grandees, nobles') of the earth, and her 'sorcery' (pharmakeia, from which English derives 'pharmacy') deceived all nations. The word pharmakeia can mean literal drug-based sorcery or metaphorical enchantment — Babylon's seductive power operated like a drug.
24. The final indictment is the most sweeping: Babylon is responsible not only for the deaths of prophets and saints but for 'all who have been slaughtered on the earth' (pantōn tōn esphagmenōn epi tēs gēs). The verb esphagmenōn ('slaughtered') is the same word used for the Lamb in 5:6 — Babylon slaughters; the Lamb was slaughtered. This echoes Jesus's indictment of Jerusalem in Matthew 23:35 ('all the righteous blood shed on earth'). Babylon's guilt is comprehensive and systemic.

Summary: Revelation 19 moves from the fall of Babylon to the triumph of Christ in two dramatic movements. The first half (vv. 1-10) is a scene of heavenly worship: four 'Hallelujah' choruses celebrate God's just judgment of Babylon and announce the marriage supper of the Lamb. The second half (vv. 11-21) presents the rider on the white horse — identified as 'Faithful and True,' 'The Word of God,' and 'King of kings and Lord of lords' — who descends from heaven with his armies to defeat the beast, the false prophet, and the kings of the earth. The beast and false prophet are thrown into the lake of fire.

What Makes This Remarkable: The fourfold 'Hallelujah' (vv. 1, 3, 4, 6) represents the only occurrences of this Hebrew word in the New Testament — it was reserved for this moment of ultimate triumph. The marriage supper of the Lamb (v. 9) draws on the ancient Near Eastern covenant-banquet tradition and the prophetic vision of the messianic banquet (Isaiah 25:6-8). The rider on the white horse conquers with a sword from his mouth (v. 15), not a sword in his hand — his weapon is his word. The name 'that no one knows except himself' (v. 12) preserves mystery even at the moment of revelation.

Translation Friction: The identity of the rider has been debated, though most interpreters identify him as Christ. The 'robe dipped in blood' (v. 13) could be his own blood (sacrificial) or his enemies' blood (drawing on Isaiah 63:1-6). The SBLGNT reading is 'dipped' (bebammenon), not 'sprinkled' (a variant). We render the Greek as given.

Connections: The Hallelujah chorus echoes Psalms 104-106, 111-113, 115-117, 135, 146-150. The marriage supper draws on Isaiah 25:6-8, Matthew 22:1-14, and 25:1-13. The rider on the white horse fulfills Psalm 45:3-5 (the warrior king) and Isaiah 11:4 (ruling with the rod of his mouth). The winepress imagery recalls Isaiah 63:1-6 and Revelation 14:19-20.

¹After this I heard what sounded like the roar of a great multitude in heaven, saying, "Hallelujah! Salvation and glory and power belong to our God, ²For true and righteous are his judgments — since he has judged the remarkable whore, which did corrupt the earth with her sexual immorality, and has avenged the blood of his servants at her hand. ³And a second time they said, "Hallelujah! Her smoke rises forever and ever." ⁴The twenty-four elders and the four living creatures fell down and worshiped God who is seated on the throne, saying, "Amen! Hallelujah!" ⁵Then a voice came from the throne, saying, "Praise our God, all his servants, you who fear him, small and great!" ⁶Then I heard what sounded like the voice of a great multitude, like the roar of many waters and like the sound of mighty thunder, saying, "Hallelujah! For the Lord our God, the Almighty, reigns! ⁷Let us rejoice and exult and give him the glory! For the marriage of the Lamb has come, and his bride has made herself ready. ⁸She has been given fine linen to wear, bright and pure" — for the fine linen represents the righteous deeds of the saints. ⁹Then the angel said to me, "Write this: Blessed are those who are invited to the marriage supper of the Lamb." And he said to me, "These are the true words of God." ¹⁰I fell at his feet to worship him, but he said to me, "Do not do that! I am a fellow servant with you and your brothers and sisters who hold to the testimony of Jesus. Worship God!" For the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy. ¹¹Then I saw heaven opened, and there was a white horse. Its rider is called Faithful and True, and in righteousness he judges and wages war. ¹²His eyes are like a flame of fire, and on his head are many diadems. He has a name written that no one knows except himself. ¹³He is clothed in a robe dipped in blood, and his name is called The Word of God. ¹⁴The armies of heaven were following him on white horses, dressed in fine linen, white and pure. ¹⁵From his mouth comes a sharp sword with which to strike down the nations. He will shepherd them with an iron rod, and he treads the winepress of the fury of the wrath of God the Almighty. ¹⁶On his robe and on his thigh he has a name inscribed: King of kings and Lord of lords. ¹⁷Then I saw an angel standing in the sun, and he cried out with a loud voice to all the birds flying in midheaven, "Come, gather for the great supper of God, ¹⁸That you may consume the flesh of kings, and the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses, and of them that sit on them, and the flesh of all men, both free and bond, both small and remarkable. ¹⁹Then I saw the beast and the kings of the earth and their armies assembled to wage war against the rider on the horse and against his army. ²⁰The beast was captured, and with it the false prophet who had performed signs on its behalf — the signs by which he had deceived those who received the mark of the beast and those who worshiped its image. The two of them were thrown alive into the lake of fire that burns with sulfur. ²¹The rest were killed by the sword that came from the mouth of the rider on the horse, and all the birds gorged themselves on their flesh.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The Greek Hallēlouia transliterates the Hebrew hallelu-Yah ('Praise the LORD'). This is the first of only four occurrences in the New Testament, all in this chapter. The threefold attribution (salvation, glory, power) echoes the doxologies of 4:11, 5:12-13, and 7:12. The SBLGNT does not include 'honor' (timē) found in some manuscripts and the KJV.
2. The affirmation 'true and righteous are his judgments' (alēthinai kai dikaiai hai kriseis autou) echoes 15:3 and 16:7, creating a liturgical refrain across the judgment sequence. The verb ephtheiren ('corrupted, destroyed') is stronger than mere moral influence — Babylon actively ruined the earth. The avenging of blood answers the martyrs' cry from 6:10.

3. The second Hallelujah celebrates the permanence of Babylon's destruction — her smoke 'rises forever and ever' (anabainei eis tous aiōnas tōn aiōnōn). This echoes Isaiah 34:10, where Edom's smoke rises perpetually, and Revelation 14:11, where the smoke of torment rises for those who worship the beast. The present tense 'rises' (anabainei) makes the destruction an ongoing reality in the heavenly perspective.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 34:10 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
4. The throne-room figures from chapters 4-5 reappear for the last time. The twenty-four elders and four living creatures have not been seen since 14:3. Their response — 'Amen! Hallelujah!' — combines Hebrew (Hallelujah) and Hebrew-via-Greek (Amēn, from Hebrew amen, 'truly, so be it') into the shortest and most complete act of worship in the book. This is the third Hallelujah.
5. The voice from the throne (not identified — possibly an angel near the throne, since it says 'our God' rather than 'me') issues a call to universal worship. The phrase 'small and great' (hoi mikroi kai hoi megaloi) encompasses the entire range of humanity, echoing Psalm 115:13 ('He will bless those who fear the LORD, small and great'). This sets up the great multitude response in verse 6.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalm 115:13 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The fourth and climactic Hallelujah is delivered by a voice of overwhelming scale — multitude, waters, thunder. The declaration ebasileusen ('has begun to reign, reigns') is an ingressive aorist — it marks the beginning of God's unchallenged reign, not merely its continuation. This echoes the seventh trumpet's proclamation in 11:15 ('The kingdom of the world has become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ'). The Almighty (pantokratōr) title here carries the full weight of its Revelation usage.
7. The shift from judgment (Babylon the prostitute destroyed) to celebration (the Lamb's bride prepared) is abrupt and deliberate — the fall of the false woman makes way for the true. The marriage metaphor for God's covenant with his people runs throughout the Old Testament (Hosea 2:14-20, Isaiah 54:5-8, Ezekiel 16). The bride 'has made herself ready' (hētoimasen heautēn) — preparation is active, not passive. The Greek gynē can mean 'wife' or 'woman'; here 'bride' captures the wedding context.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Hosea 2:14-20. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 54:5-8. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Ezekiel 16. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The fine linen (byssinon) contrasts with Babylon's fine linen in 18:12, 16 — same fabric, entirely different significance. The bride's clothing 'was given' (edothē) to her — grace provides what the bride wears. Yet the linen represents 'the righteous deeds' (dikaiōmata) of the saints — human obedience is real but enabled by grace. The word dikaiōmata means 'righteous acts, just requirements fulfilled,' not merely imputed righteousness but lived faithfulness.
9. This is the fourth beatitude in Revelation (cf. 1:3, 14:13, 16:15). The 'marriage supper' (deipnon tou gamou) draws on the messianic banquet tradition (Isaiah 25:6-8) and Jesus's banquet parables (Matthew 22:1-14, Luke 14:15-24). The solemn authentication 'These are the true words of God' (houtoi hoi logoi alēthinoi tou theou eisin) emphasizes the reliability of the promise — this is not wishful thinking but divine declaration.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 25:6-8. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. John's impulse to worship the angel (repeated in 22:8-9) underscores Revelation's insistence that worship belongs to God alone — the central issue of the entire book. The angel's self-designation as syndoulos ('fellow servant') places angels and human believers on the same level: both are servants. The closing statement 'the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy' (hē martyria Iēsou estin to pneuma tēs prophēteias) can mean either 'testimony about Jesus' or 'testimony from Jesus' — both are valid. All true prophecy points to and comes from Jesus.
11. Heaven 'opened' (ēneōgmenon, perfect passive — standing open) indicates a permanent opening, not a momentary glimpse. The white horse contrasts with the white horse of 6:2 (the first seal), though whether that earlier rider is the same figure or a counterfeit is debated. The name 'Faithful and True' (pistos kai alēthinos) was first applied to Christ in 3:14. He wages war 'in righteousness' (en dikaiosynē) — unlike all earthly warfare, this military action is entirely just.
12. The fiery eyes recall 1:14 and 2:18, identifying the rider with the exalted Christ of the opening vision. The 'many diadems' (diademata polla) — royal crowns — surpass the dragon's seven (12:3) and the beast's ten (13:1), signaling supreme sovereignty. The unknown name preserves an element of mystery even in this moment of full revelation: Christ possesses a dimension of identity that transcends all human comprehension (cf. Judges 13:18, Isaiah 9:6).
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Judges 13:18. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 9:6. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.

13. The Greek bebammenon ('dipped, dyed') indicates the robe was immersed in blood before the battle begins. This most likely alludes to Isaiah 63:1-3, where God treads the winepress of nations and his garments are stained with their lifeblood. Alternatively, the blood may be his own sacrificial blood. The title 'The Word of God' (ho logos tou theou) connects to John 1:1 ('In the beginning was the Word') and to the sword from his mouth (v. 15) — this warrior's weapon is God's spoken word.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 63:1-3 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. The heavenly armies wear fine linen (byssinon leukon katharon), not armor — the same clothing as the Lamb's bride (v. 8). They carry no weapons. This is not a battle where the armies fight; the rider alone wages war with the sword of his mouth. The armies are present as witnesses and companions, not combatants. Their white horses match their leader's, symbolizing victory already won.
15. Three Old Testament texts converge: the sword from the mouth (Isaiah 11:4, 'he will strike the earth with the rod of his mouth'), the iron rod (Psalm 2:9, 'you will break them with a rod of iron'), and the winepress (Isaiah 63:3, 'I have trodden the winepress alone'). The weapon is speech, not steel — the sword proceeds from his mouth, meaning his word is the instrument of judgment. The Greek poimanei ('will shepherd') again carries both pastoral and governing senses (cf. 12:5). The quadruple genitive 'the fury of the wrath of God the Almighty' is the most intensely concentrated expression of divine judgment in Revelation.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 63:3 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 11:4 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Psalm 2:9 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. The name is written on both robe and thigh — the thigh was where a sword hung, and the inscription would be visible where the robe fell open over the thigh. The title reverses the order from 17:14 ('Lord of lords and King of kings'), perhaps for climactic effect — 'King of kings' now comes first. This superlative title, drawn from Deuteronomy 10:17 and Daniel 2:47, makes the supreme claim: every other sovereign, human or demonic, is subordinate to this rider.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Deuteronomy 10:17. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Daniel 2:47. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. The 'great supper of God' (to deipnon to mega tou theou) is a grotesque counterpart to the 'marriage supper of the Lamb' (v. 9) — one is a feast of celebration, the other a feast of carrion. The imagery comes from Ezekiel 39:4, 17-20, where God invites the birds and beasts to a sacrificial feast on the mountains of Israel. The angel 'standing in the sun' (hestōta en tō hēliō) occupies a position of maximum cosmic visibility.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Ezekiel 39:4. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. The fivefold repetition of 'flesh' (sarkas) is grim and relentless. The social categories (kings, commanders, mighty, free/slave, small/great) match the universal categories of 6:15 — those who once hid from God's wrath now become a feast for birds. The leveling is total: king and slave are equal as carrion. This directly echoes Ezekiel 39:18-20.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Ezekiel 39:18-20 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. The gathering anticipated in 16:14, 16 (Armageddon) now takes place. The beast and earth's kings assemble their armies against the rider — an act of supreme futility already declared hopeless in 17:14. The brevity of the 'battle' (described in only two verses, 20-21) underscores how one-sided the conflict is.
20. No battle is described — the beast is simply captured (epiasthē, 'was seized'). The false prophet (the second beast of ch. 13) is identified by his deceptive signs. The 'lake of fire' (limnē tou pyros) is introduced here for the first time and will become the final destination of death, Hades, and the wicked (20:10, 14-15). The phrase 'thrown alive' (zōntes eblēthēsan) emphasizes the immediacy — no trial, no appeal, no delay.
21. The text emphasizes once more that the sword comes 'from his mouth' (tē exelthousē ek tou stomatos autou) — this is victory through the spoken word of God, not through military violence. The verb echortasthēsan ('were filled, gorged themselves') brings the grim 'great supper' of verses 17-18 to completion. The entire cosmic conflict — dragon, beast, false prophet, kings of the earth, their armies — is resolved in just three verses (19-21). The Word prevails.

Summary: Revelation 20 describes three decisive events. First, an angel binds Satan in the abyss for a thousand years while the martyrs are resurrected to reign with Christ (the 'first resurrection'). Second, after the thousand years, Satan is released, deceives the nations (Gog and Magog), and leads a final assault on 'the beloved city' — only to be consumed by fire from heaven and thrown into the lake of fire forever. Third, the Great White Throne judgment: the dead are raised, the books are opened, and everyone is judged according to their deeds. Death and Hades themselves are thrown into the lake of fire, and anyone not found in the book of life joins them.

What Makes This Remarkable: *The millennium (thousand-year reign) of Revelation 20 has generated three major interpretive traditions: premillennialism (Christ returns before the thousand years), postmillennialism (Christ returns after), and amillennialism (the thousand years are symbolic of the present age). The text uses chilia etē ('a thousand years') six times in seven verses (vv. 2-7), making it the defining concept of the chapter. The Gog and Magog reference (v. 8) draws on Ezekiel 38-39 but transposes it to a post-millennial context. The Great White Throne (v. 11) is one of the most solemn images in all of scripture — earth and heaven flee from the presence of the one seated on it.*

Translation Friction: The sequence and nature of the millennium have been debated throughout church history. We render the Greek text without advocating for any millennial position. The relationship between the 'first resurrection' (v. 5) and the general resurrection (vv. 12-13) is also debated. The phrase 'the rest of the dead did not come to life until the thousand years were ended' (v. 5) is textually secure but interpretively complex.

Connections: The binding of Satan echoes Isaiah 24:21-22 (imprisoned host of heaven). Gog and Magog come from Ezekiel 38-39. The Great White Throne draws on Daniel 7:9-10 (the Ancient of Days and the opening of books). The book of life appears in Exodus 32:32-33, Psalm 69:28, Daniel 12:1, and throughout Revelation. The second death (v. 14) connects to 2:11 and 21:8.

¹Then I saw an angel coming down from heaven, holding the key to the abyss and a great chain in his hand. ²He seized the dragon — that ancient serpent, who is the Devil and Satan — and bound him for a thousand years. ³He threw him into the abyss, shut it, and sealed it over him, so that he would not deceive the nations any longer, until the thousand years were completed. After that he must be released for a short time. ⁴Then I saw thrones, and those seated on them were given authority to judge. I also saw the souls of those who had been beheaded for their testimony about Jesus and for the word of God, and those who had not worshiped the beast or its image and had not received the mark on their foreheads or their hands. They came to life and reigned with Christ for a thousand years. ⁵The rest of the dead did not come to life until the thousand years were completed. This is the first resurrection. ⁶Blessed and holy is the one who has a share in the first resurrection. Over these the second death has no power, but they will be priests of God and of Christ, and they will reign with him for a thousand years. ⁷When the thousand years are completed, Satan will be released from his prison. ⁸He will go out to deceive the nations at the four corners of the earth — Gog and Magog — to gather them for battle. Their number is like the sand of the sea. ⁹They marched across the breadth of the earth and surrounded the camp of the saints and the beloved city. But fire came down from heaven and consumed them. ¹⁰The devil who had deceived them was thrown into the lake of fire and sulfur, where the beast and the false prophet already are. They will be tormented day and night forever and ever. ¹¹Then I saw a great white throne and the one seated on it. Earth and heaven fled from his presence, and no place was found for them. ¹²I saw the dead, great and small, standing before the throne, and books were opened. Then another book was opened, which is the book of life. The dead were judged according to what was written in the books, according to their deeds. ¹³The sea gave up the dead that were in it, and Death and Hades gave up the dead that were in them, and each person was judged according to their deeds. ¹⁴Then Death and Hades were thrown into the lake of fire. This is the second death — the lake of fire. ¹⁵If anyone's name was not found written in the book of life, that person was thrown into the lake of fire.

1. The key to the abyss was previously given to the fallen star in 9:1. Now it is in the hand of a heavenly angel, indicating God's sovereign control over access to the abyss. The 'great chain' (halysin megalēn) is symbolic of binding power. The angel is not identified — notably, it is not Christ but a single unnamed angel who is sufficient to bind the dragon.
2. The fourfold identification repeats 12:9: dragon, ancient serpent, Devil, Satan. The binding (edēsen, 'bound, tied up') restricts Satan's activity for a defined period. The phrase 'a thousand years' (chilia etē) appears for the first time, and will be repeated five more times through verse 7. Whether the number is literal or symbolic (representing a complete, long period) has been debated since the early church.
3. Three actions secure the binding: thrown in, shut, sealed. The purpose of the binding is specifically to prevent deception (mē planēsē, 'might not deceive') — Satan's primary weapon throughout Revelation. The phrase 'he must be released' (dei lythēnai auton, literally 'it is necessary for him to be loosed') uses the divine dei ('it is necessary') — even Satan's release serves God's purposes. The 'short time' (mikron chronon) echoes 12:12.
4. The Greek pepelekismenōn ('beheaded, executed with an axe') is specific but may represent all forms of martyrdom by synecdoche. Two groups appear to be described: the martyred and those who refused the beast's mark. The verb ezēsan ('they came to life, they lived') in the aorist tense suggests a definitive event — a resurrection. The phrase 'reigned with Christ' (ebasileusan meta tou Christou) fulfills the promise of 3:21 and 5:10.
5. The phrase 'first resurrection' (anastasis hē prōtē) implies a second resurrection (described in vv. 12-13). Whether 'first' refers to chronological sequence (a bodily resurrection before the general resurrection) or to a spiritual reality (new life in Christ that precedes physical resurrection) is the central interpretive divide between premillennial and amillennial readings. The text itself uses the same verb ezēsan ('came to life') for both the first (v. 4) and second (implied in v. 5) groups.
6. This is the fifth beatitude in Revelation (cf. 1:3, 14:13, 16:15, 19:9). The 'second death' (ho deuterios thanatos) is defined in verse 14 as the lake of fire. The dual role — priests and kings (hierēis tou theou kai tou Christou) — fulfills the promise of 1:6 and 5:10 and echoes Exodus 19:6 ('a kingdom of priests'). The phrase 'of God and of Christ' places God and Christ on the same level as objects of priestly service.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Exodus 19:6. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The sixth and final occurrence of 'the thousand years' (ta chilia etē). Satan's release is described with the passive lythēsetai ('will be released') — he does not escape; he is let out. The abyss is now called his 'prison' (phylakēs), the same word used for Babylon's post-destruction state in 18:2 ('a haunt/prison for every unclean spirit').
8. Satan's first act upon release is deception (planēsai) — his essential nature unchanged. Gog and Magog come from Ezekiel 38-39, where Gog is the ruler of Magog who leads a massive invasion of Israel in the last days. Here both names represent all hostile nations. 'The four corners of the earth' indicates universal scope. The comparison to 'sand of the sea' (hē ammos tēs thalassēs) recalls the Abrahamic promise (Genesis 22:17) — the enemies' number ironically echoes the blessing given to Abraham's descendants.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Ezekiel 38-39 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
8. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Genesis 22:17 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
9. The 'beloved city' (tēn polin tēn ēgapēmenēn) is Jerusalem — the city God loves (Psalm 78:68, 87:2). The 'camp of the saints' (parembolēn tōn hagiōn) uses military language for the gathered people of God, echoing Israel's wilderness encampment. The fire from heaven recalls Ezekiel 38:22 and 39:6, where God destroys Gog with fire. As in chapter 19, no battle is narrated — God's intervention is immediate and total.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Ezekiel 38:22. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
9. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Psalm 78:68. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
10. The unholy trinity is now complete in the lake of fire: dragon (thrown in here), beast and false prophet (thrown in at 19:20). The phrase 'where the beast and the false prophet already are' (hopou kai to thērion kai ho pseudoprophētēs) indicates they have been there since 19:20 — throughout the entire millennium. The duration 'day and night forever and ever' (hēmeras kai nyktos eis tous aiōnas tōn aiōnōn) uses the strongest possible expression of unending duration.
11. The 'great white throne' (thronon megan leukon) is the seat of final judgment — white signifying purity and absolute justice. The one seated is not explicitly identified (God or Christ), preserving the unity of divine judgment. The flight of earth and heaven (ephygen hē gē kai ho ouranos) is cosmic dissolution — the old creation cannot stand before the Judge's face. The phrase 'no place was found for them' (topos ouch heurethē autois) echoes 12:8 (no place for the dragon) — now creation itself finds no place to exist.
12. Two kinds of books are opened: plural 'books' (biblia) — records of deeds — and the singular 'book of life' (biblion tēs zōēs). Judgment is 'according to their deeds' (kata ta erga autōn), a principle stated three times in the chapter (vv. 12, 13). The scene draws directly on Daniel 7:10 ('The court sat in judgment, and the books were opened'). The phrase 'great and small' (megalous kai mikrous) is reversed from the usual order, perhaps emphasizing that even the great must stand before this throne.

12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Daniel 7:10. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. Three realms surrender their dead: the sea (those lost at sea, without proper burial), Death (the state of being dead), and Hades (the realm of the dead, Greek equivalent of Hebrew Sheol). The personification of Death and Hades as entities who 'give up' their dead suggests they are reluctant captors forced to release their prisoners. The Greek hekastos ('each one') emphasizes individual accountability — judgment is personal, not merely collective.
14. Death itself dies — Death and Hades, personified as the last enemies, are destroyed in the lake of fire. This fulfills Isaiah 25:8 ('He will swallow up death forever') and 1 Corinthians 15:26 ('The last enemy to be destroyed is death'). The 'second death' (ho thanatos ho deuterios) is defined: it is the lake of fire. The first death is physical; the second death is final separation from God. After this verse, death does not appear again in Revelation — it is gone.
14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 25:8. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The final criterion is not deeds alone (though deeds are judged in vv. 12-13) but inclusion in the book of life. The conditional 'if anyone' (ei tis) is stark and individual. The passive 'was not found written' (ouch heurethē gegrammenos) implies a search — the book is examined, and the name is either there or it is not. This is the last verse before the new creation vision of chapter 21. The chapter ends not with hope but with the sober reality of final judgment, making the transition to chapter 21 all the more dramatic.

Summary: Revelation 21 is the climax of the entire biblical narrative: the new heaven and new earth appear, the New Jerusalem descends from heaven as a bride adorned for her husband, and God declares that he will dwell with his people. Death, mourning, crying, and pain are gone forever. The chapter then provides an extended description of the holy city: its walls, gates, foundations, and dimensions are measured by an angel. The city is a perfect cube of gold, with gates of pearl and foundations of precious stones. There is no temple, for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are its temple. There is no sun or moon, for God's glory and the Lamb's light illuminate it. The nations will walk by its light, and nothing unclean will ever enter it.

What Makes This Remarkable: The New Jerusalem descending 'from heaven from God' represents not human achievement but divine gift — the city comes down, it is not built up. The declaration 'Look, the dwelling of God is with humanity' (v. 3) uses the Greek skēnē ('tent, tabernacle'), fulfilling the entire tabernacle/temple trajectory of scripture. The city's cubic dimensions (v. 16) match the Holy of Holies in Solomon's temple (1 Kings 6:20) — the entire city is now the innermost sanctuary. The absence of a temple (v. 22) is the most radical transformation: in a city that is entirely God's dwelling, a separate sacred space is unnecessary. The river and tree of life in chapter 22 will complete the reversal of Eden's loss.

Translation Friction: The measurements of the city (12,000 stadia per side, approximately 1,400 miles) are clearly symbolic rather than literal — a cube of that size would extend beyond the earth's atmosphere. The number 12,000 combines 12 (tribes/apostles) with 1,000 (divine completeness). We render the measurements as given without literalizing or spiritualizing them.

Connections: The chapter draws on Isaiah 65:17-25 (new heavens and new earth), Isaiah 25:8 (death swallowed up, tears wiped away), Ezekiel 40-48 (the measured city and temple), Isaiah 60 (the glory of the new Jerusalem), Genesis 2 (Eden restored), and Exodus 25-40 (the tabernacle). The twelve gates inscribed with tribal names and twelve foundations inscribed with apostolic names unite Israel and the Church in one city.

¹Then I saw a new heaven and a new earth, for the first heaven and the first earth had passed away, and the sea was no more. ²I saw the holy city, the new Jerusalem, coming down out of heaven from God, prepared like a bride adorned for her husband. ³I heard a loud voice from the throne saying, "Look! The dwelling of God is with humanity, and he will dwell with them. They will be his peoples, and God himself will be with them as their God. ⁴He will wipe every tear from their eyes. Death will be no more; mourning and crying and pain will be no more, for the former things have passed away." ⁵The one seated on the throne said, "Look! I am making all things new." He also said, "Write this down, for these words are trustworthy and true." ⁶Then he said to me, "It is done! I am the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end. To the thirsty I will give freely from the spring of the water of life. ⁷The one who conquers will inherit these things. I will be their

God and they will be my son. ⁸But as for the cowardly, the faithless, the detestable, murderers, the sexually immoral, sorcerers, idolaters, and all liars — their share will be in the lake that burns with fire and sulfur, which is the second death." ⁹ Then one of the seven angels who had the seven bowls full of the seven last plagues came and said to me, "Come, I will show you the bride, the wife of the Lamb." ¹⁰He carried me away in the Spirit to a great and high mountain, and showed me the holy city Jerusalem coming down out of heaven from God, ¹¹After the splendor of God — and her light was like to a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal;. ¹²It had a great and high wall with twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names were inscribed on the gates — the names of the twelve tribes of the sons of Israel: ¹³There were three gates on the east side, three on the north, three on the south, and three on the west. ¹⁴The wall of the city had twelve foundations, and on them were the twelve names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb. ¹⁵The angel who spoke with me had a golden measuring rod to measure the city, its gates, and its wall. ¹⁶The city is laid out as a square; its length is the same as its width. He measured the city with the rod: twelve thousand stadia in length, width, and height — its dimensions are equal. ¹⁷ He also measured its wall: one hundred forty-four cubits by human measurement, which the angel was using. ¹⁸The wall was built of jasper, and the city was pure gold, like clear glass. ¹⁹The foundations of the city wall were adorned with every kind of precious stone: the first foundation was jasper, the second sapphire, the third chalcedony, the fourth emerald, ²⁰The fifth was sardonyx. The sixth sardius. The seventh chrysolite. The eighth beryl. The ninth topaz. The tenth chrysoprase. The eleventh jacinth. And the twelfth amethyst. ²¹The twelve gates were twelve pearls — each gate made from a single pearl. And the main street of the city was pure gold, transparent as glass. ²²I saw no temple in the city, for its temple is the Lord God the Almighty and the Lamb. ²³The city has no need of sun or moon to shine on it, for the glory of God illuminates it, and its lamp is the Lamb. ²⁴The nations will walk by its light, and the kings of the earth will bring their glory into it. ²⁵Its gates will never be shut by day — and there will be no night there. ²⁶They will bring the glory and honor of the nations into it. ²⁷Nothing unclean will ever enter it, nor anyone who practices abomination or falsehood, but only those whose names are written in the Lamb's book of life.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The phrase 'new heaven and new earth' (ouranon kainon kai gēn kainēn) quotes Isaiah 65:17 and 66:22. The adjective kainos (qualitatively new) rather than neos (chronologically new) suggests renewal and transformation rather than replacement. The absence of the sea (hē thalassa ouk estin eti) would have been striking to a first-century audience living in a maritime world — the sea was both a source of livelihood and a symbol of chaos and danger in ancient thought.
1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 65:17. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
2. The city descends — it is not built by human effort but given by God. The double origin ('out of heaven, from God') emphasizes divine initiative. The bridal imagery connects to 19:7-8 (the Lamb's bride) and to the Old Testament prophetic tradition of Zion as God's bride (Isaiah 54:5-8, 62:5). The verb kekōsmēmenēn ('adorned, decorated') gives English the word 'cosmetic' — the city is beautifully prepared.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 54:5-8. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. The word skēnē ('dwelling, tabernacle') and the verb skēnōsei ('will dwell, will tabernacle') share the same root. The SBLGNT reads laoi ('peoples,' plural) rather than laos ('people,' singular) — a significant variant suggesting that the covenant community includes multiple nations, not just one. The covenant formula 'they will be his people, and he will be their God' echoes Leviticus 26:11-12, Jeremiah 31:33, Ezekiel 37:27, and Zechariah 8:8 — it is the Old Testament's most repeated promise, here fulfilled definitively.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Ezekiel 37:27 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Leviticus 26:11-12 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Jeremiah 31:33 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
3. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Zechariah 8:8 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.

4. The wiping away of tears quotes Isaiah 25:8 ('He will swallow up death forever; the Lord GOD will wipe away the tears from all faces'). The fourfold negation — no death, no mourning, no crying, no pain — systematically reverses the conditions of the fallen world. The phrase 'the former things have passed away' (ta prōta apēlthan) declares the old order completely gone. This verse has provided comfort to grieving believers for two millennia and stands as one of the most beloved promises in scripture.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 25:8. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
5. This is one of only two times in Revelation that God speaks directly from the throne (the other is v. 6). The present tense 'I am making' (poiō) indicates an ongoing creative act, not merely a future promise. The order is 'all things new' (kaina poiō panta), not 'all new things' — the emphasis is on renewal of existing creation, not replacement. The command to write and the authentication 'trustworthy and true' (pistoi kai alēthinoi) mark this as solemn divine declaration.
6. The declaration 'It is done!' (gegonan, literally 'they have come to be') echoes 16:17 but now signals completion of creation rather than completion of judgment. The self-identification 'Alpha and Omega' (first and last letters of the Greek alphabet) was used in 1:8 — God's first and last self-identifications in Revelation bookend the entire work. The gift of living water 'freely' (dōrean, 'as a gift, without cost') echoes Isaiah 55:1 ('Come, all you who are thirsty...without cost') and Jesus's words in John 7:37-38.
6. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Isaiah 55:1. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
7. The verb nikōn ('conquering, overcoming') is the same word used in the promises to the seven churches (2:7, 11, 17, 26; 3:5, 12, 21) — those promises are now fulfilled. The inheritance language (klēronomēsei) echoes the Old Testament land promises. The covenant formula 'I will be their God, they will be my son' (esomai autō theos kai autos estai moi huios) combines the covenant promise of verse 3 with an adoption declaration drawn from 2 Samuel 7:14 (the Davidic covenant). The singular 'son' (huios) is striking — each overcomer receives the same status as Christ the Son.
7. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on 2 Samuel 7:14. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
8. The vice list contains eight categories, beginning with 'cowardly' (deilois) and 'faithless' (apistois) — the first two are not dramatic sins but failures of courage and trust under pressure. In the context of Revelation, cowardice means capitulating to the beast's demands rather than enduring. The word pharmakois ('sorcerers') is related to pharmakeia (18:23) and may include drug-based magical practices. The list ends with 'all liars' (pasin tois pseudēsins), connecting to the dragon's identity as the deceiver. The second death is again identified as the lake of fire (cf. 20:14).
9. The structural parallel with 17:1 is deliberate: the same kind of angel (one of the seven bowl angels) offers to show John a woman/city. In chapter 17, it was the prostitute Babylon; here, it is the bride, the New Jerusalem. The two women represent two cities, two destinies, two possible allegiances. The designation 'the bride, the wife of the Lamb' (tēn nymphēn tēn gynaika tou arniou) combines betrothal and marriage — the wedding of 19:7 has been consummated.
10. The fourth and final visionary transport 'in the Spirit' (en pneumatī; cf. 1:10, 4:2, 17:3). The contrast with 17:3 is again deliberate: Babylon was seen from a wilderness; the New Jerusalem is seen from a high mountain. The mountain setting echoes Ezekiel 40:2, where the prophet is set on a high mountain to view the restored temple. The city is still 'coming down' (katabainousan, present participle) — its descent continues throughout the vision.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Ezekiel 40:2 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. The city's defining characteristic is that it possesses 'the glory of God' (tēn doxan tou theou) — God's kavod, his weighty, luminous presence, fills the entire city. The Greek phōstēr ('radiance, luminary, light-bearer') is used in the Septuagint for the heavenly bodies (Genesis 1:14-16). The jasper (iaspis) described as 'clear as crystal' (krystallizontō) does not match modern jasper (which is opaque); it likely refers to a translucent gemstone, perhaps diamond or clear quartz.
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 1:14-16. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. The twelve gates inscribed with Israel's tribal names draw on Ezekiel 48:30-35, where the restored city has gates named for the twelve tribes. The twelve angels at the gates serve as sentinels (cf. Isaiah 62:6, where watchmen guard Jerusalem's walls). The wall is 'great and high' (mega kai hypsēlon) — not for defense (the city has no enemies) but as a symbol of definition and security.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Ezekiel 48:30-35. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 62:6. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
13. The symmetrical arrangement — three gates on each of four sides — matches Ezekiel 48:31-34 exactly. The gates face all four directions, indicating universal access: the city welcomes people from every direction. The sequence (east, north, south, west) begins with the east, the direction of sunrise and of the temple's main entrance.
13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Ezekiel 48:31-34 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.

14. The twelve foundations inscribed with apostolic names complement the twelve gates inscribed with tribal names — Israel and the Church are united in one structure. The 'apostles of the Lamb' (apostolōn tou arniou) is a distinctive phrase identifying them as belonging to and sent by Christ. Ephesians 2:20 similarly speaks of the church 'built on the foundation of the apostles and prophets.' The twelve-plus-twelve architecture (24 total) may connect to the twenty-four elders of chapters 4-5.
15. The measuring of the city parallels Ezekiel 40-42, where an angel measures the restored temple with a measuring rod. The rod is golden (chrysoun), befitting the heavenly city. Measuring in prophetic literature signifies divine ownership and protection (cf. Zechariah 2:1-5). Three things are measured: the city itself, its gates, and its wall.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Ezekiel 40-42 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
15. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Zechariah 2:1-5 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
16. The equal dimensions (length, width, height) make the city a perfect cube — the same shape as the Holy of Holies in Solomon's temple (1 Kings 6:20, a cube of twenty cubits). The entire city is the Holy of Holies: what was once the most restricted space in the world, entered by one person once a year, now encompasses the entire dwelling of God's people. Twelve thousand stadia (approximately 1,400 miles or 2,200 km) is a symbolic measurement: 12 x 1,000. A stadion is approximately 607 feet (185 meters).
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes 1 Kings 6:20. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. The wall measures 144 cubits (approximately 216 feet or 66 meters) — strikingly small compared to the city's enormous dimensions. The number 144 = 12 x 12, combining the twelve tribes and twelve apostles. The phrase 'human measurement, which the angel was using' (metron anthrōpou ho estin angelou) clarifies that the angel uses standard human units, making the measurements comprehensible. A cubit is approximately 18 inches (45 cm).
18. The wall material (jasper) matches the description of God's appearance in 4:3 — the city's very walls reflect God's character. The gold of the city is described as 'like clear glass' (homoion hyalō katharō) — transparent gold, a material that does not exist in the natural world. The vision transcends physical reality: this is gold you can see through, suggesting a city where nothing is hidden and light permeates everything.
19. The twelve foundation stones correspond broadly to the twelve stones on the high priest's breastplate (Exodus 28:17-20), which bore the names of the twelve tribes. The city itself functions as a priestly garment — the entire community is a 'kingdom of priests' (1:6, 5:10). The list begins with jasper, which also forms the wall (v. 18), creating continuity between foundation and superstructure.
19. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 28:17-20. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
20. The exact identification of ancient gemstones with modern equivalents is uncertain in several cases. Sardion (KJV 'sardius') is likely carnelian, a red stone. The twelve stones represent a spectrum of colors, creating a vision of extraordinary beauty. Together with the gold streets, pearl gates, and jasper walls, the city is a vision of a world where beauty is not scarce but structural — woven into the very fabric of reality.
21. Each gate is a single pearl of unimaginable size — the image defies natural possibility and signals that the New Jerusalem transcends the physical world entirely. The 'street' (plateia, singular) suggests one main thoroughfare rather than a complex street system. Again the gold is 'transparent as glass' (hōs hyalos diaugēs) — the material of ultimate value (gold) has the quality of ultimate visibility (transparency). Nothing in this city is opaque.
22. This is one of the most radical declarations in Revelation. After the entire biblical narrative has centered on God's temple — the tabernacle, Solomon's temple, the second temple, Ezekiel's visionary temple — John announces that the New Jerusalem has no temple. The reason is not absence but superabundance: God's presence is not localized in a building because it fills everything. The Lord God Almighty and the Lamb together constitute the temple — divine presence is the sacred space itself.
23. This echoes Isaiah 60:19-20 ('The sun will no more be your light by day...for the LORD will be your everlasting light'). The sun and moon are not destroyed — they are simply unnecessary. God's glory (doxa, the Greek equivalent of Hebrew kavod) provides all the light the city needs. The Lamb is the city's 'lamp' (lychnos) — Christ mediates God's glory to the city, just as a lamp mediates fire's light to a room.
23. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 60:19-20 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
24. The SBLGNT omits 'of those who are saved' (tōn sōzomenōn) found in some manuscripts and the KJV — the nations walk by the city's light without restriction. This fulfills Isaiah 60:3 ('Nations will come to your light, and kings to the brightness of your dawn'). The kings who once served the beast (17:2, 18:3, 9) are replaced by kings who bring their glory into God's city. The vision is one of cultural richness, not cultural erasure — the nations bring their distinct contributions.
24. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Isaiah 60:3. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
25. Open gates signal both security (no enemy to fear) and welcome (perpetual access). In the ancient world, city gates were closed at night for protection; these are never closed because there is no night and no threat. This echoes Isaiah 60:11 ('Your gates will always stand open, they will never be shut, day or night'). The parenthetical 'there will be no night' explains why 'by day' is not restrictive — it is always day.

25. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 60:11 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
26. The 'glory and honor of the nations' (tēn doxan kai tēn timēn tōn ethnōn) suggests that the best of human culture, creativity, and achievement is not destroyed but redeemed — brought into the New Jerusalem and consecrated. This is not the obliteration of human civilization but its purification and fulfillment.
27. The threefold exclusion (unclean, abomination, falsehood) echoes the vice list of verse 8 and connects to the Old Testament purity laws governing access to the temple. The distinction is that this is not ethnic or ritual purity but moral and spiritual: those excluded are characterized by corruption and deception. The criterion for inclusion is the same as in 20:15 — inscription in the Lamb's book of life. The chapter ends not with exclusion but with belonging: those written in the book have a permanent home.

Summary: Revelation 22 is the final chapter of the Christian Bible, completing the vision of the new creation that began in chapter 21. The chapter opens with the river of the water of life flowing from the throne of God and of the Lamb through the middle of the city, with the tree of life on either side bearing twelve kinds of fruit and leaves for the healing of the nations. There will be no more night, for the Lord God will be their light, and his servants will reign forever. The chapter then shifts to a series of closing declarations: the angel affirms the trustworthiness of the vision, Jesus announces his imminent return three times, a solemn warning is issued against adding to or removing from the words of this prophecy, and the book closes with the cry 'Come, Lord Jesus!' and a benediction of grace.

What Makes This Remarkable: This chapter deliberately echoes Genesis 2-3, closing the biblical narrative in a ring structure. The river of life recalls the river flowing from Eden (Genesis 2:10); the tree of life, barred to humanity after the fall (Genesis 3:24), now stands accessible in the city with no angel barring the way. The curse of Genesis 3:17-19 is explicitly undone: 'No longer will there be any curse' (v. 3). What was lost in a garden is restored in a city — not a return to innocence but a consummation of all history. The repeated 'I am coming soon' (erchomai tachy) uses the present tense, conveying imminence and certainty rather than a timetable. The final words of Scripture are not a theological statement but a prayer and a blessing — the church crying 'Come!' and Jesus extending grace.

Translation Friction: The SBLGNT text of this chapter contains several textual variants, particularly in the closing verses (vv. 19-21), where manuscript traditions diverge on whether 'tree of life' or 'book of life' is original. We follow the SBLGNT reading throughout. The warning in verses 18-19 against adding to or removing from 'this book' originally referred to the book of Revelation specifically, not the entire biblical canon, though later reception history extended its scope. The phrase 'the Spirit and the bride say Come' (v. 17) is grammatically ambiguous — it may be an invitation to Christ to return, an invitation to the thirsty to drink, or both simultaneously.

Connections: The river of life connects to Ezekiel 47:1-12, where water flows from the temple and heals the Dead Sea, and to Zechariah 14:8, where living waters flow from Jerusalem. The tree of life with twelve fruits echoes Ezekiel 47:12, where trees along the river bear fruit monthly with leaves for healing. The entire scene reverses the curse of Genesis 3 and fulfills the promise of Genesis 3:15 — the serpent's work is undone. The threefold 'I am coming soon' connects to Jesus's promise in John 14:3. The Alpha and Omega title (v. 13) reaches back to Revelation 1:8 and Isaiah 44:6. The closing benediction of grace echoes the Pauline epistolary tradition (cf. Romans 16:20, 1 Corinthians 16:23), grounding the apocalyptic vision in the worshipping life of real congregations.

¹Then he showed me the river of the water of life, bright as crystal, flowing from the throne of God and of the Lamb. ²In the middle of its main street, and on either side of the river, was the tree of life, producing twelve kinds of fruit, yielding its fruit each month. And the leaves of the tree are for the healing of the nations. ³No longer will there be any curse. The throne of God and of the Lamb will be in the city, and his servants will worship him. ⁴They will see his face, and his name will be on their foreheads. ⁵There will be no more night. They will have no need for the light of a lamp or the light of the sun, because the Lord God will shine on them, and they will reign forever and ever. ⁶And he said to me, "These words are trustworthy and true. The Lord, the God of the spirits of the prophets, has sent his angel to show his servants what must soon take place." ⁷"A and look, I am coming soon! Blessed is the one who keeps the words of the prophecy of this book." ⁸I, John, am the one who heard and saw these things. And when I had heard and seen them, I fell down to worship at the feet of the angel who had shown them to me. ⁹But he said to me, "Do not do that! I am a fellow servant with you and with your brothers the prophets and with those who keep the words of this book. Worship God!" ¹⁰Then he told me, "Do not seal up the words of the prophecy of this book, for the time is near." ¹¹Let the one doing wrong continue to do wrong, and let the filthy one continue to be filthy, and let the righteous one continue to practice righteousness, and let the holy one continue to be holy." ¹²"Look, I am coming soon, and my reward is with me, to repay each one according to their work. ¹³I am the Alpha and the Omega, the First and the Last, the Beginning and the End. ¹⁴Blessed are those who wash their robes, so that they may have the right to the tree of life and may enter the city by its gates. ¹⁵Outside are the dogs and the sorcerers and the sexually immoral and the murderers and the idolaters and everyone who loves and practices falsehood. ¹⁶"I, Jesus, have sent my angel to testify to you about these things for the churches. I am the Root and the Descendant of David, the bright morning star." ¹⁷The Spirit and the bride say, "Come!" And let the one who hears say, "Come!" And let the one who is thirsty come. Let the one who desires take the water of life as a gift. ¹⁸I testify to everyone who hears the words of the prophecy of this book: if anyone adds to them, God will add to that person the plagues described in this book. ¹⁹And if anyone takes away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God will take away that person's share in the tree of life and in the holy city, which are described in this book. ²⁰The one who testifies to these things says, "Yes, I am coming soon." Amen. Come, Lord Jesus! ²¹The grace of the Lord Jesus be with all.

TRANSLATOR NOTES

1. The Greek lampron ('bright, radiant') is rendered 'bright' rather than the KJV's 'pure,' which more accurately captures the visual quality described. The single throne shared by God and the Lamb (tou thronou tou theou kai tou arniou) uses one article governing both nouns, indicating a shared sovereignty. The river echoes both Eden's river (Genesis 2:10) and Ezekiel's temple river (Ezekiel 47:1-12), but here the source is not a garden or a temple — it is the throne itself.
1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Ezekiel 47:1-12. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
1. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Genesis 2:10. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
2. The syntax is notoriously difficult: how can the tree be both 'in the middle of the street' and 'on either side of the river'? The image may depict a single great tree straddling the river (as in Ezekiel 47:7, 12, where trees line both banks), or a collective singular referring to multiple trees. The Greek xylon ('wood, tree') is the same word used for the cross in Acts 5:30 and 1 Peter 2:24. Twelve kinds of fruit (karpous dodeka) — one for each month — suggest perpetual abundance with no season of barrenness. The word therapeia ('healing, service, care') gives us the English word 'therapy.' That the nations (ethne) still need healing in the new creation is a striking detail, suggesting the new Jerusalem is not static perfection but ongoing restoration.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Genesis 2:9. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
2. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Ezekiel 47:12. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
3. The Greek katathema ('curse, accursed thing') directly reverses the curse pronounced in Genesis 3:17 ('cursed is the ground because of you'). The entire weight of the fall — thorns, toil, pain, death — is undone in this single declaration. The verb latreuō ('to serve, to worship') carries both senses simultaneously: the servants both worship and serve. In the new creation, the distinction between sacred service and daily life collapses.

4. To see God's face (opsontai to prosopon autou) is the ultimate promise of Scripture. Moses was told 'you cannot see my face, for no one can see me and live' (Exodus 33:20). The beatific vision — direct, unmediated communion with God — is here declared possible. The name on the forehead contrasts with the mark of the beast (Revelation 13:16-17); God's people bear his name as a mark of belonging, not as a brand of ownership.
4. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Exodus 33:20. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.

5. The phrase eis tous aionas ton aionon ('into the ages of ages') is the strongest Greek expression for unending duration — literally 'forever and ever.' The reign promised here is not temporary or conditional but eternal. The abolition of night recalls Isaiah 60:19-20 ('the LORD will be your everlasting light') and completes the creation theme: God who said 'Let there be light' (Genesis 1:3) now becomes the light himself, making sun and lamp unnecessary.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Isaiah 60:19 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
5. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Genesis 1:3 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
6. The phrase pistoi kai aleethinoi ('trustworthy and true') echoes Revelation 21:5 and 19:11, where Christ himself is called 'Faithful and True.' The description 'the God of the spirits of the prophets' (ho theos ton pneumatōn ton prophetōn) identifies God as the one who inspires prophetic speech — the same Spirit who spoke through the Old Testament prophets now validates this final revelation. The phrase en tachei ('soon, quickly, without delay') maintains the tension of imminence that characterizes the entire book.
7. This is the first of three 'I am coming soon' declarations in this chapter (see also vv. 12, 20). The Greek erchomai tachy uses the present tense ('I am coming') with the adverb tachy ('soon, quickly'), conveying both certainty and imminence. This is the sixth of seven beatitudes in Revelation (cf. 1:3, 14:13, 16:15, 19:9, 20:6, 22:7, 22:14). The verb tereo ('to keep, to guard, to observe') implies not merely reading but obeying and treasuring.
8. John's attempt to worship the angel repeats the same error from Revelation 19:10. The repetition is not carelessness — it dramatizes how overwhelming the visions are and how instinctive the impulse to worship the messenger rather than the sender. The emphatic Kago Ioannes ('And I, John') reasserts the human eyewitness behind the apocalyptic visions.
9. The angel's refusal is emphatic: Hora me ('See that you do not!' or 'Stop!'). The angel identifies himself as a syndoulos ('fellow servant, co-slave') — placing himself in the same category as John, the prophets, and all who keep the book's words. The command to proskyneo ('worship') God alone echoes the first commandment and Jesus's response to Satan in Matthew 4:10.
10. This command directly contrasts with Daniel 12:4 ('seal up the book until the time of the end'). Daniel's prophecy was sealed because its fulfillment was distant; John's is unsealed because the time (kairos, 'appointed time, decisive moment') is near (engys). The shift from sealed to unsealed marks the transition from prophetic anticipation to imminent fulfillment.
10. [TCR Cross-Reference] This verse quotes Daniel 12:4 — see the TCR rendering of that passage for the Hebrew source text and translation decisions.
11. This jarring declaration does not encourage evil but announces the finality of moral choice. When the end comes, character is fixed — there is no more time for change. The fourfold structure creates two pairs: the unjust and filthy on one side, the righteous and holy on the other. The Greek imperative forms (adikesato, rhypantetho, poiesato, hagiastheto) function as prophetic declarations of what will be, not as commands to sin. Compare Ezekiel 3:27: 'Whoever will listen, let them listen; whoever will refuse, let them refuse.'
11. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Ezekiel 3:27. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
12. The second 'I am coming soon' declaration. The language of bringing a reward (misthos) echoes Isaiah 40:10 ('his reward is with him') and Isaiah 62:11 ('his recompense accompanies him'). The principle of repayment according to works (kata to ergon) runs throughout Scripture (Psalm 62:12, Proverbs 24:12, Romans 2:6) and does not contradict grace — it affirms that faith produces fruit and that God takes human action seriously.
12. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 40:10. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.

13. Three titles are combined here, each drawn from different parts of Revelation and Isaiah. 'Alpha and Omega' appeared in Revelation 1:8 on the lips of God; 'the First and the Last' in Revelation 1:17 and 2:8 on the lips of Christ. Their merger here makes the highest christological claim in the book: Christ shares the identity of God. The titles also echo Isaiah 44:6 ('I am the first and I am the last; apart from me there is no God') and Isaiah 48:12. Alpha is the first letter and Omega the last letter of the Greek alphabet — together they encompass all reality.

13. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Isaiah 48:12 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
14. This is the seventh and final beatitude in Revelation. The SBLGNT reads 'those who wash their robes' (hoi plynontes tas stolas auton) rather than the KJV's 'they that do his commandments' (hoi poiountes tas entolas autou), which reflects a different textual tradition. The image of washed robes connects to Revelation 7:14 ('they have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb'). Access to the tree of life — denied since Genesis 3:24 — is now the reward of the faithful.

14. [TCR Cross-Reference] Echoes Genesis 3:24. See the TCR's OT rendering for the Hebrew behind this passage and the translation rationale.
15. The term 'dogs' (kynes) was used in the ancient world for the morally impure and for those outside the covenant community (cf. Philippians 3:2, Matthew 7:6). The Greek pharmakoi ('sorcerers') is related to pharmakon ('drug, potion'), referring to those who practice occult arts, often involving potions. The list echoes Revelation 21:8 and functions as a vice list defining who remains outside the city — not as a physical geography but as a moral reality. The final phrase 'loves and practices falsehood' (philon kai poion pseudos) describes those whose fundamental orientation is toward deception.
16. Jesus speaks in his own name — one of the few times in Revelation where the speaker is explicitly identified as 'I, Jesus' (Ego Iesous). The dual title 'Root and Descendant of David' (he rhiza kai to genos Daidid) is paradoxical: Jesus is both David's ancestor ('Root,' as in Isaiah 11:1, 10) and David's descendant ('Offspring'). He is the source and the product of the Davidic line. The 'bright morning star' (ho aster ho lampros ho proinos) recalls Numbers 24:17 ('a star shall come out of Jacob') and connects to Revelation 2:28, where Christ promises to give the morning star to the faithful.
16. [TCR Cross-Reference] Quotes Numbers 24:17. The TCR rendering of that OT passage preserves the Hebrew source text and documents the translation decisions behind it.
17. The invitation cascades outward: the Spirit and the bride (the church) cry 'Come!' to Christ, then invite the hearer to join the cry, then extend the invitation to anyone who thirsts. The word dorean ('freely, as a gift, without cost') is emphatic — the water of life cannot be purchased or earned. This echoes Isaiah 55:1 ('Come, all you who are thirsty, come to the waters; and you who have no money, come, buy and eat!'). The verse functions simultaneously as a prayer for Christ's return and as an evangelistic invitation — the last great altar call of Scripture.
17. [TCR Cross-Reference] Draws on Isaiah 55:1. Consult the TCR rendering of that passage for the underlying Hebrew and the rationale for key translation choices.
18. This solemn warning echoes Deuteronomy 4:2 ('Do not add to what I command you and do not subtract from it') and Deuteronomy 12:32. The verb martyro ('I testify, I bear witness') places this under oath. Originally this referred specifically to the book of Revelation, not to the entire biblical canon — the 'canon' as a concept did not yet exist when this was written. However, the placement of Revelation at the end of the Christian Bible has given these words a broader canonical resonance in the history of reception.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Deuteronomy 4:2 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
18. [TCR Cross-Reference] References Deuteronomy 12:32 — the TCR OT rendering of that text provides the Hebrew source and explains the translation decisions involved.
19. The SBLGNT reads 'tree of life' (xylou tes zoes) rather than the KJV's 'book of life' (bibliou tes zoes). The 'book of life' reading likely arose from a scribal confusion of xylou ('tree') with bibliou ('book') — an easy error in manuscript transmission. We follow the SBLGNT critical text. The penalty mirrors the offense with poetic precision: those who take away from the book will have their share taken away from the tree and the city just described. The warning protects the integrity of the prophetic message.
20. The third and final 'I am coming soon' — and this time it receives a response. The exchange is the heart of early Christian worship: Christ promises his return, and the church answers with the prayer 'Come, Lord Jesus!' (Erchou kyrie Iesou). This is the Greek equivalent of the Aramaic Maranatha ('Our Lord, come!') preserved in 1 Corinthians 16:22. The single word Amen bridges the two speakers — it may be John's affirmation of Christ's promise, or the congregation's liturgical response, or both. These are among the most intimate words in the New Testament: a direct, personal exchange between the Lord and his people.
21. The final words of the Christian Bible are a benediction of grace. The SBLGNT reads simply 'with all' (meta panton) without 'you' (hymon) or the closing 'Amen,' both of which appear in some manuscript traditions and are reflected in the KJV. The simplicity is striking: not 'with the saints' or 'with the churches' but 'with all' — the widest possible scope. That the Bible ends not with a warning, not with a doctrine, not with a command, but with grace is itself a theological statement. The epistolary closing (typical of Paul's letters: Romans 16:20, 1 Corinthians 16:23, Galatians 6:18) grounds this cosmic apocalypse in the life of actual congregations who would hear it read aloud in worship.
